[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1554, 1626, 1628, 1629.]

Department 2. Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah County; W. N. Gatens, Judge.

Action by Eda J. Lindstrom against the National Life Insurance Company of United States of America. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

This is an action by Eda J. Lindstrom against the National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America to recover upon a policy of insurance. The complaint alleges in effect that on April 17, 1913, the plaintiff was the wife of Oscar F. Lindstrom; that the defendant then, and at all times thereafter, was and is a corporation, and authorized to do business in Oregon; that on that day the defendant, in consideration of $51.67, executed to Oscar F. Lindstrom a policy of insurance by the terms of which it agreed to pay plaintiff $1,000 upon receipt of the proof of the death of the assured during the continuance of such contract; that on April 3, 1914, and while the policy was in force, Oscar F. Lindstrom died; that within proper time thereafter the plaintiff furnished due proof of such death to the defendant, which failed and refused to pay the sum specified. The answer denies the material averments of the complaint, and for a further defense alleges that Lindstrom's application for insurance became a part of the policy which was issued; that in such request he represented that all answers made to the medical examiner were full, true, and complete; that Lindstrom signed the report of the medical examination, which was made a part of the application, and thereby warranted that the answers which he made to the medical examiner had been read by him; that they were true, full, and complete, and should form the basis for the contract of insurance; that he fraudulently represented he had not within five years employed or consulted a physician for any ailment, and falsely stated he had not been treated for or afflicted with any renal or urinary disease; that he had within such period employed a physician, who gave him an unfavorable opinion in respect to his health as an insurance risk; that at the time of the making of such application Lindstrom was suffering from kidney and vesical diseases, particularly describing them. For a second affirmative defense it is averred generally that, notwithstanding liability under the contract has at all times been and now is denied by the defendant, in order to avoid annoyance and expense it effected a compromise settlement with the plaintiff June 22, 1914, whereby there was paid to and accepted by her as such beneficiary, in full satisfaction of all claims and demands under the policy, $100, which sum she retains with full knowledge of all the facts set forth herein, thereby authorizing the defendant to annul the contract of insurance. The averments of new matter in the answer were denied in the reply, which alleged, in effect, that Oscar F. Lindstrom correctly answered all questions asked him by the medical examiner, giving a full, complete, and truthful statement of his health and physical condition; that the answers so made were written by the medical examiner; that, if the answers set forth in the application are in any respect false, they were so inserted in the application by the defendant's duly authorized agent, after the full and exact truth had been communicated to him by Oscar F. Lindstrom, and became a fraud and deceit on the part of the medical examiner; that Lindstrom signed the application for insurance without fraud or attempt to deceive the defendant, and without collusion on his part with the medical examiner. For a further reply it is alleged generally that the pretended release was obtained from the plaintiff by the fraud of the defendant; that she was induced to sign the release by reason of false, fraudulent, and unlawful representations made by defendant to her to defraud and deceive her; that defendant represented to the plaintiff that the policy of insurance was void because of false representations which had been made by Oscar F. Lindstrom as to his condition of health, thereby causing the policy to be invalid; that the plaintiff relied upon such false and fraudulent representations, and was induced thereby to sign the pretended release, and to accept the sum stated under a misapprehension of law and fact as to her rights in the premises; that thereafter she elected to rescind, and hereby consents that there be deducted from any judgment rendered in her favor against the defendant the sum of $100 so paid to her. The defendant's counsel moved the court to require the plaintiff to make the reply more definite and certain by stating whether Lindstrom's answers to the medical examiner's questions were true or false, to specify what particular acts of fraud and deceit were practiced upon Lindstrom by the medical examiner to obtain his signature to the application, and to detail what false and fraudulent representations were made by the defendant to the plaintiff with respect to the declarations uttered by Oscar F. Lindstrom to the medical examiner as to the condition of his health. This motion was denied and an exception saved. A demurrer to the reply was thereupon interposed on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute such a pleading. The demurrer was overruled, and the cause, having been tried, resulted in a verdict and judgment for $900 in favor of the plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals.

A. H. McCurtain, of Portland, and Samuel R. Stern, of Spokane, Wash. (Bauer & Greene, of Portland, on the brief), for appellant. Omar C. Spencer and Alfred A. Hampson, both of Portland, for respondent.

MOORE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The demurrer alone will be considered. In order clearly to understand that part of the reply the sufficiency of which is thus challenged, attention will be called to cases cited by plaintiff's counsel holding, in effect, that if a person, in applying for a policy of life insurance, makes truthful statements as to his health and physical condition to a medical examiner, who, without the knowledge of the applicant, fraudulently changes the answers to questions on that subject so as to make it appear the insured is a safe risk, the insurance company so represented by the physician is liable on a policy issued in consequence of the deceit of its agent. Thus in Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n v. Cotter, 81 Ark. 205, 99 S. W. 67, a headnote reads:

> "Where an applicant for life insurance correctly answered the questions propounded to him by the insurance company's medical examiner, but without his knowledge the examiner wrote down incorrect answers, the insurance company is estopped to take advantage of the wrong of its own agent."

In Lyon v. United Moderns, 148 Cal. 470, 83 Pac. 804, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 247, 113 Am. St. Rep. 291, 7 Ann. Cas. 672, it was ruled that the trial court properly allowed the plaintiff to prove that the insured made a true statement to the medical examiner that he had the "grippe" and a slight attack of pleurisy; and where there was no pretense that he had actual knowledge of the contents of the report, but was merely asked to sign the statement at the end thereof, the court properly instructed the jury that, if he had had the disease of pleurisy and answered "No," it would be a misrepresentation of a material fact which would avoid the policy, but that if he told the true facts to the medical examiner, and he neglected or omitted to write the answer in his report, the insured was not responsible for such omission or neglect unless he had actual knowledge that the answer had been imperfectly or incorrectly written. So, too, in Pfiester v. Missouri State Life Ins. Co., 85 Kan. 97, 116 Pac. 245, it was decided that an applicant for insurance, without knowledge to the contrary, may assume that the agent has prepared the application according to agreement, that the company has written the policy according to the application, and that he is not negligent in failing to examine such instruments for errors and omissions.

[2] The part of the reply which refers to the answers alleged by the defendant to have been falsely made by the insured to questions propounded at his medical examination is as follows:

> "That if said answers contained in said application * * * are in any respect false or untrue, they were inserted in said application by the duly authorized medical examiner and agent of defendant only after the full and exact truth had been communicated to him by the said Oscar F. Lindstrom, and because of fraud and deceit on the part of said medical examiner; that the said Oscar F. Lindstrom signed the written application without fraud or attempt or intent to deceive the defendant, and without collusion on his part with defendant's medical examiner."

It will thus be seen that the alterations, if any, in the answers to the medical examiner's questions, are not alleged to have been made without the knowledge of the insured. Webster's New International Dictionary defines the word "collusion" used in the reply as follows: "A secret agreement and co-operation for a fraudulent or deceitful purpose; a playing into each other's hands; deceit; fraud." It is possible, therefore, that Oscar F. Lindstrom may have had full knowledge of the medical examiner's alleged scheme to defraud his principal without co-operating in any manner in such agent's deceit. The rules of practice adopted by the circuit court of the state of Oregon for Multnomah county, where this cause was tried, require a party who attacks an adversary's pleading by motion or demurrer also to give a written notice stating the specific question to be considered. Complying with this precept, the defendant's counsel served upon the opposite party a writing which, inter alia, states:

> "You are hereby notified that in arguing the foregoing demurrer we will contend that after the defendant has set forth certain questions and answers claimed to have been made by the assured to the insurance company, that the plaintiff must either affirm or deny the truth of the allegation contained in said answer, and that it is not sufficient reply to plead in the alternative."

It will thus be seen that the particular question now under consideration and the alleged want of knowledge of the insured in respect to his answers as noted by the medical examiner were neither presented to nor considered by the trial court.

[3] The testimony in relation to this branch of the case shows that Oscar F. Lindstrom lived upon a farm near Vernonia, Or.; that on April 10, 1913, W. W. Lindsey, an insurance solicitor, and Dr. J. H. Flynn, a medical examiner, visited the farmhouse in that vicinity of Elon Malmstein, where Mr. Lindstrom was then working; that, upon solicitation for insurance, Mr. Lindstrom went to Mr. Malmstein's house to be examined by the physician; that Mrs. Malmstein was sitting in an adjoining room, between which and the room then occupied by her visitors a door stood ajar; that she could not help overhearing the conversation; that Mr. Lindstrom told the doctor he would not take any insurance unless he successfully passed the examination, saying he had not been well, but was then feeling better, detailing all his supposed ailments, and seemingly magnifying his infirmities. In speaking of Dr. Flynn this witness stated upon oath:

> "He asked a few questions, not so very many. He asked him (Mr. Lindstrom) if his parents were living, how old they were, and a few other questions; * * * but I cannot exactly say the ones that were asked. Then he went on and said that is all the questions you need answer now; I will fill out the rest, and fix it all right."

Mrs. Malmstein further testified:

> "Dr. Flynn examined him, and told him he had only a little bladder trouble, and he said he would give him a bottle of medicine that would cure him in a little while, and he repeated this two or three different times, and he said he was sure that in three weeks' time he would be all right."

This testimony is partially corroborated by that of Mr. Malmstein, who in answer to the question,

> "Did Dr. Flynn make any statements after he came out (of the house) with Oscar Lindstrom about the medical examination?"

replied:

> "Dr. Flynn and Mr. Lindstrom talked some about his condition. Dr. Flynn said he could be accepted all right. He said the little trouble you have is not very much—a little bladder trouble. We can get medicine that will cure you in a little while; about three weeks he would be well."

This testimony was emphatically denied by Dr. Flynn, who stated upon oath that in his report of the medical examination he correctly noted Mr. Lindstrom's answers as he gave them. From the sworn statements of Mr. and Mrs. Malmstein the jury might reasonably have inferred that Oscar F. Lindstrom correctly answered every question propounded to him by Dr. Flynn, to whom he carefully detailed all his supposed physical ailments, and that, without his knowledge, the medical examiner changed his answers and supplied others where necessary, so as to make it appear that Lindstrom's application was a safe risk.

[4] The absence from a written statement of facts constituting a party's cause of action or defense of a material averment will not be supplied by a verdict, but such finding will cure a defective statement in a pleading. Houghton & Palmer v. Beck, 9 Or. 325; David v. Waters, 11 Or. 448, 5 Pac. 748; Weiner v. Lee Shing, 12 Or. 276, 7 Pac. 111; Bingham v. Kern, 18 Or. 199, 23 Pac. 182; Kimball v. Redfield, 33 Or. 292, 54 Pac. 216; Hargett v. Beardsley, 33 Or. 301, 54 Pac. 203; Foste v. Standard Ins. Co., 34 Or. 125, 54 Pac. 811; Hannan v. Greenfield, 36 Or. 97, 58 Pac. 888; Savage v. Savage, 36 Or. 268, 59 Pac. 461; Chan Sing v. Portland, 37 Or. 68, 60 Pac. 718; Investment Ass'n v. Stanley, 38 Or. 319, 63 Pac. 489, 58 L. R. A. 816, 84 Am. St. Rep. 793; Creecy v. Joy, 40 Or. 28, 66 Pac. 295; Patterson v. Patterson, 40 Or. 560, 67 Pac. 664; Philomath v. Ingle, 41 Or. 289, 68 Pac. 803; Nye v. Bill Nye Milling Co., 42 Or. 560, 71 Pac. 1043; Ferguson v. Reiger, 43 Or. 505, 73 Pac. 1040; Madden v. Welch, 48 Or. 199, 86 Pac. 2; Johnson v. Sheridan Lumber Co., 51 Or. 35, 93 Pac. 470; Hillman v. Young, 64 Or. 73, 127 Pac. 793, 129 Pac. 124.

In Booth v. Moody, 30 Or. 222, 225, 46 Pac. 884, 885, Mr. Justice Bean in discussing this subject observes:

> "The extent and principle of the rule of aider by verdict is that whenever the complaint contains terms sufficiently general to comprehend a matter so essential and necessary to be proved that, had it not been given in evidence, the jury could not have found the verdict, the want of a statement of such matter in express terms will be cured by the verdict, because evidence of the fact would be the same whether the allegation of the complaint is complete or imperfect. But if a material allegation going to the gist of the action is wholly omitted, it cannot be presumed that any evidence in reference to it was offered or allowed on the trial, and hence the pleading is not aided by the verdict."

[5] The bill of exceptions herein contains as a part thereof the entire testimony, and for that reason it is unnecessary to invoke from the verdict a presumption that evidence was received tending to show that, without his knowledge, incorrect answers were noted by the medical examiner upon Mr. Lindstrom's application for insurance. If the defect in the reply wherein the phrase "without collusion" was improperly used for the expression "without knowledge" had been particularly called to the attention of the trial court, an amendment of the pleading would probably have been allowed; but as the averment referred to was not wholly omitted, and testimony in relation thereto was received, the verdict cured such imperfection.

[6, 7] Another part of the written notice, served with the demurrer, is to the effect that the allegations of fraud in the reply in respect to the representations imputed to the defendant's agent, whereby the plaintiff's execution of the release is asserted to have been induced, are not set forth with sufficient certainty. The part of the final pleading thus assailed reads:

> "That plaintiff was induced to sign said release by reason of false, fraudulent, and unlawful representations made by defendant to her with intent to defraud and deceive her; that defendant represented to the plaintiff that said policy of insurance was void and of no effect because of alleged and pretended false representations which defendant stated to plaintiff had been made to defendant by said Oscar F. Lindstrom as to his condition of health, and which thereby caused said policy of insurance to be invalid and not binding upon defendant; that plaintiff relied on said false and fraudulent representations, and was induced thereby to sign the pretended release in said answer referred to, and to accept a nominal sum therefor, under a misapprehension both of law and of fact as to her rights in the premises, induced by said false and fraudulent representations so relied upon by her."

It is argued by defendant's counsel that the part of the reply last quoted fails to allege: (1) Whether the representations so imputed to the defendant's agent were made with knowledge of their falsity; (2) that the statements were uttered by him with intent to defraud; and (3) that such narration was relied upon by the plaintiff. In Bailey v. Frazier, 62 Or. 142, 148, 124 Pac. 643, 645, Mr. Justice Burnett, discussing this subject, observes:

> "It has often been laid down as a rule for pleading fraud in this state that the representations must have been false; that the defendant making them knew they were false; that they were made with the intent to defraud; and that the party seeking to be relieved from the fraud must have relied upon such representations."

In addition to the cases cited as supporting the legal principle thus recognized, see, also, McFarland v. Carlsbad Sanatorium Co., 68 Or. 530, 137 Pac. 209, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 555; Cobb v. Peters, 68 Or. 14, 136 Pac. 656; Outcault Advertising Co. v. Buell, 71 Or. 52, 141 Pac. 1020; Corby v. Hull, 72 Or. 429, 143 Pac. 639; Ingram v. Carlton Lumber Co., 77 Or. 633, 152 Pac. 256; Hyde v. Kirkpatrick, 78 Or. 466, 153 Pac. 41, 488.

In Schoellhamer v. Rometsch, 26 Or. 394, 38 Pac. 344, it was ruled that an intent to deceive was not such an essential ingredient of a charge of fraud as to render the complaint omitting that allegation vulnerable to attack after a general demurrer to the initiatory pleading had been overruled. In McFarland v. Carlsbad Sanatorium Co., supra, it was held that a pleading charging fraud should allege that the representations were false, and either known by the person making them to be false, or were made by him recklessly as of his own knowledge without knowing whether or not they were true.

In Colorado Springs Co. v. Wight, 44 Colo. 179, 96 Pac. 820, 16 Ann. Cas. 644, 647, it was decided that a charge of fraud in a pleading which did not either expressly or impliedly allege that the defendant knew the representations to be false or that he intended them to be acted upon was demurrable for failure to state a cause of action. In the notes of that case it is said:

> "Any allegation which necessarily implies knowledge is sufficient. If the term 'fraudulently' is used in the declaration, complaint, or petition, an allegation that the defendant knew the falsity of the representations may be dispensed with. * * * As a matter of pleading, 'fraudulenter without sciens, or sciens without fraudulenter' is sufficient."

An examination of that part of the reply last hereinbefore quoted will disclose that while the adjective "fraudulent" is used to qualify the name "representations" as there first employed, the adverb "fraudulently" is not used to limit or modify the verb "represented," nor is it charged either that the defendant knew the representations to be false, or that they were made recklessly without knowing whether or not they were true, nor is it averred that the representations were made with intent to deceive. These omissions show that the part of the pleading referred to does not state facts sufficient to constitute a reply; and hence an error was committed in overruling the demurrer interposed on that ground. Other errors are assigned, but, believing they will not be repeated, the judgment is reversed and a new trial ordered.

McBRIDE, C. J., and BEAN and McCAMANT, JJ., concur.

(85 Or. 113)

ROGUE RIVER FRUIT & PRODUCE ASS'N v. GILLEN-CHAMBERS CO.*

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 19, 1917.)

1. CONTRACTS 🔑284(4)—CONSTRUCTION—ARBITRATION.

A construction contract reserving to the owner's engineer the right to inspect the building does not make him the arbiter of compliance with specifications so as to render his acceptance or failure to object binding upon the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1326.]

2. CONTRACTS 🔑305(1)—BREACH—WAIVER.

To constitute acceptance of a building or approval of the work and material a waiver or estoppel, it must appear that the owner knew of the defects which he afterwards complained of, since waiver cannot be imputed in the absence of knowledge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1398-1400, 1467-1475.]

3. CONTRACTS 🔑353(8)—BREACH—WAIVER—INSTRUCTIONS.

In building owner's action against the contractor for damages for defective work, a requested instruction that approval of the building bound the plaintiff after his examination was properly refused as omitting plaintiff's knowledge of the defects, since mere examination does not always impute knowledge especially of latent defects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1837-1840.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑216(1)—SCOPE OF REVIEW—REQUESTS FOR INSTRUCTIONS.

In the absence of request for a proper instruction upon a proposition at issue, it will not be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 630.]

---

*For opinion on rehearing, see 165 Pac. 1183.

5. CONTRACTS ⚷=305(1)—BREACH—ESTOPPEL.

Mere inspection of work by the building owner or its agents does not so conclusively estop it as to prevent its recovering damages for hidden defects of construction or amount to a waiver of faults discovered after the completion of the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1398–1400, 1467–1475.]

Department 1. Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; F. M. Calkins, Judge.

Action by the Rogue River Fruit & Produce Association against the Gillen-Chambers Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 151 Pac. 728.

This is an action to recover damages for the faulty installation by the defendant of insulating material in the plaintiff's cold storage warehouse at Medford, Or. It is admitted that the defendant signed specifications for the work, including certain requirements for furnishing and putting in place on the walls and ceilings cork board in two thicknesses, and containing also the following:

> "Guaranty:
>
> "Contractor will guarantee that the transmission of British Thermal Units per square foot per degree Fahrenheit difference in temperature for twenty-four hours, in the insulation herein specified shall not exceed four British Thermal Units, and that same will not exceed that of any other insulation including Union Fiber Company's Lithboard.
>
> "All material and workmanship in connection with the installation of the insulation as above specified shall be guaranteed first class in every respect, and be subject to the inspection of the Rogue River Fruit & Produce Association's representative and the supervising engineer, at any and all times during the construction or installation of the work."

It is stated by the plaintiff that the defendant entered upon the work described and afterwards represented to the plaintiff that it had fully completed the same on its part in accordance with the contract. It is conceded by the defendant that it represented to the plaintiff that it had performed the contract as modified by the latter. The complaint avers:

> "That it was impossible from an inspection of said work so completed to detect that the same had not been properly done in accordance with said contract and specifications, and that thereupon plaintiff, not knowing the contrary thereof, and without any neglect on its part, assumed that said contract had been fully and properly performed by said defendant * * * and paid to said defendant said sum of $7,200 in full performance of said contract on its part and entered into the possession and use of said warehouse as so insulated by defendant."

The specifications required that on the walls the insulation of cork board should be double in thickness, "set in cement plaster or hot asphaltum or pitch, breaking joints with second layer, and after cork has been set in place plaster same with two coats of best cement plaster floated to a smooth surface." The ceiling was to be insulated by placing two layers of cork board on the ceiling, nailing the first to the joists dipping the edges in hot asphaltum, or wiping the same with cement plaster as applied. The second layer was to be dipped in hot asphaltum or set in cement plaster using wooden skewers driven in at an angle sufficient to hold the board in place until the plaster or pitch had set.

The complaint charges that the defendant failed to secure the first layer to the wall in any manner; that it also did not fasten the second layer on the walls and ceiling in any way, or break the joints, and in several other respects did not perform its agreement, with the result that the insulation was faulty and defective and that in many cases the cork material fell away from the ceilings and side walls and cracked so as to make it poor and insufficient for the purpose designed by the contract; and, lastly, that the transmission of heat through the insulation in British Thermal Units per square foot per degree of temperature for 24 hours greatly exceeded the ratio prescribed by the contract. The plaintiff alleges damages amounting to $2,000 on account of the alleged shortcomings of the defendant.

The answer admits the payment to the defendant of the contract price of $7,200, except that the plaintiff retained $1,700 thereof until three months subsequent to the completion of the project, when, as defendant alleges, the balance was paid after a full and careful examination of the job by plaintiff's engineer, final acceptance of its work by the plaintiff, and determination by inspection and test that the transmission of heat would not exceed the limit specified in the stipulation. The imputations of defective and unworkmanlike manner of performing the contract are denied by the answer. It is charged by that pleading, also, that the construction of the building and the putting in of the insulation was at all times under the direction and control of the plaintiff's engineer; that the work was done in accordance with the agreement, "except where variances were necessitated by change of plans of the plaintiff and its engineer with reference to the construction of the building." It is further stated by the defendant:

> "That the method of setting cork board to the walls which was deemed by the defendant most advisable was not permitted by the plaintiff, and defendant was required by the plaintiff to set the cork board to the walls with hot pitch and nails instead of cement plaster."

And generally the answer alleges that the work was done according to contract at all times under the supervision of the plaintiff and its engineers and employés. The defendant also avers a counterclaim against the plaintiff for material sold and delivered to it which is admitted by the reply. Otherwise that pleading traverses the allegations of the answer. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and, from the ensuing judgment, the defendant appeals.

O. C. Boggs, of Medford (Beach, Simon & Nelson, of Portland, on the brief), for appellant. Porter J. Neff, of Medford (Neff & Mealey, of Medford, on the brief), for respondent.

BURNETT, J. (after stating the facts as above. [1] The first point urged in the brief of the defendant is that:

> "Where construction work is made subject to the inspection of an architect, or engineer, representing the owner, and the architect approves the work and material, issues his certificate thereon, and the same is accepted by the owner, the acceptance is binding, in the absence of fraud pleaded and proved."

The precedents cited to support this contention are where the architect is made the arbiter between the parties as to the fitness of material and manner of doing the required work, and his decision is made final on those subjects. The result of such a stipulation is to create a tribunal for the occasion whose determinations are agreed to be conclusive. In this instance, according to the quoted specifications, no such authority is vested in the architect or other person who has charge of the work on behalf of the plaintiff. It is said that the work shall be subject to the inspection of the plaintiff's representative, which means only that he shall have an opportunity to see the work while it is being performed. It is nothing more than what would be understood in the absence of any express statement on the subject. It is a general rule that a party hiring work done or materials furnished has a right to inspect the same before paying the purchase price to see if they comply with the contract. That is all that can be derived from the stipulation concerning inspection in the present instance.

What, then, is the effect of the acceptance of the work? It must be remembered that the plaintiff was the owner of the building. It was attached to the realty. The materials furnished by the defendant were incorporated as part of the structure. We note, also, the allegation of the complaint to the effect that it was impossible from an inspection of the completed work to detect that it had not been installed properly. Speaking on this topic in Steltz v. Armory Co., 15 Idaho, 551, 99 Pac. 98, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 872, Mr. Chief Justice Ailshie says:

> "On the other hand, the mere fact of entering into possession with knowledge of this defect is not sufficient to defeat the owner's right of action for breach of the contract as to the quality of material used, of the class and character of workmanship put on the building, unless an express waiver is shown or such other facts as would amount to a waiver. The owner always has the general possession of the property, and the contractor's possession is only a special and limited possession for the purpose of doing the work for which he has contracted. It often becomes necessary and essential for the owner to take possession of a building or structure, although not completed or imperfectly and defectively constructed, in order to protect himself from still further and greater damages. The fact of such possession should not be a bar to his right of recovery for breach of the contract. (Citing authorities.) Knowledge in a general way of a latent defect, of which the owner had no means of knowing its extent and latent dangers, will not amount to a waiver of the right of action for a breach of the contract, in the absence of other facts tending to disclose an intent to waive the right of action."

[2] In order that the acceptance of the building or the approval of the work and material shall amount to a waiver or an estoppel, it must appear that the one to be estopped or affected by the waiver knew of the defects of which he afterwards complained, because no waiver can be imputed to one who does not know what he is said to have waived. Of course, his knowledge may be proved by direct testimony or by circumstantial evidence; but, in the absence of a stipulation making the decision of the architect final with authority, we cannot say as a matter of law that the acceptance of the work is conclusively binding upon the owner beyond all right to recover for defects subsequently discovered. We can readily understand how the cork board might be attached to the walls by means of a slight application of pitch or asphaltum so as to remain temporarily in place and present an outward appearance of a substantial job and afterwards become detached from the ceiling and walls and be practically worthless. To bar the plaintiff from recovering damages under such circumstances would not accord with fair dealing, there being no showing that it knew the manner in which it was being installed and directly approved the same. Whether the plaintiff knew and with that knowledge adopted the manner of doing the work was a question of fact for the jury which has been decided against the defendant. The principal error assigned by the defendant is predicated upon the refusal of the following instruction:

> "The court instructs the jury as a matter of law that where part of a building being constructed under contract has passed under the inspection of the owner and the architect or his superintendent, and was approved by them in good faith, expressly or by implication, by failure to promptly object thereto, that part which has been so approved is not open to objection by them afterwards, this applies to the entire building if it has been so approved or to the work of a subcontractor so approved. The owners and the architects or his superintendent's objection should have been promptly exercised."

[3] This charge is not by the mark, in that it omits the element of knowledge on the part of the plaintiff of the particular defect in the installation of the materials. It is true it mentions the inspection of the owner and his representatives; but mere examination does not always impute knowledge, especially of latent defects.

The only remaining contention presented in the brief for the defendant is this:

> "A guaranty provision incorporated in a building contract, the terms of which contract require the compliance by a builder with detailed specifications provided by the owner, may be availed of only in the event of default on the part of the builder in observing the requirement of the specifications. Such a guaranty will not be construed as a warranty that the specifications to which the builder is required to conform and from which he cannot deviate will produce any certain result."

[4, 5] Conceding this to be a correct statement of the law, yet there was no request thus to instruct the jury so far as the bill of exceptions discloses. We remember, also, that the action is predicated upon the allegation of careless and unworkmanlike performance of the contract on the part of the defendant, and the charge of the complaint is that the resulting damage flowed from the shortcomings of the defendant and unnecessarily from a breach of its guaranty. It may be conceded that, where there is no express guaranty of results, a contractor will escape being mulcted in damages if he faithfully complies with the specifications of his contract as to the workmanship and materials. It is also equally true that it is competent for a contractor to adopt plans and specifications submitted in an offer to him and thereupon to guarantee that the desired result will follow the installation of work thus outlined. For want, however, of apt requests to instruct the jury on this subject, and considering that the issue was joined on alleged failures of the defendant to perform its contract in manner and form as stipulated, the question about the effect of the guaranty in this instance properly may be dismissed without further consideration. In brief, the mere inspection of work by the plaintiff or its agents does not so conclusively estop it as to prevent it from recovering damages for hidden defects of construction or amount to a waiver of faults discovered after the completion of the work as the complaint charges.

As against the contentions urged in the defendant's brief, we conclude that the case was fairly submitted to the jury, and that the verdict and ensuing judgment are conclusive upon us. The decision of the circuit court is affirmed.

McBRIDE, C. J., and BEAN and HARRIS, JJ., concur.

(84 Or. 582)

LA GRANDE NAT. BANK v. OLIVER.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 19, 1917.)

1. Chattel Mortgages 🔑138(3) — Priorities—Landlord's Lien—Replevin.

Where a landlord had a lien on crops under the terms of the lease to secure promissory notes taken for rent, and gave such notes to a bank for collection, and the bank subsequently with notice of landlord's claim took a chattel mortgage upon the crops, the landlord could have recovered the crops in replevin, alleging himself to be the owner and proving the averment by showing that he had a lien upon the property as against the chattel mortgagee who had actual notice of his claim, although the lien may not have been recorded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 228, 230.]

2. Landlord and Tenant 🔑246(6) — Lien for Rent—Proceeds of Property.

By virtue of his qualified property in the crop, the landlord was authorized to follow it as far as he could trace it, and to sue at law for substituted property, and it having been converted into money, his right of property attached to the money at his option to the extent of his lien on the crop from which the cash was derived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 999, 1000.]

3. Set-Off and Counterclaim 🔑34(1) — Subject-Matter—Claims Arising on Contract.

Under L. O. L. § 74, providing that a counterclaim authorized by section 73 must be one existing in favor of a defendant and against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in an action arising on contract or any other cause of action arising also on contract, and existing at the commencement of the action, where a landlord took promissory notes from his tenant secured by the terms of the lease by a first lien on the crops and placed such notes with a bank for collection, and the bank with notice of such lien subsequently took a chattel mortgage on the crops, and when the crops were sold took the money and applied it to the payment of its mortgage instead of crediting it on the notes, in a suit by the bank against the landlord upon a note, the landlord was entitled to assert his claim to the proceeds by way of counterclaim upon an implied contract as for money had and received by the third person to the landlord's use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, Cent. Dig. § 56.]

4. Action 🔑28—Waiver of Tort.

The chattel mortgagee having been fully aware of the landlord's property in the money, and having gained possession of the money which belonged to the landlord, although an action in tort for damages would lie upon such transaction, the landlord had an election to proceed upon an implied contract as for money had and received to his use.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Action, Cent. Dig. §§ 196–215.]

Department 1. Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah County; Robert G. Morrow, Judge.

Action by the La Grande National Bank of La Grande against E. W. Oliver. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed for a new trial.

The plaintiff declares in the ordinary form upon a promissory note given by the defendant January 30, 1913, for $1,700, with interest at 8 per cent. per annum, which it avers "is wholly unpaid, except $16.33, paid on March 27, 1913." The amended answer, upon which the case was tried, admitted the execution of the note, but denied that it was wholly unpaid except $16.33, and for new matter stated in substance that the defendant, being the owner of, among others, two notes given by his tenant for rent of the defendant's farm for the years 1910 and 1911, upon the first of which was due $616.64, with interest from October 1, 1910, and upon the other $3,420, with interest since October 1, 1911, deposited them with the plaintiff for collection to his account; that by the terms of the lease the notes were secured by a first lien on all grain that was grown on the demised premises; that at the time he delivered the notes to the plaintiff he also placed the lease in its custody and likewise informed it that according to the provisions of that document the notes were secured by a first lien on the grain; that afterwards with knowledge of all this the plaintiff took a chattel mortgage from the tenant on the self same crop to secure its own claim against him; and lastly, that when the grain was sold the plaintiff took the proceeds and instead of applying them to the payment of the defendant's notes left with it for collection, liquidated its own demand against the defendant, absorbing all the proceeds except $16.33, which it only then credited on defendant's note upon which this action is based. The answer further alleges that at the time the proceeds of the crop were collected there was due upon the defendant's notes deposited by him with the plaintiff $4,109.59, and that after deducting the full amount of the note sued upon, there is due from the plaintiff to the defendant a balance named in the answer for which the latter demands judgment. The reply denied the new matter in the answer. The circuit court refused to allow any proof of the defendant's averments, and directed a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount of the note described in the complaint, together with an attorney's fee. From the ensuing judgment, the defendant appeals.

James G. Wilson, of Portland (Turner Oliver, of La Grande, on the brief), for appellant. C. H. Finn, of La Grande (W. J. Makelim, of Portland, on the brief), for respondent.

BURNETT, J. (after stating the facts as above). According to the bill of exceptions the trial judge seems to have proceeded upon the theory that the diversion by the bank of the proceeds of the sale of the grain from the payment of defendant's lien thereon to the liquidation of its own chattel mortgage upon the same crop was solely a conversion sounding in tort which could not be made the basis of a counterclaim in an action arising upon contract.

[1, 2] If the defendant had a lien upon the crop he could have recovered the grain in replevin alleging himself to be the owner thereof and proving the averment by showing the fact that he had a lien upon the property at least as against those who had actual notice of his claim, although the same may not have been recorded. Reinstein v. Roberts, 34 Or. 87, 55 Pac. 90, 75 Am. St. Rep. 564. We note in passing that it is charged in the answer that the plaintiff knew the nature and extent of the defendant's lien upon the grain afterwards included in the plaintiff's chattel mortgage. By virtue of his qualified property in the crop the defendant was authorized to follow it as far as he could trace it and to sue at law for the substituted property. Terry v. Munger, 8 L. R. A. 216, 218, note. It having been converted into money, the defendant's right of property attached to that money at his option to the extent of his lien on the crop from which the cash was derived.

[3, 4] The plaintiff was fully aware of the nature and extent of the defendant's property in the specie, and having gained possession of the money which in equity and good conscience, according to the allegations of the answer, belonged to the defendant, the latter was not compelled to sue in tort for damages arising from the wrongdoing of the plaintiff. He was entitled to bring an action as for money had and received which sounds in contract. As stated in 1 C. J. p. 1033, § 159:

> "The rule is well settled that, where personal property has been wrongfully taken and converted into money or money's worth, the owner may waive the tort and sue the wrongdoer in contract for money had and received, upon the theory that he ratifies the sale as made for his benefit and sues to recover the proceeds as money had and received to his use"—citing many authorities.

In such cases the law implies a promise, or, in other words, a contract, on the part of the recipient of the money to pay it to the one to whom it justly belongs. Some precedents illustrating various conditions under which the action for money had and received will lie are collated in Wagener v. U. S. National Bank, 63 Or. 299, 127 Pac. 778, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135. True, indeed, it is, that an action for damages would lie upon such a transaction; but the one who is rightly the owner of the money has the election to proceed upon the implied contract as for money had and received, and the authority to choose is vested in him. The other party cannot elect that he himself shall be sued for the tort and not upon the implied contract.

The action here being upon a note is one arising on contract and it is said in section 74, L. O. L., in its amended form, that:

> "The counterclaim mentioned in section 73 must be one existing in favor of a defendant, and against a plaintiff, between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and arising out of one of the following causes of action. * * * 2. In an action arising on contract, any other cause of action arising also on contract, and existing at the commencement of the action."

Embodied in the answer, therefore, we have a statement of facts out of which the law raises the implied contract on the part of the plaintiff to pay to the defendant the money derived from the crop which was burdened by the defendant's lien to the extent of that incumbrance. The situation thus is one to which the statute above quoted applies, and the matter stated in the answer amounts to a "cause of action arising also on contract" within the meaning of the Code.

The matter is plain: If we suppose that the lien of the defendant had been foreclosed making the plaintiff a party defendant to the proper proceeding for that purpose, and that in pursuance thereof the grain had been sold, there can be no question to whom the money in the first instance would have belonged at least covering the defendant's lien upon the property. The only disposition which rightly could have been made in such a case would have been first to pay the defendant the amount of his notes which he left with the plaintiff for collection, and next to apply the surplus, if any, to the liquidation of the plaintiff's chattel mortgage. According to the averments of the answer the plaintiff, in substantially such a juncture, diverted the money from the satisfaction of the defendant's lien to the payment of its own inferior claim, thus carrying the proceeds into its own possession with the result that it had and received to the use of the defendant the amount of his notes in its hands to be collected, making itself amenable to an action arising on the contract which the law imputes to it to pay to the defendant what it had thus received. The court was in error in refusing to allow the defendant to prove the allegations of its answer.

The judgment is reversed for a new trial.

McBRIDE, C. J., and HARRIS and McCAMANT, JJ., concur.

(85 Or. 293)

RINER v. SOUTHWESTERN SURETY INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 19, 1917.)

1. Insurance 🔑514—Indemnity Insurance—Bad Faith.

Where an indemnity insurance policy provided that no action shall lie against the company for any loss or expense under the policy unless for loss or expense actually paid in satisfaction of a final judgment within 90 days from the date of the judgment and after trial of the issue, actual satisfaction of a judgment by the delivery and acceptance of a note did not amount to bad faith, although the insured and his attorneys knew that their satisfaction of the judgment would enable them to compel the insurance company to pay the amount of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1298.]

2. Insurance 🔑665(4) — Indemnity Insurance — Satisfaction of Judgment — Evidence—Sufficiency.

In an action on a policy of indemnity insurance to recover the amount of a loss sustained and paid in satisfaction of a judgment in favor of an injured employé in which it appeared that the judgment was satisfied by the delivery and acceptance of a note, evidence held to show that the judgment was in truth satisfied, and that the note was actually given and accepted in payment of the judgment, and that it was clearly intended and understood that the note extinguished the judgment, and that the parties acted in good faith without any agreement that any step in the transaction should be considered in any way different from its outward appearance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1722.]

3. Evidence 🔑77(3)—Presumptions—Failure to Produce Witness.

In an action on a policy of indemnity insurance to recover the amount of loss sustained and paid in satisfaction of a judgment in favor of an injured employé by delivery of a note, where it appeared that the defendant knew of the whereabouts of such employé, it is not in a position to claim that the failure of the employé to appear as a witness for plaintiff argues bad faith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 97.]

4. Payment 🔑17 — Sufficiency — Payment by Note.

Although the delivery and acceptance of a note does not extinguish the original indebtedness unless the parties agree to give and accept the note as absolute payment, the agreement need not be expressed in terms, but it is sufficient if it appears from all the facts and circumstances that the parties intended and understood that the note should be received in absolute payment of the antecedent debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. §§ 70-77.]

5. Insurance 🔑665(4) — Indemnity Insurance — Satisfaction of Judgment — Evidence—Sufficiency.

In an action on a policy of indemnity insurance to recover loss sustained and paid in satisfaction of a judgment in favor of an injured employé by the delivery of a note, in which it appeared that the judgment was satisfied of record, evidence held to show that the parties agreed that the note should extinguish the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1722.]

6. Insurance 🔑514—Indemnity Insurance—"Loss Actually Sustained."

The giving of a note in satisfaction of a judgment in an employé's action for injuries amounts to a loss actually sustained by the employer within the meaning of a provision of an indemnity insurance policy providing that no action shall be allowed against the insurance company for any loss or expense under the policy unless it shall be brought for loss or expense actually sustained and paid in satisfaction of a final judgment, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1298.]

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah County; Henry E. McGinn, Judge.

Action by E. W. Riner against the Southwestern Surety Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and rendered for plaintiff.

This is an action on an indemnity insurance policy. The Southwestern Surety Insurance Company issued its policy to E. W. Riner and E. B. Hill, who were partners doing business under the firm name of Riner & Hill, and were engaged in constructing a sewer for the city of Portland. By the terms of the policy Riner & Hill were insured against loss and expense arising from claims for damages on account of bodily injuries accidently suffered by any employé of the insured while engaged in work on the sewer. The insured agreed that, if suit should be brought on account of an accident, they would immediately forward all papers served upon them to the insurance company, and the company agreed at its own expense to settle or defend all such suits. The provision of the policy made most prominent by this litigation is known as paragraph L, and reads thus:

> "No action shall lie against the company for any loss or expense under this policy unless it shall be brought for loss or expense actually sustained and paid in satisfaction of a final judgment, within ninety days from the date of said judgment and after trial of the issue."

Abel Markkane, one of the employés of Riner & Hill, was injured while working on the sewer. Markkane commenced an action against Riner & Hill for damages on account of the injury, and on February 18, 1914, he obtained a judgment for $2,588.06. The insurance company defended the action in behalf of Riner & Hill. Riner executed a promissory note on May 16, 1914, in the sum of $2,627.42, payable, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, on or before one year after date, to the order of Abel Markkane. The note was accepted by Abel Markkane, and one of his attorneys of record satisfied the judgment. The principal sum named in the note was equal to the principal sum named in the judgment, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, the rate fixed by law. Hill assigned all his interest in the policy to Riner, who began this action when the insurance company refused to pay. The parties waived a jury and submitted the cause to the court on the depositions of three witnesses, supplemented by a written stipulation of facts. Acting on the theory that the delivery and acceptance of a note did not constitute loss and payment within the meaning of the policy, the trial court awarded a judgment to the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

John C. Shillock, of Portland, for appellant. Chester A. Sheppard, of Portland, for respondent.

HARRIS, J. (after stating the facts as above). The plaintiff takes the position that the execution and delivery of the note was a loss to him, and that the acceptance of the note and formal satisfaction of the judgment amounted to a payment within the meaning of paragraph L of the policy. The defendant contends that the delivery and acceptance of a note is not such a loss and payment as will satisfy the requirements of the contract; and, furthermore, the insurance company insists that, even though it is decided that a judgment can be paid with a note, nevertheless the plaintiff cannot prevail, because: (1) The transaction was characterized by bad faith; and (2) the parties did not expressly agree that the note should be accepted in payment of the judgment.

Some notice must be taken of the evidence before we can determine whether the parties acted in good or bad faith or whether the transaction amounted to a payment of the judgment. Hill was hopelessly insolvent, and, moreover, he was a nominal rather than a real member of the partnership. Riner may also be regarded as an insolvent, although he had not been fully paid for all the work done by him, and he probably owned some tools and equipment. Riner could not pay the judgment, and Markkane could not enforce its payment. Riner was a contractor, and the existence of the judgment hampered him in his efforts to obtain new contracts. It was apparent that it would be to the advantage of both parties if Riner could obtain more contracts for work, because he would then have an opportunity to earn money with which to pay Markkane. A note payable on or before one year after date and the satisfaction of the judgment would not only remove the obstacle that hampered Riner, but it would also extend the time for payment, so that for a year, at least, Riner could not be compelled to pay his indebtedness to Markkane, and at the same time Markkane would be benefited by reason of improving the chance of Riner to earn money with which to pay the indebtedness to Markkane; and, moreover, the judgment carried interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, while the note was to bear interest at 7 per cent. As explained by one of the witnesses, "the moving cause" was to give Riner more time "in order to get around" to pay the indebtedness. No witness undertook to suggest that the note was given or received in bad faith; but, on the contrary, every witness who spoke upon the subject testified that all parties acted in good faith, and that there was no suggestion or understanding that the transaction should be considered any different from what it appeared to be. Riner considered and understood that he paid the judgment with the note. Albert Streiff, one of the attorneys for Markkane, testified:

> That he told Markkane "that at the present time we could not realize anything on the execution," and "that Riner would pay this here judgment by a note. He didn't like to have that judgment hanging over him, as he could not get credit, and that, considering all the circumstances in the case, I advised him to take the note, because I told him that he would get 7 per cent. interest on it, and he could sue on it at any time, and the judgment would not be standing against Mr. Riner, and it would give him another start, and he would be able to realize on the note more readily than if he had the judgment hanging over him. And with this understanding, why Mr. Markkane agreed that he would accept a note."

[1] Undoubtedly the attorneys knew that the insurance company would not be liable on the policy until Riner paid the judgment, and they probably considered that the acceptance of the note and satisfaction of the judgment would enable Riner to compel the insurance company to pay the amount of the policy; but this does not amount to bad faith. If the satisfaction of the judgment was real, and not a mere pretense, and if there was a real delivery and acceptance of the note, and if the parties either expressly agreed or understood that the note was in truth a payment of the judgment, then the parties acted in good faith, and the additional circumstance that the parties or their attorneys thought or knew that they could then compel the insurance company to pay the policy does not taint the transaction with bad faith.

[2] The evidence supports the conclusion that the judgment was in truth satisfied; that the note was in truth given and accepted in payment of the indebtedness; that the parties clearly intended and understood that the note extinguished the judgment; and that they acted in good faith without any agreement or understanding that any step in the transaction should be considered any different from its outward appearance.

[3] The defendant is in no position to claim that the failure of Markkane to appear as a witness for plaintiff argues bad faith. One of the attorneys for Markkane testified that he did not know the whereabouts of Markkane. It is a significant circumstance, too, that the record shows that one of the attorneys for the defendant stated that he knew where Markkane was; and at the conclusion of the taking of the depositions a continuance of the hearing was granted after counsel for defendant stated that they "would like to have it continued until day after to-morrow, and Mr. Markkane will be here." Markkane did not appear, nor was his absence explained.

[4] Having decided that the parties acted in good faith, the next inquiry is whether there was such an agreement between the parties as the law requires concerning the delivery of a note in payment of a debt. The delivery of the note by Riner and the acceptance of it by Markkane did not extinguish the judgment, unless Riner and Markkane agreed that the note should operate as payment of the judgment. The general rule adopted in most jurisdictions, and followed by this court, is that the delivery and acceptance of a note does not extinguish the original indebtedness, unless the parties agreed to give and accept the note as absolute payment. Black v. Sippy, 15 Or. 574, 576, 16 Pac. 418; Kern v. Hotaling, 27 Or. 205, 215, 40 Pac. 168, 50 Am. St. Rep. 710; Johnston v. Barrills, 27 Or. 251, 256, 41 Pac. 656, 50 Am. St. Rep. 717; Schreyer v. Turner Flouring Co., 29 Or. 1, 4, 43 Pac. 719; Savage v. Savage, 36 Or. 268, 272, 59 Pac. 461; Kiernan v. Kratz, 42 Or. 474, 485, 69 Pac. 1027, 70 Pac. 506; Stringham v. Mutual Ins. Co., 44 Or. 447, 459, 75 Pac. 822; Matlock v. Scheuerman, 51 Or. 49, 58, 93 Pac. 823; 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747; Cranston v. West Coast Life Ins. Co., 63 Or. 427, 438, 128 Pac. 427; Jonas v. Hughes, 64 Or. 24, 26, 128 Pac. 998; Seaman v. Muir, 72 Or. 583, 589, 144 Pac. 121; Clarke-Woodward Drug Co. v. Hot Lake Sanatorium Co., 75 Or. 234, 238, 146 Pac. 135; Johnson v. Paulson, 163 Pac. 435, 437; 30 Cyc. 1194.

While the books, including at least two of our own precedents, frequently speak of the rule as requiring the parties to "expressly" agree, nevertheless, as stated in 30 Cyc. 1201, whenever the question has been specifically considered, the decision has been that the parties "agreed," if it is shown that they agreed in terms or that they understood that the acceptance of a note extinguished an antecedent debt. The agreement need not be expressed in terms; but it is sufficient if it appears from all the facts and circumstances that the parties intended and understood that the note should be received in absolute payment of the antecedent debt. A. Leschen & Sons Rope Company v. Mayflower G. M. & R. Co., 97 C. C. A. 465, 173 Fed. 855, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1; Wilhelm v. Schmidt, 84 Ill. 183; Dille v. White, 132 Iowa, 327, 109 N. W. 909, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 510; Haines v. Pearce, 41 Md. 221; Hotchin v. Secor, 8 Mich. 494; Riverside Iron Works v. Hall, 64 Mich. 165, 31 N. W. 152; Randlet v. Herren, 20 N. H. 102; Athens First Nat. Bk. v. Green, 40 Ohio St. 431; Macomber v. Macomber, 31 Atl. 753; Ralston v. Aultman (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 746; Sayer v. Wagstaff, 14 L. J. Ch. 116; 9 Ency. of Ev. 755.

[5] The evidence shows that Riner clearly understood that the note extinguished the judgment; and the testimony of Streiff makes it plain that Markkane accepted the note as absolute payment. An additional circumstance which speaks strongly for the contention of the plaintiff is the fact that the judgment was satisfied of record; and, when this circumstance is added to all the other evidence, the plaintiff has shown by clear and satisfactory evidence that, within the meaning of the general rule, the parties agreed that the note extinguished the judgment.

The remaining question for solution is whether the payment of the judgment by the note of Riner is a loss actually sustained and a payment of the judgment within the meaning of paragraph L of the policy. As a preliminary to the discussion, we may note in passing that the plaintiff cites Sanders v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 72 N. H. 485, 57 Atl. 655, 101 Am. St. Rep. 688, and, on the authority of that case, it is suggested that by defending the action prosecuted by Markkane, the insurance company converted the policy into a contract against liability as distinguished from a contract to insure against loss. The doctrine announced in Sanders v. Frankfort, etc., Co. was repudiated by this court in Scheuerman v. Mathison, 74 Or. 40, 57, 144 Pac. 1177. Under the provisions of paragraph L the insurance company is not liable to the assured in any sum unless the latter first pays all or some portion of a final judgment.

[6] The contract does not require that the judgment shall be paid in cash, although a loss or expense must actually be sustained and paid in satisfaction of a final judgment; and hence, as said in Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Moses, 63 N. J. Eq. 260, 49 Atl. 720, 92 Am. St. Rep. 663, "payment in property is sufficient compliance with its terms." The defendant contends, however, that the judgment must be paid in cash before it can be said that a loss or expense has actually been sustained. The argument made by the insurance company is completely answered in Kennedy v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 100 Minn. 1, 110 N. W. 97, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 478, 117 Am. St. Rep. 658, 10 Ann. Cas. 673, where the court says:

> "But the whole argument of appellant rests upon the claim that the mere giving of the notes did not amount to a loss actually sustained, for the reason that the maker of the notes and the guarantor might never be called upon to make payment, might become insolvent; that there is no certainty they will ever be paid, and, if not paid, there is no loss actually sustained. This means that the party assured, no matter what his financial condition might be, would be compelled to raise the actual cash within 60 days and pay it to the judgment creditor, or be foreclosed from enforcing the indemnity against the company. If the position is sound, the money could not be raised by borrowing at a bank, or at any other place, upon promissory notes secured either by a signer or by property, because, before the notes became due, the property might become worthless, deteriorate in value, or the parties might become insolvent, and no actual payment ever be made; hence no loss. Fairly construed, the language means simply that the judgment must be paid and satisfied within 60 days from date of its entry, and, when such judgment is paid or satisfied, the loss is actually sustained. Of what consequence is it to the company whether respondent has on hand immediate cash to pay the judgment, or whether the judgment debtor is compelled to borrow that amount on the most favorable terms, or whether he makes the payment and secures the satisfaction by the execution of promissory notes running direct to the judgment creditor? Logically there is no difference in the method, and in either case it amounts to a payment and satisfaction of the judgment."

The editors of American and English Annotated Cases say in a note to Kennedy v. Fidelity & Casualty Company, 10 Ann. Cas. 674, that the rule announced in that case is in accord with the weight of authority, while in a note to the same case the editors of Lawyers' Reports Annotated, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 478, say that the rule has the sanction of all the authorities.

An extended research discloses that nearly all, if not all, the courts passing upon the question have ruled that the giving of a note amounts to a loss actually sustained by the person indemnified, within the meaning of a policy like the one held by Riner, where the creditor accepts the note as actual payment and satisfaction of the judgment. Not only the weight of precedent, but also the weight of reason, gives support to the doctrine that the making and delivery of a note may be a loss actually sustained. Seattle & S. F. R. & Nav. Co. v. Maryland Cas. Co., 50 Wash. 44, 96 Pac. 509, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 121; Taxicab Motor Co. v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co., 73 Wash. 631, 132 Pac. 393. See, also, Maryland Casualty Co. v. Orchard Land & Timber Co., 240 Fed. 364; Wilson v. Smith, 23 Iowa, 252; Gardner v. Cooper, 9 Kan. App. 587, 58 Pac. 230, 60 Pac. 540; Stenbom v. Brown-Corliss Engine Co., 137 Wis. 564, 119 N. W. 308, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 956; Herbo Phosa Co. v. Phila. Casualty Co., 34 R. I. 567, 84 Atl. 1097; West Riverside Coal Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 155 Iowa, 161, 135 N. W. 414, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 195.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the plaintiff is awarded a judgment for $2,627.43, less the offset mentioned in the written stipulation filed by the parties.

(175 Cal. 212)

MOORE v. SAN VICENTE LUMBER CO.

(S. F. 7290.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 30, 1917.)

1. Appeal and Error 🔑1002—Review—Conflicting Evidence.

Where on the vital issues the evidence was in sharp conflict, the verdict is beyond the power of review by the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3935-3937.]

2. Jury 🔑13(9)—Right to Jury Trial—Actions for Equitable Relief and Damages.

In an action to enjoin the maintenance of a pond as a nuisance and to recover damages for injuries occasioned by the pond and by the breaking of a dam, plaintiff was entitled to a trial by jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 43.]

3. Appeal and Error 🔑1065—Harmless Error—Instructions.

As in such action the jury's function was not merely advisory, plaintiff may question the soundness of instructions in so far as they bore on the legal issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4219.]

4. Appeal and Error 🔑1079—Review—Insufficient Discussion of Questions.

A contention in appellant's brief that the court erred in refusing and modifying instructions will not be considered where it is not supported by either argument or citation of authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4262.]

5. Trial 🔑296(8)—Instructions—Cure by Other Instructions.

In an action to enjoin the maintenance of a pond and to recover damages for injuries caused by the pond and by the breaking of a dam, an instruction attacked as denying a recovery unless plaintiff proved both causes of action alleged in his complaint by a preponderance of the evidence, but which might be interpreted to mean that defendant was entitled to a verdict if plaintiff had failed on each count to prove his case, was not misleading, where the court gave other instructions telling the jury in plain terms that plaintiff was entitled to recover if he showed by a preponderance of evidence that he had suffered damage from any of the alleged wrongful or negligent acts charged in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 711.]

6. TRIAL 🔑295(5)—INSTRUCTIONS—READING AS A WHOLE.

In an action to enjoin the maintenance of a nuisance and for damages, an instruction that in order to find for plaintiff the jury must find that defendant was maintaining a nuisance was not erroneous, where it was part of an instruction dealing only with the subject of nuisance, and could not have been understood as limiting plaintiff's right to recover damages; as the charge must be read as a whole.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 708.]

7. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑172 — BREAKING OF DAM—TEST OF LIABILITY.

In determining whether the breaking of a dam causing injury to land below the dam was due to negligence, the conduct of defendant in constructing and maintaining the dam must be viewed with reference to the caution which a prudent man would, under the circumstances, have observed, provided he owned the land below.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 233–236.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by Charles Moore against the San Vicente Lumber Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John H. Leonard, of Santa Cruz, and Harry Rhys Davids, of Chico, for appellant. Charles M. Cassin, of San Jose, and Charles B. Younger, of Santa Cruz, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The defendant, San Vicente Lumber Company, operates a sawmill upon land owned by it in the county of Santa Cruz. In connection with its mill it maintains a pond which it has created by the construction of a dam upon its land.

The plaintiff is the owner of adjoining lands, of which a part lie immediately below the dam. This action was brought to enjoin the maintenance of the pond, and to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been occasioned by it, and by a breaking of the dam, to plaintiff's land. Trial was had before a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of the defendant. The court adopted the verdict, and also made findings, upon which it entered judgment in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

The complaint was in two counts. The first alleges that the construction of the dam backed up the water and flooded a part of plaintiff's lands; that, owing to defective construction, the dam broke in the winter of 1911 and flooded the lower land of plaintiff, depositing thereon a quantity of débris and a number of logs; that, in the removal of the logs, the land was injured greatly; and that, by reason of these occurrences, plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $10,000. The second count, after repeating many of the matters contained in the first, alleges that the pond became stagnant and caused stenches and poisonous vapors to arise therefrom, to the injury and annoyance of plaintiff and his wife, who resided near by. Damages in the sum of $10,000 were asked on this cause of action also.

[1] The answer denied all of the allegations of injury and of damage. The appellant refers, in his brief, to some testimony tending to support the allegations of his complaint. On the other hand, the respondent points to substantial evidence offered by it to show that plaintiff's land was not injured by the maintenance of the pond or by the breaking of the dam, and that the pond did not create the unwholesome and annoying conditions complained of in the second count. There is no occasion to set out the testimony in detail. It is enough to say that on these vital issues the evidence was in sharp conflict, and that the verdict of the jury is therefore beyond the power of review here.

[2, 3] The only other questions presented are those arising on the instructions to the jury. The suit was more than an equitable proceeding for the abatement of a nuisance, in which the jury's function would be advisory merely. The complaint also set up a legal claim for damages for past injuries, and the plaintiff was entitled to a trial by jury on the issues thus presented. Hughes v. Dunlap, 91 Cal. 385, 27 Pac. 642. He is therefore in a position to question the soundness of the instructions, in so far as they bear on the legal issues.

[4] In his brief the appellant first complains that four instructions requested by him should have been given. This contention is not supported by either argument or citation of authority; counsel contenting himself with the bare statement that "the instructions in question should have been given." We will not give any consideration to a point so presented. Gavin v. Gavin, 92 Cal. 292, 28 Pac. 567; Kyle v. Craig, 125 Cal. 107, 57 Pac. 791; Gray v. Walker, 157 Cal. 381, 108 Pac. 278. The same observation applies to the claim that the court erred in modifying an instruction requested by the appellant.

[5] It is argued, although in the briefest and most inadequate way, that three instructions requested by the defendant were improperly given. Of the first of these it is said that it directed the jury that the verdict must be for the defendant unless the plaintiff succeeded in proving both causes of action alleged in his complaint by a preponderance of the evidence. Such an instruction would, of course, be erroneous. Where a complaint contains two independent causes of action, plaintiff is entitled to recover if he establishes either. But it is by no means clear that the instruction should be given the meaning attributed to it. The language in which it is cast, while not happily chosen, may be interpreted to mean that the defendant is entitled to a verdict if the jury should find that plaintiff had failed, on each count, to prove his case. The court gave several other instructions which told the jury in plain terms that plaintiff was entitled to recover if he showed, by a preponderance of evidence, that he has suffered damage from any of the alleged wrongful or negligent acts charged in his complaint. Under these circumstances the jury could not have been misled by the giving of the questionable instruction.

[6] It was not error to instruct the jury that in order to find for the plaintiff they must find that the defendant was maintaining a nuisance. This was part of an instruction dealing with the subject of nuisance alone, and could not have been understood as limiting the right of the plaintiff to recover damages for any injury not included under that head. It is impossible, of course, for a court to state the entire law in a single instruction. The charge must be read as a whole, and, so reading it in this case, we find no ground for complaint.

[7] The last instruction assailed told the jury that, in determining the issue whether the breaking of the dam was due to negligence, "the conduct of the defendant in constructing and maintaining the dam must be viewed with reference to the caution which a prudent man would, under the given circumstances, have observed, provided he owned the land below." This is a correct statement of the law, as laid down in Todd v. Cochell, 17 Cal. 97.

No other point is made.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

(175 Cal. 208)

CLAUDIUS v. DAVIE, Mayor, et al.
(S. F. 8369.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1917.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑83(2)—SLAVERY—INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE—SELECTIVE DRAFT FOR MILITARY SERVICE.

The act of Congress approved May 17, 1917, providing for the selective draft for military service, is not in violation of Const. Amend. U. S. art. 13, § 1, nor of California Const. art. 1, § 18. prohibiting slavery and involuntary servitude.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 151.]

In Bank. Application by Ferdinand Claudius for writ of prohibition against John L. Davie, as Mayor of the City of Oakland, and L. W. Cummings, as Clerk of the City of Oakland. Application denied.

W. R. Dunn, of Oakland, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. Application for a writ of prohibition, based on the claim that the act of Congress approved May 17, 1917, providing for what is known as the selective draft for military service, is in violation of section 1, art. 13, of the federal Constitution and section 18, art. 1, of the Constitution of this state, prohibiting "slavery" and "involuntary servitude." The claim is utterly without merit.

The application is denied.

(175 Cal. 811)

C. A. HOOPER & CO. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA.
(S. F. 8355.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 17, 1917.)

WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑217—STATE RAILROAD COMMISSION—CERTIORARI.

Writ of review will not lie to compel state Railroad Commission to determine priority of water consumers' rights, where the Commission itself does not consider it necessary to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 306.]

In Bank. Application for writ of review by C. A. Hooper & Co. against the Railroad Commission of the State of California. Application denied.

Samuel Spring and Titus, Creed, Jones & Dall, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. In denying the application for a writ of review in this matter it is proper to say that the Railroad Commission has not denied the right of consumers in proper causes to priority in the use of water. On the contrary, it has in its opinion distinctly recognized the existence of such rights, and in its order denying a rehearing has expressly stated that "if petitioner has any such prior rights, they are not interfered with by the order of January 25, 1917." This is clearly true.

Petitioner here seeks by review to have us compel the Commission to determine such priority in a case where the Commission itself does not consider it necessary to do so. Doubtless when proper occasion arises the Commission will determine such priority in accordance with the law.

The application for a writ of review is denied.

(175 Cal. 235)

SANTA et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION et al. (S. F. 7908.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 30, 1917.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑405(4)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—CAUSE OF DEATH.

In proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Act (Acts 1913, p. 279), a pathologist's testimony connecting employé's injury with cause of death held sufficient to justify commission's finding that such injury caused employé's death.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑405(4) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—CAUSE OF DEATH.

Absolute proof or mathematical demonstration is not required to connect an employé's injury with cause of his death, so as to justify award under Workmen's Compensation Act, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1826, providing that the law does not require such a degree of proof as, excluding possibility of error, produces absolute certainty, but that moral certainty only is required.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑417(7) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—FINDINGS OF INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION—REVIEW.

Findings of the Industrial Accident Commission cannot be disturbed where they are supported by evidence upon which a reasonable man would come to the conclusion which was reached, the commission being the final judge of the facts.

In Bank. Proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Act by Mabel Cordova to obtain compensation for death of her husband, Ferdinand Cordova. Opposed by D. Santa, employer, and Georgia Casualty Company, insurance carrier. Award of compensation by Industrial Accident Commission, and employer and insurance carrier bring certiorari. Award affirmed.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioners. Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Certiorari to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission, awarding compensation to Mabel Cordova for the death of her husband, Ferdinand Cordova.

[1] Cordova, the decedent, was employed as a painter by the petitioner, Santa. In the course of his work, he fell from a ladder, sustaining a fracture of the pelvic bone. The accident occurred on October 30, 1915, and on November 14, 1915, Cordova died. The only point made in opposition to the award is that there was no evidence that the injury was the proximate cause of death.

It appeared that Cordova was 38 years of age, and had been in good health prior to the accident. After falling from the ladder, he was taken to a hospital, and the injured part was encased in a plaster cast. He remained in the hospital, confined to his bed, and was apparently making satisfactory progress toward recovery, until the 14th day of November, 1915, when he suddenly died. The ensuing autopsy disclosed, as the immediate cause of death, a small rupture of the right ventricle of the heart. The surgeon who performed the autopsy stated that the wall of the ventricle was unusually thin, but that in other respects the heart was in normal condition. He did not discover an embolus. He, as well as the attending physician, inclined to think that the facts did not indicate any causal connection between the injury and the subsequent heart rupture.

On the other hand, Dr. Ophuls, a pathologist, who had made a microscopic examination of the heart, testified, in effect, that while the wall of the ventricle was thin, it was not more so than in many cases of men in normal health; that, in the absence of any sudden or great exertion on the part of the deceased (of which there was no evidence), he would attribute the rupture to a sudden pressure of blood upon the wall of the ventricle, and that such pressure might well have been caused by the lodging of an embolus in an artery leading from the heart to the lungs. Such an embolus could have resulted from the pelvic fracture, and been carried from the point of its origin to the heart. Dr. Ophuls testified, further, that an embolus was easily lost or overlooked in the course of an autopsy, and that the failure to discover one did not necessarily indicate that it had not existed.

This was substantial testimony justifying the commission's inference and finding that the injury had been the proximate cause of Cordova's death. It is true that, on cross-examination, Dr. Ophuls said he could not state that, in fact, there had been an embolus, and that his explanation of the cause of death was "guesswork." But a reading of his entire testimony shows that he did not, by this, mean to say that he was indulging in mere conjecture or speculation. He was giving what, on the facts before him, and in the light of medical science, appeared to be the most probable explanation of the event. The theory that an embolus arising from the injury had caused the death was "guesswork" only in the sense that there was no direct evidence of the existence of such embolus. But, in Dr. Ophuls' view, other conceivable causes were excluded by the conditions which were shown, and the one which he advanced remained as the most probable one. This was a sufficient basis for the action of the commission.

[2] Absolute proof or mathematical demonstration is not required. Code Civ. Proc. § 1826.

[3] The commission is the final judge of the facts, and its findings cannot be overturned where they have the support of evidence upon which a reasonable man could come to the conclusion which was reached. There is such evidence here.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(175 Cal. 226)

BOAS v. KNEWING. (S. F. 7265.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1917.)

SALES 🔑479(1)—CONDITIONAL SALES—REMEDIES OF SELLER—ELECTION.

An agreement for the sale of an automobile provided that the four purchase-money notes were given in consideration of the seller's promise, upon payment at maturity, to sell and transfer the automobile, which was intrusted to the care of the buyer. In case any or all the notes remained unpaid at maturity, the buyer agreed to return the automobile to the seller. The notes were assigned to plaintiff, who, after maturity, notified the buyer that he would replevin the car if payment was not made by a given date. Before such date, the buyer left the car in the seller's garage, and so notified plaintiff. Held, that the seller's assignee, by threat to replevin, had elected to take the car instead of bringing suit for the price, and that the buyer was entitled to surrender the car under the terms of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1418, 1419.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by J. Boas against F. T. Knewing. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Samuel M. Samter, of San Francisco, for appellant. H. U. Brandenstein, of San Francisco, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment on the judgment roll.

The suit was by J. Boas upon three certain promissory notes, made payable to H. O. Harrison Company. Each of these notes was dated August 30, 1913, and bore interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. The first one, which was for the principal sum of $500, was payable one month after date; the second, for $500, payable two months after date; and the third, for $1,000, payable four months after date. The defendant pleaded that the notes were of a series of four given for the purchase at a conditional sale of an automobile for the price of $2,500, in accordance with a certain written agreement, which was pleaded, and it was alleged that, following the terms of said contract, the defendant had restored the property, and that the consideration for the notes had thus ceased to have any existence.

The facts as disclosed by the findings are as follows:

By the written agreement of even date with the three notes pleaded and a fourth for $500 and interest payable five months after date, defendant promised to pay to the order of H. O. Harrison Company the sums represented by said notes. The contract recites that the notes are given upon the consideration that the Harrison Company has promised upon payment thereof, principal and interest, at maturity (time being of the essence of the contract), to sell and transfer to F. T. Knewing a certain described automobile, which was on the day of the execution of the contract and notes "intrusted to the care" of said Knewing. It is admitted and agreed by the terms of the contract that the said property so intrusted is the property of H. O. Harrison Company, to remain "in them until they shall make the aforesaid sale and transfer" after payment of the principal and interest of the notes. By this instrument Knewing agrees to return the automobile to H. O. Harrison Company in good order "in case any or all of the above-mentioned notes remain unpaid at maturity." On September 4, 1913, the plaintiff discounted the four notes and they with the contract were duly indorsed and assigned to him. At the time of the filing of this suit (January 3, 1914) the date of maturity of the fourth note had not arrived.

On maturity of the first note, Mr. Knewing, who had been notified of the transfer of the paper to plaintiff, called upon the latter and requested an extension of said note, which was granted, and on October 3, 1913, Mr. Boas wrote to Mr. Knewing, informing him that the time of payment of said note for $500 had been extended until the 10th day of October, 1913. On October 11th plaintiff notified defendant that unless the note was paid by the 14th of that month, at 10 o'clock a. m., he would replevin the car. On the latter date defendant called upon H. O. Harrison Company, requested a further extension, was told that the notes and contract were owned and controlled by plaintiff, and thereupon, before the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., defendant left the automobile in the garage at the rear of the office of H. O. Harrison Company, and separated from said office by a partition. On the following day, upon the discovery of the car in the garage, H. O. Harrison Company notified plaintiff that it was there. On the 15th of October plaintiff received a letter from defendant, dated the 14th, expressing regret that the latter was unable to meet the note and interest. The letter contained also these words:

> "As I wished to save you the trouble and myself the inconvenience of your replevining the car which I held under lease from Harrison Company, I this morning returned the car to them at their place of business at Van Ness avenue."

In his reply Mr. Boas called attention to the fact that the notes had been discounted and that the return of the car did not recover for him the money so paid. "Some settlement of these notes must be made by you at once," he wrote; "otherwise we will be compelled to hand them to our attorney for collection."

Upon the above facts, as found substantially by the court, the conclusions of law and judgment were that plaintiff take nothing and that defendant recover costs.

Appellant interprets that part of the contract of sale, providing for the return of the automobile in case any or all of the notes remain unpaid at maturity, as a provision inserted for the sole benefit of the vendor, and as being in lieu of the usual provision in similar contracts permitting the seller to retake the possession of the chattel which is the subject of a sale on default of the vendee. The vendor (according to appellant's argument) could either enforce or waive the return of the automobile and the buyer, he says, could not force on the seller an election to sue for the price or for the return of the chattel. But under such interpretation of the contract the vendor's assignee by threat to replevin had indicated his election to take the car on the vendee's default rather than to waive the right of resuming possession and to sue for the price. Since plaintiff had thus indicated his election, the vendee was not bound to await an action which could only result in the recaption of the subject of the conditional sale and the superadded burden of costs. He returned the automobile to H. O. Harrison Company just as he had agreed to do in case any or all of the notes should remain unpaid at maturity. This return was not repudiated by the vendor's assignee, and the automobile at the time of the commencement of the action was still in the garage belonging to the original vendor. It has been suggested that the retaking of the property under the terms of an agreement of conditional sale does not in and of itself terminate the contract. Liver v. Mills, 153 Cal. 459, 101 Pac. 299. But here there was default on the part of the vendee, followed by his voluntary surrender on demand, of the chattel. Before resuming custody of the property, the vendor could either sue to recover it or for the purchase price, but he was not entitled to the property and the price also. Parke & Lacy Co. v. White River Lumber Co., 101 Cal. 37, 35 Pac. 442; Holt Manufacturing Co. v. Ewing, 109 Cal. 353-356, 42 Pac. 435; Muncy v. Brain, 158 Cal. 301-305, 110 Pac. 945; Rayfield v. Van Meter, 120 Cal. 416-419, 52 Pac. 666; Van Allen v. Francis, 123 Cal. 474-480, 56 Pac. 339. It was not necessary that election should be manifested by suit. Indeed, in the Holt Case, the seller's election to surrender title and depend upon payment of the price agreed upon was manifested by the presentation of a claim against the estate of Ewing. So here the demand for the return of the automobile, when complied with, took away the right of Boas to sue for the purchase price.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 208)

WETZEL v. CALE et al. (S. F. 7275.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 30, 1917.)

1. Bills and Notes 🔑164—Negotiability—Time of Payment.

Under Civ. Code, § 3088, requiring negotiable instruments to be without any condition not certain of fulfillment, etc., a note, authorizing the holder to accelerate the time for payment, is not negotiable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 411-414, 417.]

2. Bills and Notes 🔑246—Guarantor.

A party, signing a note upon its back before delivery to the payee, is a guarantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 555-558.]

3. Bills and Notes 🔑305—Necessity of Notice—Guarantor.

Under the direct provisions of Civ. Code, § 2807, a guarantor upon a note is liable upon principal's default without demand and notice being given him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 996-1021.]

4. Bills and Notes 🔑446—Accelerating Payment—Exercise of Option.

Where a note authorized the holder to declare the entire amount payable on nonpayment of an installment, commencement of suit is a sufficient exercise of such option and notice thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 1302.]

5. Bills and Notes 🔑446—Accelerating Payment—To Whom Available.

Where a note stated that the entire amount might be declared due under certain conditions at the election of the holder, the provision is not confined to the original payee, but extends also to subsequent holders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 1302.]

6. Bills and Notes 🔑521—Consideration—Sufficiency of Evidence.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that the note was given to discharge the maker's civil liability to payee, not to escape criminal prosecution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 1821.]

7. Bills and Notes 🔑92(2)—Consideration—Sufficiency.

A note given in compromise of a civil liability claim has a sufficient consideration, although payee might not have recovered as much by suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 173, 176, 185, 186.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Eva L. Wetzel against F. M. Cale, J. Jerome Smith, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Smith appeals. Affirmed.

P. C. Boardman, of San Francisco, and L. D. Manning, of Oakland, for appellant. J. G. Reisner, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This is an action upon a note whereby F. M. Cale promised to pay to L. H. Honey or order the sum of $5,000, with interest, in four installments of $1,250 each. The instrument contained a provision that, in case any installment was not paid within five days after it became due, the whole of the principal and interest remaining unpaid should forthwith become due and payable at the election of the holder of the note. Before the delivery of the note by Cale to Honey, Mabel G. Cale and J. Jerome Smith indorsed the note by writing their names on the back of it. Honey indorsed the note and delivered it to the plaintiff. The complaint alleges that the first installment was not paid when due, that more than five days had elapsed since such installment became due, and that the whole of the note, with interest, is now due and payable. Judgment for $5,000, with interest and costs, was prayed. F. M. Cale and Mabel G. Cale defaulted. J. Jerome Smith answered, denying various allegations of the complaint, and setting up certain matters by way of affirmative defense. A jury trial was waived, and the court made its findings and entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. From this judgment Smith appeals.

[1-3] The complaint contains allegations of presentment and notice of dishonor. These allegations were, however, immaterial. By reason of the provision allowing the holder, upon certain conditions, to accelerate the time for payment of the principal, the note was not a negotiable instrument. National Hardware Co. v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 130 Pac. 881; Smiley v. Watson, 23 Cal. App. 409, 138 Pac. 367; Civ. Code, § 3088. The appellant, who had written his name upon the back of it before delivery to the payee, was therefore a guarantor. First Nat. Bank v. Babcock, 94 Cal. 96, 29 Pac. 415, 28 Am. St. Rep. 94; Rogers v. Schulenburg, 111 Cal. 281, 43 Pac. 899. As such, he became liable upon the default of his principal, without any previous demand or notice. Civ. Code, § 2807; First Nat. Bank v. Babcock, supra; Pierce v. Merrill, 128 Cal. 464, 61 Pac. 64, 79 Am. St. Rep. 56.

[4, 5] It was not necessary for the plaintiff to allege, or for the court to find, that plaintiff had elected, after an installment had been five days overdue, to declare the entire sum payable. The complaint set forth the facts which authorized the holder to exercise this right, and the commencement of the action to recover the full amount is, in itself, an exercise of the option, and a sufficient notice thereof., Hewitt v. Dean, 91 Cal. 5, 27 Pac. 423; Bank of Commerce v. Scofield, 126 Cal. 156, 58 Pac. 451; Trinity County Bank v. Haas, 151 Cal. 553, 91 Pac. 385; Stalder v. Riverside, etc., Co., 167 Cal. 560, 140 Pac. 252. There is no merit in the contention that the provision for accelerating payments is available only to the original payee. The instrument is payable to L. H. Honey or order, and expressly provides that the right to declare the principal due for default in payment of an installment is to be exercised "at the election of the holder of this note."

[6, 7] The affirmative grounds of defense set up by Smith in his answer were that there was no consideration for the note, and that the same was obtained from Cale by means of threats of criminal prosecution. The appellant assails as unsupported the court's findings against these defenses. It appears that in October, 1911, John T. Cale, a brother of F. M. Cale, was the owner of six lots in the city of Richmond, Contra Costa county. In that month he conveyed said lots to one McCabe, the deed being executed by F. M. Cale as attorney in fact for John T. Cale. On February 3, 1912, McCabe conveyed the lots to Honey. Thereafter, in June, 1913, John T. Cale executed and delivered a deed conveying the same lots to J. C. Rohlfs, F. R. Cooper, and Fred J. T. Dawson. F. M. Cale took part in this transaction. Rohlfs, Cooper, and Dawson placed their deed on record. Neither the deed from Cale to McCabe, nor that from McCabe to Honey, had then been recorded. When Honey learned of the subsequent conveyance, which, apparently, divested his title (Civ. Code, § 1214), he addressed John T. Cale, demanding that he give the matter his attention. About the same time Honey called the facts to the attention of the district attorney of the city and county of San Francisco, and sought the issuance of a warrant charging John T. and F. M. Cale with a violation of section 533 of the Penal Code. Several interviews were had between F. M. Cale and Honey in the presence of their own attorneys and the district attorney. There is evidence that the district attorney expressed the opinion that there was no criminal intent on the part of either Cale, and that the matter was one that should be adjusted. Honey claimed that he had been damaged in the sum of over $5,000. Cale thought this demand excessive. But he and Honey finally entered into an agreement for the giving of the note in question, and Honey executed a writing in which, after reciting the preceding transactions, he released and discharged John T. and F. M. Cale from all claims for damages. The testimony of Cale was that he gave the note in order to avoid the threatened criminal prosecution. The finding of the court, however, was to the contrary, and the evidence amply supports the finding. Honey had a claim for damages against the Cales, and the court was warranted in believing that he was advancing it in good faith. The compromise of such claim, and his forbearance to sue upon it constituted a sufficient consideration for the note. Rohrbacher v. Aitken, 145 Cal. 485, 78 Pac. 1054; Union Collection Co. v. Buckman, 150 Cal. 159, 163, 88 Pac. 708, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568, 119 Am. St. Rep. 164, 11 Ann. Cas. 609. The validity of the new promise does not depend on any subsequent inquiry into the legal sufficiency of the demand so compromised. Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 455; Rohrbacher v. Aitken, supra; Whelan v. Swain, 132 Cal. 389, 391, 64 Pac. 560. It is of no consequence, therefore, that Honey might not have succeeded in recovering as much as $5,000 if he had brought suit. This was the amount agreed upon in settlement of his demand, and the promisor cannot now repudiate his contract upon the ground that he agreed to give too much.

Complaint is made of the failure of the court to find on the allegations of the answer that the plaintiff was not a bona fide holder for value before maturity. But since, as plaintiff concedes, her rights as holder of a nonnegotiable instrument were no greater than those of the original payee, these allegations did not present a material issue.

We find no error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LAWLOR, J.

(175 Cal. 230)

BERNARD v. RENARD et al. (S. F. 7024.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1917.)

1. Landlord and Tenant 🔑110(2)—Acceptance of Tenant's Abandonment.

Where premises are abandoned by the lessee, who denies liability under lease, and landlord assumes actual possession and absolute control of premises and releases them, or attempts to do so, without anything being done to indicate that he is acting for the lessee, the landlord cannot thereafter say that he has not accepted a surrender of the term, and it is immaterial that the lessee refused to accept possession at all, or that the lessor failed to obtain a permanent tenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 367–369.]

2. Pleading 🔑127(2)—Answer—Admissions—Action for Rent—Abandonment.

In lessor's action for rents after lessee's abandonment, lessee's answer, alleging that lessor refused to cancel lease, did not show that the lessor had failed to accept the abandonment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 264, 267.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Nellie B. Bernard against L. Renard and others. Defendants appeal from judgment for plaintiff and from order denying motion for new trial. Reversed.

Joseph E. O'Donnell and Costello & Costello, all of San Francisco (E. R. Hoerchner, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants. Houghton & Houghton, of San Francisco, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an action to recover a judgment for money alleged to be due as rent under the terms of a written lease, the defendants being the trustees of the creditors of the lessee corporation (a dissolved corporation), and the sureties on the bond given by the lessee for the payment of the stipulated rent and the observance of the other covenants of the lease. The cause was tried with a jury, which returned a verdict for plaintiff for $7,500. Defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

[1] The action was for rents at $900 per month for the period commencing November 14, 1908, and ending June 14, 1910. The lease was one dated March 6, 1907, of a lot of land and a building to be erected by the lessor thereon, for the term of 10 years; said term to begin when the building was completed and ready for occupancy, at $900 per month for the first five years, and $1,000 per month for the second five years. Before the completion of the building and in February, 1908, differences arose between the parties. During that month, a formal notice of rescission signed by the lessee was left on the premises and received by the lessor. It stated substantially that the lessee, by reason of the fact that it was induced to enter the lease by certain alleged false and fraudulent representations, and also because the building had not been completed as soon as promised, elected to rescind the lease, offered to restore all property in said building and premises, and demanded that the lease be rescinded and surrendered. The lessor on February 17, 1908, sent to the lessee the following notice, viz.:

> "Your notice of rescission I have received and the only answer I have to make to it is that the rescission of a lease requires the action of all parties thereto or the judgment of a competent court. Your building will be ready for occupancy within the next forty days."

On May 14, 1908, the lessor notified the lessee that the building was completed and tendered possession thereof and demanded payment of the first month's rent, and the lessee refused to accept it or any portion thereof, or to pay any rent under the lease. This apparently ended the communications between the parties until the commencement of this action over four years later, November 14, 1912. The lessee never went into possession of the premises and never paid any rent.

Almost immediately after May 14, 1908, the plaintiff began efforts to secure a tenant for the property. She, however, secured no permanent tenant, although she endeavored to do so. It was put into the hands of various real estate agents for that purpose, and there were large signs "painted on the building, placed on it" for the purpose of attracting tenants. Various "To let" signs were placed on the building by plaintiff, the first as early any way as July, 1908. The premises were let by the lessor temporarily to various parties. They were first so let during the latter part of 1908 "for between a month or two months," $324 rental being received. In the spring of 1909, the premises were so let for about three months at $150 a month. Again they were so let to various tenants through a real estate agency, for "a trifle less than" $600. On July 10, 1910, according to the allegations of the complaint, plaintiff finally disposed of said building. During all of the time after June, 1908, plaintiff apparently treated the property as absolutely at her disposal for her own benefit, just as though the lease to the defendant lessee was not in existence. After the refusal of the lessee to accept the premises, no word, oral or written, was conveyed to it to the effect that plaintiff did not hold possession of the premises solely in her own right and for her own benefit and without regard to the lease. No suggestion was made to the lessee that she intended to let the premises for the benefit of the lessee, or at all, and no information was given as to the fact of any of the tenancies. And finally, in July, 1910, as we have seen, the building was permanently disposed of by plaintiff, apparently without any information as to the intention to dispose of it being given to the lessee.

Upon these facts, as to which there is no conflict, it seems clear to us that the doctrine of Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507, 27 Pac. 369, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145, is applicable. It is true that the facts of this case differ in some particulars from those of Welcome v. Hess, supra; but they differ in no such way as to make the conclusion arrived at there inapplicable here. The real thing there decided was that where the premises are abandoned by the tenant, who avows his intention not to be bound by his lease, the assumption of actual possession and absolute control of the premises by the lessor, including efforts to let and the actual reletting thereof to others, without saying or doing anything to so qualify his acts as to indicate that he is not acting in his own right and for his own benefit as owner entitled to possession, without saying or doing anything to indicate that he is acting for the benefit of the lessee or reletting on the lessee's account and for his benefit, he will not be heard thereafter to say that he has not accepted a surrender of the term. This is the settled law in this state, although there are cases to the contrary in some other states. The discussion of the question in Welcome v. Hess, supra, was such as to make it unnecessary to consider the matter at length in this opinion. The law on this question was very clearly stated by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District in an opinion written by Presiding Justice Conrey in Rehkopf v. Wirz et al., 31 Cal. App. 695, 161 Pac. 285, as follows:

> "Where a tenant abandons the leased property and repudiates the lease, the landlord may accept possession of the property for the benefit of the tenant and relet the same, and thereupon may maintain an action for damages for the difference between what he was able in good faith to let the property for and the amount provided to be paid under the lease agreement. Bradbury v. Higginson, 162 Cal. 602 [123 Pac. 797]. But a lessor who chooses to follow that course must in some manner give the lessee information that he is accepting such possession for the benefit of the tenant and not in his own right and for his own benefit. If the lessor takes possession of property delivered to him by his tenant and does so unqualifiedly, he thereby releases the tenant. Baker v. Eilers Music Co., 26 Cal. App. 371 [146 Pac. 1056]; Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507 [27 Pac. 369, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145]. An unqualified taking of possession by the lessor and reletting of the premises by him as owner to new tenants is inconsistent with the continuing force of the original lease. If done without the consent of the tenant to such interference, it is an eviction, and the tenant will be released. If done pursuant to the tenant's attempted abandonment, it is an acceptance of the surrender and likewise releases the tenant."

It is clear that the mere fact that the lessee refused to accept possession at all and never went into possession does not present any material distinction, in view of the subsequent acts of the lessor. Nor does it materially affect the matter that the lessor, notwithstanding her efforts in that behalf, failed to obtain a permanent tenant for a term extending beyond the term prescribed by the lease to defendant corporation. Of course, such a letting without any act or word to qualify its effect would have very clearly shown an absolute acceptance of the surrender of the term, just as the permanent disposition by the lessor of the building in July, 1910, showed to a certainty that the lessor was then holding the premises solely in her own right and in no way for the benefit of the tenant. But her efforts to obtain a permanent tenant were just as potent in their effect as showing her attitude with regard to the premises in this connection, as would have been her actual letting in the event of finding such a tenant, and her conduct in this regard together with her conduct generally in relation to the premises from as early as July, 1908, bring the case within the rule we have referred to, notwithstanding her failure to obtain a permanent tenant. The refusal to accept the offer of rescission made in February, 1908, and the subsequent tender of the premises and demand for one month's rent in May, 1908, are also of no importance in so far as the question we are considering is concerned. These things, of course, showed the then attitude of the lessor in the matter and the desire that the lessee should accept the premises under the lease. But even then the lessor did not indicate that in the event of the lessee's refusal to accept possession she would nevertheless continue to regard the property as belonging to the tenant for the specified term. And, as we have seen, her subsequent conduct with regard thereto was a complete negation of any such attitude on her part.

[2] Some reliance is placed by plaintiff in this connection upon certain allegations in defendants' pleadings by way of further answer and defense and cross-complaint. In addition to their denials of the allegations of the complaint in this action commenced November 14, 1912, they sought a conclusion of rescission of the contract of lease on the ground of alleged false representations which induced the making thereof, and in this connection alleged the giving of the notice of rescission in February, 1908, to which we have referred, and that the plaintiff "refused and still refuses to rescind or cancel said lease." So far as the question of surrender that we have been discussing is concerned, the only force that can be attributed to this allegation in the connection in which it is used is, of course, by way of admission of the defendants that there never was any unqualified acceptance by the lessor of possession and control of the premises for her own exclusive benefit, notwithstanding the lease. We cannot read it as intended to have or as having in fact any such meaning, or as being of any importance in the solution of the question we have discussed.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(175 Cal. 258)

BRACQUEE v. MOTTET CO. (S. F. 6957.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 30, 1917.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑85—INJURIES TO SERVANT — LIABILITY OF MASTER — NEGLIGENCE.

For injuries received by a servant in the course of his employment prior to enactment of St. 1913, p. 279, the master was not liable in the absence of negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 135, 136, 139, 140.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑278(1)—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE OF MASTER—EVIDENCE.

In an action by a night clerk for injuries received while attempting to remove a boisterous man from the hotel, evidence held insufficient to show negligence of the master; instruction given clerk not to furnish the man with accommodations not being an order to assume new and perilous duties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 954, 957.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Adolphus E. Graupner, Judge.

Action by John Bracquee against the Mottet Company, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

L. A. Redman and Redman & Alexander, all of San Francisco, for appellant. J. C. B. Hebbard and Hamilton A. Bauer, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. On account of personal injuries received in the course of his employment as night clerk of the Hotel Albany in San Francisco on April 26, 1913, plaintiff obtained a judgment for damages against defendant corporation, which owned and operated said hotel. We have here an appeal from such judgment.

[1] As will be noted, the injuries were received prior to the enactment of our law creating a liability on the part of an employer to an employé for compensation for injuries received in the course of and arising out of his employment without regard to negligence. Stats. 1913, p. 279. Hence the resort to an action in the superior court for the damages caused by the injury, wherein, of course, it was essential to a recovery by the employé that there should be alleged and proved some fault or negligence on the part of the employer proximately causing the injury. That in such an action the employer's liability at all is dependent upon some fault or negligence on his part is a proposition too thoroughly settled to require discussion.

[2] The complaint does not in terms allege any negligence on the part of the employer. It does allege that he, "while acting in the course of his employment as such clerk at said hotel, was ordered and directed by defendant not to permit a certain boisterous and objectionable man, who was then and there seeking a room in said hotel, to become a guest therein, and plaintiff was then and there ordered and directed by defendant to remove said man from said hotel," and that while he was attempting to obey said order, he was assaulted by said man, and beaten and thrown down a flight of stairs, thus receiving the injuries. If we assume that this sufficiently shows negligence on the part of the employer, it must be upon the theory that the employer by virtue of his orders to the employé required him to perform new and perilous duties without giving him proper warning of the danger involved. We do not deem it necessary to decide whether the complaint can be held to sufficiently state such a cause of action. The evidence does not measure up to the allegations of the complaint, and, we are satisfied, was insufficient to support the verdict. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case a motion for a nonsuit was made and denied. It should have been granted. Defendant, however, subsequently introduced its evidence, but this evidence in no degree supplied the defects. At the close of the testimony defendant requested the court to instruct the jury to find for it. This request was denied. It should have been granted, and its denial is assigned as error.

Considering the evidence given in support of plaintiff in the light most favorable to him, it presented substantially this situation: Plaintiff, who was 72 years of age, was night clerk in the Hotel Albany, a rooming house at 187 Third street, San Francisco. He was on duty as such the night of April 26, 1913. The office was on the second floor of the building, across a little hall at the head of the stairway leading from the ground floor, which was occupied by stores. The stairway is broken about the middle by a landing, where it turns. Two men came to the office and asked for a room. One of these was apparently intoxicated and "nasty" and "boisterous." Plaintiff showed them to a room. He subsequently told the manager, who had a talk with this man, and finally the man gave up the key to the room and voluntarily left the house. A short time thereafter he came back and asked plaintiff to let him go to the room, and plaintiff said, "No, I can't let you in the room; you heard the manager; you have given up the key; I have no right to do that; I can't change that." The man then went away, but a short time thereafter returned again, with the same request, which was again denied, and he again left. Shortly thereafter the manager came to the office and plaintiff told him that this man had been annoying him by coming back and requesting to be given accommodations. The manager said, "He has given up the key; don't let him in." The manager then left and plaintiff remained alone in the office. Some time later the man again returned. Plaintiff was in the office, the window of which looked out upon the stairway. The man came to the window with the same request, which was again denied, and he was asked to go away and not annoy plaintiff longer. He did go down the stairs to the landing or the step above the landing, and plaintiff came out of the office and to the head of the stairway, and endeavored to persuade him to leave the building. Suddenly the man, who had not before shown any inclination to the use of force, in some way reached up and took hold of plaintiff, with the result that plaintiff was dragged or fell to the landing, receiving the injuries on account of which this action was brought.

It will be observed that there is nothing in all this to indicate that plaintiff had been given any order or instruction to remove the man from the premises, or any instruction involving the use of force by him. Substantially, he had been instructed simply not to furnish the man with accommodations, or, in the language of the complaint, "not to permit" him "to become a guest therein." The instruction meant no more than that plaintiff should not receive the man as a guest, entailing the performance of a duty necessarily devolving on clerks in hotels and rooming houses constantly, that of refusing accommodations to applicants. It is impossible to find in the instruction or conduct of the manager any basis for an inference of negligence on his part in the matter, any basis for an inference of the omission of any information which he was reasonably called upon to give the employé, or of the omission of any precaution he was reasonably called upon to make for his safety.

The testimony given for the defense added nothing of benefit to plaintiff. The manager testified that he and the Mottets were away from the hotel all the evening, returning about 1 o'clock, and this man was just being given a room; that the man was intoxicated, and some dispute ensued, resulting in the man threatening to leave, and he told him that was "up to him," and the man left; that he followed him to the head of the stairs and saw him go out, and that he then said to plaintiff that he did not want that man in the house, and "if he returns or refuses to leave the house, either call me or get an officer"; that after taking some coffee he then went to bed, and shortly thereafter heard shouts for help and rushed down the stairs and found plaintiff lying on the landing floor.

It may be conceded solely for the purposes of the decision that if plaintiff had been ordered to personally eject this man from the premises, and in attempting to do so was injured, it might be held under the circumstances that there was some basis for a finding of negligence. But there was nothing of that sort in the case, no setting of the employé to a dangerous task, no order to assume new and perilous duties. In the language of Kennedy v. Chase, 119 Cal. 637, 52 Pac. 33, 63 Am. St. Rep. 153, a case cited by plaintiff, "there cannot be neglect without the existence of a corresponding duty," and we look in vain at the evidence in this case to discover anything indicating the existence of any duty devolving on defendant to give any information to plaintiff or to take any additional precaution for the personal safety of plaintiff in this matter.

We are entirely at a loss to account for the verdict in this case upon any other theory than the one it is claimed by defendant was adopted in the trial court, viz. that if the injuries were received by plaintiff in the course of his employment, and arose out of his employment, the defendant was liable without regard to whether or not there was any negligence or fault on its part. Of course, this could not be in view of the law applicable to the case. That it was the theory adopted in the trial court appears to be borne out by an instruction given to the jury, as follows:

> "If you gentlemen of the jury believe from the evidence that the relation of master and servant existed between plaintiff and defendant at the time of the accident, and if you believe that in the careful discharge of his duty and in obedience to the instruction received by plaintiff from defendant or its agent or manager in charge of the Albany Hotel the plaintiff received the injuries he complains of, I charge you that the defendant is responsible and in damages liable for the results of that accident. I charge you that injuries received in the line of a servant's duty, or within the scope of his employment, make the master liable."

This manifestly was erroneous and probably accounts for the verdict.

Looking at the case in the light most favorable to plaintiff, it simply presents the case of an employé who was unfortunately injured in the course of his employment, without any fault or negligence on the part of the employer, at a time when we had no compulsory compensation law rendering an employer liable for injuries to his employés suffered in the course of and arising out of the employment, without regard to whether there was any fault or negligence on the employé's part. In such a case there can be, of course, no liability on the part of the employer on account of the injuries.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(175 Cal. 216)

ARTHUR v. CITY OF PETALUMA et al.

(S. F. 8174.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 31, 1917.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑864(1)—INDEBTEDNESS—AMOUNT.

Where a city's current revenues were sufficient to pay a printing claim when it accrued, but not thereafter, when payment was demanded, claim reduced to judgment, and money to pay it raised by special tax levy pursuant to St. 1901, p. 794, payment thereof was prohibited by Const. art. 11, § 18, prohibiting cities from incurring indebtedness exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, unless otherwise authorized by special election.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1828.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑868(1)—INDEBTEDNESS—AMOUNT.

Where an indebtedness against a city was valid when incurred, a subsequent exhaustion of funds from which it could be paid only affects the remedy to obtain payment, and does not prevent a judgment being secured for the amount due.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1842.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑864(1)—INDEBTEDNESS—AMOUNT.

A printing bill incurred under Const. art. 11, § 8, authorizing certain cities to adopt a charter and providing for its publication, is a municipal indebtedness or liability within Const. art. 11, § 18, prohibiting cities from incurring any indebtedness or liability exceeding the current year's income, unless authorized to do so by a special election.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1828.]

In Bank. Application for writ of mandate against the City of Petaluma and others. Transfer made from the District Court of Appeals of the Third Appellate District because of the inability of the judges of that court to agree upon a judgment. Alternative writ discharged and proceeding dismissed.

Lippitt & Lippitt, of Petaluma, R. L. Thompson, of Santa Rosa, and Newton A. Johnson, of Petaluma, for petitioner. G. P. Hall, of Petaluma, and W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa (E. J. Dole, of Petaluma, of counsel), for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is a proceeding in mandate to compel the allowance and payment of a claim of petitioner against the city of Petaluma. The proceeding was commenced in the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District, and was ordered transferred to this court because of the inability of the judges of that court to agree upon a judgment.

Petitioner's claim was for printing done by him for the city during the fiscal year 1910–11, in his newspaper, the Petaluma Daily Courier, the contract for city printing for that year having been awarded to him as the lowest bidder for the work. The particular printing was the publication in said paper of a proposed freeholders' charter, which the trustees of the city had ordered published "in the manner provided by law." When the printing was done there was sufficient money in the city treasury of the revenue of that fiscal year to pay petitioner's claim. His demand in due form for the amount alleged to be due was filed with the city clerk on March 28, 1911, but at that time the revenues provided for the fiscal year had been entirely exhausted. The claim was disallowed. Petitioner brought his action against the city thereon, and in September, 1912, obtained a judgment for the full amount of his claim. That judgment was subsequently affirmed on appeal. Arthur v. City of Petaluma, 27 Cal. App. 782, 151 Pac. 183. It was substantially found therein that the claim was in all respects valid, and that at the time the claim was presented for payment the funds of the fiscal year had been exhausted by the payment of other claims incurred or attempted to be incurred subsequent to the claims of plaintiff. The judgment was an ordinary judgment against the city for the amount claimed. The county clerk of Sonoma county having certified this judgment to the auditor and municipal governing body of the city, in accord with the provisions of an act of the state Legislature providing for the payment of judgments against counties, cities, etc., approved March 23, 1901 (Stats. 1901, p. 794), the city council, as provided by the act, included in the tax levy for the fiscal year 1916–17 a sum expressly devoted to the payment of the judgment and sufficient to pay the same. This tax was collected, and is now in the treasury of the city expressly set aside for the payment of the judgment. Nevertheless the city now refuses to pay the claim or any part thereof. Hence this proceeding.

[1, 2] The claim of the city substantially is that section 18 of article 11 of the state Constitution precludes payment of this claim incurred in the fiscal year 1910–11 from any of the revenue resulting from the tax levy by the city council for the fiscal year 1916–17. Whatever might be our view in the absence of previous decisions of this court, we are satisfied that the construction given to this section of our Constitution by a long line of decisions is such as to compel us to sustain this claim of the city.

Section 18, art. 11, of the Constitution, so far as here applicable, reads to-day as it did when first adopted, in the year 1879. The language is:

> "No * * * city * * * shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof, voting at an election to be held for that purpose. * * * Any indebtedness or liability incurred contrary to this provision, * * * shall be void."

Certain amendments to this section made in the year 1900, permitting the city and county of San Francisco to pay unpaid claims of previous fiscal years out of the income and revenue of succeeding fiscal years, and the city of Vallejo to pay an existing indebtedness "whenever two-thirds of the electors thereof, voting at an election held for that purpose, shall so decide," if they have any bearing upon the question, would seem to be entirely in line with the previous construction given by the court to the section, and to support the proposition that the limitation of the constitutional provision can only be overcome by a two-thirds vote of the electors or by a constitutional amendment to meet the particular case.

The constitutional provision was first considered by this court in San Francisco Gas Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 Cal. 641, and was given a broad and liberal construction in view of the object it was desired thereby to attain. Under a strict construction it might possibly have been held that its only effect was to make void any indebtedness or liability incurred in excess of the income and revenue provided for the year, without the assent of two-thirds of the electors expressed at an election, leaving such indebtedness or liability as was not in excess of such income and revenue at the time of its creation unaffected by the provision, and a valid claim payable out of the revenue of succeeding years. But the court, through Mr. Justice Ross, said that it meant, not only that an indebtedness incurred contrary to its express provisions was absolutely void, but that "each year's income and revenue must pay each year's indebtedness and liability, and that no indebtedness or liability incurred in any one year shall be paid out of the income or revenue of any future year." It was also said:

> "The system previously prevailing in some of the municipalities of the state, by which liabilities and indebtedness were incurred by them far in excess of their income and revenue for the year in which the same were contracted, thus creating a floating indebtedness which had to be paid out of the income and revenue of future years, and which, in turn, necessitated the carrying forward of other indebtedness, was a fruitful source of municipal extravagance. The evil consequences of that system had been felt by the people at home and witnessed elsewhere. It was to put a stop to all of that, that the constitutional provision in question was adopted. The change was eminently wise. A somewhat similar provision in the old Constitution with respect to state indebtedness saved the people of the state a vast amount of money. People v. Johnson, 6 Cal. 503; Nougues v. Douglass, 7 Cal. 65. We have neither the right nor the disposition, by judicial interpretation, to take away the wholesome restriction upon municipalities thus imposed by the Constitution. Of course, in giving effect to this radical change from the preexisting condition of things, it will not be strange if some shall be found to suffer. But it must be remembered that all are presumed to know the law, and that whoever deals with a municipality is bound to know the extent of its powers. Those who contract with it, or furnish it supplies, do so with reference to the law, and must see that the limit is not exceeded. With proper care on their part and on the part of the representatives of the municipality, there is no danger of loss."

In Shaw v. Statler, 74 Cal. 258, 15 Pac. 833, it was held that the statement that "no indebtedness or liability incurred in any one year shall be paid out of the income or revenue of any future year" was a correct statement as to the meaning of the section "at least so far as the revenue of any particular year is required for the expenses of that year," it not being necessary to go further in that case. But in Schwartz v. Wilson, 75 Cal. 502, 17 Pac. 449, where it was attempted to pay a claim absolutely valid in all respects, incurred in the fiscal year 1883–84, out of revenues for the fiscal year 1884–5, the statement in San Francisco, etc., Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 Cal. 641, was deemed to settle the proper construction of the section and forbid such payment. It has apparently never since been questioned that it is the construction that must be given the section, except for statements in one or two dissenting opinions. It was accepted as correct and followed in McGowan v. Ford, 107 Cal. 177, 40 Pac. 231; Smith v. Broderick, 107 Cal. 644, 40 Pac. 1033, 48 Am. St. Rep. 167; Weaver v. San Francisco, 111 Cal. 319, 43 Pac. 972; McBean v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 Pac. 358, 31 L. R. A. 794, 53 Am. St. Rep. 191; Bradford v. San Francisco, 112 Cal. 545, 44 Pac. 912; Higgins v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 524, 45 Pac. 824, 50 Pac. 670; Montague v. English, 119 Cal. 225, 51 Pac. 327; Higgins v. San Diego, 131 Cal. 294, 63 Pac. 470; Fresno, etc., Co. v. McKenzie, 135 Cal. 497, 67 Pac. 900; and County of Tehama v. Sisson, 152 Cal. 167, 172, 92 Pac. 64. Under these decisions, lack of available money of the revenue of the fiscal year against which the claim constitutes a charge, from whatever cause, and entirely regardless of the absolute validity of the claim, is a complete answer to any attempt to enforce payment from what are styled, in some of the later of the cases cited, "the ordinary revenues" of the city for succeeding years. To this term we shall refer later. This is perhaps shown most emphatically and clearly by what is said in Weaver v. San Francisco, supra. The views there expressed have never been modified, except as to the proper form of judgment to be given the holder of a valid claim. Having a valid claim, one valid when the indebtedness was incurred, the subsequent exhaustion of funds from which the same could be paid before the claimant was able to obtain formal allowance and payment, does not make his claim bad, but only affects his remedy to obtain payment, and he is entitled to have his claim established by a judgment for the amount due. Weaver v. San Francisco, supra; Montague v. English, supra. In the Weaver Case it was declared and ordered that the judgment in terms should limit satisfaction of the judgment to the income and revenues provided for the fiscal year in which the liability was incurred. In the later case of Higgins v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 524, 45 Pac. 824, 50 Pac. 670, it was finally held that such a limitation should not be inserted, but that the claimant should be given a general judgment. The court said in regard to this:

> "We have no desire to disturb the principle that no indebtedness or liability incurred in any one year should be paid out of the ordinary income or revenue of any future year, which principle has been declared by a long line of decisions, running from the case of San Francisco Gas Co. v. Brickwedel, 62 Cal. 641, to McBean v. Fresno, 112 Cal. 159, 44 Pac. 358, 31 L. R. A. 794, 53 Am. St. Rep. 191. Future provision might be made for the payment of a debt, although there might be no revenues of the fiscal year in which the debt was incurred out of which it could be satisfied—as, for instance, by the adoption by the people of a proposal to pay it, or by other methods that might possibly be suggested; and a direction in a judgment that it should be paid only out of the revenues of a certain year might be held to preclude its payment in any other way. Merely putting a demand in the form of a general judgment would not in any way take it out of the general rule that the ordinary revenues of a future year cannot be applied to the payment of a liability in a previous year, as held in Smith v. Broderick, 107 Cal. 644, 40 Pac. 1033, 48 Am. St. Rep. 167. We think, therefore, that in a case like the one at bar there should be a general judgment in the usual form, without any direction as to the method of its payment."

This is now the settled rule. It is clear that the whole effect of this is simply that the judgment should not be drawn in such a way as to preclude enforcement in the possible event that legal provision is subsequently made for the payment thereof. What that legal provision outside of the necessary two-thirds vote by the people might be, if any, the court did not consider or intimate. But we think it must be apparent that in using the words "the ordinary income or revenue of any future year" it was not intended to suggest that, consistently with the constitutional provision, the city authorities could include in their tax levy for a future year a special levy for the express purpose of paying such a claim and that the same might be paid from the tax collected thereon. The very case approvingly cited by the court in the portion quoted above (Smith v. Broderick, 107 Cal. 644, 40 Pac. 1033, 48 Am. St. Rep. 167) decided this very point. The court there said:

> "The collection in the subsequent fiscal year of a tax levied by the board of supervisors for the express purpose of paying this judgment did not give to the plaintiff any additional right to the payment of his claim, or any right to the money thus collected. The provision of the Constitution limiting the power of the municipality in incurring a liability to the income and revenue 'provided for it for such year' means that only the income and revenue that had been provided for the expenditures of the year prior to incurring the liability can be appropriated for the payment of such expenditures. To hold that any deficiency in the revenues of one year can be met from taxes collected in a subsequent year, under the guise that they had been collected for the express purpose of meeting such deficiency, would sweep away the entire restriction which the Constitution intended to place upon municipal extravagance."

Clearly the term "ordinary revenue," as used in the Higgins Case, was understood as including all revenue resulting from taxes levied by the city authorities. There is nothing in any of the decisions to suggest that any such claim can be paid from any fund other than the income and revenue of the particular fiscal year in which the indebtedness or liability was incurred, except by authorization of a two-thirds vote of the electors or constitutional amendment, and we are satisfied that the constitutional provision, as construed by the decisions we have referred to, precludes any other method. See Bradford v. San Francisco, 112 Cal. 545, 44 Pac. 912.

The fact that petitioner has obtained a judgment against the city for the amount of his claim in an action brought for that purpose does not avoid the application of this constitutional provision. The judgment, of course, conclusively determines the question of the validity of his claim, but it still remains that, by reason of that provision, it cannot be paid out of the revenues of a fiscal year other than the one in which the liability or indebtedness was created. In Smith v. Broderick, supra, the claim had been reduced to a judgment, and it was squarely held, after an exhaustive discussion, that the existence of the judgment did not preclude an investigation for the purpose of ascertaining what the nature of the original cause of action was. In Goldsmith v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 36, 46 Pac. 816, a similar situation existed, and the rule applicable was concisely and correctly stated by Mr. Justice Henshaw for the court as follows:

> "The reduction of the original claim to a judgment does not increase its dignity so as to authorize plaintiff to demand payment of it from any fund not subject to the primary demand."

See, also, Higgins v. San Diego, 118 Cal. 524, 45 Pac. 824, 50 Pac. 670.

If there be anything in Johnson v. Supervisors, 65 Cal. 481, 4 Pac. 463, in conflict with this view, it must be deemed overruled by the later cases that we have just cited. If at the time the liability to petitioner was incurred such liability was not in excess of the revenue and income for the fiscal year, he was entitled to his judgment, as held in numerous cases to which we have referred, notwithstanding that at the time of presentation of his claim, commencement of action, and judgment the funds for the year had been exhausted, and the interposition of these matters as a defense would have been unavailing.

The legislative act of March 23, 1901, has been referred to. It purports to require the payment by the treasurer of any county, city, etc., of any final judgment "now existing or that may be obtained hereafter against any county, * * * city," etc. By it the county clerk is required to file with the auditor of the city a list of judgments of record in his office against the city at least 15 days before the day on which the tax levy is to be made, the auditor is required to examine and audit the same and certify the list to the treasurer, and the governing body of the city is required "to include in the tax levy for the next fiscal year a rate sufficient to pay all final judgments existing against" such city. The proceeding in regard to this claim was apparently in accord with the provisions of this act. But it is obvious that this act cannot be held available to petitioner for the enforcement of his demand against the revenue and income of a fiscal year subsequent to that in which the liability on which his demand is based was incurred. To hold otherwise would be to effect a violation of the constitutional provision. The Constitution is as binding upon the Legislature as it is upon a city, and the Legislature cannot require or authorize a city to proceed in defiance of its terms.

The conclusions we have stated as to the various points discussed are the necessary result of the settled construction of section 18, art. 11, of the Constitution. This construction has now been accepted as settled beyond question for many years. We do not feel at liberty to depart from it. The fact that great hardships result in individual cases from an observance of the rule has been recognized in several of our decisions, but, as has been well said, "this fact cannot afford reason for subverting the law or frittering it away."

[3] It was held in Lewis v. Widber, 99 Cal. 412, 33 Pac. 1128, that the constitutional provision refers only "to an indebtedness or liability which one of the municipal bodies mentioned has itself incurred—that is, an indebtedness which the municipality has contracted, or a liability resulting, in whole or in part, from some act or conduct of such municipality"; and that consequently it has no application to the stated salary of a public officer fixed by state statute, that being a matter over which the municipality has no control and with respect to which it has no discretion. It appears here that the printing upon which petitioner's claim is based was the publication in his paper of a proposed freeholders' charter, proceedings for the adoption of which by the city of Petaluma were then pending in accord with the provisions of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution. This section authorized such a city at its option to adopt such a charter and prescribed the procedure to be followed in order to accomplish such adoption. One of the conditions was that before the election at which the proposed charter is submitted to the people for ratification, it must be published for 20 days in a daily newspaper of the city. Petitioner, having been a bidder for the contract for city printing for the fiscal year, had been awarded the contract therefor, and a contract had been entered into between him and the city for such printing at specified rates. It was under this contract that petitioner made the publication of the proposed charter in his newspaper. It is claimed that under these facts the case is within the rule declared in Lewis v. Widber, supra, and that the constitutional provision has no application. We think it clear that there is no force in this contention. The indebtedness here is one incurred by the municipality, and it is the immediate result of a contract by the municipality. It would seem to be unnecessary in this connection to do more than to refer to the cases of Pacific Undertakers v. Widber, 113 Cal. 201, 45 Pac. 273, and Goldsmith v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 36, 46 Pac. 816. It was there held that claims of a character not distinguishable in any material aspect from that here involved are within the constitutional provision. It was aptly said through Mr. Justice McFarland in the first of these cases:

> "If they are without that provision, then it is difficult to see how indebtedness incurred for any services or commodities necessary for the public welfare could be held to be within it, or how the constitutional limitation could be kept from being frittered entirely away."

There is no other point made that requires notice.

The alternative writ of mandate heretofore issued is discharged and the proceeding dismissed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(175 Cal. 229)

SAN JOAQUIN LIGHT & POWER CORP. v. CITY OF MADERA et al. (Sac. 2651.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1917.)

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Chas. O. Busick, Judge.

Mandamus proceedings by the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation against the City of Madera and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Short & Sutherland, of Fresno (Carl E. Lindsay, of Fresno, of counsel), for appellant. F. A. Fee, of Madera, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. Mandamus to compel auditing and payment of a claim of plaintiff against the city of Madera. The superior court gave judgment for defendants, and on appeal by plaintiff to the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District the justices of that court were unable to agree upon a judgment. The appeal was therefore transferred to this court for determination.

In all material aspects the case here presented is the same as that of Arthur v. City of Petaluma (No. 8174) 165 Pac. 698, decided May 31, 1917. It is sought to enforce payment against revenues of the fiscal year 1915–16 resulting from tax levies made by the board of trustees of the city, without any authorization by the electors, of a claim of $2,108.75 for electrical power and energy, lights and lighting, material and labor furnished the city during previous fiscal years. The claim has been reduced to judgment, and the proceedings were in accord with the act of March 23, 1901, referred to in the opinion in that case.

The decision in Arthur v. Petaluma, supra, controls here, and therefore the judgment of the superior court in favor of defendants must be held to be correct.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge, pro tem.

(175 Cal. 253)

CROSS et al. v. BOUCK et al. (L. A. 3685.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 28, 1917.)

1. Landlord and Tenant 🔑79(1) — "Assignment" or "Sublease."

Where a tenant made a lease to another person upon different terms and conditions from the tenant's lease, it was a "sublease," and not an "assignment" of the original lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 235, 244–248.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Assignment; Second Series, Sublease.]

2. Landlord and Tenant 🔑76(2)—Subtenant's Right to Sublet.

Where a lease prohibited an assignment thereof, but not subletting of premises, a sublessee could assign sublease to a third party without violating provisions of original lease, where sublease did not prohibit assignment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 228.]

3. Fraud 🔑11(1) — Misrepresentation — Fact or Opinion.

Representations regarding present condition and past earnings of an apartment house relate to matters of fact, and not of opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 12.]

4. Fraud 🔑41 — Action for Deceit — Sufficiency of Complaint.

Complaint alleging misrepresentations as to present condition and past earnings of an apartment house, knowingly made with intent to induce plaintiffs to trade real estate for lease, and that plaintiffs were deceived thereby, and, relying on such representations, transferred property worth $5,000 in consideration of the promised assignment of the lease which was not assigned to them, or, if assigned, had no value, held sufficient to state cause of action for deceit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 36, 37.]

5. Fraud 🔑59(3)—Exchange of Property—Measure of Damages.

The measure of damages suffered by one who is fraudulently induced to exchange property is the difference between the actual value of that which he parts with and of that which he receives under the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 62.]

6. Fraud 🔑58(1) — Evidence to Sustain Findings.

In action for deceit, a finding that plaintiffs received nothing of value from defendant held supported by evidence that lease which defendants proposed to assign had no value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 55.]

7. Appeal and Error 🔑882(17)—Preservation of Objections—Pleading—Variance —Failure to Object.

Although complaint in action for deceit did not allege that lease which defendants proposed to assign was valueless, as stated in findings, where defendants treated the question as an issue in the case, and evidence bearing on the question was introduced on both sides without objection, on appeal defendants cannot urge that finding was outside of the pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3607.]

8. Appeal and Error 🔑1011(1)—Review—Conclusiveness of Findings — Conflicting Evidence.

Findings based upon conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983–3988.]

9. Fraud 🔑50—Issues, Proof, and Variance.

In an action for deceit plaintiffs were not bound to establish the making and falsity of every misrepresentation alleged by them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 46, 47.]

10. Fraud 🔑9—Action for Deceit—Sufficiency of Evidence.

A single material misrepresentation knowingly made with intent to induce another to enter into a contract and relied on by the other party, to his damage will support an action for deceit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 8.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

Action by Cora D. Cross and others against Cora D. Bouck and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jos. W. Mowell, of Los Angeles, for appellants. John S. Cooper, W. R. Law, and Davis & Rush, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This action was brought to recover damages for deceit. The amended complaint alleges that on or about the 28th day of September, 1912, the plaintiffs were the owners of certain real property in the county of Los Angeles of the value of $5,000. On that day the defendants represented to the plaintiffs that they (defendants) were the owners of an unexpired lease for seven years of an apartment house known as the Navarro Apartment Hotel, in the city of Los Angeles, together with a lease for the same period of the furniture and equipment in said house. On said day, for the purpose of inducing plaintiffs to transfer and trade their real property described in the amended complaint to the defendants, in consideration for said leases, the defendants knowingly made certain false and fraudulent representations to plaintiffs, with intent to deceive and defraud plaintiffs, and to procure their property above described. The pleading then goes on to describe the alleged fraudulent representations. Two of these related to the ownership by the defendants of the lease of the apartment house and the furniture therein and their ability to assign such lease. The others, briefly stated, were that the apartment house was then paying in rentals more than the expenses of operation; that no apartment in the house was rented for less than $45 per month; that but seven apartments were then vacant; that the house, at all times theretofore paid expenses for the entire year, with the exception of one summer month; that when all the apartments were rented the apartment house would produce a profit of $700 per month; and that in each preceding year it had produced a net profit of over $2,000 per year. All of these representations are alleged to have been false, and known by the defendants to be so. Plaintiffs, relying upon the truth of said statements, were induced thereby to enter into an agreement for the transfer by them to defendants of all of the real property described in the complaint, in consideration of the transfer by defendants to them of the unexpired lease on the apartment house and the furniture and equipment therein. Plaintiffs did, pursuant to such agreement, transfer and assign to the defendants their said real property. Plaintiffs entered into "tentative possession" of the apartment house, and, upon discovering the falsity of the representations, relinquished the possession. It is further alleged that the defendants failed and refused to give the plaintiffs a good and valid lease to said apartment house and furniture. Damages were asked in the sum of $10,000, consisting of $5,000, the value of the property transferred to the defendants, and other items. Except with respect to the value of the property transferred to the defendants by plaintiffs, the court made findings in substantial accord with the averments of the complaint. The value of the property was found to be $2,800. Among the findings was one to the effect that the plaintiffs received nothing of value in consideration of their transfer of such property. The court entered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for $2,800, and the defendants appeal from such judgment.

[1, 2] Much of the discussion in the briefs turns on the question whether the defendants made any misrepresentations regarding their ability to assign the lease of the apartment house and the furniture therein to the plaintiffs, and whether they did, in fact, make such assignment. An assignment was actually executed, but the theory of the plaintiffs seems to be that such assignment was invalid for want of the lessor's assent thereto. This theory is not sustained by the evidence. It appears that the owner of the apartment house had originally made a lease which contained a covenant against assigning, but none against subletting. The lease which was the subject of negotiation between the parties to this action was a new lease from the original tenant, upon different terms and conditions. On its face it was designated, and rightly designated, as a "sublease." Its execution was not a violation of the provision of the original lease against assignment. 24 Cyc. 974. The sublease itself contained no restriction upon the right of assignment. The defendants therefore had a right to assign their sublease without the consent of any one, and the findings based upon this phase of the case are without support.

[3-5] But the complaint alleged, and the court found, other grounds ample to make out a cause of action for damages for deceit. The representations regarding the present condition and the past earnings of the apartment house related to matters of fact, not of opinion. It is charged that these representations were false, and that they were knowingly made, with intent to induce the plaintiffs to enter into the contract; that plaintiffs were deceived thereby, and did in reliance upon these representations enter into the contract and transfer their real property. Here we have every allegation necessary to a complete cause of action for deceit. In Rockefeller v. Merritt, 76 Fed. 909, 22 C. C. A. 608, 35 L. R. A. 633, it is said:

> "The true measure of the damages suffered by one who is fraudulently induced to make a contract of * * * exchange of property is the difference between the actual value of that which he parts with and the actual value of that which he receives under the contract."

This rule is approved in Barbour v. Flick, 126 Cal. 628, 633, 59 Pac. 122. The complaint alleges, in effect, that the plaintiffs, relying upon the fraudulent representations, transferred property worth $5,000, in consideration of the promised assignment of a lease, and that the lease was not assigned to them. The complaint therefore stated a cause of action, and there is no merit in the claim that the demurrer of the defendants should have been sustained.

[6] It is true, as above stated, that the finding that the lease was not assigned to plaintiffs is not supported by the evidence, but we have the further finding that the plaintiffs received nothing of value from the defendants. This finding would be supported by evidence that the lease which the defendants proposed to assign had no value, and we find that the record contains substantial evidence to this effect.

[7] While it is true that the complaint did not allege that the lease was valueless, it appears that evidence bearing upon its value or want of value was introduced on both sides without objection. The appellants having treated this question as an issue in the case, they will not, on appeal, be heard to say that the finding must be disregarded as outside of the pleadings.

[8-10] The appellants attack the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings relative to the misrepresentations alleged in the complaint. Undoubtedly there was a sharp conflict regarding these matters, but the trial court believed the testimony offered by the plaintiffs, and this determination is, under our well-settled rules, conclusive here. The plaintiffs were not bound to establish the making and the falsity of every representation alleged by them.

> "A single material misstatement, knowingly made with intent to influence another into entering into a contract, will, if believed and relied on by that other, afford as complete ground for rescission as if it had been accompanied by a multitude of other false representations." Davis v. Butler, 154 Cal. 623, 626, 98 Pac. 1047, 1048.

A single material misrepresentation will likewise suffice to support an action for damages.

While a different conclusion might have been reached by the trial court, we are satisfied that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the finding that the plaintiffs believed the representations made by the defendants, and were induced by their belief and reliance upon such representations to enter into the contract. Here, again, we have simply the situation of a conflict in the evidence, in the face of which the finding of the trial court is binding.

We think no other point made is of sufficient importance to require special discussion, or to affect the conclusion already indicated.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(34 Cal. App. 258)

BRION v. CAHILL et al. (Civ. 1957.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. July 6, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 4, 1917.)

1. BROKERS 🔑64(2) — COMPENSATION — DEFAULT OF PARTY PRODUCED BY BROKER.

Where in contract of exchange one of parties agrees to pay broker who is not party thereto commission, he may, if the deal is not consummated because the other cannot convey good title, rescind contract, and he is thereby relieved of liability to pay commission, since no acceptance of other party as able to consummate the exchange can be predicated on fact of entering into agreement conditional on his ability to convey good title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 67, 97.]

2. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY 🔑4—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION—PARTIES.

A broker is not a party to contract of exchange whereby one of parties agrees to pay him commission, where he is not named as party therein, and it was not executed by or delivered to him, but his name appears thereon only as witness to its execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. § 4.]

Appeal from Superior Court of Alameda County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by P. A. Brion against Patrick Cahill and another. From judgment for plaintiff against defendant named, latter appeals. Reversed.

Wilder Wight, of Oakland, for appellant. Robinson, Gillis & Sizer, of Oakland, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to recover the sum of $1,000 alleged to be due to plaintiff under a contract between one Sam Krummes and the defendant Patrick Cahill, embodying the terms of a proposed exchange of real estate. One of the provisions of this contract was that the defendant Patrick Cahill would pay to the plaintiff said amount for "services rendered"; the services referred to being evidently those rendered by the plaintiff in bringing about the proposed agreement of exchange. Judgment went in favor of plaintiff against Patrick Cahill and in favor of defendant Sumner Cahill against the plaintiff. Patrick Cahill appeals from that part of the judgment affecting him.

The facts material to a consideration of the appeal are briefly as follows:

One Sam Krummes listed with the plaintiff a ranch situated near Lodi for sale or exchange. The latter brought this property to the attention of Patrick Cahill, who owned property in Oakland that he also was desirous of selling or exchanging. They together visited the Lodi property. Cahill expressed his willingness to exchange his Oakland property for it; whereupon Krummes and the plaintiff visited Oakland and inspected appellant's property. At this point the appellant left the completion of the details and the entry into a contract of exchange to his son, the codefendant. The latter went to the property at Lodi, and there, on behalf of the appellant and as his attorney in fact, entered into the following contract, the plaintiff assisting in its preparation:

> "This agreement witnesseth that the undersigned, Sam Krummes, of Lodi, Cal., owner of the following described first piece of property: [Here follows description of property of Krummes]—which [I] desire to exchange for the following second piece of property: [Here follows description of appellant's property.] * * *
>
> "For one dollar in hand paid and other adequate and valuable considerations I hereby authorize P. A. Brion to act as my agent in negotiating an exchange, and I agree that if he shall secure an acceptance of the proposition to exchange the above-described property on the terms, that I will within ten days furnish a certificate of title or an abstract from a reliable abstract company, and a grant, bargain, and sale deed conveying title to the property first above described, and will allow five days for the furnishing of a certificate of title or abstract and a deed conveying title to the second above described piece of property.
>
> "And it is further agreed with the agent P. A. Brion that when he has secured an acceptance of the above proposition that I will then pay to said agent the sum of no dollars for services rendered, or a commission of 5 per cent. on the gross price at which my property is put in in the exchange for such services.
>
> "Dated at this 6th day of March, 1913.
>
> "[Signed] Sam Krummes.
>
> "Witness:
> "P. A. Brion.
> "Geo. Thumann.
>
> "This agreement witnesseth that the undersigned Patrick Cahill, owner of the second piece of property described within hereby accept the proposition of exchange therein and upon the terms therein stated, and agree to furnish a certificate of title or abstract from a reliable abstract company within 5 days, showing said property vested in him, and then to furnish a deed conveying title to said property to Sam Krummes, or his assigns or representatives. And I further agree to pay to P. A. Brion as agent, the sum of $1,000 for services rendered, for such services.

"Dated at this 6th day of March, 1913.

"Sumner Cahill, Power of Attorney.

"Witness:

"P. A. Brion.

"Geo. Thumann."

The exchange was not consummated owing to the fact—which sufficiently appears from the record, although, on the objection of the respondent, most of the testimony offered in proof thereof was excluded—that Krummes had no title to the property he agreed to convey. The appellant attempted to prove a mutual rescission of the agreement of exchange, but this evidence also was excluded by the court, which adopted the theory of the respondent that, irrespective of the consummation of the exchange or the ability of either of the parties thereto to carry out the terms of the agreement, the plaintiff was entitled to receive from the appellant the amount of compensation provided therein to be paid to him.

In support of the judgment the respondent relies upon a line of authorities holding that a real estate broker employed to sell real property has earned his compensation when he has produced a purchaser able and willing to take the property on the terms proposed, or who has been accepted by his principal as such purchaser by entering into a contract with him. In the latter event those authorities hold that the ability of the purchaser to carry out his contract is immaterial to the right of the broker to receive compensation from his principal.

[1] It will be observed, however, that the principle there laid down is based entirely upon the fact that there exists a contract of employment between the principal and the broker; and the ratio decidendi of those cases evidently is that the broker, having performed what he was employed to do, is entitled to be paid without regard to the ultimate fate of the negotiations or contract between his principal and the purchaser produced by him. But it is equally apparent, we think, that the reasoning of those cases can have no application to a situation where there is no previous contract of employment, and where the claim of the broker is based upon a provision of a contract of exchange between his principal and the person produced by him to which he himself is not a party. In such a case his rights are those only which are conferred by such contract.

Nor can the fact that an agreement of exchange has been entered into by the owners of the respective properties, where the exchange is conditional upon the ability of the respective parties to convey good title, be given the same effect as is given in the authorities above referred to to an agreement of sale. In the latter case the principal is held, by thus entering into a contract with the proposed purchaser, to have accepted him as able to consummate the purchase; but no such acceptance, with the consequential right in the broker to his compensation, can be logically predicated upon the fact of entering into an agreement of exchange in which conveyance of good title by the person produced by the broker is expressly stipulated.

So far as the appellant here is concerned, those authorities can have no application. His contract was with Krummes. Its main purpose was to effect an exchange of his property for that of Krummes. His obligations under the contract were concurrent with those assumed by Krummes; and if he, tendering performance to Krummes, meets with a refusal on the part of the latter to perform, it is elementary that he immediately has the right of rescission, and upon rescinding is relieved of his obligations under the contract, one of which was his promise to Krummes to pay to the plaintiff a commission for his services in bringing about the abortive exchange. As was said by this court in the case of Jennings v. Jordan, 31 Cal. App. 335, 160 Pac. 576, a case almost identical in its facts to this one:

> "The plaintiff's right to recover, then, must depend entirely upon the terms of the contract entered into between Fletcher and Jordan, to which Eppinger was not a party. Up to that point, so far as the evidence discloses, there was no obligation upon them to pay him anything. The object of the contract actually entered into was to provide for an exchange of the properties of the parties thereto, each agreeing to convey title free of incumbrances, and the provision therein for the payment of a commission to Eppinger must be construed in its relation to the whole contract. Quite apart from the evidence of Jordan, one of the parties to it, that as to him it was not his intention that any commission should be paid unless the exchange of lands was actually effected, such would be the natural and logical construction of the instrument. Unless and until the exchange was consummated the parties would receive no benefit from Eppinger's efforts; and, as we have seen, there was no obligation existing to pay Eppinger anything except that arising from the written agreement under consideration. The provision relating to such payment is not separable from the remainder of the contract; and certainly as to Jordan, when the other party to it found himself unable to comply with its terms and consented to its cancellation (Jordan already having a right to rescind it) the whole contract fell, the provision relating to Eppinger's compensation with the rest. If the broker should suffer any hardship from such construction, it is one inherent in the form of the contract entered into, and which was the only means he chose for his protection."

[2] The respondent seeks to differentiate his case from that of Jennings v. Jordan, supra, and says in his brief:

> "We are suing upon a contract between Brion and Patrick Cahill, or more particularly what might be termed a nonnegotiable promissory note by Patrick Cahill to pay to P. A. Brion for services rendered the sum of one thousand dollars."

It is, however, quite apparent that the contract sued upon is one to which the plaintiff was not a party; he was not named therein as a party; it was not executed by him nor was it ever delivered to him, and his name appears thereon as a witness to its execution.

From what we have said we think it clear that whatever rights the plaintiff may have had under the foregoing contract with regard to Krummes, under the facts proved—and especially under those sought to be proven by the appellant, but which evidence was erroneously excluded—he established no right of action against the appellant.

That part of the judgment, therefore, from which the appeal is taken must be reversed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

(175 Cal. 250)

OLSON v. SUPERIOR COURT OF MERCED COUNTY et al. (Sac. 2586.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1917.)

1. Mandamus 🔑51—Compelling Entry of Final Divorce Decree.

Mandate is an appropriate remedy to compel the entry of a final divorce decree, where the court's duty is plain, and unmixed with the exercise of discretionary powers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 98–100.]

2. Divorce 🔑170—Final Decree—"May."

In Civ. Code, § 132, providing that, "when one year has expired after the entry of such interlocutory judgment, the court on motion of either party, or upon its own motion, may enter the final judgment granting the divorce," the word "may" means "must" only whenever facts are shown entitling the movant to such final decree; but facts arising subsequently to the interlocutory decree should have their influence in determining the right to a final decree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 552, 553.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, May.]

3. Divorce 🔑170—Interlocutory Decree.

The interlocutory decree merely fixes, at the time it is given, the right of the blameless spouse to a final decree after the expiration of one year, but does not itself sever the marital bonds; the delay of one year before absolute severance of the marriage ties furthering an important purpose of the law to give the spouses a chance to effect a reconciliation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 552, 553.]

4. Divorce 🔑170—Right to Final Decree.

A divorced husband, securing, before entry of final decree, a reconciliation with and the return of his wife, and living with her thereafter continuously for five years, could not then cause final decree to be entered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 552, 553.]

In Bank. Application for writ of mandate by Albert Olson against the Superior Court of the County of Merced and E. N. Rector, as judge thereof. Writ discharged.

Stephen P. Galvin, of Los Banos, Croop & Croop, of Merced, Adolf Michel, of Oakland, and John J. McDonough, for petitioner. Andrew R. Schottky, of Merced, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This hearing is under an original alternative writ of mandate issued by this court on the petition of Albert Olson, who seeks to compel the superior court of Merced county to enter a final decree of divorce; more than one year having elapsed since the interlocutory decree was made and given in favor of his wife, who was the plaintiff in the divorce suit. Chronologically, the following facts have a bearing on the consideration:

Josie L. Olson, wife of petitioner herein, sued and obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce against her husband, which decree was entered on May 13, 1910. Thereafter, and in February, 1911, before the expiration of the year after which the final decree could be entered, the wife at the solicitation of the husband became reconciled to him, returned to his house, and resumed marital relations with him. Together they thus lived as husband and wife for five continuous years. Then, on the 21st day of February, 1916, the husband secretly and without the knowledge of the wife caused a final decree of divorce to be entered in the action. This becoming known to the wife, upon her application and within the six months period of time limited by section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, the court vacated and annulled this final decree and declared in its order so doing that the defendant (the husband) "is not entitled to a final decree of divorce in the said action; the status of married persons having been restored between the parties by reason of their reconciliation, and the resumption of marital relations." No appeal was taken from this last-mentioned order. Thereafter the husband again petitioned for a final decree of divorce, and upon the court's refusal to enter it sued out this writ of mandate.

[1, 2] That mandate is an appropriate remedy to compel the entry of such a final decree, where the court's duty is plain and unmixed with the exercise of discretionary powers, does not admit of debate, and has, in fact, been decided. Claudius v. Melvin, 146 Cal. 257, 79 Pac. 897. Petitioner's contention is that under the facts above narrated the trial court has no discretionary power by virtue of the mandatory provision of section 132 of the Civil Code. That section declares that:

> "When one year has expired after the entry of such interlocutory judgment, the court on motion of either party, or upon its own motion, may enter the final judgment granting the divorce."

That the word "may," as thus employed in the statute, means "must," whenever the facts are shown entitling the movant to such final decree, requires no discussion. Petitioner's argument is based upon the proposition that, when one year has in fact elapsed, the right is absolutely final, and the trial court is without the slightest discretion in the matter of withholding the relief sought.

[3] The question is one of first impression in this state, but in our view is one exceedingly easy of solution. Under our divorce laws the interlocutory decree fixes the right of the blameless spouse to a decree of divorce as and of the time when the interlocutory decree itself is given. Barring the familiar equitable considerations of fraud or mistake in the procurement of this decree, all matters therein litigated have passed beyond the possibility of future litigation; but it is never to be forgotten that the interlocutory decree does not sever the marital bonds. It is merely a declaration that one of the spouses has at that time established a right to a final decree which will be entered at and after the expiration of one year. Estate of Dargie, 162 Cal. 51, 121 Pac. 320.

What ends has the law in view in enforcing the delay of one year before an absolute severance of the marriage ties? This question, too, has been answered by our decisions, and it is truly declared to be one of the important purposes of the law to give the spouses a chance to effect a reconciliation which the law always favors. Barron v. Barron, 7 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 347, 96 Pac. 273.

[4] The facts presented show that one of the great purposes of our law had been fulfilled. Before the time when the final decree could have been entered the wife condoned her husband's offense and they became reconciled. They lived together as husband and wife continuously for five years thereafter, at the end of which time the condonee, not the condoner, demands of the court the entry of the final decree severing the bonds of matrimony between himself and his wife with whom he had thus been living. From its very nature the interlocutory decree can only operate upon facts existing down to the time it is given. It is within the contemplation of the law that facts subsequently arising should have their influence in determining the right to a final decree. While in every proper case a trial court will, and if necessary by mandate will be compelled to, enter such a final decree, it would be a grave reproach to our jurisprudence to hold that our law ever contemplated that such a decree could be forced upon a blameless and nonconsenting wife after such a reconciliation. Our law demands no such thing. It never designed to make itself an instrument of such frauds. The similar law in the state of New York entitles either spouse to a final judgment after three months "unless for sufficient cause the court in the meantime shall have otherwise ordered," and under that statute the court refused a final decree where a reconciliation was effected such as is here shown. Cary v. Cary, 144 App. Div. 846, 129 N. Y. Supp. 444. But, in the absence from our statute of this express language found in that of New York, the power of our courts is no different. The New York statute but expressed the power which our courts in equity inherently possess. They have under our present statute and without express authorization the power to recognize condonations and reconciliations such as are here shown, and to do justice to the litigants as may be demanded by such events in their lives as have arisen subsequent to the entry of the interlocutory decree and before the expiration of the fixed period of one year.

It would in our view be superfluous to elaborate upon a proposition so plainly consonant with the principles of equity and the due administration of justice. Wherefore the writ is discharged.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; MELVIN, J.; LORIGAN, J.; SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.

(175 Cal. 238)

In re EMART'S ESTATE. (S. F. 7521.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 1, 1917.)

WILLS ⟹123(5)—ATTESTATION—PRESENCE OF WITNESSES.

Civ. Code, § 1276, providing that every will must be executed and attested, and that the subscription must be made in the presence of the attesting witnesses or be acknowledged by the testator to them to have been made by him or by his authority, requires the subscription or the acknowledgment to be before the two witnesses present at the same time, and hence a will was not sufficiently attested where one witness attested the will in the forenoon of the day upon which it was executed, and the other in the afternoon; the two witnesses not signing in the presence of each other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 326–331.]

Angellotti, C. J., and Sloss, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; J. A. Bardin and Geo. W. Buck, Judges.

In the matter of the estate of Nancy Jane Emart. Appeal from refusal of order to revoke the probate of the will. Reversed.

Arthur L. Levinsky, of Stockton, for appellants. Hudson, Martin & Jorgensen, of Monterey, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Contest after probate was instituted against the will of Nancy J. Emart, deceased. The court refused to revoke the probate of the will, and this appeal followed. The facts stipulated were:

"That one of the attesting witnesses to said will attested said will in the forenoon of the day upon which the same was executed, and that the other attesting witness to said will attested the same upon the afternoon of said day, and that the said attesting witnesses did not sign their names or attest the said will in the presence of each other."

Further:

> That "the two attesting witnesses signed their names as witnesses at the end of the will at testatrix's request and in her presence."

Testatrix subscribed her will in the presence of one of the witnesses, and acknowledged the subscription to the other attesting witness, declaring that the instrument was her will.

The single question presented is whether, under this evidence, there was a legal compliance with our law touching the acknowledgment and publication by the testatrix of her will. That law is found in section 1276 of the Civil Code, and is as follows:

> "Every will * * * must be executed and attested as follows: * * * 2. The subscription must be made in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or be acknowledged by the testator to them to have been made by him or by his authority."

The case is one of first impression, and the question by no means free from doubt. Properly to resolve it requires a brief consideration of this branch of the great statute of frauds. The fifth section of the statute of frauds (29 Car. II, c. 3) required that all devises and bequests of lands or tenements should be in writing and signed by the party so devising the same, and should be attested and subscribed in the presence of the devisor and of three or four credible witnesses. The construction put upon this statute was that it did not in terms require that the attestation and subscription should be made at the same time and in the presence of the assembled witnesses, and such continued to be the rule of English decision until the statute itself was changed. This construction, thus given at a very early day, was adhered to with great uniformity, though the judges frequently voiced their protests against the construction, as being unsound and as opening the door to the very frauds which the statute designed to prevent; it being said that in the requirement of acknowledgment before three or four witnesses it was manifestly designed that the acknowledgment should be of a quasi public character, and that there was less likelihood that fraud could be perpetrated under such solemn circumstances, and more likelihood of an accurate memory, than under the rule which permitted each witness to state that the testator at varying times and under varying circumstances had acknowledged to him and to him alone that the instrument was his will. In addition to this is the consideration that the execution of such a will is not fully complete until it is witnessed or attested. If the will is acknowledged to the one witness on one day and to the second witness months or even years thereafter, both witnesses will not be witnessing or attesting under the same state of facts that is to say, neither witness could declare that at the time the other witnessed it the testator was apparently free from duress, menace, or undue influence and was of sound and disposing mind.

Thus in New York, where by virtue of its language the judges held their statute to be an enactment of the English law, with the interpretation which had been put upon it, the learned Chancellor Walworth says in Jauncey v. Thorne, 2 Barb. Ch. 40, 45 Am. Dec. 424:

> "It was also settled in England, at a very early date, that a will of real estate, attested by three witnesses, who, at several times, subscribed their names, in the presence of testator and at his request, was valid, although all the witnesses were never present at the same time. * * * It is at least doubtful whether the decisions upon either of these questions were in conformity with the intention of the framers of the provisions in the statute of Charles relative to the execution of wills of real estate. But they are in conformity with the letter of the statute, which only required that the will should be signed by the testator, but not that such signing should take place in the presence of the attesting witnesses. Nor did the statute, in terms, require the witnesses to attest the will at the same time, and in the presence of each other, but only that the will should be attested by three witnesses who should subscribe the same in the presence of the testator."

By force of these considerations the time came when the English Parliament believed this statute to require remodeling, and it was remodeled in the Wills Act. 1 Victoria, c. 26. That act prescribed:

> "That no will shall be valid unless it shall be in writing, and executed in manner hereinafter mentioned; (that is to say) it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator, or by some other person in his presence, and by his direction; and such signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time; and such witnesses shall attest and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, but no form of attestation shall be necessary."

This became the law of England in 1837, and, with certain modifications not necessary here to consider, has continued to be the expression of the English law. In 1860, in Hoysradt v. Kingman, 22 N. Y. 372, the Court of Appeals of New York was called upon to determine whether or not a will had been duly executed under the provisions of the statutes of New York under the circumstances here presented; that is to say, the subscription and the publication or acknowledgment had been made before the witnesses at different times. Great pressure of argument was brought to bear upon the court, seeking to have it adopt a construction in consonance with the Wills Act, supra. The Court of Appeals said:

> "Our statute, passed a few years earlier, does not contain the language which so plainly settles the question in the English act. It declares that every will shall be executed and attested in the following manner: '1. It shall be subscribed by the testator at the end of the will; 2. Such subscription shall be made by the testator in the presence of each of the attesting witnesses, or shall be acknowledged by him to have been so made to each of the attesting witnesses; 3. The testator, at the time of making such subscription, or at the time of acknowledging the same, shall declare the instrument so subscribed to be his last will and testament; 4. There shall be at least two attesting witnesses, each of whom shall sign his name as a witness, at the end of the will, at the request of the testator.' 2 R. S. 63, sec. 40." (Some of these words have been placed in italics for convenient comparison with the language of our own statute.)

The court held that the language of the New York statute was in manifest harmony with the decisions governing the same matter under the earlier statute of Charles. It is perhaps unnecessary to add that in most of the older states the statute of frauds of Charles II was enacted as the state's own statute of frauds, either in precise terms or in all material substance. Therefore the decisions of those states, sound in themselves, will throw but little light upon this consideration, where the conclusion must be reached by an interpretation of the peculiar language of our own statute. But, to illustrate, the presence of the subscribing witnesses at the same time in the presence of the testator is not required in Tennessee under a law which simply declares that "the instrument must be subscribed by two witnesses, neither of whom are interested" (Simmons v. Leonard, 91 Tenn. 183, 18 S. W. 280, 30 Am. St. Rep. 875); nor in Connecticut, where the law requires that "the will shall be in writing, subscribed by testator and attested by three witnesses, all of them subscribing in his presence" (Gaylor's Appeal, 43 Conn. 82); nor in Indiana, where the law requires that "the will shall be 'attested and subscribed in the presence of testator and two or more competent witnesses'" (Johnson v. Johnson, 106 Ind. 475, 7 N. E. 201, 55 Am. Rep. 762); nor in Wisconsin, where the statute law is identical with that of Indiana (Will of Smith, 52 Wis. 543, 8 N. W. 616, 9 N. W. 665, 38 Am. Rep. 756); nor in Illinois, where the law requires that the will be "subscribed in his (testator's) presence and at his request by at least two witnesses" (Flinn v. Owen, 58 Ill. 111); nor in Georgia, where the requirement is that the will be "attested and subscribed in the presence of the testator by three or more competent witnesses" (Webb v. Fleming, 30 Ga. 808, 76 Am. Dec. 675). We need not multiply these instances. Enough have been given to show, as has been said, that they can afford us little of value in the present difficulty, and illustrate merely that the Legislatures of these states and their courts, in following the statutes, have in substance adopted the language of the statute of frauds of Charles II, and the interpretation which the English courts put upon that statute. In this connection perhaps it is proper to refer to one additional case, that of Green et al. v. Crain et al., decided in Virginia in 1855 (12 Grat. 252). The language of the Virginia statute taken from the Victorian Wills Act required a signing by the testator and that "the signature shall be made or the will acknowledged by him in the presence of at least two competent witnesses present at the same time." The facts were that the testator signed and acknowledged the instrument in the presence of one of the attesting witnesses, and subsequently acknowledged the instrument in the presence of the other attesting witness, the first attesting witness being also present. The case in its facts differs from the present case in that there both the witnesses were present at the time the acknowledgment was made to the second witness; while here the two witnesses were never at the same time in the presence of the testator for the purpose of receiving his acknowledgment. The court of Virginia reasoned that the requirement "that the relation of 'presence' shall exist between the testator and the witnesses does not require that the relation of 'presence' should exist between the witnesses themselves," and the court repudiates the decisions of the English courts holding the contrary construction of the Wills Act of Victoria. Of this case it need only be said that its reasoning is far from convincing. In conclusion upon this general discussion it will suffice to point out that the Legislatures of some, even of the older, states, have in their wisdom adopted the requirements of the Victorian Wills Act (Ludlow v. Ludlow, 36 N. J. Eq. 597; Roberts v. Welch, 46 Vt. 164; In re Claflin's Will, 75 Vt. 19, 52 Atl. 1053, 58 L. R. A. 261); while in Connecticut its Legislature enacted in 1875, a statute of wills in all essentials like the Victorian Act, and subsequently, in 1885, modified its law to read as above quoted (Lane's Appeal, 57 Conn. 182, 17 Atl. 926, 4 L. R. A. 45, 14 Am. St. Rep. 94).

With this brief review we may come to the history of our own wills law. It first appears upon the books in the statutes of 1850, p. 177. It is there declared (section 3) that:

> "No will * * * shall be valid, unless it be in writing, and signed by the testator * * * and attested by two or more competent witnesses subscribing their names to the will, in the presence of the testator."

Manifestly this language from the statute of 1850 is susceptible of and would be given the construction placed upon the statute of frauds of Charles II. In 1870 commissioners were appointed by authority of law to draft a complete system of Codes for this state. The work of the original commission, before the Codes were adopted, was subjected to revision and review by two other Code commissions, and as a result of their labors this significant fact appears: The first Code commissioners submitted as their statute of frauds touching the execution of wills a section which they numbered Civil Code, § 1276, and which section was in the identical language of the New York provision above quoted. More than that, the learned commissioners themselves recognized and expressed their indebtedness to the proposed New York Code, upon which they made heavy drafts. These codifiers announced that section 1276 had been taken from section 550 of the proposed New York Civil Code. But our Civil Code first prepared by Commissioners Charles Lindley, John C. Burch, and Creed Haymond was not adopted, as has been said, until it had been repeatedly revised by other men learned in the law, and amongst these men two who sat upon this bench, Hon. Stephen J. Field and Hon. Jackson Temple. Section 1276 of the Civil Code, as enacted in its present form, is the result of their review and their modification of the proposed section 1276. The proposed section 1276 was substantially a re-enactment of the statute of frauds of Charles II. If the Code revisionists had desired that the statute of frauds of Charles II should be declared to be our law, no doubt can be entertained but that they would have accepted section 1276 as originally proposed by the first commissioners. At this time (1871 to 1874) the Wills Act of Victoria was and for years had been in existence. These learned jurists well knew it, and it is not easy to avoid the conclusion that when they refused to accept section 1276 in its proposed form, and modified it to its present form, they did so in the belief that the Victorian Act was the wiser statute, and therefore the one which this state should adopt. The Legislature, concurring in their views, enacted the law in its present form. We have much internal evidence in the language of the statute itself that this view is correct. To illustrate: The phraseology of subsection 1 of section 1276, to the effect that the will "must be subscribed at the end thereof by the testator himself," is language taken bodily from the Victorian Act, and not found in the statute of Charles II.

From the language of our statute and this review of its history, we regard the conclusion as unescapable that our law requires the subscription or the acknowledgment to be before the two witnesses present at the same time. And while, as has been said, there is no direct adjudication in this state upon the question, every utterance of this court is in confirmation of this view. Thus in Estate of Toomes, 54 Cal. 509, 35 Am. Rep. 83, objection was made to the will that it was not duly executed under the provisions of section 1276 of the Civil Code, upon the ground, amongst others, that the subscription was not made in the presence of the attesting witnesses. This court, reviewing the evidence, declared:

> "Here we have the fact that the testatrix made her mark to the instrument, the declaration that it was her will and testament, made in the presence and hearing of the witnesses, and the fact that the witnesses subscribed the same at her request in her presence, and in the presence of each other. * * * We think this was sufficient."

In Estate of Cartery, 56 Cal. 470, amongst the interrogatories submitted to the jury was one:

> "Whether the subscribing witnesses signed the proposed will in the presence of the deceased and of each other and at his request."

The jury's answer being in the affirmative, the trial court upheld the execution of the will as in accordance with law, and this court declared that this and like interrogatories covered all the issues raised by the contestant. In Montana, whose statute is identical with ours, it is declared, quoting from the syllabus of In re Noyes' Estate, 40 Mont. 178, 105 Pac. 1013:

> "The statutory formalities of execution, such as the place of the testator's signature, or the fact that he signed or made acknowledgment in the presence of witnesses, or made publication, or that the witnesses properly signed in his presence, and in the presence of each other and at his request stand as of equal importance, and must be observed."

The answer to respondent's argument that courts should give a liberal construction to the statutory requirements for the due execution of a will is found in Estate of Walker, 110 Cal. 390, 42 Pac. 815, 30 L. R. A. 460, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104, and in Re Seaman's Estate, 146 Cal. 455, 80 Pac. 700, 106 Am. St. Rep. 53, 2 Ann. Cas. 726, and it is sufficient to rest the response upon the discussion of the matter found in those cases.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment refusing to revoke probate of the will is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; MELVIN, J.

SLOSS, J. I dissent. When the Legislature of this state enacted section 1276 of the Civil Code, it was not entering upon a new field of legislation. Statutes governing the making and attestation of wills had long existed in England and America, and these statutes had frequently been before the courts for interpretation. The enactments of the American states are based upon one or the other or both of the English acts referred to in the majority opinion, with such modifications as were deemed proper in the respective jurisdictions. As is stated in that opinion, it was the settled construction, under the statute of frauds (29 Car. II, c. 3, § 5), that the witnesses were not required to be present together at the signing or acknowledgment by the testator, or to attest in the presence of each other. Jauncey v. Thorne, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 40, 45 Am. Dec. 424; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 3 L. R. Ir. 299; Westbeech v. Kennedy, 1 Ves. & B. 362; Ellis v. Smith, 1 Ves. Jun. 11. With the law thus established, there was enacted in 1837 the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), which provides:

> "That no will shall be valid unless it shall be in writing, and executed in manner hereinafter mentioned; (that is to say) it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator, or by some other person in his presence, and by his direction; and such signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time; and such witnesses shall attest and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, but no form of attestation shall be necessary."

The words "present at the same time" left no room for doubt that the witnesses must be jointly present when the testator makes or acknowledges his signature. One of the obvious purposes of the later statute was to change the old law, which, as I have just said, permitted the testator to acknowledge his signature to the different witnesses at different times. But the concluding clause, relating to the attestation by the witnesses, does not contain the words "at the same time." It merely prescribes that the witnesses shall attest and subscribe in the presence of the testator. Accordingly, even under the Wills Act, the requirement of joint presence of the witnesses was not carried beyond the time of the testator's signing or acknowledging. The prevailing opinion of English courts and text-writers has been that it is not necessary that the witnesses should attest and sign at the same time, or that both should be present during the attestation. The will having been signed or acknowledged in the presence of both, each might attest and sign during the absence of the other. The contrary view, expressed obiter by Lord Brougham in Casement v. Fulton, 5 Moo. P. C. C. 130, has not been followed. There have been several decisions that the witnesses need not sign in the presence of each other (Faulds v. Jackson, 6 Notes of Cas. Sup. 1; Webb's Case, 1 Deane, 1; Cooper v. Bockett, 3 Curt. 648; Sullivan v. Sullivan, supra), and the same construction of the statute has been approved by eminent law writers (1 Wms. Exrs. 93; 6 Sug. Real Prop. St. 342; 1 Jar. Wills, *85). The Virginia court, in giving the same effect to a statute like the Wills Act (Green v. Crain, 12 Grat. [Va.] 252), did not, as the majority opinion says, "repudiate the decisions of the English courts holding the contrary construction." To the contrary, it was in accord with the English courts.

It appears, therefore, that under both English statutes the provision that an act shall be done by two or more witnesses in the presence of the testator does not require that the witnesses do the act at the same time, or in the presence of each other. It is enough if each does the act and if the testator be present on each occasion. The same construction should, on like grounds, apply to a provision, like that of section 1276 of the Civil Code, that the testator perform some act, or make some declaration, "in the presence of" or "to" a given number of witnesses. The necessity for the joint presence of the witnesses during any part of the testamentary act exists only when the statute contains direct and explicit language to that effect, as the Wills Act does when it declares that the signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time.

The American statutes governing the making of wills have uniformly been interpreted in accordance with these views. The legislation in the several states has varied greatly, some of the statutes being modeled on the statute of frauds, others following the Wills Act, while some (like our own) embody certain features of each of the English acts, or make additional provisions, like that of declaration that the paper is a will. Where the statute simply provides that a will must be in writing and attested by two or more witnesses subscribing their names thereto in the presence of the testator, or that the will shall be signed or acknowledged in the presence of two witnesses, who shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, it has everywhere been held that the witnesses need not be together during the act of signing or acknowledgment on the part of the testator, or during their own attestation. Moore v. Spier, 80 Ala. 129; Gaylor's Appeal, 43 Conn. 82; In re Porter, 20 D. C. (9 Mackey) 493; Webb v. Fleming, 30 Ga. 808, 76 Am. Dec. 675; Flinn v. Owen, 58 Ill. 111; Hull v. Hull, 117 Iowa, 738, 89 N. W. 979; Grubbs v. Marshall (Ky.) 13 S. W. 447; Chase v. Kittredge, 11 Allen (Mass.) 49, 87 Am. Dec. 687; Cravens v. Faulconer, 28 Mo. 19; Welch v. Adams, 63 N. H. 344, 1 Atl. 1, 56 Am. Rep. 521; In re Clark's Will (N. J. Prerog.), 52 Atl. 222; Watson v. Hinson, 162 N. C. 72, 77 S. E. 1089, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 870; Simmons v. Leonard, 91 Tenn. 183, 18 S. W. 280, 30 Am. St. Rep. 875; Barker v. Hinton, 62 W. Va. 639, 59 S. E. 614, 13 Ann. Cas. 1150; In re Smith's Will, 52 Wis. 543, 8 N. W. 616, 9 N. W. 665, 38 Am. Rep. 756. Two states have or had statutes substantially identical with our own, so far as the question under consideration is concerned, with the single exception that subdivision 2 provides for signature or acknowledgment in the presence of or to "each of" the attesting witnesses. In both of these states it has been held that the witnesses are not required to be present at the same time. Rogers v. Diamond, 13 Ark. 474; Hoysradt v. Kingman, 22 N. Y. 372, 379. The prevailing opinion takes the position that our Code section is to be given a meaning different from that of the New York statute, for the reason that the provision in force in California does not embody the word "each." I think this argument gives entirely too much weight to what the New York Court of Appeals itself, in Hoysradt v. Kingman, terms a "verbal criticism." That court based its conclusion upon the fact that the Legislature, with the former statutes and the judgments of the courts upon them before it, drew an act which omitted the significant words of the Wills Act "present at the same time," thereby plainly indicating that it did not intend to adopt that requirement of the Wills Act. Our own statute also omits these words, and contains nothing of equivalent import. Nevertheless, the majority of this court reaches what seems to me the strange conclusion that our Legislature, with the earlier legislation on the subject before it, designed to adopt the rule of the Wills Act. If that was the purpose, it is difficult to see why the clear and unambiguous language of the Wills Act, requiring presence "at the same time," was not copied into our law.

No case is cited, and I have found none, holding that the witnesses must be present together, except where the statute explicitly calls for such unity, as in Connecticut, where it was provided that the will must be attested by three witnesses, "all of them subscribing in his presence and in the presence of each other" (Lane's Appeal, 57 Conn. 182, 17 Atl. 926, 4 L. R. A. 45, 14 Am. St. Rep. 94), or in Vermont, where the statute demanded attestation and subscription by "three or more credible witnesses in the presence of the testator, and of each other" (Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 256), or in Virginia, under a statute containing the words "two competent witnesses present at the same time" (Green v. Crain, supra).

When the Legislature of this state enacted section 1276 of the Civil Code, it had before it the history of the earlier English and American legislation and the decisions interpreting that legislation. It adopted some of the provisions of the Wills Act not found in the statute of frauds. For example, it provided for the signing by the testator at the end of the will, and for a signing or acknowledgment in the presence of witnesses. But it omitted the clear and definite words of the Wills Act "present at the same time," which alone import into that statute the requirement for a joint presence of the attesting witnesses. As was said by the Court of Appeals of New York, the inference is irresistible that, if it had been intended to change the settled rule that the witnesses need not be present together at any part of the testamentary act, the change would have been made by incorporating the words which were used to accomplish such change in the legislation of England, or other words of like import. Hoysradt v. Kingman, 22 N. Y. 372, 379. The omission of any express requirement to this effect is convincing evidence that on this point the Legislature intended to adopt the rule of the statute of frauds, rather than that of the Wills Act.

Subdivision 2 of section 1276 provides that the subscription must be made in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or be acknowledged by the testator to them to have been made by him, or by his authority. It was so acknowledged in this case. The testatrix acknowledged to the two witnesses that the subscription to the will had been made by her. Subdivision 3 declares that the testator must at the time of subscription or acknowledgment declare to the attesting witnesses that the instrument is his will. Mrs. Emart did so declare to both of the subscribing witnesses. There is no more reason for reading into the provisions (subdivisions 2 and 3) referring to the subscription or acknowledgment, and to the declaration to the witnesses, a requirement that both witnesses must be present at the same time, than there was for reading such requirement into the provision of the Wills Act that the witnesses must sign in the presence of the testator.

The question before us is not one of policy; it is one of interpretation merely. There is no inherent or natural right to pass property by will. The privilege is conferred by statute, and the extent and the mode of its exercise are determined by the legislative provision. The courts have not the right to overlook the failure to comply with a single requirement of the statute, whatever their view of its wisdom or necessity. In re Walker, 110 Cal. 387, 42 Pac. 815, 30 L. R. A. 460, 52 Am. St. Rep. 104. But neither are they justified in reading into the law a demand for the performance of any act or formality not included within its terms. I think just that has been done in this case.

I concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.

(33 Cal. App. 462)

LUFT v. ARAKELIAN et al. (Civ. 2036.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 19, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 18, 1917.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE ⟹121(4)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a purchaser's suit to compel specific performance of a contract for the purchase and sale of real estate made by plaintiff with a third party, evidence held to show that the third person, when executing the contract, was acting for himself, and not as the agent of the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 391-393.]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟹145(3)—OSTENSIBLE AGENT.

Where a purchaser had no actual notice that his vendor was not the actual owner of the property and did not at any time during his dealings with the vendor believe, or have cause to believe, that the latter was acting or purporting to act as agent for the real owner, he could not charge the owner with the obligations arising under the contract on the theory of ostensible agency of the vendor for owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 515-517.]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟹171(7)—CONTRACT—RATIFICATION.

The fact that the owner of property, while repudiating the acts and conduct of a person who contracted to sell it, offered in one or two instances to assume some of the small obligations incurred by such person under similar contracts, did not constitute a ratification of the contract in question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 651.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Suit for specific performance by H. Luft against Krikor H. Arakelian and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Drew & Drew, of Fresno, for appellant. E. A. Williams, of Fresno, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. In this action the plaintiff sought to compel the defendants to specifically perform a certain contract for the purchase and sale of real estate which had been entered into by the plaintiff with a third party named Klein, who, it appears, was doing business under the name of the "New York Real Estate & Building Company."

[1] The plaintiff's cause of action proceeded upon the theory that Klein was not the owner of the property purchased, but was the agent of the defendants in the transaction in suit. The trial court, however, found that Klein, when executing the contract in suit, was acting for himself and not as the agent of the defendants. This finding supports the judgment entered in favor of the defendants, which in turn finds ample support in the evidence adduced upon the whole case, which in substance is as follows: The defendants are husband and wife. The wife apparently had no relation to the contract in controversy, and was in no way interested in the property save as the wife of the defendant Krikor H. Arakelian. Therefore in this opinion we shall deal only with the husband, and shall refer to him as the defendant.

The real property which was the subject of the contract in suit stood of record in the name of the defendant. On January 6, 1914, the plaintiff entered into an oral agreement with Klein for the purchase of four residence lots at the price of $300 per lot, which lots were part of a tract of land situated in Fresno county, and known and designated upon an unrecorded map as "German Park." The record title to this tract at the time of the execution of the contract in suit stood in the name of the defendant. Incidentally, the New York Real Estate & Building Company contracted, at the time of the execution of this contract, with the plaintiff to erect a dwelling house on one of the purchased lots. By the terms of the sale, 10 per cent. of the purchase price was to be paid down and the balance in specified installments. The plaintiff, in accordance with the terms of the sale, paid to Klein the sum of $980, which left a balance of $100 due to Klein on the original agreement, but which it was stipulated was not to be paid to Klein until the dwelling house had been erected. When the sum of $980 had been paid to Klein, he absconded without completing his contract, and the plaintiff thereupon tendered the balance of $100 due to the wife of the defendant. At the time the contract was entered into, Klein, under the name of the "New York Real Estate & Building Company," was advertising the German Park property for sale, and the plaintiff never knew of the defendant's connection with the property and never had any dealings with him. The defendant, however, had knowledge of the fact that Klein was advertising the property for sale, and that he was doing so by reference to the unrecorded German Park map. But prior to the making of the contract of purchase and sale with the plaintiff Klein had entered into a conditional contract of purchase and sale with the defendant of the entire tract of land comprising the so-called German Park at the agreed price of $2,000 per acre, or $37,500, payable under certain conditions and in specified installments. This conditional contract of sale provided, among other things, that if, while complying with the conditions of the contract concerning the payment of the purchase price, Klein sold any lots in the tract, the defendant would execute to him a deed to said lots. This contract was not recorded at the time the plaintiff entered into his contract with Klein. When Klein absconded, the defendant procured other lands belonging to him and adjoining the tract conditionally sold to Klein, to be platted and added to the map known as German Park, and at the same time caused the name of the map to be changed to that of "Ara Park."

[2] Counsel for plaintiff concedes that the evidence as above outlined would not have supported a finding that the relation of principal and agent actually existed between Klein and the defendant, but earnestly contends that it would have supported and should have compelled a finding of ostensible agency in Klein. This contention we think is disposed of by the fact that the evidence shows affirmatively that the plaintiff had no actual notice of the defendant's relation to the property, and does not show nor tend to show that the plaintiff at any time during his dealings with Klein believed or had cause to believe that the latter was acting or purporting to act as the agent for the defendant; and it is well settled that he who seeks to charge a supposed principal with the obligations resulting from the acts and conduct of an alleged ostensible agent must show that he himself was cognizant of the facts which gave color to the alleged ostensible agency, and caused him to believe that the person he dealt with was acting in the capacity of an agent rather than as a principal. Civ. Code, § 2300; Harris v. San Diego Flume Co., 87 Cal. 526, 25 Pac. 758; Rodgers v. Peckham, 120 Cal. 238, 52 Pac. 483; Gosliner v. Grangers' Bank of California, 124 Cal. 225, 56 Pac. 1029.

[3] The fact that the defendant, while repudiating the acts and conduct of Klein, offered in one or two instances to assume some of the smaller and comparatively inconsequential obligations incurred by Klein under similar contracts, did not constitute a ratification of the plaintiff's contract with Klein.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(33 Cal. App. 473)

WORTHLEY v. WORTHLEY. (Civ. 1651.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 19, 1917.)

1. QUIETING TITLE 🔑47(2)—FINDINGS—CONSISTENCY—"EXECUTED."

In suit to quiet title, findings that plaintiff "executed her deed," etc., and that it was understood said deed should not be delivered until her last illness, are inconsistent, since the term "executed" includes delivery under the direct provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1933.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. § 97.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Execute.]

2. DEEDS 🔑211(3)—VALIDITY—FRAUD.

Plaintiff's testimony that she delivered a deed to her son because she was ill and afraid of him, her admission that he was to have the property after her death, and evidence that defendant son had contributed toward the property's purchase price, do not sustain a finding that the deed was procured by the son's false representations that plaintiff should have a life estate, and not lose her interest in the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 644, 645.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Suit to quiet title by Charlotte Worthley against H. E. Worthley. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

E. Hardesty, of San Francisco, for appellant. George S. Richardson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for new trial. This is an action by plaintiff against the defendant, who is her son, by which a decree was sought quieting a fee title in the plaintiff as to a certain lot of land located in the city of Los Angeles. It was alleged that plaintiff, in March, 1911, made a deed whereby it was proposed to pass title to her son, but that it was understood that the deed was not to be delivered until the plaintiff's last sickness. It was further alleged that in October, 1912, the defendant demanded of the plaintiff that she deliver the deed to him, and that in order to induce her to make delivery he "offered and represented that she would have a life estate in said property, and that she would not lose her interest in said property." The further allegation appears to the effect that the representations made were false and fraudulent and made with the intent and for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff; and that in June, 1913, contrary to the representations so made, the defendant ejected the plaintiff from the dwelling house on the premises and compelled her "to live in a shed on the rear of said premises"; "that said defendant now threatens to sell and transfer said property to another, and thereby deprive plaintiff of her right in said property." The court made findings in accordance with the allegations of the complaint as to the circumstances under which the delivery of the deed was made, and further determined that the plaintiff held a life estate in the property.

[1] The finding, which follows one of the allegations of the complaint, that in the month of March, 1911, the plaintiff "executed her deed in the above-described property to the defendant H. E. Worthley," is inconsistent with the further finding, which also agrees with the allegation in that portion of the complaint referred to, "that it was understood and agreed between said parties that the said deed should not be delivered until plaintiff's last sickness." The term "executed" includes delivery. Section 1933, Code Civ. Proc.

[2] There was no testimony given by the plaintiff which is sufficient to support the finding that the deed was obtained by reason of the alleged false representations and promises. The plaintiff testified that, at the time she delivered the deed (which had been prepared some time prior thereto), the defendant, her son, demanded the deed of her, said that he would have it, that she was ill at the time and afraid of him, and that when she delivered it she was "afraid" that she would not have her home left to her. The trial judge, as shown by the reporter's transcript, appreciated this condition of the evidence, when he said, addressing plaintiff's counsel:

> "* * * She says she was afraid of him. If she had confidence in him, she would never be afraid of him."

Under the evidence, it was quite clear that a considerable part of the purchase price of the lot had been contributed by the defendant, although the title to same had been taken in the name of his mother. The mother admitted that the intention was that her son should have the property at her demise, but that she was to have "a home" while she lived. The circumstances of the case were hardly such as would indicate that the mother was making a gift of the entire estate to her son, and we think the circumstances were not such as to impress upon the transaction the presumption of fraud. Soberanes v. Soberanes, 97 Cal. 140, 31 Pac. 910. The chief obstacle which we find in the way of affirming the judgment is that the evidence, as addressed to the main charge of fraud relied upon, does not support the allegations in the complaint nor the findings made by the court.

We have not had the aid of any briefs from either party, but from an examination of the record we are convinced that a new trial should be had.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

(33 Cal. App. 493)

PEOPLE v. NOLAN. (Cr. 378.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 21, 1917.)

STIPULATIONS ⟹14(4)—CONSTRUCTION.

In prosecution for selling alcoholic liquor, a stipulation that the territory involved "is no-license territory" refers to the date charged in the information, in view of conversation between court and counsel, although the trial court mentioned another date as that covered by the stipulation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Stipulations, Cent. Dig. § 27.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

M. D. Nolan was convicted of selling liquor in no-license territory, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Hurley, of Albion, and Lilburn I. Gibson, of Ukiah, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of selling alcoholic liquor in no-license territory, upon indictment found by the grand jury of Mendocino county. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The charging part of the indictment is that defendant, "within the boundaries of the Fourth supervisor district of the said county of Mendocino, and outside the corporate limits of any city or town," at the hour of 8 o'clock p. m. on April 17, 1916, "did then and there willfully and unlawfully sell, furnish and distribute alcoholic liquor to one Emil Baroni, said supervisor district being then and there no-license territory under the law of the state of California, contrary," etc.

The prosecution introduced several witnesses whose testimony tended to establish the truth of the charge and, when about to close for the people, the following appears in the record:

> "Mr. McCowen (after consulting with attorneys for defendant): It is stipulated that Mendocino City is in the Fourth supervisor district, that it is not an incorporated town, and that the Fourth supervisor district is no-license territory. Mr. Gibson (attorney for defendant): Yes."

The only point now made on the appeal is that there is no evidence showing that the said district was no-license territory on April 17, 1916, the date of the alleged sale of liquor as charged in the indictment. The indictment was found on May 6, 1916, and the trial took place October 10, 1916, at which time the above stipulation was made.

Defendant cites People v. Cavallini, 29 Cal. App. 526, 156 Pac. 73. In that case the point was raised on demurrer to the information that it failed to allege the existence of the ordinance at the time the selling of the liquor was alleged to have occurred.

In his opening statement to the jury the district attorney, addressing himself to defendant's attorney, said:

> "I suppose, Mr. Schino, you will admit that the Fourth supervisor district on the date alleged in the information was 'dry territory'? Mr. Schino: No, sir; if your honor please, we desire to make a formal objection in that respect."

After a colloquy between the district attorney, defendant's attorney, and the judge, the following appears:

> "The Court: Then, gentlemen of the jury, it is stipulated by and between respective counsel representing the people and the defendant that the Fourth supervisor district of Madera county is 'no-license' territory. That will be taken by you as a fact in the case. Mr. Schino: That is, on the 30th day of September, 1914. The Court: Yes, I have no reference to anything else except as to the date of this information, that is, on the 30th of September, 1914, the Fourth supervisor district of the county of Madera was in 'no-license territory.'"

It was in view of this state of the record that the following was said by the court in reviewing the case:

> "The stipulation went no further than an admission that, on September 30, 1914, the district was 'no-license territory,' and this admission was subject to defendant's objection that evidence showing a violation of the local option law was not admissible, for the reason that the information failed to state a public offense."

It was held, correctly, we still think, that it was necessary to allege in the information that at the time the offense was committed the district was "no-license" territory. The averment in the present indictment meets that requirement.

The only question, then, is: Can we say that the stipulation was intended to refer to the averment in the indictment that at the time the offense was committed the district mentioned was "no-license territory"?

We must assume that the district attorney knew that it was necessary to establish the truth of the material averments of the indictment and that one of such averments was the existence of the no-license ordinance at the time of the alleged offense. He made his proofs as to the alleged violation of the ordinance by defendant, and then turned to defendant's attorney to counsel with him as to proving the remaining facts and was met by the stipulation.

> "The rules applicable to the construction of contracts generally govern the courts in their interpretation of stipulations, and thus stipulations will receive a reasonable construction with a view to effecting the intent of the parties." 36 Cyc. p. 1291.

"A construction will be placed upon the stipulation which will render it reasonable and just to both parties rather than unreasonable and unjust; and a construction will be avoided, if possible, which will make the stipulation frivolous or ineffectual." 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. Plead. p. 658.

The stipulation, as interpreted by defendant, might not make it frivolous, but would make it wholly ineffectual for any purpose.

"Where the language of one party may be understood in more senses than one, it is to be interpreted in the sense in which he had reason to suppose it was understood by the other party." Id., p. 660.

And this is the rule stated in section 1649 of the Civil Code. It is also stated, among other rules, that the stipulation is to be interpreted with reference to its subject-matter, in the light of the surrounding circumstances, including the state of the pleadings, the allegations therein, and the attitude of the parties in respect of the issues. 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Plead. p. 659. There were but two principal issues presented: First, did defendant sell intoxicating liquor in the Fourth supervisor district of said county as charged? Second, was the district at that time no-license territory? Proof was made of the first issue, and we think it reasonable to assume that the parties understood the stipulation to cover the second issue. It can hardly be doubted that the district attorney had reason to suppose it was so understood by defendant's attorney.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

(33 Cal. App. 482)

FRANCIS v. INDEPENDENT ELECTRICAL SUPPLY CO. (Civ. 1914.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 20, 1917.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑918(2)—RECORD—PRESUMPTION—DISCRETION—AMENDMENT OF PLEADING.

Application at close of plaintiff's case for leave to amend answer, to allege payment, without showing of fact excusing absence of the allegation, not being accompanied by affidavits or other matter of record from which reasonable probability of sustaining the defense can be inferred, it will be presumed that the court in denying it properly exercised its discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3711.]

2. CORPORATIONS 🔑432(12)—AUTHORITY OF AGENT—ASSIGNMENT OF NOTE—EVIDENCE.

Testimony of the person who assigned to plaintiff defendant's note to a corporation that he was its sales agent, and as such had control and possession of its books of account and evidences of indebtedness and all other matters in connection with its business in the southern end of the state, supports the inference that he was authorized to make the assignment, though it appears another was president and general manager.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1717, 1737, 1743, 1762.]

3. CORPORATIONS 🔑398(1)—AUTHORITY OF AGENTS—GENERAL MANAGER AND DEPARTMENT MANAGER.

A corporation, though having a general manager, can vest in another agent the powers of a general manager representing it in the conduct of some department of its business; he standing in the same relation to the matters of his department as does the general manager to its general affairs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1588, 1602, 1605.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Ira J. Francis against the Independent Electrical Supply Company. From an adverse judgment and order, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hyman Schwartz, of Los Angeles (Isaac Pacht, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant. Oscar C. Mueller and Alfred Wright, both of Los Angeles (Wm. W. Lovett, Jr., of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Appeal by the defendant from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

[1] The action is upon a promissory note made by the defendant to a corporation; the complaint alleging that before the commencement of the action the note was assigned by the payee to the plaintiff. The answer to the complaint did not deny that the note was unpaid. After all of the plaintiff's evidence had been introduced, the defendant for the first time applied for permission to allege payment. This request was denied. It is now claimed that the court's refusal to allow the proposed amendment was an abuse of discretion by reason whereof the defendant is entitled to a new trial. No facts were shown excusing the defendant's failure to put an allegation of payment into its original answer. The application for leave to amend was not accompanied by affidavits nor by any other matter of record from which one can infer a reasonable probability that the defense could have been sustained. Therefore we will presume that the court properly exercised its discretion in that matter.

[2, 3] The only other ground of appeal urged on behalf of appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the note had been assigned and transferred to the plaintiff. The point made is that the evidence failed to show that the assignment was made by a person who had been given the authority or had been in the habit of signing contracts on behalf of his company or indorsing and assigning its negotiable paper. The testimony of the agent who made the assignment on behalf of the corporation was as follows:

"I am sales agent of John A. Roeblings' Sons Company of California, and as sales agent have control of and possession of all books of account and the evidences of indebtedness and all other matters in connection with the business of that corporation in the southern end of California."

It further appeared that another person was president and general manager of the corporation. We think that this evidence was sufficient to support the inference that the agent was authorized to make the assignment. The fact that a corporation has a general manager, whose supervision extends to all of its business, does not exclude its right to vest in another agent the powers of a general manager representing the corporation in the conduct of some department of its business. The superintendent or manager of such department stands in the same relation to the matters pertaining to his department as does the general superintendent or general manager to the general affairs of the company. For authorities to this effect, see note in 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

(33 Cal. App. 467)

PEOPLE v. STOCKTON. (Cr. 537.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 19. 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 18, 1917.)

1. HOMICIDE 🔑234(1) — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

In a homicide case, evidence held to warrant a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 482.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1169(12)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

In a homicide case, error in the admission over defendant's objection of a purported confession made by the defendant to the district attorney was cured, when the defendant voluntarily became a witness in his own behalf, and as such witness testified that he had heard his confession read to the court, and that the facts were therein truly stated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3138.]

3. HOMICIDE 🔑234(8) — EVIDENCE—WEIGHT.

In a homicide case, the fact that when defendant was arrested, soon after the shooting took place, he had on his person a revolver in which two of the cartridges had been discharged, although corroborative evidence of defendant's testimony that he fired only two shots, is not necessarily conclusive of the question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 489.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

R. L. Stockton was convicted of murder in the first degree, and from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

W. C. Dorris, of Bakersfield, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert M. Clarke, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of murder in the first degree and sentenced to imprisonment for life. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The defendant, having had a quarrel with one Brown, purchased a revolver and went out to look for Brown, whom he found in a saloon in the city of Bakersfield. One Leland Mull was standing at the bar next to Brown. The defendant fired in their direction, intending to hit Brown, but instead thereof hit and killed Mull.

[1] It is urged by defendant's counsel in support of the appeal that the evidence in this case was not sufficient to warrant a conviction, because (1) the defendant shot twice, while there is evidence that at least four shots were fired; (2) when he was shot, the deceased fell in the direction opposite to that in which he would have fallen, had the defendant fired the fatal shot. There is evidence from which the jury might have believed that at the time of the killing four shots were fired; but there is no testimony that at that time and place any shooting was done by any person other than the defendant. The evidence clearly and convincingly tends to show that Mull was killed by the first shot. The evidence does not conclusively show that the deceased fell in a direction opposite to that in which he would have fallen had the defendant fired the fatal shot. A reading of the entire testimony convinces us that the evidence is amply sufficient to warrant the conviction.

[2] The next point urged is that the court erred in admitting over defendant's objection a purported confession made by the defendant; also that the purported confession contained statements of facts not in the nature of a confession of guilt, and that the defendant was compelled to be a witness against himself. The so-called confession consisted of questions propounded by the district attorney and answers made by the defendant. James Price, a court reporter, was present and took down the statements in shorthand and afterwards transcribed his notes. At the trial he testified to these facts and identified the document, stating that it was a correct transcript of the statement as made by the defendant, but did not directly testify to the contents thereof. It was then read to the jury by the district attorney. It is unnecessary to discuss the legal propositions presented by counsel, or the authorities in support thereof, under which he claims that this evidence was wrongfully received. The defendant voluntarily became a witness in his own behalf, and as such witness testified that he had heard his confession read to the court, and that the facts were therein truly stated. Assuming, without deciding, that there was error in the court's original ruling upon the objections, it is, as to any claim of prejudicial error, fully cured by this testimony of the defendant. We fail to find anything in the record to support the claim that defendant was compelled to testify against himself.

[3] Finally, it is claimed that the court erred in refusing to allow testimony to prove that shots were fired, other than two which were fired by the defendant. This point relates to questions asked of certain witnesses for the purpose of showing that a shot fired by the defendant after he stepped out of the saloon did not go through the door, but struck against a baseboard next to the bootblack stand on the outside of the building. There was no witness who saw the shooting that was done outside of the building, other than the defendant himself. He testified that he fired one shot while in the saloon, and that after he backed out of the door of the saloon he shot again, but not towards the saloon. "Q. Where did you shoot when you were outside, Mr. Stockton? A. Well, sir; I shot on the sidewalk, or near the bootblack stand." No testimony was introduced directly contradicting the statement that defendant fired a shot toward the bootblack stand. In accordance with a request made by the defendant, the jury was permitted to view the entire premises, both inside and outside of the saloon. They examined the bullet hole in the door, which according to the prosecution's theory was caused by a shot fired by the defendant after he backed out of the saloon, and which according to the defendant's theory was caused by a shot fired by some other person. They also examined the place where the defendant claimed that the second shot fired by him struck the bootblack stand. When the defendant was arrested, soon after the shooting took place, he had on his person a revolver in which two of the cartridges had been discharged. While this fact may be taken as corroboration of the defendant's testimony that he fired only two shots, it is not necessarily conclusive of the question. Neither is this matter of prime importance in determining the case against the defendant, in view of the fact, to which we have referred, that the direct testimony points most strongly to the fact that Mull was killed by the first of the shots that were fired.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

(23 Cal. App. 506)

HILLYER et al. v. HYNES. (Civ. 2037.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 24, 1917.)

1. Trusts 🔑96 — Constructive Trust — What Constitutes.

A husband's promise, upon receiving a deed from his dying wife, that he would in turn execute a similar deed to her niece to be delivered upon his death, impresses the property with a constructive trust in favor of the niece.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 148.]

2. Limitation of Actions 🔑102(8)—Computation—When Statute Runs.

Code Civ. Proc. § 343, providing a four-year limitation period for actions not otherwise provided for, and applying to constructive trusts, does not run until the beneficiary received notice of the trust's creation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 502.]

3. Limitation of Actions 🔑19(1)—Recovery of Real Property.

An action to enforce a husband's promise, made upon receiving a deed from his dying wife, to execute a similar deed to her niece to be delivered upon his death, is one to recover real property governed by the five-year limitation period prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 318.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 73, 80, 84, 85.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Annie Hillyer and others against W. J. Hynes, as administrator of Henry Romoser, deceased. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Stafford & Stafford, of San Francisco, and W. M. Stafford, for appellants. Cullinan & Hickey, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment in favor of the defendant and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The complaint alleges that on the 27th day of September, 1909, Anna Flanigan Romoser was the owner of the real property here in controversy; that shortly before that date, being severely ill and not expecting to live, she entered into an arrangement with her husband, Henry Romoser, whereby she was to execute and deliver to him a deed of gift of said real property, and he in turn was to execute a like deed conveying the property to Catherine Meyers, a niece of Mrs. Romoser's former husband, and place the same in escrow, to be delivered upon his death; that accordingly Mrs. Romoser executed her deed to Henry Romoser, and that he continued to own the property to the time of his death; that, while he made and signed the promised deed of gift to said niece, he never actually delivered it to her nor in escrow for her, without, however, ever repudiating his agreement so to do. This failure of Romoser to keep his agreement is charged in the complaint as fraudulent; and it then proceeds to allege that he died intestate on January 24, 1914, and that the defendant is the administrator of his estate; that Catherine Meyers died intestate on December 28, 1910, leaving as her only heirs the plaintiffs. The prayer of the complaint in part is that the defendant be declared to hold the property in trust for plantiffs, and that he be required to convey the property to them, and that their title be quieted as against said defendant, administrator of the estate of Henry Romoser.

All the material allegations of the complaint are denied in the answer; and in addition the defendant alleges that the plaintiffs' cause of action is barred by subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure, by subdivision 1 of section 339, and by section 343 of said Code.

In addition to finding generally for the defendant, the trial court also found that plaintiffs' cause of action was barred by the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 338, Code of Civil Procedure, as pleaded.

From the evidence it appears without dispute that Mrs. Romoser died in March, 1910; that on September 27, 1909, being very ill, she sent for her attorney, and informed him that she desired to make a conveyance of the property in controversy; that, as she had acquired it from her first husband, Lawrence Flanigan, she thought it only fair to give the same to Mrs. Catherine Meyers, a niece and only living relative of said Lawrence Flanigan; but that she also believed it was her duty to her present husband, who was old and without income, to reserve for him a life estate in the property. She directed her attorney to draw a deed which would carry into effect these desires. It was accordingly drawn, and when presented to her for execution it transpired that since giving the above instructions she had been advised by one Father Casey that it would be better for her to make a deed of gift of the property to Henry Romoser, and have him make a like deed to Mrs. Meyers, placing the latter in escrow with Father Casey, to be delivered to the grantee upon Henry Romoser's death. Her attorney expressed his disapproval of this method of carrying out her desires; nevertheless when she learned that it was legally unobjectionable she instructed him to pursue it. Accordingly a deed of gift conveying the property from Mrs. Romoser to her husband was made and delivered to him with the distinct understanding and promise by Henry Romoser that he would make a deed to the property in favor of Mrs. Meyers. At the same time the attorney requested Romoser to call at his office for the purpose of executing this deed. This he did about a month later, but no delivery of it was made either to the grantee or in escrow for her, and the record does not disclose what became of it.

Henry Romoser died on January 2, 1914, predeceased by Mrs. Meyers, without having delivered, either to her or in escrow for her, the promised deed.

[1] Being husband and wife, Henry Romoser and Anna Flanigan Romoser occupied a confidential relation towards each other; and, whatever may have been his intention at the time Mrs. Romoser made said conveyance of property to him, he received it upon his express oral promise that he would in turn execute a deed to Mrs. Meyers and place the same in escrow. His failure to do so was a betrayal of her confidence; it was a violation of trust, and, under the authorities in this state, impressed the property with a constructive trust in favor of Catherine Meyers or her heirs which a court of equity will enforce. Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186; Dimond v. Sanderson, 103 Cal. 97, 102, 37 Pac. 189.

In the former case the court decided two propositions: (a) If a party, by means of a parol promise made without any intention of performing it, obtains an absolute deed without consideration, it is a case of actual fraud; (b) if a party by means of such parol promise to reconvey obtains an absolute deed to real property without consideration from one who stands in a confidential relation, the violation of the promise is constructive fraud, even if at the time it was made there was an intention to perform it.

In the case of Jones v. Jones, 140 Cal. 587, 590, 74 Pac. 143, 144, the court said:

> "Where a grantee and grantor of land stand in fiduciary relations to each other—as husband and wife, for example—and the deed is executed without consideration other than the promise, express or implied, of the grantee to hold the land for the purpose of carrying out an express trust in favor of the grantor, which is not put in writing, and is therefore invalid as an express trust in land, the confidence which induced the transaction having * * * presumably arisen from the fiduciary relations, the violation by the trustee of the terms of the parol agreement as to the express trust constitutes a constructive fraud, makes the grantee an involuntary trustee of the land for the use of the grantor, and gives the grantor the right to have the deed declared void and to a decree that the land is the property of the grantor, notwithstanding the execution of the deed."

In the case of Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 583, 108 Pac. 506, it is said:

> "It has been established by a number of decisions in this state that, where confidential relations exist between two parties, and one of them executes a conveyance of real estate to the other, upon a parol promise by the other that he will hold it for the benefit of the grantor, or for the benefit of some third person in whom the grantor is interested, there being no other consideration for the conveyance, a trust arises by operation of law in favor of the grantor, or in favor of the third person, for whom the property is to be held. It is the violation of the parol promise which constitutes the fraud upon which the trust arises."

The evidence in the case at bar is not only uncontradicted, but it is clear and convincing that Henry Romoser accepted the conveyance of the property from his wife with the distinct oral agreement that he would in turn make a conveyance of the same to Catherine Meyers and place the deed in escrow, to be delivered to her upon his death, and the finding to the contrary therefore cannot be sustained.

The only other point in the case worthy of more than passing notice is the one as to the statute of limitations. As before stated, this action was commenced within five years, but after the expiration of four years, after the deed was made and delivered by Mrs. Romoser to her husband, at which time the latter ought to have taken steps to carry out his part of the agreement by which he acquired an interest in the property. The plaintiffs neither in the complaint nor in the evidence introduced by them attempted to bring their case within the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 338, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that an action grounded in fraud or mistake must be brought within three years after the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake.

[2] And, assuming that this is an action to declare and enforce a constructive trust (Jones v. Jones, 140 Cal. 590, 74 Pac. 143), and that it is consequently, as to the period within which it may be brought, governed by section 343 of said Code (Norton v. Bassett, 154 Cal. 411, 97 Pac. 894, 129 Am. St. Rep. 162), to the effect that an action for relief not otherwise provided for must be commenced within four years after the cause of action shall have accrued, still we think that the statute has not operated in this case, for the reason that the time could not be held to have commenced to run until Catherine Meyers had notice of the transaction, and it appears from the record that she had no such notice until about March 4, 1910, just after the death of Mrs. Romoser, at which time the surviving husband in effect recognized the trust, and stated that upon his death the property was to go to her.

[3] We think, however, that while the main ground of the action is constructive fraud, and that one of its purposes is to enforce a trust, in its final purpose it is an action to recover the title and possession of real property, and is therefore subject to the provisions of section 318, Code of Civil Procedure. Accordingly the five-year period prescribed by that section is the only limitation which can be applied in bar of plaintiffs' cause of action. Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 Pac. 820; Bradley Bros. v. Bradley, 20 Cal. App. 1, 6, 127 Pac. 1044; 25 Cyc. 1026. That section provides that no action for the recovery of real property or for the recovery of the possession thereof can be maintained unless it appears that the plaintiff, his ancestor, predecessor, or grantor, was seised or possessed of the property in question within five years before the commencement of the action; and while it appears that neither the plaintiffs nor any grantor or ancestor of theirs was ever seised or possessed of the property, we think that under the circumstances of this case Henry Romoser may well be considered as the predecessor of the plaintiffs within the meaning of the section, since, if he had carried out the terms of the understanding by virtue of which he acquired an estate in the property, he would have conveyed it to the plaintiffs or their intestate, and thus have been literally their predecessor in interest. It is the estate which in equity passed to the plaintiffs upon the death of Henry Romoser which they seek by this action to recover.

There is nothing in the point that the heirs of Henry Romoser should have been joined as parties defendant to the action; for it appears that he had no heirs.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; RICHARDS, J.

(33 Cal. App. 454)

PEOPLE v. WAKAO et al. (Cr. 300.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 18, 1917.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER 🔑152(1)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION — INFORMATION—JURISDICTION —CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION—"VENUE."

Under Const. art. 1, § 9, providing that in all criminal prosecutions for libels, indictments found or information laid, shall be tried in the county where such newspapers have their publication office or in the county where the party alleged to be libeled resided at the time of the alleged publication, etc., in a prosecution for libel, an information laid in Sacramento county charging libel of the prosecuting witness in a newspaper printed and published in Fresno county which failed to allege that the prosecuting witness resided in Sacramento county was insufficient to give the court jurisdiction of the action, since, as "venue" means place of trial, and "place of trial" means the jurisdiction of the court, which in the instant case is limited by the Constitution to one of the two counties mentioned, it is essential that the particular facts upon which it depends should be alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 417, 420, 423.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Venue.]

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER 🔑151—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

In a prosecution for criminal libel, the district attorney is presumed to know the residence of the complaining witness, and the defendant is not charged with such knowledge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 415.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

E. K. Wakao and M. Ishihashi were convicted of criminal libel, and from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, they appeal. Reversed.

R. P. Henshall, of San Francisco, and R. B. McMillan, of Sacramento, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action in which defendants were accused, by information laid in Sacramento county, of the crime of libel, as follows:

"That the said E. K. Wakao and M. Ishihashi on the —— day of December, 1915, in the county of Sacramento, in the said state of California, and before the filing of this information, did then and there willfully, unlawfully, and maliciously and with intent thereby to injury (injure?) and defame one Risaburo Hattori and to impeach his honesty and integrity and virtue and reputation and to expose him, the said Risaburo Hattori, to public hatred and contempt and ridicule, did compose, print, and publish in a certain newspaper called the Central California Times, printed and published in the county of Fresno, state of California, and circulated therein and which said newspaper was then and there circulated and published in the county of Sacramento, state of California, certain false, scandalous, malicious, defamatory, and libelous words of and concerning the said Risaburo Hattori, in the Japanese language, as follows, to-wit: [Then follows a photographic copy of the newspaper article and its alleged translation.] Contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute," etc.

The jury returned a verdict of guilty as charged. Defendants moved for a new trial on statutory grounds, and also moved in arrest of judgment on the ground that the court "has not and never had any jurisdiction of the offense charged in the information." The motions were denied, whereupon defendants were sentenced to imprisonment for the period of one year each in the county jail. They appeal from the judgment and order denying their motion for a new trial.

[1] The principal point now urged for a reversal of the judgment is that the court was without jurisdiction, and the contention is based upon the failure of the information to allege that Hattori, the person alleged to have been libeled, resided in Sacramento county at the time said newspaper was circulated therein.

Section 9, art. 1, of the Constitution of the state, provides:

> That in all criminal prosecutions for libels, "indictments found, or information laid, for publications in newspapers, shall be tried in the county where such newspapers have their publication office or in the county where the party alleged to be libeled resided at the time of the alleged publication, unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause."

The interpretation put upon this provision of the Constitution by the Attorney General is that "it was intended to give defendant a defense in the event the offense was prosecuted in any other county than Fresno or Sacramento"; that it "does not prescribe a rule of pleading, but merely shows a rule of defense," and hence it was not necessary to allege in the information that Hattori, the person libeled, was at the time the libel was circulated in Sacramento county a resident therein. If this be true, it would be equally true that, had the information been laid in Fresno county, it would not have been necessary to allege that the newspaper mentioned had its "publication office" in that county. That is to say, the information, charging the publication of the offensive article to have been made in a newspaper in the county where the information is laid, need not state that the newspaper had its publication office in that county; nor, if the information is laid in another county, need it state that the complainant resided in such county. We cannot assent that an information constructed on such interpretation of the Constitution would be sufficient.

Under the Constitution of 1849 such prosecutions could be made in any county in the state where the newspaper was circulated. It was said in Older v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 770, 109 Pac. 478:

> "The prior evil especially intended to be remedied was the danger of prosecution in any county where the libel was circulated, with power to select any judge in the state. This evil was remedied by limiting the venue to two counties only, that of the place of publication and that of the residence of the complainant."

Venue means place of trial, and place of trial means the jurisdiction of the court, which in the present case is limited by the Constitution to one of the two counties mentioned therein. The libelous article may be circulated in every other county in the state, but the superior court has no jurisdiction to bring the offender to trial in any of these counties, for the reason that the Constitution has declared that jurisdiction resides only in the two counties specified. It seems to us that to confer this jurisdiction it is essential that the particular facts upon which it depends should be alleged.

It is a well-settled principle of law that the information or indictment must allege that the offense was committed within the jurisdiction of the court (People v. Wang, 92 Cal. 277, 281, 28 Pac. 270); and this is the Code rule (Pen. Code, § 959). That is, the information must allege facts from which jurisdiction will be made to appear. In the present case the jurisdiction depended upon the fact that the party libeled resided in Sacramento county, and this fact should have been alleged in the information.

In Henderson v. Palmer Oil Co., 29 Cal. App. 451, 159 Pac. 65, it was held that jurisdiction to appoint a receiver, under section 565 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon the dissolution of a corporation, resides alone in the county where the corporation carries on its business, or has its principal place of business, and that where an application based upon a verified complaint which failed to show that the county in which the action was brought was the county in which the corporation had its principal place of business or carried on its business, the court was without jurisdiction to make the appointment.

The rule of pleading in criminal law should not be less exacting. It was held in People v. Cohen, 118 Cal. 74, 50 Pac. 20, that in an indictment for perjury it must be shown therein that the violated oath was administered by competent authority. In that case it was alleged that the oath was taken before a judge of the superior court sitting as a magistrate, and was administered by the acting deputy county clerk. The judgment of conviction was reversed on the ground that the indictment failed to show competent authority to administer the oath for the reason that the judge sitting as a magistrate alone had such authority. The court said:

> "But, assuming that the magistrate may competently employ a clerk or other officer to perform this function, it is obvious that it should, to show authority in such officer, be alleged that the act was done at the direction of the magistrate. There is no such averment here except it be by mere inference or legal conclusion, and that is not sufficient. The fact being material, it must be directly averred to satisfy the rules of pleading, even in a civil action, and a fortiori in a criminal pleading."

In People v. Terrill, 127 Cal. 99, 100, 59 Pac. 836, 837, the court said:

> "It is an elementary principal of criminal law that the indictment or information must state that a crime has been committed, either by direct and positive averment in the language of the statute, or its equivalent, or by stating facts which show that such crime has been committed. In no case can the indictment be aided by imagination or presumption. The presumptions are all in favor of innocence, and if the facts stated may or may not constitute a crime the presumption is that no crime is charged."

The rule was much discussed in People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal. App. 330, 365, 94 Pac. 407, 419, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717, and see opinion of supreme court on petition for hearing in that court. Not only is it essential that a crime be charged, but it must also appear that the court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the case.

There are three cases reported in which the prosecution was at the residence of the complainant (In re Kowalsky, 73 Cal. 124, 14 Pac. 399; People v. Miller, 122 Cal. 84, 54 Pac. 523; Older v. Superior Court, 157 Cal. 770, 109 Pac. 478); and in each case the residence of the party libeled was directly alleged to be in the county where the information was laid. The question at bar therefore was not involved. The Kowalsky and Older Cases are cited by the Attorney General, but we find nothing in them to support his contention.

According to the theory of the prosecution, the information would be sufficient if silent as to the residence of the prosecuting witness, or the place where the newspaper has its publication office. Suppose an information thus framed were laid in a county where the publication office was not situated and where the complainant did not reside. Upon habeas corpus the defendant could not find relief against the warrant of arrest, since, on the Attorney General's theory, the information would be sufficient on its face. Defendant would be compelled to appear and answer or demur. His demurrer would not avail him for the same reason that his discharge on habeas corpus must be denied. To do the only thing open to him he must plead not guilty. Obviously, to make out a case where the information is laid in a county other than that in which the newspaper has its publication office, the prosecution must prove that the complainant resided in such county at the time the alleged newspaper article was circulated therein. It is not for the defendant to make negative proof otherwise than to controvert such fact. The fact is to be established by the prosecution as an essential element of the power of the court to try the case. Otherwise the newspaper publisher is thrown back into the midst of the evil from the consequences of which the Constitution was intended to protect him. True, he could not, in the case supposed, be legally convicted, but he could be put to the expense and annoyance of submitting to compulsory appearance in a county remote from the place of publication or remote from the residence of the complainant, whereas, if defendants' position be sound, as we think it is, he can have present and speedy relief by habeas corpus, and the prosecution would be forced to seek the forum which the Constitution has provided.

[2] The district attorney is presumed to know the residence of the complaining witness. The defendant is not charged with such knowledge. The fact, as we have said, is essential to jurisdiction. Upon every principle of pleading this jurisdictional fact should be stated in the information.

Other questions are presented by the record, but, as they may not arise, should there be a new trial, we refrain from noticing them.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

(33 Cal. App. 530)

PEOPLE v. LOPEZ. (Cr. 540.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 26, 1917.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟹1153(2)—WITNESSES ⟹40(2)—DETERMINATION AS TO COMPETENCY—REVIEW.

In determining competency of child witnesses, the trial court has a wide discretion which will rarely be interfered with on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3062; Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 98.]

2. WITNESSES ⟹40(2)—DETERMINATION AS TO COMPETENCY—REVIEW.

Evidence held not to show abuse of discretion of trial judge in excluding testimony of a child witness on the ground of incapacity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 98.]

3. RAPE ⟹48(1)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—COMPLAINT.

Witness could testify that prosecutrix complained of the rape to him, though not what she said, though she was under the age of consent, and want of consent was immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. § 67.]

4. RAPE ⟹51(5) — INFANT PROSECUTRIX—OUTCRY.

One accused of rape of a girl under the age of consent may be convicted without evidence that prosecutrix made an outcry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. § 75.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⟹807(1)—INSTRUCTIONS—ARGUMENT.

Accused is not entitled to instructions argumentative in character.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1805, 1959, 1960.]

6. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑829(1)—INSTRUCTIONS—DUPLICATION.

Refusal of requested instructions covered so far as pertinent by those given is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011.]

7. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑829(16)—INSTRUCTIONS.

In prosecution for rape, where the court fully charged on reasonable doubt, refusal of instruction on facility of charging rape to satisfy malice was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Rehino Lopez was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed

Albert D. Trujillo and Ralph E. Swing, both of San Bernardino, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert M. Clarke, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of rape. The crime charged was alleged in the information to have been committed with a daughter of the defendant aged 17 years. By the judgment of the court defendant is required to serve a term of 25 years' imprisonment. The appeal is from the judgment.

Counsel for appellant very correctly say that there was very little evidence, aside from that given by the prosecutrix herself, to be looked to in support of the conviction. However that may be, the only function this court is permitted to exercise is to determine whether there is any substantial evidence in support of the verdict, and whether errors appear by which the defendant was prejudiced in his right to a fair trial. It appears that in about June, 1916, defendant went to reside at Chino, in the county of San Bernardino, with his five children, three girls and two boys, the prosecutrix being the oldest of the girls. Defendant and his wife prior to that time had separated, and the former had the care and custody of the children, whom it appears he in a general way was educating and reasonably providing for. Lizzie Lopez, the complainant, testified that the house in which they lived at Chino contained four rooms, that her father and her sister Jennie slept in one bed in one of the rooms, and that she and her young sister Ida, aged 9, occupied a couch in another room. She testified that her father commenced to pay visits to her bed shortly after the family moved to Chino, and that this continued, once or twice a month, up to September of the same year, at about which time defendant was arrested and charged with the crime of rape. Lizzie testified that she would be asleep when her father came, and that she did not cry out, but attempted at different times to awaken her sister Ida by "pinching" the latter; that Ida was never awakened so as to observe the father in his unlawful act. She also testified that finally she had gone to the witness Dillon and complained to him of her father's conduct. On cross-examination she was asked as to whether she complained to anybody else, and she replied that she had told other people, among them a young man named Cisneros; that she had written him a letter and told him about it. Referring to the times when the defendant would visit her, she said that on those occasions she would be asleep. The following questions were asked, and these answers given in that connection:

> "Q. And did you know what was going on? A. I knew afterwards. Q. You didn't know at the time though? A. Yes, sir; I knew, but after it had all happened. Q. You didn't say anything when it was happening, did you? A. Yes, sir. Q. Who did you say it to? A. To him. Q. Well, did you say anything to your sister? A. I tried to wake her up, but I never succeeded. Q. Never succeeded at any of these times? A. No, sir. Q. Would you try each time to wake her? A. Yes, sir. Q. What would you do, get hold of her and shake her? A. I pinched her. Q. You never woke her up at any time? A. No, sir."

The theory of the defense, as developed by the testimony, was that the young man Cisneros had been in the habit of calling upon the complainant during her father's absence, and that the father objected to this, and both remonstrated with the daughter and administered corporal punishment because of the visits of the young man. One of the sons, a brother of complainant, testified that upon returning home he had frequently found his sister closeted with Cisneros; that at times the doors leading to the apartment where they were, were fastened; that he had peered through a window and observed the two lying together upon a couch in a position which, according to the descriptive terms used by the witness, was a compromising one. In substance the same testimony was given by the defendant, who denied ever having had intercourse with his daughter. The mother of Lizzie Lopez, being called as a witness, gave testimony indicating that in her opinion the girl was not of truthful mind. On the other hand, several witnesses, apparently reputable people who had resided in the same community with the defendant prior to his moving to Chino, testified that they knew appellant's general reputation for honesty and integrity, and that such reputation was bad. There was some testimony from which the jury might have inferred that children of the defendant who gave testimony favorable to him had been coached by an aunt and instructed what to say, although this was denied both by these witnesses and the aunt referred to. The girl Ida was the young daughter who, according to complainant's testimony, at all times occupied her bed with her. This young girl was called to the witness stand by the defendant, but the court indicated that he did not consider that she was competent to testify. We quote in full the examination of this witness and the remarks of the court:

"The Court: What is your name? A. Ida Lopez. Q. How old are you, Ida? A. Nine. Q. Do you go to school? A. Yes, sir. Q. What grade are you in? A. Third. Q. Where do you live? A. In Juvenile. Q. Do you know what it is to testify in court? Do you know what it is to hold up your hand? A. Yes, sir. Q. What do they do that for? A. To tell the truth. Q. If you do that, and don't tell the truth, what do they do to you? A. Put you in jail. Q. Anything else? Have you ever been a witness in court before? A. No, sir. The Court: I think this witness is too young to understand the nature of an oath that she takes or the testimony that she gives. Mr. Swing (counsel for defendant): Very well then."

[1] Counsel for appellant insist that the court committed prejudicial error in refusing to allow the young girl to testify in the case. If we were permitted to judge of the competency of this witness from the printed record before us, we would perhaps find it difficult to say that she was not possessed of sufficient mentality and understanding to entitle her to testify. However, in matters of this kind the court has the duty in the exercise of sound discretion to determine that question, and it would be a rare case, indeed, where such determination would be interfered with upon appeal. People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 460, 44 Pac. 186.

[2] In this case we cannot say that the court, from his observation of the young girl as she appeared upon the witness stand and the manner in which she gave her answers, did not properly determine that the child was too young to testify understandingly and with full appreciation of the obligation of a witness' oath. It may be further observed that counsel for appellant appear to have acquiesced, without objection, in the court's suggestion, and made no request to be allowed to further examine the witness to test her competency.

[3] It is next complained that the court erred in permitting the witness Dillon to relate the substance of a conversation that he had with the complaining witness prior to the arrest of the defendant. This testimony was to show the fact that the complainant did complain about the conduct of the defendant, under the rule which permits such complaints to be offered in corroboration of the charge of the prosecutrix and to show want of consent. People v. Wilmot, 139 Cal. 103, 72 Pac. 838. The question of the consent of the prosecutrix on account of her youth becomes immaterial in this case, but it is said in the case of People v. Wilmot, supra, the fact of "complaint of injury on the part of one under the age of legal consent would in most cases be competent, and this court has in this respect made no distinction between cases where there was actual resistance and those where resistance and nonconsent were conclusively inferred by the law." We fail to find in the testimony given by Dillon any such recitation of forbidden details as would make it appear that the admission of that testimony constituted prejudicial error. The court cautioned the witness that he could only tell what the "complaint" was, and not the detail of it, and the witness replied that she came to his office in the middle of September crying, and said, "I don't want to live with my father." The court then struck out this statement, and instructed the jury to disregard it, and the witness was asked again as to what complaint was made, and replied "that she had had sexual intercourse with her father." Undoubtedly it was competent for the witness to tell what complainant complained about—that is, what the subject of her complaint was—and whether he phrased it as that she complained of a rape, or that she said, as he stated, that she had had sexual intercourse with the defendant, is not material. The one would mean no more than the other. The defendant on cross-examination was not content with the statement of the complainant of the fact of the complaint made to Dillon, but asked her directly, as we have before mentioned, as to other persons she had complained to. It was proper for the district attorney to follow this examination and bring out more fully the matter of other complaints, if any were indicated to have been made. No prejudicial misconduct can be charged to the prosecuting officer.

[4] Complaint is made because the court refused to give certain instructions offered by the defendant. Instruction No. 9 was to advise the jury that:

> If "the defendant [prosecutrix is evidently intended] made no outcry at the time of the alleged offense and did not immediately complain to others and that when she did complain she had some motive other than the prosecution of the defendant for the alleged offense, it is your duty to take all of these things into consideration in arriving at a verdict, and unless and in spite of these facts you are convinced to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did commit the alleged offense, you should return a verdict of not guilty."

This instruction cannot be said to be clearly phrased, and there was no error in refusing it. The prosecuting witness was under age, and the matter of her consent or nonconsent was not material, and the defendant might well have been convicted without any evidence at all being offered as to any complaint or outcry being made by her.

[5] Instruction No. 11 offered and refused was merely argumentative, and the defendant as a matter of right was not entitled to have it read to the jury. As to instruction No. 12, the same observation may be made; and the same may be said of instruction No. 15.

[6] Instruction No. 17 which was to advise the jury that, if they believed the testimony of the prosecuting witness was inherently improbable or "possibly untrue," it was their duty to find a verdict of not guilty, in so far as it contained suggestion of pertinent instruction, was completely covered in the instruction on reasonable doubt and other instructions given by the court.

[7] Instruction No. 18, offered and refused, was an instruction warning the jury as to the danger of prosecutions for rape being used to satisfy malice or private vengeance, and proceeded to declare that in such case "the accused is almost defenseless, in view of the facility with which charges of this character may be invented and maintained." We do not consider that the refusal to give this instruction amounted to prejudicial error. It may be observed that the court very fully and carefully instructed the jury as to the necessity that it should find in fact the truth of the charge to be beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the testimony of the prosecutrix should be carefully scanned, that neither the gravity of the charge nor the fact that the defendant was the father of the prosecuting witness was to bias the judgment of the jurors in any manner, and that he was presumed to be innocent until his guilt had been established beyond a reasonable doubt. The defendant was allowed to show very fully the alleged conduct of the prosecutrix with the young man Cisneros, in the furtherance of his contention that the prosecution arose through the ill will of the complainant because of his interference with and objections to the visits of Cisneros. As we have before stated by way of preface to this opinion, to our minds the corroborating evidence did not make out, as the record shows it, a strong case. There was no testimony by physicians or other competent persons showing that as a result of any physical examination it had been ascertained that the young girl had been tampered with. It is true that by way of rebuttal the district attorney did offer as a witness a physician and started to examine him as to some examination made of the young girl, when he was stopped by an objection that the testimony was not rebuttal, which objection was very properly sustained by the trial judge. However, the responsibility rested with the jury to determine the truth of the facts charged. It determined them in favor of the guilt of the defendant, and he must endure the penalty visited upon him.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

(33 Cal. App. 470)

HAMILTON v. MALLARD, City Assessor, et al. (Civ. 2323.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 19, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 18, 1917.)

1. MANDAMUS ⇨66—WHO ENTITLED TO RELIEF—TAXPAYER.

A city taxpayer cannot maintain mandamus to have an alleged de jure city assessor perform his duties, where a de facto officer is performing the duties of such office, since the taxpayer's rights are as well protected by the de facto as by the de jure officer, and the question should be directly litigated between the interested parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 131.]

2. OFFICERS ⇨41—DE FACTO OFFICER—CITY ASSESSOR.

A county assessor, performing all duties of the city assessor, claiming to do so under color of right and with the consent of the city council, and the alleged city assessor de jure, is a de facto officer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. § 63.]

3. MANDAMUS ⇨7—NATURE OF WRIT.

Mandamus does not issue as a matter of absolute right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 5.]

Petition for writ of mandate by William R. Hamilton against Walter Mallard, City Assessor of the city of Los Angeles, and others. Writ denied.

J. R. Scott and James, Smith & McCarthy, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner. Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., and C. B. Penn, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an original proceeding, instituted by petitioner as the owner of property in the city of Los Angeles, for a writ of mandate to be directed to Walter Mallard, as city assessor of the city of Los Angeles, and to the other respondents, as members of the council of said city, requiring the latter to furnish Mallard, as such assessor, certain stationery and supplies mentioned in the petition, alleged to be necessary for his use in the performance of his duties as such assessor, and for which he had made requisition, and commanding respondent Walter Mallard, as such assessor, to perform the duties of assessor of said city.

The proceeding grows out of the fact that, under and by virtue of an amendment to the charter of the city of Los Angeles purporting to authorize such action, the city council adopted an ordinance whereby it was provided that, beginning on the 5th day of March, 1917, the functions of the city of Los Angeles relating to the assessment of property for taxation should be transferred to, assumed, and discharged by the officer of Los Angeles county performing similar functions in such county, except as therein provided, and that the office of city assessor be vacated and abolished; the effect of which was to transfer the functions of city assessor to the county assessor of Los Angeles county for performance. Thereafter the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county adopted a resolution approving such transfer and assuming for and on behalf of said county the discharge and performance of such functions by the proper officer of the county, which officer, since the contrary is not made to appear, we must assume, by virtue of such transfer and the assumption of such duties, has entered upon, and is now engaged in the discharge thereof.

The theory upon which petitioner bases his claim to the issuance of the writ is the invalidity of the proceedings whereby the functions of the office of city assessor were transferred to the county assessor for performance, and the office abolished. In view of our conclusion that upon the facts stated in the petition, to which a general demurrer was interposed, the writ of mandate prayed for should not issue, it will be unnecessary to discusss the several grounds upon which petitioner's attack is made upon the validity of the amendment to the charter pursuant to which the proceedings of the council in effecting the transfer were had and taken. If the office was abolished, then clearly, since Mallard could not be the incumbent of an office that had no existence, the writ would not lie. On the other hand, assuming the existence of the office as claimed by petitioner, and that Mallard is the de jure city assessor, who, as alleged, refuses to perform the functions of the office, which are in fact being exercised by another under color of right so to do, is petitioner entitled to the writ? The answer to the question depends upon whether such performance of duties by the county assessor constitutes him the de facto incumbent of the office. If such fact be made to appear, then petitioner, since the law, "for grave reasons of public policy, holds valid the acts of such an officer" (Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 480, 50 Pac. 644), is not concerned with the question as to the right of such county assessor to assess city property. "The lawful acts of an officer de facto, so far as the rights of third persons are concerned, are, if done within the scope and by the apparent authority of office, as valid and binding as if he were the officer legally elected and qualified for the office, and in full possession of it." Town of Susanville v. Long, 144 Cal. 362, 77 Pac. 987.

[1-3] While the writ will issue to compel the performance of official duty, it cannot, where there is a valid performance of such duty, be invoked to determine the disputed question as to which of two persons is entitled as of right to perform the duty. Fowler v. Brooks et al., 188 Mass. 64, 74 N. E. 291, 3 Ann. Cas. 173. That it will lie in a proper case at the suit of a taxpayer to compel the assessor to assess lands admits of no doubt. People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 645; Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 353. But where, as here, it appears that the duty of assessing property is being performed by one whose acts, if he be such de facto officer, are of the same validity as though exercised by the assessor de jure, how can a taxpayer be an aggrieved party, or said to have any beneficial interest in the subject which can be affected? The sole inquiry, then, is not whether the proceedings which purport to abolish the office of city assessor and transfer its functions to the county assessor are valid, but, conceding them invalid, are the facts such as to constitute the person filling the office of county assessor the de facto city assessor? That he is such de facto officer, we think, necessarily follows from his possession of the indicia of office and the fact that he is actually engaged in performing all the functions thereof, claiming so to do under color of right, with the acquiescence of the city council and the city assessor de jure. True, he does not hold himself out as being city assessor; but this, to our minds, is immaterial. It is the exercise of the functions of the office, not of right, but under claim and color of right, that gives the position of the county assessor its de facto character, rather than the name by which the office is designated.

Conceding petitioner's right as a taxpayer to have a valid assessment made of all city property, nevertheless, since it appears such valid assessment is being made, he is in no position to insist upon the issuance of a writ of mandate to determine the legality of the proceedings under which the county assessor is engaged in the performance of the functions of the office. He is not concerned with the question of which of two persons purporting to act officially performs an act which, in either case, is equally free from objection. To issue the writ under such circumstances would be tantamount to permitting its use for the purpose of determining as between two adverse parties, the right and title to the office, for which purpose another proceeding is provided by statute. True, where the party is entitled to the relief sought, the writ will not be withheld in a proper case because of the fact that title to the office is incidentally involved. Morton v. Broderick, supra; McKannay v. Horton, 151 Cal. 711, 91 Pac. 598, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 661, 121 Am. St. Rep. 146. No facts are here disclosed, however, which bring the case within the exception to the general rule announced in those cases. Moreover, the writ of mandate does not issue as a matter of absolute right (People v. Lieb, 85 Ill. 484), and in the case at bar consideration should be given to the probable demoralization and disaster in the administration of the fiscal affairs of the city which might follow the granting of the application. If the proceedings for the transfer of the functions of the office are, as claimed, invalid, such question should be litigated in a direct proceeding, final as to parties directly interested, and not in a suit at the instance of a third party, who, as it appears to us, has no beneficial interest in the matter.

The writ is denied.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

(33 Cal. App. 479)

CANER v. OWNERS' REALTY CO.

(Civ. 2042.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 20, 1917.)

1. Contracts 🔑277(1)—Performance—Necessity of Demand.

Where no time is specified for the performance of a contract other than for the payment of money, a demand for performance is necessary in order to put the promisor in default.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1217–1227.]

2. Contracts 🔑336—Action for Breach—Complaint—Sufficiency.

In an action for breach of contract to grade streets, in which time was of the essence, but no time for performance fixed, a complaint failing to allege a demand upon the defendant for performance is fatally defective.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1677–1681.]

3. Limitation of Actions 🔑66(6)—Computation of Period of Limitation—Breach of Contract—Demand for Performance.

Where demand for performance was essential to the creation of a cause of action for breach of contract, it was necessary to toll the statute of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 359.]

4. Contracts 🔑212(2)—Indefinite Time.

Where, under a contract, the time within which an act is to be performed is either indefinite or not specified, it must be performed within a reasonable time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 947–951.]

5. Limitation of Actions 🔑46(3)—Accrual of Contract—Demand for Performance.

Where, in a contract, the time within which an act is to be performed is either indefinite or not specified, the statute of limitations commences to run against an action for a failure to perform such an obligation at the expiration of a reasonable time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 242.]

6. Limitation of Actions 🔑66(15) — Demand for Performance — Time for Making.

Where demand for performance of a contract is essential to the creation of a cause of action, it must be made within a reasonable time, which is the period of time prescribed by the statute of limitations for the outlawry of such action; so that, where contracts for the grading of streets did not specify a time for performance, and no demand for performance was made within the period of four years prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 337, within which an action upon a contract in writing must be brought, an action for damages for breach of such contracts was barred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. §§ 373, 374.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; A. E. Graupner, Judge.

Action by Petronella Caner against the Owners' Realty Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. A. Olson, of San Francisco, for appellant. Jordan & Brann, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. Upon this appeal from a judgment entered in favor of the defendant following an order of the trial court sustaining a demurrer to the plaintiff's first amended complaint, it appears from said complaint that the plaintiff individually and as the assignee of 22 other persons sought in 23 separately stated causes of action to recover damages from the defendant for the alleged breach of covenant of a contract to grade streets in a certain tract of land in San Mateo county known as the "Ocean Shore tract," in which plaintiff and her assignors had purchased lots. The complaint also purported to plead 23 causes of action upon the same covenant for specific performance. To all of these causes of action the defendant demurred upon the ground that none of them stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that each of them was barred by the provisions of sections 337 and 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon the oral argument it was conceded by counsel for plaintiff that the demurrer was well taken in so far as it was directed against the several causes of action attempted to be pleaded for specific perfomance.

The covenant of the contract pleaded and relied upon to support the plaintiff's claim of damages for its breach is as follows:

> "The sellers [defendant] guarantee to grade all the streets in the Ocean Shore tract at their expense. Time is acknowledged to be of the essence of this contract. These covenants shall be binding on the parties to this contract, their heirs, successors, and assigns."

It affirmatively appears upon the face of the complaint that the several contracts in suit were not made within four years prior to the institution of the action; it is alleged that each and all of them were made at different times, varying from five to seven years, before the complaint was filed. It will be noted that the covenant in question does not specify, and the plaintiff's complaint does not allege, nor attempt to allege, the time within which the defendant was to grade the streets in the tract wherein plaintiff and her assignors had purchased lots. Furthermore, the complaint is devoid of an allegation that the plaintiff or her assignors ever demanded that the defendant perform the said covenant.

[1-3] Where no time is specified for the doing of an act, other than the payment of money, it is the rule of law that a demand for performance is necessary in order to put the promisor in default. 9 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 200, 201. The reason for the rule in this behalf is to give the promisor an opportunity to perform before being subjected to the inconvenience and expense of litigation. 1 Corp. Jur. 979. No time having been fixed by the covenant under consideration for the performance of the obligation thereof, and the complaint failing to allege a demand upon the defendant for performance, it is clear that the complaint, in so far as the several causes of action for damages are concerned, is fatally defective—when measured by the foregoing rule. Moreover, such a demand, in addition to being essential to the creation of a cause of action, was necessary to toll the statute of limitations.

[4-6] In this behalf it is the rule, well settled we think, that where in a contract the time within which an act is to be performed is either indefinite or not specified, it may and must be performed within a reasonable time; and ordinarily the statute of limitations commences to run against an action for a failure to perform such an obligation at the expiration of a reasonable time. Williams v. Bergin, 116 Cal. 56, 47 Pac. 877. And again, where, as in the present case, a demand for performance is essential to the creation of a cause of action it must be made within a reasonable time, which, it has been held, is the period of time prescribed by the statute of limitations for the outlawry of the action. Meherin v. San Francisco Produce Exchange, 117 Cal. 215, 48 Pac. 1074.

An action upon any written contract founded upon an instrument in writing executed within the state is barred within four years (Code Civ. Proc. § 337); and, as no demand was made within four years after the contracts in suit were executed, all of the causes of action arising therefrom and pleaded in the plaintiff's complaint were under the rule last above stated barred by the statute of limitations.

It follows, from what we have said, that the demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint was well taken and rightly sustained. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(33 Cal. App. 476)

DOOLITTLE v. SAVAGE TIRE CO.

(Civ. 1899.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 19, 1917.)

1. CONTRACTS 🔑247—TERMINATION—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action against an employer to recover for use of an automobile plaintiff employé's testimony that a new arrangement was made concerning the machine's use on a certain date does not establish that the previously existing agreement regarding compensation was thereby terminated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1139, 1787.]

2. CORPORATIONS 🔑432(9)—EVIDENCE OF AUTHORITY—BY-LAWS.

In employé's action against his employer for use of an automobile defendant's by-law requiring compensation of its employés to be fixed by its directors or executive committee is inadmissible, at least where the plaintiff was not a stockholder when he made his contract with defendant's general manager and had no notice of such by-law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1734, 1743, 1762.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Action by M. G. Doolittle against the Savage Tire Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, of Los Angeles, and Titus & Davin, of San Diego (Jas. A. Gibson, Jr., of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant. Earl Curtis Peck, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The judgment awarded to the plaintiff the sum of $1,000 as compensation for the use of an automobile pursuant to an alleged agreement between plaintiff and defendant. The defendant appeals from the judgment.

The principal grounds upon which appellant claims a reversal are that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the following findings: (1) That the plaintiff used his automobile in the business of the defendant pursuant to the agreement sued on, from on or about the 1st day of July, 1913, to and including the 31st day of August, 1914; (2) that the reasonable value of the use of the automobile was the sum of $1,000.

The plaintiff was a salesman employed in selling tires for the defendant, and was the owner of an automobile. At a date not exactly established, but which was between the 1st and middle of August, 1913, the sales manager of the defendant made an oral agreement in its behalf with the plaintiff which in substance was that the plaintiff should use his automobile in connection with his work as a salesman, and that the defendant would pay the reasonable value of such use. The plaintiff did use his automobile exclusively in the business of the defendant from that time until about the end of August, 1914. There is evidence tending to establish the fact that this arrangement between the sales manager and the plaintiff was made known to and was approved by the president and general manager of the defendant. The evidence further shows that the reasonable value of the use of the automobile, if plaintiff paid for the gasoline used by him, was $100 per month; if the defendant paid for the gasoline, it was at least $75 per month. The plaintiff did pay for his own gasoline until March 1, 1914. Thereafter the gasoline expense was paid by the defendant.

Fairly construed, the brief for appellant concedes that the plaintiff is entitled to compensation under the contract sued on for the time from the middle of August, 1913, until March 1, 1914. This would justify the judgment at least to the extent of $650. Appellant contends, however, that the contract was terminated on March 1, 1914, and therefore that the recovery cannot include compensation for the use of the automobile after that date.

[1] Evidence was received concerning an agreement said to have been made about March 1, 1914, between plaintiff and defendant whereby the defendant purchased the plaintiff's automobile, and that thereafter it was used as the defendant's machine. But all of this evidence was afterwards stricken from the record by consent of the parties. Notwithstanding such stipulation, appellant relies upon a general statement made by the plaintiff in his testimony that on March 1st a new arrangement was made concerning the use of this automobile, and argues therefrom that the contract made in August was thereby terminated. In our opinion, such conclusion does not follow. As the record stands, we do not know what were the terms of the supposed new arrangement, and we cannot say that they were sufficient to put an end to the existing contract. The fact that the plaintiff continued in the employ of the defendant as salesman and continued to use his automobile in that business as he had used it before, with the single exception that from that time the defendant paid for the gasoline used, tends to support plaintiff's claim that he was continuing to use the automobile in that business under the agreement that he should be paid the reasonable value of such use. At the rate of $75 per month this would have amounted to $450. It follows that the evidence is sufficient to support the court's finding that the reasonable value of the use of the machine for the entire period included in the findings amounted to $1,000.

[2] Appellant further complains that the court erred in excluding from the evidence a by-law of the defendant which limited the manner in which the compensation of employés should be fixed. This by-law stated that:

> "The compensation for all employés may be fixed by the executive committee or by the general manager, but no employment for a longer period than one month shall be valid unless agreed upon in writing and approved by the directors or the executive committee."

We think that the by-law was properly excluded. The compensation of the plaintiff as an employé was his salary, about which there appears to have been no dispute. At least it is not involved in this case. The contract for the use of plaintiff's automobile stands on the same foundation as if it had been made with any automobile owner to obtain the use of such machine in the company's business. Appellant claims that the by-law was admissible for the additional reason that the plaintiff was a stockholder of the defendant corporation, and therefore bound to take notice of its by-laws. In fact, the evidence shows that the plaintiff was a stockholder of the defendant corporation at the time when this action was tried in the superior court, but not that he was such stockholder when the contract was made. Since the contract related to a matter connected with the ordinary course of business of the corporation and was made by or with the consent of the general manager, and the corporation received the benefit of the contract thus made, it should not be permitted to take advantage of a limitation (if such there was) of the general manager's authority, without evidence that the plaintiff knew or had notice thereof.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

(33 Cal. App. 511)

PEOPLE v. WILBUR. (Cr. 385.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 24, 1917.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑966—MOTION IN ARREST—NATURE.

A motion in arrest of judgment challenges the sufficiency of the indictment or information to state a public offense and is neither more nor less than a demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2423–2468.]

2. BANKS AND BANKING 🔑21—INFORMATION—SUFFICIENCY—CHECKING AGAINST INSUFFICIENT FUNDS.

Under Pen. Code, § 476a, as to checking against insufficient funds, where defendant wrote a check payable to himself and gave it to a third party without indorsing it, the offense was complete; the gist thereof being the intent to defraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 25.]

3. BANKS AND BANKING 🔑21—"CHECKING AGAINST INSUFFICIENT FUNDS"—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

To establish the offense under Pen. Code, § 476a, of "checking against insufficient funds," it is necessary that, with intent to defraud, a party has made and drawn a check or draft upon some bank for the payment of money and delivered the same to another knowing at the time that he has not at the time sufficient funds or credit with the bank to meet the check in full.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 25.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; George D. Murray, Judge.

A. H. Wilbur was convicted of an offense, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Henry L. Ford, of Eureka, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. By an information duly filed, the district attorney of Humboldt county charged the defendant with the crime of drawing a bank check without funds in bank, as follows:

> That the said defendant did, on the 31st day of October, 1916, at and in the county of Humboldt, "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, fraudulently, knowingly and with intent to defraud H. A. King, make, draw, utter and deliver to H. A. King a certain check and draft upon a certain bank, banker and depositary, to wit, The First National Bank of Eureka, a banking corporation duly organized for the purpose of doing a banking business under and by virtue of the laws of the United States of America and doing business in the said county of Humboldt. That said check and draft was then and there for the payment of money and was then and there in the words and figures following, to wit: 'Eureka, Cal., October 31, 1916. The First National Bank of Eureka (90–147). Pay to A. H. Wilbur, or order thirty-five dollars ($35.00). [Signed] A. H. Wilbur.' That he the said defendant had not then and there sufficient funds in or credit with the said The First National Bank of Eureka, a banking corporation as aforesaid, to meet said check and draft in full upon its presentation, as he the said defendant then and there well knew, contrary to the form, force and effect of the statute," etc.

The defendant, upon his arraignment upon said information on the 10th day of November, 1916, entered a plea of guilty thereto, and "waived the statutory time for the pronouncing of judgment herein," whereupon the court postponed the pronouncing of judgment to the following day, November 11, 1916, at 9:30 a. m. On the last-named date, the cause having been called for the pronouncing of judgment, the attorney for the accused filed and pressed a motion in arrest of judgment. The motion was based upon a number of grounds, among which were the following: (1) That the facts stated do not constitute a public offense; (2) that the information does not substantially conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code; (3) that the said information contains matters which, if true, would constitute a legal justification or excuse of the offense charged. Pen. Code, §§ 1004, 1185. The motion was disallowed and judgment of imprisonment thereupon pronounced. This appeal is by the defendant from said judgment.

The point upon which the defendant relies for a reversal of the judgment is that the check, as delivered to King, having been drawn by the defendant and made payable to himself or order, and not having been indorsed on the back thereof by the latter, was worthless in the hands of King; that is to say, since the check, as drawn, did not bear upon its back the indorsement of the defendant, King could not have succeeded in passing or cashing the check or securing payment thereof. It is argued that the check, never having been legally transferred to King, amounted to nothing more than a piece of waste paper, that it was worthless for any purpose, and of the mere act of delivering the paper to King no charge of crime could be predicated and sustained.

[1] We cannot agree to that contention. A motion in arrest of judgment challenges the sufficiency of the indictment or information to state a public offense. The office of such a motion is neither more nor less than that of a demurrer. It is practically a demurrer interposed to an accusatory pleading after conviction. Necessarily, then, the question the solution of which is here submitted to us is whether the facts stated in the information constitute a public offense.

[2] The charge laid in the information is founded on section 476a of the Penal Code, which provides:

> "Every person who, willfully, with intent to defraud, makes or draws, or utters, or delivers to another person, any check or draft on a bank, banker or depositary for the payment of money, knowing at the time of such making, drawing, uttering or delivery, that he has not sufficient funds in, or credit with, such bank, banker or depositary, to meet such check or draft in full upon its presentation, is punishable by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year or in the state prison for not more than fourteen years. The word 'credit' as used herein shall be construed to be an arrangement or understanding with the bank or depositary for the payment of such check or draft."

The elaborate discussion in the briefs, pro and con, upon the question whether there may be a legal transfer of a check by delivery under a parol or verbal agreement, or, in other words, without a written agreement or indorsement, is of no consequence in the decision of the point made by the defendant. The element of intent which enters into the commission of the acts constituting, with such intent, the crime charged—that is, the expression, "intent to defraud"—can hardly be said to mean an intent to defraud the bank, but refers (as the information here alleges) to an intent to defraud the person to whom the check is delivered, for, quite obviously, there could be but little, if any, chance or opportunity for defrauding the bank in such case, since, if the drawer had no assets therein or credit therewith sufficient to satisfy the draft, the bank could and would promptly repudiate and dishonor the check. And the fact that the check may be "a worthless piece of paper" in the hands of the person to whom it was delivered, because it has not been properly indorsed, does not enter as an element into the crime defined by the section upon which the information is based. The check in this case, even if indorsed by the defendant, could be no less a "worthless piece of paper," if, at the time of its presentation for payment, the drawer had no money in or credit with the bank sufficient to satisfy it. We can therefore conceive of no reason for saying that it is material or necessary to the statement or consummation of the offense to show or prove that the check or draft so drawn and delivered is in such form as would make it legally binding upon the bank to pay it upon presentation, if the drawer then had adequate funds in, or credit with, the bank to satisfy it.

[3] To ascertain what are the essentials or elements constituting a crime, we must look to the statute itself defining the crime, and, thus guided in this case, we find that the gist of the offense charged in the information is in the fraudulent intent with which the check or draft is drawn and delivered and knowledge by the drawer and deliverer, at the time of such drawing and delivery, that he was then without assets of any kind or character in the bank upon which it was drawn to satisfy or meet it. Hence, all that need be pleaded or proved to show or establish the fact of the commission of the offense denounced in said section is that, with intent to defraud, a party has made and drawn a check or draft upon some bank for the payment of money and delivered the same to another, knowing at the time such check was made, drawn and delivered that he has not sufficient funds in, or credit with such bank to meet such check or draft in full upon its presentation.

The information in this case, as will be observed from an examination of it, follows, substantially, the language of the section under which it was drawn, and, among other things, directly charges that the defendant delivered the check to one H. A. King with intent to defraud him. Thus the offense defined by said section is clearly and concisely stated, and this is all that is required to render the information impregnable against successful attack, in whatever form the attack may or might be made, upon the ground that it does not state a public offense. And, we may add, the information is equally unobjectionable as against any other ground of demurrer or of a motion in arrest of judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

(33 Cal. App. 434)

BROOKE v. QUIGLEY. (Civ. 1635.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 21, 1917.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑48—DUTIES OF AGENT.

The constant and undivided fidelity of the agent to the interest of the principal is demanded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 78.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1039(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—PLEADINGS—INCONSISTENCY.

Complaint showing agreement for agent's commission and performance of the agent's contract and alleging that "thereafter, in accordance with said negotiations carried on on the part of plaintiff in accordance with said agreement, a deed of grant was executed" not in the terms agreed upon, was not prejudicially inconsistent owing to the presence of the words "in accordance with said agreement."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4075.]

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE 🔑114(2) — RIGHT TO REMEDY.

In an agent's action attempting to establish a trust and seeking to have an interest in himself declared in the property involved in the trade, though the complaint contained no allegation that the consideration was equitable and adequate, where such issue was tendered by the answer, and was found in plaintiff's favor, it was immaterial whether the action be regarded as one for specific performance or to enforce a trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 357-361.]

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE 🔑126(1)—DECREE.

When an agent consummated a trade under an agreement that he should have a one-sixth interest in the tract conveyed, he was not entitled to a decree in his suit for specific performance or to have a trust declared for the whole interest in the one-sixth of the land or any portion thereof, but could only have decreed for a one-sixth undivided interest of the whole.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 55, 401-405.]

5. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑78(1)—INTEREST OF—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to require an accounting between an agent and his principal arising out of a real estate trade wherein the agent was to receive an undivided one-sixth interest in the land involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 162-165, 176.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Morris Brooke against T. L. Quigley. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Butler & Swisler, of Sacramento, and M. E. Sanborn, of Yuba City, for appellant. W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The suit was for the recovery of a certain interest in real property which was alleged to be held in trust by the defendant for the plaintiff. The cause of action is based upon a contract between the parties whereby respondent acted as the agent for appellant in the purchase of a tract of land from one Edward A. Noyes under an agreement that he should receive as his commission a one-sixth interest in said real property. The contract is set out in the complaint, and it is further alleged that in accordance therewith respondent secured the sale, and the deed was made to appellant as the sole grantee, that subsequently appellant sold a portion of said real estate, and that said portion was of the value of one-half of the whole tract. The prayer was for judgment decreeing respondent to be the owner of an undivided one-third interest in the part remaining unsold, and that appellant held it in trust for respondent, and that he be required to perform specifically his contract and execute a deed to respondent of the one-third interest. The answer set up a failure on plaintiff's part to perform his contract, concealment of knowledge, and information from defendant by plaintiff, and also misrepresentations by the agent to the principal, constituting a violation of his duties and obligations as such agent. It was also alleged that the contract was not sufficiently specific, comprehensive, or definite to admit of specific performance, and that the alleged services did not constitute a fair, just, and adequate consideration or any consideration whatever for plaintiff's demand. By counterclaim and cross-complaint defendant also sought to recover the sum of $2,167.60 which he had paid to plaintiff before he had discovered the said violation of his duties as agent and the failure to render the services contracted for. It may be stated that this payment was made by reason of a certain reduction in the cash payment required of appellant at the time of the execution of the deed to him. The court's conclusion harmonized with the view of plaintiff, and its judgment determined and decreed:

> "That plaintiff is the owner in fee and entitled to the possession of an undivided $^{25333}/_{114795}$ interest in and to those certain tracts or parcels of land situate and being in the county of Sutter [describing them], subject, however, to the payment by plaintiff of the sum of $21,166.66 on or before the 1st day of January, 1921, with interest thereon from the date of the entry of this decree at 6 per cent. per annum, the same being a portion of the last payment required to be made in and by that certain promissory note executed by defendant T. L. Quigley to E. A. Noyes and secured by a mortgage of record."

Then follows a copy of said note, and the judgment continues:

> "It is further here ordered, adjudged, and decreed that within ten days from the date of the rendition and entry of this decree the defendant, T. L. Quigley, execute his said trust by the execution and delivery to plaintiff of a good and sufficient deed of grant, granting and transferring to him said $^{25333}/_{114795}$ interest in and to said lands and premises hereinbefore described subject to the payment of said sum of $21,166.66 on or before the 1st day of January, 1921, with interest from the date of the rendition and entry of this decree at 6 per cent. per annum as hereinbefore set forth, and that in the event of the failure or refusal of said defendant, T. L. Quigley, to execute said deed within the time and in the form and substance as herein directed, the sheriff of the county of Sutter, state of California, is hereby appointed for such purpose and directed to make, acknowledge, execute, and deliver said deed in the place and stead of said defendant, T. L. Quigley."

We now proceed to the consideration of the principal contentions of appellant for a reversal of the judgment.

While appellant presents various points for our determination, he declares in his brief that the primary reason why appellant resists the demands of respondent is because of the knowledge obtained by appellant that respondent, while pretending otherwise, in fact failed to render the services as broker which in law and good conscience he was bound to render before he could rightfully claim compensation. In fact, appellant testified to the agreement substantially as did respondent, and declared that he intended to execute it until he learned "that he had not delivered or given me the service I expected, that I was paying for." The particular remissness of the agent is designated as "fraudulent concealment," "nonperformance and delay," "positive acts of fraud," and "misrepresentations." Under the first are specified:

> "(a) He did not inform appellant that he had knowledge of the Phipps-Beere option; (b) he did not inform appellant of the terms of that option or the price thereunder at which the land could be purchased, viz. $28 per acre; (c) he did not inform appellant during the time he was pretending to act as the confidential agent of appellant, that he at the same time was acting as the agent for Noyes and endeavoring to obtain for the land the highest possible price," and that he advised Noyes to insist upon a cash payment of $25,000 instead of $12,500 which Noyes had consented to accept until a flaw in the title was removed.

In the second category are enumerated his omission to avail himself of the opportunity to purchase the land at the price of $28 per acre, through said Phipps-Beere option, and his failure to submit to Noyes the various offers for the land made by appellant. The "positive acts of fraud" are covered by the foregoing, and the "misrepresentations" relate to a letter and telegram sent by respondent to appellant on December 29, 1912, to the effect that the net price for the land was $30 per acre, and that it had never been offered for less.

[1] The constant and undivided fidelity of the agent to the interest of the principal is, of course, demanded by the provisions of the statute, the decisions of the courts, and the recognized principles of honorable dealing, and if we had to accept the recital of appellant as embodying the established facts of the case, we should not hesitate to say that respondent was recreant to his trust and was not entitled to any consideration in a court of justice. But the foundation of appellant's claim is found in the testimony offered in his own behalf. It may be admitted that from the record his showing appears to be not destitute of persuasive force, but the apparently inculpatory circumstances are negatived by the denials and explanations of the plaintiff himself. As far as it was inconsistent with the evidence of appellant, the court undoubtedly accepted and acted upon the testimony of respondent, and we can do no less under the familiar rule. In view of the insistent assertions of appellant as to these important circumstances, we have been at pains to read carefully the entire transcript, and we find therein legal justification for the conclusion of the trial court that respondent acted in good faith in his dealings with appellant. We need not quote from the record, but we deem it sufficient to say that respondent testified that he knew of said option and told Quigley about it, but was informed that it called for $30 per acre; that he was told by Noyes that the land had never been offered for less; that he did not advise Noyes to insist upon a payment of $25,000 instead of $12,500; that he did submit to Noyes the various offers made by appellant; and that he did not know at any time while acting as the agent of appellant that the land could be bought for less than what it was purchased for. As to any effort made to sell the property to another party, he gave an explanation capable of reconciliation with an honest attitude toward appellant. He declared that Mr. Quigley said to him:

> "I may do business down here, but if you have any other prospect of selling that property and doing business with Mr. Noyes go ahead and do business."

Respondent testified that he had an arrangement with Mr. Quigley to that effect, and he did the best he could for him, but he had the privilege of disposing of the property elsewhere if the opportunity was offered. It seems that by agreement with Noyes the price for any other purchaser was $175,000, but the owner and respondent were anxious to favor appellant, and if a sale were made to him it would be for about $25,000 less. Respondent gives his reasons for believing that this scheme was in the interest of Quigley, and we cannot say that his conduct was inconsistent with good faith. He was, no doubt, anxious to obtain a commission, but in that respect he was probably like the average individual, and it cannot be said that he was not justified in what he did. Mr. Quigley was himself a real estate agent, and had, no doubt, a fellow feeling for the craft, and he was willing to give Mr. Brooks as much leeway as possible. Indeed, appellant seemed to rely entirely upon his own judgment as to the value of the land, he determined what he would pay for it, and his engagement was with Brooks that the latter would endeavor to secure it for him at that price, but with the privilege of selling it for more to another purchaser.

[2] It is contended with much learning that the theory of a trust upon which respondent relies is utterly untenable. The criticism begins with the complaint itself. After setting out the agreement between the parties, as we have hereinbefore stated, and the negotiations culminating in a sale, carried on by plaintiff with Mr. Noyes, the complaint proceeds:

> "And thereafter in accordance with said negotiations carried on on the part of plaintiff in accordance with said agreement a deed of grant, bargain, and sale was on or about the 5th day of December, 1913, executed by said Edward A. Noyes to said defendant, T. L. Quigley, granting and transferring to said Quigley the above-described lands and premises. Shortly before the execution and delivery of said deed, plaintiff learned that the deed was to be executed by said Noyes, and he requested and demanded of said defendant, Quigley, that in the execution of said deed plaintiff should be named as a grantee therein to the extent of an undivided one-sixth interest, and said defendant, Quigley, as grantee therein to the extent of the remaining five-sixths interest therein in accordance with said agreement as aforesaid; that, however, defendant, Quigley, refused to permit plaintiff to be named in said deed," etc.

It is declared that the complaint is thus inconsistent and self-destructive. The particular point is that in one breath plaintiff claims that the conveyance to Quigley was in accordance with the agreement between the parties, and in the next that it was in violation of said agreement. In other words, assuming that a trust existed, it is alleged both that it was and that it was not executed. We think, however, that this criticism involves rather a matter of uncertainty than of vital infirmity. Respondent admits that the complaint was hurriedly and somewhat carelessly drawn, and it is contended that what was meant is that the sale was secured through the efforts of plaintiff in accordance with the agreement of plaintiff and defendant, but that the deed was executed contrary to said agreement in the respect indicated. There was no special demurrer, and the case was tried upon the theory that the cause of action was properly set forth, and defendant certainly suffered no prejudice by reason of said defective phraseology.

Appellant, however, with more confidence, apparently, urges the objection that the evidence fails to disclose any trust at all that can be legally enforced. There is an interesting discussion in the brief of the various kinds of trusts that are recognized by the authorities, and special attention is devoted to the consideration of a resulting trust, of which respondent contends this is an example. Therein are recited the different conditions upon and according to which such a trust may arise, and it is claimed that only one of these conditions could possibly apply here, and that is "when a purchaser of an estate pays the purchase money or some portion thereof and takes the title in the name of a third person." But it is insisted that such is not the case here, for the reason that no part of the consideration of the conveyance passed from respondent to Noyes, the owner of the property. In support of the position certain authorities are cited, including Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, § 1037; Woodside v. Hewel, 109 Cal. 485, 42 Pac. 451; and Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. Occidental Oil Co., 144 Cal. 534, 78 Pac. 25. In the first it is said:

> "The fundamental idea of such a trust is that equity considers that the beneficial interest follows the consideration and attaches to the party from whom the consideration comes. But in order that this effect may be produced it is absolutely indispensable that the payment should be actually made by the beneficiary B. or that an absolute obligation to pay should be incurred by him as a part of the original transaction of purchase, at or before the time of the conveyance."

In the Woodside Case, supra, the doctrine is therein stated:

> "The resulting trust, not within the statute of frauds, and which may be shown without writing, is when the purchase is made with the proper moneys of the cestui que trust, and the deed not taken in his name. The trust results from the original transaction at the time it takes place, and at no other time, and it is founded on the actual payment of money, and on no other ground."

And in the Los Angeles Case, supra, it was declared:

> "Efforts as the promoter or agent of the parties, and the traveling and other expense he incurred in bringing about this transfer, cannot be held to perform even a part of the consideration for the * * * transfer."

It is therefore urged, in opposition to the claim that respondent's share of the consideration was his efforts in bringing about the conveyance, that, since no part of this passed to the grantor or furnished any part of the consideration for the conveyance, it cannot be regarded as sufficient to create a resulting trust. However, we are not greatly concerned with the definition of words or in what category the alleged trust falls, but the vital inquiry, of course, is whether there was evidence of the creation of a legal obligation on the part of appellant to convey said one-sixth interest to respondent.

The written correspondence between the parties would seem to answer this inquiry. We can see no reason why it may not be held that thereby what is known as an express trust was created within the purview of sections 852 and 857 of the Civil Code. Estate of Hinckley, 58 Cal. 457; Hellman v. McWilliams, 70 Cal. 449, 11 Pac. 659, and other decisions. In the Hinckley Case it was said:

> "The Code does not in terms declare the distinction between express and implied or resulting trusts. But section 857 declares that 'express trusts' in relation to real property may be created for certain purposes. Express trusts are put in opposition to those which are implied or resulting—the latter being such as exist 'by operation of law,' and the former such as are created or declared by instrument in writing."

It is true that, if the said letter of December 23d were the only writing in relation to the matter, it could hardly be held sufficiently definite and comprehensive to be enforced, but its deficiency was supplied in the other correspondence between the parties. There can be no mistake as to what was intended. Indeed, as we have seen, appellant on the witness stand admitted the agreement as claimed by respondent, but sought to justify his refusal to convey by reason of said misconduct.

[3] But, apart from the foregoing, the action may be upheld as one for specific performance. As to this appellant complains that there is no allegation in the complaint that the consideration was equitable and adequate. The issue, however, was tendered by the answer, evidence was received in relation to it, and it was found by the court in favor of plaintiff. It is immaterial, therefore, whether we regard the action as one for specific performance or to enforce a trust. In either event there is sufficient foundation for a judgment in favor of plaintiff.

[4] But, regarded in either aspect, the particular judgment rendered, in our opinion, was not warranted by the facts. If a trust existed, it reached the whole tract, and fastened itself upon every portion of it. It was a trust to convey an undivided one-sixth interest in and to said land. It could not be executed by the conveyance of a larger proportion of a part of the land, at least without the consent of the defendant. The same would be true as to specific performance. Plaintiff must rely upon his contract for the conveyance of one-sixth of the entire estate. As to the part disposed of by appellant, respondent must rely upon a judgment for damages. This would not require, of course, a separate action, but can be included in the same complaint. The matter is treated at length in Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 22, 89 Am. Dec. 141, wherein is quoted with approval the following from Mr. Justice Lewis in Thompson's Appeal, 22 Pa. 17:

> "Whenever a trust fund has been wrongfully converted into another species of property, if its identity can be traced, it will be held, in its new form, liable to the rights of the cestui que trust. No change of its state and form can divest it of such trust. So long as it can be identified, either as the original property of the cestui que trust, or as the product of it, equity will follow it; and the right of reclamation attaches to it until detached by the superior equity of a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice. * * * But the right of pursuing it fails when the means of ascertainment fail."

In that case all the trust property was disposed of, but the principle is the same where only a part of it remains. Here 1,100 acres of the specific property covered by the trust is gone, "and nothing is left to the cestui que trust except a naked claim for damages generally, on account of the breach," as far as that particular tract is concerned.

In section 843 of Perry on Trusts it is said:

> "If the cestui que trust is unable to trace the trust fund into the hands of other persons or into the hands of third persons other than bona fide holders for value, or into other property in the hands of the trustee, or, if he elects not to do so, he may proceed against the trustee personally."

It may be said also, as before suggested, that if we regard the case as one for specific performance, to allow plaintiff to recover one-fourth of the residue of the property instead of one-sixth of the whole tract would be to make for the parties a contract that was never in their minds. Grey v. Tubbs, 43 Cal. 359; Magee v. McManus, 70 Cal. 553, 12 Pac. 451.

[5] Another consideration is worth mentioning. Under plaintiff's theory he was entitled to a deed of one-sixth of the real property subject to his proportion of the indebtedness. As we have seen, there was a cash payment and a note and mortgage given for the balance. The note called for the payment of $98,465.55, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. As to the principal, it was provided that $10,465.55 should be paid on or before 90 days from the date of the note, $10,000 on or before January 20, 1916, and the balance, to wit, the sum of $78,000, on or before January 1, 1921. According to the decree, plaintiff was awarded the fee and the use and possession of nearly one-fourth of the residue of the property without being required to make any payment until the first of January, 1921. He could thus enjoy the use of the property for nearly six years, and then abandon it without the payment of anything. That he was favored in this manner arises from the circumstance that appellant had sold a portion of it and been in the exclusive possession of the residue ever since the purchase. The judgment may not have been inequitable, but we are left to conjecture as to the extent of the damage done to plaintiff by his exclusion from the enjoyment of this portion of the property. We think there should be an accounting between the parties that it may be determined how much is due plaintiff for the said sale and how much for the use of the property, and a decree entered for the residue in accordance with the terms of the contract, if the court is still of the opinion that plaintiff should recover.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(33 Cal. App. 515)

KEENEY v. BANK OF ITALY. (Civ. 2020.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 25, 1917.)

1. Trusts 🔑1—Constructive Trusts—Separation of Interests.

A trust is created in judicial intendment whenever the legal and equitable interests in the property are separated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 1.]

2. Trusts 🔑356(1) — Rights of Owner—Following Funds.

The equitable owner of trust funds may follow them into the hands of all persons who acquire them with notice of the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 529–538.]

3. Trusts 🔑372(2) — Identification of Funds—Presumptions.

Where a trustee mingles trust funds with his own money, drawing upon the aggregate from time to time, it will be conclusively presumed against him and his creditors and persons claiming under him that the residue is attributable to the trust so far as necessary to keep the trust moneys intact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 601.]

4. Banks and Banking 🔑134(7) — Diversion of Funds—Application to Debts to Bank.

If a bank has notice of the equitable rights of a third person in funds of its depositor, it cannot apply such funds in satisfaction of the individual indebtedness of the depositor to it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. § 362.]

5. Banks and Banking 🔑130(1) — Trust Funds—Duties of Bank.

There is no duty cast upon a bank in paying out checks upon a trust fund to look to the disposition of the fund.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 319, 320, 322, 327.]

6. Banks and Banking 🔑130(1)—Deposits—Trust Funds—Constructive Notice.

Where a check deposited bore the indorsement "Pay to H. P. Platt, Agent, or order," it was sufficient to put the bank upon inquiry as to the rights of third parties in the money.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 319, 320, 322, 327.]

7. Banks and Banking 🔑130(1)—Deposits—Trust Funds—Constructive Notice.

Where a bank carried an account for "H. P. Platt, Trustee," it was under the duty of inquiring as to the rights of third persons in the fund composing the account before it could appropriate them in payment of a debt due it from such trustee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 319, 320, 322, 327.]

8. Banks and Banking 🔑130(1)—Deposits—Trust Funds—Constructive Notice.

The fact that such account was the only one kept by the depositor, and that he paid into it his individual funds, and used it as a personal account, does not overcome the constructive notice conveyed by its title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 319, 320, 322, 327.]

9. Estoppel 🔑72 — Equitable Estoppel—Innocent Party.

A bank having constructive notice that an account was impressed with a trust was not an innocent party, and could not invoke the doctrine that where one of two innocent parties must suffer he should suffer whose act contributed to the wrong.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. § 188.]

10. Banks and Banking 🔑130(1)—Diversion of Funds—Debts Due Bank.

Conceding that deposit of a check made payable to a depositor as agent and credited to a fund in his name as trustee constituted a sale of the check to the bank, that view of the transaction would not avoid the effect of constructive notice conveyed by the title of the account and the indorsement of the check.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 319, 320, 322, 327.]

11. Banks and Banking 🔑130(1)—Diversion of Funds—Debts Due Bank.

A bank which applied moneys deposited in a trust fund in payment of the individual indebtedness of the depositor to itself cannot avoid liability on the ground that the depositor acted for himself and not as agent, arguing therefrom that no trust was created in the fund.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 319, 320, 322, 327.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Marcel E. Cerf, Judge.

Action by Marie Adele Keeney against the Bank of Italy. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James A. Bacigalupi and Harry G. McKannay, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Orville C. Pratt, Jr., of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. Action to recover the amount of two checks aggregating $979.98. and interest, drawn upon the defendant, a banking corporation, by a depositor therein. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and defendant appeals.

The facts were agreed upon by the parties, and from their agreed statement we extract those following, which we think will sufficiently present the questions in dispute between the parties. H. P. Platt carried with the defendant an account under the designation "H. P. Platt, Trustee," which he used generally, depositing therein his own funds and any others he might receive as agent or trustee of other persons, and this practice was known to the defendant. On June 2, 1913, Platt deposited in said account a check for $4,680, being the proceeds of a sale of real estate in which the plaintiff and her assignor were interested and which Platt as their agent had sold. It was a cashier's check drawn upon the First National Bank of Berkeley to the order of A. C. Wyckoff, and was transferred by him to Platt with the following indorsement: "Pay to H. P. Platt, Agent, or order." Platt appended his own indorsement in corresponding terms, and the defendant duly collected the check and credited it to Platt's account. On the same day Platt drew the two checks upon which the action is based, and delivered them to the respective payees on June 5th and 6th in payment of their interests in the real property referred to, and on June 7th both were presented for payment, and payment refused upon the ground of "No funds"; the defendant having some time between June 2d and 7th appropriated, by virtue of its banker's lien, Platt's credit balance, then amounting to $1,968.66, in satisfaction or part payment of an indebtedness due from Platt to itself.

The main question in the case is whether under the facts as narrated the trial court's conclusion is correct, that the defendant bank was charged with notice of the equitable interest of plaintiff and her assignor in the funds derived from the check of $4,680 so deposited in said account of H. P. Platt, trustee.

[1-3] There can be no doubt that a trust is created in judicial intendment whenever the legal and equitable interests in property are separated. 2 Story's Eq. Jur. § 964; Mandeville v. Solomon, 33 Cal. at page 44. Under this principle it will not be controverted that the proceeds of the sale of the real estate in the hands of Platt as agent equitably belonged to his principals. It is equally well settled that the equitable owner of trust funds may follow them into the hands of all persons who acquire them with notice of the trust (Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17, 89 Am. Dec. 141; 3 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. § 1048); and that where a trustee has mingled trust funds with his individual moneys, drawing upon the aggregate from time to time, it will be conclusively presumed both against him and his creditors and persons claiming under him that the residue thereof is attributable to the trust so far as may be necessary to keep the trust moneys intact. Hallett's Case, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 696; Elizalde v. Elizalde, 137 Cal. at page 641, 66 Pac. 369, 70 Pac. 861.

[4] This brings us to the question of whether, both by the form of Platt's account (he being designated therein as trustee) and the form of the indorsement of the check to him as agent, the defendant is charged with constructive notice (it is admitted that it had no actual notice) of the equitable rights of the plaintiff and her assignor in the money derived from such check. If it had such notice it was not at liberty to apply it in satisfaction of the individual indebtedness of Platt. Miami Bank v. State (Ind. App.) 112 N. E. at page 43; Clemmer v. Bank, 157 Ill. 206, 41 N. E. 728; Globe Sav. Bank v. Nat. Bank of Commerce, 64 Neb. 413, 89 N. W. 1030; Nehawka Bank v. Ingersoll, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 617, 89 N. W. 618.

[5] It is not contended by respondent, nor could it well be in the light of the later decisions, that if the defendant had paid out to third parties the funds here in question upon checks regularly drawn upon the account, it could be held accountable for them, for under such a state of facts no duty is cast upon the bank to inquire into the purpose for which the funds are being used (U. S. Fid. & G. Co. v. First Nat. Bank of Monrovia, 18 Cal. App. 437, 123 Pac. 352; Interstate Nat. Bank v. Claxton, 97 Tex. 569, 80 S. W. 604, 65 L. R. A. 820, 104 Am. St. Rep. 885; Silsbee State Bank v. French Market Co., 103 Tex. 629, 132 S. W. 465, 34 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1207); but the cases draw a clear distinction between such payments and an appropriation by the depositary of the fund in payment of its own claim against the trustee or agent.

[6] As to the form of the indorsement, i. e., "Pay to H. P. Platt, Agent, or order," we are of the opinion that by the weight of authority it was sufficient to put the defendant upon inquiry as to the rights of third parties in the money represented by the check. In Third Nat. Bank v. Lange, 51 Md. 138, 144, 34 Am. Rep. 304, a note in favor of "W., Trustee," was held to give notice of a possible trust to parties dealing with it. In Gerard v. McCormick, 130 N. Y. 261, 29 N. E. 115, 14 L. R. A. 234, a check signed "———, Agent, Glass Bldgs.," was held sufficient to put the payee thereof on inquiry as to the equitable ownership of the fund drawn upon. In American Trust Co. v. Boone, 102 Ga. 202, 29 S. E. 182, 40 L. R. A. 250, 66 Am. St. Rep. 167, the proceeds of a check payable to "C. as administrator," and so indorsed by him, were deposited to his individual credit with the defendant bank and used to pay his individual debt to it. It was held that the bank had notice of the trust, and was liable to the beneficiaries thereof for the misappropriation of the trust funds through the joint act of itself and C. In Davis v. Henderson, 25 Miss. 549, 59 Am. Dec. 229, the drawer and indorser of a bill of exchange had signed it "H., Agent." The court there said:

> "These facts appearing upon the bill itself, if not conclusive evidence that the defendant was acting in a representative capacity, were at least sufficient to put a prudent man, taking the bill from the drawee, upon inquiry. * * * As ordinary diligence would have placed them in possession of the terms of the contract, it is but right that they should be charged with notice of the facts as proved."

In Bank of Hickory v. McPherson, 102 Miss. 852, 59 South. 934, it was held that a check payable to "H., Commissioner," on its face does not belong to H. individually. The court there said:

> "We rest this decision upon the naked language of the check itself. * * * It appears that the check was payable to H. as commissioner, which denoted to an ordinarily prudent person that H. was acting in some sort of fiduciary capacity, > * * * which information, if followed up, would have disclosed to the" defendant bank "the actual status of H. with reference to the money. * * * It was also perfectly manifest that, on the face of the paper, the money represented by the check did not belong to H."

See, also, U. S. Fid. & Guaranty Co. v. Adoue & Lobit, 104 Tex. 379, 137 S. W. 648, 138 S. W. 383, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 409, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 667; Cohnfeld v. Tanenbaum, 176 N. Y. 126, 68 N. E. 141, 98 Am. St. Rep. 653; Bischoff v. Yorkville Bank, 170 App. Div. 679, 156 N. Y. Supp. 563; Id., 218 N. Y. 106, 112 N. E. 759, L. R. A. 1916F, 1059; U. S. Fid. & Guaranty Co. v. Union Bank & T. Co., 228 Fed. 448, 143 C. C. A. 30.

[7] We think also that the form in which the account was carried, "H. P. Platt, Trustee," placed upon the defendant the duty of inquiring as to the rights of third persons in the funds composing the account before it could appropriate them in payment of a debt due to it from Platt. In Bundy v. Monticello, 84 Ind. 119, a bank deposit in the name of "W., Trustee," was considered, and the court held that the bank had constructive notice of the character of the funds in such deposit saying:

> "The word 'trustee' meant something. It was not merely descriptio personæ, but was a description of the fund deposited. It imported the existence of a trust, and was notice of the character of the fund."

In Central National Bank v. Connecticut Ins. Co., 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. Ed. 693, there was a bank account, standing in the name of "D., General Agent," and the court, while not placing its decision solely on the constructive notice to the bank afforded by those words, held that the designation of the account put the bank on inquiry as to the rights in the funds to the credit thereof of those for whom D. was agent. In Union Stockyards Nat. Bank v. Gillespie, 137 U. S. 411, 11 Sup. Ct. 118, 34 L. Ed. 724, it was held that a bank cannot take from a factor in payment of his own debt money which it either knows or should know belongs in equity to the factor's principal. To the same effect are Sayre v. Weil, 94 Ala. 466, 10 South. 546, 15 L. R. A. 544; Moore v. Hanscom, 101 Tex. 293, 106 S. W. 876, 108 S. W. 150; Silisbee State Bank v. French Market, 103 Tex. 629, 132 S. W. 465, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1207.

[8] The fact that this account designated "H. P. Platt, Trustee," was the only one kept by Platt with the bank, and that he paid into it his own personal funds and used it as a personal account would not, we think, overcome the constructive notice which its title conveyed to the bank of the rights therein of third persons. Such notice places upon the bank the duty to inquire whether there existed any such rights; and such inquiry, if made, would probably have resulted in defendant gaining actual notice of the rights of respondent and her assignor, for there is nothing in the evidence to warrant the presumption that Platt would have concealed the true state of affairs.

[9] Nor is this a case, as argued by the appellant, where there are two innocent parties, one or the other of whom must suffer through the wrongful act of a third. Platt did nothing wrongful when he deposited the trust funds in the way and to the credit of the account which he did; and in the next place the bank is not an innocent party if it had constructive notice of the rights of third persons in the fund. We are of the opinion also that the addition of the word "trustee" to the name of the account is not to be regarded in the same light as the addition of that word to the name of a person in a certificate of mining stock. The cases cited by the appellant, viz. Brewster v. Sime, 42 Cal. 139, and Thompson v. Toland, 48 Cal. 99, holding that the addition of the word "trustee" to the holder's name in such a certificate gives no notice of the rights of third parties therein, we believe to be inapplicable to a case like the present, for the reason that in those cases the court took judicial notice without pleading or proof that the word "trustee" on a certificate of mining stock was meaningless as a result of universal custom. We know of no reason for holding that the use of the word "trustee" in connection with the name of a bank account has become for a similar reason devoid of meaning.

[10] It is strenuously urged by the appellant that the check under consideration being a negotiable instrument, its transfer to the defendant, and the crediting by the latter of its amount to Platt's account, constituted in effect a sale of the check to the defendant for a valuable consideration. Without assenting to this proposition in view of the well-known custom of the banks of San Francisco (the place of business of the defendant) of receiving customers' checks "for collection only," even this view of the transaction would not avoid the effect of the constructive notice to the bank given by the form of the check; for its proceeds when placed to the credit of Platt's account equitably belonged to his principals, of which the defendant had the same notice as of their rights in the check itself. If the defendant had paid Platt the amount of the check in money over the counter instead of placing it to his credit, and Platt had deposited the cash instead of the check, it might be difficult, perhaps impossible, to follow the fund; but, as we have seen, this is not the form that the transaction took, and we think the analogy attempted to be set up by appellant does not hold.

[11] It is also argued very earnestly by appellant that there was no relation of trust even between the plaintiff and Platt himself, the contention being made that Platt was merely the debtor of his principals in the transaction relating to the sale of real estate made by him for their account. In support of this the language of the late Chief Justice Beatty, in dissenting from an order denying a petition for transfer in the case of People v. Cal., etc., Trust Co., 23 Cal. App. 210, 137 Pac. 1111, 1115, is quoted to the effect that:

> "When an agent is accounting to his principal and paying over the balance due his principal he is not acting in the character of agent, but in that of a debtor paying his creditor."

The correctness of this statement by Chief Justice Beatty is obvious, for when an agent, by reason of transactions entered into on behalf of a principal—as, for instance, receiving money for his account—becomes indebted to him, and proceeds to make a settlement, any action taken in making such settlement is taken by the agent in his own behalf. It could hardly be said that it was in behalf of the principal, for if so we would have the principal through his agent paying money to himself. But this view of the matter does not help the appellant, for so long as Platt, the agent of the plaintiff, retained the proceeds of the sale it was the money of his principals and not his own.

This disposes of the points requiring detailed discussion; and for the reasons given we are of the opinion that the trial court was correct in holding that the defendant was charged with notice of the plaintiff's rights in the money applied by the defendant in reduction of Platt's individual indebtedness and in rendering judgment in her favor.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; RICHARDS, J.

(33 Cal. App. 496)

HOUGHTON v. KERN VALLEY BANK et al. (NG HON KIM, Intervener). (Civ. 1665.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 21, 1917.)

TAXATION 🔑421(3)—ASSESSMENT—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

An assessment, on which tax title is claimed, of property as lots 1, 2, and 3, in block 132, town of B., though made in 1896, and though there was but one block 132 in the town, is insufficient to identify the lots; two maps dividing the block into north and south lots having been filed in 1875 and 1888, and one dividing it into east and west lots having been filed in 1889, and there being no testimony of which was the official map, or which was in use at the time the assessment was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 722, 723.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by R. E. Houghton against the Kern Valley Bank and others; Ng Hon Kim intervening. From adverse judgment and order, plaintiff and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Nancy Ella Houghton, in pro. per. Octave G. Du Py, of San Francisco, Rowen Irwin, of Bakersfield, C. Brower, J. W. P. Laird, of Bakersfield, Olney & Olney, of San Francisco, W. S. Allen, of Los Angeles, Fred E. Borton, of Bakersfield, and Emmet H. Wilson and G. C. De Garmo, both of Los Angeles, for other appellants. Charles N. Sears, of Bakersfield, for respondent Ng Hon Kim.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The action originally was in partition and involved numerous different lots of land owned by many different persons. Respondent, Ng Hon Kim, filed a complaint in intervention in the nature of an action to quiet title, alleging ownership in fee of certain three of the lots situated in the city of Bakersfield, Kern county. Intervener had judgment in his favor from which plaintiff and defendants appealed to the Supreme Court.

The judgment and order denying motion for a new trial in favor of intervener were reversed. 157 Cal. 289, 107 Pac. 113. The complaint described the property as lots 1, 2, and 3, block 132, in the Baker homestead tract, according to the map of said tract filed in the office of the county recorder of Kern county, state of California, on the 3d day of April, 1889. Intervener claimed title under delinquent tax sales. The complaint in intervention described the property as "lots 1, 2, and 3 in block 132, situate in the city of Bakersfield, county of Kern, state of California," but made no reference to any map. We quote from the opinion:

> "No map showing the location of any lots or blocks was introduced in evidence. Under the decisions of this court there seems to be no escape from the conclusion that the assessment is prima facie invalid."

The assessment book was offered in evidence and, under the heading "Description of Property," showed entries as follows: "In the town of Bakersfield, lots 1, 2, 3," and under the heading "Block" the figures "132" appeared. The theory upon which the decision proceeded was:

> "That a description of this kind is of such a nature as to indicate that the property can ordinarily be located only by reference to some map or plat, and no such map or plat being referred to as being in existence, the description is prima facie insufficient. There is no presumption, in the absence of such a reference, that there is such a map in existence."

In remanding the case the court said:

> "Upon a new trial it will, of course, be competent for the intervener to offer evidence for the purpose of showing that the description was sufficient. To this end he may show, if it be the fact, that there was of record at the time of the assessment a map by the aid of which the description of the lots in question would serve to fully and completely identify and locate them."

At the second trial the evidence submitted at the former trial was introduced by stipulation, and is in the transcript on page 31 down to the middle of page 66, at which point the transcript shows as follows:

> "Thereupon the trial proceeded and the intervener offered in evidence a map entitled Map of the 'Baker Homestead Tract,' which was indorsed: 'Filed in the office of the County Recorder of Kern County, Cal., this 3d day of April, 1889, N. R. Packard, County Recorder,' and the same was admitted in evidence."

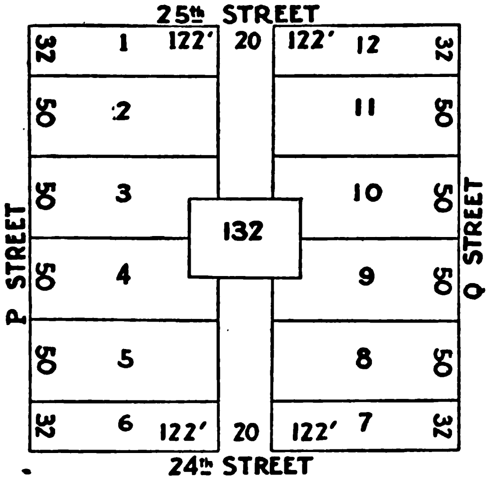
The plaintiff and defendants thereupon, "with a view of showing that there were two maps of block 132 in Bakersfield, and that the lots in the blocks were not described in the same manner, nor did they cover the same land, and with a view of showing that there existed an uncertainty in the description of the land that was carried into the assessment, offered in evidence two maps of Bakersfield." The transcript is as follows:

"Thereupon the plaintiff and defendants offered in evidence a map entitled 'Map of Bakersfield, Kern County, Cal.,' and indorsed, 'Filed in the office of the Recorder of Kern County, Cal., August 17th, 1875, F. W. Craig, Recorder,' and the same was admitted in evidence.

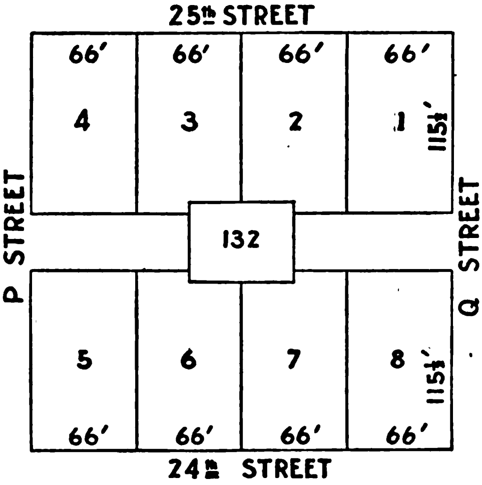
"The plaintiff and defendants also offered in evidence a map entitled 'Map of Bakersfield and Sumner, Kern County, California,' and indorsed, 'Filed in the office of the County Recorder of Kern County, June 5th, A. D. 1888, N. R. Packard, County Recorder,' and the same was admitted in evidence."

These maps were by stipulation omitted from the transcript with an understanding that either party might, if necessary, produce them for inspection by the reviewing court. Appellants have presented in their opening brief, at page 13, a diagram which shows without controversy the situation of the lots in question on the three different maps, as follows:

Block 132, Bakersfield, showing division into lots as delineated on map offered in evidence by the intervener, respondent herein, entitled "Map of Baker Homestead Tract, Bakersfield," filed in the office of the county recorder, Kern county, Cal., this 3d day of April, 1889. N. R. Packard, County Recorder.



Block 132, Bakersfield, showing division into lots as delineated on the two maps offered in evidence by the plaintiff and defendants, appellants herein, entitled Map of Bakersfield, Kern county, Cal.—the first being indorsed, "Filed in the office of county recorder of Kern county, Cal., August 17, 1875. F. W. Craig, Recorder;" the second map being indorsed, "Filed in the office of Kern County Recorder, June 5, 1888. N. R. Packard, County Recorder."



An inspection of these maps will show that block 132 is the same size in all three of them—264 feet square; that, on the map of Baker homestead tract block 132 is divided in 12 lots fronting east and west on P and Q streets with an alley between of 20 feet in width; that lots 1, 2, and 3 front on P street with a depth of 122 feet and, with half of the alley, would make one-fourth of the block in the northwest corner. The other maps show that the block is surrounded by the same streets, but that the lots front north and south on Twenty-Fourth and Twenty-Fifth streets and the block is divided into eight lots. Lots 1, 2, and 3 on those maps have a uniform width frontage of 66 feet and a depth of 115½ feet, which would be three-eighths of the block, less half of an alley, and are in the northeast corner of the block and have a frontage of 198 feet on Twenty-Fifth and 115½ on Q street. On the face of the maps it would seem impossible to identify the lots in question.

There was but little oral testimony, which we give in its entirety, as follows:

"Mr. Sears: What is your name? A. J. M. Jameson. Q. What office, if any, do you hold in this county? A. County assessor. Q. How long have you been assessor of this county? A. Since 1899. Q. You have the supervision over the assessment of property in this county? A. Yes, sir. Q. I will ask you if you know anything as to this map, August 17, 1875? A. Well, I have seen it before. Q. Will you observe lot 132 upon this map? A. Yes, sir. Q. Now I will show you another map here sought to be offered in evidence by the plaintiff which shows to have been filed in the recorder's office on the 5th day of June, 1888. Have you ever seen that map? A. I think so. Q. Known as Bakersfield and Sumner. A. I think I have. Q. Will you observe as to block 132 upon that map of Bakersfield. Now, in making your assessments, do you know as to whether or not these maps are in use, or whether or not they have been abandoned in making the assessment of property in this city, and in this county? A. Well, it would take a comparison of a map I think to tell that. In making my assessment, I have always gone by the official map at the time the assessment was made and I could not say as to that. Q. In making your assessments in this case, and involving the property involved in this case, being lots 1, 2, and 3, block 132, the assessment shows that the same was assessed at that time, at the time of the assessment as shown in this case, to the city of Bakersfield. I will ask you as to whether or not at the time of the date of those maps there, there was any city of Bakersfield? A. How is that? Q. Whether there was any city of Bakersfield, known as the city of Bakersfield. A. It was not incorporated—that is, I don't know—there was an old incorporation a good many years ago; I don't know anything about that, but my memory is that there was an old incorporation a good many years ago, which fell through with; but the later incorporation came later.

"Mr. Houghton: Of which the record is the best evidence of when the city was incorporated, disincorporated and reincorporated.

"The Court: That is true.

"Mr. Sears: The maps themselves merely show 'Bakersfield' and 'Bakersfield and Sumner,' while the assessment says 'lots 1, 2, and 3 in block 132, in the city of Bakersfield.' Q. Now, what has been your custom and procedure in making assessments in this city as to the descriptions as in this case, for instance, in property in the city of Bakersfield?

"Mr. Houghton: We object to it as incompetent what the custom has been, the question is what has been done in this case.

"Mr. Sears: I think I said 'in this case.'

"Mr. Houghton: The record speaks for itself as to what has been done in regard to the assessments.

"The Court: He can tell how he made this assessment if you want him to. A man might have a custom and it might be wrong, and they would not be bound by it.

"Mr. Sears: The language in this case is 'evidence showing the system of assessment.'

"The Court: You can show that.

"Mr. Sears: What has been the system of assessments of property in this city? A. What do you mean, in descriptions, in describing? Q. Yes, as in this case, the property is situated in the city of Bakersfield? A. I describe it by lots and blocks. Q. Have you found that that has been generally sufficient so that parties may identify the property?

"Mr. Houghton: Object to it as irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial.

"The Court: The objection is sustained.

"Mr. Sears: Note an exception. Q. Now, in making the assessments in this case, as 'lots 1, 2, and 3, in block 132,' if there were another map covering the same, what do you do? A. Another map covering the same property? Q. The same block for instance. A. You mean if there was a duplicate block 132 in the city of Bakersfield? Q. Yes, sir. A. If there was a duplicate block in the city of Bakersfield, it would be necessary to designate it, in my opinion, as of a certain tract. Q. Now, in assessing the property here described as 'lots 1, 2, and 3, in block 132,' and it appeared that that was part of the Baker homestead tract, has it been the general system of assessing property then, as lots 1, 2, and 3, in block 132 of the Baker homestead tract? A. No, because there is only one 132 in the city of Bakersfield. I think a few instances where people took the pains to write in 'Baker homestead tract' in giving the statement in that that description would probably be carried into the roll from the statement, but in an instance where a person gave in lots 3 and 4 or any other lots in block 132, the description of 'block 132' I considered sufficient for the description of the property, because there is only one block 132 in the city of Bakersfield. Q. There is at this time only one block 132 in the city of Bakersfield, and that is in the Baker homestead tract? A. Yes, sir.

"Mr. Sears: Take the witness.

"Mr. Houghton: That is all."

The assessment book of the property showed as follows:

"Unknown Owners—In Town of Bakersfield—Lots one, two, three, block 132, value $115.00. Total tax, $1.90. School tax, 29 cents."

In all the instruments relating to the assessment and in all subsequent conveyances this description is followed and in none of them is there any reference to a map. It thus appears that there were, at the time these lots were assessed, three maps of record of the town of Bakersfield—one entitled "Baker Homestead Tract," one entitled "Map of Bakersfield," and one entitled "Bakersfield and Sumner," both of the latter having been filed before the first one above mentioned. The most than can be said of the testimony of the assessor is that in the assessment he described the property by "lots and blocks"; that it has not been the general system of assessing these lots as of the Baker homestead tract, "because," as the assessor stated, "there is only one 132 in the city of Bakersfield." He testified, "I think in a few instances where people took the pains to write in 'Baker homestead tract' in giving the statement" that description would probably be carried into the roll, but where a person gave in "lots in block 132 the description of 'block 132' I considered sufficient for the description of the property, because there is only one block 132 in the city of Bakersfield. Q. There is at this time only one block 132 in the city of Bakersfield, and that is the Baker homestead tract? A. Yes, sir." It is not disputed that these three maps relate to the same lots and block and the assessor expressed the opinion that "if there was a duplicate block in the city of Bakersfield, it would be necessary to designate it as of a certain tract." The witness testified, "In making my assessment, I have always gone by the official map at the time the assessment was made," but he could not say whether the maps of 1875 and 1888 were in use when he made his assessment and he did not state which map was the official map. When the case was remanded it went back with the statement that intervener "may show, if it be the fact, that there was of record at the time of the assessment (the assessment was made in 1896) a map by the aid of which the description of the lots in question would serve to fully and completely identify and locate them."

In the case of Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 560, 89 Pac. 352, a case cited with approval by the court when the present case was decided, the question of the sufficiency of the description was involved where a party was claiming under a tax title. In discussing the use of a map for identification of the property, the court said:

"It was, however, permissible to show, in aid of this description, that it was in fact sufficient to identify the land, and, in this behalf, to show the recorded map of such Pellissier tract, designating with certainty the property referred to in the assessment. If by such evidence it was made to appear that there was such a recorded map, and only one such map, or, if more than one, no difference therein so far as the assessed property was concerned, the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conclusion that the assessment sufficiently identified the property. The trial court had the right to assume, in the absence of a showing to the contrary by the person assailing the description, that there was but one Pellissier tract in the county of Los Angeles, and that this tract and the extent of its boundaries were well known by that name. People v. Leet, 23 Cal. 161."

The court then quoted from Best v. Wohlford, 144 Cal. 733, 78 Pac. 293, as follows:

"Parol evidence will not be admitted to help out a defective description, or to show the intention with which it was made, or to resolve an ambiguity in its terms. * * * If reference is made to a map, the map thereby becomes a part of the description, and may be read in evidence to identify the land, by showing that it is delineated thereon according to the recital; and although it is not competent to show that any particular map was intended, if none is referred to, yet if it can be shown that there is only one map of a tract which includes the lot in controversy, upon which this lot is delineated or designated, and that that map is well known and generally accepted as authentic, it may be received in evidence as tending to identify the land before the court."

See Furrey v. Lautz, 162 Cal. 397, 122 Pac. 1073; Campbell v. Shafer, 162 Cal. 207, 121 Pac. 737; McLauchlan v. Bonynge, 15 Cal. App. 240, 114 Pac. 798.

There was no evidence that these lots were assessed in accordance with any existing system of numbering lots and blocks as shown by but one map, nor is there evidence that the lots delineated on all the maps introduced are the same and embrace the same land. The maps, in our opinion, add to the uncertainty of the description in the assessment rather than "to fully and completely identify and locate them." Bearing in mind that there is but one block 132 in the city of Bakersfield and that all three of these maps refer to that and no other block, it is plain enough that lots 1, 2, and 3 as delineated on the 1889 map are in a different part of the block and do not embrace all the land referred to by lots 1, 2, and 3 in the other maps. "The purposes to be subserved by the description," said the court, in Best v. Wohlford, supra, "are to enable the owner to discharge his land from the lien of the assessment by paying the same; and also, in case the land shall be sold to satisfy the lien, that bidders may know what land is offered for sale, and that the purchaser may receive a sufficient conveyance. The assessment becomes a lien only upon the land which is described in the assessment book, and it is therefore essential that such description be sufficiently definite to inform the owner whether any of his land is burdened by the lien. The description must be such that the land claimed by virtue of the deed can be identified or located upon the ground by means thereof."

The judgment rested upon the finding of the trial court "that the said property was duly assessed by the county assessor of Kern county, in the year 1896, for the year 1896." This finding is challenged on the ground "that the description of the land in said assessment was not sufficient, and on account of the want of such description the assessment was void." We think that this finding is not sustained by the evidence.

The judgment and order are therefore reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

(13 Okl. Cr. 734)

LEVY v. STATE. (No. A-2384.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. May 26, 1917.)

Appeal from County Court, Logan County; J. C. Strang, Judge.

Paul Levy was convicted of gaming and appeals. Affirmed.

E. I. Sadler, of Guthrie, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PER CURIAM. Paul Levy was convicted in the county court of Logan county on a charge of conducting a game of chance played with dice, and his punishment fixed at a fine of $100 and imprisonment in the county jail for a period of 30 days.

An examination of the record discloses no error sufficient to warrant a reversal of the judgment of the trial court. It is therefore affirmed.

(13 Okl. Cr. 457)

Ex parte MONROE. (No. A-3022.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. May 29, 1917.)

Habeas corpus by T. J. Monroe against W. B. Nichols, Chief of Police of Oklahoma City. Writ denied.

J. T. Michael, of Oklahoma City, for petitioner. Frank Watson, of Oklahoma City, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. On this day a petition for writ of habeas corpus on behalf of T. J. Monroe was filed in this court, averring in substance that petitioner is unlawfully restrained of his liberty and illegally imprisoned in the city jail of Oklahoma City by W. B. Nichols, chief of police of said city.

It appearing that said petitioner is held in custody under and by virtue of a commitment issued by the municipal judge of said city, in pursuance of the judgment and sentence of said court, wherein said petitioner was adjudged guilty upon a charge of vagrancy and was sentenced to pay a fine of $19 and $1 costs, the writ of habeas corpus will be denied.

(13 Okl. Cr. 735)

MORRIS v. STATE. (No. A-2459.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. May 26, 1917.)

Appeal from County Court, Beaver County; John A. Spohn, Judge.

Walter Morris was convicted of petty larceny, and appeals. Affirmed.

R. H. Loofbourrow, of Beaver, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff in error, Walter Morris, was convicted at the March, 1915, term of the county court of Beaver county on a charge of petty larceny and his punishment fixed at a fine of $10.

Upon a careful examination of the record, we find no error sufficient to warrant a reversal of the judgment. It is therefore affirmed.

(13 Okl. Cr. 735)

TRAMMELL v. STATE. (No. A-2481.)*

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. May 26, 1917.)

Appeal from County Court, Kiowa County; J. S. Carpenter, Judge.

Tom Trammell was convicted of violating the prohibitory law, and appeals. Affirmed.

O. J. Logan, of Hobart, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff in error, Tom Trammell, was convicted at the April, 1915, term of the county court of Kiowa county, charged with having unlawful possession of intoxicating liquor with intent to sell the same, and his punishment fixed at a fine of $50 and imprisonment in the county jail for 30 days.

A careful examination of the briefs and record in this case discloses no error which would justify a reversal of the judgment. It is therefore affirmed.

(13 Okl. Cr. 522)

ALLEN et al. v. HUSTON, District Judge. (No. A-2580.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 14, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

COURTS 🔑207(4)—MANDAMUS—JURISDICTION OF CRIMINAL COURT OF APPEALS—ACTS OF INFERIOR COURT.

The Criminal Court of Appeals has jurisdiction to issue the writ of mandamus directed to an inferior court, in the exercise or in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, when the same is a proper proceeding in a criminal case.

Mandamus by Minnie Allen against A. H. Huston, Judge of the Eleventh Judicial District, sitting as Judge of the District Court in and for the County of Payne and State of Oklahoma. Writ allowed.

J. M. Springer and Robert A. Lowry, both of Stillwater, for petitioner. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DOYLE, P. J. This was a petition for writ of mandamus to the Honorable A. H. Huston, judge of the Eleventh judicial district, sitting as judge of the district court of Payne county, to command him to correct the record in a certain case wherein the petitioner had been convicted of manslaughter in the first degree, and was sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for the term of eight years.

The petition alleges that after the jury had retired to deliberate upon their verdict, the presiding judge left the county of Payne, and that he had refused to correct the record to show such absence. The material allegations of said petition are as follows:

> "That thereafter, and while said jury were yet in charge of said bailiff and were deliberating of their verdict and before said jury had agreed or returned a verdict into court and at 8:14 o'clock a. m. on the morning of October 16, 1915, the said Hon. A. H. Huston, judge of said district court, left the city of Stillwater, which said city is the county seat of Payne county, state of Oklahoma, and the place provided by law in and where the district court in and for said Payne county must be held and traveled, by passenger train upon the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway from said city of Stillwater to the city of Guthrie, in the county of Logan and state of Oklahoma, and that said Hon. A. H. Huston so absented himself from said city of Stillwater.
>
> "That about 9:30 o'clock a. m. on the said 16th day of October, 1915, the jury in said cause finally agreed upon a verdict and in charge of the bailiff was brought into the district court room in the city of Stillwater, county of Payne, state of Oklahoma. That at said time the said judge of the district court had passed without the county of Payne and was at some point in the county of Logan and state of Oklahoma, on his said passage to the city of Guthrie.
>
> "That at the adjournment of court on the evening of the 15th day of October, 1915, it was agreed in open court between the attorneys for the plaintiff and the county attorney and in the presence of said district judge that in the event said jury should not agree before the departure of said district judge for Guthrie the next morning that one Robt. A. Lowry, an attorney of said Payne county bar, should act as special judge, and should receive said verdict, approve the same, and cause the clerk to read and enter the same of record.
>
> "That no affidavit of disqualification was filed and no certificate of disqualification was filed by said district judge, and that said agreement was the oral agreement made by said persons and said parties in said court. That by reason of the fact that no affidavit of disqualification had been filed or no certificate of disqualification had been filed by said district judge and for the reason that the said Robt. A. Lowry was of the opinion that he had no authority upon the record in said cause to act as such district judge, said Robt. A. Lowry refused to accept such appointment or to so act, and so notified the said district judge before his departure from Stillwater on the morning of the 16th day of October, 1915.

---

*Rehearing denied September 25, 1917.

"That it was thereupon proposed by said district judge that if the said county attorney and this plaintiff and her attorneys should agree and in the event said jury returned a verdict, the said Robt. A. Lowry should receive said verdict, approve the same and direct the clerk of said court to read and record said verdict and take such further proceedings as said district judge might have done, if personally present, and that the record in said cause should be made to state and recite the presence of said Hon. A. H. Huston, judge of the said district court, and that all proceedings so had and done by said Robt. A. Lowry were in fact had and done in open court before said Hon. A. H. Huston, as judge of said district court and by him and in his presence.

"That after said jury had agreed upon a verdict in said cause and had been produced at said courthouse by the bailiff having them in charge, the said Robt. A. Lowry stated to the said county attorney and to the attorneys for this plaintiff the proposition so made by said district judge, and thereupon the said county attorney and the attorneys for this plaintiff agreed that the said Robt. A. Lowry should proceed in accordance with such agreement, and that the record in said district court should be made in all respects as though said proceedings were had and done by the said district judge then present and presiding, but that said agreement was not made in open court, nor was said agreement made in the presence of said district judge, nor was said agreement made while said district judge was in the county of Payne, state of Oklahoma, and that such agreement was in fact an agreement only between the county attorney of said Payne county and the attorneys for the plaintiff herein, made out of court and conveyed no judicial authority or power whatever upon the said Robt. A. Lowry, and did not in law authorize the making and entering into the records of said district court of Payne county of the trial record falsely showing the presence of said district judge, and that proceedings were had and done by him.

"That thereafter and at a time after said district judge had passed beyond the boundaries of Payne county, the said Robt. A. Lowry, so acting upon the agreement hereinbefore set forth, caused the sheriff to make a proclamation that said district court was convened and inquired of said jury, if they had agreed upon a verdict and upon said jury answering that they had, he caused said verdict to be passed to him, and, having examined said verdict, passed said verdict to the clerk of said court and directed said clerk to read and record said verdict, and thereupon inquired of counsel for plaintiff herein if they desired said jury be polled, and thereupon at their request he polled said jury, and each of said jurymen having separately answered that he was satisfied with said verdict, informed said jury that by order of the said district judge they were excused until the reconvening of said district court at 9 o'clock a. m. on the 18th day of October, 1915, and thereupon said jury separated and returned to their homes at various points in said county of Payne, and have not since said time reconvened or appeared in said court as a jury body in said cause against this defendant.

"That said persons so appearing as a jury in said cause produced a paper writing, which was a pretended verdict against this plaintiff finding her guilty of the charge of manslaughter in the first degree, and fixing her punishment as imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of eight years.

"That the records of said district court were on said 16th day of October, 1915, falsely made to show the presence of said district judge during all proceedings had and done in said cause on said date, and that said records wholly fail to show and now fail to show that said proceedings in fact were had and done by a substitute for said district judge, and that said district judge was absent from said court during said entire day.

"That thereafter, on the 18th day of October, 1915, because of the premises hereinbefore set forth and in order that the records of the district court in said cause might show the truth, and for the purpose of protecting the plaintiff in her rights to her day in court, and for the purpose of causing said record to show the facts and the truth in order that she might present her motion for a new trial in said cause and might thereafter appeal said cause to the appellate court, and in order that she might present the full facts and truth in said cause to the proper court upon a petition of habeas corpus, the plaintiff herein filed in said court and in said cause her motion for an order requiring the clerk to cause the record in said cause to show the truth and the facts as to all proceedings had and done in said cause or purporting to have been had and done in said cause on said 16th day of October, 1915, a true, correct, and certified copy of which motion, together with the affidavits made a part thereof and presented therewith is hereto attached, marked Exhibit C, and made hereof a part.

"That thereafter and on the 19th day of October, 1915, and on a regular judicial day of said court, her said motion came duly on to be heard, and the court, having heard and considered the same, overruled plaintiff's said motion, to which the plaintiff at the time duly excepted. That a true, correct, and certified copy of the record and the journal entry of the overruling of said motion is hereto attached, marked Exhibit D, and made hereof a part. That thereafter, and upon the same day, plaintiff being desirous of preserving in the record of said cause all of the matters and things hereinbefore set forth and complained of, and in order that she might either upon habeas corpus or upon an appeal to the Criminal Court of Appeals present from the record in said cause the actual facts and the truth as to all proceedings had and done, or pretended to have been had or done in said cause preceding her sentence to the penitentiary therein filed with the clerk of said court and presented to said court her application and motion for the settling and allowance by said court of her bill of exceptions in said cause, a true correct, and certified copy of which bill of exceptions is hereto attached, marked Exhibit E, and made hereof a part.

"That thereafter and upon the same day plaintiff's motion for the settling and allowance of her said bill of exceptions came on before said court for hearing, and the court, having heard and considered the same, overruled plaintiff's application and motion, and refused to either consider, correct, settle, or sign any bill of exceptions whatever for plaintiff in said cause. That proceedings were had and done by said court upon said motion as shown by a true, correct, and certified copy of the journal entry of record in said cause hereto attached, marked Exhibit E, and made hereof a part.

"That plaintiff herein has exhausted all of her remedies in said district court of Payne county, Okl., and that she has no speedy or adequate remedy or relief at law, and that plaintiff herein is entitled as a matter of right to have her said bill of exceptions considered, settled, allowed, and signed in order that she may preserve the error of the said district judge of Payne county, Okl., in the record, and may prepare an appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeals for the purpose of testing the illegality of her present custody and confinement.

"That plaintiff herein further states that she is now in the custody of the sheriff of Payne county, Okl., and being confined in the county jail at Pawnee, in Pawnee county, Okl., under a pretended sentence in said cause of State of Oklahoma v. Minnie Allen et al., rendered and entered in said district court of Payne county, Okl., on the 19th day of October, 1915. That she is unable to give a bond in the sum of $8,000 and unable to fully perfect her appeal in said cause or to present to this said court her petition in habeas corpus until said A. H. Huston, as judge of said district court, shall have acted upon her said bill of exceptions.

"That plaintiff herein further states that on the presentation of said bill of exceptions, under the requirements of the statute of the state of Oklahoma, it became and was the duty of said district judge to fully and fairly consider said bill of exceptions, together with all the evidence thereto attached and made a part thereof, and if he found said bill of exceptions to be true and correct to sign the same and cause the same to be made a part of the record in said cause, and if he found said bill of exceptions in any respect to be incorrect, to correct said bill of exceptions so that the same should show the truth of and concerning all matters therein alleged, and to so settle said bill of exceptions and sign the same and cause the same to be made a part of the record in said cause. That the plaintiff's motion hereinbefore set forth to cause said record to be corrected so as to show the facts is not a part of the record proper in a criminal procedure, and the error of said district judge in overruling the same cannot be presented to the Appellate Court upon a transcript, and that the plaintiff herein desires on her appeal to present her cause to said Appellate Court upon a transcript of the proceedings had and done therein without being compelled to go to the expense of making up a case-made therein.

"Wherefore the plaintiff herein, Minnie Allen, moves the court for a peremptory writ of mandamus requiring said Hon. A. H. Huston, as judge of the Eleventh judicial district, sitting as judge of the district court in and for the county of Payne, state of Oklahoma, in said district to consider the said bill of exceptions heretofore filed and presented by her in the case of State of Oklahoma v. Minnie Allen et al., pending in the district court of Payne county, state of Oklahoma, and if it appear to him therefrom that the allegations contained in said bill of exceptions are true and correct upon the affidavits and evidence, to sign said bill of exceptions as a true and correct bill of exceptions and cause the same to be made a part of her record in said cause, and, if he find said bill of exceptions untrue or incorrect in any matter or thing therein recited, to correct said bill of exceptions so that the same shall show the truth and the facts as to matters and things therein set forth and to so settle and sign said bill of exceptions and cause the same to be made a part of the record in said cause, or, if this honorable court shall hold that plaintiff is not entitled to a peremptory writ of mandamus, that an alternative writ of mandamus issue, and that the said defendant be cited to appear before this honorable court at the time to be by it fixed and show cause why such writ of mandamus should not be issued and enforced against him."

An alternative writ of mandamus issued, to which the following return was duly made:

"Comes now A. H. Huston, defendant above named, and makes return upon the alternative writ of mandamus issued by the Hon. Thos. H. Doyle, presiding judge of the said Criminal Court of Appeals in the above-entitled cause on the 17th day of November, A. D. 1915, and states: That he has complied with the order of said court and writ, and has on this date signed a bill of exceptions in accordance with the facts, a true and correct copy of which is hereto attached and made a part of this return:

"Be it remembered, that the trial of the above-entitled cause was commenced in the above-entitled court before the Hon. A. H. Huston, district judge of the Eleventh judicial district of the state of Oklahoma, in and for Payne county, on the 14th day of October, 1915. That thereafter on the 15th day of October, 1915, the evidence, instructions, and argument of counsel in said cause was duly completed and said cause submitted to the jury, and the jury retired in charge of a sworn bailiff to deliberate upon their verdict, and the court thereupon recessed pending the return by said jury of said verdict.

"Be it remembered, that at the time of the adjournment of said court on said 15th day of October, 1915, and during the night following and the next morning, the said honorable district judge was ill, infirm, and sick, and that by reason of such infirmity it became necessary for the said honorable district judge to return to his home at Guthrie, on the morning train on Saturday, the 16th day of October, 1915, which train left the depot at Stillwater on said date at 8:18 a. m.

"Be it further remembered that on the evening of Friday, the 15th day of October, A. D. 1915, and in view of such illness, it was agreed between A. W. Turner, county attorney, of Payne county, and the attorneys for the above-named defendant in said cause, that in the event it became necessary for the said honorable district judge to return to Guthrie on the morning train on October 16, 1915, and in event the jury in said cause at said time had not yet agreed and returned a verdict, that Robert A. Lowry, an attorney at the bar of Payne county, should act as special judge, in absence of said honorable district judge for the purpose of receiving the verdict of said jury when returned, and that said Robt. A. Lowry was consulted and agreed so to do.

"Be it remembered, that said jury remained in session and deliberated upon their verdict from the time said cause was submitted to them until 9:20 o'clock a. m. on said 16th day of October, 1915, at which time they notified the clerk of said court that they had agreed and were ready to return a verdict. That said Robt. A. Lowry was immediately notified and immediately went to the courthouse. That thereupon it was further agreed between said county attorney and J. M. Springer for defendant and for his co-counsel that the said Robt. A. Lowry should convene said court and receive said verdict and order the clerk of said court to read and record the same and take such further proceedings as the honorable district judge might have had and done had he been personally present, and that the record in said cause should be made on its face to show the presence of said district judge, and that all proceedings had and done in said matter were to be had and done by said district judge. That in accordance with said agreement, the said Robt. A. Lowry, by virtue of said agreement, convened said court, inquired of the jury if they had agreed upon their verdict, and that said jury answered that they had, and thereupon he caused said verdict to be passed to him, and, having examined the same and finding it in due form, delivered said verdict to the clerk of said court, and ordered that said verdict be read and the clerk place the same of record, and that said clerk make a record in accordance with said agreement, showing that all proceedings had and done by Robt. A. Lowry were in fact had and done by the honorable district judge, present in his own proper person.

"Be it further remembered, that said honorable district judge left the city of Stillwater, which is the county seat of Payne county, Okl., for a continuous trip from said city of Stillwater, at 8:18 a. m. of said 16th day of October, 1915, and traveled by continuous passage from said city of Stillwater to said city of Guthrie, in Logan county, Okl., a distance by railway of about 50 miles. That the jury in said cause came into the courtroom ready to return their verdict at 9:25 o'clock of said date, and that said verdict was actually received by said Robt.

A. Lowry from said jury, and so read by the clerk at 9:40 o'clock a. m. of said date.

"Be it further remembered, that no exceptions were taken or objections made by the above-named defendant to any of the proceedings so had and done as recited herein, and that the said Robt. A. Lowry so convening said court and before receiving said verdict made statement from the bench in the presence of said defendant and of said county attorney, and of said J. M. Springer, of the agreement which had theretofore been made between said parties, and that he was acting in pursuance to said agreement only, and that no dissent was made by said defendant or by said J. M. Springer, and no objections made to said procedure so had by the said Robt. A. Lowry, and no exceptions taken to such proceedings or to the direction of said Robt. A. Lowry to the clerk of said court to make the record of said proceedings, showing the presence of said honorable district judge as hereinbefore set forth. A. H. Huston, Judge."

(13 Okl. Cr. 533)

ALLEN v. STATE. (No. A-2702.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 14, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Criminal Law ⟹183, 872—Reception of Verdict — Delegation — Statute — Consent to Discharge of Jury.

Where, during the trial of a homicide case, the jury having retired to deliberate on their verdict, the judge was incapacitated from further proceeding with the trial on account of sickness, and by agreement of the parties he designated an attorney of the court to receive the verdict of the jury:

Held, that the reception of the verdict in a criminal case is a judicial act, which cannot be delegated, and a verdict so received is a nullity, and that no judgment of conviction could be lawfully pronounced upon such verdict.

Held, further, that the discharge of the jury under such circumstances must be deemed to have been with the consent of the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 335, 2082, 2083.]

2. Criminal Law ⟹182—Illness of Judge Preventing Return of Verdict—Retrial.

Where a jury impaneled and sworn in a criminal case is prevented from returning a verdict by reason of illness of the presiding judge, incapacitating him from attending to the duties of the trial, the case may be again tried.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 330–332.]

3. Criminal Law ⟹168, 193—Former Jeopardy—Acquittal — Illegal Verdict — Retrial—Constitutional Provisions.

A judgment of conviction based on an illegal verdict will not operate as an acquittal, either before or after reversal on appeal, and a new trial in such a case after reversal of such judgment, on defendant's appeal, is no infringement of the clause of the Constitution which declares that, "Nor shall any person be twice put in jeopardy of life or liberty for the same offense." Const. art. 2, § 21.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 290–303, 378.]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. Criminal Law ⟹183—Former Jeopardy—Discharge of Jury—"Accident."

The word "accident," as used in Rev. Laws 1910, § 5916, providing that where a jury is discharged or prevented from giving a verdict by reason of an accident the cause may be retried, means an event happening unexpectedly and without fault; an undesigned and unforeseen occurrence of an afflictive or unfortunate character; a casualty or mishap.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 326–329.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accident; Accidental.]

Appeal from District Court, Payne County; A. H. Huston, Judge.

Minnie Allen was convicted of manslaughter in the first degree, and she appeals. Reversed.

J. M. Springer and Robert A. Lowry, both of Stillwater, for plaintiff in error. S. P. Freeling, Atty. Gen., and R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DOYLE, P. J. The plaintiff in error, Minnie Allen, was tried in the district court of Payne county upon an information jointly charging her and George W. Carpenter with the murder of one Tom Oglesby, alleged to have been committed in the said county on the 18th day of May, 1915. Upon her separate trial she was found guilty of manslaughter in the first degree, and her punishment fixed at eight years' imprisonment in the penitentiary. From the judgment rendered in pursuance of the verdict she appeals.

It appears from the record that on the 15th day of October, 1915, the cause was submitted to the jury, and they retired in charge of a bailiff to consider of their verdict, and the court thereupon recessed; that Judge Huston, presiding judge, became seriously ill that evening, and in view of such illness it was agreed between the county attorney of Payne county and the attorneys for plaintiff in error that in the event it became necessary for Judge Huston to return to his home in Guthrie before the jury had returned a verdict, that Robert A. Lowry, an attorney at the bar of Payne county, should act as special judge for the purpose of receiving the verdict of the jury; that Judge Huston left Stillwater on the morning of the 16th day of October before said jury had returned their verdict; that about an hour later the jury came into the courtroom in charge of their bailiff, and in accordance with the aforesaid agreement, Robert A. Lowry convened court and inquired of the jury if they had agreed upon a verdict. The jury answered they had. Robert A. Lowry received their verdict and delivered the same to the court clerk. After the verdict was read and the jury polled, Robert A. Lowry ordered the clerk to record the same and have the record show that all proceedings had and done by Robert A. Lowry in said case were in effect had and done by the district judge, present in his own proper person. On October 19th Judge Huston returned to Stillwater, opened court, and overruled plaintiff's motion to require the court clerk to correct the record in the case to show the facts. See Allen v. Huston, Judge, 165 Pac. 742. On the same day motions for new trial and in arrest of judgment were overruled, and in pursuance of said verdict the judgment appealed from was rendered.

It is contended by the plaintiff in error that upon the record the trial court lost jurisdiction during the trial by reason of the fact that the trial judge absented himself from the place where court was being held while the jury was deliberating upon their verdict, and that the plaintiff in error waived none of her rights by reason of said agreement, and that she was entitled to be discharged upon her motion in arrest of judgment. The Attorney General has filed a confession of error and motion to remand the cause that it may be again tried.

[1] Every person charged with crime is entitled to a fair trial in conformity to the laws of the state, and it is a duty resting upon the courts to see that this guaranty conferred by the laws upon every citizen is upheld and sustained. In many cases this court has held that it is the duty of the presiding judge at criminal trials to be present during each and every stage of the proceedings before him, and when the record affirmatively discloses that he lost control of the proceedings by reason of his absence from the bench during the progress of the trial, a judgment of conviction will be reversed. Stites v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 596, 132 Pac. 822; Wright v. State, 7 Okl. Cr. 280, 123 Pac. 434; Cochran v. State, 4 Okl. Cr. 380, 111 Pac. 974. It is a fundamental principle of law that judicial power cannot be delegated, and a verdict of conviction to be of any validity must be delivered in open court.

Under the following provisions of our Procedure Criminal the presence of the presiding judge during the entire course of the trial is essential, and the receiving of the verdict is a judicial act which cannot be delegated.

"After hearing the charge, the jury may either decide in court, or may retire for deliberation. If they do not agree without retiring, one or more officers must be sworn to keep them together in some private and convenient place, and not to permit any person to speak to or communicate with them, nor do so themselves, unless it be by order of the court, or to ask them whether they have agreed upon a verdict, and to return them into court when they have so agreed, or when ordered by the court." Section 5906, Rev. Laws.

"After the jury have retired for deliberation, if there be a disagreement between them as to any part of the testimony or if they desire to be informed on a point of law arising in the cause, they must require the officer to conduct them into court. Upon their being brought into court, the information required must be given in the presence of, or after notice to the county attorney and the defendant or his counsel, or after they have been called." Section 5913.

"If, after the retirement of the jury, one of them becomes so sick as to prevent the continuance of his duty, or any other accident or cause occur to prevent their being kept together for deliberation, the jury may be discharged." Section 5914.

"Except as provided in the last section, the jury cannot be discharged after the cause is submitted to them until they have agreed upon their verdict, and rendered it in open court, unless by the consent of both parties entered upon the minutes, or unless at the expiration of such time as the court deems proper, it satisfactorily appear that there is no reasonable probability that the jury can agree." Section 5915.

"In all cases where a jury are discharged or prevented from giving a verdict, by reason of an accident or other cause, except where the defendant is discharged from the indictment or information, during the progress of the trial, or after the cause is submitted to them, the cause may be again tried at the same or another term, as the court may direct." Section 5916.

"While the jury are absent the court may adjourn from time to time as to other business, but it is nevertheless deemed open for any purpose connected with the cause submitted to them until verdict is rendered or the jury discharged." Section 5917.

"When there is a verdict of conviction in which it appears to the court that the jury have mistaken the law, the court may explain the reason for that opinion, and direct the jury to reconsider their verdict, and if, after the reconsideration, they return the same verdict, it must be entered," and "if the jury render a verdict not in form, the court may, with proper instructions as to the law, direct them to reconsider it." Sections 5925 and 5926.

"When a verdict is rendered, and before it is recorded, the jury may be polled on the requirement of either party, in which case they must be severally asked whether it is their verdict, and if any one answer in the negative, the jury must be sent out for further deliberation." Section 5928.

Under these provisions, after the retirement of the jury to deliberate and until a verdict is rendered, or the jury discharged in due course of the law, it is the duty of the presiding judge to be where he can respond to any call for the exercise of his judicial authority, and thus give protection and security to all parties interested or concerned in the result of the trial, and such judge cannot delegate these judicial functions to another, even with the consent of the parties. It is well settled that in prosecutions for felonies the continual presence of the judge during the entire course of the trial is indispensable, and that whether objection be or be not made, a conviction will be reversed in the case of his improper absence.

In Meredeth v. People, 84 Ill. 479 (2 American Crim. Rep. 448), which was an indictment for murder, it was held:

"The trial judge must occupy the bench throughout the entire trial, which includes the argument of counsel. Where it is made to appear that, for two days during the argument, the judge was not in the courtroom, but in another part of the building, engaged in other business, and that members of the bar presided in his place, the verdict will be set aside, although this was done by consent of the respondent's counsel, or even by his own consent. The accused cannot waive the presence of the judge during his trial."

In Ellerbe v. State, 75 Miss. 522, 22 South. 950, 41 L. R. A. 569, it was held:

"One prosecuted for crime is entitled to have a legally constituted court at every stage of his trial, and where the presiding judge calls > a member of the bar to the bench, and, by consent of counsel, leaves the courthouse for some minutes during the concluding argument for the state, the judgment of conviction will be reversed on appeal of the accused, notwithstanding the waiver of objection by his counsel."

In Durden v. People, 192 Ill. 493, 61 N. E. 317, 55 L. R. A. 240, where it appeared that one circuit judge heard the evidence and a part of the argument of counsel, and then vacated the bench as presiding judge and left the county and thereafter took no part in the trial of the cause, nor in any of the other proceedings therein, until the hearing of the motion for a new trial, which he overruled, the judgment for this reason was reversed. The court used the following language:

> "In our view, it makes no difference that another circuit judge of equal power and jurisdiction was presiding in place of the absent judge, if he had no such knowledge of the testimony, already given upon the witness stand, and of the proceedings, already taken in the cause, as to be able to direct and control the arguments of counsel when they pass beyond proper limits, and to determine whether or not the instructions to be given to the jury are based upon the evidence already heard in the presence of the jury. * * * In the case at bar, there was no death, nor sickness, which justified the judge, who conducted the trial, in vacating the bench. It does not appear for what reason he abandoned the trial of the cause and turned it over to another judge. But, even if he went into another county in order to attend to other business upon his circuit, as is alleged by the attorney general, there was no official business, which more properly demanded his attention than the trial in hand, which involved the life of a human being. * * * Hence, when he was absent from the bench, the authorities, which hold that absence from the bench is error such as justifies a reversal, are strictly applicable to his conduct. His absence was not excused by the fact that another judge, not familiar with the evidence, instructed the jury and received the verdict. The injury, which may have inured to the interests of the plaintiff in error, was not counterbalanced by the presence of a new and outside presiding officer."

In People v. McPherson, 74 Hun, 336, 26 N. Y. Supp. 236, it was held that a criminal case cannot be partly tried before one magistrate and partly before another, and it was there said:

> "The proposition that a criminal case cannot be partly tried before one magistrate and partly before another seems to me too clear to need argument or citation of authority to sustain it. When the trial of a case has once commenced it must proceed to the end before the same court and jury."

See, also, O'Brien v. People, 17 Colo. 563, 31 Pac. 230; Hayes v. State, 58 Ga. 35; McClure v. State, 77 Ind. 287; State v. Carnagy, 106 Iowa, 487, 46 N. W. 805.

In Ex parte Patswald, 5 Okl. 789, 50 Pac. 139, speaking through Mr. Justice Taraney, the court said:

> "The one question to be determined is: Did the absence of the presiding judge discharge the jury from the consideration of the cause and, by operation of law, terminate the trial of the cause so as to render void the further proceedings had therein? By law, the terms of the district court of Oklahoma county are fixed to be held at Oklahoma City, and cannot be held at any other place. No person can be lawfully deprived of his liberty except 'by due process of law.' Due process of law would in this case imply, upon conviction by a court of competent jurisdiction. A court of competent jurisdiction for the trial of the crime of perjury consists of a presiding judge and a jury. It is not a court unless there be both judge and jury. It is the very existence and vitality of the court which authorizes the jury to deliberate. It is the existence and authority of the court which keeps them together, and that existence and authority must continue from the time they are impaneled until they are discharged. Barrett v. State, 1 Wis. 156 [175]. For all general purposes the court is considered as in session from the commencement to the close of its term. The jurors, officers and parties are all under its direction. The functions of the court cannot be suspended and the functions of the jury continue. To hold the contrary would be to throw off all those salutary restraints which have been found necessary to the due and solemn administration of justice. The jury are under the control and protection of the court. * * * The jury may, while deliberating, properly require of the court additional instructions as to the law of the case, or require of the court explanation of the meaning of the instructions given. They may, in the presence of the court and by permission of the court, have their memories refreshed as to the testimony in the case. All these privileges and safeguards are in great measure for the protection of the rights of the defendant, and nothing but the existence and presence of the court during every part of the proceedings of his trial can insure them to him. * * * The presence, actual or constructive, of a judge at every stage of the proceedings in a court is necessary, or the proceedings will be coram non judice; the law requires his presence during each and every step. * * * He may take a recess or adjourn as to all other business from day to day, or for rest or refreshment, but he cannot suspend the functions of the court as to the case of which the jury are deliberating. He need not remain actually on the bench or in the courtroom, but he must remain where he may exercise his functions as a court; that is, at the place where the court is by law required to be held. He cannot be at another place or engage in another business which precludes the exercise of such functions. * * * The court cannot be adjourned or its functions suspended as to the cause submitted to the jury. It is constructively open even though the judge be resting or refreshing himself; but to be constructively open the judge must be at the place where the law requires it to be kept open. If the judge should die after a cause was submitted to a jury, we do not think a verdict could be returned by the jury after a successor had been appointed and assumed the functions of the court. The death of the judge would render the jury, as to the cause, functus officio; and absence from the place where, by law, the court is required to be held, or other cause which dissolved the organization of the court, or suspended or prevented the exercise of its functions, would have the same effect as the death of the judge. The termination of the court by operation of law destroys the power of the jury to exist as a part of the court and discharges the jury. State v. Jeffors, 64 Mo. 376. With the termination of the court the jury is discharged by operation of law, and it can then neither make nor return a verdict."

It appears from the record that in the case at bar the jury were without any judicial supervision whatever from the time the presiding judge left the county until they returned their verdict, and then by consent of the parties Robert A. Lowry, a practicing attorney of the court, assumed to act as special judge for the purpose of receiving the verdict and discharging the jury. Applying the well-established rules of law enunciated in the cases quoted, we are of the opinion that the verdict of the jury was a nullity, and that no judgment of conviction could be lawfully pronounced on it by the court. It follows that the confession of error is well founded, and should be sustained.

[2, 3] It is now insisted that the plaintiff in error was, by the proceedings of that trial, once in jeopardy, and cannot lawfully be put upon trial the second time. It is a well-settled principle of common and constitutional law that a person cannot be put in jeopardy a second time upon the same charge. Article 2, § 21, Constitution of this state, declares:

> "Nor shall any person, after having been once acquitted by a jury, be again put in jeopardy of life or liberty for that of which he has been acquitted. Nor shall any person be twice put in jeopardy of life and liberty for the same offense."

It is well established that after the jury has been impaneled and sworn in a criminal case any discharge thereof without sufficient cause operates as an acquittal, in that it effectually bars another trial for the same offense. But to have this operation and effect such discharge must have been made without the consent, expressed or implied, of the defendant. 1 Bish. New Crim. Law, § 998.

In Cooley's Const. Lim. (7th Ed.) p. 467, the author says:

> "A person is in legal jeopardy when he is put upon trial, before a court of competent jurisdiction, upon indictment or information which is sufficient in form and substance to sustain a conviction, and a jury has been charged with his deliverance. And a jury is said to be thus charged when they have been impaneled and sworn. The defendant then becomes entitled to a verdict which shall constitute a bar to a new prosecution; and he cannot be deprived of this bar by a nolle prosequi entered by the prosecuting officer against his will, or by a discharge of the jury and continuance of the cause. If, however, the court had no jurisdiction of the cause, or if the indictment was so far defective that no valid judgment could be rendered upon it, or if by any overruling necessity the jury are discharged without a verdict, which might happen from the sickness or death of the judge holding the court, or of a juror, or the inability of the jury to agree upon a verdict after reasonable time for deliberation and effort, or if the term of the court as fixed by law comes to an end before the trial is finished, or the jury are discharged with the consent of the defendant expressed or implied, or if, after verdict against the accused, it has been set aside on his motion for a new trial, or on writ of error, or the judgment thereon been arrested—in any of these cases the accused may again be put upon trial upon the same facts before charged against him, and the proceedings had will constitute no protection."

The discharge of the jury under the circumstances of this case must be deemed to have been done upon the agreement and with the consent of the plaintiff in error. Again, the statute prescribes (section 5916, supra) that in all cases where the jury are discharged, or prevented from giving a verdict by reason of an accident or other cause, after the cause is submitted to them, the cause may be again tried at the same or another term, as the court may direct. The record shows, and counsel for the plaintiff in error concede, that the sickness of the presiding judge was such that unfitted him for the further performance of his duties in the trial of the case.

[4] The word "accident," as used in this section, is variously defined as an event happening unexpectedly and without fault, or as an undesigned and unforeseen occurrence of an afflictive or unfortunate character; a casualty or mishap. Under the foregoing principles and authorities, the discharge of the defendant on the claim of once in jeopardy should be denied in any aspect of the case contended for by her counsel.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of conviction is reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial. The warden of the penitentiary at McAlester will surrender the plaintiff in error to the sheriff of Payne county, who will hold her in custody until she shall be discharged, or as otherwise ordered according to law.

ARMSTRONG and MATSON, JJ., concur.

(13 Okl. Cr. 545)

Ex parte ALLEN. (No. A-2627.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. June 14, 1917.)

Habeas corpus by Minnie Allen. Writ denied.

Robert A. Lowry, of Stillwater, for petitioner. The Attorney General and R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DOYLE, P. J. A petition is presented in this case for a writ of habeas corpus, directed to the warden of the state penitentiary at McAlester, for the discharge of Minnie Allen. The petitioner was convicted in the district court of Payne county of manslaughter in the first degree, and was sentenced, as the record shows, to imprisonment in the state penitentiary for the term of eight years. The case out of which this proceeding grows was before us by direct appeal. By the decision of this court the judgment of the district court of Payne county was reversed. For the reasons stated in the opinion in that case (Minnie Allen v. State, 165 Pac. 745), the petition for writ of habeas corpus will be denied, and it is so ordered.

ARMSTRONG and MATSON, JJ., concur.

(53 Mont. 573)

STATE, on Accusation of LANGOHR et al., v. STORY. (No. 3969.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. May 28, 1917.)

1. COUNTIES 🔑67—OFFICERS—REMOVAL—"ILLEGAL FEES."

Under Rev. Codes, § 9006, providing that public officers may be removed when guilty of charging and collecting illegal fees by virtue of their official position, a county commissioner who in good faith charged and collected from the county bills for services in attending to business of the county other than meetings with the board and for inspecting and overseeing roadwork, not rendered pursuant to any previous order of the board, could be removed from office; such charges, although not made against an individual, being "illegal fees" within the meaning of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 100–103.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Illegal Fee.]

2. STATUTES ⟹208—CONSTRUCTION—GENERAL TERMS.

General terms and expressions of a statute are to be given a general construction, unless some other provision of the statute or the context itself shows a contrary intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 285.]

3. COUNTIES ⟹74(1)—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—COMPENSATION—ADDITIONAL FEES.

Rev. Codes, § 3194, provides that members of the board of county commissioners shall each receive $8 per day and 15 cents per mile in going to and returning to the county seat. Section 2952 provides that all claims by the members against the county for per diem and mileage, "or other service rendered by them," must be verified as other claims. Section 2893 provides that each member is entitled to $8 per day for each day's attendance on the sessions and 10 cents per mile for the distance necessarily traveled in going to and returning from the county seat. Laws 1915, c. 141, §§ 12, 13, authorizes a charge by a commissioner especially authorized by the board to inspect the condition of contract construction work on the highways and bridges. Held, that a county commissioner was not entitled to a fee for attending to business other than meeting with the board and for inspecting and overseeing roadwork, where he was not acting pursuant to any previous direction of the board, in view of Rev. Codes, §§ 3556, 3557, relating to construction of conflicting articles and chapters.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. § 104.]

Appeal from District Court, Gallatin County; R. Lee Word, Judge.

Proceedings by the State, on the accusation of M. Langohr and others, against Nelson Story, Jr. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, State ex rel. Payne v. District Court of Fifth Judicial Dist. in and for Madison County, 165 Pac. 294.

W. S. Hartman and Justin M. Smith, both of Bozeman, for appellant. S. C. Ford, of Helena, and Frank Woody, of Butte, for respondent.

SANNER, J. In a proceeding had under the provisions of section 9006, Revised Codes, the appellant, Nelson Story, Jr., was found by the district court of Gallatin county to have charged and collected illegal fees for services rendered in his office as county commissioner of said county, and was adjudged to be deprived of and ousted from such office. The basis for the finding and adjudication is an agreed statement of facts from which it is made to appear, among other things: That the appellant charged and collected from the county certain bills for services as county commissioner, which bills included items of charge at the rate of $8 per day for "attending to business of the county" other than meetings of the board, and items of charge at the rate of $8 per day for "inspecting and overseeing roadwork"; that the service for which such charges were made was actually rendered and believed to be for the best interests of the county in connection with roadwork under the immediate supervision of the board, but was not rendered pursuant to any previous order of the board directing the appellant to inspect the condition of any contract construction work on any highway or bridge in the county, or in connection with any such inspection.

[1] I. The main contention of appellant is stated in the language of his counsel as follows:

> "We contend that the word 'fees,' as used in the section under consideration, refers only to the statutory charges for official services rendered by an official to the different members of the general public, and does not in any way include, refer to, or contemplate the compensation, whether by way of salary or per diem, paid by the state or the county direct to its officials for services rendered; that the statute was intended for the protection of the individual members of the general public who, dealing with the officer, as such, may have been compelled to pay an illegal fee for the services rendered; that it was never intended to protect the county, the state, or the municipality from charges by the officer against it for services rendered by the official which were either illegal or wrongful or which were covered by his compensation or salary fixed by the statute regulating the compensation which he should receive for his services; that the statute is both penal and criminal, and that it cannot be extended to charges made by officials (however irregular, wrongful, or illegal) for services performed or alleged to have been performed which were not within the purview of the statute when enacted; that in this state county commissioners do not, and never have, charged, collected, or received 'fees' within the meaning of the statute; that they could not do so from the nature of the services required of them by the statute, and rendered by them in practice; that, conceding that appellants charged and collected per diem for services which they had rendered to the county, which charges and collections were without authority of law, they did not thereby become guilty of charging and collecting illegal fees within the purview of the statute in question; and that therefore the judgment of ouster rendered against them in their respective cases by the trial court should be reversed."

This entire contention is in reality foreclosed by the decision of this court in State ex rel. Payne v. District Court, 165 Pac. 294, wherein we said:

> "The term 'fees,' used in the Codes, is somewhat elastic. Section 3172, Revised Codes, provides that 'the county surveyor is entitled to receive and collect for his own use the following fees: * * * Expense of chainman and markers,' etc. Section 3173: 'The coroner is entitled to receive and collect for his own use the following fees: * * * For each mile actually traveled in the performance of any duty, ten cents.' We think the term 'fees,' used in section 9006, is sufficiently broad to comprehend both per diem and expenses. * * * If the items for which the accused charged these fees show on the face of them that they are not authorized by law, there is no necessity to characterize them or to attempt to show wherein they are illegal. They show for themselves. We think the accusation, in the first count, is sufficient to charge the collection of illegal fees. In effect, it alleges that the accused, acting in his official capacity as county commissioner of Madison county, spent one day seeing about a right of way for which he charged and collected from the county $8 and $5 additional for expenses, etc. This item particularly is not comprehended within any provisions of law authorizing fees or other compensation to a member of the board of county commissioners for services rendered in his office, and is therefore prima facie illegal."

Because, however, the conclusion thus announced has been challenged by a motion for rehearing, and because the appellant here invokes historical data to support his view, we determined to re-examine the subject. The result has been to confirm our view that the term "illegal fees" is used in section 9006 in its broadest sense, as meaning any moneys collected or attempted to be collected, by a public officer from any source whatever, whether in the guise of mileage, per diem, or specific charge for service rendered, or to be rendered, in his office without authority of law for such collection. We are impelled to this result by these considerations:

1. Neither in common parlance nor in legal usage has the word "fees" any such narrow limit as that assigned to it by appellant's counsel. It has many meanings, general and particular. Generally it signifies a reward or payment of money (Trench, Select Glossary); money paid or bestowed;. emolument (Century Dictionary); reward or compensation for services rendered or to be rendered (Webster's International Dictionary). In its particular sense it imports a recompense or reward fixed by law for the services of a public officer. Century Dictionary. Legally it means a reward or wages given to one for the execution of his office, differing from costs in that fees are a recompense to the officer for his services. Bouvier's Law Dictionary. Nowhere is it said to connote a particular source, as from individuals, and not from nation, state, or county. So that, considered in its ordinary significance, the term "fees," as used in section 9006, would cover the appellant's charges made upon and paid by the county, and the phrase "collecting illegal fees for service rendered" accurately describes his receipt of the money if there was no legal warrant for its payment.

2. Confining ourselves to the historical data submitted, we might possibly conclude that prior to 1895 the word "fees" was understood as counsel now defines it; but a wider survey convinces us that this would not be correct. In the Bannack Statutes (page 470 et seq.) it is specifically applied to the sheriff's per diem for attending court, payable by the county, to his compensation for dieting prisoners, to his mileage for serving papers and for transporting prisoners; also to the compensation of $10 for each inquest and to the mileage allowed coroners, payable by the county; also to the per diem of judges and clerks of election, payable by the county; also to the compensation, percentages, and mileage allowed the county treasurer, payable by the county; also to the per diem and mileage of election couriers, the per diem and mileage of witnesses, the per diem and mileage of jurors, and the per diem of prosecuting attorneys attending causes on change of venue. Substantially the same use of the word appears in the Codified Statutes of 1871-72 (page 420 et seq.), in the Revised Statutes of 1879 (5th div. §§ 585, 586, 587, 590, 593, 594, 596), and in the Compiled Statutes of 1887 (5th div. §§ 956, 1074, 1075, 1089, 1090, 1095). It is further interesting to note that in the "act concerning compensation of county, district, and township officers," approved March 6, 1891 (Session Laws 1891, p. 235 et seq.), the word "fees" is used to describe charges paid by the county as well as by individuals, and charges for per diem and mileage as well as those for specific service; moreover, section 9 of the act contains a provision that "any such officer who shall receive any fee or reward or salary not specifically provided by law shall be liable to the county, state, or persons paying the same," etc. While none of these references apply specifically to county commissioners, they establish, we think, that prior to 1895 the word "fees" meant more than specific charges to individuals for particular services, and that illegal fees could be collected from the county and could consist of unauthorized claims for per diem and mileage.

But, whatever may be the correct, or even just, inference from previous legislation, there cannot be the slightest doubt that, when the Codes of 1895 were enacted, including as section 1545 of the Penal Code the present section 9006 of the Revised Codes, the term "fees" was not confined in its significance to specific charges for particular services rendered to individuals, nor did it always exclude moneys had from the county or state, whether as compensation, per diem, or mileage. On the contrary, we find in the chapter on "Salaries and Fees of Officers" (chapter 4, pt. 4, tit. 2, Political Code), which with few changes reappears in the Revised Codes of 1907 as sections 3111-3197, that it is used in almost every possible sense. For example: In section 4592 (Rev. Codes, § 3113) it means a mode of compensation different from salary; in section 4604 (Rev. Codes, § 3137) it connotes mileage payable to the sheriff by the county in certain cases; in section 4605 (Rev. Codes, § 3138) it designates the recompense payable by the county to the sheriff for boarding prisoners; in sec tions 4606, 4607, 4611, 4612, 4614, 4615, 4616 (Rev. Codes, §§ 3139, 3140, 3144, 3145, 3147, 3148, 3149), and others it imports specific charges to be collected from private individuals for particular services; in section 4618 (Rev. Codes, § 3151) it refers to costs of publications; in section 4634 (Rev. Codes, § 3167) to the sheriff's mileage as well as his other charges; in section 4639 (Rev. Codes, § 3172) to the per diem of the county surveyor, to his charge for copies, etc., and to his expenses for chainmen and markers, whether chargeable to the county or to private individuals; in section 4640 (Rev. Codes, § 3173) to the per diem and other charges of the coroner which are payable by the county; in section 4642 (Rev. Codes, § 3176) to the charges of the justice of the peace, whether collectible from the county in criminal cases, or from individuals in other matters; in section 4643 (Rev. Codes, § 3177) to the charges of the constable, whether collectible from the county in criminal cases or from individuals in civil actions; in section 4643 (Rev. Codes, § 3177) to mileage as among the fees of the constable; in sections 4648 and 4650 (Rev. Codes, §§ 3182, 3184) to the per diem and mileage of witnesses. In no way can it be ascertained whether an officer has collected illegal fees within the meaning of section 9006 without a reference to the chapter on fees from which the above references are taken: with such reference, it would be a perversion to say that such collection occurred if the unauthorized moneys came from individuals, but not if they came from the county, or if they consisted of per diem or mileage instead of specific charges or particular services.

[2] 3. Besides the Payne Case, supra, this court had occasion in State ex rel. Rowe v. District Court, 44 Mont. 318, 119 Pac. 1103, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 396, to consider some of the aspects of appellant's present contention. There one Booher was sought to be removed from office under section 9006 for collecting illegal fees. The collection was from the county in good faith for services rendered, but it was held nevertheless that, since there was no legal warrant for it, the transaction constituted a collection of illegal fees for which removal, under section 9006, was possible. Elsewhere, too, the same result has been reached. Under the statute in North Dakota, Idaho, and Utah, as here, county commissioners received per diem and mileage payable by the county; and in State v. Richardson, 16 N. D. 1, 109 N. W. 1026, State v. Borstad, 27 N. D. 533, 147 N. W. 380, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 1014, Rankin v. Jauman, 4 Idaho, 53, 36 Pac. 502, Rankin v. Jauman, 4 Idaho, 394, 39 Pac. 1111, Ponting v. Isaman, 7 Idaho, 283, 62 Pac. 680, and Robinson v. Huffaker, 23 Idaho, 173, 129 Pac. 334, it was expressly determined that a county commissioner who receives from his county per diem and mileage to which he is not entitled, either because not earned or not authorized by law, is guilty of collecting illegal fees for service rendered in his office, and subject to removal under provisions similar to section 9006 of our Code. And the same conclusion was reached in Skeen v. Craig, 31 Utah, 20, 86 Pac. 487, respecting a city councilman. In this case the court, upon the first appeal reversing a judgment below for the defendant, said:

> "Counsel for defendant insist that the facts as disclosed by the record do not bring the case within the provisions of section 4580; their contention being that this section refers to officers only who are paid by fees for specific services, or, being salaried officers, are yet required to charge and collect fees for specific services, and that, as a city councilman is paid a stipulated and fixed salary, and in no way charged with the collection of fees of any kind whatsoever, he cannot be proceeded against under said section. It is conceded that the construction of the section of the statute under which this action is brought depends more upon the sense in which the term 'fees' is therein used than upon the technical definition of the word as contradistinguished from other terms denoting the compensation of public officers. The terms of this section of the statute wherein it refers to public officers and the 'charging and collecting illegal fees' are general, and are not confined to the fees charged and collected by any one class of public officers not liable to impeachment. Now, it is a well-recognized rule of statutory construction that general terms and expressions of a statute are to be given a general construction unless some other provision of the statute or the context itself shows that the Legislature intended them to be used and applied in a limited or restricted sense. Sutherland, Stat. Const. (2d Ed.) 392; Black on Interp. Laws, 136. We fail to find anything in the phraseology of the section itself, or when it is read and considered in connection with other provisions of the statute relating to the general subject-matter of the action, which restricts or limits the scope or operation thereof to only one class of officers. By its very terms the statute includes any officer (not liable to impeachment) who has been guilty of charging and collecting illegal fees. And its provisions are equally broad respecting 'illegal fees.' To bring the charging and collecting of illegal fees within the statute, it is not necessary that such fees be obtained from any specific source or sources, nor that they be charged or collected by an officer who is authorized by law to collect fees for specific services. The charging and collecting of illegal fees from the state, county, or municipality by a public officer for private gain, is as clearly within the statute as the charging and collecting of illegal fees from a private individual. It would seem that, if it were intended to limit proceedings of this kind to include only a certain or specified class of public officers who might become delinquent, the Legislature would have said so. The Legislature has not only failed to so state in so many words, but, as we have observed, there is nothing in any of the statutory provisions which relate to or have any bearing upon the subject-matter of this class of actions from which such an intent can be inferred."

We think that these authorities effectually dispose of appellant's contention.

It has been suggested, though it is not exploited in appellant's brief, that the only illegal fees for collecting which an officer can be removed under section 9006 are those received for services rendered in his office, and if the service for which collection be made is not required of the officer or authorized by law to be performed by him as such, it is not service rendered in his office; so that, whatever legal animadversion he may be subjected to for the collection, assuming the charge to be without legal warrant, there can be no removal under section 9006. In a certain sense this is obvious; but it is not illuminating. At the time involved here county commissioners had general supervision over highways (Laws 1915, c. 141, § 2), were charged with the establishment, maintenance, and control of the same (Laws 1915, c. 141, § 2; Rev. Codes, § 2894, subd. 4); it was their function to manage and care for highways as other interests committed to their charge (Rev. Codes, § 2894, subd. 22), and in that behalf they could do or cause to be done whatever might be necessary (Rev. Codes, § 2894, subd. 25; Laws 1915, c. 141, § 2). If these provisions mean anything at all, it is that county commissioners could in virtue of their office personally superintend and effectively direct the work of construction and repair upon highways and could depute one of their number to see and speak for them respecting the same; but, unless payment is authorized for such service none can be lawfully made, and to charge and collect for it is to charge and collect illegal fees for service "rendered in his office."

[3] II. In oral argument it was insisted that there are two statutory provisions, viz. sections 3194 and 2952, Revised Codes, under which it is permissible for commissioners to receive compensation for such service as was rendered in the present instance, and that therefore no illegal fees were collected. We cannot reconcile this with the theory of the briefs, nor does it at all conform to the postulates of the Payne Case referred to above. We consider it, however, in order that the matter may be set at rest. The sections referred to are as follows:

> "3194. Members of the board of county commissioners each receive eight dollars per day and fifteen cents per mile for the distance necessarily traveled in going to and returning from the county seat and his place of residence."
>
> "2952. All claims against the county presented by members of the board for per diem and mileage, or other service rendered by them, must be verified as other claims, and must state that the service has been actually rendered."

If these two sections were the only provisions reflecting on the subject, it might be possible to imply from the phrase "or other service rendered," in section 2952, and from the absence of any express restriction in section 3194, that the commissioners should have compensation for any service whatever rendered to the county—for those to which per diem properly applies at the rate of $8 per day, together with mileage, and for other services on some basis not stated, perhaps the reasonable value of the service. Section 2952, however, is in itself no authorization to take money from the public treasury for any purpose, and cannot be employed to bolster up a claim for which independent authority does not exist (Irwin v. County of Yuba, 119 Cal. 686, 52 Pac. 35); it is a mere prescription, touching the manner in which commissioners' claims for compensation, elsewhere authorized, shall be formulated and is designed in connection with section 2945 to enable the board to determine in the first instance whether it will even consider the claim (Christie v. Board of Supervisors, 60 Cal. 164). Moreover, these sections are not the only ones upon the subject. Section 2893 provides:

> "Each member of the board of county commissioners is entitled to eight dollars per day for each day's attendance on the sessions of the board, and ten cents per mile for the distance necessarily traveled in going to and returning from the county seat and his place of residence, and no other compensation must be allowed."

And sections 12 and 13 of article 3 in chapter 141, Laws of 1915, authorize commissioners especially ordered by the board to inspect the condition of contract construction work on highways and bridges to receive $8 per day and actual traveling expenses. It is not impossible to harmonize these provisions; construing them together, it may be said that, as respects per diem, a commissioner may receive $8 per day for each day's attendance upon sessions of the board and for each day given to inspection of contract roadwork under order of the board, but shall receive no other compensation. In every instance his claim must be verified as other claims. Conceding, however, that as to sections 2893, 2952, and 3194, there is such a difference in implication as to present an essential conflict, then, for reasons prescribed in the Code itself, section 2893 must prevail. All are original sections in the Code of 1895 (Pol. Code, §§ 4222, 4293, 4660), but section 2893 is an obvious carrying forward of a pre-existing provision (section 347, 5th div., Rev. Stat. 1879; section 755, 5th div., Comp. Stat. 1887), with changes as to mileage and the fund from which payment shall be made. Section 2893 is part of the article and chapter (article 1, c. 2, tit. 2) which defines the organization, term, and compensation of county commissioners, and is particularly germane to that subject. Section 2952 is part of the article and chapter (article 6, c. 2, tit. 2) which relates to "Other Powers and Restrictions" in county government; and section 3194 is found in the general chapter (chapter 4, tit. 2) on salaries and fees of public officers. The rule established by the Code is that, if the provisions of any article conflict with or contravene the provisions of another article in the same chapter, the provisions of each article must prevail as to all matters and questions arising out of the subject-matter of such article (Rev. Codes, § 3557), and if the provisions of any chapter conflict with or contravene the provisions of another chapter of the same title, the provisions of each chapter must prevail as to all matters and questions arising out of the subject-matter of such chapter (Rev. Codes, § 3556).

It is doubtless true that, in the case of a commissioner acting honestly and with a view to the efficient discharge of the duties of his office, the conclusion is a harsh one which results not only in the restoration of moneys actually earned, though illegally claimed, but also in his removal from office. This, however, cannot be helped. Section 9006 is general, makes no distinctions, leaves no room for judicial discretion. It was designed to serve a far-seeing public purpose, and to deny its application to this case, upon the grounds urged here, would be to destroy its value in other cases where its effect may be more certainly needed.

The judgment appealed from was commanded by the facts stated, and is therefore affirmed.

Affirmed.

BRANTLY, C. J., and HOLLOWAY, J., concur.

(53 Mont. 584)

STATE, on Accusation of LANGOHR et al., v. CALLAGHAN. (No. 3970.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. May 28, 1917.)

Appeal from District Court, Gallatin County; R. Lee Word, Judge.

Proceedings by the State, on the accusation of M. Langohr and others, against Charles Callaghan. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Hartman and Justin M. Smith, both of Bozeman, for appellant. S. C. Ford, of Helena, and Frank Woody, of Butte, for respondent.

SANNER, J. The questions presented by this appeal are the same and arise in the same way as those presented in State ex rel. Langohr et al. v. Story, 165 Pac. 748, just decided. On the authority of that decision, and for the reasons stated therein, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Affirmed.

BRANTLY, C. J., and HOLLOWAY, J., concur.

(53 Mont. 585)

STATE, on Accusation of LANGOHR et al., v. OVERSTREET. (No. 3971.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. May 28, 1917.)

Appeal from District Court, Gallatin County; R. Lee Word, Judge.

Proceedings by the State, on the accusation of M. Langohr and others, against C. W. Overstreet. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Hartman and Justin M. Smith, both of Bozeman, for appellant. S. C. Ford, of Helena, and Frank Woody, of Butte, for respondent.

SANNER, J. The questions presented by this appeal are the same and arise in the same way as those presented in State ex rel. Langohr et al. v. Story, 165 Pac. 748, just decided. On the authority of that decision, and for the reasons stated therein, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Affirmed.

BRANTLY, C. J., and HOLLOWAY, J., concur.

(53 Mont. 604)

CANYON CREEK ELEVATOR & MILLING CO. v. ALLISON. (No. 3738.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. May 31, 1917.)

1. Corporations 🔑81—Stock Subscription—Construction of Condition.

A stock subscription agreement, providing that, if a committee appointed from "our number" reported unfavorably on a certain plant, the subscription might be declared void, contemplates that the committee was to be appointed by all the subscribers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 266–284.]

2. Corporations 🔑83—Stock Subscription—Unconditional Subscription.

Ordinarily an unconditional stock subscription is a continuing offer until the proposed corporation is formed, and until that time may be withdrawn at the subscriber's option.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 328–336, 1407.]

3. Corporations 🔑81—Stock Subscription—Conditional Subscription.

Where a stock subscription agreement contains a condition precedent, the condition must be fulfilled, or the agreement is not binding, although the corporation is formed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 266–284.]

4. Corporations 🔑81—Stock Subscription—Compliance with Condition.

Where a stock subscription agreement provided that if a committee, appointed from the subscribers, should report unfavorably on a certain plant, the subscriber might withdraw evidence that a self-constituted committee inspected and reported favorably on such plant, does not make the subscription contract binding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 266–284.]

5. Corporations 🔑81—Stock Subscription—Waiver of Conditions.

A stock subscription provision, that it might be declared void if a committee of subscribers should report unfavorably on a certain plant, is not waived by a subscriber, who knew that a self-constituted group of subscribers inspected and reported favorably, but did not attend their meetings or ratify their action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 266–284.]

6. Corporations 🔑81—Conditional Stock Subscription—Notice of Withdrawal.

Where a stock subscription agreement provided that subscribers might withdraw if a committee, appointed from their number, reported unfavorably on a certain plant, but only a self-appointed group reported, a subscriber need not give notice of his withdrawal to avoid liability on his subscription contract, although the corporation was fully organized, and, in any event, an oral notice would be sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 266–284.]

Holloway, J., dissenting.

Appeal from District Court, Yellowstone County; Geo. W. Pierson, Judge.

Action by the Canyon Creek Elevator &

Milling Company against W. A. Allison. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

F. B. Reynolds, of Billings, for appellant. Johnston & Coleman, of Billings, for respondent.

BRANTLY, C. J. Action by plaintiff corporation to recover of the defendant $100, the par value of one share of its capital stock, upon a subscription contract therefor. The contract is as follows:

"September 18, 1913.

"Whereas, we, the undersigned, desire to secure and establish a flour mill at Yegen, Mont., for the purpose of doing custom and general mill work and the handling of all kinds of grain; and whereas, the Northwestern Mill Construction Company proposes to erect such a plant at Yegen, Mont.: Now, therefore, we, the undersigned, do hereby agree with each other and with the said Northwestern Mill Construction Company that we will purchase from a company, organized for the purpose of purchasing from the Northwestern Mill Construction Company such a plant, the number of shares set opposite our names. The shares to be $100 each. It being an express condition of this subscription that, if sufficient subscribers are not obtained within 60 days from the date hereof for the purchase of such a plant, or if a committee appointed from our number to inspect such a plant in operation shall report unfavorably, then these subscriptions may be, at our option, declared null and void; otherwise, to be in full force and effect."

The complaint alleges that, on or about the date of the contract, defendant subscribed for one share of the capital stock of the plaintiff upon the conditions named. It then alleges that all the conditions of the contract had been fulfilled, and that the stock of the plaintiff was issued to each of the subscribers in the amount subscribed by him; that one share was issued and tendered to the defendant, but that he refused to accept and pay for the same. Judgment is demanded for the amount of the subscription, with interest and costs.

The answer by counter averment denies that the committee mentioned in the contract was appointed or made any report. It admits all the other allegations of the complaint and alleges three separate affirmative defenses. At the trial the second one of these was abandoned. The others may be briefly epitomized as follows: (1) That the defendant signed the subscription contract at the solicitation of one Frank Sanderson; that, as an inducement to him to subscribe, Sanderson made certain representations to him as to the kind and character of the corporation to be formed, the location of the milling plant, and the profits such a plant would yield; and that defendant believed such representations and relied upon them as true, whereas they were false. (2) That it was a condition precedent that the committee provided for in the subscription contract should be appointed and should make report before the subscription should become effective; that no such committee was ever appointed; and that for this reason defendant, on December 6, 1913, notified the secretary of plaintiff that his subscription was null and void, and that he would not pay it. The reply joins issue upon these defenses.

At the opening of the trial the court held that, upon the issues as made, the burden was upon the defendant. Upon objection by counsel for plaintiff, it excluded all the evidence tendered by defendant in support of the first defense. After the evidence was submitted in support of the third defense, the court on motion directed a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant has appealed from the judgment and an order denying him a new trial.

Counsel have devoted much space in their briefs to a discussion of the questions whether the complaint states a cause of action, whether the allegations in the first special defense disclose a case of fraud by Sanderson, the solicitor of the subscription, and whether the court properly ruled that the burden was upon the defendant. It is not necessary to consider and determine these questions, because under the evidence submitted in support of the third defense, which presents no substantial conflict, the defendant, we think, was clearly entitled to a verdict and judgment.

[1] The contract does not expressly provide that the two conditions therein named are precedent. The conclusion cannot be avoided, however, that each subscriber, when he signed it, understood that he had reserved to himself the option to withdraw his subscription: First, if the amounts subscribed within 60 days from September 18th were not sufficient to make the proposed purchase; and, second, if a committee appointed from the number of subscribers made an unfavorable report after conducting the proposed investigation. It is clear, also, that they understood that the power to appoint the committee resided in the subscribers, for it was to be appointed from "our number"—language which, from the fact that it included all subscribers, cannot be construed to mean anything other than that the inspection was to be made by authority of all, and for the benefit of all. It may be assumed that those who were engaged in promoting the enterprise were impliedly authorized to take the lead in calling the subscribers together and ascertaining their wishes; but the right to select those whose opinion was to have significance as a determinating factor in their subsequent conduct was vested in the common body. The purpose to be served in inserting this provision evidently was that those subscribers who had not practical experience in connection with such enterprises might have the benefit of the judgment of those of their number whom they deemed qualified to judge of the feasibility and prospective success of the one to be established at Yegen, and therefore whether the proposed investment would probably prove profitable. It was clearly not contemplated that any number of the subscribers less than the whole should select a committee whose judgment should conclude all. In order to reach the desired result, therefore, while it was not necessary that all should take part in selecting the committee, it was necessary that whatever form the proceeding assumed, all were to have an opportunity to take part. Mr. Thompson, in his work on Corporations, speaking of these subscription contracts, says:

> "It is not necessary that a condition precedent be expressly stated as such; courts would scarcely require subscribers to say in express language that their subscriptions are made on condition that the corporation shall first perform some particular thing; on the contrary, mere recitals in the contract of subscription are frequently regarded as implied conditions." Section 599.

In 10 Cyc. at page 412, we find this statement of the rule:

> "A man cannot be forced into a contract which he does not choose to enter into. If, therefore, a man subscribes for shares in a corporation upon a condition which is lawful, and which consequently may be performed, unless that condition is performed, or its performance is waived by him, he cannot be held to make good his subscription."

Again, on page 418, this statement is found:

> "If the condition is expressed on the face of the subscription agreement, and is valid under rules and theories already discussed, the obligation of the subscriber does not become binding until the condition has been performed by the corporation or waived by the subscriber; until that time he cannot be held to the liabilities of a shareholder. It is scarcely necessary to suggest that the corporation cannot elect to treat as unconditional a subscription which has been made upon a valid and expressed condition."

[2, 3] The general rule is that an unconditional subscription is a continuing offer until the proposed corporation is formed. It becomes irrevocable only when it has been acted upon. This, however, is necessary in order to bind the subscriber, and until the corporation is formed he is at liberty at any time to withdraw. Deschamps v. Loiselle, 50 Mont. 565, 148 Pac. 335. When the subscription, as here, is made to take effect upon the fulfillment of a condition precedent, the condition must be fulfilled, or the offer is never binding, even though the corporation has been formed. On this subject Mr. Thompson says:

> "Many cases have held that a strict performance of the condition is necessary in order to entitle the corporation to recover. These holdings are governed largely by the particular wording of the contract of subscription. And where there is nothing to show a contrary intention, and the language of the subscription is plain, there is no reason why a strict compliance should not be required. This naturally follows as a minor proposition from the major premise, that a subscriber may attach any condition to his subscription which he sees fit, under the limitation that it is not contrary to law or against public policy, and is within the power of the corporation to perform. For a court to say that a subscriber might thus attach a whimsical condition to his subscription, and then to hold that there need not be a strict compliance on the part of the corporation, would be illogical and inconsistent." Section 604.

This rule is supported by the following cases: Martin v. Pensacola, etc., Ry. Co., 8 Fla. 370, 73 Am. Dec. 713; Midland City Hotel Co. v. Gibson, 11 Ga. App. 829, 76 S. E. 600; Chase v. Sycamore, etc., Ry. Co., 38 Ill. 215; Cravens v. Eagle Mills, 120 Ind. 6, 21 N. E. 981, 16 Am. St. Rep. 298; Belfers, etc., Ry. Co. v. Moore, 60 Me. 561; Morrow v. Nashville Iron, etc., Co., 87 Tenn. 260, 10 S. W. 495, 3 L. R. A. 37, 10 Am. St. Rep. 658.

[4] The evidence discloses that no committee was ever appointed by authority of the subscribers, or made report to them. At the time the subscriptions were solicited, it was understood by the subscribers that the committee to be appointed was to inspect a mill similar to that proposed, situated at Absarokee, in Stillwater county, and make report accordingly. The only attempt to fulfill this condition was the following: Mr. Frank Sanderson, who solicited the subscriptions from the defendant and others, C. W. Sanderson, John Epperson, Roy Stebbins, and J. M. Brannon, all being subscribers, agreed among themselves, at the instance of W. W. Clarke, himself a subscriber, and also interested in some official capacity in the Northwestern Mill Construction Company, to go to Absarokee and inspect the mill at that place. Mr. Clarke proposed to pay the expenses of all who would go. The first five took the lead in effecting the organization; Frank Sanderson becoming its president and C. M. Sanderson its secretary. They called up some of the subscribers by telephone, including the defendant. Some of them had no notice of any kind. The defendant testified:

> "The evening before the committee went, Mr. Sanderson called me up and asked me if I would like to go to Absarokee. He didn't say the committee. I said it was impossible for me to go. I asked him who was going. He said: 'I don't know any more than I think Mr. Roy Stebbins and Mr. Sansome.'"

He declined to go. Later a meeting of those who went to Absarokee and some of the other subscribers was held at a schoolhouse near Yegen, at which this self-constituted committee made a formal report. Frank Sanderson testified as to what took place at that time as follows:

> "After we made the trip, there was a meeting of the subscribers held. I don't know the date of the meeting. It was held at Canyon Creek schoolhouse at a called meeting. The meeting was called just among ourselves. Told everybody we saw, and called up some on the phone, etc., that there would be such a meeting there, and this committee would report at that meeting. The committee reported at that meeting. The report was favorable."

The defendant was informed of this meeting, but did not attend, and did not know what was done. Concerning it he testified:

> "Mr. Sanderson told me of a meeting to be held at the Canyon Creek schoolhouse, at which this committee that went to Absarokee was to report. That was to be on a Saturday evening."

Some of the subscribers did not become such until after these occurrences had taken place. On November 17th Mr. Stebbins, who was acting as "secretary," sent written notices to all the subscribers, addressing them as stockholders of the plaintiff, that their first meeting would be held at the store of C. M. Sanderson, at Yegen, on December 6th, for the purpose of "adopting by-laws for the said company." He asked for the proxies of those who did not care to attend the meeting in person. Defendant did not attend, nor did he send his proxy. The preliminary steps were taken to effect the organization of plaintiff, by the execution of the articles of incorporation and the selection of officers. On the same day defendant notified Stebbins by telephone that he canceled his subscription on the ground of misrepresentation. Later, in a conversation with Stebbins, he told him he had withdrawn his subscription. With reference to what occurred he testified:

> "I called up Roy Stebbins, and told him to cancel my subscription because of misrepresentations. I told him the change of location [of the mill] was one. That is not the only one I mentioned. I stated it was a misrepresentation all through, for I understood we were to be called together as subscribers to select the committee. The substance of my conversation with Stebbins at that time was something to that effect. In the course of our conversation Mr. Stebbins said he wasn't satisfied with the action they had taken. He said: 'I, for one, would have rather that they had called the subscribers together before doing anything.' And the next time I saw Mr. Stebbins, he said to me, 'Did I really mean I was pulling out?' and I said I did."

The organization was completed by the filing of the articles on December 17th.

[5] It may be conceded that, if the defendant had by word or act assented to or ratified the proceedings of the self-constituted committee, as by attending the meeting at the schoolhouse to hear its report, or by attending the subsequent meeting at Sanderson's store, and taking part, without objection, in the organization of the company, he would properly be held to have waived the right to insist that he had not been given an opportunity to exercise his option to annul his subscription. He was not bound, at his peril, however, to object to the proceedings of a committee of which he had not been informed, and in the selection of which he had taken no part. He had a right to understand that Frank Sanderson, Stebbins, and others, who had assumed the leadership in forwarding the enterprise, would give him notice, so that he might take part in the selection of the committee by whose favorable judgment he was to become bound. He was not consulted as to the propriety of the selection of the self-constituted committee. The information he received was that there was a committee, with an opportunity extended to him to join it, if he desired to do so. He was not bound by its action, unless he chose to be; and as he said no word nor performed any act from which it might reasonably be inferred that he intended to acquiesce in the action of the committee, the fulfillment of the condition of the contract was not waived by him. Therefore, under the rule of the authorities cited, he was at liberty to recall his subscription and thus avoid liability to pay it. Otherwise, he became bound, notwithstanding he never had an opportunity to exercise his option.

[6] The notice of withdrawal by defendant was given to Stebbins after the adjournment of the meeting of December 6th, at which C. M. Sanderson was named secretary of the plaintiff. Inasmuch as defendant never had an opportunity to exercise his option as contemplated in the contract, he was not under obligation to give notice to any one, even though the corporation was thereafter fully organized. In any event, his notice to Stebbins was sufficient to indicate his purpose.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause is remanded to the district court, with direction to enter judgment for the defendant.

Reversed and remanded.

SANNER, J., concurs.

HOLLOWAY, J. (dissenting). I am unable to subscribe to the conclusion reached by the majority. Under the third defense, defendant could avoid liability only in the event that the report of the committee was unfavorable. No such report was ever made. Though the committee which investigated the Absarokee plant was selected in the most informal manner, it nevertheless made an investigation and reported favorably. The defendant does not object to the personnel of the committee, does not contend that it was not fairly representative of the subscribers generally, and does not challenge the correctness of the report. If the report made truthfully stated the facts concerning the Absarokee plant, then defendant is not entitled to be heard to urge this defense, for, though an entirely different committee had been selected, and selected in the most solemn and formal manner imaginable, the report would necessarily have been the same.

Reduced to its ultimate analysis, then, defendant avoids responsibility solely on the ground that the committee was not selected in a formal manner. This he ought not to be permitted to do. Upon the theory of the case presented to the trial court, I think the correct conclusion was reached, and that the judgment should be affirmed.

(53 Mont. 595)

STATE ex rel. BOYLE v. HALL. (No. 4045.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. May 29, 1917.)

1. QUO WARRANTO 🔑34—RIGHT OF PRIVATE INDIVIDUAL—EXERCISE OF PUBLIC OFFICE.

Although under Rev. Codes, §§ 6943-6946, the authority of the state represented by the Attorney General to invoke the remedy by quo warranto is quite extensive, under section 6947, a private individual is limited in his right to the remedy to a case in which he claims to be entitled to a public office unlawfully held and exercised by another.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quo Warranto, Cent. Dig. § 41.]

2. QUO WARRANTO 🔑33—"PUBLIC OFFICE."

The board of railroad commissioners being a creature of statute whether the chairmanship of the board is a public office, with public duties and functions independent of the duties and functions which are attached to the office of commissioner, within Rev. Codes, § 6947, depends on the intention of the Legislature as manifested in the act, when considered in the light of the general rules as to the tests applied to determine whether a public office is involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quo Warranto, Cent. Dig. § 40.]

3. STATUTES 🔑212 — CONSTRUCTION — PRESUMPTION.

In construing a statute to determine whether a public office is involved, the lawmakers are presumed to have been guided to their ultimate determination by the same rules regarding the tests to be applied to determine whether a public office is involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 289.]

4. QUO WARRANTO 🔑33—BOARD OF RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS—"PUBLIC OFFICE."

Rev. Codes, § 4367, provides that the board of railroad commissioners shall organize by electing one of its members as chairman. Section 4369, which contains the only reference to the public duties or functions attached to the chairman of the board, provides that the state shall furnish said board with suitable offices, and provide it with all necessary furniture, stationery, and printing, upon requisitions signed by the chairman of said board. Section 4365 provides that any member of the board may administer oaths, and also that the board shall have power to adopt rules to govern its proceedings and to regulate the mode and manner of all investigations, etc. Section 4370 provides that any member of the board may verify the vouchers for the board's expenses, and throughout the original act and the supplemental acts the references are uniformly to the duties, powers, and privileges of the board, while the chairmanship is dismissed by the reference in section 4369. Held, that as the Legislature referred to the board as an entity in all matters of board regulation and control, the chairmanship of the board is not a "public office," within Rev. Codes, § 6947, since a public officer is a part of the personal force by which the state thinks, acts, determines, and administers, to the end that its Constitution may be effective and its laws operative, and while the elements of fixed term and compensation are not indispensable to a public officer, they are indices to the existence of such position, and their absence indicates to some extent the contrary conclusion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quo Warranto, Cent. Dig. § 40.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Office.]

Quo warranto by the State, on the relation of Daniel Boyle, against J. H. Hall. Demurrer sustained, and complaint dismissed.

Galen & Mettler and E. G. Toomey, all of Helena, for relator. H. C. Hall, of Havre, for respondent.

HOLLOWAY, J. By chapter 37, Laws 1907, the "board of railroad commissioners of the state of Montana" was created, and by that act, and acts supplementary thereto, its powers and duties are defined. The board consists of three members, each elected for a term of six years, and the present members are J. H. Hall, J. E. McCormick, and Daniel Boyle. Hall was elected in 1912, McCormick in 1914, and Boyle in 1916. On January 1, 1917, Hall was duly elected chairman and continued in that capacity until April 16th, when, at a regular meeting of the board at which all three members were present, by the votes of McCormick and Boyle he was deposed and Boyle elected chairman in his stead. Hall refused to abide by the order, and has since claimed and assumed to act as chairman. This proceeding in the nature of quo warranto was instituted by Boyle to have determined the right or title to the chairmanship of the board. To the complaint, which sets forth the proceedings fully, the defendant demurred, and, electing to stand on his demurrer, the matter was submitted for final determination. Defendant presents three contentions:

[1] 1. That the chairmanship of the board is not a public office. If this be sustained, the other contentions need not be noticed; for though the authority of the state (represented by the Attorney General) to invoke the remedy by quo warranto is quite extensive (Rev. Codes, §§ 6943-6946), a private individual is limited in his right to the remedy to a single case, viz. a case in which he claims "to be entitled to a public office unlawfully held and exercised by another" (section 6947). The question before us in limine is: Is the chairmanship of the board of railroad commissioners a public office, with public functions to be performed by the occupant independently of his duties as a member of the railroad commission?

Courts and text-writers have undertaken to define the term "public office," and to prescribe certain criteria by which to determine whether, in a given instance, a public office is involved, but their efforts have been expended with rather indifferent success. The tests applied and found sufficient in one case have proved altogether inapplicable in another. The authorities are, however, quite generally agreed that the character of the functions to be performed is a primary consideration, if not a determining factor. 23 Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 323. The duties attached to the position must concern the public directly, and must be imposed by public authority—not by contract. Mechem on Public Officers, 1–6; Throop on Public Officers, 3, 4; Wyman's Administrative Law, § 44. The duties must be public in the sense that they comprehend the exercise of some portion of the sovereign power and authority of the state, either in making, administering, or executing the laws. Eliason v. Coleman, 86 N. C. 235; Commonwealth v. Bush, 131 Ky. 384, 115 S. W. 249. They must be public, also, in the sense that they imply the element of personal responsibility, as distinguished from the merely clerical acts of an agent or servant. Attorney General v. Tillinghast, 203 Mass. 539, 89 N. E. 1058, 17 Ann. Cas. 449. In other words, a public officer is a part of the personal force by which the state thinks, acts, determines, and administers to the end that its Constitution may be effective and its laws operative. People v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 1, 59 N. E. 716, 52 L. R. A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605. While the elements of fixed term and compensation cannot be said to be indispensable to a public office, they are indices the presence of which points to the existence of such a position, and the absence of which indicates to some extent the contrary conclusion.

[2, 3] The board of railroad commissioners is the creature of statute. It has such authority as is conferred expressly or necessarily implied from that which is expressed. It is subject at all times to legislative regulation and control. Its officers and employés—even the members of the commission—may be dismissed from the service of the state by a repeal of the law which created the board. Whether, then, the chairmanship of the board is a public office, with public duties and functions independently of the duties and functions which are attached to the office of commissioner, depends upon the intention of the Legislature as manifested in the act, when considered in the light of the general rules referred to above, and which are presumed to have guided the lawmakers to their ultimate determination.

[4] The only mention of the chairmanship is found in section 4367, wherein it is provided that the board shall "organize by electing one of its members as chairman." While this is not the creation of the position by specific legislative enactment, it might be deemed sufficient if other and indispensable elements of a public office were present. Counsel have not directed our attention to any public duties or functions attached to the chairmanship by the Legislature, and our research has disclosed but a single reference, viz.:

> "The state shall furnish said board with suitable offices in the state capitol building at Helena, Mont., and provide it with all necessary furniture, stationery and printing, upon requisitions signed by the chairman of said board." Section 4369.

Throughout the original act and the supplemental acts the references are uniformly to the duties, powers, and privileges of the board, while the chairmanship is dismissed by the brief references above. Any member of the board may administer oaths (section 4365), or verify the vouchers for the board's expenses (section 4370). Can it be said, then, with any degree of seriousness, that a position to which are attached no duties, powers, or prerogatives other than the authority to sign orders for paper, stamps, and pencils is a public office, the incumbent of which is required by law to perform a portion of the sovereign power of the state? To suggest the question is to answer it. A review of these statutes would seem to indicate beyond the possibility of a doubt that while the board is created with important public functions to perform, and clothed with authority to make effective the purpose of its creation, the Legislature, imposing trust and confidence in the intelligence and integrity of the members, referred to the board, as an entity, all matters of board regulation and control. Section 4365 provides:

> "The board shall have power to adopt rules to govern its proceedings and to regulate the mode and manner of all investigations," etc.

In the absence of any specific declaration creating the office of chairman and in the absence of any independent public functions or powers attached to the position, this provision is peculiarly significant. The Legislature recognized the fact that in the orderly proceedings of the board there should be one member designated to preside over its deliberations, put all questions, and declare the will of the majority; in other words, to be the mouthpiece of the board, its agent and servant, but without authority or power independently of his authority as one member of the board and with such other power and authority only as the board might confer by appropriate rules and regulations or in the absence of any rule upon the subject, then with such authority as accords with the spirit of parliamentary procedure and meets the approval of a majority of the board. No mention is made of the term for which the chairman shall hold the position. The Legislature recognized further that the chairman would be selected by the members only because of their confidence in him; that the harmony and efficiency of the board would continue only so long as that confidence continued; and that whenever for any cause, or without cause, the chairman forfeits or otherwise loses that confidence upon the strength of which he was selected, the majority would have the authority to remove him and select a successor. That the Legislature thus treated the chairmanship as a merely honorary position, the occupant of which is subject to control by the majority, holds the position at the will of the majority, performs, without compensation, whatever duties are assigned to him by the majority, and is without public power or authority independently of his office as a member of the board, is fairly conclusive evidence that it was not the intention of the Legislature to create an independent public office.

Our conclusion is that the chairmanship of the board of railroad commissioners is not a public office, and therefore this proceeding cannot be maintained.

The demurrer is sustained, and the complaint is dismissed.

Dismissed.

BRANTLY, C. J., and SANNER, J., concur.

(40 Nev. 428)

O'DONNELL v. SIXTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT COURT OF STATE OF NEVADA, IN AND FOR HUMBOLDT COUNTY et al.

(No. 2275.)

(Supreme Court of Nevada. June 23, 1917.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1—RIGHT TO APPEAL—STATUTE.

It is not lightly to be assumed that from failure or omission of a special act to provide for an appeal the Legislature intended to deny such right to any person whose civil and legal rights are involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-4.]

2. INSANE PERSONS 🔑33(2) — APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN—RIGHT TO APPEAL.

Const. art. 6, § 4, vests the Supreme Court with appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity. Rev. Laws, § 4832, is to the same effect. Section 4833 empowers the Supreme Court to review on appeal a judgment in a proceeding commenced in a district court when the matter in dispute is embraced in the general jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Section 5329 provides that an appeal may be taken from a final judgment or special proceeding commenced in the court in which the judgment is rendered. Section 6162 provides for petition for the appointment of a guardian for insane persons. Held, that such proceeding is equitable, and the judgment appointing the guardian for a mentally enfeebled person is final, so that an appeal lies.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. § 59.]

3. PROHIBITION 🔑10(2)—RIGHT TO REMEDY.

Where a stay of proceedings is had, and the court undertakes to exercise an unauthorized jurisdiction pending the stay, prohibition is the proper remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Prohibition, Cent. Dig. §§ 44-56.]

4. INSANE PERSONS 🔑33(2)—APPOINTMENT OF GUARDIAN—REVIEW—STAY OF PROCEEDINGS—UNDERTAKING ON APPEAL.

As procedure under Rev. Laws, § 6162, is not a case provided for in Civil Practice Act, §§ 404, 405, 408, and 409 (Rev. Laws, §§ 5346, 5347, 5350, 5351), the perfection of an appeal by giving the undertaking as prescribed by section 404 stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment and order appealed from, under specific provision of Rev. Laws, § 5355.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insane Persons, Cent. Dig. § 59.]

Original proceeding for prohibition by Ellen C. O'Donnell against the Sixth Judicial District Court of State of Nevada in and for Humboldt County and others. Writ issued.

Salter & Robins, of Winnemucca, for petitioner. Callahan & Brandon, of Winnemucca, for respondents.

SANDERS, J. Ellen C. O'Donnell was declared by a judgment of the district court for Humboldt county to be mentally incompetent, by reason of extreme old age, to manage her property, and by the judgment Chris Wolf, public administrator of said county, was appointed guardian for her estate, alleged to consist of 400 acres of land in said county and $8,500 in money, represented by two certificates of deposit in a local bank at Winnemucca, Nev. She gave notice of appeal to this court from the judgment and an order overruling her motion for a new trial, and filed an undertaking on appeal in the sum of $300. She now petitions this court for a writ of prohibition to restrain the judge of said court and the guardian so appointed from enforcing, or undertaking to enforce, said judgment pending her appeal.

We are satisfied from the return of respondents that, unless restrained, they will do the things complained of, and will endeavor to take possession of the property of petitioner in disregard of and in spite of her appeal. The only question presented, therefore, is: Should the writ issue?

It is urged by respondents that an appeal is a matter purely of statutory right (Esmeralda County v. Wildes, 36 Nev. 526, 137 Pac. 400), and as the statute under which the proceeding was commenced in the lower court (Statutes of Nevada 1899, p. 70) nor the general law governing appeals (chapter 46 Civil Practice Act) makes provision for an appeal in such cases, the judgment and order complained of is not appealable, and this court is therefore without jurisdiction to issue the writ. The jurisdiction of this court being thus challenged, it is incumbent upon us to consider the question as if made upon a motion to dismiss the appeal of petitioner. The several district courts of this state are vested by the Constitution and statutes with original jurisdiction in all cases relating to the estates of insane persons (Const. art. 6, § 6; section 4840, Revised Laws); not necessarily persons technically insane, but those who, for any cause, are mentally incompetent to manage their property (section 6162, Revised Laws; 14 R. C. L. p. 567); and such courts possess general power over the appointment and removal of guardians (section 4849, Revised Laws). The jurisdiction thus conferred is neither special nor limited, nor is it limited or qualified by the special act which regulates the procedure for the appointment of guardians and to prescribe their duties. Statutes of Nevada 1899, p. 70.

[1] It is not lightly to be assumed that from the failure or omission of a special act to provide for an appeal the Legislature intended to deny to the persons whose legal and civil rights are involved and affected by the act the right of appeal. The right to an appeal is a substantial right (Howard v. Richards, 2 Nev. 137, 90 Am. Dec. 520), and, while it is purely statutory (Esmeralda County v. Wildes, supra), a statute will not be construed as taking away the right of appeal unless the language used clearly shows such an intent (3 C. J. 319).

"If a statute is capable of being so construed as to maintain the right of appeal without violating the well-established rules for construing statutes, it will be so construed." Houghton's Appeal, 42 Cal. 35.

[2] The persons embraced by the statute in question are peculiarly "wards of chancery." Unless the statute, by express terms, necessary implication, or reasonable intendment, denies to such persons the right of appeal, it is our duty to uphold the right. But it is insisted that the general law governing appeals makes no provision for an appeal in this class of cases. In this view we do not concur. The Supreme Court is vested by the Constitution with appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity. Const. art. 6, § 4; section 4832, Revised Laws. This court has jurisdiction to review upon appeal a judgment in an action or proceeding commenced in a district court when the matter in dispute is embraced in the general jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Section 4833, Revised Laws. The proceeding authorized by the statute (section 6162, Revised Laws) is an equitable proceeding, and differs from ordinary actions only in procedure. It does not confer new rights, nor afford new remedies. In its essential characteristics it was an adversary proceeding in which the petitioner was the real defendant. An appeal may be taken from a final judgment or special proceeding commenced in the court in which the judgment is rendered. Section 5329, Revised Laws. For the purposes of this application, it is not necessary to determine whether the proceeding against petitioner was "an action" or "special proceeding." It was certainly one or the other. An appeal lies from a "final judgment" in either. The judgment was a "final judgment," which operates to divest petitioner of the right to the possession, control, and management of her property. The petitioner is entitled, therefore, to prosecute her appeal here so as to test the regularity of the proceeding by which it was sought to place her property under guardianship.

[3] It is well settled that, where a stay of proceedings is had, and the court undertakes to exercise an unauthorized jurisdiction pending such stay, prohibition is the proper remedy. 3 C. J. p. 1328.

[4] The undertaking on appeal filed by petitioner conforms to section 404 of the Civil Practice Act, and, as the procedure authorized by section 6162, Revised Laws, is not a case provided for in sections 404, 405, 408, and 409 of the Civil Practice Act, the perfecting of the appeal by giving the undertaking, as prescribed by section 404, stays proceedings in the court below upon the judgment and order appealed from. Section 5355, Revised Laws.

It is argued by respondents that it is against the interest of petitioner, and against public policy, to permit petitioner to manage her property pending the time of her appeal. And it might have been suggested, by way of argument, that an appeal in such cases defeats the purpose of the statute. This position has been ruled upon adversely to respondents by the Supreme Court of California in construing a similar statute. Coburn v. Hynes, 161 Cal. 685, 120 Pac. 26; In re Woods, 94 Cal. 566, 29 Pac. 1108; In re Moss, 120 Cal. 695, 53 Pac. 357.

We are powerless to remedy what may be a defect or omission in the Civil Practice Act.

Let the writ issue.

McCARRAN, C. J., and COLEMAN, J., concur.

KEELER v. BAKER et al. (No. 9185.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1001(1) — REVIEW — WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Where the probative force of the evidence and the facts established by the verdict were within the province of the jury to determine, such determination was binding upon the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3928–3933.]

Error to County Court, City and County of Denver; V. H. Johnson, Judge.

Action by A. M. Baker and another, doing business as the Modern Mantel & Fixture Company, against Frank W. Keeler. From a judgment of the county court for plaintiff on appeal from a judgment of the justice court for plaintiffs, the defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Philip W. Mothersill and C. E. Wampler, both of Denver, for plaintiff in error. P. R. Anderson, of Denver, for defendants in error.

PER CURIAM. The defendants in error were the plaintiffs in the trial court, and sued Keeler before a justice of the peace for an alleged balance of $249.50 due on account of materials furnished and labor performed upon the residence of defendant. The defendant failed to appear in the justice court, and upon proof of plaintiffs' claim judgment was rendered accordingly. Defendant thereafter appealed the cause to the county court, where it was tried to a jury and a verdict returned in favor of plaintiffs in the sum of $175, upon which judgment was entered. The defense interposed was failure upon the part of plaintiffs to do and perform the work as agreed, and damages resulting therefrom to the house by reason of the negligence of plaintiffs in the performance of their work.

The sole question raised here and relied upon for reversal is the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. The claims of the parties were submitted to the jury under instructions to which no objections were interposed.

We have read the record, and find therein sufficient evidence to support the verdict. The probative force of the evidence and the facts established thereby were within the province of the jury to determine, and are binding upon us.

The application for a supersedeas is therefore denied, and the judgment affirmed.

GERMAN AMERICAN TRUST CO. v. WHITE. (No. 9186.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

ASSIGNMENTS 🔑85—PRIORITIES.

Where the rights of a trust company as executor, in proceeds of a fire policy, rested solely on assignment which was expressly made subordinate to an assignment to one acting as its agent, it cannot complain, no fraud appearing, because full effect to its assignment was given, and the amount due the agent ordered first paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 149–151.]

Error to District Court, Jefferson County; Jesse C. Wiley, Judge.

Proceedings between the German American Trust Company, as executor of the estate of Burroughs R. Hall, deceased, and John F. White, to determine rights to the proceeds of an insurance policy, paid into court by the insurer. To review a judgment for White, the trust company brings error. Application for supersedeas denied, and judgment affirmed.

C. F. Miller, of Denver, for plaintiff in error.

WHITE, C. J. The question involved is which of the parties hereto is entitled to certain money paid into court by an insurance company upon an adjustment of a loss by fire of some personal property, belonging to one French, which it had insured. Each of the parties claims the money by virtue of an assignment by French. The assignment under which plaintiff in error claims is, by express terms, made subordinate to the assignment under which defendant in error claims. The facts resulting in the assignments are, briefly, as follows: One Burroughs R. Hall owned a building, and defendant in error White was his agent in renting and collecting the rents therefor. This building was occupied by one French as tenant, who conducted a small store therein, and who had fallen behind in the payment of her rent. She had also borrowed some money at a high rate of interest and secured the payment of the same by a chattel mortgage upon her trade fixtures in the store. Hall died, and thereupon the German American Trust Company became executor of his estate, and White became its agent in relation to the building. The defaults of French in the payment of rent continued, and White, in order to assist her, purchased the note secured by the chattel mortgage, and substantially reduced the rate of interest thereon. The note, becoming due, was renewed and a new chattel mortgage given all in the name of White's wife, though belonging to White. Some time elapsed, other rent accrued, and some payments were made thereon, and $2.75 paid as interest upon the note. When the fire occurred White was in California, and Mrs. French called upon the plaintiff in error, and stated to an assistant cashier of that institution, who was also the son of White, that she desired to have drawn and executed two assignments of her claim against the insurance company growing out of the fire; that she desired the first assignment to be in favor of White for the purpose of paying the mortgage indebtedness, and the second assignment to be in favor of plaintiff in error for the purpose of paying the delinquent rent. Thereupon the assignments were drawn in accordance with her wishes, and she executed the same. The amount of the note and delinquent rent exceeded the proceeds of the insurance policy.

The court found that the transaction was in good faith, and there was no fraud or deceit upon the part of plaintiff; and that from the insurance money the amount due on the note and the costs, including the expense of collecting the insurance policy, should first be paid and the balance, if any, turned over to plaintiff in error. The evidence warranted these findings. The rights of plaintiff in error were based solely upon the assignment, and it is not in a position to complain because the court gave full effect to that instrument.

The application for supersedeas is denied, and the judgment affirmed.

HILL and TELLER, JJ., concur.

HAMILTON v. PEOPLE. (No. 9042.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. ABORTION 🔑11—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a prosecution for having procured a criminal abortion, evidence held to support a verdict of guilty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Abortion, Cent. Dig. § 22.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1159(2) — APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—VERDICT.

It is the province of the jury to determine the credibility of the witnesses, and the weight of their testimony, and to decide the facts, and where there is sufficient evidence to support their finding, the appellate court cannot interfere with their conclusion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3075.]

Error to District Court, City and County of Denver; William D. Wright, Judge.

Noble O. Hamilton was convicted of having procured a criminal abortion, and he brings error. Affirmed.

C. A. Prentice, of Denver (J. G. Powell, of Denver, of counsel), for plaintiff in error. Fred Farrar, Former Atty. Gen., Leslie E. Hubbard, Atty. Gen., and Ralph E. C. Kerwin, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the People.

GARRIGUES, J. Defendant, plaintiff in error, was convicted under an information charging him with having procured a criminal abortion of Ada Williams, by means of thrusting an instrument into her private parts with intent to procure a miscarriage, from which her death resulted.

The principal assignment of error upon which defendant relies for a reversal is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict and judgment, and that no testimony was adduced upon which any reasonable, fair-minded jury could have concluded beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of the crime charged. This has necessitated a careful review of all the evidence introduced on the trial, which discloses the following:

Thomas and Ada Williams were husband and wife, residing in Denver. Mrs. Williams having become pregnant, was very much disturbed over her condition owing to the fact that her mother, a resident of Nebraska, who was nearly 50 years old, had written that she was about to be confined, and, fearing that she would not survive the ordeal, very urgently requested Mrs. Williams to come to her; that Mrs. Williams thought she could not go, in her delicate condition, and was desirous of having a miscarriage. Some time in the latter part of January, 1916, she called on defendant Hamilton, who was a practicing physician, and discussed her condition with him. On Sunday, February 13, 1916, she, in company with her husband, again visited the doctor at his office, where she introduced her husband and said that they had come to talk over what she had discussed with him on her previous visit. The defendant asked her if she still wanted to do what they had talked about, and she replied that she did. After discussing her condition and symptoms, she inquired of the doctor if he thought he could help her out, and he replied that he could, and told her to return on the following day, Monday. Mr. Williams asked how much the bill would be, and defendant told him he "charged $25 for confinement cases, and this would be the same."

Mrs. Williams returned to the doctor's office on Monday at about 9:40 o'clock in the morning. Of what occurred there on that occasion there is no direct evidence, excepting that of the defendant, who, while admitting that he inserted a speculum and made an examination of the woman's privates, and introduced a medicated tampon into her vagina, denied that he had done anything which would tend to bring about a miscarriage. On Tuesday morning Mrs. Williams was in bed when her husband went to work, although later she got up and went to the residence of a friend, and relative of Mr. Williams by marriage, where she seemed faint and ill. Williams that morning, on his way to work, stopped at the doctor's office and paid him $10 on account. On Wednesday Mrs. Williams remained in bed, was taken with labor pains, and about noon was delivered of a fetus in the stage of development at about three months. Dr. Hamilton was called, and the patient stated to him or in his presence that she had had hard work to keep the tampon in before the child was born. She also told him that along about 3 o'clock Tuesday morning she had sneezed real hard, and asked him "if that is the reason that it occurred sooner than he expected it would." The defendant placed the fetus in paper, put it in the stove, and after giving some directions as to the care of the patient left the house. On Thursday Mrs. Williams' condition grew worse, and symptoms of septicæmia developed. Dr. Hamilton was called, and then diagnosed her trouble as typhoid fever. On Friday the defendant called in Dr. Gundrum to examine Mrs. Williams, and to give his opinion as to whether or not she was suffering from typhoid, but refrained from telling him that she had had a miscarriage. The patient steadily grew worse, and Dr. Monson was called Friday evening, to whom Dr. Hamilton failed to mention that the patient had had an abortion, until after the physician had learned it from other sources. Mrs. Williams was removed to a hospital, where she died Sunday evening, February 20, 1916, from septicæmia or blood poisoning, the source of infection being the uterus.

[1, 2] This, in brief, was the evidence adduced upon which the people relied for a conviction, and upon which the verdict was based. It seems to us to fully warrant the conclusion reached by the jury. The rights of the defendant were fully protected in the instructions given by the court. Because the jury adopted and believed the evidence of the people instead of that of the defendant would not warrant us in reversing the case. It is the province of the jury to determine the credibility of the witnesses, the weight of their testimony, and to decide the facts, and where there is sufficient evidence to support their finding, as there unquestionably is in this case, we cannot interfere with their conclusion.

Other questions have been raised and argued by counsel for defendant, all of which we have carefully considered, and while there were some irregularities committed on the trial, we do not think they were of such seriousness as to constitute prejudicial error.

From the entire record we are convinced that the defendant had a fair and impartial trial; that no reversible error is disclosed thereby, and the judgment must therefore be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

WHITE, C. J., and SCOTT, J., concur.

FARMERS' LIFE INS. CO. v. WEHRLE et al. (No. 8771.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. Libel and Slander 🔑33 — Words Libelous Per Se—Presumption of Damage.

When words published are libelous per se, the law presumes damages; the gist of the action being injury to plaintiff's reputation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 112, 277.]

2. Libel and Slander 🔑9(1)—Newspaper Article Charging Dishonesty.

A newspaper article charging an insurance company with fraud and dishonest conduct in sale of stock, necessarily injuring its reputation and business, was libelous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 80, 90.]

3. Libel and Slander 🔑126 — Verdict Contrary to Evidence—Justification.

In absence of evidence to sustain a plea of justification in an action for libel, a verdict for defendants should have been set aside and a new trial granted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 375, 376.]

4. Libel and Slander 🔑105(3)—Admission of Evidence — Meaning of Language — Reference to Plaintiff.

In an action for libel, it was erroneous to permit defendant to testify that the greater part of the publication did not refer to plaintiff, since the defendant cannot avoid the effect of the language used by testifying that it did not mean what would naturally be inferred to be its meaning.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 294.]

5. Libel and Slander 🔑123(2)—Question for Jury—Meaning of Language.

In an action for libel, the jury must determine from the language published what is the fair meaning of it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 357.]

6. Trial 🔑252(6)—Instructions—Applicability to Evidence.

In an action for libel, where no evidence was introduced upon the issue of truth, it was erroneous to instruct the jury upon that issue.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 601.]

Error to District Court, Saguache County; Charles C. Holbrook, Judge.

Action by the Farmers' Life Insurance Company against John D. Wehrle and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed and remanded.

E. M. Sabin, of Denver (T. C. Ashley, of Denver, of counsel), for plaintiff in error. Palmer & True, of Saguache, and James P. Veerkamp, of Monte Vista, for defendants in error.

TELLER, J. The plaintiff in error brought suit against the defendants in error to recover damages from the publication of alleged libelous matter. The jury returned a verdict for the defendants, and judgment was entered accordingly. The matter alleged to be libelous was published in a newspaper owned and conducted by the defendants, and reads as follows:

"In another place we are printing the first installment of a severe arraignment of the Farmers' Life Insurance Company. The name is a misnomer, as no such company exists; but they are selling about $3,000,000 in stock and when it is sold, if ever, they expect to begin writing insurance. If these concerns were such money makers as the glib-tongued agent would have you believe, why do they not get the financiers of the money centers to buy it? The fact is they cannot be induced to buy because they know there is nothing in it, and it must be sold to people who do not know the real conditions. Give these grafters a wide berth. Learn to say no to them good and strong.

"One of these suave, oily, glib-tongued gentry who recently had some notion, for a few minutes at least, of bringing a $10,000 damage suit against the Post-Dispatch but learned differently when he consulted his bosses, purchased a tract of land in Saguache county for his company for about $12,000 and in the deal traded a few thousand dollars of worthless stock on the same. The place was only worth about $6,000 and to top it all off another party had an option on the land and stated that he expected to have it renewed for another twelve months. This company will now place this land among its estimated assets to fool some other unsuspecting victim whom they hypnotize into buying some stock."

The answer admitted the publication of and concerning the plaintiff of all of the first paragraph down to and including the word "conditions"; denied that the remainder of the publication referred to the plaintiff; and pleaded the truth of what was admitted to have been published of and concerning the plaintiff.

The plaintiff introduced evidence of the filing of its articles of incorporation with the secretary of state, and of the issue of a license or commission by the commissioner of insurance authorizing the parties named in the articles of incorporation to open books and receive subscriptions to the stock of the company. It also introduced evidence tending to show that the publication of the alleged defamatory matter had caused a loss of many hundreds of dollars by reason of subscribers for shares refusing to pay their subscriptions. It is urged that there was no evidence to support the plea of the truth of the matter admitted to have been published concerning the plaintiff; that the matter was libelous per se; and that the court erred, in several of the instructions, in submitting to the jury the question of the truth of these matters. It is also urged that there is error in the ruling by which one of the defendants was allowed to say that the reference to grafters, etc., did not apply to the plaintiff.

[1] The court allowed defendant Wehrle to testify at length as to his investigation of the plaintiff's company, and of other newly formed companies, as well as to the letters which he wrote, and which he received in such investigation; but all of this was limited, by the court, to the question of punitive damages. On a careful review of the abstract, and the supplemental abstract filed by the defendants, we are unable to find any evidence tending to support the plea of the truth of the admitted publication of and concerning the plaintiff. The gist of such an action is the injury to plaintiff's reputation, and when words are libelous per se, the law presumes damages. Republican Publishing Co. v. Conroy, 5 Colo. App. 262, 38 Pac. 423.

[2] The article is clearly libelous since it charged plaintiff with fraudulent and dishonest conduct, such as would bring it into odium and disrepute, and necessarily injured the plaintiff's reputation and business. Republican Publishing Co. v. Mosman, 15 Colo. 399, 24 Pac. 1051; Burns v. Republican Publishing Co., 54 Colo. 100, 128 Pac. 1122; 2 Add. Torts, § 1089.

[3] In the absence of evidence to sustain the plea of justification, a verdict for the defendants should have been set aside, and a new trial granted.

[4, 5] The court erred also in permitting the defendant Wehrle, over plaintiff's objection, to tell the jury that the greater part of the publication did not refer to the plaintiff. In such cases, the jury must determine from the language published what is the fair meaning of it. The defendant cannot avoid the effect of the language used by testifying that it did not mean what would naturally be inferred to be its meaning.

[6] The court erred also in submitting to the jury by its instructions the issue of the truth of the admitted charge against plaintiff. We have already found that there was no evidence introduced upon that issue, and to instruct upon it was clearly to confuse the jury.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the district court.

Reversed.

WHITE, C. J., and HILL, J., concur.

TRAUTMAN v. KRANZ et al. (No. 8870.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. DEEDS 🔑95—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION.

In arriving at the intention of the parties to a deed, the language of the entire deed should be construed together.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. §§ 238, 241-254.]

2. DEEDS 🔑133(2)—ESTATE GRANTED—LIFE ESTATE WITH CONTINGENT REMAINDER.

A son's deed to his mother read that in consideration of love and affection, etc., the son granted and sold to his mother a life estate in the land, reserving the remainder of the estate to the son if he should survive her, but that if she should survive him the remainder should belong absolutely to her, her heirs and assigns. Held, that the mother received a life estate with contingent remainder to become operative and vesting in her upon the death of her son, provided she survived him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Deeds, Cent. Dig. § 371.]

3. WILLS 🔑88(2) — DEED — TESTAMENTARY CHARACTER.

The disposition of other than a life estate to the mother by such deed was not testamentary in character, and so ineffective, since a deed may pass a present interest, and also contain provisions taking effect by way of contingent remainder on the grantor's death during the grantee's life.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 209.]

En Banc. Error to District Court, El Paso County; J. W. Sheafor, Judge.

Suit by Frances E. Trautman, a minor, by Nellie A. Geach, her mother and next friend, against Annie Kranz and others. To review a judgment for defendants, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

P. M. Kistler, of Colorado Springs, for plaintiff in error. Harris & Price, of Colorado Springs, for defendants in error.

HILL, J. This action involves the meaning to be given a deed. The surrounding circumstances proper to consider disclose that in February, 1887, Elizabeth Trautman purchased the lot in controversy; that shortly thereafter she constructed a house thereon where she lived until her death; that in January, 1895, she conveyed the property to her son, Frederick C. Trautman, who was then unmarried; that immediately after the execution of this deed the mother (who was quite old) went away on a trip; that some time after her return and on November 1, 1897, the son, Frederick C. Trautman, executed the deed, the meaning of which is in dispute, to his mother; that on November 3, 1897, he married; that the plaintiff in error is the daughter of Frederick C. Trautman, and was born February 10, 1899; that her father died January 20, 1905; that on December 5, 1911, his mother, Elizabeth Trautman, conveyed this property by warranty deed to the defendant in error, her daughter Annie Kranz; that the mother died December 2, 1914. Both daughter and granddaughter claim the property. The daughter has had possession since the execution of her deed, and has mortgaged the property to the other defendants. This suit was brought by the granddaughter for possession. Judgment was for the defendants.

The deed is in the usual form containing the usual words of conveyance and habendum. That portion necessary to consider reads:

"* * * Between Frederick C. Trautman, party of the first part, and Elizabeth Trautman, his mother, party of the second part. * * * In consideration of love and affection and of the sum of one dollar, to him in hand paid by the said party of the second part, * * * party of the first part has granted, bargained and sold, > and by these presents does grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said party of the second part her heirs and assigns, the following described lands and premises in the city of Colorado Springs, * * * viz.: A life estate for and during the natural life of said Elizabeth Trautman in and to lot twenty (20), * * * saving and reserving the remainder of the estate in said described premises to said Frederick C. Trautman in case he shall survive his said mother, but in case she shall survive him said remainder shall belong absolutely to said Elizabeth Trautman, her heirs and assigns."

The grantor having died before the grantee, the question to determine is, What estate passed by the deed? The plaintiff in error contends that the instrument is testamentary in character other than the life estate; that the estate, other than this, never having passed from Frederick C. Trautman, the deed being ineffective as a will, the property descended to his heir at the termination of the life estate. The defendants in error contend that it conveys to Elizabeth Trautman a life estate, with a contingent remainder to become operative and vested in such grantee upon the death of Frederick C. Trautman, grantor, provided the grantee mother survived him.

[1, 2] Numerous rules of construction have been referred to as sustaining the position of both sides. We think it unnecessary to go into them in detail, but are of opinion, as was the trial court, that the intention of the parties is clearly disclosed by the instrument itself. In arriving at this intention, it is elementary that the language of the entire deed should be construed together. By the adoption of this rule, we find and the language reads, that the grantor sells and conveys to the grantee the land designated to have and to hold the same, etc., and all the estate, right, title, and interest of the said party of the first part, either in law or equity to the only proper use and benefit of the said party of the second part, her heirs and assigns, etc. 'Tis true, in the body of the deed are to be found two exceptions to the language last quoted: First, that the interest conveyed is limited to a life estate and the grantor reserves to himself the remainder in case he shall survive her, but it is further provided that in case she shall survive him, said remainder shall belong absolutely to her, her heirs and assigns. This language must be considered together and must likewise be considered in connection with the language used in the remainder of the deed. When thus considered, it leads to the irresistible conclusion that an interest in the estate passed at the date of the transaction, to wit, a life interest, with a further proviso that the remainder should pass to the mother upon the happening of the contingency, to wit, the death of the grantor prior to that of the grantee. It follows that in giving effect to the words "a life interest," it must be construed in connection with the other language used in the deed, which is to the effect that in case he dies before she does, it then becomes operative as a grant in fee.

[3] When the deed is considered as a whole, we cannot agree with the plaintiff in error that the attempted disposition of other than a life interest was testamentary in character and for that reason ineffective. In volume 2, Devlin on Real Estate (3d Ed.), at page 1581, it is said:

> "But the deed may pass a present interest in the land to the grantee for life, and may also contain provisions to take effect by way of contingent remainder, upon the grantor's death, during the life of the grantee. In such a case the question would arise whether the instrument is to be considered as a conveyance, or is to be deemed of a testamentary character only. The rule is that where the deed passes a present interest, such contingent provisions do not convert it into a will. The grantor cannot revoke such limitations, nor do they become void by his subsequent marriage."

The following cases in principle sustain the construction that we are giving to this deed: Mattocks v. Brown, 103 Pa. 16; Jones v. Caird, 153 Wis. 384, 141 N. W. 228, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 88; Wall v. Wall, 30 Miss. 91, 64 Am. Dec. 147; Craven v. Winter, 38 Iowa, 471; Bassett v. Budlong, 77 Mich. 338, 43 N. W. 984, 18 Am. St. Rep. 404; Wilson v. Carrico, 140 Ind. 533, 40 N. E. 50, 49 Am. St. Rep. 213; Cates v. Cates, 135 Ind. 272, 34 N. E. 957; Hunt v. Hunt, 119 Ky. 39, 82 S. W. 998, 68 L. R. A. 180, 7 Ann. Cas. 788; Durand v. Higgins, 67 Kan. 110, 72 Pac. 567; Abbott v. Holway, 72 Me. 298; Dismukes v. Parrott, 56 Ga. 513; Bevins v. Phillips, 6 Kan. App. 324, 51 Pac. 59; Wynn v. Wynn, 112 Ga. 214, 37 S. E. 378; Owen v. Williams, 114 Ind. 179, 15 N. E. 678; White v. Hopkins, 80 Ga. 154, 4 S. E. 863.

The judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

EBY v. PEOPLE. (No. 8733.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. Criminal Law 🔑369(8) — Evidence of Other Acts—Admissibility.

In a prosecution for rape, where the time and place alleged were not in dispute, evidence of a similar act between defendant and prosecutrix was admissible in corroboration and explanation of the evidence, but not for the purpose of proving an offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 822, 823.]

2. Criminal Law 🔑810—Inconsistent Instructions.

In a prosecution for rape, where there was no dispute as to the time or place of the offense charged, where the girl involved testified to commission of a similar act about a week previous, but denied that there was any such crime at the time and place alleged, and where the evidence was circumstantial, giving instruction that it is sufficient to prove that the defendant committed the crime charged within three years was reversible error under the peculiar circumstances of the case, being misleading and creating a repugnancy between instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1968.]

Error to District Court, Teller County; J. W. Sheafor, Judge.

Charles Eby was convicted of a violation of the age of consent statute, and he brings error. Reversed.

W. M. Alter, of Victor, Barnett & Campbell, of Denver, and K. W. Farr, of Victor, for plaintiff in error. Fred Farrar, Atty. Gen., and Ralph E. C. Kerwin, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the People.

HILL, J. The plaintiff in error, hereafter called the "defendant," was convicted of the violation of our age of consent statute, and sentenced to a term in the penitentiary. The act was alleged to have been committed on March 27, 1915, with one ———, an unmarried female under the age of 18, to wit, of the age of 15. The time and place when and where the crime is sought to be fixed and alleged to have been committed are not in dispute. The testimony of the girl involved is that, at the time and place alleged, the defendant did not commit any such crime. There is testimony of other witnesses to sundry facts and a purported confession of the defendant which (if properly admitted) all tend to show that the crime was committed at the time and place charged. Over defendant's objection, the girl was allowed to testify that a crime similar to the one charged had been committed by the defendant with her at a certain rooming house in Victor about a week prior to the commission of the crime charged in the information.

[1] By instruction No. 7, the jury were told that evidence had been admitted of another similar act, etc., between the defendant and the girl about one week prior to the offense charged; that this evidence was not admitted for the purpose of proving an offense against the defendant upon which he might be convicted, but was received only in corroboration and explanation of the evidence of the act charged; that defendant could not be tried for, nor convicted of, an offense not charged in the information: and that the offense charged is the one alleged to have been committed at the Gould house, March 27, 1915. This instruction correctly states the law in this jurisdiction. See Mitchell v. People, 24 Colo. 532, 52 Pac. 671; Bigcraft v. People, 30 Colo. 298, 70 Pac. 417. It is applicable to the crime for which the defendant was being tried and refers to the time and place when and where the girl testified that no such crime was committed. By instruction No. 8, the jury were told that in a prosecution of this character the people are not bound to prove the exact date as alleged in the information; that it is sufficient if it shall appear from the evidence, etc., that the defendant committed the crime charged in the information at any period of time within three years before the 7th day of April, 1915, the date of filing the information.

[2] By instruction No. 1, the jury were told that the crime charged, in substance, was that Eby, on March 27, 1915, at the county of Teller, etc., did then and there commit and accomplish an act, etc., with ——— an unmarried female under the age of 18, to wit, of the age of 15 years. While instruction No. 8 correctly states the law and should be given where applicable, yet, under the peculiar circumstances disclosed, we are of opinion that it should have been omitted in this case. The defendant's alleged confession, if properly admitted (which we shall not pass upon), is of doubtful import. The girl involved testified positively that he did not commit the crime for which he was convicted. The other testimony upon behalf of the people is circumstantial. It also discloses that, at the time and place of the alleged commission of the crime charged, the prosecuting witness and two other girls were alone with two married men at the home of one of these men between 3 and 4 o'clock in the morning; that they had gone there with these two and another man other than the defendant; that one of the men, who did not live there, was a doctor; and that the defendant, a young man, had been sent for, not knowing the girls were there, under the pretext that he was wanted to drive the doctor's car; also, that the girl involved had only known the defendant for 11 days prior to the night in question. The girl testified that the defendant did commit a similar crime to the one charged, with her about a week prior thereto, and that it was the only one with him within three years. Under instructions Nos. 1 and 8, the jury might have decided that they were justified in finding the defendant guilty of this crime concerning which there was positive testimony, for which reason, in a case lying so close to the border line for lack of testimony, and the fact that there was no necessity for the giving of this instruction, and the further fact that the people had placed before the jury testimony of the commission of a similar crime for which the defendant was not on trial, we are of opinion that the court erred in giving, as it did, without qualification, instruction No. 8. When applied to the facts of this case, it presents a repugnancy between instructions. We cannot say which the jury followed. This necessitates a reversal of the judgment. It is so ordered.

Reversed.

SCOTT, J., not participating.

TAYLOR v. WILDER et al. (No. 8792.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. WILLS 🔑88(1) — WILL DISTINGUISHED FROM CONTRACT—TEST—INTENT OF MAKER.

Whether an instrument is a will or a contract depends upon whether the maker intended that the interest should pass before his death and vest in the other party upon execution of the paper or only upon maker's death, and this depends upon the provisions of the instrument aided by circumstances attending its execution, and it is immaterial what the maker calls the instrument or its form.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 208, 214, 217.]

2. WILLS 🔑88(2) — WILLS DISTINGUISHED FROM CONTRACT—FORM.

An instrument reciting, "For the sum of one dollar and other valuable consideration, I hereby transfer to O. M. my library, of which she is to take immediate possession," held to have been intended to pass title immediately, and not upon the maker's death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 209.]

3. WILLS 🔑88(2) — WILL DISTINGUISHED FROM DEED AND BILL OF SALE—TIME OF TAKING EFFECT.

A deed or bill of sale must take effect upon its execution or not at all, although it is unnecessary that it convey or pass an immediate interest in possession, while a will can only become effective in passing an interest after death.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 209.]

4. WILLS 🔑88(1) — INSTRUMENT OPERATING AS WILL AND CONTRACT OF SALE.

An instrument may, as to one part, be a contract of sale, and, as to another part, a will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 208, 214, 217.]

5. WILLS 🔑88(2) — WILL DISTINGUISHED FROM CONTRACT—FORM.

An instrument reciting, "At my death she is to have * * * all other personal property I may have in my possession at the time of my death," held to be testamentary in character, but, not being properly executed, was noneffective.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 209.]

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑210—CONTRACT TO DEVISE—PAYMENT FOR SERVICES—ENFORCEMENT.

An agreement whereby one undertakes to compensate another out of his estate for services rendered or to be rendered binds the estate, and the person rendering the service, failing to receive the promised amount, may claim a reasonable compensation from the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. § 737.]

Scott, J., dissenting.

En Banc. Error to District Court, City and County of Denver; William D. Wright, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Dillie S. Aldrich, deceased. Claim presented by Ozetta Marshall Taylor for $2,829.68 to the county court, and opposed by Gertie B. Wilder and others, heirs and devisees. Upon trial de novo in district court after appeal from county court judgment was rendered for claimant for $100, and claimant brings error. Affirmed.

John Horne Chiles, of Denver, for plaintiff in error. Robert H. Kane, of Denver, for defendants in error.

WHITE, C. J. This case involves a claim of the plaintiff in error against the estate of Dillie S. Aldrich, deceased. The claim, as presented, was for $2,829.68, and was originally allowed in full by the county court. That judgment, however, was annulled by order of this court in Taylor v. Marshall, 56 Colo. 214, 138 Pac. 25. The cause was thereafter tried in the county court, appealed to the district court, and, upon trial de novo, judgment rendered therein in favor of claimant, the plaintiff in error, for $100. It is this judgment that is now before us.

The essential facts are as follows: Dillie S. Aldrich, residing at Solomon, Kan., executed a will on the 25th day of July, 1907. August 1st thereafter she executed and delivered the following written instrument, viz.:

"For the sum of one dollar and other valuable consideration, I hereby transfer to Ozetta Marshall my library, of which she is to take immediate possession.

"At my death she is to have my sewing machine, table silver, dishes, table linen, and any and all other personal property I may have in my possession at the time of my death.

"August first, 1907.

"Dillie S. Aldrich."

Within a month thereafter Dillie S. Aldrich died, and her estate was administered in this state as well as in Kansas, as stated in Taylor v. Marshall, supra.

The claim of plaintiff in error, who before her marriage was Ozetta Marshall, is based upon the aforesaid alleged bill of sale or instrument in writing, and was presented to the county court, together with a sworn statement of indebtedness in the total sum of $2,829.68, represented by personal property held by deceased at the time of her death, as follows: Household furniture, pictures, wearing apparel, dishes, silverware, etc., in Solomon, Kan., $100; two promissory notes, due and payable to deceased, in the aggregate sum of $800; cash in bank in the Citizens' State Bank of Solomon, Kan., $1,018; cash in the Colorado National Bank of Denver, Colo., $911.68. The judgment was for the value of the items first mentioned, consisting of household goods, etc.

Plaintiff in error contends: (1) That by the aforesaid instrument in writing she became and was the owner of all the personal property hereinbefore designated of which Dillie S. Aldrich died seised and possessed; (2) that, if the instrument in writing does not invest her with the ownership of such property, she is entitled to the value thereof as reasonable compensation for services rendered Dillie S. Aldrich.

[1] 1. Under this proposition it is essential to determine whether the writing in question is in reality a contract or only testamentary in character, or in part the one, and in part the other. It is elementary that the legal character of instruments of this kind depends upon whether the maker intended that ownership or interest should before his death pass from himself and vest in the other party upon the execution of the paper, or whether such ownership or estate should pass only upon his death; and this in turn depends upon the provisions of the instrument, which may be aided by circumstances attending its execution. And the rule is that whatever may be the form of the instrument, or the circumstances attending its execution and delivery, if the intention of the maker was that it should become effective only after his death, it is a will, but, if presently effective, it is a contract. And it is immaterial what the maker calls the instrument for the law fixes its character and effect. The rule is well stated in Powers v. Scharling, 64 Kan. 339, 343, 67 Pac. 820, 821, as follows:

> "In determining whether an instrument be a deed or will, the question is, Did the maker intend to convey any estate or interest whatever to vest before his death and upon the execution of the paper? Or, on the other hand, did he intend that all the interest and estate should take effect only after his death? If the former, it is a deed; if the latter, a will.
>
> "If, however, the testator (the maker of the instrument), intended that the grant should take effect upon the execution of the instrument as to certain of his property then in possession, and as to certain other of his estate not until his death, the instrument, having been properly executed, would be a contract, and irrevocable as to that part in possession and to which it was intended to vest the title, and testamentary as to the residue. * * *"

[2] Examining the instrument here involved, we are certain that the maker thereof intended that it should be effective immediately in passing ownership of the library, and, as to all other property therein mentioned, not until her death. The express words of the first clause of the instrument are immediately effective and pass a present interest. This is not true, however, as to the property covered by the second clause. On the contrary, it is clearly evident that no interest therein was intended to pass until the death of Mrs. Aldrich. She never parted with the right to deal with such property as she pleased. Had she attempted to dispose of it, or to use the money in the banks said to be a part thereof, Mrs. Taylor could not have interfered. This demonstrates that the instrument was not intended to become operative at once so as to vest ownership of such property in Mrs. Taylor.

In Sperber v. Balster, 66 Ga. 317, one Kohler executed a written instrument purporting to convey to Sperber 650 acres of land, in consideration of services rendered him by Sperber as a nurse. The instrument provided that it "shall have full effect" at his death. The court therein said:

> "It is wholly unnecessary to cite cases or invoke precedents in construing a paper like this with a view to get at his meaning in respect to the time when he intended title, right, property, to pass out of himself into the object of his bounty. It is enough to lay down the universal principle, embodied in our Code, § 2395, which is in these words: 'No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a will; and in all cases, to determine the character of an instrument, whether it is testamentary or not, the test is the intention of the maker, from the whole instrument, read in the light of the surrounding circumstances. If such intention be to convey a present estate, though the possession be postponed until after his death, the instrument is a deed; if the intention be to convey an interest accruing and having effect only after his death, it is a will.' So reading this instrument, we construe it to be clearly a will: at all events, we all hold that such is the better legal view of it."

And in Kinnebrew v. Kinnebrew, 35 Ala. 628, we find the following:

> "An instrument under seal, in form a deed of gift, by which the grantor, in consideration of the natural love and affection for the grantee, who was his grandson, and the present payment of $5 by the grantee, conveys to the latter, by the words 'do by these presents give and grant,' a slave 'and fifteen hundred dollars in cash, to be paid to him out of my [grantor's] estate at my death, by my executor or administrator,' held a deed of gift as to the slave, but, as to the money, a purely voluntary executory trust, which a court of equity would not enforce as an instrument inter vivos, but which was valid and operative as a will."

[3-5] A deed or bill of sale must take effect upon its execution or not at all. It is unnecessary that it convey or pass an immediate interest in possession; but it must become effective in passing the interest or estate at its execution. A will is quite the reverse, and can only operate, that is, become effective in passing an interest, after death. And an instrument may, as to one part, be a contract of sale, and, as to another part, a will. Robinson v. Schly & Cooper, 6 Ga. 515. So we hold the second clause of this instrument testamentary in character; but the instrument, not being executed in the manner and form required in the execution of a will, is noneffective. Wilson v. Van Leer, 103 Pa. 600.

[6] 2. It is claimed that the evidence shows that plaintiff in error, while teaching school in Kansas, resided with Mrs. Aldrich, to whom she paid board, and rendered material assistance in the discharge of her household duties, Mrs. Aldrich at the time being in poor health, and that the writing in question constitutes an agreement for compensation for services rendered the decedent. It is true that an agreement by one whereby he undertakes to compensate another out of his estate for services rendered, or to be rendered, binds his estate, and the person rendering the service, failing to receive the promised legacy or bequest, may claim a reasonable recompense from the estate; yet there is nothing in the facts of this case to bring it within the rule. There is not the slightest evidence, written or oral, that deceased ever agreed, either expressly or impliedly, that she would compensate plaintiff in error out of her estate for services rendered or to be rendered. There is evidence that plaintiff in error did render slight service to Mrs. Aldrich, and that the latter spent some time in the home of the former. There is no evidence, however, as to the value of such service. But the alleged right to a judgment for the value of the personal property, notes, and money mentioned herein is sought to be sustained by virtue of a stipulation entered into by the parties. The stipulation provided that the cause should be submitted for determination by the county court upon the sole issue as to whether the claim of plaintiff in error and the instrument executed by Mrs. Aldrich and delivered to plaintiff in error was valid in law, and upon the evidence used in the prior trial without the taking of further testimony, subject, however, to objections by either party as to incompetency, irrelevancy, and immateriality. It further provided that, if the finding and judgment of the county court should be for the claimant, that judgment should be for the full amount claimed. It will be observed that the stipulation referred to the trial of the cause in the county court and the judgment we are now considering was the result of the trial in the district court. Furthermore, the language of the stipulation clearly shows that it had reference only to the validity or invalidity of the second clause of the written instrument, and no question was in the minds of the parties as to the validity of the first clause. The claim of the plaintiff in error was based upon the instrument of writing and extended only to the personal property in the list filed with the claim. This did not include the library, which was the only property mentioned in the first clause.

But, apart from this, the county court was convinced that the stipulation was inadvertently entered into, and it was not contemplated by the parties that it should have the effect which that court ascribed to it, and therefore set it aside. Upon retrial in the district court plaintiff in error made a like contention as to the effect of the stipulation, and it was by that court set aside. We are of the opinion that the discretion of the court was not abused in the premises, and that the substantial rights of plaintiff in error were in no wise prejudiced. Upon the record the plaintiff in error was entitled to no judgment whatever, but defendants in error have not assigned cross-error.

The judgment will therefore be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

SCOTT, J., dissents.

FRANTZ et al. v. BARTELS et al. (No. 8886.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑156(2)—CONVEYANCE OF WATER RIGHTS—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where water rights purported to be conveyed by a contract for the sale of land together with "all water rights belonging to said property under" certain ditches named had been definitely fixed and described by a court in accordance with the vendor's claim, both parties must be presumed to have had in mind the specifically described right which was intended to be conveyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. §§ 176, 179.]

2. EVIDENCE 🔑461(3)—PAROL TESTIMONY TO SHOW INTENT OF PARTIES.

Where a contract for the sale of land provided that land should be conveyed by warranty deed together "with all water rights belonging to said property under" certain ditches named, and the plaintiffs entered into possession, and thereafter title to all water rights was definitely fixed by a court, and the defendants conveyed the land, describing the water rights in the same terms, as the contract, and after the execution of the deed, the judgment fixing such rights was reversed, and it was determined that defendants were not the owners of the rights conveyed, in an action for damages for breach of the contract oral testimony was competent to show the intention of the parties regarding the water rights to be conveyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2131.]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES 🔑158½ (1)—ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for breach of contract to convey land and water rights, a complaint alleging a contract by which the defendants agreed to sell to the plaintiffs a certain tract of land, together with "all water rights belonging to said property" under certain ditches named, and that the plaintiffs entered into possession, and in an action against the plaintiffs, defendants and others, plaintiffs' and defendants' title to the water rights was quieted, and that later, after the warranty deed had been executed, such judgment was reversed, sufficiently declares that it was the intent of the parties that the warranty deed was to convey and warrant a specific and definite water right both in extent and amount.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 189.]

Error to District Court, City and County of Denver; Chas. C. Butler, Judge.

Action by George S. Frantz and another against Louis F. Bartels and another. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiffs bring error. Reversed, with directions.

Melville & Melville, of Denver, for plaintiffs in error. H. L. Lubers and Arthur C. Bartels, both of Denver, for defendants in error.

SCOTT, J. The action is in damage for breach of warranty. To the amended complaint the defendants below and in error filed a general demurrer upon the ground that such complaint did not state facts sufficient in law to constitute a cause of action against the defendants. This demurrer was sustained by the court. The plaintiffs elected to stand on their complaint, and this ruling of the court is before us for review.

Briefly, the complaint alleges a contract by which the defendants agreed to sell to plaintiffs a certain tract of land and to convey the same by warranty deed together with "all water rights belonging to said property under the Epperson or Platte ditches, or the Green Valley ditch." That thereafter and immediately the plaintiffs entered into possession of said premises. That thereafter and on the 24th day of January, 1908, the Green Valley Ditch Company instituted an action in the district court of the city and county of Denver against these plaintiffs and others, to quiet its title to all water rights in said Green River ditch. That the defendants employed counsel to appear in said action with plaintiffs, to defend the plaintiffs' and defendants' rights therein. That thereafter the said district court rendered judgment in said action confirming the equitable ownership in plaintiff and their grantors to approximately one-sixth cubic foot of water per second of time, from the said Green Valley ditch, together with the proportionate interest in said ditch to carry said amount of water to said land. That subsequent to the rendition of said judgment and on the 3d day of September, 1909, the defendants executed and delivered to plaintiffs their warranty deed, and thereby conveyed to plaintiffs the said land and "all water rights belonging to said property under the Epperson or Platte ditches, or the Green Valley ditch." That at the time of the execution and delivery of said deed it was agreed and understood between plaintiffs and defendants that the latter owned and were by said deed conveying to plaintiffs one-sixth of a cubic foot of water per second of time from said ditch, together with a proportionate interest in said ditch to carry said water to the land involved. That thereafter and on the 6th day of January, 1913, the Green Valley Ditch Company sued out a writ of error from the Supreme Court in the cause above cited, and in such proceeding the judgment of the district court was reversed by the Supreme Court and title to all of said water awarded to said ditch company. That in said proceeding in the Supreme Court both plaintiffs and defendants employed counsel to defend their interests. That by said judgment it was finally determined that the defendants were not the owners of the water rights involved, and so sold and conveyed to plaintiffs, and that by reason of the premises the plaintiffs are damaged in the sum of $1,000, and in the further sum of $50 for attorneys' fees, and $522.25 expended in costs in such proceedings. We are of the opinion that a general demurrer will not properly lie as against the complaint, and that the court erred in so holding.

The defendants in error seek to invoke the well-settled rule that in the case of a contract for the sale of land which under the statute must be in writing, evidence is not admissible of any modification by parol. But in our view this rule can have no application in the case before us. There does not appear to be any such contention by plaintiffs, but rather to apply the rule which counsel themselves cite, as laid down in Paige on Contracts, as follows:

> "It is a recognized rule of construction that the court will place itself in the position of the parties who made the contract as nearly as can be done, in admitting evidence of surrounding facts and circumstances. * * * Even though the contract is in writing, extrinsic evidence of the surrounding facts and circumstances is admissible to aid the court in determining the intention of the parties." Paige on Contracts, § 1123.

The contract and deed were for the conveyance of all water rights belonging to said property under specified ditches. While the complaint does not specifically recite, yet it is broad enough to admit of testimony in explanation of the intent and understanding of the parties as to the descriptive expression used in the agreement and deed. This expression not only conveys the impression that there were water rights belonging to the estate so sold and conveyed, but that such water rights were from certain specifically named ditches. It may be the fact that water from these ditches was at the time, and had been for many years, applied to the land for irrigation purposes, and that this was well known to both plaintiffs and defendants. It may be that the defendants at the time of the execution of the contract for the sale of the land believed, and so represented to plaintiffs, that they were the owners of said water right, and that the same was then applied to the land.

[1] The complaint specifically alleges that a court of competent jurisdiction had confirmed to the defendants a specific water right fixing the amount, and to be taken from the ditch named in the warranty deed. In that action the defendants had employed counsel to defend their claim, and must be presumed to have been advised of said judgment. So that under the complaint at the time the defendants executed and delivered their warranty deed, the water rights which they purported to convey had been definitely fixed and described by the court in exact accord with their contention and claim. If this be true, both parties must be presumed to have had in mind, and to have well understood, the specifically described right which was intended to be conveyed.

[2] Oral testimony is competent to show this intention. The principle to be applied here is clearly stated in McPhee v. Young, 13 Colo. 80, 21 Pac. 1014, where it was said:

> "The purpose of the interpretation and construction * * * is to give effect to the intention of the parties. Their intention must first be sought in the instrument itself. The language used by the parties is the best evidence of their intention. This is elementary. * * * Thus far only the instrument itself has been considered. If, however, the intent and meaning of the parties is not clearly disclosed by the language of the contract, then competent evidence bearing upon the construction given to the instrument by the parties themselves, by their acts and conduct in its performance, may be considered."

In Gelwicks v. Todd, 24 Colo. 494, 52 Pac. 788, the court clearly distinguishes an action seeking to vary or change a written contract by parol, and one to determine the intention of the parties as here, where the water right in question is not fully described in the conveyance. It was there said:

> "At the time of this ruling, the opinion in the case of Arnett v. Linhart, 21 Colo. 188 [40 Pac. 355], though handed down, probably was not reported, at least, not called to the attention of the trial court. In this case, this court, basing its ruling upon the Strickler Case, supra [16 Colo. 61, 26 Pac. 313, 25 Am. St. Rep. 245], says: 'Although a water right may be appurtenant to the land, it is the subject of property and may be transferred either with or without the land.' Strickler v. City of Colorado Springs, 16 Colo. 61 [26 Pac. 313, 25 Am. St. Rep. 245]. Being therefore a distinct subject of grant, and transferable either with or without the land, whether a deed to land conveys the water right depends upon the intention of the grantor, which is to be gathered from the express terms of the deed]; or, when it is silent as to the water right, from the presumption that arises from the circumstances, and whether such right is or is not incident to and necessary to the beneficial enjoyment of the land."

The rule here announced is general as applied to deeds and other contracts, and its application has been common in conveyances in which water rights were concerned. It is said by Judge Kinney, in his work on Irrigation, Kinney on Irrigation, p. 1790, that:

> "It is self-evident from the nature of a water right, or the right to the use of water, that it cannot be described with the same degree of accuracy that the land conveyed by the same instrument can be described—by the legal subdivisions of the government survey, by lots and blocks, or by metes and bounds. And this is where the most of the trouble has arisen; and in deeds where there is no question as to the exact tract of land which was conveyed, the attempted descriptions of the water rights have been so vague and indefinite that the courts have oftentimes been called upon to determine as to just what was attempted to be conveyed in that respect. In construing deeds of this nature, the terms in the deed themselves must first be considered, and if they are vague or indefinite as to the exact water right or easement for a ditch, parol or extrinsic testimony may be introduced in order to explain away any ambiguity existing in the language used and to determine exactly what was intended to be conveyed."

[3] We think that the complaint sufficiently declares that it was the intent and purpose of the parties that the warranty deed was to convey and warrant a specific and definite water right both in extent and amount.

The judgment is reversed, with direction to overrule the demurrer, and to permit the parties to proceed as they may be advised.

Judgment reversed.

WHITE, C. J., and GARRIGUES, J., concur.

LAWSON v. PEOPLE. (No. 8730.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1186(6)—APPEAL—CONFESSION OF ERROR—REVIEW.

Although the present Attorney General has filed a confession of error, the better practice is to pass upon some of the assignments of error, where an able brief has been filed by the former Attorney General.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3218.]

2. JUDGES 🔑47(1) — DISQUALIFICATION — STATUTE—CONSTRUCTION.

Rev. St. 1908, § 6963, which disqualifies a judge who has been of counsel in the case, intends that no judge shall preside in a case in which he is not wholly free, disinterested, impartial, and independent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 214–219, 223.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑178—NOLLE PROSEQUI—EFFECT.

A nolle prosequi puts an end to the case, but will not, as a rule, bar a new prosecution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 326–329.]

4. JUDGES 🔑51(1)—CHANGE OF JUDGE—BAR—NOLLE PROSEQUI.

Where a nolle prosequi was entered, the case was at an end, and a change of judge secured therein did not bar defendant's right to a change on filing of a new information.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. §§ 224, 225.]

En Banc. Error to District Court, Las Animas County; Granby Hillyer, Judge.

John R. Lawson was found guilty of murder in the first degree and his punishment fixed at life imprisonment, and he brings error. Reversed.

O. H. Dasher, of Trinidad, Fred W. Clark, of Greeley, and E. P. Costigan, B. F. Reed, and Horace N. Hawkins, all of Denver, for plaintiff in error. Leslie E. Hubbard, Atty. Gen., Fred Farrar, Former Atty. Gen., and Norton Montgomery and Frank C. West, Asst Attys. Gen., for the People.

HILL, J. Upon February 15, 1915, the then Attorney General filed an information in the district court of Las Animas county in which the plaintiff in error, John R. Lawson (hereafter called the "defendant"), and several others were charged with the murder of one John Nimmo. The defendant was granted a separate trial, and on May 3, 1915, a jury found him guilty of murder in the first degree and fixed the punishment at imprisonment for life.

[1] There are 227 assignments of error, many of which are argued at length in the briefs. The present Attorney General has field a confession of error as to 2 of the defendant's assignments of error and a statement of reasons therefor. In such case, it appears to have been the uniform practice of this court to reverse the case upon his confession of error without giving it further consideration. We would do so here, were it not for the fact that the former Attorney General (who filed the information and prosecuted the case) filed herein, during his term of office, a very able and exhaustive brief upon behalf of the people, in support of the regularity of the conviction. In such circumstances, we think it the better practice to pass upon some of the assignments of error, or one of them at least, upon which the present Attorney General has confessed error.

It is claimed that the trial court erred in denying the defendant's petition for a change of judges. This is one of the errors confessed by the present Attorney General. The record discloses that on March 4, 1915, an order was entered based on a stipulation that a petition for change of judges filed in another case be considered as filed in this case upon behalf of this defendant. Upon March 9th, following, an order was entered denying the petition for change of judges, and the defendant was forced to proceed to trial before the honorable judge who denied the motion. The substance of this petition for change of venue and the affidavits in support of it, so far as the disqualifications of the judge are concerned, are substantially identical with those in People ex rel. Burke et al. v. District Court et al., 60 Colo. 1, 152 Pac. 149, the reasoning in which, when adopted in this case, compels us to hold that it was the duty of the court to have called in another judge, and that it was prejudicial error to deny the defendant's petition for change of judges. This matter was thoroughly covered in the former opinion, which involved practically the same facts and the same judge; nothing would be accomplished by going over it again.

The former Attorney General contends that the right to a change of judges is purely statutory; that our statute provides but for one change of judges, citing Erbaugh v. People, 57 Colo. 48, 140 Pac. 188, as thus holding. He then states that the defendant had been granted such change prior to the consideration of the petition in question; that for this reason the trial court was justified in denying this petition. The defendant denies that he ever made previous application for or secured a change of judges in this action. We deem it unnecessary to pass upon the questions whether our statute limits the changes of judges to one when the one thus called is ascertained to be incompetent under section 6963, Rev. Stats. 1908, or to determine what was meant by the language used in Erbaugh v. People, supra, as this question was not involved in that case. Neither is it necessary to determine whether the common-law rule concerning the disqualification of judges is in force in this jurisdiction.

Counsel concedes that no previous petition for change of judges was ever filed or acted upon since the information was filed in this case, but claims that upon account of certain facts alleged to have taken place, as set forth in an affidavit by one of his assistants in resisting the motion for a new trial, the defendant should be held to have exhausted his right in this respect. The substance of this affidavit is that upon August 29, 1914, a grand jury returned an indictment against this defendant and a number of others, wherein they were charged with the murder of John Nimmo; that the offense charged in said indictment is the same offense of which defendant has been convicted in this case; that in the former case the defendants, including this defendant, filed a petition for change of judges on the ground of prejudice of Judge McHenry, the then only judge of said district; that the petition was granted and another judge called in, but who did not try the case; that thereafter the Attorney General appeared in said court before Judge McHenry and entered a nolle prosequi in said action, assigning as his reasons that direct informations had been or are about to be filed charging the same offense as the indictment did. The argument is that the information in this action is but a continuation of the case instituted by the indictment referred to in the affidavit, and that the defendant, having procured one change of judges in the indictment case by disqualifying Judge McHenry, is not entitled to another change in this case.

[2] We cannot agree with this line of reasoning. In State ex rel. v. Hocker, Judge, 34 Fla. 25, at page 29, 15 South. 581, 583 (25 L. R. A. 114) it is said:

> "The law which disqualifies a judge who has been of counsel in the case intends that no judge shall preside in a case in which he is not wholly free, disinterested, impartial and independent. The great principle should not have a narrow or technical construction, but should be applied to all classes of cases where a judicial officer is called upon to decide controversies between the people."

In 10 Encyclopedia of Pleading and Practice, at page 558, it is said:

> "A nolle prosequi is not a final disposition of the case and will not bar another prosecution for the same offense. It is not an acquittal, but it is like a nonsuit or discontinuance in a civil suit, and leaves the matter in the same condition in which it was before the commencement of the prosecution."

[3] At page 561, the author says:

> "Some doubt and conflict of opinion have existed, as to the right to try the defendant in the same proceeding in which a nolle prosequi has been entered, though from the cases in which the point was directly involved, as well as from the tenor of the authorities generally upon the effect of a nolle prosequi as a bar, as hereinbefore set out, the general rule seems to be that a new prosecution may be instituted, but the nol. pros. puts an end to the one in which it is entered."

In Bishop's New Criminal Procedure, vol. 2 (2d Ed.) § 1395, in commenting upon the effect of nolle prosequi, it is said:

> "Its Effect.—We see, therefore, that a nolle prosequi during trial bars a subsequent prosecution for the same offense, whether on the same or another indictment. A fortiori it does when entered between the verdict and the sentence. Entered before trial, it, and the proceeding it discontinues, are no impediment to a subsequent prosecution for the same offense. It simply puts an end to the particular indictment, count, or part of a count to which it is applied, without prejudice to new proceedings; but the part or whole of the present proceeding which has been reached by it cannot be revived. In the language of an old case, 'the king cannot afterwards proceed in the same suit, but he may begin anew.'"

In State v. Billings, 140 Mo. 193, in commenting upon this subject and the statutes concerning it, at page 204, 41 S. W. 778, 780, the Supreme Court of Missouri says:

> "There is nothing in section 4163 which prevents a defendant from obtaining a change of venue on a second indictment. It is to all intents and purposes a new case for the purpose of allowing the defendant his right to plead and to take any other step necessary to his defense."

[4] We are in accord with the foregoing authorities, and are of opinion, for the purposes intended by our statute pertaining to the disqualifications of judges, that the filing of this information was the institution of a new suit. The indictment was by a grand jury. When the nolle prosequi was entered, that case was at an end. Any other conclusion might, in certain cases, defeat the object which the statute seeks to accomplish, if the defendant is entitled to but one change of judges. This was practically the effect here. To illustrate, the indictment came before one of the local judges, he was disqualified, and called another from the outside. This latter judge, however, did not try the case. Thereafter, it was dismissed, and still later on this information was filed by permission of the already disqualified judge in the former case. This case came on for trial before the other local judge, who the defendant showed was disqualified. To hold that he could try the case because the defendant had secured a change of judges in the other case would be to say that, where a defendant secures a change from one judge on account of disqualification and another is called in, the Attorney General or district attorney could defeat the defendant's statutory right by dismissing the former case and thereafter file an information before another disqualified judge. With this we cannot agree. For the purpose of this act, the distinction between the two cases is plain. As this ruling necessitates a reversal of the judgment, it is unnecessary to consider the other assignment of error confessed by the present Attorney General, or any of the others.

The judgment is reversed.

Reversed.

GARRIGUES, J., concurs in the reversal of the judgment on the sole ground that the Attorney General has confessed error.

ASIATIC TUNNEL MIN. & MILL. CO. v. STEPHENSON. (No. 8871.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑537(1)—ACTION—NONSUIT.

Where the execution and delivery of the note in suit were admitted, and its assignment to plaintiff proved, the court properly refused to grant nonsuit; there being a conflict of evidence on the only ground of defense presented, an alleged agreement that the note should be paid only out of profits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1862, 1871–1875, 1891–1893.]

2. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑316—ASSIGNMENT—LACK OF CONSIDERATION AS DEFENSE TO MAKER.

Lack of consideration for an assignment of a note is no defense to the maker in the assignee's action on the instrument, since the maker is protected by judgment against him from further suit on the note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. § 752.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1033(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—NONNEGOTIABLE NOTE.

Where defendant was permitted to defend suit on its note on the same grounds as would have been allowed had the action been brought by the payee and assignor of the note, instead of the assignee, defendant cannot complain that the instrument was treated as negotiable under the law merchant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4052.]

4. ATTACHMENT 🔑40 — GROUND — FRAUD OF DEBTOR.

To justify attachment of a debtor's property, it is not necessary that there should be actual fraud on his part; it being sufficient if he conveys or assigns his property to hinder or delay his creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 92–106.]

5. ATTACHMENT 🔑47(4) — GROUNDS — DEBTOR'S FRAUD—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action on a note wherein plaintiff obtained writ of attachment, evidence held to support an inference of defendant's intent to prevent the immediate enforcement of plaintiff's claim, thus justifying the attachment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 870–875.]

Error to District Court, Rio Grande County; Jesse C. Wiley, Judge.

Action by Omie Stephenson against the Asiatic Tunnel Mining & Milling Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

William H. Dickson, of Denver, and James P. Veerkamp, of Monte Vista, for plaintiff in error. Jesse Stephenson, of Monte Vista, for defendant in error.

TELLER, J. The defendant in error recovered a judgment against the plaintiff in error on a promissory note made and delivered by it to one Sandford, who assigned it to the plaintiff before maturity. The plaintiff filed with her complaint an affidavit averring that the defendant was about fraudulently to transfer its property so as to hinder and delay its creditors, and particularly the plaintiff, and obtained writ of attachment, which was levied on the defendant's property some days before the note became due. The answer contained a statutory denial of the assignment of the note and of a consideration of an assignment, traversed the affidavit for attachment, and alleged that the note was executed and delivered to Sandford under an agreement that it should be paid only out of the net profits of the defendant in the operation of its mines, and that the plaintiff took said note with full knowledge of such agreement.

The plaintiff introduced the note in evidence and proved the assignment thereof to her. She also proved the making and recording of a deed of trust on the defendant's property to secure an issue of bonds to the amount of $200,000 a few days after the beginning of the suit; also, a notice to the defendant's stockholders of a meeting to authorize such incumbrance some days before the suit was begun. Plaintiff relied on the proposal to issue the bonds as evidence of a purpose on the part of defendant to hinder and delay its creditors.

On the question of the agreement that the note should be paid only out of profits, there was a conflict of evidence; a witness for defendant testifying that there was such an agreement, and three witnesses for the plaintiff testifying to the contrary. The testimony showed, also, several payments of interest on the note.

[1] The execution and delivery of the note being admitted and its assignment proved, the court did not err in refusing to grant a nonsuit; there being a conflict of evidence on the only ground of defense presented. Counsel for plaintiff in error urge that the court erred in sustaining objections to its question on the matter of consideration for the assignment of the note, as well as in instruction 11, in which the jury were told that the matter of consideration for the assignment was not a proper subject of inquiry.

[2] There was no error in respect to either of these matters. The rule is well settled in this state that the maker of a note is not concerned with the consideration of an assignment of it. He is protected by the judgment against him from further suit on the note. Walsh v. Allen, 6 Colo. App. 303, 40 Pac. 473; Lake County v. Schradsky, 31 Colo. 178, 71 Pac. 1104; Sykes v. Kruse, 49 Colo. 560, 113 Pac. 1013.

[3] The defendant was permitted to defend upon the same grounds as would have been allowed had the action been brought by the assignor of the note, and no complaint can be made that the instrument was treated as negotiable under the law merchant.

[4] It is also contended that the evidence is not sufficient to support the verdict on the attachment issue. We cannot agree with that contention. It was in evidence that some three weeks before the suit was begun notices of a stockholders' meeting were sent out, preparatory to the incumbering of the property. This note was the only debt owing by the company, and one witness testified that the treasurer, upon whom had devolved the management of the company's business, had said that the note would not be paid. It is not necessary, under the law, as construed by this court and the Court of Appeals, that there should be actual fraud on the part of a debtor to justify an attachment of his property. It is sufficient if he conveys or assigns his property for the purpose of hindering or delaying his creditors. Curran v. Rothschild, 14 Colo. App. 497, 60 Pac. 1111; Hafelfinger v. Perry, 52 Colo. 444, 121 Pac. 1021. In the latter case we said:

> When "it can be plainly seen that it was the design of a party to hinder or delay the collection of a just claim, although perhaps not actually to ultimately defeat it, still a ground of attachment is made out."

[5] The evidence in this case was such that the jury might reasonably infer from it an intent to prevent the immediate enforcement of this claim, and we cannot therefore disturb the verdict on that issue.

The discussion of the last-mentioned question is a sufficient answer to the allegation of error on the instructions which relate to that subject. Counsel contend that the court erred in several instances in overruling their objections to testimony; but, while in some cases the objections were well taken, we do not find that the testimony admitted was prejudicial so as to justify a reversal on that ground.

The cause was fairly tried, the instructions were fair to both sides, and the verdict is supported by the evidence.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Affirmed.

WHITE, C. J., and HILL, J., concur.

KELLER v. MILLER. (No. 8875.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⚷138 — DAMAGES TO RESIDUE—LAND TAKEN FOR DRAINAGE PURPOSES—DRAINS ON OTHER LANDS.

Under Rev. St. 1908, § 2420, providing that commissioners in eminent domain proceedings shall hear the proofs and allegations of the parties, and after viewing the premises shall ascertain and certify the compensation to be made for the lands, etc., to be taken or injuriously affected, as well as damages accruing to the owner or parties interested in consequence of the condemnation of the land taken or injuriously affected, in proceedings to condemn a right of way for a drain ditch upon the land of defendant, defendant was entitled only to damages to the remainder of her land which resulted from the taking of the land condemned, and such damages could not include those accruing from the operation of drains and ditches on the lands of others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 370.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚷1046(5)—REVIEW—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

In condemnation proceedings, where a question regarding the matter of benefits was asked by a juror and answered by the court with consent of counsel for defendant, and no objection was made to the answer at the time it was given, and the jury found benefits to the amount of $25, and there was no evidence in the record to show whether or not there was testimony as to the amount and value of the benefits, and instructions referring to the question of benefits were not complained of, and one of such instructions was given as requested by defendant, prejudicial error affecting the substantial rights of the defendant is not shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4134.]

3. EMINENT DOMAIN 🔑265(1) — DAMAGES — STATUTE.

In eminent domain proceedings, where it appeared that plaintiff prior to the commencement of the proceedings lawfully tendered to defendant the sum of $300, which the defendant refused, and the jury awarded defendant $136.66⅔ as damages, an order that the defendant be awarded no costs in the proceedings and that none of defendant's costs be taxed to plaintiff was a compliance with Rev. St. 1908, § 2424, providing that in eminent domain proceedings, if the amount of compensation ascertained by a jury or by a board of commissioners shall not be in excess of any lawful tender of compensation found to have been made by petitioner to the party entitled to compensation shall be awarded, no costs provided to be taxed under the provision of the act shall be allowed to such party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 690.]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑281 — EMINENT DOMAIN 🔑265(1)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—COSTS.

Rev. St. 1908, § 2424, in so far as it requires the landowner to be taxed with any costs not contumaciously or unreasonably incurred by him, is violative of Const. art. 2, § 15, providing that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public or private use without just compensation, such compensation to be ascertained by a board of commissioners, of not less than three freeholders, or by a jury, when required by the owner of the property, in such manner as may be prescribed by law, and until the same shall be paid to the owner or into court the property shall not be needlessly disturbed or the proprietary rights of the owner therein divested.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 880; Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 690.]

En Banc. Error to District Court, Montrose County; Thomas J. Black, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by F. H. Miller against Lina Keller, in which defendant filed a cross-petition. From the judgment, the defendant brings error. Reversed and remanded, with directions for proceedings consistent with the opinion.

Hugo Selig and Henry A. Cox, both of Montrose, for plaintiff in error. Catlin & Blake, of Montrose, for defendant in error.

ALLEN, J. F. H. Miller, plaintiff below, instituted proceedings under the eminent domain act to condemn a right of way for a drain ditch upon the land of Lina Keller, defendant below. The land on which this right of way is located will be hereinafter referred to as the Keller north 40.

The defendant filed a cross-petition alleging, in substance, that she is also the owner of the 40 acres lying immediately south of the Keller north 40; that a ditch which carries water through plaintiff's drainage system lies adjacent and contiguous to this south 40 for a distance of a quarter of a mile along the upper side, which is the east side of said south 40 acres; that water is seeping, percolating, and overflowing from said ditch along its entire length, and that plaintiff's ditch and drainage system have injured and will injure the said south 40-acre tract as well as the lands described in the petition, or the north 40.

On motion of plaintiff the trial court struck from the files the cross-complaint "in so far as the same relates to damages arising from the construction and operation of a ditch on other lands than the land of the respondent."

The facts of the case and the applicability of the law thereto may be more clearly understood if it is borne in mind how the several tracts of land mentioned in the record are situated with reference to each other. The land of the defendant, Keller, consists of 80 acres, the same being the north 40 described in plaintiff's petition and the south 40. The land of the plaintiff, Miller, lies southeast of the Keller land. North of the Miller land, and east of the Keller south 40, adjoining same, is the McCormick tract. East of the Keller north 40, adjoining same, is the Beckman tract. The drainage ditch of plaintiff commences on plaintiff's land; thence runs north close to the eastern boundary of the Keller south 40, but lying upon the McCormick land; thence continues north for a short distance along the eastern boundary of the Keller north 40, but upon the Beckman land; and thence runs westerly for a short distance into the Keller north 40. The land taken by the plaintiff by these condemnation proceedings is a strip lying in the Keller north 40, which is occupied by the ditch after it enters the Keller land.

The first and main ground and contention argued by plaintiff in error, defendant below, is that the trial court erred in excluding from the consideration of the jury the question of damages, if any, to the lands of defendant caused by the construction of a drain ditch by plaintiff on the lands of McCormick and Beckman adjoining defendant's land on the east, and not sought to be condemned by these proceedings.

This contention involves the correctness of the following instruction given by the court to the jury:

> "The court instructs the jury that you may take into consideration in assessing damages any interference with the irrigation of defendant's lands and seepage and percolating waters that you may believe from the evidence to follow from the construction and operation of the ditch of petitioner across the lands of respondent, and deprivation, if any, of any special use defendant has for said lands taken or those adjacent thereto."

The defendant, plaintiff in error, complains that this instruction was erroneous because:

It "limited respondent's damages to the construction and operation of the ditch on the lands of respondent, and withdrew from the consideration of the jury damages present and prospective from the operation of ditches and drains on the lands of others, and part of the petitioner's drainage system."

The cross-complaint, which was stricken by the court, presented the same question as that raised in the objections to the foregoing instruction, and if the instruction is correct the cross-complaint was properly stricken. The question to be determined is what damages are recoverable by the defendant in this condemnation proceeding as damages to the residue.

[1] The only statute which directs what damages shall be awarded to a landowner in eminent domain proceedings is section 2621 (1912 Ed.) Mills' Ann. St. (section 2420, R. S. 1908), providing what commissioners appointed in such proceedings shall do, and that such commissioners—

> "shall hear the proofs and allegations of the parties, and after viewing the premises, shall, without fear, favor or partiality, ascertain and certify the compensation proper to be made to said owner or parties interested, for the lands, real estate or claims to be taken or affected, as well as all damages accruing to the owners or parties interested in consequence of the condemnation of the same, taken or injuriously affected, as aforesaid."

The statute limits the recovery of damages affecting land not actually taken to such damages as accrue "in consequence of the condemnation." The language employed is not broad enough to include all damages arising from conducting the enterprise for the benefit and use of which the land is condemned when such enterprise necessitates the use of other land than that of the respondent. The statute does not contemplate the awarding of such damages as result by what is done outside of the land condemned.

> "Damages to the remainder by what is done elsewhere than on the part taken are not to be considered." Section 569, Lewis, Eminent Domain (2d Ed.), citing Atchison, etc., R. R. Co. v. Boerner, 34 Neb. 240, 51 N. W. 842, 33 Am. St. Rep. 637, reaffirmed 45 Neb. 453, 63 N. W. 787; Longworth v. Meriden & W. R. R. Co., 61 Conn. 451, 23 Atl. 827; Tinker v. Rockford, 137 Ill. 123, 28 N. E. 573; Egbert v. Lake Shore, etc., R. R. Co., 6 Ind. App. 350, 33 N. E. 659; Alabama Mid. R. R. Co. v. Williams, 92 Ala. 277, 9 South. 203.

The plaintiff in error cites Denver City Irrigation & Water Co. v. Middaugh, 12 Colo. 434, 21 Pac. 565, 13 Am. St. Rep. 234; Farmers' Reservoir & Irr. Co. v. Cooper, 54 Colo. 403, 130 Pac. 1004; Home Supply Ditch Co. v. Hamlin, 6 Colo. App. 351, 40 Pac. 582. From these cases it will be seen that the owner of land sought to be condemned is entitled to damages to the residue caused by such taking and not to damages that may be caused by the whole canal system or drainage system. The balance of the drainage system in the case at bar is built on the plaintiff Miller's own land and rights of way owned and acquired by him on lands of McCormick and Beckman, and damages that may ensue to defendant's premises from that part of the drainage system on plaintiff's own land and the McCormick and Beckman lands are not to be considered by the jury in this proceeding to condemn a right of way for drain ditch across the Keller land.

The case of Garnet Co. v. Sampson, 48 Colo. 291, 110 Pac. 79, 1136, cited by plaintiff in error, is not in conflict with the theory, instructions, and rulings of the trial court. That case holds that in assessing damages for the lands taken for the construction of a canal or reservoir thereon injuries to the residue of such lands arising from seepage and damages for the same should be included in the original assessment. In none of the authorities cited is it held or intimated that the owner of land can recover in a condemnation proceeding for damages from an entire canal system or drainage system when same is located in great part on lands of others, but he is only entitled to recover damages to the remainder of his land caused or which may be caused from that part of the right of way sought to be condemned on his land.

> "It has been held that, when part of a parcel of land is taken for a use that is detrimental to the remaining land, such as a railroad, the owner is not entitled to the full diminution of the market value of the land arising from the construction and operation of the railroad, but only to so much of it as is due to the fact that part of his land was taken." 10 Ruling Case Law, p. 154, § 135, citing (note 9) Walker v. Old Colony, etc., R. Co., 103 Mass. 10, 4 Am. Rep. 509.

In the case cited above in R. C. L. the court says:

> "But, when land is taken, the owner is entitled to compensation for such injury to the value of his whole lot as is occasioned by the appropriation of a part of it to the uses for which it is taken."

Damages to the residue which are recoverable are those which result from the taking of the land condemned, and in the case at bar cannot include those accruing "from the operation of ditches and drains on lands of others," as contended by plaintiff in error. There was therefore no error in the giving of the instruction hereinbefore quoted or in striking the cross-complaint.

[2] An assignment of error is predicated upon the trial court's answering a question asked by a juror at the close of the trial. Plaintiff in error contends that the juror's question was not based on the evidence, that the court's answer was not responsive to the question, and was a comment upon the evidence, and that the court's answer prejudiced the respondent in the matter of benefits.

The record shows that the question was asked and answered with the consent of counsel for plaintiff in error, and that no objection was made to the answer at the time it was given. The jury in its verdict found the benefits to amount to $25. There is no evidence whatever in the record to show whether or not there was testimony as to the amount and value of the benefits, or, if any testimony was introduced, what it was. The instructions to the jury so far as such instructions referred to the question of benefits are not complained of, and one of such instructions was given as requested by plaintiff in error.

Under these circumstances, and the state of the record, it does not appear that there was any prejudicial error committed either in answering the juror's question or by the answer that was given.

Without deciding whether or not the form of the verdict, the verdict itself, or the form of the judgment in the trial of this cause was correct, we find that there was no defect in the proceedings in any of these respects which affected the substantial rights of the plaintiff in error, and further review of these matters is not necessary.

[3] Error is assigned upon the trial court's order:

"That defendant be awarded no costs in these proceedings, and that none of the defendant's costs herein be taxed to plaintiff."

This order was made upon a finding:

"That prior to the commencement of these proceedings the plaintiff herein did lawfully tender to said defendant the sum of $300, * * * and that the said defendant refused same."

This finding is conceded to be true. The jury awarded defendant $136.66⅔ as damages. The trial court's order as to costs appears to be a compliance with section 2625 (1912 Ed.) Mills' Ann. St. (section 2424, R. S. 1908), providing, among other things, that:

"If the amount of compensation ascertained by any jury, or by a board of commissioners as provided in this act, shall not be in excess of any lawful tender of compensation found by the court or judge to have been made by the petitioner to the party to whom such compensation shall be awarded, no costs provided to be taxed under the provisions of this act shall be allowed to such party."

[4] It is the contention of plaintiff in error that the above-quoted part of the statute is unconstitutional and void upon the ground that it is in violation of section 15, art. 2, of the Constitution of the state of Colorado, which provides:

"That private property shall not be taken or damaged for public or private use, without just compensation. Such compensation shall be ascertained by a board of commissioners, of not less than three freeholders, or by a jury, when required by the owner of the property, in such manner as may be prescribed by law, and until the same shall be paid to the owner, or into court for the owner, the property shall not be needlessly disturbed, or the proprietary rights of the owner therein divested."

Of this constitutional provision it was said in Dolores No. 2 Land & Canal Co. v. Hartman, 17 Colo. 138, 29 Pac. 378:

"Section 15 of the Bill of Rights declares, inter alia, 'that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public or private use without just compensation'—a declaration which is repeated at the beginning of the eminent domain act. The undeniable intent of this provision is to secure the landowner whose property is taken against his will a fair compensation therefor. It cannot have been the purpose of the constitutional convention to require payment by the owner of costs reasonably incurred in the proceeding whereby his premises are taken. In some instances such costs will amount to nearly or quite as much as the compensation awarded. But if the owner must disburse for costs the money received for his land, the compensation cannot be regarded as 'just' within the meaning of the constitutional guaranty. However it might be as to attorney's fees and other like expenses, we do not hesitate to say that the spirit of the Constitution clearly covers the class of expenses usually taxed as costs."

This language, or the greater part thereof, was approvingly quoted in Brainerd v. State, 74 Misc. Rep. 100, 131 N. Y. Supp. 221, 233, Petersburg School Dist. v. Peterson, 14 N. D. 344, 103 N. W. 756, 759, and in section 812, Lewis, Eminent Domain (3d Ed.). The case was followed in Denver Co. v. Howe, 49 Colo. 256, 268, 112 Pac. 779, which declined to award the petitioner, though successful on appeal, any of the costs of the appeal.

In the case of Land Co. v. Ditch Co., 18 Colo. 489, 33 Pac. 275, the statute in question appears to have been noticed, but the question raised was the validity of the judgment against respondent for petitioner's costs. The decision of that question did not involve the constitutionality of the statute, because the statute does not authorize the imposition of petitioner's costs upon the respondent in any event.

In the case of Dolores No. 2 Land & Canal Co. v. Hartman, supra, the respondent, landowner, was allowed his court costs expended in connection with the condemnation proceedings, which was complained of by the petitioner on appeal. The language quoted from that case was therefore pertinent to the decision, not obiter dictum, and, in view of its approval by other authorities, is entitled to be regarded as the law in the case at bar if and to the full extent that it is applicable.

The opinion in the Hartman Case, supra, is in full accord with the following from Lewis on Eminent Domain:

"By the Constitution the owner is entitled to just compensation for his property taken for public use. He is entitled to receive this compensation before his property is taken or his possession disturbed. If the parties cannot agree upon the amount, it must be ascertained in the manner provided by law. As the property cannot be taken until the compensation is paid, and as it cannot be paid until it is ascertained, the duty of ascertaining the amount is necessarily cast upon the party seeking to condemn the property, and he should pay all the expenses which attach to the process. Any law which casts this burden upon the owner should, in our opinion, be held to be unconstitutional and void." Section 559, Lewis, Eminent Domain (2d Ed.)

Numerous authorities have cited or quoted with approval the foregoing section of Lewis on Eminent Domain, and are collected in the third edition of that work in section 812. The above quotation is approvingly set out in the case of San Francisco v. Collins, 98 Cal. 259, 33 Pac. 57. That case dealt with a statute which provided that in condemnation proceedings:

> "Costs may be allowed or not, and, if allowed, may be apportioned between the parties on the same or adverse sides, in the discretion of the court."

The court held that this statute is limited by the constitutional provision. This case was followed by the case of City of Oakland v. Lumber & Mill Co., 172 Cal. 332, 156 Pac. 468, where it was held that:

> "It is settled law in this state [California] that, in view of the provision of section 14 of article 1 of our Constitution that 'private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner,' the owner whose property is thus sought to be taken cannot be required to pay any portion of his reasonable costs necessarily incidental to the trial of the issues on his part, or any part of the costs of the plaintiff; for to require him to do this would reduce the just compensation awarded by the jury by a sum equal to that paid by him for such costs."

This last quotation is in accord with dictum found in Moffat v. Denver, 57 Colo. 473, at page 483, 143 Pac. 577, at page 581, where it is intimated that:

> The requirement of the payment of certain costs "would reduce the amount of compensation to which he [the landowner] is entitled before his property can be taken or damaged."

In Petersburg School Dist. v. Peterson, 14 N. D. 344, 103 N. W. 756, it was said and held:

> "To hold that the owner must pay his own costs in resisting attempts to take his land against his consent, without first paying adequate and just compensation therefor, would nullify to a certain extent the constitutional guaranty, and result in giving him less than just compensation for his property. The constitutional provision means that he shall receive just compensation for his property, and not that the just compensation assessed by a jury shall be diminished to the extent of his costs. The provision was designed for the benefit of the landowner, and should be construed so as to give him its benefit to the full extent."

It will be observed that our constitutional provision guarantees the landowner not only that he shall receive "just compensation" for property taken or damaged, but also that such compensation shall be ascertained by a board of commissioners or by a jury.

In Adams County v. Dobschlag, 19 Wash. 356, 53 Pac. 339, a statute providing that the costs shall be taxed against the landowner in case he shall not recover a greater amount than that previously tendered him was held unconstitutional. It was said in that case that:

> "The landowner must not be put to the expense of litigation in order to preserve his constitutional right to have the amount of damages determined by a court in a proceeding to which he is a party."

In Epling v. Dickson, 170 Ill. 329, 48 N. E. 1001, it was said:

> "Where private property is taken or damaged for public use, just compensation cannot be made to the property owner if he is compelled to prosecute in the courts for his just rights at his own costs."

The plaintiff in error had the right, under the Constitution, to have the damages assessed by a jury, and therefore should not be prejudiced by having refused a tender made prior to the beginning of the proceedings. In view of the language in Land & Canal Co. v. Hartman, 17 Colo. 138, 29 Pac. 378, and the holdings in the cases cited, we hold that the trial court was in error in not taxing respondent's costs upon the petitioner, and that section 2424, R. S. 1908 (section 2625, Mills' Ann. St.), is unconstitutional in so far as it requires the landowner to be taxed with any costs not contumaciously or unreasonably incurred by him.

The judgment is reversed and remanded, and the trial court is directed to take such proceedings in this cause as are consistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

BRIDGE v. PEOPLE. (No. 9192.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. FALSE PRETENSES 🔑26—OBTAINING MONEY BY CONFIDENCE GAME — STATUTE — "UNLAWFULLY"—"FELONIOUSLY."

Under Rev. St. 1908, § 1784, providing that it shall be sufficient to charge that accused did "unlawfully and feloniously obtain" money by means and by use of the confidence game, an information for the offense which omitted the word "unlawfully" before the word "feloniously" was sufficient, especially where the information charged that the acts were contrary to the form of the statute, since that which is done feloniously is necessarily unlawfully done (citing Words and Phrases, Feloniously; see, also, Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Unlawfully).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 52–67.]

2. FALSE PRETENSES 🔑26 — CONFIDENCE GAME—INDICTMENT—STATUTES.

In view of Rev. St. 1908, § 1785, providing that the act punishing the offense of obtaining money by the confidence game shall be liberally construed, section 1784, declaring that it shall be a sufficient description of the offense to charge that accused did unlawfully and feloniously obtain money by means of the confidence game, need not be strictly followed, and it is sufficient to allege facts presenting a clear case of obtaining or attempting to obtain from another money or property by means and by use of the confidence game.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Pretenses, Cent. Dig. §§ 52–67.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1186(4)—APPEAL—FAILURE TO OBJECT TO INFORMATION—STATUTE.

Where defendant did not question the sufficiency of the information until after he was found guilty, the Supreme Court is precluded, by Rev. St. 1908, § 1956, from considering on appeal a technical objection thereto.

Error to District Court, Jefferson County; Charles Cavender, Judge.

G. S. Bridge was convicted of obtaining money by means of the confidence game, and he brings error. Application for supersedeas denied, and judgment affirmed.

J. M. Wardlaw and Fred T. Peet, both of Denver (F. J. Knauss, of Denver, of counsel), for plaintiff in error. Leslie E. Hubbard, Atty. Gen., and Clara Ruth Mozzer, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the People.

WHITE, C. J. Plaintiff in error was convicted of obtaining a certain sum of money from another by means of the confidence game, and sentenced to the penitentiary. He brings the cause here for review upon the sole ground that the information fails to charge any offense under the law. The alleged insufficiency consists in the omission of the word "unlawfully" before the word "feloniously" in the information. Section 1783, R. S. 1908, creates and defines the offense, and section 1784 declares that it shall be a sufficient description of the offense to charge that the accused did, on, etc., "unlawfully and feloniously obtain" the money "by means and by use of the confidence game."

[1] Though the statute in declaring that a certain form of words shall be sufficient to charge the offense, uses the word "unlawfully" as well as "feloniously," we are unwilling to hold that the former word must appear in the indictment or information if the latter does. We hold that that which is done feloniously is necessarily unlawfully done. Williams v. People, 26 Colo. 272, 275, 57 Pac. 701; Kopke v. People, 43 Mich. 41, 43, 4 N. W. 551; Shinn v. State, 68 Ind. 423; Volume 3, Words and Phrases, p. 2735.

[2] Moreover, section 1785 commands that the act shall be liberally construed, and, we think, this necessarily implies that the words of section 1784, supra, need not be strictly followed. It is sufficient to allege facts presenting a clear case of obtaining, or attempting to obtain, from another money or property "by means and use of the confidence game." Property or money so obtained passes from the owner's hands contrary to law, and therefore unlawfully. Besides, it is charged in the information that the acts were "contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of Colorado." Here is an express charge that the acts were contrary to the statute, the law defining the crime, and is necessarily equivalent to the charge that they were "unlawfully" done. Nash v. State, 2 G. Greene (Iowa) 286, 293; People v. Stricker, 170 Ill. App. 485. Apart from this, there are other statutes, some of later date than section 1784, supra, dealing with the sufficiency of an indictment or information charging a criminal offense. Thus section 1950, R. S. 1908, declares every indictment or accusation sufficient which states the offense in the terms of the statute "or so plainly that the nature of the offense may be easily understood by the jury." Section 1959 declares that the offense "shall be stated in plain, concise language, without prolixity or unnecessary repetition." And section 1960 declares, in relation to the offense charged, that it shall be sufficient when set forth with such degree of certainty that the court may pronounce judgment upon a conviction according to the right of the case. It seems clear that within the legislative intent the information in question charges the defendant with the commission of the offense for which he was convicted and sentenced.

[3] There is, however, another reason why he is not entitled to relief. He in no wise questioned the sufficiency of the information until after he was found guilty, and we are, by section 1956, R. S. 1908, precluded from considering the technical objection at this late hour.

The application for a supersedeas is therefore denied, and the judgment affirmed.

BAILEY and ALLEN, JJ., concur.

BARROWS v. CASE. (No. 8713.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. Trial 🔑191(5)—Instructions Assuming Facts—Fraud.

In an action for fraud, instructions assuming plaintiff's inexperience in business matters was erroneous; this being a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 428.]

2. Trial 🔑243 — Inconsistent Instructions.

In an action for fraud, an instruction that, where a person's acts necessarily operate to defraud others, he must be deemed to have intended a fraud, was inconsistent with instructions stating that fraud could not be presumed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 564, 565.]

3. Execution 🔑423 — Body Execution — Fraud—Guilty Knowledge.

Guilty knowledge upon the part of defendants, in an action for fraud, is essential to rendition of a verdict warranting a body execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 1214–1221, 1223.]

4. Execution 🔑423 — Body Execution — Presumptive Fraud.

It is not competent for a jury to return a verdict warranting a body execution upon presumptive fraud merely.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 1214–1221, 1223.]

5. Fraud 🔑65(2)—Instructions.

In an action for fraud, where defendants denied all allegations, instructions that, where a person's acts necessarily operate to defraud others, he must be deemed to have intended a fraud, was misleading, and shifted the burden of proof, in effect requiring defendants to affirmatively establish innocence of fraudulent intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 72, 73.]

Error to District Court, Denver County; George W. Allen, Judge.

Suit by Lois Case against Stanley M. Barrows and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named brings error. Reversed and remanded for a new trial.

Davis & Whitney, of Denver, for plaintiff in error.

BAILEY, J. Lois Case, defendant in error, brought suit against Juanita M. Barrows, Stanley M. Barrows, Earl G. Medsker, and Charles L. Maloney, to recover damages and for body execution, for false representations in connection with a transaction in which she exchanged certain real property for the furniture and lease of a hotel in Denver. Prior to the commencement of the negotiations the hotel was the property of Ernest A. Barrows, a brother of Stanley M. Barrows, and the husband of Juanita M. Barrows. Ernest A. Barrows died before the negotiations began, and Juanita M. Barrows died before the trial. Earl G. Medsker and Charles L. Maloney were real estate brokers through whom the exchange of property was made.

In substance the complaint alleges that plaintiff was without business experience and was dependent upon the business judgment of the defendants, which fact was well known to them; that the defendants represented the hotel to be well and completely furnished, with forty-two rooms permanently rented; that the income was $1,200.00 a month in winter and $1,800.00 in summer, the profits averaging from $450.00 to $1,200.00 per month, and that the only reason for selling was the death of the husband of Juanita M. Barrows. That the hotel had a permanent, paying and established business. Plaintiff further alleged that she believed these statements and acted upon them, and had no way of ascertaining for herself whether they were true. She exchanged her property for the hotel, and shortly after taking possession discovered that the representations of the defendants were false in that there were but few permanent guests, and the income was far less than had been claimed. That these facts were well known to defendants, and that through her reliance upon these false statements she made the exchange; that because of it she had parted with her property for the hotel, which latter was subsequently lost through foreclosure of a chattel mortgage. She prayed for damages in the sum of $15,000.00, and for a body execution. Defendants denied all material allegations. The verdict was for plaintiff against Maloney and Stanley M. Barrows, with damages in the sum of $3,000.00. By special finding the jury declared these two defendants guilty of fraud and wilful deceit. Judgment was entered providing for their confinement, upon failure to satisfy the judgment, for a period of nine months in the county jail. Barrows brings the case here for review.

[1] Numerous errors are assigned but it is necessary to consider only those relating to certain of the instructions. Instruction 2 is in part as follows:

"If you believe, from a preponderance of the evidence, that defendants, with full knowledge, took advantage of plaintiff's inexperience in business matters, induced her to put confidence in them, and for the purpose of effecting a sale of the Toovey Hotel property to plaintiff, made material false representations, as set forth in the complaint, knowing such representations to be false, and as a result induced plaintiff to purchase said hotel property. * * *"

This instruction withdraws from the jury the question whether the plaintiff was in fact inexperienced in business, and instructs them in effect that she was without such experience. That was a material fact upon which the jury should have been permitted to draw their own conclusions from the testimony.

[2] Instruction 5 is in part as follows:

"* * * Every party must be deemed to have intended the natural and inevitable consequence of his or her acts, and where his acts are voluntary and necessarily operate to defraud others, he must be deemed to have intended a fraud."

Instruction 9 is in the following words:

"* * * You cannot find that the defendants falsely or fraudulently made representations to plaintiff from conjecture or mere inference. Fraud must be clearly proved and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish the fact. Fraud is never presumed, but must be affirmatively proved by the plaintiff in this case. The law presumes that all men are fair and honest—that all their dealings are in good faith and without intention to cheat or defraud others; if the representations of defendant, if made, is capable of two constructions—one of which is fair and honest and one which is dishonest—then the law is that the fair and honest construction must prevail, and the acts of the defendants must be presumed to be fair and honest."

[3] Plainly instruction 5 is contradicted by 9. By instruction 15, wherein the jury is told that plaintiff must prove the fraud alleged by evidence sufficient to overcome the presumption of defendants' honesty and fair dealing, instruction 5 is again contradicted. Instruction 5 is especially prejudicial because the verdict which allowed a body execution might well have been wholly predicated upon it. In Geraghty v. Randall, 18 Colo. App. 195, 70 Pac. 767, an action based upon alleged false representations, the jury returned a general verdict for the plaintiff, and as here, in answer to a special interrogatory found the defendant guilty of fraud and wilful deceit. Defendant moved for a new trial, on the ground, among others, that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict. This motion was denied as to the general verdict, but allowed as to the findings on the special interrogatory. The appellate court in affirming the judgment said:

"In our opinion, Section 2164 of Mills' Statutes, contemplates an aggravated case—one in which the wrong is premeditated and intentional. A person may obtain the money or property of another by means of statements which are untrue, but of the truth or falsity of which he is without knowledge. In such case he might be held responsible as for a legal fraud, although there was no active intention to commit a wrong. Converse v. Blumrich, 14 Mich. 109 [90 Am. Dec. 230]. But while such representations have been held to be false and fraudulent in law, they lack the peculiar feature of guilt implied in the words 'malice, fraud or willful deceit,' as used in Section 2164. We think that from the connection of the word 'fraud' with the words 'malice' and 'willful deceit' it was intended to be understood in its odious sense. By denying the motion to set aside the general verdict the court held that there was evidence of fraud, and we cannot suppose that it intended to contradict itself; so that in setting aside the special verdict on the ground that it was not supported by the evidence, the court must have regarded the finding as having reference to actual and intentional fraud. The court was evidently of the opinion that the evidence did not warrant the extreme conclusion reached by the jury in their special finding, regarding it, however, as amply sufficient to sustain the general verdict. Counsel are therefore mistaken as to the import of the court's ruling. This was not that there was no evidence of fraud, but that there was not sufficient evidence upon which a verdict whose effect would be to deprive the defendant of his liberty, could be properly rendered."

[4] By instruction 5 the jury were advised in effect that guilty knowledge upon the part of the defendants was not essential to the rendition of a verdict carrying a body execution. Under the rule in the foregoing case, guilty knowledge is undoubtedly necessary to warrant such a verdict. Moreover, under this instruction, it was competent for the jury to have returned a verdict which would warrant a body execution, upon presumptive fraud merely, which is fundamentally wrong.

[5] Furthermore this instruction is inapplicable and misleading in a case like this. Besides, it shifts the burden of proof, and in effect required the defendants to affirmatively establish innocence of fraudulent intent. The contradictory, inconsistent and erroneous instructions given could not have failed to confuse the jury, and plainly constitute prejudicial error.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

WHITE, C. J., and TELLER, J., concur.

SAUNDERS v. PEOPLE. (No. 8527.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. Criminal Law 🔑1144(8)—Appeal and Error—Presumption—Selection of Jury.

Where the court summoned jury upon open venire as allowed by Laws 1891, p. 249, § 5, in certain cases instead of in the usual manner provided by section 2, it will be presumed that contingency necessary under section 5 existed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2758–2760, 2901, 3023, 3024.]

2. Jury 🔑70(9)—Regularity of Proceedings—Open Venire.

A jury summoned on open venire under a contingency provided for by Laws 1891, p. 249, § 5, is no less a regular panel than one drawn from the box as provided by section 2.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 325, 330.]

3. Costs 🔑284—Criminal Prosecution—Right to Reimbursement from Defendant—Statute.

The right of the county to reimbursement for costs in criminal prosecutions depends upon the statute, Gen. St. 1883, § 964, providing that the court shall give judgment that the offender pay the costs of prosecution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 1195, 1196, 1198–1205, 1207–1235.]

4. Costs 🔑304—Criminal Prosecution—Jurors' Fees—Defendant's Liability.

Where a defendant is tried in district or county court with a jury drawn from the box, jury fees, mileage and per diem of the panel in attendance, and sheriff's mileage and fees in summoning them, cannot be taxed against defendant; no statutory provision existing for splitting up or apportioning fees among cases in which jurors on a regular panel have served.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. § 1328.]

5. Costs 🔑311 — Criminal Prosecutions —Jurors' Fees—Construction of Statute.

Gen. St. 1883, § 504, providing for recovery of jury fees by the prevailing party who has advanced fees necessary to summon a jury, applies to civil and not criminal cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 1374–1375½.]

6. Costs 🔑311—Criminal Prosecutions—Jury's Fees—Defendant's Liability.

Where defendant was tried before a jury summoned on open venire, she was not liable for jurors' fees and expenses, with the exception of the $5 fee provided by Rev. St. 1908, § 3702, since it was the duty of the county to furnish a jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 1374–1375½.]

En Banc. Error to Chaffee County Court; Joseph Newitt, Judge.

Mrs. N. V. Saunders was convicted of cruel punishment of a child. Defendant's motion to retax costs overruled, and defendant brings error. Reversed and remanded, with directions to retax costs.

G. K. Hartenstein, of Buena Vista, for plaintiff in error. Leslie E. Hubbard, Atty. Gen., and Francis E. Bouck, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Gilbert A. Walker, of Denver, for the People.

GARRIGUES, J. Plaintiff in error, Mrs. N. V. Saunders, was convicted in the county court of Chaffee county on an information charging that:

She "did willfully, unnecessarily and unlawfully torture, torment and cruelly punish one Lenice Saunders, a female child 14 years of age, the said child being then and there under the custody and care of the said Mrs. N. V. Saunders, the said torture, torment and cruel punishment being inflicted by beating the said child with a stick in a brutal and unlawful manner and inflicting upon the said child great and serious bodily injury."

The court entered judgment on the verdict that she serve 60 days in the county jail, pay a fine of $100 and the costs, and stand committed until fine and costs, taxed at $433.50, were paid. The clerk taxed the following costs against her:

"Court and clerk fees, $41.90.

"Jury fees, mileage and per diem, $118.50.

"Sheriff's mileage and fee for serving open venire for jury, $24.50.

"Sheriff's fees other than serving venire, $29.50.

"District attorney fees, $15.00.

"Witness fees, including physician, $103.95."

Defendant filed a motion to retax costs as follows:

> "By taxing a jury fee of $5 instead of $118.50, by taxing sheriff's fees at $29.50 instead of $54.20, by taxing no fee for district attorney instead of $15: First, because the taxing of fees and mileage for jurors as costs against the defendant is illegal and not authorized by statute. Second, because taxing sheriff's fees for summoning jurors as costs against the defendant is illegal and unauthorized by statute. Third, because there is no authority to tax the fees of the district attorney as costs against the defendant."

The motion was overruled, and defendant brings the case here on error.

1. The record is meager, but we gather from it that no regular panel of jurors was in attendance, drawn from the box and summoned as required by section 2, p. 249, S. L. 1891, which provides:

> "In case a jury is required in the county court, to try either civil or criminal cases, the judge of the county court shall so notify the clerk of the district court in writing, stating in such notice the number of jurors desired, whereupon the clerk of the district court shall call to his assistance the sheriff, and shall draw from the box the requisite number of jurors, and shall certify their names to the clerk of the county court, who shall then issue a venire to the sheriff to summon the jurors so drawn, and make it returnable, as the said county court may order, which court shall, so far as possible, fix the trials of jury cases for some definite time, and shall try them successively by the same panel of jurors, so far as is practicable, and when the trials are over he shall discharge such jury from further attendance. Talesmen may be secured in the county court in the same way as they are in the district court. After said jurors are drawn and their names certified to the clerk of the county court, as provided in this section, [illegible] laws, proceedings and practice applicable to jurors in district courts, shall apply to jurors in county courts."

But this is not the only method of procuring a regular panel for "either the district or county court." Section 5 of the same act provides:

> "If the board of county commissioners shall fail to return a list of competent persons, or if jurors shall not be drawn and summoned as herein provided, and a jury is required in either the district or county court, the court shall, nevertheless, have power to cause a jury to be summoned by open venire as heretofore practiced."

The method provided by this act for summoning a panel of jurors is the same in both courts, and jurors in the county court stand upon the same footing as jurors in the district court. Giano v. People, 30 Colo. 20, 26, 69 Pac. 504; Pitkin County v. First Nat. Bank, 6 Colo. App. 425, 40 Pac. 894.

[1, 2] The record shows that the court ordered a venire facias juratores, or open venire for six men forthwith, from the body of the county to serve as jurors until discharged, and, when this panel was exhausted, the court issued a like venire for 12 more men to serve as jurors until discharged. As we said in Giano v. People, we must assume that the court summoned this panel upon open venire, instead of drawing from the box, because a jury was required and the contingency existed provided by the statute authorizing the court to summon a panel by open venire. It therefore follows that defendant was tried by a jury selected from a panel in attendance on the county court in the manner provided by law. A jury summoned on open venire under such an exigency is no less a regular panel than one drawn from the box.

[3] 2. Costs are a creature of statute unknown to the common law. At common law there were no costs. Our statute provides that the county must pay the costs of the people incurred by the prosecution. S. L. 1889, p. 100; Fremont County v. Wilson, 3 Colo. App. 492, 34 Pac. 265. The right of the county to reimbursement for such costs also depends upon the statute, and the only statute we have on the subject was passed in 1861, which provides:

> "In any case where any person or persons shall be convicted of any crime or misdemeanor, in this chapter specified, or of any at common law, the court shall give judgment that the offender or offenders so convicted shall pay the costs of prosecution." G. S. 1883, § 964.

See Parker v. People, 7 Colo. App. 56, 42 Pac. 172.

[4] If this case had been tried in the district court, or in the county court with a jury drawn from the box, the jury fees of the panel in attendance, mileage, and per diem, and the sheriff's mileage and fees for serving them, could not have been taxed against the defendant under the provisions of any statute to which our attention has been called. No provision exists for splitting up or apportioning the fees among cases in which jurors, on a regular panel, have served.

[5] 3. Our attention is called to Board of Commissioners of Pitkin County v. First Nat. Bank, 6 Colo. App. 423, 428, 40 Pac. 894, affirmed in 24 Colo. 124, 48 Pac. 1043, holding that section 504, G. S. 1883, is still in force notwithstanding the unconstitutionality of section 9 of the act of 1891. This section provides:

> "In any action pending before the county court, * * * either party may have a jury summoned, to try the same by advancing fees for the payment of such jurors, and when judgment shall be rendered in favor of the party demanding a trial by jury, such party shall recover the fees paid by him for such jurors, of the adverse party, and have the amount thereof taxed as a part of the costs in the case."

Contention is made that this was a special jury brought in under the provisions of this statute to try this particular case; that defendant made the costs, therefore the costs of summoning and empaneling the jury were taxable to her. The answer is: That statute applies to civil and not to criminal cases.

[6] In the next place, defendant did not ask for a jury; she did not want a jury; she did not want to be tried at all. There would have been no jury summoned and no trial if she had had her desire. The trial was forced upon her against her will by the prosecution, the Constitution gave her the right of trial by jury, and it was the duty of the county to furnish a jury in the manner provided by the Constitution and laws of the state. The only provision for reimbursing the county in such a case by taxing a jury fee is found in section 3702, Rev. Stats. 1908, which provides:

> "A jury fee of five dollars shall be taxed as part of the costs of the suit in each cause tried by jury. The clerk shall pay such fee, when collected, into the county treasury."

4. We are of the opinion that the item of $118.50 for the jury fees, mileage, and per diem, and $24.50, sheriff's mileage and fees for serving the open venire, should not be taxed as costs against defendant; that a jury fee of $5 should be taxed against her; and that the item of $15 district attorney's fees was properly taxed.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to retax the costs in accordance with the views herein expressed.

Reversed and remanded.

GIBBONS et al. v. ELLIS. (No. 8575.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑907(4) — BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—PRESUMPTION.

Where there was no statement in the certificate to a bill of exceptions that all the evidence was contained therein, the appellate court is bound to assume, in the absence of such certificate, that there was sufficient evidence to justify the trial court in the conclusion reached, and every reasonable and necessary intendment will be resolved in favor of the propriety of such judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2911.]

2. EXECUTION 🔑55 — PROPERTY SUBJECT TO EXECUTION—PROPERTY IN CUSTODIA LEGIS.

If, under a decree, corporate stock was in custodia legis at the time of a levy of execution thereon, it was not subject to execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 137-140.]

3. EXECUTION 🔑55—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO EXECUTION — PROPERTY "IN CUSTODIA LEGIS."

Where corporate stock was garnished, and the final decree required defendant to deposit the shares in court in order to obtain the redemption money, which the plaintiff had been required to pay into the registry of the court as a condition precedent to his right to have the benefit of the decree, the stock was in custodia legis, and not subject to execution until the matters involved had been finally disposed of, whether such execution issued out of the same or another court; the doctrine of "in custodia legis" being a rule of property right, for the benefit of litigants, as well as a rule of jurisdiction, for the purpose of avoiding conflicts between the courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 137-140.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Custody of the Law.]

En Banc. Error to Court of Appeals.

Motion to quash a levy under execution by Elizabeth M. Gibbons and another against Eva Prince Ellis. From a judgment of the Court of Appeals (26 Colo. App. 454, 145 Pac. 285) sustaining the levy, and reversing the decision of the trial court allowing the motion to quash, the plaintiffs bring error. Judgment of Court of Appeals reversed, and that of the trial court affirmed, and cause remanded to trial court.

T. J. O'Donnell, J. W. Graham, and Canton O'Donnell, all of Denver, for plaintiffs in error. J. Howard Dana, G. Dexter Blount, and Harry S. Silverstein, all of Denver, for defendant in error.

BAILEY, J. This is a review on error of a judgment of the Court of Appeals, sustaining a levy under execution in favor of Eva Prince upon 3,333 shares of stock of The Joseph Gibbons Consolidated Mining Company, as the property of Joseph Gibbons. These are in substance the facts: The judgment upon which execution issued was a deficiency foreclosure judgment in favor of Eva Prince, now Eva Prince Ellis, against Elizabeth Gibbons and Joseph Gibbons. Execution was begun by garnishment of the Joseph Gibbons Consolidated Mining Company; its return showed that 3,333 shares of the company stock, then standing on its books in the name of John F. O'Connor had been in litigation in the district court, and by judgment and decree there it had been determined that O'Connor was pledgee thereof, and that the company was required to re-issue the shares to Gibbons or his order upon compliance with the terms of redemption stipulated in the decree. The sheriff thereupon levied upon the shares in favor of Mrs. Ellis, and advertised them for sale. The Gibbonses, joined by Joseph Bordeleau, filed a motion to quash the levy on the ground, among others, that the shares of stock were not subject to be sold under levy and execution; under this subdivision counsel argued that the stock in question was in custodia legis and, therefore, exempt from levy and sale. Upon the hearing it appeared that the interest of Gibbons in the shares had been transferred in writing to Bordeleau. That instrument set out that the stock certificates were in the registry of the court at the time of the transfer, that they were to be delivered to Bordeleau, upon redemption in conformity with the terms of the decree in Gibbons v. O'Connor, under which they were held, and for which redemption Bordeleau had deposited in the registry of the court the necessary amount, some $5,800.00.

The motion to quash was allowed, and that decision was reversed by the Court of Appeals in Ellis v. Gibbons, 26 Colo. App. 454, 145 Pac. 285. Elizabeth M. Gibbons and Joseph Bordeleau appear here as plaintiffs in error from the Court of Appeals judgment, and Mrs. Ellis as defendant in error, and they will be so referred to herein.

In the opinion of the Court of Appeals it was stated that the record failed to show that the decree providing for the disposition of the shares was before the trial court when the motion to quash the levy was determined. Defendant in error, however, does not deny this. That decree was rendered, and the motion to quash allowed, in the same court and by the same judge. There can be no doubt that at the hearing of the motion the trial court had actual knowledge of all the provisions of the decree, and of the facts and circumstances connected with the entire transaction. It is not necessary to assume that the judge had to depend upon memory for these facts, as it is not possible to conceive that the court heard the motion without having before it, and taking judicial notice of, its records in a previous case involving the same property. The court would necessarily take notice of the fact that the stock levied upon was the same that had been involved in the former action, that the certificates had been deposited with the clerk of the court, and that Bordeleau had deposited the money to redeem them as assignee of Gibbons, in precise conformity with the terms of the original decree. These facts are not disputed; indeed, there is no controversy over them. As to whether they may be taken judicial notice of, being part of the court's records, Wigmore on Evidence, in Vol. 4, § 2579, says:

> "However, for reasons of convenience, where controversy is unlikely, and the expense of a copy would be disproportionate, courts are often found taking notice of the tenor or effect of some judicial proceeding, without requiring formal evidence. Since this dispensation is not obligatory on the part of the court, and since it must depend more or less on the practical notoriety and certainty of the fact under the circumstances of each case, little uniformity can be seen in the instances."

The proceedings of the trial court in the litigation respecting these shares was in the nature of a foreclosure, in which it determined the rights of O'Connor as pledgee and of Gibbons as the original owner of the shares, in these terms:

> "* * * That in case the said defendant, John F. O'Connor, shall abide by and perform this decree, and shall within thirty days from this date bring the said three thousand three hundred and thirty-three (3,333) shares of stock into the registry of this court duly assigned to the said Joseph Gibbons, to be delivered to the said Joseph Gibbons, upon the payment into the registry of this court for the use of him, the said O'Connor, of the amount found due to the said O'Connor as hereinaforesaid, and if the said Joseph Gibbons shall not perform the said decree and shall not pay the said sum as hereinaforesaid within the time herein fixed, then and in that event, the right of redemption shall cease and determine and be at an end, and this cause shall stand dismissed out of this court."

By the decree the mining company was required to re-issue the stock to Gibbons or his assignee upon compliance with the redemption provisions. While the decree was in process of enforcement, through redemption of the stock by Gibbons, or pending his failure to do so within the time limit, the attempted levy upon the shares was made by garnishment of the mining company.

[1] There is no statement in the certificate to the bill of exceptions that all the evidence is contained therein, and this court is bound to assume, in the absence of such certificate, that there was sufficient evidence to justify the court in the conclusion reached. This alone would be sufficient to warrant the affirmance of the judgment of the trial court. Every reasonable and necessary intendment will be resolved in favor of the propriety of such judgment. Martin v. Force, 3 Colo. 199; Webber v. Emmerson, 3 Colo. 248; Behymer et al. v. Nordloh, 12 Colo. 352, 21 Pac. 37; Colby v. Thomson, 16 Colo. App. 271, 64 Pac. 1053.

[2] If, however, under the decree the stock was in custodia legis at the time of the levy it was not subject to execution, and we will consider the matter from this standpoint.

[3] In National Bank v. Londonderry Company, 50 Colo. 85, 114 Pac. 313, certain funds which had been placed in the registry of the court were ordered deposited in a bank pending the issue of a controversy over them. In discussing the status of this fund so deposited the court said:

> "The funds borrowed were in the custody of the court, and the bank which came into court and borrowed this money with knowledge of the conditions under which it was acquired, made itself a quasi party to the action, and was subject to the orders and decrees of the court; and is estopped to deny that it had not become such a quasi party to the suit. In such case, it was not necessary that a separate suit should be brought; in fact, under repeated decisions of the federal courts, and in some states where the question has been passed upon, it is held that no separate or outside suit could have been brought to disturb these funds. Corbitt v. Farmers' Bank et al. [C. C.] 114 Fed. 602; Jones v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 76 Fed. 683 [22 C. C. A. 483, 35 L. R. A. 698]; Allen v. Gerard, 21 R. I. 467 [44 Atl. 592, 49 L. R. A. 351. 79 Am. St. Rep. 816]; Tuck v. Manning, 150 Mass. 211 [22 N. E. 1001, 5 L. R. A. 666]; Curtis v. Ford et al., 78 Tex. 262 [14 S. W. 614, 10 L. R. A. 529]."

In Jones v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, supra, attempt was made to attack a similar deposit of money from the registry, and although these deposits were made under special statutes, the court declared the fund immune from seizure on common law principles:

> "Independently of all statutory provisions, the plain and well known principles of the general law, especially as administered in equity, furnish sufficient sanction and protection to each, and each is in all respects declared by the law to be as exempt from the process of the litigant, without the consent of the court first obtained, as though it had always remained in the personal custody of the court's immediate officials."

In Corbitt v. Farmers' Bank et al., supra, a similar attempt to attach funds deposited by court order was disposed of in the following language:

> "The question presented by the motion to abate the attachment in this cause is whether moneys paid into court pending litigation in regard thereto, and placed by order of the court in its registry or some other designated depository, pursuant to law, are the subject of attachment emanating from another court. This question is one of importance, as it not only affects the orderly administration of justice in the several courts, but goes further, and tends, as in this case, to thwart and annul the carrying out of the court's judgment, in a case fully litigated, with the parties in interest all before it. Money paid into the registry of the court, pursuant to law, can only be withdrawn therefrom, by the very terms of the Act of Congress providing for the deposit, 'by the order of the judge, or the judges of said court, respectively, to be signed by such judge, or judges, and to be entered and certified of record by the clerk.' When a court causes funds to be so placed in its registry, they are to the credit of the court itself, there placed and held, to the end that its decrees and orders in respect thereto may be obeyed and carried out in accordance with its judgment rendered; and no court, other than one having a supervisory power over the acts of such court, can by any act of its own, or any decree, order, or process emanating from it, except with its leave, assert any claim to, or secure any right in or lien upon, such funds, so long as the same remains under its control. To entertain a contrary doctrine to this would not only work untold mischief and delay in legal proceedings, but would result in innumerable conflicts between the courts themselves; and the consequence would be that funds once paid into court, with a view of having the rights of parties litigant thereto adjusted and determined, instead of being disposed of by the termination of the particular controversy, would be involved in an endless chain of litigation. This subject has been before the courts, state and federal, too frequently to now admit of serious cavil or doubt."

The question of jurisdiction of the res, with reference to other judicial processes instituted regarding it, is passed upon in Farmers' Loan, etc., Co. v. Lake St. Rd. Co., 177 U. S. 51, 20 Sup. Ct. 564, 44 L. Ed. 667. The court (177 U. S. at page 61, 20 Sup. Ct. 568, [44 L. Ed. 667]) says:

"The possession of the res vests the court which has first acquired jurisdiction with the power to hear and determine all controversies relating thereto, and for the time being disables other courts of coordinate jurisdiction from exercising a like power. This rule is essential to the orderly administration of justice, and to prevent unseemly conflicts between courts whose jurisdiction embraces the same subjects and persons. Nor is this rule restricted in its application to cases where property has been actually seized under judicial process before a second suit is instituted in another court; but it often applies as well where suits are brought to enforce liens against specific property, to marshall assets, administer trusts, or liquidate insolvent estates, and in suits of a similar nature where, in the progress of the litigation, the court may be compelled to assume the possession and control of the property to be affected."

It appears to be conceded by the Court of Appeals that if the stock in question could be regarded as having been in custodia legis at the time of the attempted levy the judgment of the court below should be affirmed. It is quite evident from its opinion that that court, for some reason not clearly apparent, failed to apply the doctrine here invoked, that property actually or constructively in the custody of the court cannot, until the matters therein involved have been finally disposed of, be interfered with by process in any other suit, whether issued out of the court which acquired such possession, or of some other court.

First National Bank of Oswego v. Dunn, 97 N. Y. 149, 49 Am. Rep. 517, contains a very thorough discussion of the subject of the law as applied to the facts, which are, that the bank had replevined certain property from Dunn, and no forthcoming bond having been given, the plaintiff in replevin was entitled to have the property delivered to it. While the sheriff was preparing to make such delivery, but before it had been actually accomplished, the Second National Bank of Oswego delivered to him an execution against Dunn and required him to levy upon the same property. We quote from pages 517-518 of the case in 49 Am. Rep.:

"He made the levy, and so found himself at one and the same instant required to deliver up the malt on one mandate and retain and sell it on another. He cannot do both. The two duties, each equally imperative, are utterly inconsistent, and the performance of either inevitably involves the non-performance of the other."

By the terms of the decree in Gibbons v. O'Connor, it was required of O'Connor that he deliver the shares, or deposit them in court, in order to get the redemption money. And Gibbons, as we have already noted, was required to pay some $5,800.00 into the registry of the court within ninety days from the date of the decree, as a condition precedent to his right to have the benefit of the decree. How could the terms of that decree be made effectual if meantime an outsider, in another and different suit, should be allowed to levy upon, seize and sell the shares or property in question? To permit interference of this kind with the enforcement of a judicial decree would be to cast parties, who had already litigated their differences in a court of justice, and whose rights had been solemnly adjudicated, upon a new sea of strife and uncertainty. Under such conditions to uphold the levy in question would not only hinder the enforcement of the decree, but would practically nullify it. Public policy, a due regard for the orderly administration of justice as embodied in the decrees of the courts, and the rights of parties litigant, successful and defeated, require that such practice be not approved.

The record in the Gibbons-O'Connor Case shows that upon the filing of the complaint an injunction was issued restraining O'Connor from voting the stock, and from "selling, disposing of, or incumbering in any manner any of the said shares of stock until the further order of this court." No amount of argument will make it plainer than the mere statement of the fact that "it clearly appeared from the complaint, as soon as it was filed," that it would become necessary to a complete determination of the issues tendered and to the enforcement of the decree sought, for the court to exercise its dominion over the specified stock described in the complaint. That it would be necessary to the enforcement of the court's judgment to seize, or to otherwise exercise dominion over, the stock. The commencement of the suit was the beginning of the jurisdiction and control over the property, and the deposit of the certificates was the culmination. From the beginning the stock was in the constructive possession of the law, and when the certificates were deposited in court they were actually and physically in custodia legis.

The Court of Appeals seems to think that the fact that the levy was attempted, under process issued from the same court as that which had drawn unto itself the custody of the property sought to be levied on in the suit of Gibbons v. Gibbons Consolidated Mining Company, is a reason why the cases cited do not apply. Those cases were cited merely to show the principle of law applicable to property situated as were the shares in question, after the institution of the suit of Gibbons v. Gibbons Consolidated Mining Company, up to the time that the injunctive and other orders referred to were disposed of by an enforcement of the decree therein. The principles, so clearly declared, apply to the property involved, and it is because of their application to the property, that the courts hold as they do. When property is in a situation which makes the principle applicable, it is just as much exempt from seizure by an officer of the court having it in custody (actual or constructive) upon process issued in another suit, in favor of one not a party to the action in which the custody was taken, as it is from levy under process issued by another court of the same or of an independent jurisdiction. That the doctrine of in custodia legis is a rule of property right, made for the benefit of litigants, as well as a rule of jurisdiction, made for the purpose of avoiding conflicts between courts, is abundantly demonstrated by the following cases: Berlin Mills Co. v. Lowe et al., 211 Mass. 28, 97 N. E. 57, Ann. Cas., 1914B, 937, 938; Tuck v. Manning, 150 Mass. 211, 22 N. E. 1001, 5 L. R. A. 666. In the opinion of the Court of Appeals it is declared:

> "As we have heretofore said, all matters in issue as to the ownership of the stock were settled by the decree. That litigation was at an end. The duty of the court with respect thereto had been performed." 26 Colo. App. 454, 145 Pac. 290.

Herein lies the fundamental error of that court, in view of the fact that the decree was not yet enforced or carried out. Compare that language with this extract from the opinion in 114 Fed. 602, supra, cited and approved by this court in National Bank v. Londonderry, supra, before the Court of Appeals had spoken in this case:

> "The position taken by counsel for complainant, that the court, having entered its final order in respect to the money in question, had exhausted its jurisdiction over the same, and that such funds then remain subject to seizure by attachment or other legal process, as any other property belonging to the defendant bank, is equally fallacious. A conclusion in favor of parties litigant in any controversy would be barren of good, if the court rendering the decision was powerless to cause its decrees and orders to be put into operation and duly executed; and such a result, as to moneys in the court's open registry, would, indeed, leave it in a helpless and pitiable plight. In Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 6 L. Ed. 253, Chief Justice Marshall said: 'The jurisdiction of a court is not exhausted by the rendition of its judgment, but continues until that judgment shall be satisfied. Many questions arise on the process, subsequent to the judgment, in which jurisdiction is to be exercised.' In Osburn v. U. S., 91 U. S. 474, 23 L. Ed. 390, Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the Supreme Court, said: 'The power of the court over moneys belonging to its registry continues until they are distributed pursuant to final decrees in the cases in which the moneys are paid.'"

Language more clearly in point could not well have been uttered, even if the learned authors of the opinion from which the above quotations are taken had been speaking concerning the facts in the case at bar.

There can be no reasonable doubt that the shares of stock attempted to be levied upon fall within the rule laid down in the cases herein referred to, were in custodia legis, and in a separate and independent suit, whether in the same or another court, between other parties, were beyond reach of legal process.

The former opinion is withdrawn, and this one substituted therefor, the judgment of the court of Appeals is reversed, that of the trial court affirmed and the cause remanded to the latter court.

ALLEN, J., not participating.

(50 Utah, 66)

FRED MILLER BREWING CO. v. GAUDIO et al. (No. 2994.)

(Supreme Court of Utah. May 8, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 21, 1917.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⟹159—EVIDENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action against the surety of a buyer to recover an alleged balance due for merchandise sold, the burden was on the plaintiff to show that the purported statement of account between it and the buyer was correct, more especially where it is seeking to establish a liability on the part of the surety, who has properly controverted plaintiff's allegations of the buyer's indebtedness to it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 428–435.]

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⟹161—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to justify a finding that the plaintiff failed to prove any indebtedness owing to it by the buyer for which the surety was liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Surety, Cent. Dig. §§ 439–441.]

Appeal from District Court, Salt Lake County; F. C. Loofbourow, Judge.

Action by the Fred Miller Brewing Company against Joseph Gaudio and others. The action was prosecuted against defendant C. H. Denhalter alone, the other defendants not being served with process. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Skeen & Skeen, of Salt Lake City, for appellant. Hancock & Barnes, of Salt Lake City, for respondent.

CORFMAN, J. This was an action brought in the district court of Salt Lake county to recover a balance alleged to be due for merchandise sold and delivered under a written agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant Gaudio, secured by a bond contemporaneously executed on the part of the other defendants as sureties guaranteeing performance and payment on the part of the defendant Gaudio. The complaint, in substance, alleges that on the 7th day of August, 1911, plaintiff and the defendant Gaudio entered into a written agreement whereby the plaintiff was to sell the defendant Gaudio merchandise on credit, not exceeding $1,000 in amount, in pursuance of which plaintiff had sold and delivered to the said defendant on credit merchandise of the value of $706.43, which sum is due and owing; that the defendants Whittaker and Denhalter are personally, jointly, and severally answerable therefor on a bond guaranteeing payment of said indebtedness; that payment of said amount was demanded of the defendant Gaudio; and that the same has not been paid by the defendants or either of them. The agreement and bond are attached to the complaint as exhibits and made a part thereof. Plaintiff prays judgment for $706.43, interest, and costs.

The separate answer, of the defendant C. H. Denhalter is, in effect, a specific denial upon the ground of want of information and belief, and an affirmative defense alleging that the plaintiff has not complied with Comp. Laws 1907, § 352, as amended by chapter 101, Laws 1915, relative to foreign corporations doing business within the state by reason of its failing to file certified copies of its articles of incorporation and by-laws with the secretary of state and with the county clerk of Salt Lake county; that the plaintiff had failed to use due diligence to collect from the defendant Gaudio; and that the bond had expired before the indebtedness sued upon was incurred. The defendants Gaudio and Whittaker were not served with process, and the action was prosecuted against the defendant Denhalter alone.

A trial to the court without a jury resulted in findings and judgment in favor of the defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

Numerous errors are assigned, but for a proper determination of plaintiff's appeal it will not be necessary for us to discuss and pass upon all of them here, or other than the finding of the trial court:

"That the plaintiff has failed to prove that there is any balance due it from the said Joseph Gaudio, or that there was any balance due it from said Joseph Gaudio at the time of the filing of the complaint herein."

At the trial, pursuant to stipulation, the deposition of C. J. Smith, a witness on behalf of plaintiff, was read wherein he testified that the plaintiff was a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Wisconsin; that it had no branch office or representative located in the state of Utah; and that he was an employé traveling and soliciting trade for it. The plaintiff offered to introduce in evidence a purported statement of the account sued upon and complains of the trial court's refusal to receive it. The only evidence submitted to the trial court to prove the correctness of this statement was that of the witness C. J. Smith, concerning which he testified as follows:

"Mr. Barnes: I would like to interpose a question here. Did you make this statement out? A. No, sir. * * *

"Mr. Skeen: I will ask you whether or not you had any conversation with Mr. Joseph Gaudio with respect to the balance he owed to your company, the Fred Miller Brewing Company, along in October, 1912? A. Yes, sir. Q. State what that conversation was. A. In regard to his account—his indebtedness to the Fred Miller Brewing Company? Q. Yes. A. At that time I had with me a statement from the brewery for collection against Mr. Gaudio. I believe after that he failed and moved somewhere down in Illinois. Q. Well, how, did you discuss with him the amount that was due to your company, the Fred Miller Brewing Company, at that time? A. At that time I believe he owed us $1,200 or $1,300; I cannot just recollect the amount, but somewhere around $1,200 or $1,300. * * * Q. Have you any memorandum to which you could refer to refresh your recollection and state the amount due at that time? A. I haven't anything in my possession at the present time, except this statement. I do not carry the books along with me from the brewery. They are made up by the bookkeeper and submitted to the agents as being correct. * * * Q. And that was in May? A. In May, 1912. Q. Do you know as to what payments have been made since? A. Nothing, except by referring to the statement. * * * Q. Can you state the total amount of goods furnished by your company to Joseph Gaudio pursuant to the contract set out as Exhibit A here, and which Joseph Gaudio received at Salt Lake prior to the month of May, 1912? A. Well, I could not unless I referred back to this statement. * * *

"Mr. Barnes: And your knowledge as to the amount due is based on Exhibit B, by reference to Exhibit B? A. Yes, sir. Q. The various amounts you have given in this testimony? A. Yes, sir."

[1] Such was the character of the testimony upon which plaintiff relied, not only for the purpose of proving the correctness of the proffered statement of account rejected by the trial court, but for the purpose of proving its case and to establish a present liability against the defendant as well. The burden was on the plaintiff to show that the account in question was correct, more especially when, as here, it was seeking to establish a liability on the part of a surety having properly controverted the plaintiff's allegation of the defendant Gaudio's indebtedness to it.

[2] After carefully reviewing the record here, we think the trial court's finding that the plaintiff failed to prove any indebtedness owing to it from the defendant Joseph Gaudio is amply justified. In view of the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to prove a case, the defense that it had failed to comply with the Utah statutes relating to foreign corporations becomes immaterial, and we here express no opinion upon that subject.

The judgment rendered in favor of the defendant C. H. Denhalter dismissing him from all liability to the plaintiff must be affirmed, with costs.

It is so ordered.

FRICK, C. J., and McCARTY, J., concur.

(50 Utah, 58)

WARM SPRINGS CO. v. SALT LAKE CITY. (No. 3020.)

(Supreme Court of Utah. May 8, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 21, 1917.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑722 — RENT FOR PROPERTY LEASED BY CITY—EVICTION BY ORDINANCE.

Where premises belonging to a city were leased for the purpose of conducting a bathing resort, with the provision that a portion of the premises might be leased or sublet for saloon or bar purposes, and subsequently, pursuant to Laws 1911, c. 106, an ordinance was passed by the city by which the carrying on of the saloon business on such premises was prohibited, the mere fact that the saloon business was prohibited did not constitute an eviction, and the defendant was not thereby released from paying rent, and was not entitled to any abatement thereof, since if the lessee desired to protect itself against the payment of rent in case the right to maintain a bar on the premises should be prohibited it should have provided for that emergency in the lease.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1528.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑726 — RENT FOR PROPERTY LEASED BY CITY—EVICTION.

While the city in entering into the lease did so as proprietor of the property, and is governed by the same law and rules as other proprietors, in passing and enforcing the ordinance, pursuant to the provisions of Laws 1911, c. 106, it acted entirely in a governmental capacity, and as an arm of the state government, and had no more right to disregard the provisions of that chapter than a private citizen, and is not liable for the consequences of such governmental act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1545.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑722—LEASE BY CITY—STATUTE.

If a city should guarantee its lessee the right to continue the saloon business in violation of Laws 1911, c. 106, providing that licenses permitting the sale of intoxicating liquors should not be issued outside the limits of the business district of a city or town, and requiring cities to pass ordinances fixing such limits for the purposes of the act, the lease would be void, since municipal corporations have no power to make contracts which would embarrass or control their legislative powers and duties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1528.]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑211(2)—RENT—PARTIAL EVICTION.

Generally a tenant may not hold possession of premises, and then sue for an abatement of rent on the theory of partial eviction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 841–843.]

Appeal from District Court, Salt Lake County; Geo. G. Armstrong, Judge.

Action by the Warm Springs Company against Salt Lake City. From a judgment dismissing the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

D. H. Wenger, of Salt Lake City, for appellant. H. J. Dininny, W. H. Folland, and M. Davis, all of Salt Lake City, for respondent.

FRICK, C. J. The plaintiff in this action seeks to recover certain moneys which it is alleged the defendant city wrongfully obtained from it for rental of certain premises leased to the plaintiff by the city. In view that the court's findings of fact are not assailed, and as they correctly reflect the issues and the evidence, and because the conclusions of law and judgment which are based upon the findings are vigorously assailed, we insert the court's findings, the material parts of which read as follows:

"That on the 21st day of February, 1905, pursuant to a resolution of the mayor and city council, the said Salt Lake City, defendant herein, entered into an agreement in writing with one Maxwell R. Brothers, his executors, administrators and assigns, whereby said defendant did lease and let unto Maxwell R. Brothers, for a period of ten years, the following described real estate and premises, to wit: All that property situate in Salt Lake City, county of Salt Lake, state of Utah, described as block 157, plat 'A,' Salt Lake City survey, known as the Warm Springs property, including the springs and land inclosed by fence, but not including the gravel beds on said tract; to have and to hold the said premises with their appurtenances unto the said Maxwell R. Brothers, his executors, administrators and assigns, from the 31st day of March, 1906, to and including the 31st day of March, 1916, for the purpose of conducting a bathing resort, with the privilege of subletting a portion of said premises for bar purposes; and in consideration of the said leasing and letting of said premises to him as aforesaid, the said Maxwell R. Brothers as aforesaid agreed to pay the defendant as rent for said premises the sum of $200 per month for each and every month of said term. Said lease as set forth in defendant's answer is hereby referred to and made a part of these findings of fact. That on or about the 19th day of January, 1906, the said Maxwell R. Brothers assigned said lease to the said Warm Springs Company, the plaintiff herein, and said plaintiff was, during the whole of said term of ten years, the successor in interest of the said Maxwell R. Brothers, with the knowledge, acquiescence and consent of said Salt Lake City, and the said plaintiff at all times during said term paid said sum of $200 per month rent as in said lease provided, and has complied with all other covenants and conditions of said lease, as the assignor of said Maxwell R. Brothers, and the said plaintiff was at all times entitled to sublet a part of said premises for bar purposes. That under said agreement and lease the plaintiff herein, upon the pay> ment of said sum of $200 per month, and as consideration therefor, was to have the privilege of conducting a bathing resort, leasing or subletting a portion of said premises for saloon or bar privileges. That the reasonable rental value of said premises as a bathing resort was $100 per month, and the rental value of said saloon for bar purposes was $100 per month, and that said plaintiff at all times during the term of said lease was able to let and lease said premises for bar purposes at the rate of $100 per month. That pursuant to said agreement the plaintiff did sublet a part of the said premises, known as the saloon building for bar purposes, beginning on the 21st day of March, 1906, and continuously until the 20th day of June, 1911, at the rate of $100 per month, and that after the 20th day of June, 1911, the said plaintiff was prevented from further leasing and subletting said premises or any part thereof for bar purposes for the reason that said real estate, as above described, and the surrounding premises were excluded by city ordinance of Salt Lake City from the district in which intoxicating liquors might be sold, and that thereafter until the end of said term of said lease said premises were excluded by reason of said ordinance passed pursuant to the authorization of the Legislature of the state of Utah, from the business district in which intoxicating liquors might be sold. That after said exclusion by said city ordinance the said defendant refused to pay to the plaintiff any rebate or bonus because of said exclusion. That on the 6th day of April, 1916, the plaintiff herein presented its claim against said city for the sum of $5.700, which said claim was refused by said defendant, and that after the 20th day of June, 1911, to the end of said rental term said rent was paid by plaintiff under protest."

The conclusions of law are as follows:

> "That said city in its governmental and legislative capacity did rightfully pass an ordinance under proper authority from the state of Utah, excluding said property above described from the district in which intoxicating liquors might be sold. That in its private and personal capacity said city did enter into a lease with said parties as aforesaid, and that defendant did collect rents from said plaintiff as set forth, by the provisions of said lease heretofore referred to. That said lease in question does not contain a restrictive clause, but does contain a permissive clause which permitted the said plaintiff to rent a part of said premises for bar purposes. That there was no guaranty or warrant by which said defendant was bound to continue the permissive privilege after said ordinance excluding said property from the restricted district was passed. That said defendant did lawfully and legally collect said rent from said plaintiff, and that therefore said plaintiff has no cause of action against the defendant in the premises."

Judgment was entered dismissing the complaint, from which plaintiff appeals.

The assignments of error are all directed against the conclusions of law and judgment. Plaintiff's principal contention arises upon the proviso in the lease which reads as follows: "Provided, however, the said party of the second part may sublet a portion of said premises for bar purposes." In 1911 the Legislature of this state passed chapter 106, Laws Utah 1911, p. 152, in which it was provided that licenses permitting the sale of intoxicating liquors shall not be issued or granted "outside of the limits of the business district of any city or town. The mayor and city council in their respective cities * * * shall from time to time determine and fix such limits for the purposes of this act." Pursuant to that chapter an ordinance was passed by the defendant city in which the district in which the bar was maintained by plaintiff was declared to be outside of the business district of the city and within which a license to sell intoxicating liquors would not thereafter be granted. The plaintiff, therefore, was unable to obtain a license to sell intoxicating liquors upon the leased premises, and hence it lost the right to sublet a part of the premises for bar purposes as provided in the clause of the lease we have quoted. The plaintiff did not surrender nor offer to surrender the demised premises, but paid that portion of the rent which it is contended the bar privilege was worth under protest, and by this action seeks to recover back the rent thus paid.

Plaintiff's counsel, as we understand him, contends that the district court erred in denying recovery upon the grounds: (1) Because the city, by adopting and enforcing the ordinance in question, by its own act, deprived plaintiff of subletting a part of the demised premises for bar purposes, and hence it "ex equo et bono" cannot retain that portion of the rent which represents the value of the bar privilege; and (2) that by the act of the defendant city the plaintiff was in legal effect evicted so far as the right of maintaining a bar is concerned, and for that reason the defendant city may not retain that portion of the rent demanded by the plaintiff. Counsel, in support of his contention, cites the following cases: Boston Molasses Co. v. Commonwealth, 193 Mass. 387, 79 N. E. 827; Tallman v. Murphy, 120 N. Y. 345, 24 N. E. 716; Lynch v. Baldwin, 69 Ill. 210; Grabenhorst v. Nicodemus, 42 Md. 236; Allsman v. Oklahoma City, 21 Okl. 142, 95 Pac. 468, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 511, 17 Ann. Cas. 184; Pearson v. City of Seattle, 14 Wash. 438, 44 Pac. 884. Counsel also refers us to 28 Cyc. 674. We cannot, nor is it necessary for us to, pause here to point out the distinction between those cases and the case at bar. It must suffice to say that the decisions of the foregoing cases do not authorize a recovery in a case like the one at bar. We have found one case, however, which is not cited by counsel, namely, Heart v. East Tenn Brewing Co., 121 Tenn. 69, 113 S. W. 364, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 964, 130 Am. St. Rep. 753, in which it was held that a lease on certain premises which were leased for saloon purposes terminated when the prohibitory law, which was passed after the lease had been entered into, went into effect. The decision is based upon the ground that when the prohibitory law went into effect the business of conducting a saloon was unlawful; that the premises were therefore leased for an unlawful purpose, and hence the lease terminated, and the tenant was released from paying rent. The great weight of authority as we shall see, is however, contrary to the case just referred to. In the following, among other, cases it is held that where premises are leased for saloon purposes, and, pending the lease, a law is passed by which the right to deal in intoxicating liquors is prohibited, and hence a saloon business may no longer be carried on, the tenant is not, for that reason, released from paying rent for the demised premises, and that in case the premises in connection with the saloon business are also used for other purposes, or that they thereafter can be used for such other purposes, to prevent the tenant from carrying on the saloon business does not amount to an eviction and that he is not entitled to an abatement of the rent. Lawrence v. White, 131 Ga. 840, 63 S. E. 631, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966, 15 Ann. Cas. 1097; O'Byrne v. Henley, 161 Ala. 620, 50 South. 83, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 496; San Antonio Brewing Ass'n v. Brents, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 443, 88 S. W. 368; Kerley v. Mayer, 10 Misc. Rep. 718, 31 N. Y. Supp. 818, affirmed in 155 N. Y. 638, 49 N. E. 1099. Quite a number of cases in which the same doctrine is held are cited by the annotator in the notes to the case in 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966. See, also, 1 Tiffany L. & T. § 182, p. 1160, and 2 Tiffany L. & T. § 185, p. 1289. In the case of Lawrence v. White, supra, Mr. Justice Lumpkin, in speaking for the court, says:

> "The question in the case is whether the lessee of a hotel, including a barroom was entitled to a reduction or proportional abatement of the agreed rental, because during the term of the lease the Legislature of the state enacted a law prohibiting the sale of alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors, and thus the bar could no longer be used for that purpose. The adjudicated cases with unusual uniformity answer this question in the negative, though they do not all give the same reasons for the ruling. It has been very generally held that the enforcement by public officers of restrictions or conditions in regard to the use of leased premises does not amount to an eviction of the tenant."

In the case of O'Byrne v. Henley, supra, the law in the headnote, which correctly reflects the opinion, is stated in the following language:

> "Where premises are leased for saloon purposes at a time when it was lawful to sell intoxicants and the premises are used by a lessee as a saloon for the sale of intoxicants, soft drinks, etc., the passing of a prohibition law prohibiting the sale of intoxicants does not have the effect to release the lessee from liability for future rent, as his business is not totally destroyed, since the use of the word 'saloon' in the lease, while including the sale of intoxicants, does not exclude the sale of other things, and the business is not totally destroyed."

[1] It is not necessary to quote further from the cases. In the case at bar the premises were leased for the principal purpose of conducting a bathing resort, and the business of carrying on the saloon was a mere incident to the principal business. When, therefore, the ordinance went into effect by which the carrying on of the saloon business on the demised premises was prohibited the tenant was still permitted and continued to conduct the principal business for which the premises were used, namely, the conducting of a bathing resort. Under all of the authorities, therefore, the mere fact that the saloon business was prohibited did not constitute an eviction, and the plaintiff was not thereby released from paying the rent, nor was it entitled to any abatement thereof. If the plaintiff desired to protect itself against the payment of rent in case the right to maintain a bar on the premises should be prohibited by law, it should have provided for that emergency in the lease. Not having done so, it cannot now complain.

[2] It is seriously contended, however, by plaintiff's counsel, that the defendant city, in passing and enforcing the ordinance in question, by its own act deprived the plaintiff of its right to sublet for bar purposes, and for that reason the city is required to abate the rent as claimed by plaintiff. We have already pointed out that the city, in passing and enforcing the ordinance in question, did so in obedience to the command contained in chapter 106, supra. While it is true, as plaintiff's counsel suggests, that the city, in entering into the lease, did so as a proprietor of property, and hence is governed with regard to that matter by the same law and rules as other proprietors would be. counsel, however, entirely overlooks the fact that the city, in passing and enforcing the ordinance, acted entirely in a governmental capacity and as an arm of the state government. The city was bound by the provisions of chapter 106, the same as all other persons, and it had no more right to disregard the provisions of that chapter than the plaintiff. If, therefore, the city had undertaken to contract or enter into an agreement with the plaintiff so as to relieve it from the effects of chapter 106, such an agreement would have been void and of no effect. The law respecting that subject is very clearly stated by the author in 3 McQuillin Mun. Corps. § 1169, in the following words:

> "The settled rule is that municipal corporations have no power to make contracts which will embarrass or control their legislative powers and duties. A city cannot by contract deprive itself of any of its legislative powers, and hence cannot agree that a sidewalk should only be graded to a certain depth. A common council 'cannot bargain away or divest itself of the right to make reasonable laws, and to exercise the police power whenever it becomes necessary to conserve or promote the health, safety or welfare of the community.' So, power given to contract respecting a particular thing does not confer power, by implication, to contract even with reference to such thing so as to embarrass and interfere with its future control of the matter, as the public interests may require."

[3] If the city had entered into a lease in which it had guaranteed the plaintiff the right to continue the saloon business in the teeth of chapter 106, the lease to that effect would have been void. What could not be accomplished directly, therefore, cannot be accomplished indirectly by compelling the city to pay back part of the money it had received as rent for the demised premises.

If by some unlawful act the city in its capacity as proprietor had interfered, or if it had entered into an enforceable covenant not to do so, and had, nevertheless, interfered with plaintiff's enjoyment of the premises, the case would be quite different. The distinction between acting in a governmental capacity and as a mere proprietor of property is made quite clear in the case of Boston Molasses Co. v. Commonwealth, supra. In that case the commonwealth covenanted as a proprietor of property merely, and hence it was held that it was liable as a proprietor. In this case the act by the city which is complained of was a governmental act, and hence the city is not liable for the consequences of that act.

[4] The law also seems to be that, ordinarily at least, a tenant may not hold on to the premises and then sue for an abatement of the rent upon the theory of a partial eviction. 1 Tiffany L. & T. § 182, p. 1160 et seq., under the title of "Partial Eviction."

We desire to add in conclusion that the case of Lawrence v. White, supra, is a very carefully considered case. The other cases we have cited, and in which the doctrine laid down in the Georgia case is followed, are also all well considered, and, in our judgment, there logically is no escape from the conclusions reached in those cases.

The judgment is affirmed, with costs to the defendant.

McCARTY and CORFMAN, JJ., concur.

(50 Utah, 49)

JEREMY FUEL & GRAIN CO. v. MELLEN.
(No. 2955.)

(Supreme Court of Utah. April 28, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 21, 1917.)

1. JUDGMENT 🔑958(2) — RES ADJUDICATA — QUESTION FOR JURY.

It is proper for the court to determine the question of res adjudicata as a question of law where there is no dispute regarding the effect of matters or controversies in either the former or the instant action.

2. JUDGMENT 🔑743(3) — CONCLUSIVENESS — RES ADJUDICATA.

Plaintiff seeks to recover upon a negotiable note given in consideration of a crusher and motor. In a prior action in which this defendant was a party, plaintiff sought to foreclose a chattel mortgage lien on said crusher and motor, and in such action the court found that the plaintiff had no right, title, or interest to the crusher or motor, and quieted defendant's title thereto. Held that, as plaintiff was required to allege and prove consideration as an essential element of his cause of action, the former action is res adjudicata of the question of his ownership of the only consideration for the note, and is sufficient to dispose of his claim in this action; it not being necessary that the form of both actions be the same if the question directly involved in the first action is also directly involved in the second.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1253, 1277.]

3. JUDGMENT 🔑719—CONCLUSIVENESS—RES ADJUDICATA.

The fact that the finding in the former action quieting title to the crusher and motor in the defendant went beyond the allegations of defendant's answer in the instant case is immaterial, and in no way affects the question of res adjudicata.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1249, 1250.]

4. JUDGMENT 🔑622(2) — CONCLUSIVENESS — RES ADJUDICATA.

As defendant's counterclaim in the instant case for an amount paid on the note was necessarily connected with the same transaction on which the plaintiff based his first cause of action as well as the present, his right to recover on the counterclaim is now barred by his failure to raise it in the former action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1136.]

5. JUDGMENT 🔑622(2)—COSTS ON APPEAL.

Under Comp. Laws 1907, § 2970, providing that, if a defendant omit to set up a counterclaim, neither he nor his assignee can maintain an action against the plaintiff therefor, plaintiff is now barred from recovering on his counterclaim by his failure to set it up in the former action entirely apart from the question of res adjudicata.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1136.]

6. COSTS 🔑241—COSTS ON APPEAL.

Where on appeal a plaintiff succeeded in modifying a judgment against him on defendant's counterclaim, but practically plaintiff's whole record and brief are devoted to combating a ruling of the court against him which was affirmed, costs should be awarded to neither party.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 927–935.]

Appeal from District Court, Salt Lake County; C. W. Morse, Judge.

Action by the Jeremy Fuel & Grain Company against J. W. Mellen, in which defendant filed a counterclaim. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Judgment reversed as to counterclaim and otherwise affirmed, and case remanded, with directions.

G. M. Sullivan, of Salt Lake City, for appellant. Stewart, Stewart & Alexander, of Salt Lake City, for respondent.

FRICK, C. J. The plaintiff, after alleging the necessary matters of inducement in its complaint, alleged as follows:

"That during the month of June, 1913, for a valuable consideration, the defendant executed and delivered to the plaintiff his certain paper writing, wherein and whereby he promised and agreed to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $600 during the month of July, 1913; that thereafter defendant paid upon said written obligation, the sum of $80, and no more, and there is a balance now due plaintiff from defendant upon said written promise the sum of $520, together with interest thereon from July 1, 1913."

The plaintiff prayed judgment accordingly.

The defendant answered the complaint, and in his answer he admitted "that on or about the 8th day of June, 1913, he signed a certain paper," a copy of which is set forth in the answer, and to which we shall refer later. The defendant also admitted that $80 was paid "upon said writing." The defendant then at great length sets forth that the plaintiff had commenced a former action in which it had sought to recover upon the same cause of action, that the defendant, with others, was a party to said action, and that the right of plaintiff to recover upon the present cause of action had been fully determined and adjudicated against the plaintiff in said former action. Defendant also set up a plea of want of consideration for said writing, and in a counterclaim demanded judgment for the $80 aforesaid. There was a reply, the averments of which it is not necessary to refer to.

The issues were tried to a jury, but when both parties had rested the defendant requested the court to direct the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendant upon the plea of former adjudication, and also upon the plea of failure of consideration, and further asked that the court direct the jury to return a verdict in his favor for the $80 upon his counterclaim. The court granted defendant's motion upon the plea of former adjudication, and directed the jury to return a verdict as requested by the defendant, and also directed the jury to find in favor of the defendant upon the counterclaim. The jury returned a verdict as directed, upon which judgment was entered.

Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and insists that the court erred both in directing a verdict on the plea of former adjudication and on the counterclaim for the $80. Plaintiff's counsel vigorously contends that the district court erred in sustaining the plea of former adjudication, while defendant's counsel as vigorously insist that, under the undisputed facts and the law applicable thereto, the district court could not do otherwise.

The facts upon which the plea of former adjudication rests, and upon which the court acted, briefly stated, are as follows: On June 8, 1913, defendant signed and delivered to the plaintiff the writing before referred to, which reads as follows:

> "Salt Lake City, Utah, June 8, 1913.
>
> "For value received, as expressed in a certain bill of sale dated to-day, I hereby agree to pay to the Jeremy Fuel & Grain Company the sum of $600.00 on or about July 1, 1913.
>
> "J. W. Mellen."

The bill of sale referred to in said writing reads as follows:

> "Sold to Jeremy Fuel & Grain Company for the sum of six hundred dollars ($600.00) 1 Climax No. 3 crusher, 1 thirty horse power motor.
>
> "Received payment. Bollwinkel Bros., by John Bollwinkel. Witness J. W. Goodfellow.
>
> "We hereby transfer the above-described bill of sale to J. W. Mellen in consideration of the sum of $600.00, payment of which is hereby acknowledged. Jeremy Fuel & Grain Co., per J. W. Goodfellow, Agt."

On July 7, 1913, the plaintiff in this action commenced an action against the Bollwinkel Bros. mentioned in said bill of sale to recover a certain sum of money claimed to be due from said Bollwinkel Bros. to the plaintiff and to foreclose said bill of sale. The plaintiff in said complaint, among other things, alleged:

> "That on or about the 15th day of February, 1913, the defendants made, executed, and delivered to the plaintiff their certain bill of sale for one Climax No. 3 crusher and one 30 horse power motor, that said instrument was given by the defendants, and was accepted by the plaintiff as security for the payment of defendant's account to the plaintiff, part of which amount was then due to the plaintiff, and that it was in reliance upon said security that the plaintiff made further sales upon credit to the defendants."

The plaintiff prayed judgment that "said bill of sale be foreclosed as a chattel mortgage and the property therein directed sold," and that the proceeds "be applied upon the plaintiff's claims." Among others who were made parties to said foreclosure action, or who intervened therein, was the National Bank of the Republic. The bank in its answer, in effect, averred that it had obtained a judgment against said Bollwinkel Bros. for a sum in excess of $1,100; that execution had been duly issued on said judgment and had been levied upon certain real estate belonging to said Bollwinkel Bros. which was duly advertised and sold by the sheriff; that the "Climax No. 3 crusher," and the "thirty horse power motor" mentioned in said bill of sale were affixed upon and constituted a part of the real estate levied on and sold under the execution aforesaid, and that the plaintiff in said action (who is the plaintiff in this action) had acquired no right, title, or interest whatever in or to said Climax No. 3 crusher or in said 30 horse power motor. Defendant in this action was substituted for the bank in the former action and adopted the bank's answer as his own. The court in the former action, in substance, found that said Climax No. 3 crusher and said 30 horse power motor were "annexed to and affixed upon," and constituted a part of the real property which was sold under the execution aforesaid, and which had been purchased by the bank, and by the bank transferred to the defendant. As a conclusion of law the court also found as follows:

> "That the plaintiff, Jeremy Fuel & Grain Company, a corporation, has no interest in the property described in plaintiff's complaint and in the findings of fact herein; that neither John Bollwinkel, nor J. P. Bollwinkel, nor the firm of Bollwinkel Bros., nor A. T. Moon, intervener herein, have any interest in the property described in the complaint, and in the findings herein; that as against all of the parties to this action the said Joseph W. Mellen is the owner of said property; that the said Joseph W. Mellen is entitled to judgment quieting his ownership in said personal property in these findings described; and for costs incurred."

Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of the defendant, Mellen, who, as before stated, had been substituted for the bank.

[1] On the trial of the case at bar it was made to appear without dispute that the consideration for the writing sued on in this action was the Climax No. 3 crusher and the 30 horse power motor, and nothing else; that the expression "for value received," as it is expressed in the writing, referred to the crusher and motor aforesaid, and to no other consideration. The district court, upon the undisputed evidence, thus determined, as a matter of law, that the right of the plaintiff to recover upon the writing in question had been adjudicated in the former action. There being no dispute regarding the effect of the matters in controversy in either the former or in the present action, it was proper for the court to determine the question of res adjudicata as a question of law. 2 Black on Judgments, § 631.

[2] The question, however, still remains: Is the plaintiff's cause of action in this action the same as in the former one? In other words, was the subject-matter litigated in the two actions, so far as the plaintiff and the defendant are concerned, the same? It certainly is clear enough that what the plaintiff sought to recover in the first action was a certain amount of money, the payment of which it asserted was secured by certain property consisting of one Climax No. 3 crusher and one 30 horse power motor. Plaintiff there claimed that it had a lien on said crusher and motor, and asked to have them sold and the proceeds thereof applied in payment of its claim. The court found against plaintiff's contention in that regard, and found that it had no right, title, or interest in or to said crusher, or said motor, or either of them. Now, while it is true that the action in this case is based on the writing aforesaid, it is equally true that the undisputed evidence shows that the only consideration for the writing in question was the crusher and motor aforesaid. Whether the plaintiff had ever acquired any interest in said crusher and motor was therefore one of the issues in the former action, which issue was found against the plaintiff. In this action it must not be overlooked that the writing in question is not a negotiable instrument, and hence does not import a consideration. The plaintiff was therefore required to allege and prove a consideration. In view that the evidence is without conflict, that the only consideration for the writing was the crusher and the motor, and that the evidence is also undisputed that it was adjudicated in a former action that the plaintiff at the time the writing was given did not have, and that it never had, any right, title, or interest in said crusher or motor, or in either of them, therefore the question of consideration for the writing in question, and which plaintiff was required to establish, was adjudicated in the former action. An essential element which the plaintiff was required to prove as part of his cause of action in the present action was therefore adjudicated against him in the former action, and hence, as between the parties to this action, that issue is res adjudicata. Suppose the plaintiff had prevailed in the former action, and the crusher and motor had been sold, and the proceeds thereof applied in satisfaction of its claim; could it successfully maintain another action on the writing in face of the former judgment in case that judgment was pleaded as is done in this case? We think no one would seriously so contend. If the plaintiff would be estopped from maintaining a second cause of action if it had succeeded in the first one, it is likewise estopped from successfully maintaining the second one in case it failed in the first one. This case comes squarely within the rule laid down by the author in 2 Black on Judgments, § 609, in the following words:

> "It is a fundamental and unquestioned rule that a former judgment, when used as evidence in a second action between the same parties, or their privies, is conclusive upon every question of fact which was directly involved within the issues made in such former action, and which is shown to have been actually litigated and determined therein."

In Goodenow v. Litchfield, 59 Iowa, at page 231, 9 N. W. 109, Mr. Justice Rothrock, in referring to the rule respecting former adjudication, says:

> "The rule, as appears to be well settled by all the authorities, is that, where a former judgment or decree is relied upon as a bar to an action, it must appear either by the record or by extrinsic evidence that the particular matter in controversy and sought to be concluded was necessarily tried and determined in the former action."

Neither is it necessary that the form of both actions be the same. The test is: Was the question directly involved in the first action and also directly involved in the second one? Bank v. Rude, 23 Kan. 143; Spear v. Tidball, 40 Neb. 107, 58 N. W. 708. The foregoing cases leave no room for doubt that the plea of res adjudicata in this case was established, and that the district court did not err in declaring it established, as a matter of law.

[3] We are not unmindful of plaintiff's contention that the findings of the district court in the former action, in effect, quieting title to the crusher and motor in the defendant, went beyond the allegations of defendant's answer. If it be conceded that counsel is right in his contention, yet that in no way affects the question we have just decided. The finding that the plaintiff did not have, and never had, any right, title, or interest in and to said crusher and motor, or in either of them, was in issue and is squarely found. That is quite sufficient to dispose of plaintiff's claim in this action.

[4, 5] Plaintiff's counsel, however, also insists that the court erred in directing a verdict on defendant's counterclaim in his favor. It seems to us that, under the undisputed facts, counsel's contention should prevail. The counterclaim arose out of and was necessarily connected with the same transaction on which plaintiff based his first cause of action, as well as the present one. If, therefore, the defendant intended to counterclaim against the plaintiff, he should have done so in the first action. Suppose the defendant had sued the plaintiff in an independent action, and the plaintiff had set up the former adjudication. Could the defendant recover? It would seem not. But, entirely apart from the question of res adjudicata in the sense that question is usually considered, the defendant is now barred from recovering under our statute, Comp. Laws 1907, § 2970.

As just pointed out, this claim arose out of the transaction set forth in plaintiff's complaint and was also connected with the subject of the action in both the former and the present action, and hence he cannot, under section 2970, supra, maintain a separate action for the amount claimed by him. Nor can he maintain a counterclaim in another action for such amount. (Plaintiff's reply was sufficient to raise the question of the defendant's right to recover on the counterclaim.) The court therefore erred in directing a verdict for the defendant. Indeed, under the undisputed facts, the court should have directed a verdict for the plaintiff against the counterclaim.

[6] The only question left to determine is one of costs. While it is true that the plaintiff has succeeded in modifying the judgment, it is also true that practically plaintiff's whole record and brief are devoted to combating the court's ruling on the question of former adjudication. In view of that fact, we have concluded that costs should be awarded to neither party. The ruling and judgment of the district court on the question of res adjudicata are therefore affirmed, and the ruling and judgment on the counterclaim are reversed. In view, however, that this question is one of law merely, the cause is remanded to the district court of Salt Lake county, with directions to set aside the judgment upon the counterclaim in favor of the defendant and to enter a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant upon the counterclaim.

McCARTY and CORFMAN, JJ., concur.

(96 Wash. 550)

STATE v. WARD. (No. 13785.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 4, 1917.)

1. Embezzlement 🔑5—Requisites.

The gist of larceny by embezzlement under Rem. Code, § 2601, penalizing persons who, with intent to defraud the owner, appropriate property, etc., is accused's intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. § 3.]

2. Criminal Law 🔑1170(1)—Admissibility of Evidence.

In larceny prosecution against an attorney for misappropriating a mortgage sent him for collection, where accused claimed he had traded such mortgage for one of his own, excluding defendant's evidence regarding circumstances under which he assigned the second mortgage for a personal debt, held reversible error, since such evidence was admissible upon question of his good faith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3145, 3149-3152.]

3. Criminal Law 🔑417(13)—Admissibility of Evidence.

In larceny prosecution against an attorney for misappropriating a mortgage sent him for collection, where accused claimed he had traded another mortgage for it, testimony that owner of original mortgage stated he had made such a trade with defendant was admissible, because against such owner's interest and to show his consent to the appropriation.

4. Criminal Law 🔑417(13)—Admissibility of Evidence.

In larceny prosecution against an attorney for misappropriating a mortgage, where accused claimed he had traded it for another, a receipt by nonresident owner of first mortgage reciting payment of all claims against accused, especially of money due on second mortgage, for which first mortgage had been exchanged, is admissible.

5. Embezzlement 🔑48(2)—Instructions.

In larceny prosecution under Rem. Code, § 2601, penalizing persons who, with intent to deprive or defraud the owner, misappropriate property, etc., an instruction that intent to restore or replace the property unlawfully appropriated is not a defense, is erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Embezzlement, Cent. Dig. § 73.]

6. Criminal Law 🔑823(5)—Instructions.

Refusing a requested instruction that accused was not guilty of larceny if he converted a note believing that it was his own, etc., held reversible error, where the charge as given merely covered the matter by an abstract definition of larceny.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1992-1994, 3158.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Klickitat County; R. H. Back, Judge.

Nathaniel L. Ward was convicted of grand larceny, and appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

McMaster, Hall & Drowley, of Vancouver, and Brooks & Brooks and E. C. Ward, all of Goldendale, for appellant. John R. McEwen, of Goldendale, and Miller & Wilkinson, of Vancouver, for the State.

FULLERTON, J. The defendant Nathaniel L. Ward was convicted of the crime of grand larceny, and sentenced to a term in the penitentiary. The information charged that:

> While acting as attorney, agent, or trustee of Sarah C. Hughes and Peter Hughes, her husband, the defendant collected and came into possession of property of theirs by reason of such relation, "and did then and there, without the consent of the said Sarah C. Hughes and her husband, Peter Hughes, or either of them, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously embezzle said property, consisting of more than twenty-five ($25) dollars, lawful money of the United States of America, to wit, eight hundred fifty ($850) dollars, lawful money of the United States of America of the value of eight hundred fifty ($850) dollars, said money then and there belonging to the said Sarah C. Hughes and her husband, Peter Hughes, by fraudulently and feloniously withholding and appropriating said money to his own use with intent to deprive and defraud the owners, to wit, Sarah C. Hughes and her husband, Peter Hughes."

The defendant appeals, assigning that the court erred in excluding certain evidence tendered by him, in giving certain instructions, in refusing to give certain instructions, in overruling a motion for a new trial, and in refusing to sustain a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence.

Peter Hughes was the holder of a note for $1,000, dated March 1, 1910, payable on or before three years after date, which was secured by mortgage upon land in Klickitat county, Wash. The maker, one Smithson, having defaulted in the interest, the note was sent by Hughes to appellant N. L. Ward, then a practicing attorney residing in Goldendale, for the purpose of enforcing payment. On December 4, 1912, appellant, for Hughes and wife, instituted a foreclosure suit which was afterwards abandoned. The property had depreciated in value so that it was doubtful whether it was worth the full amount of the mortgage. The parties to the mortgage entered into negotiations for a reconveyance of the property in payment of the mortgage indebtedness, but this arrangement was never consummated. The appellant in the course of his dealings with his client Hughes had offered to trade him for the obligation an $800 mortgage on land in Tillamook county, Or., due in the year 1913. Respecting this offer Hughes wrote him as follows:

> "Sallisaw, Oklahoma, November 25, 1913.
>
> "Mr. N. L. Ward, Attorney at Law: Am answering your letter that I may have to take my place back. I want to say it will be too big expense to come back to Washington and if you still have the $800 mortgage on the Tillamook land can make a trade as you say the mortgage is good.
>
> "Yours truly, Peter Hughes."

Appellant testified that he considered the trade as made, and dealt with the mortgage on the Klickitat land as his own, and held the note and mortgage on the Tillamook land for the benefit of Hughes without, however, assigning or indorsing them over to the latter. On December 1, 1913, the sum of $850 was paid to appellant in full settlement of the note and mortgage due Hughes, and a release, which had been executed by Hughes and wife on January 28, 1913, and turned over to appellant, was delivered to the mortgagor. This money received by appellant was deposited to his own credit and checked out by him as his own money. In February, 1914, the Tillamook mortgage, which appellant testified he regarded as the property of Hughes, was assigned to the Bickleton State Bank at Bickleton, Wash., on an indebtedness of the appellant to that bank. Hughes, having received no money on either the Klickitat or Tillamook mortgage, put his claim against appellant in the hands of the Gillett State Bank of White Salmon, Wash., for collection. In June, 1914, appellant wrote the bank that he would "fix the Hughes matter up satisfactory," and on July 16, he again wrote the bank:

> "I have just received a letter from Mr. Peter Hughes and will fix the matter up as he suggests next week."

On July 13, 1914, he had written Hughes:

> "Relative to the Smithson matter, I will fix the matter up as you suggest in your letter and will pay you 10 per cent. interest on the note, and will pay you anything you have been out. I will pay you the $500 within next few days."

On August 19, 1914, he again wrote Hughes:

> "I will pay a part of the Smithson money to the bank to-morrow or next day."

The appellant, however, made no payment to Hughes until after the filing of the information against him. On January 2, 1915, he paid Hughes in full the sum of $872.30. The fact of payment was admitted in evidence, but the court excluded other recitals in the receipt tending to exonerate the appellant.

The statute under which the respondent was prosecuted provides that:

> "Every person who, with intent to deprive or defraud the owner thereof— * * * (3) Having any property in his possession, custody or control, as * * * attorney, agent, employé, trustee, * * * shall secrete, withhold or appropriate the same to his own use or to the use of any person other than the true owner or person entitled thereto, * * * steals such property and shall be guilty of larceny." Rem. Code, § 2601.

[1] The gist of the offense of larceny by embezzlement is the intent of the party charged to deprive or defraud the owner by withholding or appropriating his property. Any fact tending to prove or disprove that intent is properly admissible in evidence. The rule is stated in 15 Cyc. 529, as follows:

> "Since from its nature intent is incapable of direct proof, great latitude is necessarily allowed in proving this element of the offense. Broadly speaking, any evidence is admissible which has a tendency, even the slightest, to establish fraudulent intent on the one hand, or on the other hand to show the bona fides of the accused."

[2] The defense in this case was that the appellant had traded his Tillamook mortgage for the Klickitat mortgage belonging to Hughes. The evidence showed that, after this alleged trade and after appellant had used the proceeds of the Klickitat mortgage as his own, he made an assignment of the Tillamook mortgage to the Bickleton State Bank. The defense sought to prove by the appellant under what circumstances this transfer was made and what arrangements he had made with the bank for raising money to send to Hughes. This testimony was excluded. It was already in evidence that appellant in his letters had been promising to get the money for Hughes, and was not denying liability. This testimony had a direct bearing upon the question of his good faith, and, while not conclusive in itself, was admissible for the purpose of showing good faith. We think it was error on the part of the court to exclude it.

[3, 4] In substantiation of appellant's defense that he had a right to dispose of the proceeds of the Klickitat mortgage as his own money, he offered to prove by the witness S. A. Rossier, who had visited Hughes in Portland, Or., for the purpose of paying over the money due him from appellant, that Hughes stated in a conversation held on January 2, 1915, that he had made a trade with appellant of his mortgage on the Klickitat property for a mortgage on Tillamook property, and that the witness at that time took from Hughes a receipt as follows:

> "Jan. 2, 1915, received from N. L. Ward $872.30 in full settlement of all claims against him, and particularly for all money due me on the land in Tillamook county for which my Klickitat mortgage was exchange.
>
> "Peter Hughes."

The prosecution was based on the theory that appellant had embezzled the money derived from a note and mortgage originally placed in his hands for collection, while the defense was that appellant became the lawful owner of this note and mortgage through a trade made with his principal. The evidence was relevant and material upon that issue. The action of the court in excluding it seems to have been based upon the ground that it was hearsay evidence. It is said in 2 Jones, Commentaries on Evidence, § 323:

> "It has long been settled as one of the exceptions to the general rule, excluding hearsay, that the declarations of persons since deceased are admissible in evidence, provided the declarant had peculiar means of knowing the matter stated, if he had no interest to misrepresent it and if it was opposed to his pecuniary or proprietary interest. * * * In this country the law is more liberal, and it has been held that absence from the state, so far as it affects the admissibility of secondary evidence, has the same effect as the death of the witness."

See. also, Alter v. Berghaus, 8 Watts (Pa.) 77; Walnut Ridge, etc., Co. v. Cohn, 79 Ark. 338, 96 S. W. 413; 2 Wigmore, Evidence, § 1456.

The state seeks to avoid the effect of this rule on the theory that the declarations made by Hughes were not against his pecuniary interest, for the reason that he had been paid what was due him, and he had no further interest in the subject-matter. But it seems to us this is not the proper view to take of the situation. He was an essential factor in the prosecution; it was based on the alleged embezzlement of his money, and the proceedings had been set in motion by his wife acting as his agent in the capacity of prosecuting witness. He had a pecuniary interest in the money which the accused was charged with appropriating. If he made a statement to the effect that the accused owed him no money when all the evidence shows that the accused had been in his debt, that is surely a declaration against his pecuniary interest. But even if the recitals in the receipt made after the fact of payment should be in any sense inadmissible, the reasoning of the state would not apply to the offered testimony of witness Rossier, as to statements made by Hughes at the time of their meeting and before the money had actually passed. There was in evidence a letter from Hughes to appellant in which the former agreed to take the Tillamook mortgage in exchange, tending to show that the parties were dealing with one another on that understanding. It seems to us that these declarations of Hughes were against interest, and that their exclusion was prejudicial error. We further think such evidence was admissible for the purpose of showing consent on the part of the prosecuting witnesses to the appropriation for which it is sought to criminally charge appellant. Lockett v. State, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 531, 129 S. W. 627; Pye v. State, 74 Tex. Cr. R. 322, 171 S. W. 741; Wharton, Crim. Law (11th Ed.) §§ 381, 1226.

[5] The following instruction given by the court is assigned as error:

> "You are instructed that the intention to restore, repay or replace money or property wrongfully and unlawfully appropriated, does not take from the act its criminal character, and in this case, if you find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully appropriated the property belonging to the parties alleged, the fact, if you should find it to be a fact, that at the time he made the appropriation he intended to repay or replace at some future time, the money wrongfully and unlawfully appropriated, would not take from the act its criminal character, and the defendant would be liable."

We think the objection to this instruction is well taken. Under Rem. Code, § 2601, intent to deprive or defraud the owner is an essential element in the crime of larceny by embezzlement. The instruction complained of makes unlawful or wrongful appropriation of another's property without any intent to deprive him thereof a crime. Such an instruction is not in accord with the statutory definition of the crime, nor with the authorities.

> "The word 'unlawfully,' where used in the instruction, does not supply the [place of the] word 'felonious,' or the word 'fraudulently,' etc., for while defendant may have unlawfully converted the money to his own use, it does not necessarily follow that he did so with a felonious or fraudulent intent, and unless he did so with such intent he is not guilty of embezzlement, although the statute does not in express terms require that there should be a criminal intent." State v. Cunningham, 154 Mo. 161, 55 S. W. 282.
>
> "Where defendant, having borrowed a diamond ring pawned it with intent to redeem it, and without any fraudulent intent to permanently deprive the owner of the property, he was not guilty of theft as bailee; the fraudulent intent existing at the time of the conversion being an essential element of the offense." Taylor v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 377, 97 S. W. 473 (syllabus).

"The rule of law, with some exceptions, which do not apply to our case, is this: That when an act is forbidden by law to be done, the intent to do the act is the criminal intent and the law presumes the intent from the commission of the act; but when an act becomes criminal only by reason of the intent, unless the intent is proved the offense is not proved, and this intent must be found by the jury as a fact from the evidence. It is for them to infer it, and not for the court. * * * This shows clearly that the mere act of converting the property to the defendant's own use is not sufficient to constitute the offense, and that it is incumbent upon the state to go a step farther and prove that it was done with a fraudulent purpose." State v. McDonald, 133 N. C. 680, 45 S. E. 582.

See, also, State v. Lentz, 184 Mo. 223, 83 S. W. 970; State v. Reilly, 4 Mo. App. 392; Tashima v. People, 58 Colo. 98, 144 Pac. 200.

[6] The following instruction requested by appellant was refused by the court:

"You are instructed that under the laws of the state of Washington if a person in converting property to his own use does so under a bona fide claim of title thereto, he is not guilty of the crime of larceny, although his claim of title was not good, and in this case you are instructed that if the defendant after negotiating with Peter Hughes for a trade believed that this note in question was his, and so believing used the proceeds as his own, you cannot find the defendant guilty."

This instruction was addressed to the facts in evidence, while the court in its charge merely covered the matter by an abstract statement in the language of the statute defining the offense of larceny by embezzlement. It is said in Brickwood's Sackett on Instructions to Juries, § 179:

"Instructions should be framed with reference to the circumstances of the case on trial, and not be expressed in abstract and general terms, when such terms may mislead instead of enlightening the jury."

See, also, Blashfield, Instructions to Juries, § 92; State v. McCann, 16 Wash. 249, 272, 47 Pac. 443, 49 Pac. 216; State v. Rolette, 161 Pac. 1042.

We think that the refusal of the foregoing instruction constituted prejudicial error. The other instructions requested and refused were sufficiently covered by those given by the court.

The challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence was properly denied. The contention is that the evidence on the part of the state did not tend to prove the crime alleged, that it tended to show the conversion of a check or credit while the charge is a conversion of money; but without further reviewing the evidence, we find no merit in the contention.

For the errors indicated above in the exclusion of evidence and the giving and refusal of instructions, the judgment of conviction is reversed, and a new trial awarded.

ELLIS, C. J., and MOUNT, and PARKER, JJ., concur. HOLCOMB, J., concurs in the result.

(22 N. M. 530)

STATE v. MONTES. (No. 1990.)

(Supreme Court of New Mexico. June 1, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE 🔑137 — INDICTMENT — DEATH FROM WOUND.

An indictment charging A. with having inflicted a mortal wound upon B., of which mortal wound the said B. thence continually languished until a certain day, the said B. languishing did die, sufficiently alleges that B. died of the mortal wound alleged to have been inflicted by A.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 228–230.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1028—HOMICIDE 🔑137 —INDICTMENT—PLACE OF DEATH—APPEAL.

(a) Under section 5570, Code 1915, trial of one charged with homicide may take place either where the mortal wound was inflicted or where the person died. Held that, where homicide is prosecuted in county where mortal wound was inflicted, indictment which omits allegation of place of death of deceased is not fatally defective.

(b) Nonjurisdictional questions cannot be raised first time on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2619, 2620; Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 228–230.]

Appeal from District Court, Grant County; Neblett, Judge.

Pedro Montes was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. B. Renehan, of Santa Fé, for appellant. Harry S. Bowman, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HANNA, C. J. The appellant, Pedro Montes, was tried and convicted of murder in the first degree in the district court for Grant county and sentenced to be hanged.

[1] 1. The transcript filed by appellant contains only the record proper, and but two questions are presented for our consideration. The first question is that the trial court was without jurisdiction for the reason that the indictment is defective in not stating the cause of death of Rufina Villanueba. After alleging the assault, the indictment proceeds to charge the following:

"* * * did strike, penetrate and wound, giving to the said Rufina Villanueba, then and there with the leaden bullets aforesaid, * * * in and upon the head and body of her the said Rufina Villanueba, one mortal wound, of which said mortal wound the said Rufina Villanueba, thence continually languished until the eighth day of January, in the year aforesaid, she the said Rufina Villanueba languishing did die."

The contention of appellant is that Rufina Villanueba, though mortally wounded, might have languished of the hurt and died of poison, pneumonia, or of another assault, for all that the indictment discloses. Counsel for appellant criticizes the holding of this court in the case of Territory v. Benito Lobato, 17 N. M. 666, 134 Pac. 222, L. R. A. 1917a, 1226, saying that "the court evidently strained the law against the defendant, instead of in his favor." This statement and others contained in his brief are without any foundation whatever. The Lobato Case, cited supra, is controlling on this point of law. There the indictment alleged:

> "Of which said mortal wound, the said Juan Trujillo thence continually languished until, on the 30th day of December, A. D. 1909, * * * he there died."

The court held that the indictment sufficiently alleged that the deceased died of the mortal wound inflicted by the appellant in that case, saying:

> "We do not believe the language used in the indictment and quoted above, by any rule of construction, justifies the assertion that it does not charge that the deceased died of the mortal wounds inflicted by the defendant. Briefly stated, and stripped of legal verbiage, the indictment charged that Trujillo was given a mortal wound by the defendant, 'of which mortal wound' the said Trujillo 'there died.' It is true, the indictment alleges, after using the language 'of which said mortal wound,' that 'the said Juan Trujillo continually languished until, on the 30th day of December, A. D. 1909, between the hours of 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning of said day,' and that such language intervenes between the words 'of which said mortal wounds' and 'he there died,' still it is all a part of one sentence, and such language simply relates to what occurred between the infliction of the wounds and the death. The charge is that he died of the mortal wounds, so received, and the recital is made that, of the mortal wounds so received, he languished, followed by a statement of the time of his death. The charge is all part of one sentence, separated only by commas, and only by a strained construction can appellant's contention be sustained."

The position of appellant on this point, in the face of the foregoing decision, is wholly without merit.

[2] 2. (a) The second proposition urged by appellant is that the indictment is defective because it fails to allege the place of death of Rufina Villanueba. The indictment alleges that:

> "In the year aforesaid, in the state of New Mexico aforesaid, she the said Rufina Villanueba languishing did die."

Appellant contends that the indictment should have alleged definitely the county wherein death occurred, and that an allegation of the definite place of death is essential. Numerous cases are cited by appellant to the effect that at common law the indictment must allege that the deceased died in the county in which the indictment was found, such allegation being necessary in order to confer jurisdiction, and the case of State v. Coleman, 17 S. C. 473, is cited as authority that such an allegation is necessary even where a statute permits indictment and trial of an offense, either where the mortal wound was inflicted or where death ensued. That case does so hold, but it is one holding to the minority doctrine. There the statute made specific provisions for the place of trial, where the injury causing the death was inflicted within the limits of that state and death ensued beyond the limits; where the injury was inflicted by a person within the limits of the state upon a person without the limits of the state, or vice versa; where the injury causing death was inflicted by one person in one county and death ensued in another; and where the injury causing death was inflicted by a person who was in the bounds of one county upon a person who was in the bounds of another county. The court said that the statute did not purport to make any change in the rules of criminal pleading, and the indictment, not having alleged the place of death, was defective, both under the statute and under the common law. Apparently, the court lost sight of the purpose and necessity of the allegation, for its principal purpose, under common-law pleading was to exhibit the venue of the offense and thereby aver jurisdiction. But numerous other cases, where statutes of the same purport were in effect, reached a contrary conclusion. In State v. Baldwin, 15 Wash. 15, 45 Pac. 650, the indictment failed to allege the place of death, and appellant urged that it was therefore defective because it disclosed that the court had no jurisdiction of the offense and that it violated his constitutional right to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him. The court referred to Ball v. U. S., 140 U. S. 118, 11 Sup. Ct. 761, 35 L. Ed. 377, relied upon in the case at bar by appellant, and said that it was decided under common-law principles and was not applicable to the case then at bar because of the existence of a statute of Washington, which provided, among other things, that all criminal trials should be held in the county where the offense was committed. Speaking to the contention that the failure to allege the place of death deprived appellant of his constitutional right to be appraised of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, the court said that the proposition was not presented to the trial court, and "it was not error going to the jurisdiction of the court, and from the proofs it is apparent that no harm resulted to the defendants." In Roberson v. State, 42 Fla. 212, 216, 28 South. 427, 429, the identical question presented in this case was before the court. It is said that the true common-law rule probably was that the offense was committed where the mortal wound was inflicted. The court, under a statute similar to ours (section 5570, Code 1915), said:

> "So far as showing jurisdiction in the court is concerned, it is evident, under the statutes mentioned, that an allegation of a mortal wound in a county in this state, and the consequent death therefrom within a year and a day, would be sufficient to give jurisdiction in the county where the mortal blow was struck. If the mortal wound is inflicted in a county in this state, jurisdiction attaches there, whether the death resulted in another county of the state, or beyond its territorial limits. The question here, however, is not entirely one of jurisdiction, but one, also, of pleading, and a direct assault was made on the indictment by motion to quash on account of the failure to allege where the death occurred. The American decisions are in conflict on the point, an apparent majority in number sustaining an indictment without an allegation as to the place of death."

The justice writing the opinion in that case said that he believed that the place of death should be averred in an indictment for homicide, but the majority of the court reached the opposite conclusion, in view of the statute. In the concurring opinion, the court reasoned that at common law the place of death might be laid in the county where the mortal wound was inflicted, and that proof of death in a different county was not a fatal variance; hence it was apparent that the allegation was essential only for the purpose of showing venue or jurisdiction. Under the statute of that state, similar to ours as we have said, the indictment was held to be good. In Albright v. Territory, 11 Okl. 497, 69 Pac. 789, the court said that the allegation of the place of death was essential at common law, to confer jurisdiction, but that under the statute of that state, providing for trial of homicide, either where the mortal wound was inflicted or death occurred, the allegation was not essential. See, also, Loyd v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 76, 116 Pac. 959, 961; State v. Jones, 38 La. Ann. 792; State v. Bowen, 16 Kan. 475; 13 R. C. L. "Homicide," § 185; and note to Commonwealth v. Snell, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1019. In this note the author concludes that an allegation of the place of death is not necessary under statutes giving the courts of either the place where the mortal wound was inflicted, or where death occurred, jurisdiction over the homicide. The cases for and against this conclusion will be found collected in that note.

2. (b) We are satisfied that the contention of appellant on this point is without merit, but an additional reason exists for that conclusion. The record fails to disclose that the indictment was made the subject of attack on this point at any time. The court acquired jurisdiction by the allegation that the mortal wound was inflicted in the county of Grant, and the question presented, made on the theory that the indictment should have been more definite so that appellant might intelligently prepare his defense, is nonjurisdictional and cannot be considered here for the first time.

The only other contention made by appellant is that the indictment attempts to charge several offenses, the attack being on the ground of grammar and syntax, and that section 5570, Code 1915, has no bearing upon the second point discussed herein. The indictment is not defective for the reasons argued or assigned, and the conclusion reached in the discussion of the second point herein makes it unnecessary to restate the reasons why the second contention under this point is without merit.

The judgment of the trial court is therefore affirmed, and it is so ordered.

PARKER and ROBERTS, JJ., concur.

(101 Kan. 20)

RICE v. RICE et al. (No. 20534.) *

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EVIDENCE 🔑423(1)—PAROL EVIDENCE—GROUND OF WRITTEN OBLIGATION.

Although the terms of a written obligation, assumed to be valid, cannot be varied by parol, it may be shown by parol what caused the party thus to obligate himself, and thereby test the question whether he is legally bound, as the writing imports, or whether he is by any cause wholly or partially freed from liability thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1957, 1960.]

2. EVIDENCE 🔑432—PAROL EVIDENCE—FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION FOR NOTE.

In a foreclosure suit between the immediate parties to the note and mortgage parol evidence is always admissible to show a failure of consideration, or that the note and mortgage were given merely as accommodation to the payee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1981–1989.]

3. GIFTS 🔑49(4)—MORTGAGES 🔑25(6)—VOLUNTARY GIFT OF REALTY—CONSIDERATION FOR MORTGAGE—EVIDENCE.

The evidence examined, and held sufficient to support findings to the effect that a warranty deed from plaintiff to his nephew, one of the defendants, conveying certain real estate was intended by the plaintiff as a volntary gift, and that a note and mortgage executed to him at the same time by the nephew for the amount stated as consideration for the deed were given without consideration and intended as an accommodation to the payee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 95; Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 42, 1364.]

Appeal from District Court, Graham County.

Suit to foreclose a realty mortgage by A. J. Rice against Louis H. Rice and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. L. Sayers, of Hill City, and Z. C. Millikin, of Salina, for appellant. F. D. Turck, of Hill City, and Burch, Litowich & Royce, of Salina, for appellees.

PORTER, J. The plaintiff is the uncle of defendant L. H. Rice, and brought this suit to foreclose a mortgage on residence property in Hill City occupied by L. H. Rice and wife.

The note for $6,500 and the mortgage were executed February 4, 1908, signed by L. H. Rice a day or two before his marriage. The answer alleges that on that date the property which was then owned by the plaintiff was conveyed by warranty deed to L. H. Rice as a voluntary gift, and at the same time and at the plaintiff's request the note and mortgage were executed, but without any consideration, and merely for the accommodation of the plaintiff, who stated that he was a heavy borrower of banks and others, and desired the note and mortgage so he could use them as collateral to loans he might make in the future, and that his nephew would never be called upon to pay the note, and that the mortgage should never be enforced against the property. L. H. Rice further alleges in his answer that he had full confidence in his uncle and executed the note and mortgage in reliance upon these representations. The court found for the defendants on the facts, and gave judgment against the plaintiff, who appeals.

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Rehearing denied July 11, 1917.

[3] The court made the following findings of fact:

"In 1906 the plaintiff was a resident of Hill City, Graham county, Kan. He was then and now is a bachelor. He has no living relatives in this county excepting the defendant, and had no relative living here at the time of the transactions involved in this suit, other than defendant. Defendant is a nephew of plaintiff. In 1906 defendant came to this county and soon afterwards he entered the employ of plaintiff. At that time the plaintiff was the owner of about 100 quarter sections of land in Graham and Rooks, and about twenty quarter sections in Atchison county. He also owned the lots in question in this suit, being lots 7 and 8 in Hill City. This property was largely free from incumbrance. The business of plaintiff at this time was extensive and required constant supervision. In this state of plaintiff's business, the defendant entered the plaintiff's employ at a compensation of $2.75 per day. He assisted the plaintiff in all ways in looking after his business and property. Some time after entering the plaintiff's employ, plaintiff became a large owner of a telephone system and defendant was put in charge of it. In 1908 plaintiff was informed of the prospective marriage of defendant with one Miss Clara Law, of good family, who lived about twelve miles south of Hill City. Miss Law was the owner of some land lying in her neighborhood, where she and her husband-to-be had planned to make their home. Wishing to retain the defendant in his employ and to have defendant do his work from Hill City as his headquarters, and also desiring to make a home for his nephew and his wife and also for himself in the future in his declining years, plaintiff proposed to build a house on the lots in suit and give it and the land on which it was to be built to the defendant. The defendant agreed to accept such gift and to furnish a room in the proposed house for the use of plaintiff. The house has been built and occupied by defendant and plaintiff and his wife ever since. The defendant and Clara Law were married on February 5, 1908. The day before their marriage, defendant and plaintiff went to the office of one W. H. Hill, a notary public of this county, residing in Hill City, and had him prepare a warranty deed of the lots in suit for himself as grantor to defendant as grantee. At the same time a mortgage was made by defendant to plaintiff covering the same lots. The express consideration of both the deed and mortgage was $6,500, but no real consideration was given for it. This deed was delivered to defendant by plaintiff about the day of the wedding. It was kept by defendant for a short time, and afterwards was delivered into the possession of plaintiff for safe-keeping. When the mortgage was made it was retained by plaintiff. At the time of delivery of the mortgage it was agreed and understood between and by both the plaintiff and defendant that the mortgage was to be used only for the accommodation of plaintiff in case he so desired to use it, but otherwise was not to become of any force or effect as a lien upon the lots in the suit. It was not so used, but has been kept in the possession of plaintiff at all times since. This mortgage was made to fall due five years after date without interest. Neither the deed nor the mortgage have been recorded in the office of the register of deeds, nor has the mortgage at any time been returned by plaintiff to the assessor for taxation. At the time of the making of the deed and the mortgage a first mortgage rested on the lots in suit and on three quarter sections of land worth about the face value of such mortgage, and the lots themselves with their improvements were worth about $3,500. After the making and delivery of the deed and the mortgage, some additional improvements, which have increased its value to about $4,000. At the time plaintiff decided to make a gift of the property to defendant the house had not been begun, and the value of the property then did not exceed the sum of $1,000. Plaintiff gave possession of the property to defendant when the house was sufficiently finished for living in, intending that he should have it as his own, and defendant took possession of it and has ever since occupied it as his own, and plaintiff has made his home with defendant as a member of his family. Plaintiff has, since the house was built and occupied, put some other improvements on the lots, but he has done so voluntarily and for the benefit of the defendant. He has also paid some taxes assessed against the land, but he has done so voluntarily and for the benefit of the defendant, and has been paid the greater part of such advances. The property in suit was given to defendant by plaintiff as a free and voluntary gift. Its possession was taken by defendant and accepted as such gift. The mortgage was given without consideration having been given for it by plaintiff. It was given by defendant and accepted by plaintiff for the latter's accommodation, and not to hold it as a lien upon the lots, and with the understanding and agreement between them that it should never become a lien upon the lots, and that payment of it should never be exacted from defendant by plaintiff."

The findings are sustained by sufficient evidence. The defendants' claims in regard to the execution of the instruments are borne out by the circumstances set forth in the findings as to the relationship of the parties, and the business and friendly relations which existed between them at the time the instruments were executed and which continued for years afterwards.

[1, 2] The first contention is that the execution of the note and mortgage and of the deed are one transaction. This may be conceded; the answer alleges that they were both executed at the same time and place. They are to be considered as one transaction, so as to give force and effect to both when it can be reasonably done. But the application of this doctrine does not prevent either party from proving the facts as to the actual consideration for either or both instruments. The plaintiff was competent to make a voluntary gift of the property to his nephew. He might have made a voluntary gift to his nephew of $5,000 in government bonds, and at the same time and place he might have made an arrangement by which he borrowed the bonds from his nephew to use as collateral security with the understanding that he would return them to the nephew. In a sense the giving and the borrowing would be all one transaction. The possession of the bonds would be prima facie evidence that the uncle continued to own them, but the nephew might be able to establish by competent evidence the facts showing that the bonds belonged to him.

It is contended that the court erred in admitting parol evidence varying the terms of the note and mortgage. The evidence, however, was not offered for that purpose. The defendants concede that the instruments are precisely what the maker and the payee intended them to be—a note and mortgage, which in the hands of a holder in due course would be enforceable against the maker and against the property described in the mortgage. This is a suit between the original parties, and, as said in Bartholomew v. Fell, 92 Kan. 64, 139 Pac. 1016:

> "Between the original parties to a written instrument the rule excluding parol evidence in contradiction of a written agreement is not infringed by proof that the instrument was never delivered, or was delivered to take effect only upon the happening of some future event." Syl. 3.
>
> "The objection to parol evidence does not apply where it is offered not for the purpose of contradicting or varying the effect of a written contract of admitted authority, but to disprove the legal existence or rebut the operation of the instrument, and in order to determine the validity of the writing the true character of the transaction may always be shown." 17 Cyc. 694.
>
> "The rule which prohibits the introduction of parol evidence to vary a written instrument has no application when the legal existence or binding force of the instrument is in question." Webster v. Smith, 72 Vt. 12, 13, 47 Atl. 101.

A case in point is Campbell v. Davis et al., 94 Miss. 164, 47 South. 546, 19 Ann. Cas. 239. The parol evidence went to show that the actual consideration was $200, but that at the payee's request the amount was stated as $700, in order that the payee might use the paper as collateral. The court held that this does not violate the rule against parol evidence to vary a writing, but is merely showing the real consideration for the note. In the opinion it was said:

> "This brings the case squarely within the well-established rule thus admirably stated by Judge Campbell: 'The terms of an obligation, assumed to be valid, cannot be varied by parol; but it may be shown by parol what caused the party to thus oblige himself. That consists with the written obligation, and does not vary it. The right to show the real consideration is a qualification of the general rule of the admissibility of parol evidence to alter the terms of a written contract, and is as well established as the rule itself. What I bind myself by writing to do cannot be varied by parol; but I may always show by parol what induced me to thus bind myself, and thereby test the question whether I was legally bound, as the writing imports, or whether I have been by any cause wholly or partially freed from my obligation.' Cocke v. Blackbourn, 57 Miss. 689." 94 Miss. 167, 47 South. 547 (19 Ann. Cas. 239).

The Negotiable Instruments Law (section 6543, Gen. Stat. 1915) authorizes the testimony of which the plaintiff complains. It reads:

> "As between immediate parties, and as regards a remote party other than a holder in due course, * * * the delivery may be shown to have been conditional, or for a special purpose only, and not for the purpose of transferring the property in the instrument."

The finding of the court that at the time of the delivery of the mortgage it was understood and agreed between the parties that the mortgage was to be used only for the accommodation of plaintiff in case he so desired, but otherwise was not to become of any force or effect as a lien upon the property, that it had not been so used, but remained in the possession of the plaintiff at all times since, is a finding of the facts which brings the case within the section of the statute just quoted.

It is contended there was error in admitting the testimony of Mrs. Law, mother of Mrs. Rice, to the effect that L. H. Rice told her that the plaintiff had given the property to him. There was other competent evidence fully sustaining the court's findings of the facts with reference to the gift of the property, so that in any event the admission of the evidence cannot be regarded as reversible error. The trial was by the court, and the court ruled that the evidence would be considered only in connection with the testimony of L. H. Rice that the plaintiff directed him to make this communication to Mrs. Law, and the evidence tended to show that L. H. Rice was the agent of the plaintiff for the purpose of making the statement.

The findings sustain the conclusions of law by which the judgment barred the plaintiff from all interest in the property and denied his right to maintain the action upon the note and mortgage.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring, except DAWSON, J., who did not sit.

(101 Kan. 161)

CRAVENS et al. v. PUTNAM, Mayor, et al.

(No. 20922.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑465—STREET PAVING—TAXING DISTRICT—SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS.

The statute having prescribed what shall constitute a taxing district in the matter of paving a street, and also the mode of making special assessments of private property to pay for the paving, it must be closely followed, and a substantial departure from the method prescribed by the Legislature will invalidate the assessment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1108.]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑465 — PAVING STREET—TAXING DISTRICT—"BLOCK."

Under Gen. St. 1915, § 1705, providing that in cities of the second class paving assessments shall be made for each block separately on all lots to the center of the block on either side of the street, the word "block" means the platted portion of a city surrounded by streets.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1108.

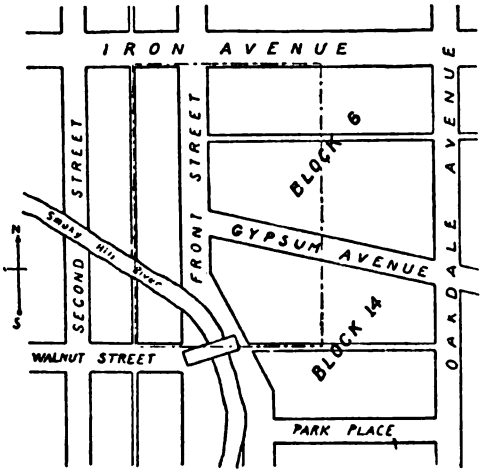
For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Block.]

Appeal from District Court, Saline County.

Action for injunction by R. P. Cravens and others against E. J. Putnam, Mayor of Saina, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. B. Crowther and H. C. Tobey, both of Salina, for appellants. Z. C. Millikin, of Salina, for appellees.

JOHNSTON, C. J. This was an action by the owners of lots in Salina to enjoin the officers of the city from levying and collecting illegal assessments made upon their lots for the paving of Front street, and also to prevent the issuance of bonds to pay for the paving. In the preliminary steps the officers of the city designated the extent of the paving district and undertook to make it include blocks and parts of blocks as indicated on the following plat:



Gypsum avenue, Iron avenue, Oakdale avenue, Walnut street, and Front street are regularly laid out streets of the city. The distance between the south line of Iron avenue and the north line of Gypsum avenue is 418 feet, and the west line of Front street between Iron avenue and Walnut street is not intersected by any cross street. Second street, west of Front street, runs parallel with Front street and 250 feet west of it. The part of Front street improved extends from Iron avenue past Gypsum avenue to Walnut street, and the authorities undertook to include in the paving district the territory to the middle of block 6, abutting on Front street, and also a large part of block 14 lying on the south side of Gypsum avenue; namely, the part which extends from Front street to the middle of the block and as far south as the north line of Walnut street. They also included one-half of the block lying west of Front street and extending from Iron avenue to Walnut street. The territory between Front street and Second street and extending from Iron avenue to Walnut street constitutes a single block, and has been in this form since the platting of the original townsite. The plaintiffs' lots are situated in block 6, and they insist that the inclusion of other blocks or parts of blocks in the paving district is contrary to the statute and fatal to the validity of the assessment. The court found that the assessments as made by the city upon plaintiffs' property were greatly in excess of what they would have been had the assessments been made for each block separately.

[1, 2] The Legislature has prescribed the extent of the paving district and the method of apportioning assessments of this character. It is provided that:

> In cities of the second class "* * * assessments shall be made for each block separately, on all lots and pieces of ground to the center of the block on either side of such street or avenue, the distance improved or to be improved, * * * according to the assessed value of the lots or pieces of ground, without regard to the buildings or improvements thereon, which value shall be ascertained by three disinterested appraisers appointed by the mayor and council, or commissioners," etc. Gen. Stat. 1915, § 1705.

As the statutory rule requires that assessments shall be made upon each block separately, the attempt of the city to include other territory with block 6 was without authority. What constitutes a block to be separately assessed has been the subject of investigation a number of times, and it has been determined that it is a platted portion of a city surrounded by streets. City of Ottawa v. Barney, 10 Kan. 270; Blair v. City of Atchison, 40 Kan. 353, 19 Pac. 815; McGrew v. Kansas City, 64 Kan. 61, 67 Pac. 438; Bowlus v. Iola, 82 Kan. 774, 109 Pac. 405. The plaintiffs are entitled to have their property assessed according to the statutory method, and, as we have seen, the departure from that method resulted in a substantial increase in the assessments that were made. The city may not adopt a different plan of assessment because it may be more convenient for the mayor and council, or because its officers may think it to be more equitable in its application. The Legislature had the authority to make an apportionment, and it is well established that statutory rules making special assessments upon private property must be strictly followed. Simpson v. Kansas City, 46 Kan. 438, 26 Pac. 721. The fact that the block opposite block 6 in which plaintiffs' property is situated extends from Iron avenue to Walnut street and considerably farther south than does block 6 does not affect the application of the statutory rule. The block as platted is the unit in apportioning special assessments, and whether it is larger or smaller than another block abutting upon an improved street it must be separately assessed. Bowlus v. Iola, supra. The length of that block may slightly affect the assessments made upon the lots along the street, but absolute equality is not attainable. Some blocks abutting on a street are deeper than others, but a variation in depth has never been regarded as cause for departing from the statutory rule, nor as invalidating the assessments made.

There is a contention that as plaintiffs had petitioned for the improvement and allowed it to proceed, they are estopped to question the validity of the assessment. While they petitioned for the improvement, they did not ask for an invalid apportionment of the tax. There was a legal way in which to make the assessments, and the plaintiffs had a right to expect that the statutory and usual method would be used. They invoked action, but not illegal action, and the rule in the cited case of Stewart v. Com'rs of Wyandotte Co., 45 Kan. 708, 26 Pac. 683, 26 Am. St. Rep. 746, does not apply.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 103)

COOK v. LEAVENWORTH TERMINAL RY. & BRIDGE CO. (No. 20890.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Bridges 🔑46(13)—Public Toll Bridge—Action for Injury—Instructions.

Instructions defining the duty of a public toll bridge toward a drunken pedestrian examined, and held favorable to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bridges, Cent. Dig. § 121.]

2. Bridges 🔑36—Public Toll Bridge—Duty to Intoxicated Patron.

A public service corporation owes no higher duty to a drunken patron than to a sober one, unless it knows or has reason to believe that such patron is so much incapacitated with intoxicants that he cannot take care of himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bridges, Cent. Dig. §§ 82–85, 109.]

3. Bridges 🔑46(5)—Public Toll Bridge—Action for Injury—Evidence.

Where a plaintiff who is injured while crossing a toll bridge by being struck by a passing train bases his charge of negligence against the bridge company on the ground that custom and reasonable care required the defendant not to allow pedestrians on the bridge while trains were crossing it, it was competent for the defendant to prove that there was no such custom, that there was no danger to persons exercising ordinary prudence in passing trains on the bridge, and that hundreds of people had met and passed trains on the bridge daily for 20 years, and that no previous accidents had been occasioned thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bridges, Cent. Dig. §§ 114½, 116–118.]

4. Evidence 🔑147—Admissibility—Negative Evidence.

Under an issue of custom and a question as to the requisite requirements of reasonable care, negative evidence which does not tend to raise collateral or impertinent issues is admissible under the rules and limitations announced in Field v. Davis, 27 Kan. 400; City of Topeka v. Sherwood, 39 Kan. 690, 18 Pac. 933; Cunningham v. Clay Township, 69 Kan. 373, 76 Pac. 907.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 435–437.]

5. Appeal and Error 🔑302(3)—Record—Consideration of Evidence.

Rule followed that excluded evidence which is not brought on the record in conformity with section 307 of the Civil Code (Gen. St. 1915, § 7209) cannot be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1747.]

6. Appeal and Error 🔑1050(1)—Harmless Error—Admission of Evidence.

Where no prejudice is disclosed, a ruling that photographs offered in evidence might be admitted "for what they are worth" is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1068, 1069, 4153, 4157.]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

7. Trial 🔑343—General Verdict—Issues.

All the facts put in issue by the pleadings are conclusively resolved in favor of the defendant by the general verdict for him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 809–812.]

8. Appeal and Error 🔑1032(1)—Reversal—Prejudice.

In view of Civ. Code, §§ 141, 581 (Gen. St. 1915, §§ 7033, 7485), it is not enough to disturb a judgment that some error or impropriety occurs in the trial, but appellant must show that the matter complained of prejudicially affected the net result.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4047, 4051.]

Appeal from District Court, Leavenworth County.

Action by John L. Cook against the Leavenworth Terminal Railway & Bridge Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur M. Jackson, of Leavenworth, for appellant. A. E. Dempsey, of Leavenworth, and John Barton Payne, of Chicago, Ill., for appellee.

DAWSON, J. The plaintiff was severely injured by a Rock Island train while he was crossing the defendant's bridge over the Missouri river between Leavenworth, Kan., and Drydale, Mo. The bridge is a toll bridge erected by authority of Congress and constructed on plans approved by the War Department, and is used by railroads, vehicles, and pedestrians. Plaintiff brought this action against the bridge company, alleging that he purchased from defendant's agent a ticket which authorized and entitled him to cross the bridge from Leavenworth to Drydale in safety, and that the defendant's agent told him to proceed and told him that he could do so in safety, and that in reliance thereon he started eastward across the bridge, and when he was about half way an accommodation train of the Rock Island railway approached him from the east, and that there was not room for him between the train and the guard rail of the bridge, and that he, believing his life was in danger, turned and ran westward, but the train overtook him and he clung to the railing while hot and burning steam from the locomotive enveloped, blinded, burned, and confused him, and that the locomotive struck and knocked him down, whereby he sustained his injuries.

The defendant's answer pleaded that the plaintiff was under the influence of liquor, and insisted, notwithstanding the protest of the defendant's toll agent, in going upon the bridge after being informed that a train was about to cross from the east; that there was ample space for plaintiff and the train to pass in the usual and customary manner; that on account of plaintiff's intoxicated condition he threw himself against the side of the train, which caused his injuries; that at all times there was ample space for a pedestrian and train to pass if he exercised ordinary care for his own safety.

From a general verdict and judgment for defendant the plaintiff appeals, specifying the following errors:

> "1. Inasmuch as the defendant, by its amended answer and evidence, introduced the doctrine of last clear chance into the case, the trial court erred in giving to the jury instructions numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 7, requested by defendant.
>
> "2. The trial court erred in allowing the defendant, over the continuous objections of plaintiff, to introduce the testimony of many witnesses, to the effect that no previous accident had occurred on the bridge; that they had never known of a previous accident on it and had no difficulty in crossing it.
>
> "3. The trial court erred in refusing to allow the plaintiff to show that since the accident the defendant bridge company has placed a board walk, outside the railing, on the south side of the bridge.
>
> "4. The trial court erred in allowing defendant to introduce certain photographs in evidence, and in allowing Oliver Ousler, the bridge superintendent, to give certain testimony relating thereto."

[7, 8] All the facts put in issue by the pleadings are conclusively resolved in favor of the defendant by the general verdict, so that phase of this lawsuit needs no attention on appeal.

[1, 2] Examining the errors assigned in the order of their presentation, it is not quite clear how the doctrine of last clear chance is involved in this case, nor would prejudicial error necessarily follow if it were. It is not enough to disturb a judgment that some error or impropriety transpires in a trial. It is necessary that the appellant go further and show that the matter complained of prejudicially affected the net result. Civ. Code, §§ 141, 581 (Gen. St. 1915, §§ 7033, 7485); Cox v. Chase, 99 Kan. 740, Syl. par. 11, 163 Pac. 184. But laying aside mere cavil about doctrines, and considering the instructions themselves, the trial court gave eight instructions at plaintiff's request, and seven at the request of defendant. These are too long for reproduction here, but the court has diligently and critically examined them. Those formulated by the plaintiff mainly outlined the law of the case under which plaintiff should prevail if the facts proved would permit it, and those formulated by defendant stated the law of the case if the facts should be resolved as pleaded and testified to by defendant. No inconsistency inhered in the instructions as a whole when read and considered together; and this is the attitude and method by which the jury should and presumably did consider them. Of course, if appellant's second specification of error relating to the admission of incompetent testimony is meritorious, the instruction directing the jury's attention to the legal effect of the facts established by such incompetent testimony would be prejudicial error. The question of the incompetency of the evidence will be considered in its place. The plaintiff could only recover on the grounds of negligence alleged in its petition. The allegation in the answer asserting the drunkenness of the defendant and his contributory negligence in attempting to cross the bridge in an intoxicated condition were a proper subject to be covered by the instructions. One of the instructions prepared by plaintiff and given to the jury reads:

> "3. You are further instructed that if you believe, from the evidence, that the plaintiff was in such an intoxicated condition at the time he purchased a ticket or toll entitling him to cross said bridge as to render him incapable of taking proper care for his safety, and the defendant, at that time, knew this to be a fact, a greater duty rested upon said defendant to guard and protect the plaintiff from injury than would have been required of it had said plaintiff not been under the influence of intoxicating liquor."

The complemental instruction on this point given at defendant's request reads:

> "4. The jury are further instructed that the defendant bridge company was under no obligation to anticipate or foresee that the plaintiff Cook was not or would not be in a sober condition, if he was not sober, or able to take care of himself, if he was not able to do so, and owed no other or different duty toward him than it owed toward others of the general public, and if the plaintiff, by reason of his intoxication or other negligence, unnecessarily exposed himself to risk or danger which caused or contributed to his alleged injuries, he has only himself to blame therefor and cannot recover damages from the defendant."

The latter instruction was necessary to make a complete statement of the law covering this feature of the case, without which the defendant's rights would have been overridden and disregarded. McIntosh v. Oil Co., 89 Kan. 289, 131 Pac. 151, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 112; Little Rock Ry. Co. v. Billings, 173 Fed. 903, 98 C. C. A. 467, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1031, 19 Ann. Cas. 1173, and note. The two instructions do not conflict; they properly supplement each other. If the defendant's agent had known or had reasonable grounds for believing that the plaintiff was so thoroughly incapacitated by intoxication that he could not take care of himself, it would perhaps have been his official duty—at least it would have been expected of him as a natural impulse of humanity—to prevent if possible his going on the bridge when a train was approaching. This is somewhat akin to the doctrine of "last clear chance." But nothing in the evidence discloses that the agent knew or had reason to believe the plaintiff was so drunk that he could not take care of himself. The plaintiff's comrade bought the tickets for himself and plaintiff and when the agent told them a train was coming and if they would wait a few minutes it would be over, the one who bought the tickets said they had passed the train many a time on the bridge. The agent testified that he thought they were drunk, but not staggering, and he let them pass, as was his custom with all pedestrians who appeared to be able to take care of themselves. The statement of plaintiff's comrade would tend to dissipate any doubt which the agent might have as to the plaintiff's capacity to care for himself. The court is of opinion that the instructions quoted and the others given fairly covered the law applicable to these circumstances.

[3, 4] Was it error to permit the defendant's numerous witnesses to testify that they were familiar with the bridge and had met and passed trains on the bridge many times, that hundreds of people crossed the bridge without accident every day and every night? The plaintiff's petition alleged that it was the usual custom of the defendant to sell tickets to pedestrians when trains were not due, and that the exercise of reasonable care required the defendant not to allow pedestrians to cross at times when trains were due or about to cross the bridge. Defendant's answer put the latter allegation squarely in issue. Plaintiff introduced some evidence tending to support it. It would seem, therefore, that defendant's evidence to the contrary was competent on the issue which plaintiff tendered. The case of Ireton v. Ireton, 59 Kan. 92, 52 Pac. 74, cited in condemnation of this, merely holds that incompetent evidence is not rendered competent because the party introducing it had set it up in her pleadings and no motion had been made to strike it out. But here the evidence objected to was proffered to combat the allegations of the pleadings and evidence of the adverse party. Surely what the plaintiff may allege, the defendant may deny; and what the plaintiff seeks to prove, the defendant may endeavor to disprove. But plaintiff argues that this evidence does not show that the many pedestrians who daily passed trains on the bridge were intoxicated, that they did not meet the same train or one exactly similar, at the same time of day; in other words, that the conditions under which the witnesses had passed the bridge and had seen others pass the bridge in safety were not like those under which the plaintiff was injured, and that such evidence was therefore incompetent and irrelevant. This cuts the matter a little too fine. There is no reason to believe that there was so much difference in the width of engines and cars as to materially increase the hazard, if there was a hazard, to a sober and ordinarily careful person in meeting and passing a train on the bridge; and the distinction between the extent of the company's responsibility to sober and to drunken patrons was most favorably pointed out in the instructions. The defendant could not prove its whole defense at once. Under the negligence alleged and testified to by plaintiff it was incumbent upon the defendant to prove that its bridge was safe for ordinary pedestrians to meet trains on the bridge under ordinary conditions, and that it was not necessary to forbid them to enter the bridge when a train was approaching. The evidence was competent for such purposes. Field v. Davis, 27 Kan. 400; City of Topeka v. Sherwood, 39 Kan. 690, 18 Pac. 933; Cunningham v. Clay Township, 69 Kan. 373, 76 Pac. 907; Wigmore on Evidence, §§ 444, 445, 458.

In 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1161-1164, is part of an extended note showing the conflict of authority as to the admissibility of negative evidence; and the Kansas case (Field v. Davis, supra) is cited among those which permit such evidence when its admission is not likely to carry the inquiry too far afield or to raise collateral or impertinent issues.

Even the matter of the escape of steam from the engines passing pedestrians on the bridge was shown by some of the witnesses not to have been unusual or serious. This matter was covered by an instruction strongly favorable to the plaintiff, and it should be kept in mind that it was the bridge company, not the railroad company, which was sought to be held partly on account of the escaping steam and its consequences. Moreover, the trial court fully restricted the criticized evidence to its proper scope:

> "4. You are further instructed that even if you believe from the evidence that many other persons had crossed the bridge of the defendant on foot in safety, before the night of the plaintiff's alleged injury, that fact would not defeat a recovery in this case if you further believe, from the evidence, that said defendant, considering all of the circumstances surrounding the crossing of said bridge by said plaintiff on the night in question, did not exercise reasonable and ordinary care to keep said plaintiff off said bridge or to permit him to cross said bridge on foot in safety."

[5] The third assignment of error relates to the exclusion of evidence which it is asserted would show that a board walk outside the railing has been placed on the south side of the bridge. The excluded evidence was not brought upon the record by affidavits, deposition, or testimony supporting the motion for a new trial and cannot be considered on appeal. Civ. Code, § 307 (Gen. St. 1915, § 7209); Hamilton v. Railway Co., 95 Kan. 353, 148 Pac. 648; Scott v. King, 96 Kan. 561, 152 Pac. 653.

[6] Another error is based on the introduction of certain photographs of the bridge. Defendant's objection reads:

> "Counsel for plaintiff: Objected to because they will not help the issues; they would not show the distance from the track to the sides of the bridge; they are taken very close up to the west end and are deceptive in that particular; they are not taken when a train is crossing the bridge, or this Rock Island train in particular; and are objected to for the reason they are incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

"The Court: * * * You do not object to them because they are not properly identified?

"Counsel for plaintiff: No. I presume they are actual photographs of the bridge; but I think they are incompetent because they would not help the jury any except as to the general appearance of the bridge."

The court has examined the photographs, and cannot see how their submission to the jury could have prejudiced the plaintiff, and the trial court's ruling that they might be admitted "for what they were worth" was not error. Higgs v. "Soo" Ry. Co., 16 N. D. 446, 114 N. W. 722, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1162, 15 Ann. Cas. 97; Hughes v. State, 126 Tenn. 40, 148 S. W. 543, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1263, and note; Dederichs v. Railroad Co., 14 Utah, 137, 46 Pac. 656, 35 L. R. A. 802.

Nothing approaching the gravity of reversible error is disclosed in this appeal, and the judgment of the district court is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 91)

KELLY v. CENTRAL UNION FIRE INS. CO. (No. 20804.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. TRIAL 🔑343 — GENERAL VERDICT—DISPOSITION OF ISSUES.

Rule followed that a general verdict and consistent findings of fact dispose of all controverted issues of fact when based upon substantial, though conflicting, testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 809–812.]

2. CORPORATIONS 🔑519(3) — CONTRACT TO SURRENDER STOCK — RATIFICATION — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Record shows evidence sufficient to prove the contract in controversy, and to prove its authorization and ratification.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2085, 2089.]

3. CORPORATIONS 🔑376—PURCHASE OF OWN STOCK—FOREIGN STATUTE—CONSTRUCTION.

A statute forbidding a corporation to purchase or hold its own stock, either absolutely or as collateral, after it has once been issued, does not cover the transactions of a corporation during its formative stage, and before its corporate structure is perfected, in contracting for the surrender and cancellation of subscription stock to suppress an overissue in excess of its authorized capitalization, when such correction of the illegal overissue is done in good faith, free of any taint of fraud, and not in prejudice of the rights of third parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1530.]

4. CORPORATIONS 🔑388(2)—OBLIGATIONS — PLEA OF ULTRA VIRES.

A corporation cannot avoid its obligation on a plea of ultra vires when it has appropriated the consideration and received the benefits of it, and where the party seeking to enforce it has fully performed her share of the bargain.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1557.]

5. CORPORATIONS 🔑487(1) — OVERSALE OF CAPITAL STOCK—SURRENDER OF EXCESS—ACTION FOR VALUE OF SURRENDERED STOCK.

Where a corporation in its formative stage discovers that it has oversold its authorized maximum capital stock, the fact that all stock sold after the maximum had been reached should have been treated as void will not bar a recovery for the agreed value or reasonable price of valid stock surrendered by a prior lawful subscribing stockholder to relieve the company's embarrassment and to extinguish the overissue, when this method of correcting the company's capitalization is undertaken in good faith, free of any taint of fraud, and the rights of others are not affected thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1893, 1898.]

Appeal from District Court, Miami County.

Action by Katherine Kelly against the Central Union Fire Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lyons & Smith, of Kansas City, Mo., H. L. Burgess, of Olathe, and Paul E. Bradley, of Kansas City, for appellant. Sheridan & Sheridan, of Paola, for appellee.

DAWSON, J. This appeal relates to matters which transpired during the formative period of the defendant's corporate existence, and requires a review of certain transactions relating to plaintiff's purchase of subscription shares of defendant's stock, the surrender and cancellation of plaintiff's stock to extinguish an overissue of capital stock, the partial payment to plaintiff for her surrendered stock, and the question of the defendant's liability to plaintiff for the balance of the agreed price, or reasonable value, of plaintiff's stock thus surrendered by her.

Plaintiff's petition alleged that in July, 1911, she purchased from defendant 900 shares of its capital stock and paid for the same in money and property amounting to $11,250, and that she received a proper stock certificate therefor; that about December 31, 1911, defendant discovered that it had overissued its capital stock to the number of some 1,500 shares in excess of its authorized capitalization; that its authorized capital was $350,000, being 35,000 shares at a par value of $10 per share; and that it was necessary that some of the stock thus issued be canceled so as to reduce the actual stock issue to its maximum legal limit. The petition continues:

"Such overissue of the stock having occurred through an inadvertence in having agents at various sections of the country taking subscriptions for and selling the stock. * * * But when it became apparent to the defendant company, and its various officers, of the said overissue of stock, and that it was necessary to call in and cancel about 1,500 shares of the stock so issued, thereupon the defendant, because of the foregoing, and in its effort to retire or cancel stock, * * * under an oral agreement on or about December 31, 1911, * * * in consideration that this plaintiff would return the said certificate and permit it to be canceled by the defendant, * * * it was at that time agreed between the defendant and the plaintiff that it would pay to the plaintiff the sum of $15 per share, or a total consideration of $13,500, for the said certificate of stock, * * * and the defendant, in pursuance thereof, at or > about that time received the same, and caused the same to be canceled. * * * That the defendant paid to this plaintiff, on or about the ——— day of June, 1912, $6,000, under the terms of the said oral agreement; and that it has at all times since wholly refused and neglected to pay this plaintiff the remaining part of the said $13,500, which it agreed to pay, etc."

Defendant's answer denied, generally and specially, all of the plaintiff's material allegations, denied that there was an overissue of its capital stock at any time, denied that it was necessary to cancel any stock, denied that it purchased or canceled plaintiff's stock, denied that it paid her $6,000 thereon.

> "But if said stock was purchased, as alleged, from the plaintiff herein, * * * said contract and agreement was entered into, if at all, in the state of Missouri. That it was to be performed within the state of Missouri. That the defendant is an insurance company, organized under the laws of the state of Missouri. * * * That section 7063 of the Revised Statutes of the state of Missouri for the year of 1909, among other things, provides as follows: 'No insurance company shall, directly or indirectly, purchase or hold, either absolutely or as collateral, its own stock, after the same has been once issued.' * * * That said alleged contract for the purchase of said stock, if made at all (and defendant denies that any such agreement was made), was contrary to said statute of the state of Missouri, and was therefore ultra vires, void, and of no force or effect, and not binding upon the defendant company."

Answering further, the defendant alleged that from the spring of 1910 until August 8, 1911, the plaintiff's husband, T. T. Kelly, was secretary of the defendant company, and as such official he had charge of the promotion and organization of the company and the sale of its capital stock; that after August 8, 1911, he was the president and a director of the company, and was the principal officer and manager of the company and intrusted with its management and with control of its affairs; that on June 2, 1911, he caused a certificate for 1,000 shares of the stock to be issued to himself; that on July 20, 1911, he caused that certificate to be canceled, and in lieu thereof caused the issue of two certificates to be made, one for 100 shares in his own behalf and another for 900 shares to be issued to plaintiff; and that thereafter through the company's stock salesmen he effected a sale of 1,000 shares to a Dr. J. M. Singleton for the sum of $15,000, being $15 per share:

> "Said salesmen in selling said stock to Dr. J. M. Singleton supposed that they were selling treasury stock of said company, but that said Kelly upon his own initiative, and without the knowledge or consent of defendant company, for the purpose of making a personal profit for himself, caused the two certificates of stock then held by himself and his wife * * * to be surrendered and transferred upon the books of the defendant company and a new cetrificate, * * * for 1,000 shares to be issued to Dr. J. M. Singleton. * * *"

The gist of other matters pleaded in the answer was that the Singleton stock was an outright purchase of the stock of plaintiff and her husband, and not a purchase of treasury stock; that Singleton paid for his stock by giving promissory notes for the purchase price; that plaintiff's husband, as president of the company, made a real estate loan to Singleton, with defendant's funds, upon condition that one of the promissory notes for $7,500 given by Singleton should be paid with the moneys thus loaned to him; and that, pursuant thereto, plaintiff's husband received the sum of $7,500.

> "That this defendant has never exercised dominion or ownership of said notes, or either of them, and has never made any claim to or over the said notes, and it does not now claim any right, title, or interest thereto. That said notes have never been listed or scheduled among the assets or property of the defendant company, but at all times have been and now are in truth and in fact the property of the said T. T. Kelly."

Plaintiff's reply admitted that originally a certificate of stock in the name of her husband for 1,000 shares had been prepared, but never with her consent; that two certificates should have been prepared in the first instance, one representing her interest of 900 shares and one representing her husband's interest of 100 shares; that, when the overissue was discovered, her husband, as president of the company, offered to return to her the money and property (mortgages) which she had paid for her stock and pay her the balance of the then reasonable and agreed price, or, if the property could not be returned, the defendant would pay her $15 per share. Other features of the plaintiff's reply read:

> "That thereupon she surrendered the said certificate of stock, first indorsing it, and delivered it to T. T. Kelly, for the defendant company at Paola, Kan., on or about the latter part of December, 1911, or the fore part of January, 1912, and that thereafter the defendant has kept and retained the said certificate and has not paid to this plaintiff any of the said purchase price, except the sum as stated in plaintiff's petition.
>
> "Third. This plaintiff admits that T. T. Kelly is, and has been for many years, the husband of the plaintiff, and that he was the secretary of the defendant company as well as the president of the defendant company; that he had all the power and authority in behalf of the defendant expressed in the petition of the plaintiff; and further alleges that each and all of his acts and proceedings with relation to the defendant and in reference to the stock of this plaintiff and the surrender thereof were from time to time fully known and approved and ratified by the board of directors, stockholders, and the executive committee of the defendant, including the various officers of the defendant; and that the defendant and its said board and officers and the committees acquiesced in, approved, and consented, and had previously authorized, the procurement of the said certificate of stock by the said T. T. Kelly from this plaintiff. * * *"

On these issues, the cause was tried. The jury returned a general verdict for plaintiff, and answered certain special questions propounded by plaintiff:

> "(2) * * * State if the plaintiff, at the instance and request of the defendant, caused the said stock certificate to be delivered to the defendant with the intention and purpose on the part of the defendant and plaintiff that the defendant would cancel the said stock certificate and the rights of the plaintiff as the holder of such stock. A. Yes.
>
> "(3) * * * State if the defendant did cancel the said certificate and thereafter exercised absolute control over the said stock. A. Yes.

"(4) * * * State if it is true that, at the time the defendant so received the said certificate, it did so with the belief on its part that there was an overissue of stock of the defendant, and that it was necessary to procure at least as much as 900 shares, in order to cancel the same to reduce the stock issue of the defendant to 35,000 shares. A. Yes.

"(5) * * * State if the defendant at that time agreed to pay the plaintiff for the said stock, and, if so, the price of $13,500. A. Yes.

"(6) * * * What was the reasonable market value of the 900 shares of stock represented by the certificate of the plaintiff, at the time it was so delivered to the defendant? A. $15 per share, or $13,500.

"(7) How much did the plaintiff cause to be paid to the defendant for the 900 shares represented by her certificate No. 488? A. $12.50 per share, or $11,250.

"(8) Was there, at the time the defendant received the certificate of stock in question, an overissue of stock of defendant? A. Yes."

Also, certain questions of defendant:

"(3) Did the plaintiff in this action receive the check for $7,500 issued by the Central Union Fire Insurance Company to Henrie S. Dyson, given by Dr. J. M. Singleton in payment of one of his notes? A. Yes, she received the check.

"(4) Was said $7,500 received by plaintiff and applied by her in part payment for her 900 shares of stock? A. $6,000 was applied on her 900 shares of stock."

Defendant's principal contentions are: That the contract for the surrender and cancellation of plaintiff's stock was in violation of the laws of Missouri and prohibited by Missouri statutes, and that the laws of a corporation's domicile follow and govern its conduct into whatever jurisdictions the corporation may go; that the contract was also void under the laws of Kansas; that no contract was proven and no ratification shown; that, if there was an overissue of defendant's stock, the plaintiff's stock would not be affected thereby, but only the Singleton stock, or whatever stock was issued after the authorized capitalization was sold in full; that the holders of the excess issue of stock had their remedy against the corporation by demanding a return of the consideration paid for the excess issue; that defendant's acquisition of plaintiff's stock did not change the situation or cure the defect in the capitalization; that the verdict was excessive in the principal sum of $1,500 and interest computed thereon.

[1, 2] The general verdict and the special findings dispose of all controverted issues of fact. Although stoutly controverted by defendant, we find no difficulty in gleaning from the record ample evidence to prove the contract, its authorization, and ratification. Getty v. Milling Co., 40 Kan. 281, 287, 19 Pac. 617; Town Co. v. Morris, 43 Kan. 282, 284, 23 Pac. 569. There was, indeed, much evidence to the contrary. A skillful and persistent effort was made to prove that the cancellation of plaintiff's stock was merely to effect a sale and transfer of it to Dr. Singleton, and not at all to cure an overissue. But the jury has settled these matters. Bruington v. Wagoner, 100 Kan. 10, 164 Pac. 1057, Syl. par. 1.

[3] Statutes of Missouri, Missouri decisions, and Kansas decisions, are cited and quoted to show that the contract for the surrender and cancellation of plaintiff's stock to correct and cure the overissue was ultra vires and expressly prohibited, and that the contract was against public policy. These have been carefully examined. The Missouri statute forbids a corporation to purchase or hold its own stock, either absolutely or as collateral, after it has once been issued. Rev. Stat. Missouri 1909, § 7063; Chrisman-Sawyer Banking Co. v. Independence Mfg. Co., 168 Mo. 645, 647, 68 S. W. 1026. Such is the general rule. Whether the purchase of its own stock by a corporation is positively forbidden by statute or by mere judicial disapproval of such a practice, there is no doubt that the rule is based on sound public policy. Savings Bank v. Wulfekuhler, 19 Kan. 60; Abeles v. Cochran, 22 Kan. 405, 31 Am. Rep. 194; Steele v. Telephone Ass'n, 95 Kan. 580, 148 Pac. 661. There is usually some leeway allowed by statute, or by judicial interpretation, for a corporation's temporary acquisition or control of its own outstanding capital stock for the purpose of protecting itself against loss. Rev. Stat. U. S. § 5201; U. S. Comp. Stat. 1916, § 9762; Gen. Stat. 1915, § 2144; Rev. Stat. Mo. § 2990; Battey v. Bank, 62 Kan. 384, 63 Pac. 437; Faulkner v. Bank, 77 Kan. 385, 95 Pac. 153; Bank v. Strachan, 89 Kan. 577, 132 Pac. 200, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 668; St. Louis Rawhide Co. v. Hill, 72 Mo. App. 142, Syl. par. 2. See, also, notes in 61 L. R. A. 621, and 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 50.

But the transaction involved in the present case is unique. The corporation's purpose in procuring plaintiff's stock and canceling it was to correct a breach of its corporate powers which it had already committed, and it was not to reduce or hold within its own control its legitimate capital, nor to commit a breach of any rule of public policy governing the manipulation of its own stock. The corporation had illegally issued stock in excess of its authorized maximum capital. Some mode of correction had to be devised. It was necessary that a report of its corporate financial status be made to the Missouri superintendent of insurance. To apprise that officer of the excess issue of stock at that time might have brought down on the corporation the drastic consequences of usurping illegal powers. The predicament of the corporation was not one which could be corrected by an amendment to its charter. The statute relating to that subject (Rev. Stat. Mo. § 7001A; Laws Mo. 1911, p. 276) regulates the reduction of a previously authorized and valid capitalization and for the amendment of the corporate charter in accordance therewith. That statute does not pretend to govern the suppression or extinguishment of an illegal overissue of stock. It cannot be denied that the defendant corporation had power to correct the infirmity in its capitalization. It was its duty to do so. When the state creates a corporation, it not only confers authority upon it, but it imposes a duty upon it —the duty to exercise its corporate functions and to exercise them in conformity to its grant of powers. This corporation had erred, and it was bound to correct that error in some appropriate way. The mode of relieving itself from its predicament was simple and not seriously inappropriate. It certainly was a harmless mode of correcting the irregularity. It did not prejudice the rights of creditors. It was not done to escape a stockholder's liability. It had no taint of fraud. Defendant's bargain with plaintiff for the surrender and cancellation of her stock to cure the illegal overissue was not such a purchase of plaintiff's stock as is contemplated by the inhibitions of the Missouri statute, and the bargain by which defendant was relieved of its embarrassment did not offend against any rational rule of public policy. It does not appear that the creator of this corporation, the state of Missouri, has challenged the corporate acts of defendant in effecting the readjustment and correction of its stock issue. The defendant was vitally benefited by the arrangement—not necessarily in money, but in a more important way—by the restoration of its corporate integrity. The court is of opinion that the transaction involved here was not within the fair intendment of the statute cited and did not offend against it either in letter or in spirit.

[4] There are, indeed, two schools of jurists and two lines of authority on legal questions relating to ultra vires transactions. The case of Harris v. Gas Co., 76 Kan. 750, 92 Pac. 1123, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171, discusses at length both the strict and the liberal view concerning the consequences of ultra vires transactions. A long line of well-considered decisions has committed this court to the liberal view that a corporation may not avoid its obligation on a plea of ultra vires when it has appropriated the consideration or received the benefits of it, and when the party seeking to enforce the obligation has fully performed his share of the undertaking. Cooper v. National Bank, 40 Kan. 5, 18 Pac. 937; Town Co. v. Morris, 43 Kan. 282, 23 Pac. 569; Town Co. v. Russell, 46 Kan. 382, 26 Pac. 715; Town Co. v. Lincoln, 56 Kan. 145, 42 Pac. 706; Railroad Co. v. Johnson, 58 Kan. 175, 48 Pac. 847; Opera House Co. v. Loan Association, 53 Pac. 761;[1] Harris v. Gas Co., 76 Kan. 750, 92 Pac. 1123, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171; Saylors v. Bank, 99 Kan. 515, 519, 520, 163 Pac. 454, and cases cited; Bank v. Wilson, No. 20,740, 101 Kan. 72, 165 Pac. 859; Main v. Casserly, 67 Cal. 127, 7 Pac. 426; 10 Cyc. 1056–1067; 7 R. C. L. 677–681.

[5] It is suggested that the plaintiff's stock, being subscribed and paid for and issued before the excess issue occurred, was not affected by the overissue; and that the stock sold and issued after the authorized capitalization was completed was void. That is true. The plaintiff might have stood on her rights and held her valid stock, and let the defendant settle with Singleton, the last subscriber or one of the last, on the best terms possible. Singleton was very much desired as a stockholder and as a director, and the promoters of the corporation believed it to be very much to the corporation's advantage to have him interested in its success. In the formative stages of a corporation's development, considerable bona fide discretion must be allowed to its promoters to effect its success, and the wise apportionment of its stock and unselfish concessions of stock distribution by promoters to invoke and attach the interest of other influential and responsible parties, free of any taint of fraud or prejudice of third parties, are worthy of commendation rather than condemnation. Be that as it may, it would never do to deny redress to plaintiff, who parted with her stock to favor and benefit the defendant and to relieve it from its dilemma, merely because as lawyers and judges we happen to know that there was another and more strictly regular mode by which the corporation might have dealt with its overissue.

It needs but a word to dispose of the question relating to the excessive verdict. The plaintiff and her husband surrendered their stock as a part of the arrangement to extinguish the overissue. She received $7,500, of which $6,000 was a payment on her own stock, and $1,500 was to pay for her husband's stock. That matter was perfectly clear to the trial court and jury, and it is clear to us. The defendant owed her for the balance of the agreed price—or the balance of the reasonable worth of the surrendered stock, which in this case amounted to the same thing—and the verdict for that amount and interest is not excessive.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 45)

METZ v. CLAY et al. (No. 20691.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CONTRACTS 🔑352(2)—ACTION FOR BREACH —QUESTION FOR JURY.

The evidence examined, and held sufficient to take the case to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 1828.]

2. BONDS 🔑27—CONSIDERATION.

The bond executed by the defendant to stay out of the lumber business for a fixed time within certain territory held to have been a part of the transaction covering the sale of his lumber yard to the plaintiff and to have rested on the same consideration.

---

[1] Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 59 Kan. 778.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bonds, Cent. Dig. §§ 29, 30.]

3. DAMAGES 🔑78(3)—LIQUIDATED DAMAGES OR PENALTY — CONSTRUCTION OF BOND IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Following Evans v. Moseley, 84 Kan. 322, 114 Pac. 374, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 887, and Kuter v. Bank, 96 Kan. 485, 152 Pac. 662, the bond sued on herein is construed, and held to be one for penalty, and not for liquidated damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 160.]

4. ASSIGNMENTS 🔑117—ACTIONS—PARTIES.

Although the plaintiff transferred the lumber yard in question to a corporation (in which he was largely interested officially and as a stockholder), he is not shown to have assigned the bond or to have disposed of another yard affected by the terms thereof. Held that, under the pleadings and evidence, the claim that he is without right to maintain the action cannot be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 189–191.]

Appeal from District Court, Clark County; L. M. Day, Judge.

Action by J. W. Metz against J. H. Clay and others. Demurrer to plaintiff's evidence sustained, and he appeals. Order reversed, and cause remanded.

Robert C. Mayse, of Ashland, and Noble & Tincher, of Medicine Lodge, for appellant. W. W. Harvey, of Ashland, for appellees.

WEST, J. This action was brought to recover liquidated damages for a breach of contract. A demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence was sustained, and he appeals.

In the spring of 1910 John H. Clay owned a lumber yard at Ashland, and with a minor boy was conducting it in the name of J. H. Clay & Son. J. W. Metz was a Wichita lumberman. After some talk in March, the parties, on April 2, 1910, entered into a contract, set out in the answer, to sell the yard and buildings for $4,000, $500 being paid in cash, "for the six lots, together with all appurtenances, office fixtures, my good will, influence, and business which I have established at Ashland, Kan., and to sign a contract not to engage in the lumber business within a radius of 50 miles of Ashland, Kan., for five years from date of the completion of the inventory of the stock," the lumber and other merchandise to be figured at the prices shown by the latest inventories, certain freight added. The writing was signed by John Clay, and contained, among other things, the following:

> "I hereby agree to commence invoicing the stock May 2, 1910, and continue the same until stock is completely listed and figured, and before the inventory is commenced I am to sign an agreement as set forth in the above for my good will and business that I have established and influenced for a period of five years within a radius of 50 miles. This contract is to be left in the hands of Judge Price until all settlements are ready to be made, and the delivery of this contract to J. W. Metz upon payment as set forth above."

The plaintiff alleged a purchase of the property in question from J. H. Clay & Son, and their business and good will, and as part of the consideration an agreement by J. H. Clay & Son not to engage in the lumber business in the city of Ashland or the trade territory adjacent thereto for a period of five years, either directly or indirectly, and not to lend their services to any one engaged in this line of business within that territory; that as a part of the consideration for the purchase they executed their contract of May 2d, which is set out as an exhibit. It was alleged that J. H. Clay violated the contract by engaging in the lumber business in Ashland in the name of Clay and another of his sons, and continuing in such business, furnishing the means therefor, and lending his services to the son in such business, in violation of the agreement. This agreement purported to bind the defendants in the penal sum of $4,000, to J. W. Metz, his heirs, assigns, or personal representatives, on the following condition:

> "Whereas, J. H. Clay and Chester Clay, his son, partners under the style and firm name of J. H. Clay & Son, have been engaged in the lumber business at Ashland, Kan., and desiring to sell the said business, have agreed with J. W. Metz, the purchaser, as a part of the consideration of the sale of said business, not to engage in the same line of business at Ashland, Kan., or within a radius of 50 miles therefrom, nor to engage or lend their services to any one in said business within said radius or territory for said period of time, and not to lend their name nor permit it to be used by any one in said line of business, and that if either of said principals should, either directly or indirectly, engage in the said lumber business, or engage or lend their services to any one in said line of business, or permit their name to be used in said line of business at Ashland, Kan., or within a radius of 50 miles therefrom, he or they should forfeit to the said J. W. Metz, purchaser as aforesaid, or to his heirs, assigns, or personal representatives, the sum of four thousand dollars as liquidated damages for such breach of contract and agreement:
>
> "Now, therefore, if the said J. H. Clay and Chester Clay shall well and truly keep their agreement and promise not to directly or indirectly engage in the lumber business at Ashland, Kan., or within a radius of 50 miles therefrom, nor engage their services to any one in said line of business, nor permit their names to be used by any one in said line of business, for a period of five years, this bond and obligation to be void; otherwise, in full force and effect."

The answer denied any agreement to give the bond sued on, and alleged that it was without consideration, and denied going into the lumber business since the sale of the yard in question, and further pleaded the two-year statute of limitation. The wife adopted the answer of her husband. The minor son, by guardian ad litem, filed a general denial.

[1] The purchase price was $13,722. H. L. Coat testified: That he managed the yard until October, 1915. That it occupied the site purchased until the spring of that year, when it was moved to another location in Ashland.

That after the sale of the yard to Metz, and in the spring of 1911, the witness saw J. H. Clay selling posts, and loading out posts and cement, in front of his residence. These posts were shipped from Belle Plain and hauled to Clay's house. The witness saw J. H. Clay showing men the posts, and saw Chester Clay loading them out to the parties, who had been looking at them in the morning. That in March, 1911, and in the fall of 1912, J. H. Clay was selling lumber in the yard of a new location, and told the witness he was going to start the boys up in business, and he wanted to get them on their feet, and was going to put up that building for them. Witness had seen J. H. Clay showing men lumber there. This occurred in 1911, and every year since. J. H. Clay seemed to go regularly to work. In the spring of 1912 the witness had written to J. W. Metz about Clay selling lumber, and one day J. H. Clay came to witness with a letter from Metz in his hand, and directed the witness to tell Metz:

> "That I am in the lumber business, and I am going to sell stuff, and if he wants to sue me on that contract I am ready for him."

Porter Seacat testified: That in 1914 he bought lumber for a granary at the Clay yard, made the contract with J. H. Clay, who filled the bill and made the price, but who gave witness to understand that it was his son's business, and told him to settle with his son, but directed that, if the son Lloyd did not settle according to agreement, to come back to him. That one overcharge by the son was refunded by J. H. Clay. That J. H. Clay told witness he was backing his son Lloyd in the business. Frank Anderson testified that he bought a few boards of J. H. Clay at the Clay lumber yard some time in 1911 or 1912, but settled the bill with the son. Some time in 1912 witness had a load of lumber on his wagon, which he had purchased elsewhere, when he was accosted by J. H. Clay:

> "He said, 'If you bought it of me, I would sell it so much cheaper.' I don't remember how much cheaper it was, but he told me I could get the lumber cheaper there."

A number of other witnesses testified to acts and conversations on the part of J. H. Clay indicating a more or less active interest in the business and a persistent disposition to solicit patronage for the yard which he claimed was conducted by the son. This showing, contrasted with the conditions of the bond, was such that the plaintiff had a right to go to the jury on the question of damages.

[2] It is argued that the bond was void and without consideration. But the testimony shows without dispute that it was the understanding that J. H. Clay was to give security for the performance of his contract, that no objection was made to signing the one in question, and it was really a part of the entire transaction covering the purchase and sale of the property, and supported by the same consideration.

[3] The oft-traversed ground of penalty or liquidated damages has been thoroughly gone over by counsel, each side claiming full support for its contention. The plaintiff testified to the effect that he thought, if the defendant should set up business in opposition, it might work a damage of $1,000 each year for five years. But it would be unreasonable to hold that opposition for one year should work the same recovery as opposition for five years. The question of penalty or liquidated damages was considered in Evans v. Moseley, 84 Kan. 322, 114 Pac. 374, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 889, and under that decision, and Kuter v. Bank, 96 Kan. 485, 152 Pac. 662, and others cited in the two, the bond must be treated as one for penalty, and not for liquidated damages.

[4] In the answer it was alleged:

> "That the plaintiff, at the time he purchased said stock from defendant, and for several years prior thereto and continuously since, was and still is the owner of a number of lumber stocks situated at various points in Kansas and Oklahoma, one of said stocks being at Sitka, Kan., six miles east of Ashland."

The plaintiff testified: That at the time he did not know just how he would run the business, but "he turned over the yard to the Metz Lumber Company, a Kansas corporation, which has operated it ever since." That he was still president and director, and owner of 1,598 of the 2,000 shares of stock, and at the time of the purchase was personally interested in a lumber yard at Sitka. That the stock was delivered by Clay & Son to the Metz Lumber Company, and from it they got their pay. That that company had conducted the business since. That he had personal supervision over it as president, but had conducted no lumber business personally in Ashland. The bond ran "to J. W. Metz, his heirs, assigns, or personal representatives." There is no evidence or claim that he assigned it to the company. The defendant contends that the plaintiff cannot maintain this action, as all the interest he has in it arises from his ownership of stock in the corporation. But as he apparently owns the bond, and was for some time, and according to the answer continued to be, the owner of another lumber yard near Ashland, and as no attempt was made below to settle the question of proper or necessary parties, it does not sufficiently appear that the plaintiff may not maintain the action for whatever damages he can show he has suffered by the breach of the bond.

The order sustaining the demurrer to the evidence is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 143)

In re BENNETT'S ESTATE.

BENNETT v. ARROWSMITH et al.

(No. 20916.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

COURTS 🔑200¼—PROBATE COURT—JURISDICTION—PARTITION.

The probate court has authority to approve a voluntary partition of real estate which is just and equal, agreed upon by the guardian of an insane person and his ward's cotenants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 476, 477.]

Appeal from District Court, Allen County.

Partition between F. S. Bennett, guardian, and Mabel C. Arrowsmith and another. From a judgment of the district court approving a judgment of the probate court, holding that it was without jurisdiction to authorize the partition, the guardian appeals. Reversed, and cause remanded, with directions.

Apt & Apt, of Iola, for appellant.

BURCH, J. The subject presented by this appeal is the jurisdiction of the probate court to authorize a partition of real estate agreed upon by the guardian of an insane person and his ward's cotenants.

A father deeded real estate to his three minor children. One of them became insane, and a guardian of her estate was duly appointed. The three children became of age, and partition being greatly desired, the agreement was made. The agreement was presented to the probate court, which found that the division was fair and just and equal, and if carried out would be to the benefit of the lunatic's estate. The probate court held, however, that it was without jurisdiction to authorize the partition. On appeal to the district court, the judgment of the probate court was approved.

The article of the Constitution relating to the judiciary contains the following provision:

> "There shall be a probate court in each county, which shall be a court of record, and have such probate jurisdiction and care of estates of deceased persons, minors, and persons of unsound minds, as may be prescribed by law." Article 3, § 8.

In the statute relating to lunatics, imbeciles, and drunkards, the Legislature authorized the probate court to appoint a guardian for the estate of a person incapable of managing his estate because of unsoundness of mind, and provided further as follows:

> "Every probate court by whom any such person is committed to guardianship may make an order for the support, care and safe-keeping of such person, for the disposition or sale of his personal property as may be found necessary, for the management of his estate, for the support and maintenance of his family and education of his children, out of the proceeds of such estate; to set apart and reserve for the payment of debts; and to let, sell or mortgage any part of such estate, when necessary for the purposes above specified. * * * The probate court shall have full power to control the guardian of any such person in the management of the person and estate and the settlement of his accounts, and may enforce and carry into execution its orders and judgments in the same manner as in cases of administration." Gen. St. 1915, §§ 6107, 6127; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 10, 30.

It is settled law in this state that the probate court is a court of general jurisdiction with respect to the subjects committed to it (In re Osborn's Estate, 99 Kan. 227, 161 Pac. 601), and manifestly one of those subjects is management of the estate of a lunatic.

It has been said that cotenancy is an association compelled by interest, but reprobated by every other consideration. Freeman on Cotenancy and Partition, p. 461, § 393. A cotenant may compel partition, and because of this fact, voluntary partition is permissible. Voluntary partition may be made even by parol, if subsequently acted on. McCullough v. Finley, 69 Kan. 705, 77 Pac. 696. The result accomplished by partition has been described as follows:

> "Each of the allottees is deemed to hold the same title which he held before the partition, the undivided interest which he held in the whole tract being by the partition severed from the interests of his cotenants and concentrated in the parcel set apart to him." 30 Cyc. 166.

Consequently partition of land belonging to a person under guardianship is essentially management of his estate, within the meaning of the statute already quoted.

In the case of Hunt v. Rabitoay, 125 Mich. 137, 84 N. W. 59, 84 Am. St. Rep. 563, partition of land made by the guardian of an incompetent was sustained. The syllabus reads:

> "Partition of lands by guardians of infants and incompetents will be sustained, where the partition is fair and equal." Paragraph 4.

In the opinion it was said:

> "We think partition of lands by the guardians of infants and incompetents is fully sustained by the authorities as well as by reason. Either cotenant could compel a partition. What may be compelled by the law parties should be allowed to accomplish amicably, so long as no advantage is taken and the partition is equal. Freem. Coten. §§ 414, 415; 2 Co. Litt. §§ 243, 258; Williard v. Williard, 56 Pa. 119; Brooks v. Hubble (Va.) 27 S. E. 585. The territorial law then in force authorized the guardian 'to divide the real estate in as full and ample a manner as the idiot, lunatic, non compos or distracted person might or could were they restored to the full use of their rational faculties.' 1 Terr. Laws, 377. Whatever may be the interpretation of this statute, it certainly evidences an intent to repose a broad power in the guardian." 125 Mich. 143, 84 N. W. 61, 84 Am. St. Rep. 563.

It will be observed that the decision was based on reason and authority rather than on the territorial statute of doubtful meaning. The statute of this state evidences an intent to impose a broad power in the guardian, subject to supervision of the probate court. Should an adversary proceeding be required to effectuate partition, the action provided by the Civil Code is available.

The judgment of the district court is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with direction to proceed in accordance with this opinion. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 146)

WALLINGFORD et al. v. McCRAY.

(No. 20917.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Sales 🔑96—Agreement as to Price—Rescission by Seller.

Where a contract is made by telephone for the sale of wheat, to be shipped within three weeks, and the buyer at once sends the seller a letter of confirmation in which it is stated that shipment is to be made in one week, and thereafter a controversy arises between the parties in which the buyer insists that the confirmation as written is correct, and disclaims any obligation to pay the agreed price on any other terms, his conduct amounts to such a repudiation of the contract as justifies the seller in calling off the deal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 261.]

2. Sales 🔑111—Rescission of Contract—Reinstatement.

In that situation the buyer cannot afterwards reinstate the deal by undertaking to hold the seller to the contract as it was originally made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 283–285.]

3. Sales 🔑421—Buyer's Action for Damages—Instructions.

The trial court held not to have committed error in the giving or refusing of instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1203.]

4. Sales 🔑87(3)—Trial 🔑355(1), 358—Evidence of Contract—Special Findings—Prejudice—Inconsistency.

The special findings held not to show passion or prejudice, or to be inconsistent with the evidence or with each other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 245–247; Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 846, 856.]

5. Costs 🔑214—Witnesses—Motion to Retax.

When an order taxing costs on account of witnesses from another county is made in the absence of a party affected, his remedy, if aggrieved, is by a motion to retax.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 798, 799, 801, 807, 809–813, 816, 818–820, 825.]

Appeal from District Court, Finney County.

Action by E. R. Wallingford and others, partners doing business under the firm name and style of Wallingford Bros., against J. D. McCray. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Campbell & Campbell, of Wichita, for appellants. Wm. Easton Hutchison and C. E. Vance, both of Garden City, for appellee.

MASON, J. On Monday, June 29, 1914, a representative of Wallingford Bros., grain merchants of Wichita, talked by telephone with the manager of an elevator at Attica, owned by J. D. McCray, with reference to the purchase from him of 8,000 bushels of wheat. On the same day the firm mailed to him a letter purporting to confirm a purchase of the wheat on terms which were specifically stated, and which included "this week shipment." On the next day the manager of the elevator, on receipt of this letter, called up the firm on the telephone, and told them that the contract was for shipment of the wheat in the first half of July. The firm at once (June 30th) wrote him another letter, in which they insisted that in the first conversation they had refused to pay more than the regular export bid for the first half of July, and that the offer they had made was for "this week shipment." In an answer written on the next day (July 1st) the manager said that in the conversation about the wheat deal he had refused to make it "this week shipment," but had said he would ship it as fast as he could after June shipments were over. The wheat was never shipped. On September 24, 1914, the firm sued McCray for damages resulting from his failure to ship it, alleging the making and breach of a contract for shipment "as fast as possible after June shipments were over." The plaintiffs appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant.

[1] The controversy is almost entirely one of fact, and turns upon the effect of the telephone conversations referred to and upon whether a later conversation was had. According to the plaintiffs' evidence, the conversation on June 29th resulted in an agreement for the purchase of the wheat, to be shipped that week; in the conversation of June 30th the defendant's manager said that the contract was for shipment as soon as his June contracts were filled; this conversation was confirmed by the plaintiffs in writing; and on July 2d, after receiving the manager's letter of the day before, the plaintiffs had a further conversation with the defendant's manager, in which they told him they would let the matter stand as per his letter of the 1st, in which he said, "I will ship as fast as I can after June shipments are over."

According to the defendant's evidence, the conversation of June 29th resulted in a contract for the purchase of the wheat, the defendant to have until the middle of July to make delivery, although his manager said he would get it out as fast as he could; in the conversation of June 30th the defendant's manager stated that the contract allowed until July 15th for delivery, and he expected the confirmation to be made accordingly, and that unless this was agreed to the deal was off, but that the plaintiffs did not consent to take the wheat on these terms; the conversation testified to by the plaintiffs' witness as having been had on July 2d never took place; the defendant's manager never said he would make a contract for delivery as soon as possible; and the plaintiffs never after the conversation on June 29th consented to accept the wheat unless it should be shipped within the week; after July 1st no further communication was had between the parties until July 7th or 8th, when an agent of the plaintiffs called on the defendant's manager, who told him that because of the plaintiff's attitude there was no contract in existence; this was the first notice the defendant had that plaintiffs were expecting the wheat.

The verdict and findings of the jury showed a complete acceptance of the defendant's version of the transaction, and a complete rejection of the plaintiffs'. Accepting the facts to be as claimed by the defendant, no ground for recovery by the plaintiffs existed. The contract having been made for shipment during the first half of July, the confirmation sent calling for a shipment by July 4th, coupled with the insistence of the plaintiffs upon that date, and their virtual denial of liability if shipments were made later, amounted to a refusal to abide by the agreement as it had been entered into, and justified the defendant in regarding the deal as at an end.

"Where one party repudiates in advance his obligations under the contract, and refuses to be longer bound thereby, communicating such repudiation to the other party, the later party is excused from further performance." 6 R. C. L. 1012.

"Upon election to treat the renunciation of the contract by the other party, whether by declaration or by acts and conduct, as a breach of the contract, the rights of the parties are to be regarded as then culminating, and the contractual relation ceases to exist except for the purpose of maintaining an action for the recovery of damages." 6 R. C. L. 1026.

[2] 2. Although one of the plaintiffs testified that the conversation of June 30th, in which the defendant's manager was said to have spoken of the contract as one for shipment as soon as his June contracts were filled, was confirmed by them in writing, their letter of that date shows an insistence on shipment within the week, and the first letter of a different effect was dated July 21st. The plaintiffs having stood upon the proposition that the agreed price was effective only if shipment were made within a week, could not, after that period had expired and the bargain was seen to be a good one even upon the defendant's interpretation of it, shift their ground and demand a performance of the contract on that basis. The defendant's manager referred in his testimony to the failure of the plaintiffs to give any extension of the time of shipment. This language might seem to suggest an admission on his part that the contract had originally been made for delivery within a week, but the record as a whole makes it clear that by an "extension" he meant an admission by the plaintiffs that the period named in the confirmation did not control. He used that term having in mind a change of the confirmation.

[3] 3. The court gave an instruction in these words:

"If you find from the evidence that the conversation over the telephone on June 29th is as claimed by defendant, and that on June 30, 1914, defendant received a confirmation, through the mails, from the plaintiffs for the purchase of the 8,000 bushels of wheat in question, and that on June 30th he called plaintiffs over the telephone stating to them that the confirmation received was not in accordance with their conversation over the telephone on June 29th, and that on the same date he wrote the plaintiffs advising them of the fact, and that at no subsequent date did the plaintiffs and defendant agree upon a date of delivery of the 8,000 bushels of wheat in question, then I instruct you that the minds of the parties did not meet, and that no contract of purchase between buyer and seller was entered into, and you should return a verdict for defendant."

This instruction is criticised on the ground that, if the parties reached an agreement in the telephone conversation, no subsequent dispute as to its terms could alter the fact that their minds had met and that a contract had resulted. The criticism is chiefly verbal. If the conversation on June 29th was as claimed by the defendant, a contract was made for delivery by July 15th. The plaintiffs, having refused to abide by that contract, must recover, if at all, by virtue of a subsequent agreement, and, unless such an agreement were made, there was no meeting of the minds of the parties, and no contract for the sale of the wheat, so far as concerns any recovery by the plaintiffs. A further criticism of the instruction is that it makes the verdict turn upon whether there was a subsequent agreement upon a date of "delivery," whereas the controversy relates to the date of "shipment." It is, of course, true, as the plaintiffs suggest, that there is a difference between the date of shipment and the date of delivery, and in some circumstances the distinction might be very important. But here there was no room for any misapprehension by the jury as to what was intended. Objection is made to an instruction that an acceptance by the plaintiffs of the proposition of the defendant with reference to the time of shipment must have been within a reasonable time to be effective. We regard the instruction as correct and pertinent. If the plaintiffs had signified their willingness to go ahead with the contract according to the terms proposed by the defendant in the conversation of June 30th, this would have amounted to a valid acceptance if done within a reasonable time, say on July 2d, but not if done after an unreasonable delay, say on July 21st. Instructions were asked by the plaintiffs to the effect that if the contract made on June 29th called for a shipment as soon as possible, without a definite limit being fixed, the plaintiffs had a right to wait until a reasonable time had elapsed or until the defendant notified them that no shipment would be made. We think the rights of the plaintiffs in this respect were sufficiently protected by the instructions given. Moreover, it is quite evident that the jury did not accept the theory on which the rejected instructions were contingent.

[4] 4. The plaintiffs contend that the special findings show passion and prejudice and an inconsistency with the evidence and with each other. We do not regard the contention as well founded. The jury were asked whether on June 29th a deal was made whereby the wheat was sold, all the terms of the contract being fully agreed upon except the date of shipment. They answered in the negative, and the answer is justifiable on the ground that all the terms were agreed upon, without exception. They were asked whether the defendant's manager wrote on July 1st that he had sold the wheat for shipment as fast as he could after his June shipments were over. They answered in the negative, and we think they were right. As already mentioned, the manager wrote that he had said he would ship as fast as he could, but this was not necessarily inconsistent with his claim that under the contract he was to have until July 15th to make the shipment.

The next question, with the answer, reads as follows:

> "If you answer the foregoing question in the affirmative, state whether or not plaintiffs, upon receipt of such letter from defendant, took any exceptions thereto, or objected to the time of shipment of such wheat, as stated by defendant in said letter. Yes."

As the preceding question had not been answered in the affirmative, the jury were not required to answer this one at all, but what they obviously meant was that the plaintiffs did take exceptions to the letter which was written by the defendant on July 1st. This is manifest from the fact that, in response to the next question, they said that the plaintiffs did not advise the defendant by telephone on July 2d that they would let the time of shipment stand according to the letter to them of the day before. The jury returned a negative answer to the question whether the defendant ever notified the plaintiffs that he would not ship the wheat at all, plainly meaning that his refusal to ship the wheat was not absolute, but contingent on the plaintiff's insistence that shipment should be made by July 4th. An affirmative answer was returned to the question whether by August 24th was a reasonable time within which the defendant might have shipped the wheat. The meaning of this finding, or its bearing upon the controversy, is not apparent, but it affords no ground for disturbing the judgment.

[5] 5. The plaintiffs were taxed with costs on account of two witnesses from other counties, a proceeding allowed when the court so orders. Code Civ. Proc. § 326 (Gen. St. 1915, § 7228). The plaintiffs complain of the making of this order in their absence, and without notice to them. If error was committed in this regard, their remedy was by a motion to retax. Linton v. Housh, 4 Kan. 535.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 1

CORBETT v. CORBETT. (No. 20179.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

DIVORCE 🔑252 — DECREE—EQUITABLE DIVISION OF PROPERTY.

In a suit by the husband for divorce, the petition alleged that the defendant had induced him by means of threats and duress to convey his real estate to her, and asked that the deeds be canceled. The court canceled the deeds, granted plaintiff a divorce, and divided the real estate between the parties. Held, regardless of whether the evidence justified the cancellation of the deeds, the court on granting the divorce had the power to make an equitable division of the property, and that the division, appearing to be fair and equitable, will not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 713–715.]

Appeal from District Court, Osborne County.

Action by John Corbett against Fannie Corbett for a divorce and to cancel his deeds to defendant. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Mahin, Mahin & Mahin, of Smith Center, J. L. Travers, of Osborne, and E. S. Quinton, of Topeka, for appellant. Smith & Else, of Cawker City, for appellee.

PORTER, J. In this case the husband sues for a divorce and to cancel deeds by which he had conveyed to his wife 200 acres of land, part of which was their homestead. As grounds for the divorce, he alleged extreme cruelty, and claimed that the deeds had been procured by duress and coercion, by threats made by his wife against his person and property. The action was brought within less than a year after he married the defendant. The court granted a divorce, canceled the deeds, and divided the real estate between the parties. The defendant appeals.

Plaintiff's first wife died in November, 1913. Three sons and two daughters, all married with families of their own lived on farms near him. He was 70 years of age and had lived in Osborne county for 45 years. He owned 520 acres of land. In the springtime of 1914, the old gentleman became lonesome, and his fancy was caught by an advertisement of the defendant in a matrimonial journal. He wrote to her, and they had considerable correspondence, in which they agreed upon a marriage. She was a widow 52 years of age and resided near Louisville, Ky. He went to see her, and they were married July 9, 1914, a few days after they met. She owned a one-third interest in 15 acres of land 15 miles from Louisville. The plaintiff furnished $300 to pay the back taxes on her land and paid for a fence and other improvements. He also gave her money for her personal use. Before starting to Kentucky, he conveyed 320 acres of his land to his children, reserving to himself a life estate therein. In the correspondence with defendant he represented himself to be 63 years of age, told defendant about his wealth, and explained that his land was only incumbered to the amount of $1,500. He also agreed to her request that some separate provision be made for her, and in one letter said he would make a will giving her the 200 acres at his death. In reply, she wrote that she had known of a number of instances where wills of that kind had been revoked and wanted something more substantial. He promised to arrange those matters to her entire satisfaction.

After their marriage, they returned to Kansas, and immediately trouble arose between plaintiff's wife and his children. In December, 1914, he went with his wife to a lawyer's office and stated he desired to convey the land to his wife. Deeds were drawn according to his request. He handed the deeds to his wife, and she gave them to the lawyer, who had them recorded. On March 1, 1915, he brought this action. The answer denied that the wife was guilty of cruelty, and alleged that the deeds were made voluntarily and in accordance with a promise made before the marriage.

The plaintiff testified that he executed the conveyances because of threats of defendant that she would leave him, that she would burn every building on the place, and also that she had threatened to kill some of his children, and that at one time she said that she would kill him if he did not make the deeds; that she threatened him in every way before he made the deeds, so that he had not a minute's peace or rest.

The testimony upon both of these issues was conflicting, and the principal error complained of is that there was no evidence to sustain the finding that the deeds were obtained by duress. The testimony as it appears in cold print does not seem very satisfactory upon this issue; but the trial court, after seeing and hearing the witnesses, deemed it sufficient, and the general rule that this court is bound thereby applies. However, we regard that question as of little consequence. There was sufficient evidence to justify the decree of divorce, and without canceling the deeds the court undoubtedly had the power to make an equitable division of the property between the parties. The wife was awarded 80 acres of the land upon which there are two sets of improvements, and the plaintiff was given 120 acres upon which there are no improvements. The testimony shows that the land awarded her is substantially of the same value as that awarded the husband. The court also gave to the wife her own property in Kentucky upon which plaintiff had advanced money for improvements and taxes, and she was given in addition some personal property, the value of which is not stated.

It cannot be doubted that the court had the power to divide the property beween the parties, regardless of how the title stood, so long as it belonged to one or the other, or both; and it has been repeatedly declared that this court will not interfere with a division made by the trial court unless it appears that there has been an abuse of discretion and that the division is so unjust and unfair that it should not be permitted to stand. Miller v. Miller, 97 Kan. 704, 156 Pac. 695, and authorities cited in the opinion.

Upon the facts and circumstances shown in the present case, we do not think the defendant has any just cause to complain of the division made by the trial court, and the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 117)

BRANIFF et al. v. BLAIR et al. (No. 20897.)*

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BROKERS 🔑40 — CONTRACT FOR COMMISSION—MUTUALITY.

While an agreement by an owner that a broker shall have the exclusive agency to find a purchaser for his land, for a fixed time, upon certain conditions, is unilateral when made, the element of mutuality is supplied when the broker accepts its performance by spending time and effort in doing the things that it was contemplated would be done by him under the agreement, and thereafter it is a binding obligation upon both.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 38-40.]

2. BROKERS 🔑63(1) — ACTION FOR COMMISSION—DEFENSES.

Where a purchaser is produced by the broker in substantial compliance with the terms of the agreement, and the owner makes no objection to the terms of the offer of purchase or the details of performance, but simply declares that he does not now desire to and will not sell his land, he is estopped, after suit is brought upon the agreement, to shift his position and defend upon objections to details that the broker might have supplied or corrected if they had been mentioned by the owner when the offer of purchase was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 79, 81, 94-96.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑889(3) — AMENDMENT OF PLEADING—CONFORMITY TO PROOF.

As the evidence shows that the name of the purchaser was other than that stated in the petition, the pleading will be deemed to be amended so as to conform to the proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3622.]

Appeal from District Court, Saline County.

Action by T. J. Braniff and others against Henry F. Baier and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

---

*Rehearing denied July 11, 1917.

Z. C. Millikin, of Salina, for appellants. Burch, Litowich & Royce, of Salina, for appellees.

JOHNSTON, C. J. This was an action by T. J. Braniff, G. E. Holmberg, and A. Lynn against Henry F. Baier and Charles A. Baier to recover an agent's commission for procuring a purchaser for defendant's real estate. Holmberg and Lynn are the assignees of C. W. Talmadge's interest in the commission claimed, who was associated with Braniff in the transaction. Plaintiffs were awarded judgment in the sum of $702, and the defendants appeal.

Defendants engaged the services of Braniff and Talmadge on July 1, 1913 and signed the following memorandum:

> "We, the undersigned, H. F. Baier and C. A. Baier, do hereby appoint and constitute C. W. Talmadge and T. J. Braniff, or either of them, as our only agents to sell our forty acres of farm land in Fellsmere, Florida, known as tracts No. 1232, 1233, 1260 and 1261 in township 31, range 37, in St. Lucie county, Florida; and we also agree to accept from the above-named agents or either of them, the actual cash we have already paid on the above-mentioned contracts, plus $50.00 plus $8.00 for transferring contracts, as full payment to us for our interest in the above-named lands; the purchaser to assume all future payments. The above-named contract to remain good until October 1, 1913. Dated July 1, 1913."

After this appointment was made, the agents acted upon the authority by advertising the land, interviewing parties, and writing letters, and they spent considerable time and effort to find a purchaser. As a result of correspondence begun about August 1, 1913, George W. Auber of Fellsmere, Fla., on August 25th agreed to buy the land, and he sent the following letter inclosing payment:

> "Farmers' National Bank, Salina, Kansas: Inclosed you will find a check for $950.00 in favor of Henry and Charles Baier for their interest in tracts south range 37, east of the Fellsmere Farms, Fla., of land No. 1232, 1233, 1260 and 1261, township 31, said check to be given to said Henry and Chas. Baier when contracts or certificates of purchase have been properly transferred and signed by them in favor of me, George W. Auber. You will also find inclosed a check for $750 in favor of C. W. Talmadge and T. J. Braniff when said contracts are properly transferred to me and mailed and registered to my address, being Fellsmere, Florida."

About 10 days before the Auber letter was written, the defendants told Braniff that they did not desire to sell the land, and on August 26th they wrote a letter stating that the land was withdrawn from sale and the authority of the agents revoked as of the date of the oral notice. When defendants were informed by the agents that a purchaser had been found in accordance with the terms of their contract, defendants replied that the lands were no longer for sale and that the money sent would not be accepted. The jury found, in effect, that the agents had found a purchaser and had complied with the terms of the written contract, and that the only reasons given by defendants for not complying with the contract was that the land had been withdrawn from sale and that they did not care to sell it at that time.

[1] Defendants contend that the contract of agency was unilateral and subject to revocation at any time before a purchaser was produced. The employment or agency, it will be observed, was exclusive and for a fixed time. It is true, as defendants contend, that, when the promise of one party is the consideration for the promise of another, they must be obligatory upon both parties at the same time or they will not bind. The appointment or promise of defendants was unilateral when made; but, when it was accepted by the agents and they had spent time, effort, and money in carrying out its provisions, there was thereafter no lack of consideration. When the agents accepted the proposal and proceeded to perform the services which the appointment contemplated were to be performed by them, it became a mutual and binding obligation. As soon as the promises of the parties ripened into a contract, Braniff and Talmadge became the sole agents for the sale of the defendants' land with the exclusive right to sell it, until October 1, 1913. The defendants could not thereafter, by withdrawing the land from sale or by an attempted revocation, set aside the contract nor escape responsibility for the violation of its conditions.

In a litigation over a contract to find a purchaser for land, the question was raised that the contract was unilateral. The testimony showed that after receiving the owner's proposal the broker proceeded to find a purchaser and to do the things which it was contemplated would be done by him, and it was held that such action on his part constituted an acceptance and that thereafter the contract was a mutual and binding obligation. John E. De Wolf Co. v. Harvey, 161 Wis. 535, 154 N. W. 988.

In Pullman Co. v. Meyer, 195 Ala. 401, 70 South. 763, page 765, it was said:

> "Even though an agreement is, when made, unilateral, if the party in whose favor the promise is made accepts its performance, or does 'any act in recognition of its implied or intended, though unexpressed, consideration, this supplies the element of mutuality, and gives a right of action.'"

Other cases of like import are Rowan & Co. v. Hull, 55 W. Va. 335, 47 S. E. 92, 104 Am. St. Rep. 998, 2 Ann. Cas. 884; Lapham v. Flint, 86 Minn. 376, 90 N. W. 780; Schoenmann v. Whitt, 136 Wis. 332, 117 N. W. 851, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598; Novakovich v. Union Trust Co., 89 Ark. 412, 117 S. W. 246; Blumenthal v. Bridges, 91 Ark. 212, 120 S. W. 974, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 279.

Stensgaard v. Smith, 43 Minn. 11, 44 N. W. 669, 19 Am. St. Rep. 205, is out of line with the cited cases, in this, that it appears to hold that the posting, advertising of property, and the individual soliciting of purchasers did not constitute an acceptance or convert a proposal into a binding contract. That court, in the later case of Lapham v. Flint, supra, stated that the only question before the court in the Stensgaard Case was whether the contract upon its face, unaided by evidence or allegations in the complaint, expressed a mutuality of obligation, and it was held that it did not, because there was nothing in the contract itself to indicate an acceptance of the obligation either in writing or by performance.

The general trend of authorities is that, if the agent proceeds in good faith to comply with the terms of the proposal or agreement like the one in question by advertising the property and spending time and effort to find a purchaser, these acts amount to an acceptance, and thereafter both parties are bound. Note, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 599.

[2] It is argued that plaintiffs were not entitled to recover because the offer of the purchaser did not comply with the conditions in the contract, insisting that the tender should have been $998, whereas only $950 was tendered by Auber. The price, according to the contract, was "the actual cash we have already paid on the above-mentioned contracts, plus $50.00, plus $8 for transferring the contracts." The amount "already paid" means the payments made at the time the contract was executed, and that was $900. It appears that the defendants had paid $40 additional about August 1st, shortly before the sale was effected or the purchaser was found. The offer of $950 was therefore a substantial compliance with the contract as made. The transfer fees of $8 were not payable until the transfer was effected, and these the agents were able and willing to pay when they became due. So far as the $40 payment was concerned, the defendants were given credit for that sum in the award of the jury.

It is also said that the purchaser in his letter remitting the money did not offer or agree to assume the balance due upon the land contracts that were to be assigned. This was a stipulation to be included in the contract transferring the defendants' interest in the land, and doubtless would have been included if defendants had allowed the contract to be carried out. It was one of the mere details of the transaction, to be written into the transfer, and one which it was unnecessary to mention in the letter. This objection, like that relating to the payment made between the making of the contract and the finding of a purchaser and the failure to include the transfer fees in the letter, was not the objection that was made when the performance of the contract was demanded. These were objections which the plaintiffs could easily have met at the time if the defendants had based their refusal upon them. Their objections were that they had taken the land off of the market and that it was not for sale. There was little occasion for the agents to go through the form of making a tender when the defendants had refused to carry out their contract. Having put their refusal solely upon the grounds mentioned, they are estopped after the suit is brought to shift their position and defend on grounds not then relied on and which the agents might have supplied, overcome, or corrected if they had been mentioned. Redinger v. Jones, 68 Kan. 627, 75 Pac. 997; Sandefur v. Hines, 69 Kan. 168, 76 Pac. 444; Stanton v. Barnes, 72 Kan. 541, 84 Pac. 116; Johnson v. Huber, 80 Kan. 591, 103 Pac. 99.

[3] The view taken by the court sufficiently answers the objections made to rulings on requested instructions and the objections to those given. In one instruction the court told the jury that the Auber letter did not come up to the terms set forth in the agreement; but, as we have seen, the absence of some of the details was not the basis of the defendants' refusal to complete the contract; and, besides, the special findings of the jury showed the instruction to be without materiality. In the petition it was stated that the name of the purchaser was Piffard, whereas the proof showed that Auber was the purchaser found by the agents. This is not a material objection. No prejudice could have resulted to defendants because of the variance, and, as is often done, the petition may be regarded as amended to conform to the proof.

No material error being found in the record, the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 235)

SHAW v. LIFE & ANNUITY ASS'N (three cases). FALK v. SAME. MATTHEWS et al. v. SAME. (Nos. 19802-19806.)*

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 19, 1917.)

(Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

PARTIES ⚿51(5)—BRINGING IN NEW PARTIES.

In an action against an insurance company where judgment for the defendant must be affirmed, a transfer of defendant's property subsequent to such judgment could not affect the rights of the plaintiff, and hence an application for leave to make the defendant's transferees additional parties defendant will be denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Cent. Dig. § 82.]

Appeal from District Court, McPherson County.

Actions by A. J. Shaw, by Mary A. Shaw, by Azro J. Shaw, by F. A. Falk, and by Robert T. Matthews and others against the Life & Annuity Association. Judgment for defendant in each case, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Alex. S. Hendry, of McPherson, and J. B. Larimer, of Topeka, for appellants. Otis S. Allen and S. H. Allen, both of Topeka, Geo. R. Allen, of Kansas City, and A. R. Lamb, of Coffeyville, for appellee.

⚿For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Rehearing denied July 11, 1917.

PER CURIAM. These appeals were pending here on November 14, 1914, when the case of Moore v. Annuity Association, 93 Kan. 398, 148 Pac. 981, involving exactly the same issues, was first decided. That decision was in favor of the contentions urged by the appellants, and directed the district court of McPherson county to grant a new trial. Immediately after the decision was announced the appellants dismissed their appeals. Subsequently a rehearing was granted in the Moore Case, and on May 8, 1915, the judgment of the district court sustaining a demurrer to the evidence was affirmed. Moore v. Annuity Association, 95 Kan. 591, 148 Pac. 981. Thereupon counsel for the appellants, who was likewise counsel for appellant in the Moore Case, asked that these cases be reinstated because they had been dismissed on the supposition that the first decision in the Moore Case was final and controlling. On the representations of counsel for the appellants that it was his intention to take the Moore Case to the Supreme Court of the United States by proceedings in error, and his representations that the issues involved were identical with those in the Moore Case, these appeals were reinstated, and at his further request they were continued generally in order to await the final disposition of the proceedings in error in the Moore Case. It is for these reasons that the cases have been allowed to remain on the docket without being called for disposition. No proceedings in error have been taken in the Moore Case, and the time for so doing has long since expired.

On January 11, 1917, appellants filed an application for leave to make additional parties defendants, representing that the defendant association in February, 1915, long after the second decision in the Moore Case, sold and delivered all its assets and property, including plaintiffs' share of the beneficiary and reserve funds of the defendant, to the North American Union of Chicago, a corporation under the laws of Illinois, and that the merger of these associations had been approved by the state superintendent of insurance; and, further, that on November 20, 1916, the Illinois corporation had sold and transferred all its assets and property to the Fraternal Aid Union of Denver, a corporation of Colorado, and it is stated that by reason of these mergers no property of the original defendant nor of the Illinois corporation can be reached by execution and judgment in favor of the plaintiffs in these actions.

We are asked to make the additional parties defendant and to set the cases down for hearing on their merits. So far as the merits of the cases are concerned they are controlled in each case by the decision in the Moore Case, and the judgments in each of the appeals must be affirmed on the authority of that case. Inasmuch as the judgments of the district court in favor of the original defendant must be affirmed it is not perceived how the transfer and sale of defendant's assets and property could affect in any manner the rights of the appellants. Since they can obtain no judgments against the original defendant it makes no difference to them that there is no property of the original defendant in this state subject to execution.

The application for leave to make additional parties defendants is denied, and the judgments are affirmed.

(101 Kan. 50)

ROSS v. WELLINGTON LODGE NO. 133, I. O. O. F. (No. 20693.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917. Rehearing denied July 11, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ACCOUNT, ACTION ON ⟹7—PLEADINGS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

It is not error for the trial court to hold that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff in an action on an unverified account, where the petition is met by an answer containing a general denial and an allegation of settlement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Account, Action on, Cent. Dig. §§ 13–17.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1010(1)—EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT—AFFIRMANCE.

A judgment based on a general finding will not be disturbed, where there is evidence to prove the facts necessary to support the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3979–3981, 4024.]

Appeal from District Court, Sumner County.

Action by Charles Ferry Ross against Wellington Lodge No. 133, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. S. Dey, of Wellington, for appellant. W. W. Schwinn, of Wellington, for appellee.

MARSHALL, J. This is the second appeal in this case. Ross v. Odd Fellows Lodge, 94 Kan. 528, 146 Pac. 1003.

The contract, which is the basis of this action, was in part set out in the former opinion. That contract, so far as it is material to the present controversy, reads:

"Witnesseth: That, whereas, the party of the first part is the owner in fee simple of lot twenty-four (24) in block fifty-four (54) in the city of Wellington, Kansas, and the party of the second part is the owner in fee simple of lot twenty-three (23) in said block fifty-four in the city of Wellington, Kansas; and whereas, the party of the first part and the party of the second part desire and purpose to erect and construct upon the lots hereinbefore described a two-story rock stone cement building, 80 feet long and 50 feet wide in accordance with plans and specifications adopted and agreed upon by each of the respective parties hereto: Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises, it is hereby agreed and understood by and on behalf of each of the parties hereto that one-half of all the expense of every kind and character which is to be or will be incurred in the erection and construction of said building is to be equally borne and paid by the respective parties hereto; that is to say, each of said parties is to pay one-half thereof according to a correct and itemized account of said expenditures, which is to be kept by the parties to this agreement."

The trial was by the court without a jury, and no special findings of fact were made. A general finding was made in favor of the defendant, and judgment was rendered in its favor. The plaintiff appeals.

[1] 1. The court held that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff. Complaint is made of that ruling. The petition set out a number of items of expense incurred by the plaintiff in the erection of the building provided for in the contract. The petition was not verified. The answer consisted of a general denial and affirmative allegations that a settlement had been made. There was nothing to show that either party was denied the right to introduce any evidence to establish his contentions. Under these circumstances, it was not reversible error for the trial court to rule that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff. Hennig v. Gas Co., 100 Kan. 255, 164 Pac. 297; In re Holloway's Estate, 100 Kan. 368, 164 Pac. 298.

[2] 2. The plaintiff argues a number of other propositions, all of which are that certain facts were or were not established by the evidence. Four days were used in the introduction of evidence. The trial court heard that evidence, and on it the finding was made. That finding is conclusive in this court unless it is shown that the finding was not supported by evidence. That has not been done. The evidence, as abstracted, does not disclose that the trial court reached a wrong conclusion as to any fact that was in controversy on the trial. The plaintiff must show that the court made a mistake, and must also show that the mistake was prejudicial. Code Civ. Proc. § 581 (Gen. St. 1915, § 7485); Hamilton v. Railway Co., 95 Kan. 353, 359, 148 Pac. 648; Andrews v. Railroad Co., 99 Kan. 347, 350, 161 Pac. 600.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 165)

BOWMAN v. CLYDE. (No. 20924.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MORTGAGES 🔑315(1)—SALE BY MORTGAGOR—ACTION ON NOTE—RECOVERY.

Where the mortgagor of land sells it subject to the mortgage, there being no assumption of the debt by the grantee, and a third person afterwards buys the mortgage and later obtains a deed to the land subject thereto, and then releases the mortgage, sells the land, and brings an action against the mortgagor upon his note, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount of the note less the reasonable value of the land at the time he sold it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 942, 943, 945, 946, 948.]

2. MORTGAGES 🔑315(1)—ACTION ON MORTGAGOR'S NOTE—RECOVERY.

The plaintiff's rights in the situation are not affected by the fact that the defendant had told him he would see that the property sold for enough to pay the mortgage, if it were foreclosed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 942, 943, 945, 946, 948.]

3. MORTGAGES 🔑319(3) — SUIT ON NOTE — VALUE OF LAND—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The evidence held not to support a finding that the land was worth the full amount of the mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 863, 875, 913, 1366.]

Appeal from District Court, Wyandotte County.

Action by Winfield S. Bowman against H. M. Clyde. Judgment for defendant and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and cause remanded to grant a new trial upon a certain issue.

C. A. Bowman, of Kansas City, for appellant. David F. Carson and James T. Cochran, both of Kansas City, for appellee.

MASON, J. H. M. Clyde was the owner of a quarter section of land in Oklahoma, subject to a mortgage for $500. On February 14, 1912, he executed a second mortgage thereon, securing a note for $550. A few days later he made a deed to the land, subject to the two mortgages. On October 23, 1913, Winfield S. Bowman bought the $550 note and mortgage. On October 5, 1914, he bought the land, subject to the two mortgages, for $10, having the deed made to his son, C. A. Bowman, his object being to prevent a merger. On December 10, 1914, he executed a quitclaim deed to his son, for the purpose, which was recited in the deed, of relieving the land from the $550 mortgage. He also paid off the first mortgage, but caused another for the same amount to be at once executed by his son. On March 3, 1915, he sold the land, subject to the $500 mortgage, which the buyer assumed, for $200, his son making the deed. On March 18, 1915, he sued Clyde upon his note for $550, giving credit, however, in his reply, for $200, the amount realized from the sale. A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

[1] 1. Although the various grantees had not assumed payment of the $550 mortgage, they had taken the land subject thereto, and the property was the primary fund for the satisfaction of the debt. 27 Cyc. 1342, 1343; 27 A. & E. Encyc. of L. 246. That is, the mortgagor was entitled to have the land applied to the reduction of his personal liability. The plaintiff as the holder of the note and mortgage could not release the land from the lien and still look to the mortgagor for the full payment of the note. 27 Cyc. 1275; 2 Jones on Mortgages, § 1226; 1 Pingrey on Mortgages, § 928. Expressions are to be found in the authorities to the effect that by releasing the lien the holder of a mortgage completely loses his remedy on the personal obligation of the mortgagor. Where that rule has been applied it has been because the circumstances were such as to make it equitable. Ordinarily the rights of the mortgagor will be fully protected if he receives credit on the note for the value of the land at the time the lien is released. This was substantially the basis of adjustment adopted by the trial court. The release of the mortgage probably entitled the defendant to a credit upon the note equal to the value of the land at that time, but as the plaintiff until he sold the land could have recognized a right to redeem doubtless the defendant could elect to regard the date of the sale as the time for the determination of the value. The trial court treated the latter date as controlling. The defendant, having sold the land subject to the mortgage, was entitled, as between himself and any subsequent owner of the property, to insist that it should be applied to the reduction of his personal indebtedness, but as there was no assumption of the debt by any of the grantees this was the extent of his demands against them. 27 Cyc. 1343.

[2] 2. There was testimony that after the plaintiff had acquired the title to the land he told the defendant that the first mortgagee was about to foreclose; that the defendant then asked him to let the foreclosure proceed and have it include his own mortgage, in which case the defendant would see that the property brought enough to cover both incumbrances. This had no tendency to establish a defense. The plaintiff had the privilege of paying off the first mortgage if he saw fit, and in failing to foreclose his own mortgage, having acquired the fee title, he committed an act somewhat analogous to the conversion of personal property by one holding it as security. We hold, as the trial court did, that his liability in this case is limited to the value of the land.

[3] 3. The verdict implied a finding that the land was worth $550 over and above the $500 mortgage. The plaintiff contends that there was no substantial evidence that it was worth more than $200 in excess of the lien. A number of witnesses called by the plaintiff testified to the value, placing it at from $500 to $700. The defendant produced no direct evidence on the subject. The jury were asked upon what they based their finding that the land was worth more than $700, and answered, "On W. S. Bowman's evidence." The plaintiff testified that he never saw the land; that he held it for five months, and sold it upon the first offer he received. This can hardly be regarded as evidence that it was worth more than he got for it, and is certainly not evidence that it was worth as much as $1,050. The fact that he paid $10 for the land subject to the two mortgages, one for $500 and the other for $550, does not indicate that it was worth that amount. He was at the time the owner of one of the mortgages and might well have been willing to give a small sum for a deed, regardless of whether the land was worth the amount for which it was incumbered. The verdict was therefore not warranted by the evidence upon which it was avowedly based. Various deeds to the land were introduced which recited large considerations, but these recitals were not competent evidence of the amount actually paid. Perkins v. Gregory, 87 Kan. 303, 124 Pac. 168. Evidence was given that one of the plaintiffs' witnesses had stated that the land was worth $1,900, but as this was admitted solely for the purpose of affecting his credibility, it cannot be considered as affirmative evidence of value. The fact that the first mortgage was for a loan of $500, made by an insurance company, is not substantial evidence that the property was worth over twice that amount. The defendant testified that in 1912 there were on the land a three-room house, a barn, a wind-mill, five acres of orchard, and fences; that the ground was leased and 30 acres were in cultivation; that a tenant paid $33.75 and spent $15 in repairs for the use of the pasture land six weeks. This likewise falls short of a basis for a finding that the property was worth $1,050. Upon these grounds we conclude that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence.

No other error being found, the judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded, with direction to grant a new trial upon the issue of the value of the land; the rights of the parties to be adjusted in accordance with the finding. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 303)

BINGER v. READ. (No. 20910.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. July 7, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑286(22)—GUARD FOR JOINTING MACHINE—REASONABLE CARE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

Under section 5889, and under subdivision "b" of section 5896 of the General Statutes of 1915, the triers of fact must determine, as a question of fact, whether or not a guard provided in obedience to section 5889, or voluntarily furnished under section 5896, is safe, reasonable and proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 1028.]

Appeal from District Court, Shawnee County.

Action by H. Binger against J. M. Read, doing business as the Topeka Planing Mill Company, for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Adrian F. Sherman and T. B. Landon, both of Kansas City, Mo., and Edwin A. Austin, of Topeka, for appellant. Edwin D. McKeever, of Topeka, for appellee.

MARSHALL, J. An opinion was handed down in this case on June 9th, but it was not printed for the reason that an application for rehearing discloses that there was omitted from the opinion a proposition which should have been discussed. The plaintiff recovered judgment for $1,289.25, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and the defendant appeals.

While in the defendant's employ in a planing mill, the plaintiff had the thumb of his right hand cut off by a jointer. The defendant had provided a guard to be placed over the knives of the jointer when in operation, and had posted, on the door of the box in which was located the switch that turned on the electricity that operated the machine, a notice in substance as follows: "There is a guard for this machine and must be kept on." The guard was not on the machine at the time the plaintiff was injured, although it was in a convenient place and could have been easily attached. The commissioner of labor of the state had ordered that a guard be placed on this machine. This guard was placed there in obedience to that order. The guard had been seen by inspectors from the office of the commissioner of labor and had not been objected to by them. At times when the premises were being inspected, the guard was not in use. The inspectors had then directed that the guard be kept on the machine. Part of the time the machine was operated with the guard, and part of the time without it.

The court instructed the jury as follows:

"The court instructs you, however, that under the facts of this case the failure of the plaintiff to use the guard provided by the defendant was, as a matter of law, 'willful,' and you will consider that fact as established in your deliberations.

"You will observe, however, that, before the plaintiff can be precluded from recovering under the terms of section 1 of the act referred to, it must be proved that the injury to him resulted from the failure to use the guard, and, further, that the guard or protection must be one required pursuant to the statute and provided for him, or must be a reasonable and proper guard and protection voluntarily furnished by the employer. Therefore, before you can find for the defendant under the last preceding instruction, you must find that plaintiff's injury resulted from the failure to use a guard or protection required pursuant to some statute and provided for him, or from the failure to use a reasonable and proper guard and protection voluntarily furnished by the defendant. Whether the guard furnished was such as required, under the terms of a statute which will be stated to you, or whether the same was a reasonably proper guard and protection voluntarily furnished by defendant, are questions for your determination. If the guard in question was such a guard or protection as required by the statute, or if it was a reasonable and proper guard voluntarily furnished by defendant, that was sufficient, and, if the injury resulted from failure to use such guard, plaintiff cannot recover.

"As to what is a guard or protection required pursuant to statute, I instruct you that the law known as the Factory Act requires that every person owning or operating a manufacturing establishment in which machinery is used is required, where practicable, to properly and safely guard such machinery for the purpose of preventing and avoiding the death of or injury to persons employed or laboring in such establishment, and it is made the duty of all persons owning or operating such establishments to provide and keep the same furnished with such safeguards."

One of several special questions answered by the jury was as follows:

"Question 1: Did defendant furnish a guard or protection against accident to be attached to the jointer at which the plaintiff was working when injured, which when in place on the machine set in against the board being planed with a spring and covered the knife of the machine so that the plaintiff's hand or fingers pushing the board over the knife could not touch the knife, and receive an injury without pushing the guard away? Answer: Yes, but under the circumstances we consider the guard as inadequate."

The question for our determination is: Was it within the province of the jury to pass on the sufficiency of the guard?

Section 5889 of the General Statutes of 1915 reads:

"Every person owning or operating any manufacturing establishment in which machinery is used shall furnish and supply for use therein belt shifters, or other safe mechanical contrivance, for the purpose of throwing on or off belts or pulleys; and wherever it is practicable, machinery shall be operated with loose pulleys. All vats, pans, saws, planers, cog gearing, belting, shafting, set screws, and machinery of every description used in a manufacturing establishment shall, where practicable, be properly and safely guarded, for the purpose of preventing or avoiding the death of or injury to the persons employed or laboring in any such establishment; and it is hereby made the duty of all persons owning or operating manufacturing establishments to provide and keep the same furnished with safeguards as herein specified."

Section 5896 of the General Statutes of 1915 in part reads:

"(b) If it is proved that the injury to the workman results from his deliberate intention to cause such injury, or from his willful failure to use a guard or protection against accident required pursuant to any statute and provided for him, or a reasonable and proper guard and protection voluntarily furnished him by said employer, or solely from his deliberate breach of statutory regulations affecting safety of life or limb, or from his intoxication, any compensation in respect to that injury shall be disallowed."

How was it to be determined that the jointer was properly and safely guarded, as required by section 5889, or that the guard was reasonable and proper, as described in section 5896? There was only one way, and that was to show by evidence the machine, its operation, and its dangers, and the guard, with its operation, and, from that evidence, determine the matter as a question of fact, and not one of law.

In this action, the issues were submitted to a jury. It was therefore for the jury to determine that question under instructions given by the court.

The defendant argues that the adequacy or inadequacy of the guard is not the question at issue; that the question is: Did the willful failure of the plaintiff to use the guard provided produce his injury? The defendant's argument would be good if the guard provided had been safe, reasonable and proper. A failure to use a guard that is not safe, reasonable or proper does not come within the provisions of the statutes. The court properly instructed the jury concerning the willful failure of the plaintiff to use the guard, and, after that instruction had been given, there yet remained the question of the adequacy or inadequacy of the guard. There was no way to avoid submitting that question to the jury. It was submitted, and the jury found, in substance, that the guard was not safe, reasonable and proper.

What has been said disposes of the defendant's contentions, the first of which is that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence; the second, that the court erred in overruling the defendant's motion for judgment on the special findings of fact; and, the third, that the court erred in overruling the defendant's motion for a new trial.

The application for a rehearing is denied, and the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 222)

ROHR et al. v. CRANCER et al. (No. 21309.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑368—STREET PAVING CONTRACT—REPAIR—STATUTE.

Under section 1237 of the General Statutes of 1915, a city of the first class may contract for repaving a street, and in the contract provide that a part of the contract price shall be retained in the city treasury as a guaranty that the contractor will keep the pavement in repair for a period of fifteen years after its construction, and may provide that annually there shall be paid to the contractor, to pay for keeping the pavement in repair, a certain portion of the amount retained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 901.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑327—STREET PAVING CONTRACT—PAYMENT FOR REPAIRS—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTE.

Section 1237 of the General Statutes of 1915, giving to cities of the first class the powers named in section 1 of this syllabus, is not unconstitutional.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 850.]

Appeal from District Court, Leavenworth County.

Action for injunction by A. Rohr and others against E. W. Crancer and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal; G. C. Davis being substituted as appellee in place of E. W. Crancer, as Mayor of the City of Leavenworth. Affirmed.

W. W. Hooper and D. W. Hooper, both of Leavenworth, for appellants. Humphrey Biddle, C. P. Rutherford, and Lee Bond, all of Leavenworth, for appellees.

MARSHALL, J. In this action the plaintiffs sought to enjoin the defendants from entering into a contract with E. L. Meek & Co. to repave a street in the city of Leavenworth. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiffs appeal. By stipulation of the parties, G. C. Davis is substituted as appellee in the place of E. W. Crancer, as mayor of Leavenworth.

Under the plans and specifications prepared by the city for repaving this street, the contractor agrees that all imperfections, settlements, defects, or damages to or in any part of the paving occurring at any time during the period of 15 years from and after the acceptance of the work by the board of commissioners shall be promptly repaired by the contractor; that out of the contract price the city shall retain in its treasury the sum of $18,000 as a guaranty for the maintenance of the street; and that, if the pavement is maintained as provided for in the contract and specifications, $1,800 shall be paid the contractor for each year's maintenance of the pavement during the period of 10 years after the expiration of five years from the date of the final acceptance of the work by the commissioners, $1,800 to be paid at the expiration of 6 years, and $1,800 at the end of each year thereafter until the expiration of 15 years.

On the trial the following admissions were made:

> "It is agreed that the plaintiffs are the owners of the property described in the petition.
>
> "It is further agreed that all preliminary proceedings leading up to the pavement of the street thereof have been complied with, and are legal and regular, and the only question in this case is the power of the city to enter into the contract that is contemplated to be entered into under the plans and specifications.
>
> "It is further admitted that the commissioners have acted in good faith."

[1] 1. The plaintiffs argue that, after the work has been completed, the city must pay for keeping the pavement in repair out of the general revenue fund; that special assessments cannot be levied on the abutting property for that purpose; and that therefore the city has no power to retain $18,000 of the price to be paid for the improvements, as a guaranty that the contractor will keep the pavement in repair for a period of 15 years. Section 1237 of the General Statutes of 1915 reads:

> "The mayor and council shall have power to provide, in any contract made by them for curbing, guttering or paving any street or alley, that the contractor shall guarantee to maintain and repair the same for such time as the mayor and council shall deem proper, and no special assessment shall be affected or invalidated on account of such guaranty."

The statute does not prescribe by what method or means the city may provide for the maintenance and repair of an improved street. That is left to the discretion of the governing body of the city. Any method by which a contractor agrees to keep the pavement on a street in repair contemplates that the cost of that maintenance shall be assessed against the abutting property in the apportionment of the cost of the improvement. There is no substantial difference between an effective contract by which a contractor agrees to keep a street in repair and a contract by which a part of the contract price is retained in the city treasury to be paid out in installments after the lapse of designated periods of time during which the street has been kept in repair. In either instance the cost of the upkeep or maintenance is assessed against the abutting property. This proposition is disposed of by La Veine v. Kansas City, 67 Kan. 239, 72 Pac. 772, where this court said:

> "By section 3, c. 81, Laws of 1899, the mayor and council of cities of the first class are given power to require a contractor putting in curbing, guttering, or paving to maintain and repair the same for such time as they shall deem proper, and assessments levied against abutting property for such improvements, under a contract made since the passage of said act, are not void because the cost of maintenance is included in the cost of such improvement." Syllabus.

But, it is argued, the statute under which the La Veine Case was decided has been repealed, and section 1237 of the General Statutes of 1915 has taken its place. That is true, but the two statutes are identical, so far as the question under discussion is concerned. The provisions of the new statute, so far as they are the same as those of the old, are construed as a continuation of such provisions, and not as a new enactment. Gen. Stat. 1915, § 10973, subd. 1. The contract now under consideration comes within the provisions of section 1237 of the General Statutes of 1915.

[2] 2. The plaintiffs argue that, if the Legislature has attempted to confer on cities such power as is attempted to be exercised by the defendants in this action, the act is unconstitutional. Under our Constitution the cost of paving or repaving streets may be assessed against abutting property. If the cost of paving streets or of repaving them may be so assessed, no reason is perceived why the cost of keeping streets in repair may not be assessed in like manner. The reasoning by which the constitutionality of statutes authorizing that the original cost of street improvements may be assessed against abutting property is upheld applies with equal force to statutes authorizing that the cost of keeping such improvements in repair may be so assessed. It follows that the statute is not unconstitutional. La Veine v. Kansas City, supra.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 82)

CITY OF LEAVENWORTH v. GREEN RIVER ASPHALT CO. et al. *

(No. 20770.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

VENUE 🔑49(2)—CHANGE OF VENUE—DISQUALIFICATION OF DISTRICT JUDGE.

Where the judge of the district court has been of counsel in the case or subject-matter thereof he is disqualified to sit, and it is error to refuse to grant a change of venue as provided in section 57 of the Code of Civil Procedure (section 6947, Gen. St. 1915).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 72.]

Appeal from District Court, Leavenworth County.

Action by the City of Leavenworth against the Green River Asphalt Company and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions to order a change of venue.

Lee Bond, of Leavenworth, and W. L. Wood and J. E. McFadden, both of Kansas City, for appellants. C. P. Rutherford, Floyd E. Harper, and Humphrey Biddle, all of Leavenworth, for appellee.

PORTER, J. In September, 1902, the Green River Asphalt Company contracted with the city of Leavenworth to pave certain streets of the city with Kentucky rock asphalt according to plans and specifications furnished by the city, and by a separate contract the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company furnished the city a maintenance bond for ten years from the acceptance of the work, guaranteeing the pavement to remain in good repair and free from all defects and damages due to the use of defective or imperfect material, or poor workmanship, or the proper use of said streets and alleys as a roadway, or to the action of the elements. Shortly prior to the expiration of the ten years mentioned in the maintenance bond and on April 2, 1914, the city brought this action upon the bond to recover damages sustained by reason of the failure of defendants to comply with the contract and the bond. The surety company filed its motion for a change of venue, which was overruled. A jury was waived, and the case was submitted to the court upon evidence, and the court made findings of fact and conclusions of law, and rendered judgment against the surety company for the sum of $30,639, which is the judgment appealed from.

The surety company filed a separate answer admitting the execution of the bond, alleging that the contract and specifications for the paving were prepared by the city and the work done under its superintendence and in full conformity with its plans and specifications; that the work when finished was duly accepted and paid for by the city, and that the damages were caused as the result of imperfect and defective plans prepared by the city, and that because of the materials specified and the workmanship required by the plans, the pavement when completed under the terms and conditions of the contract and specifications would not endure for the ten-year period of limitation mentioned; that these matters were known or could have been known to the city, but were not known to the surety company until after the filing of the suit. It further alleged that the material used by the asphalt company for the paving of the street under its contract was of the express kind that was called for in the specifications, and had been inspected and approved and accepted by the city, and denied that the material was of an inferior grade, and alleged that if the pavement became out of repair and in a defective condition as alleged it was entirely through the fault of the city in specifying faulty and improper material and the improper laying of the same.

The answer further alleged the failure to give notice to make the repairs as required under the terms of the contract, and that after the acceptance of the work the city had permitted many cuts and excavations to be made in the paving by plumbers and other persons unknown to defendants, which cuts caused great damage to the pavement, and were allowed to remain open and unprotected for long periods of time, and were afterwards filled with material inferior to that specified in the contract. It was also alleged that shortly after the work was completed two blocks of the pavement were destroyed by the bursting of the water mains of the city, and that neither of the defendants were bound under those circumstances to make repairs resulting therefrom. It alleged that during the period covered by the contract and bond the defendants made repairs on the street, and had expended therefor $3,156.63, and if plaintiff is entitled to recover any amount, then this sum so expended should be deducted therefrom.

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Rehearing denied July 11, 1917.

The contract provided that the material for the paving should be Kentucky rock asphalt "equally as good as the best quality of asphalt mined at the Buck Horn Mines in the Chickasaw Nation or that mined in Breckenridge County, Ky." It was alleged in the petition that the material used was not in accordance with the terms of the contract, and a great deal of evidence was offered on both sides of this issue. The defendants moved for a change of venue for the reason that the Hon. J. H. Wendorff, judge of the district court, had been of counsel in the subject-matter of the litigation, and was therefore disqualified. The motion was supported by the affidavit of J. A. Thompson, agent and adjuster of defendant surety company, alleging that on June 3, 1908, J. H. Wendorff was city attorney of Leavenworth, and as such attorney wrote a letter to affiant inclosing copies of the contract for paving and the maintenance bond sued on in this action, which letter stated the number of yards of paving necessary to be repaired as estimated by the city engineer, and requesting that the matter be attended to at once by the surety company. The affidavit set forth a copy of this letter and also one from the mayor of Leavenworth, dated July 22, 1908, as follows:

> "Our city attorney, Mr. Wendorff, advises me in a conversation that you made him a promise some time ago that you would urge upon the Barber people the importance of commencing repair work on Fourth avenue and Broadway street in this city at once. Mr. Wendorff states that this conversation occurred some two or three weeks ago, and that you promised him at that time that the work would commence in very short time. It is our purpose, in the event repairs are not commenced here within the next twenty days, to bring suit against your company to have this work done. We would regret very much being compelled to do this, and we earnestly hope that you will not compel us to do so. I would be pleased to hear from you at once as to what your intentions are in the matter."

The affidavit alleged further that while city attorney Mr. Wendorff had been called upon at various times by the city commissioners for counsel and advice concerning the subject-matter of the litigation, and that on June 30, and July 22, 1908, the affiant conferred with him as attorney for the city concerning the character and quality of the pavement in question and defendant's liability therefor, and that in the conference the city attorney took the position that defendant was liable on the bond for the repairs.

The record contains a statement made by the trial judge in substance that in May, 1908, the paving in question was reported out of repair, and that as city attorney, acting under the directions of the city commissioners, he wrote the defendant surety company at Baltimore, stating that it had signed the maintenance bond for the term of ten years, that the pavement was badly out of repair in many places, and that the city commissioners requested the company to have the repairs made, and that if this was not done the city would take such steps as it was authorized to do under the bond. In the statement the trial judge said he did not believe he had ever examined the particular bond, but was familiar with the form; that Mr. Thompson, agent of the surety company, called at his office and asked him for copies of the contracts and bond and to have the city engineer make an estimate of the amount of repairing; that in pursuance thereto he sent him copies of the contract and bond and wrote the letter set forth in the affidavit. He further stated that in the conversation with Mr. Thompson the latter promised that the surety company would have the Barber Asphalt Company do the work of repairing just as soon as possible, and that he reported to the commissioners what Mr. Thompson had said. He denied having advised the city further than as stated; did not remember of talking to Mr. Thompson except the one time mentioned, and denied discussing the liability of the defendants or the quality or character of the pavement.

The first question necessary to decide arises over the refusal of the court to grant a change of venue. If the defendants have not had a trial upon the facts before a duly qualified judge, it is unnecessary to pass upon the questions of law raised by the appeal for the reason that the facts determined at a subsequent trial may be entirely different and the questions of law depend very largely upon the facts. As was said in the case of Tootle v. Berkley, 60 Kan. 446, 447, 448, 56 Pac. 755, 756:

> "None of the essential facts as to the disqualification of the judge is in dispute, and that he was disqualified is hardly open to controversy. Our statute expressly provides that a judge who is 'interested or has been of counsel in the case or subject-matter thereof' is disqualified to sit; and to prevent a failure of justice by reason of his disqualification provision is made for a trial before a judge or tribunal not disqualified to hear and decide the controversy." Section 57, Code Civ. Proc. (section 6947, Gen. St. 1915).

It was further said in the opinion in that case:

> "The principle of law which incapacitates a person from being judge in his own cause is extended so as to disqualify a judge who may have been of counsel for one of the parties in the case. It is the purpose of the law that no judge shall hear and determine a case in which he is not wholly free, disinterested, impartial, and independent. 'Next in importance to the duty of rendering a righteous judgment is that of doing it in such a manner as will beget no suspicion of the fairness or integrity of the judge.' 12 A. & E. Encycl. of L. 40." 60 Kan. 448, 56 Pac. 756.

Undoubtedly the trial judge believed that because he had not been concerned as an attorney in bringing the action, and had acted in a more or less perfunctory way as an attorney for the city in connection with the subject-matter of the controversy, and that all this had occurred several years prior to the filing of the suit, he could try the case fairly and impartially; but in the Tootle Case, supra, all that the trial judge did was to revive a judgment in an action wherein he had been of counsel, and it was said in the opinion:

> "It is generally held that the rule of disqualification should not have a narrow or technical construction, but should rather be broadly applied in all cases where one is called upon to act judicially or to decide between conflicting rights. There was no necessity to trench upon the rule in this case as ample provision is made by statute for the hearing of the matter before a judge who is qualified." 60 Kan. 449, 56 Pac. 756.

The order of revivor was held in that case without force or validity. In the present case it appears beyond question that the judge of the district court had been at one time the counsel and attorney of the city in relation to the subject-matter of the controversy, and the defendants have not therefore had a trial before a judge qualified to sit in the case, as the statute declares they are entitled to have before a valid judgment can be entered against them.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to order a change of venue. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 225)

STATE ex rel. BREWSTER, Atty. Gen., v. MAYOR AND COM'RS OF CITY OF LAWRENCE. (No. 21394.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

STATUTES 🔑120(4)—SUBJECT AND TITLE—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS—"NOW."

A title to an act which describes it as authorizing cities of a certain class "now" owning a system of waterworks to issue bonds for their extension is broad enough to cover a provision for the issuance of such bonds by cities which owned no waterworks at the time of the enactment, but which acquired them thereafter.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 172.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Now.]

Original mandamus by the State of Kansas, on relation of S. M. Brewster, Attorney General, against the Mayor and Commissioners of the City of Lawrence, Kan. Judgment for plaintiff.

S. M. Brewster, Atty. Gen., and S. D. Bishop and J. H. Mitchell, both of Lawrence, for plaintiff. Thos. Harley, of Lawrence, for defendant.

MASON, J. This is an original proceeding brought in the name of the state to require the commissioners of Lawrence to issue bonds for the extension of waterworks owned by the city. The refusal of the defendants is based upon a doubt respecting the validity of the statute which purports to authorize such action.

The act in question was enacted in 1913 (Laws 1913, c. 124). It undertakes (section 1) to confer power to issue bonds for the purpose indicated upon "cities of the second and third class, whose total indebtedness shall not exceed 15 per cent. of its total assessed valuation now owning and operating, or hereafter acquiring a system of waterworks." Gen. Stat. 1915, § 855. The city of Lawrence did not own a system of waterworks when this law took effect, but it has since acquired one. It is a city of the second class, and its indebtedness is within the prescribed limit. It is therefore covered by the terms of the act. But the contention is made that the words "or hereafter acquiring," in the portion of the statute above quoted, are without effect because they are not within the scope of the title, which reads:

> "An act authorizing cities of the second and third class whose total indebtedness shall not exceed 15 per cent. of its total assessed valuation now owning and operating a system of waterworks to issue bonds for the purpose of enlarging, repairing, extending and improving such system."

The word "now," as used in a statute, ordinarily refers to the date of its taking effect. Clark v. Lord, 20 Kan. 390, 396. Construed strictly and literally, the title therefore applies only to cities which at the time the act was published owned a system of waterworks, and not to those which might thereafter acquire one. The word "now," however, is sometimes used, not with reference to the moment of speaking, but to "a time contemporaneous with something done." 21 A. & E. Encyç. of L. 676; 29 Cyc. 1140.

> "The intent with which this word is used must be gathered from its peculiar significance in each case." Note to last text cited.

It may mean "at the time spoken of or referred to" as well as "at the time of speaking." One of the examples of this given in the Oxford English Dictionary is:

> "What season more important than the hour of death? Everything now conspires to fill the soul with gloom."

The expression is somewhat rhetorical, corresponding to the "historical present" of the grammarians, but it could leave no one in doubt that the speaker referred to the time of death, and not to the time of utterance. That this use of the term is not confined to poetical discourse is illustrated by this sentence from a scientific paper in a recent review:

> "Curiously enough, in the early stages of this firm condition the ice is perhaps more dangerous to venture upon than when it has the 'rubbery' structure; for it is now brittle and yet not of sufficient thickness to support a considerable weight at one point." The Natural History of Ice, Harper's Magazine, March, 1917, p. 559.

It is entirely clear that the draftsman of the statute under consideration, when in the title he referred to the issuance of bonds for the extension of waterworks by cities which "now" owned them, had in mind cities which owned them at the time of the proposed extension, and not those which happened to own them at the time the act took effect. His idea manifestly was that a city which owned waterworks should for that reason be given the power to use its credit for their repair and improvements. If he had substituted "already" for "now" where it occurs in the title, the literal meaning would have been much the same; yet in that case probably it would not have been suggested that it was the condition at the time of the publication of the act that was to control. We think the intention to make the application of the statute depend on the conditions at the time it should be invoked is reasonably clear from the language employed. We are required to give the title any reasonable construction that will carry out the expressed purpose of the legislature, and we think, as has been said of another statute, the one under consideration "is not unconstitutional or void, or at least it is not so clearly unconstitutional and void that we can declare it to be so." State v. Haskell County, 40 Kan. 65, 68, 19 Pac. 362, 363. If the title, in describing the cities to be affected, instead of saying "whose total indebtedness shall not exceed 15 per cent.," had said "whose total indebtedness does not exceed 15 per cent.," it would have referred literally to the percentage of indebtedness existing at the time of the enactment. But in that case no one would have doubted that the subject of the act was the granting of power to issue bonds to cities having less than 15 per cent. of indebtedness at the time of the proposed issuance. Moreover, if the statute is to be construed as giving power to issue the bonds which it describes to the cities which at that particular time owned a system of waterworks, while denying the power to all other cities, even although they might afterwards meet the same requirements, its validity is at least open to a very serious doubt on the ground that it would then confer corporate power by an act which would be special because it related to certain designated cities, the number of which could not be increased or diminished, thereby transgressing the constitutional rule in that regard. Constitution, art. 12, § 1; City of Topeka v. Gillett, 32 Kan. 431, 4 Pac. 800.

> "A statute * * * which confers corporate power upon an unchangeably fixed number of corporations is * * * usually regarded as special, and therefore unconstitutional." Bull v. Kelley, 83 Kan. 597, 602, 112 Pac. 133, 135.

Upon these grounds we hold that the statute is valid, and that it is the duty of the defendants to issue the bonds in question.

Judgment is therefore rendered for the plaintiff. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 54)

KURT et al. v. COX et al. (No. 20706.)*

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. FRAUD 🔑13(2)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—EXCHANGE OF LAND—LIABILITY.

A grantor who makes representations, as to the character and quality of land situate a considerable distance away from the place of negotiations, which he knows to be untrue and with the intention to deceive and defraud the grantee, and whereby he induces the grantee to purchase the land without inspecting it, to his injury and loss, cannot escape liability for the fraud by the statement to the grantee at the time the sale is completed that he has never seen the land nor by telling him that the information he has was obtained from others.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. § 4.]

2. FRAUD 🔑58(2)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

That the grantor made representations knowing them to be untrue and for the purpose of deceiving and injuring the grantee may be shown by circumstances as well as by direct and positive proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 56, 57.]

3. FRAUD 🔑58(2)—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS—EVIDENCE.

The evidence herein is deemed to be sufficient to uphold the findings of the jury that the representations were untrue and made with the fraudulent purpose of injuring the plaintiffs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 56, 57.]

Appeal from District Court, Sedgwick County.

Action by A. A. Kurt and another against Clinton V. Cox and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant Clinton V. Cox appeals. Affirmed.

Holmes, Yankey & Holmes, of Wichita, for appellant. William Keith and Monroe Wright, both of Wichita, for appellees.

JOHNSTON, C. J. In this action the plaintiffs, A. A. Kurt and F. C. Kurt, asked a recovery of damages as against Clinton V. Cox, Tipton Cox, F. M. Newcom, Tom Mott, F. M. Hamilton, and Lawrence Bowers for misrepresentations and fraud in the exchange of a stock of goods for a tract of land. Plaintiffs entered into an agreement with Clinton Cox, whereby they traded their stock of merchandise, valued at about $14,000, for 960 acres of land in Oklahoma and for $4,000 cash; plaintiffs giving back a note for $2,060 secured by a mortgage on the land. A. A. Kurt acted for both plaintiffs. Prior to coming to any agreement of exchange, Kurt had hesitated about going further in the transaction because he had not seen the land, and Cox told him that he himself had not seen the land, but that his father, Tipton Cox, had seen it. According to Kurt's testimony, Cox in the final negotiations stated and agreed to guarantee the good quality of the land, and Kurt was finally prevailed upon to make the trade without seeing the land. Shortly after consummating the deal, plaintiffs discovered that the land was practically worthless and was located on top of a mountain. They then brought this action to recover damages resulting from the fraud practiced upon them by Clinton Cox and others assisting him in bringing about the exchange. It was claimed that Boyd Newcom and Tom Mott, real estate brokers employed by Kurt, co-operated with Cox in the fraud, and F. M. Hamilton, an agent acting for Cox, Tipton Cox who advised the younger Cox as to the value of the stock to be purchased, and Lawrence Bowers, through whom the title to the Oklahoma land was transferred, were also joined as defendants. The case was tried three times, and in the final trial the only defendants involved were Newcom, Mott, and Clinton Cox. Plaintiffs secured judgment against Clinton Cox only, for the sum of $4,750, and Cox appeals.

---

*Rehearing denied July 11, 1917.

He contends that the evidence did not sustain the charge of fraud nor the findings and verdict of the jury. It is insisted that it was not shown that Clinton Cox made any representations to Kurt as to the quality and character of the land, nor that he had knowledge that the representations made were untrue. There was evidence introduced that several days before the exchange Clinton Cox, under an assumed name, had gone to Herington, where plaintiffs' stock of merchandise was located, and made an examination of it, and had also had his father, Tipton Cox, who was experienced in such matters, examine it and give his judgment upon its value. Kurt testified that during the negotiations for the trade he was told that, as the Coxes were reliable people and were willing to guarantee the land, he ought to be willing to exchange his stock for it without waiting to look at it, and that Clinton Cox, not only did guarantee the quality of the land, but at the final meeting he signed a paper describing it and guaranteeing it to be good tillable land, with good growth of grass and about one-third covered with a good quality of timber; this statement being in substantial accord with the oral representations that had been made. It was testified that the written guaranty was turned over to one of the defendants' agents to keep, and that the plaintiffs had not been able to get possession of it since. Plaintiffs were unable to get possession of the abstract of title to the land until several weeks after the exchange had been effected, and it was then discovered that on the day of the exchange Tipton Cox, in whom the title had stood, had transferred it to Lawrence Bowers, who was an employé in the Cox store and not a man of means; that the land was cheap government land which had never as yet been fully paid for; and that Tipton Cox had bought it at the price of $2.50 an acre.

[3] In view of the direct and positive testimony of Kurt that Clinton Cox, just before the agreement of exchange was effected, made a statement as to the quality of the land, which he also reduced to writing and which was material, untrue, and was relied upon by the plaintiffs, it must be held that the verdict was not without support. The statement was not qualified as to the source of his information nor as to the grounds of his belief. The jury in effect found that he made the false representations upon the day when the contract was closed by guaranteeing that the land had good soil, a good growth of saw timber, good growth of grass, and that there was a quantity of it that was good tillable land; and that the representations were false. It is true that the jury found that he had told Kurt that he had never seen the land, and also that the statements which he had made as to its character and description were statements which he had obtained from others. The fact that he had gained his information from others and had never seen the land does not protect him from liability if he made positive and unequivocal statements and the guaranty that has been mentioned. If he made the statements, as Kurt has testified, knowing them to be untrue, with the intention of deceiving plaintiffs and inducing them to part with their property, it amounts to a fraud, and he cannot shelter himself behind the defense that he had not seen the land and that he told Kurt that his information had been obtained from others.

In Westerman v. Corder, 86 Kan. 239, 119 Pac. 868, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 60, where false representations were made by the grantor in the sale of property and the excuse was that they were made in good faith, the court said:

> "While admitting that the representations were made and that they were untrue, it is contended that because they were made in good faith, believing them to be true, and no fraud was intended, therefore an estoppel was not created. It must be conceded that the effect is the same as it would have been if guilty knowledge had been shown. It does not repair the loss of the grantee to be told that the grantor supposed he was telling the truth." 86 Kan. page 241, 119 Pac. 869 [39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 60].

The court was applying the doctrine of equitable estoppel in that case, but in disposing of the case it was remarked that:

> "It has often been held that false representations made and acted upon to the injury of another, although not known to be false by the party making them, may nevertheless in a proper case afford ground for the recovery of damage." 86 Kan. pages 241, 242, 119 Pac. page 869 [39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 60].

The Supreme Court of Michigan, in Holcomb v. Noble, 69 Mich. 396, 37 N. W. 497, stated:

> "Careful examination of the cases adjudicated in this state satisfies me that the doctrine is settled here, by a long line of cases, that if there was in fact a misrepresentation, though made innocently, and its deceptive influence was effective, the consequences to the plaintiff being as serious as though it had proceeded from a vicious purpose, he would have a right of action for the damages caused thereby either at law or in equity." 69 Mich. page 399, 37 N. W. page 498.

See, also, Aldrich v. Scribner, 154 Mich. 23, 117 N. W. 581, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 379; Bullitt v. Farrar, 42 Minn. 8, 43 N. W. 566, 6 L. R. A. 149, 18 Am. St. Rep. 485; Johnson v. Gulick, 46 Neb. 817, 65 N. W. 883, 50 Am. St. Rep. 629.

The authorities are not in agreement as to whether or not good faith and intention to tell the truth will relieve the speaker from liability if the representations are untrue. A distinction is made in some cases where the representation is made by a mere volunteer who has no interest in the transaction and one who has contractual relation to it. The one, it is said, has no higher duty than to answer honestly and in good faith, while it is the duty of the latter to be careful and accurate, and hence ignorance and mistake will not relieve him from liability. Note, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646.

[1, 2] In view of the testimony in this case, it is not necessary to rest the decision upon the doctrine of Westerman v. Corder, supra, as there is testimony tending to support the claim of the plaintiffs that Cox knew the representations made were untrue and that they were fraudulently made to deceive the plaintiffs. It has been said that:

> "Fraudulent representations are those proceeding from or characterized by fraud. Their purpose is to deceive. A fraudulent representation in law is one that is either knowingly untrue, or made without belief in its truth, or recklessly made and for the purpose of inducing action upon it." Sallies v. Johnson, 85 Conn. 77, 82, 81 Atl. 974, 976 [Ann. Cas. 1913A, 386].

See, also, Edgington v. Fitzmaurice, 29 Ch. D. (Eng.) 459. The fraudulent purpose of the defendant may be shown by circumstances as well as by direct and positive proof. Morse v. Ryland, 58 Kan. 250, 48 Pac. 957.

While the defendant had not seen the land, his father, who was engaged in business with him and co-operated with him in making the trade with plaintiffs, had seen it and, of course, had knowledge of its character and quality. According to Kurt's testimony, Hamilton, the agent of the defendant who acted for him in the negotiations, confirmed the statements of Newcom to the effect that the land was tillable, covered with a good growth of grass, about one-fourth in oak and pine saw timber, that it was in the gas and mining belt, and within two miles of the biggest coal mine in Oklahoma, where the annual rainfall was about 44 inches per year. At the outset, Cox examined the stock of goods himself, and then he called his father, who also inspected the stock; but for some reason he did not choose to deal directly with plaintiffs, but made his statements and offers through his agent, Hamilton. The parties appeared to be anxious to close the deal without an inspection of the land by the plaintiffs, and they urged upon Kurt that the guaranty of Cox made it a safe proposition. At the close of the negotiations, Cox gave the guaranty, which appeared to satisfy Kurt, and the exchange was made. Legal title to the land appears to have been placed in an employé of Cox who was holding it for him, and in the transfer Cox must have known that the property which he was putting in at $12 an acre had been transferred to his father for $2.50 per acre. When he made the statement to Kurt that he had not seen the land, he coupled with it the statement and assurance that his father had seen it. While Cox denied that he made and gave the guaranty as to the character and quality of the land, it was admitted that he had made and issued an advertisement, a copy of which was given to Kurt, and which was as follows:

> "For Sale or Exchange: 960 acres of land located in Pittsburg county, Okl., oak, pine and hickory timber. Good ranch proposition, part tillable, well watered, within two or three miles of one of the largest coal mines in Oklahoma; also near the oil and gas developments, within two or three miles of the largest cement plant in Oklahoma. The timber alone should almost pay for this land. Located within three miles of Interurban and Railroad. Three miles from town of 4,000 people. Legal description E. ½ of Sec. 30, all of Sec. 31, Twp. 4 N. Range 17 E. Will exchange for good income property or merchandise. Address the owner direct and save commission."

These facts and circumstances were sufficient to warrant the inference that Cox knew that the representations were untrue and were made with the purpose of defrauding plaintiffs, even if the written guaranty had not been given. They are sufficient to overcome his declaration of an honest purpose and a lack of actual knowledge. To willfully shut his eyes to obvious facts within his control, so that when called to account he might say that he had no personal knowledge of the facts, is itself a fraud.

Complaint is made of instructions 10 and 11. The jury were advised that it was necessary for plaintiffs to prove that the representations were false and known to be false by the defendants, and that their falsity might be proven by showing:

> "First. Actual knowledge of the falsity of the representations by the defendants. In this case the proof must show that the representations were false and that the defendants had actual knowledge that they were false.
>
> "Second. That the defendants made the representations as of their own knowledge, or in such absolute, unqualified, and positive terms as to imply their personal knowledge of the facts, when, in truth, the defendants had no knowledge whether the representations were true or false. In this case the proof must show that the representations were in fact false, and, in addition, that the defendants made the representations as of their own knowledge, when in fact they had no knowledge whether they were true or false, without belief in their truth, or recklessly careless whether they were true or false.

"Third. That the defendant's special situation or means of knowledge were such as made it their duty to know as to the truth or falsity of the representations. In this case, the proof must also show that the representations were in fact false, and, in addition, that the defendants' special situation or means of knowledge were such as made it their duty to know as to the truth or falsity of the representations."

The principal criticism is that, as Kurt's own testimony showed that he was informed that Cox had not seen the land and had derived his information from others, there was no warrant for referring to statements that would imply knowledge, or for mentioning any substitute for actual knowledge. Knowledge might have been gained from other sources than a personal inspection of the land. It is immaterial whether it is designated as "actual knowledge" or just "knowledge." As there was testimony of positive declarations by Cox and also of circumstances tending to show that he must have known that the representations were untrue, the instructions appear to have been warranted.

Complaint is also made of the eighteenth instruction, which first stated that if the defendants Clinton Cox, Boyd Newcom, and Tom Mott made representations as to the character and quality of the land believing them to be true and informed the plaintiffs that they had derived their information from Tipton Cox and fully disclosed the source of their information without anything more, they would not be liable, and the court added:

"But, if you find that Clinton Cox or Newcom or Mott, or either of them, went further and stated that Tipton Cox had seen the land and that his representations in reference thereto could be relied upon, then you are instructed that the person or persons communicating such facts, if you find it to be a fact, to A. A. Kurt, are deemed to have adopted the representations of Tipton Cox as their own; and if the representations of Tipton Cox as to the character, quality, and location of the Oklahoma land were not true, then you are instructed that the person or persons communicating the representations, if any, made by Tipton Cox, are responsible for them, and they constitute fraud on their part. If you find that the defendants believed the representations which they made to Kurt were false, then they will be liable to the plaintiffs, even though you may find that they informed Kurt that they had never seen the land, that their own information as to the land was derived from Tipton Cox and others and from a written statement which was delivered to Kurt, and that they fully disclosed to him the sources of their information."

There is no good reason for Cox to complain of this instruction. Under it, the defendants were to be exonerated if the representations which they made were believed by them to be true and they had fully disclosed to the plaintiffs the source of their information and nothing more; but, if they had added to their information that the information which they had obtained from Tipton Cox could be relied upon as true, the adoption of the representation and assurance thus given are the same as if they had made the statements upon their own responsibility. A positive assurance of that kind is treated as if made upon personal knowledge, and, where it is made with the purpose of deceiving and defrauding parties, the liability is the same as if they had derived their information from a personal inspection. Tipton Cox, referred to in the instruction, had been the owner of the land up to the day of the exchange made with plaintiffs and had been active in promoting the exchange, and his relations were so close to the defendant and to the transaction that he cannot be regarded as a stranger. It is complained that the instruction makes the defendant liable regardless of the falsity of the representations or the fraudulent purpose. Those features of the law had been fully stated in other instructions, and it was unnecessary to repeat all those points in the instruction in question. The instruction really went no farther than to say that if a party repeats what another has stated, and then adds his own assurance that the statements might be relied upon, he is responsible the same as he would have been if he had made them without information from others. Besides that, the special finding of the jury which places the liability of Clinton Cox on the unqualified statement which he made himself, and which he put in the form of a guaranty and which, under the plaintiff's evidence, must be assumed to be true, makes this objection as well as some of the other objections to the instructions of little consequence.

The findings of the jury support the judgment, and, no prejudicial error having been found in the proceedings, the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 18)

In re LINDERHOLM.*

EKBLAD v. LINDERHOLM.

(No. 20523.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MANDAMUS 🔑52—SUBJECT-MATTER—CORRECTION OF JOURNAL ENTRY.

Where, after a dispute between counsel as to what a journal entry of judgment on a motion and demurrer should contain, the trial judge signs a journal entry reciting the judgment of the court, a writ of mandamus will not issue to compel the correction of the journal entry so as to make it recite the evidence or other showing on which the judgment was based.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 101.]

Appeal from District Court, McPherson County.

Petition by Mrs. Agnes Ekblad for letters

---

*Rehearing denied July 11, 1917.

of guardianship, opposed by Justus B. Linderholm. Judgment for petitioner, and Linderholm appeals and brings mandamus to compel trial judge to correct the journal entry signed by him. Writ of mandamus denied.

John F. Hanson, of Lindsborg, for appellant. F. O. Johnson, of McPherson, for appellee.

MARSHALL, J. Justus B. Linderholm asks that a writ of mandamus be issued to compel Judge R. L. King to correct the journal entry of proceedings had before him in McPherson county. The journal entry, which is the subject of this controversy, is as follows:

"And now, to wit, on this 21st day of December, 1915, being an adjourned day of the regular December term of the said court. The Honorable R. L. King, judge of the Eighth judicial district of the state of Kansas, who had been called in by Judge F. F. Prigg to try this case, and the said Judge R. L. King is sitting in this case with the consent of all the parties concerned. The appellant appearing by John F. Hanson, his attorney, and the appellee by Frank O. Johnson.

"And thereupon came on to be heard the motion of the appellee to dismiss the appeal from the probate court of this county for the reason that no bond had been given as required by the statute, which motion was overruled by the court and duly excepted to by the appellant.

"And thereupon came on to be heard the motion of the appellant for an order requiring the probate court to cancel the letters of guardianship issued by the probate court of said county and state to Frank O. Johnson, which motion was by the court overruled and duly excepted to by the appellant.

"And thereupon came on to be heard the demurrer of the appellant to the petition for letters of guardianship filed by Agnes Ekblad, in the probate court of McPherson county, Kan., which demurrer was duly overruled by the court and duly excepted to by the appellant.

"The appellant was granted a stay of 30 days."

Linderholm alleges:

"That said appellant's counsel submitted a form of journal entry of rulings on said matters, but the same was not signed by the said judge, but on the contrary a form prepared by the opposing counsel was signed; the same not having been submitted to appellant's counsel, and no opportunity being given appellant or his counsel to be heard in the matter as provided by rule No. 4 of said court."

Linderholm further alleges that, when it was discovered that the journal entry had been filed, his counsel filed a motion to correct it, and asked that Judge King come into McPherson county to hear the motion. It has not been heard. Linderholm's application does not state wherein the journal entry is incorrect.

It appears that there was a difference between counsel as to what the journal entry should contain, and that counsel for Linderholm and opposing counsel each prepared a form of journal entry. These were submitted to Judge King, and he signed the journal entry prepared by opposing counsel.

On the oral argument before this court, it appeared that F. O. Johnson, who, as counsel, opposed the motions and demurrers mentioned in the journal entry, had agreed that the files in the probate court in the insanity proceedings against Justus B. Linderholm might be introduced in evidence in the district court without identification. The ground of Linderholm's complaint appears to be that the journal entry does not recite the evidence or showing on which the judgment was based. It does not appear that Linderholm offered to introduce the files in evidence, nor does it appear that it was necessary for them to be introduced on the hearing of either of the motions. It was not necessary for the files to be introduced on the hearing of the demurrer, and it was not necessary for the journal entry to recite the showing that was made on the motions or the demurrer.

No reason appears why a writ of mandamus should issue to compel R. L. King to correct the journal entry that was signed by him.

In this court, Linderholm complains, and has, on a number of occasions, complained, of the adjudication of insanity against him. The statute provides an easy and effective method by which he can be declared sane. For some reason he prefers not to pursue that remedy.

The writ of mandamus is denied. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 122)

FRASER v. CHICAGO, R. I. & P. RY. CO.

(No. 20899.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑129(1) — INJURY TO SERVANT — MASTER'S LIABILITY — INDEPENDENT CRIMINAL ACT.

The defendant, an interstate carrier, maintains a large freighthouse having many doors. It was known there were persons about the freighthouse at different times of the night watching for an opportunity to steal property in the defendant's care. At the close of business each day, it was the duty of an employé known as the doorman to close all doors and bolt them. The plaintiff was night watchman of the freighthouse, and his duties were to look after and protect the property in the defendant's custody. The first duty of the watchman, on coming into the building in the evening, was to see that all doors were closed and bolted; but this duty had not been communicated to the plaintiff. At 1:05 a. m., while going his rounds, the plaintiff discovered that one of the doors was open. Suspecting the presence of an intruder, he commenced to draw his revolver, when he was shot in the arm by which he carried his lantern, by a man who escaped through the open door. The plaintiff had passed by the door hourly since 7:05 of the evening before, and the door had been closed. Assuming the doorman failed to bolt the door, it is held the omission merely created a condition which made entrance into the building less difficult, and that the cause of the plaintiff's injury was the independent, unrelated, criminal act of the intruder, who used the door to gain admission to the building.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 257.]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. NEGLIGENCE ⇨56(1)—"PROXIMATE CAUSE." When an act or omission has bound up in it perils which, in the natural order of things, are liberated or eventuate through the conduct of a responsible human being and which might have been anticipated, and injury results, the original act or omission is "proximate cause."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 69.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Proximate Cause.]

Appeal from District Court, Wyandotte County.

Action by Henry D. Frazer against the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to enter judgment for defendant.

Paul E. Walker and Luther Burns, both of Topeka, and O. L. Miller, of Kansas City, for appellant. W. B. Sutton and W. B. Sutton, Jr., both of Kansas City, for appellee.

BURCH, J. The action was one for damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff, who was an employé of the defendant. The plaintiff recovered, and the defendant appeals.

The defendant maintains two freighthouses in Kansas City, Mo., which extend north and south and are connected by a dock or platform. At the close of business each day, a doorman sees to it that all doors are closed and bolted. About 6 o'clock in the evening, a watchman comes in and remains until 6 o'clock the next morning. The watchman is the only man in charge of the company's property at night, and his duties are to protect and look after such property in all respects—the lights, fire, water, theft, and, if doors be not secured, to secure them. Two registry boxes are installed in each building. In case of fire, the watchman breaks the box, pulls down a lever, and so gives an alarm. Besides this, the watchman is required to visit each box at stated intervals throughout the night, and by means of the bell indicate to the Western Union Telegraph office in the Stock Exchange building a block and a half from the freighthouses that he is awake and on duty. Frank Holland was the watchman for both buildings. The work was too heavy for one man, and the plaintiff took Holland's place as watchman of the north building. The plaintiff had been fireman of the heating plant which heated the freighthouse office. It required but a small amount of work to attend the heating plant, and he continued to do so after he assumed the duties of watchman. One night as the plaintiff was going his rounds, he saw an open door on the west side and toward the north end of the building. He had passed by the door hourly from 7:05 p. m. to 12:05 a. m., and the door had been closed; but, as he came to it at 1:05 a. m., it was open. He carried a lantern at his side in his left hand and a revolver in a holster under his left arm. Upon seeing the open door, he reached for his revolver with his right hand, and was immediately shot in the left arm by a man who escaped through the open door.

The plaintiff's petition does not contain the word "watchman." He framed his petition, and he framed his testimony to make it appear that aside from his duties as fireman his duties consisted in ringing those two bells, installed for the purpose of compelling him to make an hourly record of the fact that he was awake and about his business. He said the registry boxes were for protection against fire, and had to be rung every hour. He had no orders covering anything except his duties as fireman and turning in those registry boxes. He said Holland was a watchman, and had pulled the bells as part of his duties as watchman. Holland was relieved of all duty in the north building, but the plaintiff said one of Holland's duties was taken away and given to him, and that was to pull the bells, and he pulled them as fire protection. The plaintiff's superior officer left the order for him to ring those bells. He had no orders about doors, except the one through which he entered the building. That one he was required to shut, so people could not steal or burn or do any damage, and he locked it behind him to keep anybody from coming in after him. But there his duties in respect to doors ended. True, he said, "While working there I went round some with Holland, and found doors open, and we closed them"; but when he took Holland's place, and there was no other employé except himself in the building, sometimes he glanced around when going to ring his bells, and sometimes he did not. When not ringing the bells, he stayed in the office.

The supposed foundation for the defendant's legal liability in damage is this: The plaintiff was obliged to pass by the door through which the intruder entered every hour of the night, in going from the office to the places where he worked the bell ringing charm against fire. The door was left unlocked, and no guard was set to prevent desperadoes from making a breach through this weak place in the fortifications behind which the plaintiff rung his bells. These culpable omissions exposed the plaintiff, who was entirely without fault, to great bodily harm, and even to death, and did in fact, through a series of events linked together in natural sequence, proximately cause the plaintiff to be shot.

Testimony which the plaintiff himself produced, and the testimony of witnesses produced by the defendant whom the plaintiff did not undertake to contradict, cut the underpinning from the fabrication that bell ringing was an independent employment, and not a means of making hourly reports, and established the fact that the plaintiff was watchman of the north building in place of Holland, and succeeded to Holland's duties there. There are doors and doors of the north freighthouse, which is 600 feet long and 45 feet wide. A rolling door at the south end opens on the dock between the two buildings, and has bolts in the sides. Another door fastens in that way. The west doors, about 30 in number, are sliding doors, and when closed are fastened by bolts pushed down with the foot into slots. Sometimes it would be discovered that in closing the building in the evening a bolt had not been pressed down, and the proof, coming from the lips of the plaintiff's own witness as well as the witnesses for the defendant, was that the watchman's first duty on coming into the building in the evening was to see that doors were closed and fastened. The plaintiff did not dispute this proof, but on rebuttal merely reiterated his claim that he had no instructions regarding doors, and said he was carried on the pay roll as a fireman. The plaintiff had pleaded that he was engaged in interstate commerce, the defendant being an interstate carrier, and the case was submitted to the jury to say whether or not the defendant was negligent in not furnishing the plaintiff a safe place in which to pursue his nocturnal, indoor, interstate commerce pastime of bell ringing.

There was just one fair dispute concerning the facts, and that was whether or not, when the plaintiff became watchman as well as fireman, he was drilled with respect to looking after the doors of the building. There was no rational ground for dispute to be settled by the jury that the plaintiff was watchman, "ringing bells" being a freighthouse expression denoting the duties of watchman, and the court should have instructed the jury to that effect. There was no dispute to be settled by the jury that the first thing for the watchman to do when he came on duty was to see that the doors were secured. A watchman of ordinary capacity might be expected to understand this fact without instruction. The plaintiff admitted he had gone about the building with the watchman, had observed open doors, and had closed them. But, if the plaintiff needed instruction, the defendant's negligence consisted, not in leaving the door unbolted, or failing to appoint a watchman to guard its watchman while on guard, but in not telling the plaintiff to see that the door was bolted. This negligence was not relied on as a basis for recovery.

There was evidence that it was generally known there were persons about the freighthouse at different times of night looking for an opportunity to steal property in the defendant's care. An unlocked door would facilitate an attempt to steal should one be made. The defendant, however, had taken precaution against theft. Besides providing a man whose instructions were to close and bolt the doors each evening, it provided a watchman, who went through the freighthouse with a lantern hour by hour throughout the night, and the plaintiff testified there were other watchmen about the freighthouse and railroad yards. The duty to take precaution to protect the property of shippers from theft was owed to shippers, and not to the plaintiff. That duty was performed, and was performed in part through the agency of the plaintiff himself.

[1, 2] The omission of the doorman to bolt the closed door, and the shooting of the plaintiff, did not bear to each other the relation of cause and effect. Omission to bolt the door was fraught with no peril to the plaintiff, active or latent. Bolted or unbolted, the door was not a hazard which plaintiff encountered in his rounds, and omission to bolt it neither supplied nor set in action any dangerous instrumentality or agency. It merely created a condition which made entrance to the building less difficult than it otherwise would have been, should any one desire to enter. The injury resulted from the violent and malicious act of a desperate person who took advantage of the condition to enter the building for some purpose not disclosed. He may have gone there to steal. When surprised, he exhibited such conduct as he willed, shot the plaintiff, and fled, but conduct which originated with him, and which did not originate with the doorman or the door the evening before.

The plaintiff cites the well-known authorities to the effect that, if the action of an intervening cause might have been anticipated, the intervening cause will not interrupt the connection between the original cause and the injury. The rule is sound, but it presupposes an original cause of injury which manifests consequences in an injurious result. We all anticipate pocket picking when the circus comes, and housebreaking during fair week; but the circus and the fair are not the causes of such crimes. We know, too, that should a housebreaker be discovered in the act of committing burglary, he might do violence to a person interrupting his depredation. But if, knowing the city to be infested with such characters, we go out for the evening leaving the back door unlocked and leaving a servant in the house, omission to lock the door is not the cause of the burglary, should one occur, or the cause of injury to the servant who tries to intercept commission of the crime. The cause of injury originates with the burglar, whose entrance into the house was not obstructed by a locked door. On the other hand, when an act or omission has bound up in it perils which, in the natural order of things, are liberated or eventuate through the conduct of a responsible human being, which might have been anticipated, and injury results, the original act or omission is proximate cause. Potency to do harm was contained in the act or omission from the beginning, continued to threaten throughout the chain of events, and came to fruition in the ultimate injury, albeit the ultimate injury was promoted or precipitated through the agency of an intervening third person.

The principle involved is well illustrated by the case of Clark v. Powder Co., 94 Kan. 268, 146 Pac. 320, L. R. A. 1915E, 479, which is cited by the plaintiff. Van Gray, the driller of an oil well, left solidified glycerine lying at the well. McDowell, an employé of the driller, carried the dangerous substance home with him. McDowell's mother required him to take it away, and he placed it in the fence surrounding an abandoned graveyard, where some boys found it and exploded it. In the opinion of the court prepared by Mr. Justice Dawson it was said:

> "No new power of doing mischief was communicated to the solidified glycerine by the acts of young McDowell. The power of doing mischief was inherent in the glycerine all the time. That some terrible accident was likely to happen in letting it out of the close custody of some one skilled in its use was not only natural and probable but almost inevitable." 94 Kan. 276, 146 Pac. 322, L. R. A. 1915E, 479.

The plaintiff cites the case of Horan v. Watertown, 217 Mass. 185, 104 N. E. 464, which is clearly against him. The sewer department of the town kept dynamite in a tool chest, which could be opened without a key, which was not guarded, and which was left on a highway. Boys unlawfully took the dynamite from the box and threw it into a bonfire. The court stated the rule with reference to anticipating the independent act of a third person, and said:

> "Tested by this rule, the plaintiff's case fails. While the dynamite and the other contents of the box were left in such a way that a thief might not find it very difficult to steal them, it cannot be said that the defendant was bound to anticipate that this might be done and to guard against the consequences that might follow if a thief should steal the dynamite and so use it as to do injury to others. The general assumption of innocence would be inconsistent with this." 217 Mass. 186, 104 N. E. 465.

Let it be supposed that the court held the action of the boys should have been anticipated. The case would then afford no comfort to the plaintiff. The danger lay in the dynamite from the beginning, which merely waited for some one to explode it to cause injury, as in the powder company case just referred to.

The plaintiff cites the case of Norton v. Chandler & Co., 221 Mass. 99, 108 N. E. 897, which does not sustain his contention. Friction strips on the revolving door of a store were out of order and did not keep the door from spinning. As a woman was entering the store, a wing of the door behind her struck her in the back. The door had been set spinning by a customer leaving the store in a hurry. It was held the act of the customer might have been anticipated. Here again the power to do mischief inhered in the defective door, and the wing of the door was the thing which struck the woman, not the customer.

In this case, no faculty for harm resided in the door, or was imparted to the door by the doorman, which finally functioned upon the plaintiff through the instrumentality of the intruder's pistol.

The plaintiff cites the case of Filson v. Express Co., 84 Kan. 614, 114 Pac. 863, as a parallel case. The express company left a portable package worth $600, the value of which was plainly marked on the package, in a frame depot at the outskirts of a small town over night. The depot had no police protection or watchman, was used for the deposit of express matter, freight, and mail received on night trains, and had been burglarized. The doors of the building were locked, and the windows were fastened; but some one broke a window and carried off the package in the nighttime. The question was whether or not the bailee used due care to prevent loss of the property in its custody, considering its tempting character, the security afforded, and all other circumstances. It was held the question was one for the jury. The point was made that the lack of better protection was not the proximate cause of the loss, and it was held that if, under all the circumstances, loss by burglary might have been foreseen, it was the proximate result of the breach of duty complained of.

The difference between the two cases has been indicated by what has already been said. The plaintiff seeks to appropriate a cause of action for breach of duty which did not relate to him. It was the duty of the defendant to protect the property of shippers from theft. An unbolted door would make theft easier, and theft of property might be anticipated as a result of not bolting the door, if the property had no other protection. As to the plaintiff, however, the unbolted door was merely a condition, and not a cause of injury. In the case of Railway Co. v. Columbia, 65 Kan. 390, 69 Pac. 338, 58 L. R. A. 399, it was said:

> "A prior and remote cause cannot be made the basis of an action for the recovery of damages if such remote cause did nothing more than furnish the condition, or give rise to the occasion, by which the injury was made possible, if there intervened between such prior or remote cause and the injury, a distinct, successive, unrelated, and efficient cause of the injury." Syl. ¶ 2.

If it could be conceived that because a door was not bolted the plaintiff fell through it into some space and was injured, the unsafe condition of the door would be the cause of his injury. The injury would be the natural, foreseeable, proximate result of the cause. Here the proximate and efficient cause of the plaintiff's injury was the unrelated and independent act of a reckless ruffian, who used the door to gain admission to the building. While the plaintiff tried to reduce himself to the status of the inert and inanimate personal property in the building, he was part of the protection afforded to that property. He accepted employment as part of the barricade against theft, and not as a thing to be surrounded by an impregnable barricade. He was a guard over property, and not a thing to be guarded. The bell ringing theory of his employment broke down. He had no case, and the motion for a directed verdict in favor of the defendant should have been sustained.

The judgment of the district court is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with direction to enter judgment for the defendant. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 26)

TATLOW v. BACON et al. (No. 20557.)*

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Constitutional Law 🔑83(3) — Criminal Law 🔑1213—Execution 🔑422—Imprisonment for Debt — Cruel and Unusual Punishment—Statute.

The statutory provision (Code Civ. Proc. § 509 [Gen. St. 1915, § 7413]) that an execution may issue against the person of a debtor for certain fraudulent acts is not violative of section 16 of the Bill of Rights, which prohibits imprisonment for debt, except in cases of fraud, nor of the limitation against cruel and unusual punishment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 151½; Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3304-3309; Execution, Cent. Dig. § 1208.]

2. Constitutional Law 🔑315 — Due Process of Law—Notice and Hearing.

The act does not conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 935, 937, 941, 947.]

3. Execution 🔑433 — Issuance Against Debtor—Statute—Hearing and Notice.

As the statute provides that before issuing an execution the court or judge must be satisfied from evidence produced that the statutory grounds upon which it may issue exist, it is obvious that the Legislature contemplated that a hearing should be had and that notice of the hearing should be given to the debtor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 1232-1236.]

4. Execution 🔑433—Body Execution—Notice and Hearing.

The rule applied that a statutory provision for such notice and hearing need not be made in the statute in express words, but may be implied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 1232-1236.]

5. Jury 🔑16(5) — Trial by — Execution Against Debtor.

In such a proceeding a jury trial may not be demanded as a matter of right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. § 89.]

6. Statutes 🔑201—Reference to Another Statute—Correction of Mistake.

Where a statutory provision refers to a section of the statute by the wrong number, and it is manifest from the context that another section was the one intended by the Legislature, the wrong number will be disregarded, and the correct one will be deemed to be substituted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 279.]

7. Execution 🔑433—Fraud—Statement of Facts.

In an affidavit made to obtain the issuance of an execution against the person, mere conclusions are not sufficient. The facts upon which the charges of fraud are based should be specifically stated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 1232-1236.]

8. Execution 🔑433—Charges of Fraud—Conclusion by Judgment.

Where the charges of fraud against the debtor were properly put in issue and determined in the original case, the facts so determined by the judgment are conclusive between the parties, and are not open to relitigation in the subsequent proceeding to obtain an execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 1232-1236.]

9. Execution 🔑421 — Execution Against Person—Fraud—Remedy.

The proceeding herein is purely statutory, and when the creditor alleges and shows to the satisfaction of a court or judge that the debtor has committed the acts of fraud which under the statute constitute grounds for the issuance of an execution, he is entitled to his remedy, although other remedies may be available.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 1207.]

10. Execution Against Person of Debtor—Fraud—Evidence.

The evidence examined, and held to be sufficient to sustain the findings of the trial court.

Appeal from District Court, Shawnee County.

Execution proceeding by Marion A. Tatlow against W. E. Bacon, Bert Rucker, and others. From an order issuing execution against the person of Bert Rucker, he appeals. Affirmed.

J. M. Stark and Waters & Waters, all of Topeka, for appellant. Monroe, McClure & Monroe, of Topeka, for appellee.

JOHNSTON, C. J. This was a proceeding in which an execution was issued against the person of Bert Rucker, a judgment debtor, and from the order he appeals.

In an action brought by Marion A. Tatlow against W. E. Bacon and Bert Rucker, it was found and adjudged that they had conspired together to defraud plaintiff, Tatlow, of his land by inducing him to exchange it for a worthless deed; and that judgment was affirmed in this court. Tatlow v. Bacon, 95 Kan. 695, 149 Pac. 745. The plaintiff then filed an application, accompanied by an affidavit, setting forth that Rucker had fraudulently contracted the debt and incurred the obligation on which the judgment was rendered, and stating the manner in which the fraud was accomplished; also that since the rendition of the judgment he had assigned and disposed of his property with the intention to defraud his creditors and prevent such property from being taken on execution; and also that he fraudulently concealed his property with the intention to prevent the collection of money due on the judgment. After notice and a hearing, in which the defendant participated, the order issuing the execution was made.

---

*Rehearing denied July 11, 1917.

[1-4] There is complaint that the affidavit upon which the application for the execution was based was insufficient. It set forth in detail the fraudulent purpose and acts upon which the judgment rested, and made the evidence and proceedings in the main case a part of the application for the issuance of the execution. The conspiracy and fraud by which the defendant was induced to exchange his land for a worthless instrument, having been adjudicated, were no longer open to inquiry. This part of the affidavit was specific, and of itself sufficient to warrant the issuance of the execution against the person of the defendant. The statements that the defendants had fraudulently concealed their property to prevent the collection of the judgment, and had assigned and disposed of it to prevent it being taken on execution, were general in character, and did not specifically set forth the facts upon which the charges were based. In this respect the affidavit was defective. The facts relied on as fraudulent should have been specifically stated in the affidavit. Gillett v. Thiebold, 9 Kan. 427; Bryan v. Congdon, 54 Kan. 109, 37 Pac. 1009. However, the facts relating to the manner in which the defendant fraudulently incurred the obligation were specifically and fully stated, and this afforded a sufficient basis for the proceeding.

It is contended that the statute under which the proceeding was had is unconstitutional, in that it does not provide for a notice to the debtor of a hearing, nor in fact for any hearing, before the execution is issued. The statute pertinent to the question reads:

> "An execution against the person of the debtor, except as prescribed in section 511 [Gen. St. 1915, § 7415], can be issued only when the same is allowed by the Supreme Court, the district court, or any judge of either, upon being satisfied, by the affidavit of the judgment creditor or his attorney, and such other evidence as may be presented, of the existence of one or more of the particulars mentioned in section 522 [Gen. St. 1915, § 7426]." Civ. Code, § 509 (Gen. St. 1915, § 7413).

According to this provision a judicial hearing is contemplated, as the execution against the person cannot issue until a court or judge thereof shall determine upon evidence that the statutory grounds for such an order exist. It is not issued as a matter of course upon an application, but before making such order the Supreme Court, or the district court, or a judge of either, must be satisfied by the evidence presented in support of the application. The requirement that evidence shall be presented to the satisfaction of a court or judge clearly implies a hearing, and other provisions of the Code require notice of applications for an order of this kind. Civ. Code, §§ 556-560 (Gen. St. 1915, §§ 7460-7464). It has already been determined that a statute is not invalid merely by reason of the fact that it does not expressly provide for notice and hearing. It may be implied by the courts, unless the language of the statute excludes the theory that notice and hearing are necessary. Gilmore, County Clerk, v. Hentig, 33 Kan. 156, 5 Pac. 781; Railroad Co. v. Abilene, 78 Kan. 820, 98 Pac. 224. In the Abilene Case it was said:

> "Provision for notice and hearing need not be made in the statute by express words. It may be implied. In reality the courts simply read the provision into the statute in order to uphold taxation schemes against the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which forbids any state to deprive any person of property without due process of law. This was done in the case of Gilmore, County Clerk, v. Hentig, 33 Kan. 156, 5 Pac. 781. But the statute must be one which will allow notice and a hearing to be interpolated. If it arbitrarily fixes the steps to be taken, in a manner indicating that notice and a hearing upon some subject, like benefits, are excluded, it must be judged accordingly." 78 Kan. 827, 828, 98 Pac. 227.

Here the statute is not only open to an interpolation of notice and hearing, but its own language carries the plain implication that a hearing is to be had, and the Code provision relating to notices applies to a proceeding like the one in question, the same as it does to provisions for numerous other orders where there is no special mention that notices are to be given. In this case notice was given and a protracted hearing was had, in which the defendant participated.

It is contended that the statute is invalid, because it permits imprisonment for debt contrary to the provisions of the state Constitution. While the Bill of Rights (section 16) provides that there may be no imprisonment for debt, except for fraud, it in effect authorizes imprisonment in cases where there is fraud, and as the statute enacted under that provision expressly authorizes imprisonment for fraud, the objection must be overruled. In re Heath, Petitioner, 40 Kan. 333, 19 Pac. 926.

The defendant argues that the summary proceeding under the statute was not due process of law, and conflicts with the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution. It had been determined in the original case, which was tried by the jury, that the defendant was guilty of fraud. The fact having been properly put in issue and determined by a final judgment in the original action between the parties, it became a fixed fact, which was not open to relitigation. Hentig v. Redden, 46 Kan. 231, 26 Pac. 701, 26 Am. St. Rep. 91; C., K. & W. Rld. Co. v. Com'rs of Anderson Co., 47 Kan. 766, 29 Pac. 96; Sanford v. Oberlin College, 50 Kan. 342, 31 Pac. 1089. Proof of the adjudication was sufficient proof of the facts included in the judgment; but, of course, it is not conclusive as to facts occurring since the judgment was rendered.

Greenwell v. Moffett, 77 Kan. 41, 93 Pac. 609, is somewhat analogous to the present case. In a foreclosure proceeding an issue was adjudicated, and afterwards, upon a motion to set aside a sheriff's sale made under the judgment, the losing party sought to litigate the same issue, and it was held that, the fact having been tried and determined in the original action, the adjudication was conclusive as between the parties.

In proceedings of this kind it is competent for the Legislature to prescribe what the procedure shall be and what evidence shall be received, so long as they do not conflict with some provision of the state or federal Constitution. McGehee, Due Process of Law, p. 162; 2 Willoughby on the Constitution, § 462. It is insisted by the defendant that the statute is bad for the reasons stated and also because it imposes cruel and unusual punishment. It has been held in many cases that such statutes are not violative of the provision prohibiting deprivation of liberty without due process of law, or the one forbidding cruel and unusual punishment. Light v. Canadian County Bank, 2 Okl. 543, 37 Pac. 1075; 5 C. J. 438.

[5] A complaint is made that a jury trial was not awarded in the proceeding. No application for a jury trial was made, and perhaps it was for the reason that a jury trial could not have been demanded as a matter of right. The constitutional guaranty that "the right of trial by jury shall be inviolate" (Bill of Rights, § 5) has no application to proceedings of this character, and does not extend beyond cases where such right existed at the common law, but only applies to cases that were triable by jury before the Constitution was adopted. Kimball et al. v. Connor et al., 3 Kan. 414; State v. Cutler, 13 Kan. 131; In re Burrows, Petitioner, 33 Kan. 675, 7 Pac. 148; State ex rel. v. Durein, 46 Kan. 695, 27 Pac. 148; Swarz v. Ramala, 63 Kan. 633, 66 Pac. 649; Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 2 Sup. Ct. 569, 27 L. Ed. 552.

[6-8] It is further contended that the statute is not enforceable against the defendant because of ambiguity. In section 509 of the Civil Code it is provided that an execution may issue when evidence is offered showing the existence of one or more of the particulars or grounds mentioned in section 522 of the Code. The latter section, however, does not mention any particulars upon which an execution might be based, nor has it any application to executions against the persons of debtors. It is an obvious mistake, as the preceding section, 508 (Gen. St. 1915, § 7412), is the one which does prescribe the particulars or grounds which must be shown to exist before the execution shall issue. In the earlier compilations of the statutes the preceding section is correctly named (Gen. Stat. 1868, c. 80, § 507; Gen. Stat. 1901, § 4984), but wrong numbers were mistakenly used in printing the Revised Code of 1909. It is manifest from a reading of all the provisions that one number was erroneously used for another, and there is no difficulty in ascertaining the number which the Legislature intended to use. The rule was well stated in Coney v. City of Topeka, 96 Kan. 46, 49, 149 Pac. 689, 690, where it was said:

> "It is familiar law that legislative enactments are not, any more than any other documents, to be defeated on account of errors, mistakes, or omissions. Where one word or figure has been erroneously used for another, or a word omitted, and the context affords the means of correction, the proper word or figure will be deemed substituted or supplied. This is only making the naked letter of the statute yield to its obvious intent."

See State v. Knoll, 69 Kan. 767, 77 Pac. 580; Reese v. Hammond, 94 Kan. 459, 146 Pac. 997.

[9] Another contention is that the plaintiff should have resorted to the supersedeas bond before obtaining an execution against the person of the defendant. The proceeding is a statutory one, and the conditions upon which the execution may be issued have been definitely prescribed. When these conditions are shown to exist, the creditor is entitled to the remedy, although other remedies may be available. Under the statute it is not necessary to allege or prove that no recovery can be had under a supersedeas bond, nor that all other remedies have been exhausted. The court would not be warranted in adding to the requirements upon any ground, not even because the proceeding involved the imprisonment of the debtor.

[10] The evidence appears to be sufficient to establish the fraud of the defendant, and upon an examination of the proceedings and the objections of the defendant we find no ground for reversal.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 66)

FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND v. CITY OF STAFFORD et al.

(No. 20717.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨373(4)—CLAIMS FOR LABOR—PROPORTIONATE REDUCTION.

The contract price of a municipal improvement having proved insufficient to meet all the claims for labor and material, and a proportionate distribution of the loss among claimants having been ordered, it is held that the claim of one who is subrogated to the rights of a number of laborers and materialmen should be reduced only in the proportion that the total loss bears to the total cost of the improvement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 913.]

Appeal from District Court, Stafford County.

Action by the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland against the City of Stafford, and the Farmers' National Bank of Stafford, Kan. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions to reduce the judgment.

C. M. Williams, of Hutchinson, for appellants. Paul R. Nagle, of St. John, and New, Miller, Camack & Winger and P. E. Reeder, all of Kansas City, Mo., for appellee.

MASON, J. The city of Stafford entered into a contract for the construction of a waterworks system and electric light plant, to cost it $27,500. The contractor abandoned the work before completion, and his bondsman, the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, finished it. The Farmers' National Bank of Stafford provided money for the payment of bills for work and material furnished to the contractor, amounting to $2,000, under circumstances which it maintained entitled it to subrogation to all the rights of the original claimants. The city paid the bank this amount in full, and the payment left $5,534.02 as the balance of the $27,500 appropriated to the work. The bonding company had incurred expenditures of $6,888.62, and contended that the city should have paid the $2,000 to it instead of to the bank. It brought an action against the city and the bank on this theory and recovered a judgment. The defendants appealed, and on the appeal the principal question considered was whether the bank was subrogated to the rights of the original claimants who had furnished labor and material to the amount of $2,000. This court answered that question in the affirmative, saying:

> "Had these labor and materialmen retained their claims they would have been entitled to look to the city for their pro rata share of the contract price, but the city could not be held liable for more for it did not agree to pay more than the contract price. The excess is $1,354.60, and it would not be fair or equitable for the bank to lose its entire claim or for the plaintiff to collect the full amount of its claim. The city, without authority and over the protest of the surety, paid the bank's claim in full, and the surety company may rightfully look to it and to the bank for the difference between the $2,000 and the pro rata portion thereof which would have been enforceable against the city by the original holders of the claims paid by the bank had they retained them. This amount can be ascertained if not readily agreed upon by the parties." Deposit Co. v. City of Stafford, 93 Kan. 539, 550, 144 Pac. 852, 855.

On the case being remanded the district court held in effect that the bank's proportion of the loss should be $489.55, and rendered judgment accordingly. The defendants again appeal, insisting that the bank should have been allowed to retain all of the $2,000 excepting $93.89. The decision of the trial court was based upon an apportionment of the loss in accordance with the relative amounts claimed by the parties to the controversy at the time of the settlement. We think this adjustment prejudicial to the rights of the bank. The city is a mere stakeholder in the matter. The dispute is between the bonding company and the bank. The total cost of the improvement turned out to be $28,854.60. The city's liability was limited by the contract price of $27,500, and a loss to some one necessarily resulted. This court held that the bank should suffer a proportionate scaling down of its claim. But as the bank was held to stand in the shoes of the original claimants, who furnished labor and material for the improvement, and had no connection in any way with the manner in which the funds provided for the improvement had been disbursed, it was not responsible for the payment in full of any claims that ought to have been scaled down. The cost of the improvement was $28,854.60. The contract price was $27,500, involving a loss of $1,354.60. In the absence of some reason to the contrary each claim should suffer a reduction in the proportion that $1,354.60, the total loss, bears to $28,854.60, the total amount of claims. In the case of the bank's claim of $2,000, this would be $93.89. We regard this as the extent to which the bank should suffer. As there is no showing of any overpayment through the fault of the city, the rest of the loss must fall on the bonding company.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to reduce the judgment in favor of the bonding company to $93.89 and interest. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 32)

WALLACE v. WALLACE et al. (No. 20673.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1064(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—MISLEADING INSTRUCTION.

An instruction that an indorsement of a payment, placed on a note by the payee thereof, or with his knowledge or consent, is evidence of such payment, is not an instruction that the indorsement is conclusive evidence of payment, and is not so misleading as to warrant the reversal of a judgment based on a general finding that the payment was made as shown by the indorsement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4219.]

2. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS 🔑27(2, 3)—NOTE—INDORSEMENT OF PAYMENT—ERASURE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The trial court correctly instructed the jury as to the burden of proof concerning the indorsement of payments made on the note in controversy in this action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Alteration of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 240–247.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1053(2)—HARMLESS ERROR — ADMISSION OF INCOMPETENT EVIDENCE—CURE.

The error committed in admitting the testimony of an incompetent witness was cured by striking out the testimony and instructing the jury not to consider it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4179.]

4. Witnesses 🔑158—Competency—Transactions with Decedent.

A witness, incompetent under section 320 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Gen. St. 1915, § 7222), may testify to all matters in controversy which did not concern any transaction or communication had personally by the witness with the deceased person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 663, 665, 698, 699.]

5. Witnesses 🔑177—Competency—Transaction with Representative of Decedent.

A witness, incompetent under section 320 of the Code of Civil Procedure, may testify to the details of a conversation had by him with another witness, who, in behalf of the personal representative of the deceased person, has testified to the conversation, although in that conversation the incompetent witness detailed a transaction had by him personally with the deceased person.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 718.]

6. Witnesses 🔑140(9) — Competency — Transactions with Decedent.

The wife of a person incompetent to testify as a witness, under section 320 of the Code of Civil Procedure, may testify to a conversation between her husband and the deceased person, but in which she took no part.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 608.]

7. Sufficiency of Evidence.

The evidence, as shown by the abstracts, has been examined, and, though conflicting, was sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury.

Appeal from District Court, Harvey County.

Action by Ella Wallace, as administratrix, etc., against John Wallace and others. Judgment for defendant John Wallace, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ezra Branine and H. W. Hart, both of Newton, for appellant. W. H. Carpenter, of Marion, for appellees.

MARSHALL, J. In this action, the plaintiff seeks to recover on a promissory note, and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure its payment. The defense was payment. The issues were submitted to a jury, and a verdict was returned in favor of defendant John Wallace. Judgment was rendered in his favor. The plaintiff appeals.

Defendant John Wallace had given his father, Charles Wallace, three separate promissory notes, one for $1,200, one for $1,700, and one for $2,100, each secured by a mortgage on real property. The two smaller notes were paid prior to the death of Charles Wallace. While Charles Wallace was in California, defendant John Wallace paid $200 on the $2,100 note, and indorsed thereon: "Paid on principal, two hundred dollars, Feb. 22, 1913." Previous to this, six interest payments had been made on the $2,100 note, the indorsements of which were all in John Wallace's handwriting. After Charles Wallace returned from California, and about May 16, 1913, he and defendant John Wallace went into the bank in which they both did business, and there engaged in conversation and made calculations and memoranda. After this conversation, the indorsement of "two hundred dollars" appeared as an indorsement of "two thousand dollars"; the word "hundred" having been erased, and the word "thousand" written in place thereof. The evidence tended to show that the word "hundred" was not erased by defendant John Wallace. The evidence did show that the word "thousand" was written by him.

Charles Wallace died December 2, 1914. After the conversation in the bank, the note was constantly in his custody or control until his death. On the trial, the controverted questions revolved around the indorsement of $2,000. The plaintiff, who was the administratrix of the estate of Charles Wallace, insisted that no payment had been made on the note, and that the indorsements had been wrongfully and unlawfully placed thereon without her knowledge or consent or that of Charles Wallace. Before the commencement of this action, John Wallace tendered to the plaintiff $100 as final payment on the note. There was no interest then due, the interest having been paid as shown by indorsements made subsequent to the $2,000 indorsement. Charles Wallace did very little writing, and, when convenient, had some one write for him.

[1] 1. The court gave the following instruction:

"The jury are further instructed that if you believe from the evidence that the indorsements on said note were placed there by the deceased, Charles Wallace, or with the knowledge or consent of the deceased, Charles Wallace, then such indorsements would be evidence of such payments, and defendant would be entitled to credit for the amounts so indorsed."

Plaintiff argues that this instruction was erroneous for the reason that it made the indorsements conclusive evidence of payment, rather than prima facie evidence thereof. The instruction did not say that the indorsements were prima facie evidence of payment, nor that they were conclusive evidence thereof. The indorsements were evidence of payments, although they were not conclusive and could have been disputed. The court probably should have instructed the jury that the indorsements were prima facie evidence of payments; but the difference between the instruction as it should have been given, and as it was given, was so slight that it cannot be said that the plaintiff was prejudiced by the instruction given. Other complaints involving the same question are made concerning other instructions given or requested. It is not necessary to discuss these propositions further.

[2] 2. Complaint is made of the following instructions:

"The jury are instructed that the burden is on the plaintiff to prove, by a preponderance of all the evidence, that the defendant erased an indorsement on said note of a smaller amount and wrote in place thereof a larger amount.

"The jury are further instructed that, if you believe from the preponderance of the evidence that the defendant John Wallace erased an indorsement on said note of a smaller amount and then wrote in place thereof a larger amount, the burden of proof would then be on the defendant to prove, by a preponderance of all the evidence, that said larger amount was the true amount for which defendant was entitled to credit, or that such erasure and change were made by the direction or with the consent of said Charles Wallace."

These instructions correctly stated the rules concerning the burden of proof.

[3] 3. The plaintiff complains that defendant John Wallace was permitted to testify that he and his father had made a settlement of the note in question. The evidence complained of is as follows:

"Q. Did you at any time have any settlement with your father? A. Yes, sir."

This evidence was admitted over objection, but was afterward stricken out by the court, and the jury was instructed not to consider it. The argument is made that the instruction did not cure the error committed in admitting the evidence. The evidence was not of a character that must necessarily have produced such an impression on the minds of the jurors that they could not obey the instruction of the court. This evidence comes within the rule declared in Townsdin v. Nutt, 19 Kan. 282; State v. Fooks, 29 Kan. 425; State v. Furbeck, 29 Kan. 535; Whittaker v. Voorhees, Sheriff, 38 Kan. 71, 15 Pac. 874; Woods v. Hamilton, 39 Kan. 69, 17 Pac. 335; City of Kinsley v. Morse, 40 Kan. 577, 20 Pac. 217; State v. Blakesley, 43 Kan. 250, 252, 23 Pac. 570; Lyons v. Berlau, 67 Kan. 426, 73 Pac. 52; Insurance Co. v. Haskin, 69 Kan. 863, 77 Pac. 106; and Gulliford v. McQuillen, 75 Kan. 454, 89 Pac. 927.

[4] 4. The plaintiff complains that defendant John Wallace was permitted to testify, in substance:

"That on February 22d, while his father was in California, he paid $200 to Mr. Hawk, the banker, and that he (the appellee), at that time, indorsed on the back of the note, 'Paid on principal, two hundred dollars'; that afterwards, and about the 16th or 18th day of May, following, he and his father were in the bank; that he saw the note at that time in the bank; that he did not erase the word 'hundred' from said indorsement, but that of his own knowledge he did know who erased it; that he wrote the word 'thousand' in said indorsement where the word 'hundred' had been erased, which made the indorsement then read, 'Paid on principal, two thousand dollars'; that the first time he saw the indorsement so reading was on said date in the bank; that the only time he saw the note in the absence of his father was on the 22d of February; and that every time he saw the note after the meeting in the bank this indorsement remained on said note."

The plaintiff argues that this was testimony of personal transactions had by defendant John Wallace with his father. The testimony objected to probably goes to the limit of that which a competent witness may give, but a close examination of that testimony shows that John Wallace did not testify to any transaction or communication that he had with his father.

[5] 5. Complaint is made that defendant John Wallace was permitted to testify to a conversation had with his sister, in which conversation he detailed the transaction had with his father at the time the $2,000 was indorsed on the note. The sister, as a witness for the plaintiff, testified to the conversation between herself and John Wallace. He afterward testified concerning that conversation, giving the details thereof and contradicting his sister in a number of particulars. The plaintiff insists that the conversation testified to by the sister was a different one from that testified to by defendant John Wallace. An examination of the evidence discloses that both testified to one conversation. There was no error in permitting defendant John Wallace to detail that conversation after his sister had given her version of it. Harris v. Morrison, 100 Kan. 157, 163 Pac. 1062, and cases there cited.

[6] 6. Edith Wallace, the wife of defendant John Wallace, testified that she overheard a conversation in her home, between her husband and his father, in which she took no part. Her testimony was, in part, as follows:

"Q. What did your father-in-law say to your husband? A. He said, 'John, there is no use in your working so hard.' He said, 'You got the places clear, all but $100.'"

This evidence was objected to on the ground that the witness was incompetent to testify in respect to any transaction or communication had with Charles Wallace. Edith Wallace was a defendant in the action. The plaintiff asked for judgment against both John Wallace and Edith Wallace, although Edith Wallace had not signed either the note or the mortgage and was not liable thereon. She did not testify concerning any transaction or conversation had by her with Charles Wallace. The conversation was wholly between her husband and Charles Wallace. The testimony given by her does not come within the prohibition of the statute. Civ. Code, § 320 (Gen. St. 1915, § 7222). Under the rule announced in Sarbach v. Sarbach, 86 Kan. 894, 122 Pac. 1052, that this statute is to be strictly construed, Edith Wallace was competent to testify to the conversation beween her husband and Charles Wallace.

[7] 7. The plaintiff's last contention is that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence, but was contrary thereto. The abstract of the evidence has been examined. That abstract shows that the evidence was very conflicting. The abstract also shows that there was evidence sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury. The trial court approved the verdict and rendered judgment thereon. Under these circumstances, the verdict and judgment will not be set aside by this court.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 205)

KNOWLING v. MORRIS & CO. (No. 21284.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑398—PRESENTATION OF CLAIM FOR COMPENSATION — WAIVER—EVIDENCE.

The pleadings and agreed facts considered, and held, that presentation of a claim for compensation had not been waived or rendered unnecessary, and was a matter in issue.

Appeal from District Court, Wyandotte County.

Action by Dollie Knowling against Morris & Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and cause remanded.

Keplinger & Trickett, of Kansas City, for appellant. Brady & Henning, of Kansas City, for appellee.

BURCH, J. The action was one for compensation for the death of a workman. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff on the pleadings and a stipulation with reference to facts. The defendant appeals.

The stipulation was that the workman, an employé of the defendant, was injured in the course of his employment while icing refrigerator cars on the track of the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, adjacent to the defendant's packing plant. The workman was obliged to work on top of the cars. As he was about to step from one car to another, they were separated by employés of the railway company, without notice or warning, and the workman fell to the ground. The accident occurred on September 14, 1914, and the workman's death followed on September 24, 1914. On October 14, 1914, the plaintiff sued the railway company for damages, and that action is still pending. The present action was commenced in December, 1915. The stipulation did not refer to the subject of claim for compensation.

The petition pleaded with much particularity an oral claim for compensation. The answer, besides denying the averments of the petition, pleaded with much positiveness that no claim for compensation had ever been made. The answer further pleaded that the defendant had requested the plaintiff to present a claim for compensation, in order that the defendant might be subrogated to the rights of the plaintiff against the railway company; but that the plaintiff refused to claim or accept compensation, and in lieu thereof elected to sue the railway company for damages. Other facts were pleaded showing prejudice to the defendant because of the plaintiff's election, should she now be allowed to prosecute the action. The district court seems to have held that, because the defendant endeavored to secure presentation of a claim for compensation, liability was confessed, and hence that no claim was necessary.

Any admission of liability attending the defendant's conduct was conditioned on presentation of a claim for compensation. The defendant could waive compliance with that statutory prerequisite to recovery, but an endeavor to secure compliance with the statute was the very opposite of a waiver.

The pleaded request upon the plaintiff to make claim for compensation so that the defendant could be subrogated to her rights against the railway company was, in the absence of specific allegations to the contrary, a sufficient admission upon the record that she was entitled to claim compensation, and that the rights of the parties were governed by the Workmen's Compensation Act (Laws 1911, c. 218, as amended by Laws 1913, c. 216).

The judgment of the district court is reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 14)

EDWARD THOMPSON CO. v. FOSTER.
(No. 20419.)*

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PAYMENT 🔑62 — APPLICATION — PLEADINGS.

A controversy regarding application of payments held to be foreclosed by the pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Payment, Cent. Dig. § 151.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑671(4)—RECORD—QUESTIONS FOR REVIEW.

The record held not to present for review any question with regard to the effect upon a written contract of a contemporaneous oral agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2870.]

3. NEW TRIAL 🔑95—GROUNDS—SURPRISE—DILIGENCE.

An application for a new trial on the ground of surprise held not to have been supported by a sufficient showing of diligence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 190–194.]

Appeal from District Court, Finney County.

Action by the Edward Thompson Company against Edgar Foster. Judgment for plaintiff for the amount admitted to be due, and it appeals. Affirmed.

C. L. Marmon, of Garden City, for appellant. W. C. Pearce, of Garden City, for appellee.

MASON, J. Edward Thompson Company sued Edgar Foster, its petition setting out two causes of action, separately stated. The first was for the full purchase price of a set of law books for which the defendant had given a written order. To this a defense was interposed to the effect that the books had been sold on approval, with the privilege of returning them upon examination, which had been exercised. On this issue the defendant prevailed. The second cause of action was for the balance due on another set of books, not referred to in the written order. On this count no issue was raised except with respect to the agreed price, which was resolved in favor of the defendant, and judgment was rendered for the amount which he admitted to be due. The plaintiff appeals.

---

*Rehearing denied June 15, 1917.

No specification of errors has been made, and no specific rulings are complained of. The grounds upon which a reversal is asked seem to be substantially these: (1) Credit for the several payments that were made should have been applied to the two claims jointly, instead of wholly to that set out in the second count; (2) the rule was violated which forbids the variation of a written contract by evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement; (3) new and material evidence on the controverted matter of fact was produced at the hearing of the motion for a new trial. Of these several propositions it may be said:

[1] 1. The first count made no reference to any payments, but specifically alleged that no part of the purchase price of the books for which the written order was given had been paid. The second count alleged that there was due thereon "the sum of $72 (the purchase price) less the following credits as shown by the ledger account of both causes of action (setting out three cash items, totaling $37.50), which leaves the sum of $32.50 (apparently a miscalculation for $34.50)." The reference to the credits being shown by "the ledger account of both causes of action" had no tendency to contradict the allegations that no payments had been made on the first, and that all the payments shown were credits upon the second. Without an amendment of the pleading—and none was made or offered—there could be nothing to try with respect to the application of payments.

[2] 2. The defendant testified that at the time the written order was signed, a letter was written by the plaintiff's agent which modified its terms by giving him the privilege of returning the books after examination. The counter abstract quotes the defendant as testifying: "We entered into an agreement with the company by letter, signed by their agent, who provided that * * * the contract was not to become binding until I had time to examine the digest." This might seem to refer to an arrangement made orally by the agent. But the transcript shows the language of the witness to have been: "We entered into an agreement with the company by letter, signed by their agent, which provided," etc.—thus making it clear that the defendant relied upon a written and not an oral modification of the order which he signed, although he testified incidentally to the conversation leading up to it. No objection was made to the evidence of the talk that preceded the signing of the order, nor was any instruction asked regarding it. The modern view is that the rule which denies effect to an oral agreement, where it contradicts a written contract entered into at the same time or later, is one not merely of evidence, but of positive law (4 Wigmore on Evidence, § 2400; 3 Jones' Commentaries on Evidence, § 434, especially page 154; 21 A. & E. Encyc. of L. 1079; 17 Cyc. 570), and therefore that the failure to object to the admission of evidence of such an oral agreement does not alter the legal rights of the parties (10 R. C. L. 1018; Rochester Tumbler Works v. M. Woodbury Co., 215 Mass. 194, 102 N. E. 438; Pitcairn v. Philip Hiss Co., 125 Fed. 110, 61 C. C. A. 657; Dollar v. International Banking Corporation, 13 Cal. App. 331, 109 Pac. 499; Piretti v. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co., 120 N. Y. Supp. 782; Loomis v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 203 N. Y. 359, 96 N. E. 748, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 928; Lock v. Citizens' National Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 165 S. W. 536), although there are earlier cases to the contrary (8 Encyc. of P. & P. 234, and 2 Supplement, 353; see, also, Brady v. Nally, 151 N. Y. 258, 45 N. E. 547). As suggested in the case last cited parties to litigation may of course by their voluntary act deprive themselves of the benefit of any rule of law, except when the interests of the public might thereby suffer. A deliberate purpose, to waive the rule as to the binding force of a written contract is hardly inferable from a mere omission to object to evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement, which under the law could not affect it. But here there is no reason to suppose that the jury found for the defendant on the theory that the written order was modified by the agent's talk. His testimony was that the additional agreement was itself reduced to writing and signed, and the fair presumption is that the jury accepted his version of the transaction throughout. The abstract through an obvious clerical error quotes an instruction as saying:

> "If you find that the contract was all in writing, as claimed by the plaintiff, the plaintiff will be entitled to recover the sum of $112 on the first cause of action."

This would indicate that the jury in deciding for the defendant must necessarily have found that the contract was not all in writing, and therefore must have given effect to an oral agreement. But the original record shows that the instruction as given read: "If you find that the contract was all in writing, and as claimed by the plaintiff," etc. Even if the instruction as a whole permitted a verdict for the defendant on the strength of an oral agreement, the plaintiff is not in a position to ask a reversal on that ground, for no objection to it in any form is shown, the motion for a new trial not referring to it specifically or covering it by any general reference.

[3] 3. The motion for a new trial alleged that the plaintiff was surprised at the evidence of the writing of a letter modifying the written order, but the answer pleaded a modification, and to have been effective it must have been in writing. Moreover, no evidence that such a letter was not written was produced until the motion for a new trial had been overruled. On a motion to reconsider the ruling (filed over a month later) an affidavit of the plaintiff's agent was filed, denying the writing of the letter. This was of course too late to be effective, but in any event the plaintiff did not show such diligence as to entitle it to a new trial. The evidence regarding the contents of the letter went in without objection. Although doubtless it could have been excluded in the absence of a showing of a due demand under the statute for the production of the letter. Hull v. Allen, 84 Kan. 207, 210, 113 Pac. 1050. No request was made for a continuance to enable the plaintiff to meet this evidence, and having taken its chances with the jury as the matter stood, without objection, it is not in a position to demand a further opportunity for a trial of the facts.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 100)

COLORADO SAV. BANK v. BALES.

(No. 20888.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MORTGAGES 🔑282(2) — CONVEYANCE — GRANTEE'S LIABILITY TO MORTGAGEE.

A grantee who, in a deed, assumes and agrees to pay a mortgage on the land conveyed, is not personally liable to the mortgagee unless the grantor in that deed is liable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 752.]

2. NEW TRIAL 🔑100—GROUND—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Under the circumstances set out in the opinion, a new trial should have been granted in this case on payment of costs.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 183, 201-204, 208, 209.]

West and Marshall, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from District Court, Greenwood County.

Action by the Colorado Savings Bank against W. S. Bales. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and a new trial granted on condition that plaintiff pay all the costs.

Howard J. Hodgson, of Eureka, for appellant. O. C. Zwicker, of Eureka, for appellee.

MARSHALL, J. In this action, the plaintiff sought to recover on the defendant's agreement in a deed to pay a mortgage on the property conveyed. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff appeals.

The plaintiff's evidence established that W. H. Barber executed to the Ramey-Udlock Investment Company a mortgage on certain real property in Colorado, to secure the payment of a $3,500 note; that Barber conveyed the land to Clarence W. McCrillus; that McCrillus conveyed the land to the defendant, W. S. Bales; and that the deed from McCrillus to the defendant contained the following provision:

> "Except deed of trust recorded in Book 150 at page 472, Mesa County Recorder, of which $500 has been paid.' Balance of $3,000 party of second part assumes and agrees to pay with interest from Jan. 1, 1914."

There was no evidence to show that McCrillus had assumed, or in any way agreed to pay, the mortgage. The court sustained a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence.

[1] 1. The first question for consideration is: Did the words contained in the deed to the defendant bind him for the payment of the mortgage debt, in the absence of any showing that McCrillus, Bales' grantor, was under any legal obligation to pay that debt? That question has not been answered by this court. In Stephenson v. Elliott, 53 Kan. 550, 36 Pac. 980, Gowans v. Pierce, 57 Kan. 180, 45 Pac. 586, and Hendricks v. Brooks, 80 Kan. 1, 101 Pac. 622, 133 Am. St. Rep. 186, this court said, in substance, that where the grantee, as a part of the consideration for the conveyance of a tract of land accepts a deed which provides that he assumes and agrees to pay a mortgage indebtedness on the land, he becomes personally liable for the payment of the indebtedness. In each of these cases, the grantor in the deed was himself personally liable. In New England Trust Co. v. Nash, 5 Kan. App. 739, 46 Pac. 987, the Court of Appeals said:

> "The liability of a grantee who assumes the payment of a mortgage on land conveyed to him depends upon the personal liability of his immediate grantor. If the grantor is not so liable, the mortgagee cannot claim any deficiency from such grantee." Syl. par. 2.

A petition was filed in the Supreme Court to have the judgment of the Court of Appeals reviewed. That petition was denied. Under the practice as it then existed, that denial was practically an affirmance of the judgment of the Court of Appeals. See, also, Morris v. Mix, 4 Kan. App. 654, 46 Pac. 58; Lockrow v. Cline, 4 Kan. App. 716, 724, 46 Pac. 720; and Anthony v. Mott, 10 Kan. App. 105, 61 Pac. 509. Notes on the question under discussion are found in 8 L. R. A. 315; 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 492; 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 151; and 2 Jones on Mortgages (7th Ed.) p. 760.

From these notes, the conclusion must be drawn that the weight of authority is against liability on the part of the grantee in a deed where the grantor therein is not personally liable. In the note found in 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 492, the author uses this language:

> "In those states which refer the liability of the grantee to the doctrine that the promise is collateral security which by subrogation inures to the benefit of the mortgagee, the promise is held to render the grantee the principal and the grantor the surety for the debt; the promise being to indemnify the latter in case he has to pay the debt. It necessarily follows that where this theory prevails, if the grantor is not himself liable, no liability can attach to the grantee, and it is so held in very many cases."

In Stove Works v. Caswell, 48 Kan. 689, 29 Pac. 1072, this court said:

> "Where property is sold, and the purchaser agrees to pay the consideration therefor, or a portion thereof, to a creditor of the vendor, the purchaser, as between himself and the vendor, becomes the principal debtor, and the vendor only a surety." Syl.

See, also, Bowling v. Garrett, 49 Kan. 504, 520, 31 Pac. 135, 33 Am. St. Rep. 377; Mulvane v. Sedgley, 63 Kan. 105, 64 Pac. 1038, 55 L. R. A. 552; Fisher v. Spillman, 85 Kan. 552, 118 Pac. 65; Bank v. Livermore, 90 Kan. 395, 402, 133 Pac. 734; Morlan v. Loch, 95 Kan. 716, 149 Pac. 431; and McAndrew v. Sowell, 100 Kan. 47, 163 Pac. 653.

It follows that the question with which this discussion was commenced must be answered in the negative.

[2] 2. One of the grounds of the motion for a new trial filed by the plaintiff was:

> "Newly discovered evidence material for the plaintiff, which could not, with reasonable diligence, have been discovered and produced on the trial."

An affidavit of F. P. Evans, the plaintiff's cashier, was produced at the hearing of the motion. This affidavit showed that, when Evans looked through the papers pertaining to this loan, he overlooked the fact that McCrillus had executed an extension agreement. The affidavit further showed that McCrillus had entered into an agreement for the extension of this loan, and, in the extension agreement, had agreed to pay the mortgage debt with the interest thereon; that this agreement was made with the plaintiff as agent for the legal holders of the mortgage; and that, after judgment had been rendered, Evans again made a search through the papers pertaining to the loan, found the extension agreement, and immediately wrote to plaintiff's attorney, Howard J. Hodgson, and sent the extension agreement to him. The motion for a new trial was denied. Under the decisions of this court above cited, if an extension agreement had been introduced on the trial and that agreement had shown that McCrillus had agreed to pay the mortgage debt, then the assumption of that debt by the defendant, in the deed from McCrillus to him, would have been a valid and binding obligation on the part of Bales, and judgment should have been rendered in favor of the plaintiff. Under these circumstances, in order to prevent a failure of justice, a new trial should have been granted—not, however, without the imposition of terms.

The judgment is reversed, and a new trial is granted on condition that the plaintiff pay all the costs of the action up to and including the hearing of the motion for a new trial.

JOHNSTON, C. J., and BURCH, MASON, PORTER, and DAWSON, JJ., concurring.

WEST and MARSHALL, JJ. (dissenting). The decision of this court is in contravention of section 305 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Gen. St. 1915, § 7205). The showing on the motion for a new trial disclosed that the plaintiff was negligent, and not reasonably diligent.

(101 Kan. 170)

LAGNEAU v. BOURCE et al. (No. 20930.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1010(1)—NEW TRIAL 🔑105—FINDINGS OF FACT—IMPEACHING EVIDENCE.

Rules followed that findings of fact supported by the evidence must stand, and that usually new trials will not be granted for newly discovered evidence which is at most only impeaching.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3979–3981, 4024; New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 183, 221–223, 229.]

Appeal from District Court, Cherokee County.

Action by Felix Lagneau against Arthur Bource and others. Judgment for defendants on a cross-petition, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. A. McNeill, of Columbus, and Maurice McNeill, of Kansas City, Mo., for appellant. A. L. Majors and Al. F. Williams, both of Columbus, for appellees.

WEST, J. The plaintiff sued to recover $100 damages for failure to satisfy a mortgage, for cancellation, to quiet title, and to recover attorney's fee, all arising out of an alleged failure to satisfy a deed taken as security for a $525 loan which the plaintiff claimed had been paid. The defendant denied payment, and on his cross-petition recovered judgment for the full amount of the loan. The plaintiff appeals.

The case was tried by the court, the evidence was conflicting, and there was enough to support the findings of fact and conclusions of law which were against the plaintiff. The chief complaint is of the refusal to grant a new trial for newly discovered evidence. The plaintiff testified that he got the money to repay the loan from his father, and paid it to the defendant between 7 and 8 o'clock in the evening; that he went down with his wife to pay him; that the defendant, his father-in-law, procured the money to make the loan from August Ovine, who was paid on the day the defendant was paid; that when the payment was made himself and wife, defendant and wife, and Ovine were all in the house; that he paid the $500 in $20 bills, interest in a $10 bill and a $1 bill. The plaintiff's father testified that he loaned the son $500 on the 22d day of December, all the family being present. Two brothers testified that they saw the father hand $500 to the son. The defendant swore that the money belonging to the plaintiff was borrowed partly from Ovine and partly from a brother; that he paid Ovine in two $200 payments, and had receipts therefor, which he produced. He denied any payment by the plaintiff. Plaintiff's wife testified that she never saw him give her father any money; that she was not living with her husband at the time of the trial. The defendant's wife denied the payment, and testified to knowing that her husband paid back the money to Ovine, and that the money they paid Ovine came from the sale of cattle, $188.90, and the work of three men; that the cattle were sold in 1913 to Mr. Beltram; that they sold stock and pigs to him.

On a motion for new trial an affidavit of Mr. Beltram was offered to the effect that the only sum ever paid him by defendant or his wife in the year 1913 was $35 for one black cow. Mrs. Beltram made an affidavit covering the same matter, and also told of an attempt of defendant's wife to try to induce Mr. Beltram to say that he had paid her about $40 for produce. The affidavit of two witnesses was tendered to the effect that in the spring of 1914 they were visiting at the home of the plaintiff when his wife, in speaking of the home, said it was very nice, "but we owe Mr. Lagnau, Felix's father, $500 borrowed money, or that in substance." The theory of the plaintiff seems to be that his wife became alienated from him and undertook to help her parents swear the case through for them.

The affidavits present nothing which would necessarily work a different result with another jury, and nothing which is more than to some extent impeaching. They were presented to the trial court, which had full cognizance of the entire situation, and deemed them insufficient to require a new trial, and it cannot be held that its ruling in this respect was an abuse of discretion. See Pittman Co. v. Hayes, 98 Kan. 273, 157 Pac. 1193, and cases cited on page 278, and Pasho v. Blitz, 99 Kan. 421, 162 Pac. 1161.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 130)

JINNINGS v. AMEND et al. (No. 20900.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑329—FARM LEASE—CONVICTION OF TENANT—RESCISSION.

Where a written contract in the form of a three-year lease of farm land provides that the lessee shall reside upon it and cultivate it in a good and careful manner, raising wheat and delivering one-third of the crop to the lessor, and the lessee, after doing considerable work on the place, but before sowing any wheat, is arrested on a charge of having committed a felony, and on conviction imprisoned in the county jail for about six months, the lessor is entitled to rescind the contract and take and retain possession of the land, notwithstanding the contract contains no provision giving a right of forfeiture or re-entry for any fault of the lessee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1364–1366.]

Appeal from District Court, Gray County.

Action of forcible entry and detainer by T. M. Jinnings against W. A. Amend and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, and cause remanded.

Osmond & Cole, of Great Bend, and John Harper, of Cimarron, for appellants. Edgar Foster, of Dodge City, for appellee.

MASON, J. W. A. and E. R. Amend, residents of Great Bend, were the owners of 960 acres of land in Gray county. In February, 1915, they entered into a written agreement with T. M. Jinnings, providing that he was to occupy and farm it for three years, one-third of the crop (wheat) to go to the owners. The contract also provided for his breaking out 500 acres of new land the first year and raising a wheat crop thereon for the benefit of the owners, to be paid in cash for his services in this connection. By September 28, 1915, Jinnings had broken the 500 acres of sod and plowed 400 acres of cultivated land, but had not sowed any wheat. On that day he was arrested, charged with a felony. He was held in custody until the October term of the district court, when he was convicted and sentenced to serve six months in the county jail. He appears not to have attempted to make any arrangement for the carrying on of the work, and to have been out of funds and credit. He remained in jail until about March 1, 1916, when he was paroled. Within a day or two after the arrest the Amends took possession of the land, which they have ever since retained. Upon the parole of Jinnings they told him that they would not permit him to return to the premises. On April 11, 1916, he brought an action of forcible entry and detainer against them, joining as a defendant John Ratzloff, to whom they had given a lease. By the consent of the parties the case was transferred to the district court under an agreement that all the matters in controversy should be determined in one action. A referee heard the evidence and made detailed findings covering all transactions connected with the land contract. Judgment was rendered, awarding the plaintiff possession of the land, and requiring him to pay $1,859.10, the amount found due the Amends on an accounting. The defendants appeal.

The plaintiff invokes the rule that, in the absence of an express provision on the subject in the lease, a lessor cannot terminate the tenancy on account of a breach of covenants by the lessee. 18 A. & E. Encyc. of L. 369, 370; 24 Cyc. 1349; 24 Cyc. 1392; 16 R. C. L. 969; 16 R. C. L. 1115. He contends that the written contract was a lease, creating the ordinary relation of landlord and tenant, and that, inasmuch as it contained no provision for a forfeiture no failure to perform the agreements on his part could give the defendants a right of re-entry. The defendants maintain that, if the contract was a lease at all, it was not an ordinary one; that it was more in the nature of a "cropper's" agreement for the cultivation of land on shares, and that an essential part of it was the plaintiff's undertaking to perform personal services; that when, by his own misconduct, he was disabled from carrying out a material part of the agreement he had undertaken, they were at liberty to rescind the contract, settling with him on an equitable basis for what he had already done.

The contract used language appropriate to a lease; it purported to create a tenancy for three years. That consideration, however, is not necessarily controlling, as the effect of the instrument is to be determined from its real intent, as gathered from its entire contents, regardless of the technical words used. 16 R. C. L. 584. It included clauses reserving a right to the owners to go upon the place at all times, requiring the plaintiff to pay the defendants one-third of any receipts for pasturing cattle on the wheat, and providing for a delivery of possession in case of a sale, compensation to be made for the growing crop. We do not consider it necessary to decide what expression most fitly describes the relationship into which the parties entered. There is nothing peculiar about a lease that takes it out of the operation of the rules of fair dealing that govern in other contractual relations. Here the essence of the arrangement was that the defendants were to furnish the land and certain implements, material, and money, and the plaintiff was to furnish his care, skill, and labor, and the proceeds were to be divided. Although the contract may be said to have created an estate in the land, it was essentially executory; its provisions were mutually dependent. The plaintiff was not in control of the land, to use it at his pleasure. He was bound to handle it in a stated way, and to perform certain acts with regard to it, and these obligations were as important as any other part of the contract. His personal services were engaged; his skill as a farmer was involved; he had no power of substitution or subletting. See, in this connection, Randall v. Chubb, 46 Mich. 311, 9 N. W. 429, 41 Am. Rep. 165, and Myer v. Roberts, 50 Or. 81, 89 Pac. 1051, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 194, 126 Am. St. Rep. 733, 15 Ann. Cas. 1031. Notwithstanding the absence of any reference in the contract to a right of re-entry, it cannot be doubted that if he had completely abandoned the place, or had utterly refused compliance with the agreement, the owners would not have been required to permit the land to remain idle for several years. A clause of the agreement gave them a right to furnish additional help in the management of the farm, at the charge of the plaintiff, if thought by them to be necessary. But this cannot be regarded as an exclusive remedy. It is not adapted to such a situation as that suggested; nor were the defendants bound to pursue it.

The matter to be determined is the effect upon the relations of the parties of the plaintiff having been arrested, convicted, and confined. There seems to be a dearth of cases bearing upon that question. In Leopold v. Salkey, 89 Ill. 412, annotated in 31 Am. Rep. 100, an employer was held to have the right to discharge an employé who had been hired for a fixed period, because of his being arrested and held in custody for two weeks. That contract was perhaps not closely analogous to the one now under consideration. Moreover, the loss of time was treated as one for which the person arrested was not to blame, so that the principle applied would not be particularly helpful here. The gravity of the charge of which the plaintiff was convicted indicates that it implied moral turpitude. While the doctrine of res judicata has no application, we must act upon the theory that the conviction was rightful. It cannot be assumed that a miscarriage of justice occurred, nor could an inquiry into that matter be permitted, where it is collaterally involved in civil litigation. Burt v. Union Central Life Insurance Co., 187 U. S. 362, 23 Sup. Ct. 139, 47 L. Ed. 216. This situation is therefore presented: The plaintiff, having obtained possession of the land under a three-year contract, a material part of the consideration being that he should put in a wheat crop in the fall of 1915, was disabled to perform his agreement in that respect (as well as in some others) by reason of his having committed a crime. The disability was self-imposed. He was entitled to no more favorable treatment than if he had purposely interposed an insurmountable obstacle to the carrying out of the contract, or had abandoned or repudiated it.

> "Where one of the parties to a contract, before the time for performance arrives, has placed himself, by his voluntary act or conduct, in such a situation that he is unable to fulfill his part of the agreement, it may be treated as an anticipatory breach of the contract, or as a case of impossibility of performance subsequently arising; and in either view the other party to the contract may thereupon rescind it, and recover whatever consideration he may have given under it, or treat it as abandoned, and sue at once for such damages as he may have sustained. The inability to perform need not relate to the whole and every part of the contract, but it must exist with reference to some substantial particular, going to the very essence of the contract and defeating its main purpose and object, or to a part so essential to the residue of the contract that it cannot reasonably be supposed that the other party would have made the contract without it." 1 Black on Rescission and Cancellation, § 210.

The right of the plaintiff to occupy the land for three years was expressly granted in consideration of his personal occupancy and services. By fair implication it was conditioned upon his being able to comply with that requirement—at least upon his not voluntarily divesting himself of such ability. His enforced withdrawal from active life was not within the contemplation of the parties to the contract. There was practically a destruction of an important part of the subject-matter of the contract. The fact that the defendants were willing to agree that the plaintiff should have the right to occupy the farm for three years, assuming that he was to remain a free agent, affords no presumption that they would have been willing to grant him that privilege if he was to be imprisoned for a considerable part of the time. No question of forfeiture, strictly so called, is involved. We think the defendants were entitled to rescind the contract by reason of the plaintiff having disabled himself from performing a material part of his agreement —a part going to the very foundation of the contract, without which it presumably would not have been entered into, that their conduct amounted to an enforcement of this right, that they should be allowed to retain possession of the land, and that the plaintiff should be compensated on an equitable basis for the services performed and expenditures incurred by him prior to his arrest.

The findings of fact, made by the referee and approved by the court, need not be disturbed; but, as the accounting was made upon the theory that the plaintiff would be restored to possession, a readjustment will be necessary.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance herewith. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 62)

STATE v. BURTON. (No. 20708.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917. On Petition for Rehearing, June 22, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES 🔑233 — SALE BY MORTGAGOR—PROSECUTION—DEFENSES—EVIDENCE.

In the prosecution of a mortgagor under section 6513, General Statutes of 1915, for selling property covered by chattel mortgage without written consent of the mortgagee, proof of oral consent of the mortgagee to the sale is not sufficient to defeat the action, but such proof may be admitted, as bearing upon the question whether or not the sale was made for the purpose of defrauding the mortgagee.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 494.]

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES 🔑233 — SALE OF MORTGAGED PROPERTY—PROSECUTION—EVIDENCE.

Proof that the bill of sale by which the mortgagor disposed of the property recited that it was sold subject to the mortgage is not sufficient to defeat the action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 494.]

3. CHATTEL MORTGAGES 🔑233 — SALE BY MORTGAGOR—PROSECUTION.

Assignments of error involving consideration of the sufficiency of evidence examined, and held to be unsubstantial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Chattel Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 494.]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑543(2) — ABSENT WITNESS—TESTIMONY AT PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.

In a criminal prosecution, the reading of testimony at preliminary examination given by witness not present at the trial was proper, where the state showed that his whereabouts was unknown and could not be ascertained after diligent search.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1233, 1236.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑410—ADMISSION—AGENT.

In prosecution of mortgagor under Gen. St. 1915, § 6513, for selling property covered by chattel mortgage without mortgagee's written consent, evidence of statement of mortgagee's alleged agent was properly excluded, where there was no proof of agency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 897, 1254.]

Appeal from District Court, Sedgwick County.

E. C. Burton was convicted of selling personal property covered by chattel mortgage, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Adams & Matson, of Wichita, for appellant. S. M. Brewster, Atty. Gen., Ross McCormick and Glenn Porter, both of Wichita, and H. O. Caster, of Topeka, for the State.

BURCH, J. The defendant was convicted of selling personal property covered by chattel mortgage, and appeals.

[4] Testimony given at the preliminary examination by a witness who was not present at the trial was read to the jury. It is said the testimony was improperly admitted because the state did not show that the witness was beyond the jurisdiction of the court and did not show reasonable diligence to procure the attendance of the witness. It was sufficient for the state to prove that the whereabouts of the witness was unknown and could not be ascertained after diligent search. State v. Stewart, 85 Kan. 404, 116 Pac. 489; State v. Chadwell, 94 Kan. 302, 146 Pac. 420. The implied finding of the trial court that due diligence had been used to discover and produce the witness is approved.

[5] Complaint is made that evidence was rejected of statements material to the case made by one who, it is claimed, was the agent of the mortgagee. The evidence was properly excluded because there was no proof of agency.

[3] The defendant claims that the prosecution was barred by the two-year statute of limitations. The subject was presented to the jury by very full and clear instructions. The several questions of fact involved depended for their solution upon the credence and weight to be given to oral testimony. Probably little of the defendant's evidence was believed, and, if so, the verdict of the jury was well sustained.

[1, 2] The statute under which the defendant was convicted provides that any mortgagor of personal property who shall sell or dispose of such property without written consent of the mortgagee shall be guilty of larceny, and shall be punished for petit larceny or for grand larceny according to the value of the property. Gen. Stat. 1915, § 6513. The defendant claims immunity from punishment because the bill of sale by which he disposed of the property recited that it was sold subject to the mortgage. The chattel mortgage contained no stipulation that the legal title to the property should not vest in the mortgagee. Gen. Stat. 1915, § 6501. Consequently any sale the mortgagor might make would necessarily be subject to the mortgage. The statute contains no exemption from liability such as the defendant proposes, and the court cannot interpolate one. If such an exemption were allowed, a sale subject to the mortgage to a confederate who dissipated the property, as occurred in this case, would make waste paper of the statute.

The defendant produced testimony which the court admitted, that oral consent of the mortgagee to sell the property was given at the time the mortgage was made. The defendant claims such consent was sufficient to relieve him from liability. The statute requires written consent of the mortgagee, and the court properly instructed the jury that the defendant was not justified in selling or disposing of the property without that kind of consent. The statute is of course a statute to circumvent fraud. Formerly it provided merely that any mortgagor of personal property who should sell or dispose of such property for the purpose of defrauding the mortgagee should be guilty of a misdemeanor. Deeming the statute insufficient to accomplish the purpose for which it was designed, the Legislature at its session in 1897 inserted the provision relating to written consent of the mortgagee, and made the crime of selling or disposing of the property without such consent larceny. Laws 1897, c. 161. Since then the statute has been further improved. The provision relating to written consent of the mortgagee was designed to check the commission of perjury in aid of fraud, and cannot be disregarded in criminal cases.

The court instructed the jury that it was essential the sale charged should have been made with intent to defraud the mortgagee, and further instructed the jury as follows:

> "Evidence has been introduced for the purpose of showing that the mortgagee orally consented to the defendant's selling or disposing of the mortgaged property. While such evidence as to oral consent is not competent as showing that an oral consent could take the place of a written consent and that the requirement of the statute that the consent should be written would be satisfied by an oral consent, still such evidence is permitted by the court to be introduced solely for the purpose of bearing upon the question as to whether or not, in selling or disposing of the mortgaged property, the defendant intended to defraud the mortgagee. If the mortgagee orally consented to a sale or disposition of the mortgaged property, then you should consider this circumstance in determining whether or not the defendant, in selling or disposing of the mortgaged property, intended to defraud the mortgagee."

These instructions were correct, and gave the defendant all the benefit of his testimony which the law allows.

The defendant cites two decisions of the Supreme Court of Iowa interpreting the criminal statute of that state, which the defendant says is similar to the statute of this state. The Iowa statute is distinctly unlike the statute of this state, in that consent of the mortgagee is not restricted to written consent. 2 Revised Code of Iowa 1880, § 3895. In the case of Walker v. Camp, 69 Iowa, 741, 27 N. W. 800, cited by the defendant, it was held that the rule excluding parol evidence to vary the terms of a written contract did not preclude evidence of oral consent of the mortgagee to a sale of the mortgaged property, given at the time the mortgage was made. The reason given was that a seller of mortgaged property is not to be convicted without a criminal intent, and if because of the mortgagee's consent the seller believe he has the right to sell, his honest act cannot be converted into a crime by the parol evidence rule. In the case of Tootle, Hosea & Co. v. Taylor et al., Garnishees, 64 Iowa, 629, 21 N. W. 115, cited by the defendant, the court said:

> "A subsequent mortgage or sale of the property is not declared void, for the reason, we may suppose, that the mortgagor has an equity of redemption which he may sell, and, if he may do this, we see no reason why he may not execute a mortgage which will cover such interest. If the statute is literally construed, he would be liable to the penalty, although he sold the property for the express purpose of paying the debt, if the sale was made without the consent of the mortgagor; and this is true, even if he tendered the money in payment of the debt. Such cannot be the true construction of the statute. Under it, the mortgagor may fully use and control the property, provided he does not impair the security of the mortgagee." 64 Iowa, 632, 21 N. W. 116.

The case was a civil case. The matter decided was the legal effect of the second mortgage. Considering the decision, however, as interpreting the statute for criminal as well as civil cases, it means no more than that a mortgagor should not be regarded as guilty of larceny in disposing of mortgaged property without the mortgagee's consent unless the transaction be fraudulent. The result is, the Iowa decisions, so far as they are applicable at all, are not in conflict with the views which have been expressed.

The judgment of the district court is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. A petition for a rehearing has been filed containing the following statements:

> "That the court, in rendering an opinion in this action, has apparently overlooked one of the main points, if not the main point and chief defense, to wit:
>
> " 'That the statutes of limitations had run in favor of the appellant prior to the time of his arrest.'
>
> "That as the court in their opinion made no mention of that portion of the case hereinabove described, said appellant believes that the court in arriving at its decision may have overlooked a very important part of the case."

The subject referred to was fully treated in the fourth paragraph of the opinion, beginning near the bottom of page 1 of the typewritten copy.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

(101 Kan. 179)

DONDELINGER v. DONDELINGER.

(No. 21113.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟹281—SEPARATION AGREEMENT—AMOUNT.

The evidence considered, and held sufficient to sustain the judgment denying a divorce to either party, and refusing to set aside a property agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1061.]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. DIVORCE ⟹184(4)—APPEAL—PRESUMPTION—EVIDENCE.

In a husband's action for divorce, with answer praying for a divorce and for the cancellation of a contract relating to property rights, the presumption was that, if any improper testimony was admitted, the court disregarded it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 570.]

Appeal from District Court, Kingman County.

Action for divorce by George Dondelinger against Sarah E. Dondelinger, on ground of abandonment, with answer praying for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, and for cancellation of a contract relating to property rights. Relief denied both parties, and both appeal. Affirmed.

Carr W. Taylor, of Hutchinson, and Walter & Connaughton, of Kingman, for appellant. Charles C. Calkin and J. Q. Jenkins, both of Kingman, for appellee.

BURCH, J. The action was one for a divorce on the ground of abandonment. The answer prayed for a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, and for cancellation of a contract relating to property rights. Relief was denied both parties, and both appeal.

On the plaintiff's side it is said that he was denied a divorce because he did not seek the defendant's return after her final departure. There were no special findings, and there was some evidence that the plaintiff was as much responsible for his wife's leaving as she was.

[1, 2] On the defendant's side it is said that a former attorney for the defendant was allowed to testify to privileged matter. A careful scrutiny of the transcript fails to disclose any improper testimony, and if improper testimony had been admitted, the presumption would be that the court disregarded it.

The defendant says the contract was not freely and fairly and understandingly entered into on her part. There was abundant evidence to the contrary. It is further said that the amount which the plaintiff contracted to pay the defendant was not sufficient. This is not a ground of error. The question is whether or not the judgment of the trial court is so manifestly unjust as to shock the conscience.

The parties were married in January, 1914. In July of the same year the defendant left the plaintiff, and he agreed to pay her $1,000 in installments. Some six weeks later she returned, and they lived turbulently together until January 6, 1915, when she again went away. Two hundred dollars had been paid on the previous contract, and it was in effect renewed for the remainder of the amount. One of the defendant's witnesses valued the plaintiff's property, consisting of real estate, by tracts, at the aggregate sum of $7,440. The property was subject to a mortgage of $3,650, so that its net value was $3,790. Under the circumstances no abuse of discretion in refusing to abrogate the contract appears.

The judgment of the district court is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(23 N. M. 26)

STATE v. DICKENS. (No. 1919.)

(Supreme Court of New Mexico. July 31, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Homicide 🔑116(5)—Self-Defense—Belief as to Imminent Danger—Reasonableness.

The standard by which the jury must determine the reasonableness of belief of accused that danger is so apparently imminent that he must act in self-defense is that of an ordinary person of firmness, reason, and prudence, not that such question should be determined from the standpoint of the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 162.]

2. Homicide 🔑297 — Justification — Provoking Words—Instruction.

Where, immediately after slaying deceased, defendant justified his act upon the ground that deceased had used insulting language toward him, an instruction to the effect that provocation by words or mere threats or the use of abusive language by the deceased to or concerning the defendant cannot justify or excuse the taking of human life was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 611.]

3. Homicide 🔑290—Instruction — Definition of Terms.

It is not error for the court in instructing the jury to define a deadly weapon in the terms of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 595.]

4. Criminal Law 🔑824(11) — Defendant's Right to Testify—Instruction.

Where a defendant testifies as a witness in his own behalf, if he desires an instruction to the effect that the statute makes him a competent witness, it is his duty to prepare such an instruction and tender it to the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1999.]

5. Criminal Law 🔑829(1)—Given Instructions—Cumulative Instructions.

Courts are not bound to give instructions which, even if correct, are merely cumulative and state in another form a proposition of law already given to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011.]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

6. Homicide 🔑308(3) — Murder in Second Degree—Evidence—Instruction.

Where there was testimony that defendant walked over to where deceased was standing, took up a heavy instrument, and struck deceased on the side of the head, without any previous threatening act or move on the part of deceased, an instruction as to the law of murder in the second degree was warranted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 644.]

Appeal from District Court, Curry County; McClure, Judge.

Thomas Marion Dickens was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Patton & Bratton, of Clovis, for appellant. H. S. Bowman, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ROBERTS, J. [1] Appellant was convicted of murder in the second degree, and the first point upon which he relies for a reversal is alleged error in instruction No. 14 given by the court of its own motion. This instruction dealt with the law of self-defense and made the standard of the defendant that of a reasonably courageous and prudent man. Appellant contends that the test to be applied as to appearance of danger is not whether or not the danger would have been apparent to a reasonable man, but was it reasonably apparent to the defendant?

The prevailing rule in the United States is that the apprehension of danger and belief which will justify killing in self-defense must be a reasonable apprehension and belief, such as a reasonable man of courage or a reasonably courageous man would, under the circumstances, have entertained. The same question was before the court in the recent case of State v. Chesher, 161 Pac. 1108, and the court there held that:

> "The standard by which the jury must determine the reasonableness of belief of accused that danger is so apparently imminent that he must act in self-defense is that of an ordinary person of firmness, reason, and prudence, not that such question should be determined from the standpoint of the accused."

[2, 3] It is next urged that there was no evidence justifying the giving of instruction No. 17, which reads as follows:

> "You are instructed that provocation by words or mere threats or the use of threatening or abusive language by the deceased to or concerning the accused, however insulting or aggravating the same might have been, cannot justify or excuse the taking of human life."

This argument is based upon the fact that the defendant upon the stand denied that there had been provocation by words or threats or the use of abusive or threatening language by the deceased, and that the defendant did not base his right of self-defense upon the use of words or threats. The evidence shows, however, that immediately after the killing defendant gave as a justification for his act the fact that the deceased had called him a son of a bitch. No error was committed in giving this instruction under the evidence in the case. Objection is also made to the giving of instruction No. 11, which defined a "deadly weapon." This instruction defined the term "deadly weapon" in almost the identical language of section 1707, Code 1915; hence is not subject to criticism.

[6] The court instructed the jury as to the law of murder in the second degree. This action of the court is assigned as error upon the assumption that there was no evidence in the record to sustain a verdict of murder in the second degree. The record, however, amply justifies the action of the court in so instructing. The testimony of the witness McFarland to the effect that he saw the defendant walk over to the place where the deceased was standing and pick up the flatter, a heavy instrument of iron with a wooden handle, with which the deceased was killed, and strike him on the side of the head with this instrument, felling him to the ground, without any prior threatening act or move on the part of the deceased, furnished sufficient evidence alone to sustain the verdict of murder in the second degree and justified the giving of the instructions in question. Hence there is no merit in this contention.

[4] The court did not give the customary instruction relative to the defendant's right to testify in his own behalf. This failure of the court is assigned as error. The court, however, fully instructed the jury upon the subject of the credibility of witnesses, and the defendant testified as a witness in his own behalf. The failure of the court to instruct further upon the subject as to the competency of the defendant as a witness was more favorable to defendant than otherwise; hence he cannot complain in this regard. Further, if the defendant desired such an instruction, it was his duty to prepare and tender it to the court. Territory v. Gonzales, 11 N. M. 301, 68 Pac. 925; State v. Padilla, 18 N. M. 573, 139 Pac. 143.

[5] Complaint is also made of the refusal of the court to give requested instructions Nos. 1 and 4, relative to burden of proof. The court in its instructions given to the jury fully and fairly stated the law upon this subject; hence no error was committed in refusing to give the requested instructions. In the case of State v. Bellsle, 161 Pac. 168, it is said:

> "Courts are not bound to give instructions which, even if correct, are merely cumulative, and state in another form a proposition of law already given to the jury."

Finding no error in the record, the judgment of the lower court will be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

PARKER, J., concurs.

HANNA, C. J. (specially concurring). I find it necessary to agree with the result in the majority opinion, but cannot agree with a statement therein contained to the effect that the testimony of the witness McFarland that he saw the defendant walk over to the place where the deceased was standing and pick up the flatter, a heavy instrument of iron with a wooden handle with which the deceased was killed, and strike him on the side of the head with this instrument, felling him to the ground, without any prior act or move on the part of the deceased, furnished sufficient evidence alone to sustain the verdict of murder in the second degree and justified the giving of the instruction as to murder in the second degree. The testimony of the witness McFarland as a whole does not justify the statement quoted. It is true he made substantially the statement referred to, but on cross-examination I find he qualified his testimony to such an extent as to render it valueless in this respect. For example, he said that he was not paying any particular attention to the actions or movements of the men, and did not take any particular notice of just what they were doing at the time of the trouble; that there was considerable noise going on in the blacksmith shop, and if the deceased and accused had been carrying on any conversation he could not have heard it.

I agree in the result and in the correctness of this particular instruction, however, upon the ground that mere language, however opprobrious or indecent, is not deemed sufficient to arouse ungovernable passion, and thereby reduce a homicide from murder to manslaughter. 13 R. C. L. 795.

(23 N. M. 532)

CRAIG v. HENNING et al. (No. 2072.)

(Supreme Court of New Mexico. Aug. 1, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑515(2)—RECORDS—STENOGRAPHER'S TRANSCRIBED NOTES.

The transcribed notes of the stenographer in an equitable action, upon the trial of which issues are submitted to the jury for determination, can only be made a part of the record by being incorporated into a bill of exceptions, under the provisions of section 4495, Code 1915.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2323.]

Appeal from District Court, Chaves County; McClure, Judge.

Action by L. B. Craig against W. H. Henning and others. Judgment for defendants upon a directed verdict, and plaintiff appeals. Motion to strike from the transcript all parts thereof to which the court's certificate of the correctness of the stenographer's transcribed notes was attached granted.

Tomlison Fort and J. C. Gilbert, both of Roswell, for appellant. Harold Hurd and Hiram M. Dow, both of Roswell, for appellees.

ROBERTS, J. This action was instituted in the district court of Chavex county by appellant against the appellees to recover the sum of $2,509 alleged to have been owing to appellant by appellees, as evidenced by a certain judgment set out in the complaint. Appellees answered, tendering payment of one-half of the amount sued for, and set up certain equitable defenses which they alleged relieved them from payment of the remainder. Issue was joined, and without objection by either party the case was submitted to a jury. Evidence on behalf of the plaintiff (appellant here) was taken, and the court, on motion of the appellees, instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defendants on the litigated question. From this judgment appellant prosecuted an appeal to this court, and has filed a transcript of the record which contains, in addition to the record proper, the transcribed notes of the stenographer, certified by the court to be true and correct, under the provisions of section 4493, Code, 1915. Appellees moved to strike from the transcript all that portion thereof to which such certificate is attached, on the ground that, the case having been submitted to a jury, it was not competent for appellant to make the evidence and proceedings occurring upon the trial a part of the record in such manner. This motion must be sustained. The section in question, in so far as material, reads as follows:

> "In all actions tried without a jury the testimony taken before a court or that taken by a referee, the transcribed notes of the stenographer in such cases, properly certified by the court or referee, and all motions, orders or decisions made or entered in the progress of the trial of any such action shall become and be a part of the record for the purpose of having the cause reviewed by the Supreme Court upon appeal or writ of error, without any bill of exceptions."

Section 4495 provides for the making up of a bill of exceptions and settling the same, and authorizes this method of procedure in all cases, whether tried by the court with or without a jury. Appellant argues that, because there were equitable issues involved in the present case, it should have been tried by the court without a jury; hence they are entitled to make the testimony a part of the record in the manner adopted.

The statute, however, does not make the test of the right depend upon whether the action was legal or equitable, but upon whether or not the action was tried with or without a jury. A law action, properly triable by a jury, but heard by the court, comes within the provisions of section 4493, and in an equitable action, where issues are submitted to the jury, the transcribed notes of the stenographer can only be made a part of the record by having the same incorporated in a bill of exceptions under the provisions of section 4495.

For the reasons stated, the motion of appellees will be sustained; and it is so ordered.

HANNA, C. J., and PARKER, J., concur.

(101 Kan. 237)

SMITH BROS. & COOPER v. HANSON.*

(No. 20654.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SALES 🔑416(1)—SUIT TO RECOVER FOR SHRINKAGE—EVIDENCE.

In view of the issues involved and attitude of the parties, it was error to exclude proffered testimony as to the correctness of the defendant's method of measuring the hay involved herein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1171.]

2. SALES 🔑420—ACTION TO RECOVER FOR SHRINKAGE—ISSUES—AMOUNT PURCHASED.

Under the circumstances of this case, the issue of fraud is practically negligible; the vital question being the amount of hay actually purchased.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1202.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1046(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—SUBPŒNA—JURORS NOT CALLED AS WITNESSES.

The issuance of a subpœna for certain jurors not called as witnesses, although no substantial prejudice is shown in this instance, not approved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4128, 4131.]

Appeal from District Court, Cloud County.

Action by Smith Bros. & Cooper against Robert Hanson. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and cause remanded.

See, also, 93 Kan. 284, 44 Pac. 226.

Pulsifer & Hunt and Clyde L. Short, all of Concordia, for appellant. S. N. Hawkes, of Topeka, and Sturges & Sturges, of Concordia, for appellees.

WEST, J. The plaintiffs bought a large amount of alfalfa with which to feed sheep and after having paid for the same and claiming to have discovered a large shrinkage in the amount brought this suit to recover the difference. They alleged, among other things:

> That the defendant represented that the alfalfa amounted to about 900 tons. "That defendant, to induce plaintiff to pay for more hay or alfalfa than there really was, did falsely state, represent, and warrant to them that 400 cubic feet of said hay, measured as defendant measured it, would equal or amount to one ton; that he had often measured and weighed the hay grown upon said premises under other contracts in reference to the sale thereof similar to this with plaintiffs, and had never been required to settle by weight, for that, in such instances, after weighing, the measurements of defendant had been found correct and favorable to the purchaser, upon a basis of 400 cubic feet to the ton, all of which statements and representations were false and untrue, and so known by said defendant to be, and 400 cubic feet of said hay, measured as defendant measured it, would not make a ton, nor hardly two-thirds thereof, which said defendant well knew. * * *"

It was agreed that the plaintiffs should have the option of weighing certain stacks, and from the weight should be ascertained the entire number of tons in all the stacks measured. It was alleged that by the measurement of the stacks about which there is no dispute there were, according to the plaintiff's theory of 400 cubic feet to the ton, 952¾ tons; that upon weighing certain stacks the correct amount of hay was found to be only 599 tons, leaving a difference which at $8 a ton would make an excess of $2,830 paid. The trial resulted in a jury, allowing the plaintiffs just one-half of the amount claimed, and on appeal to this court (Smith v. Hanson, 93 Kan. 284, 144 Pac. 226) it appeared that according to the plaintiff's theory of weight they were entitled to twice what the jury had allowed, and that in order to substantiate their claim they had introduced evidence as to the amount of alfalfa a sheep would consume in a given time. But according to the defendant's theory of measurement they were entitled to nothing. It was said that under the circumstances it was competent to show the oral agreement as to the time the weighing was to be done, that if the weights controlled the plaintiffs were entitled to the full amount claimed. Also:

---

*For opinion on petition for rehearing, see 166 Pac. 497.

> "If the weight was decided by ascertaining the number of tons in two of the stacks, and applying the proportionate correction to the whole, that result would govern. * * * The defendant maintains that, through some mistake, the measurements applied to the two stacks, which were weighed, were not those of these two stacks, and the jury may have so found. But in that case no reason is apparent why the correct measurement should not have been applied, and the weight determined in that manner. The jury could determine which stacks were actually weighed, and, whichever they were, it would seem there should be no difficulty in ascertaining their measurement. Upon these grounds the judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered." 93 Kan. 287, 144 Pac. 226.

[1] As to the evidence of how much alfalfa a sheep would consume, it was said that the court regarded the contract as fixing the manner in which the weight of the hay should be determined. It seems that this was construed by the trial court and by counsel for defendant as holding substantially that the only question to try was the identity of the stacks weighed. Objection was made to any testimony as to the statements of defendant that 400 cubic feet would make a ton; also attempts to exclude such evidence after it had been received. But whether because such assurances were a part of the conversation as to when the weighing should be done, or for some other reason, it was received; and it was permitted to be testified that the money would not have been paid before the stacks were measured had not these statements been relied upon. Plaintiffs also again offered evidence touching the amount of alfalfa which one sheep would consume, which was rejected. The defendant offered proof by expert hay men that 400 cubic feet would make a ton. This was rejected, and the ruling is complained of because the evidence sought to be introduced was to meet the issue and evidence of false assurances as to the method of measurement, and also because it would have aided the jury in ascertaining which party was right in the dispute as to which particular stacks were in fact weighed.

It is suggested that, if it could have been demonstrated that the 400 cubic feet theory is correct, it would have had a strong tendency, if not the inevitable effect, to show that the defendant must have been right in his contention as to the identity of the stacks weighed. So long as the plaintiffs did not concede the correctness of the defendant's system of measurement, but permitted their allegation of its falsity to stand, together with their assertion that it would fall one-third short, either the question of assurances as to its correctness should have been kept from the jury or else the proffered testimony should have been received. The contract fixed two methods of ascertainment—measuring and weighing. If 400 cubic feet in fact make a ton, any fraudulent intent on the part of the defendant would effect nothing, even if it proved to have existed; if not, any guaranty to that effect would have been equally potent whether made fraudulently or honestly. Hence in reality the question of fraud is in no effective sense in the case at all. It is also true that if the stacks had all been weighed, or if no dispute had arisen as to which ones were in fact weighed, the question of measurement would be entirely out of the case. But, in view of the sharp conflict in the evidence as to the identity of the two stacks selected and weighed by the plaintiffs, the correctness of the defendant's method of measurement became a matter of competent and material character, for it is not possible that a stack containing 10 tons by weight could contain one-third less than 4,000 cubic feet, if as a matter of fact 400 cubic feet make a ton.

[2] Complaint is found with some of the instructions for making prominent the alleged false guaranty and the reliance thereon, because accentuating and calling special attention to the idea of fraud to the prejudice of the defendant in the minds of the jury. With the issues remaining as they were, it was difficult to state them, or instruct, without including the matter of fraud, and, indeed, the defendant requested a number of instructions thereon, which were substantially given. This but makes it the more plain that the rejected testimony as to the system of measurement should have been received. On the other hand, it is insisted that the defendant's counsel led the court into the error of trying to confine the testimony to identity of stacks weighed, and that it should have no right to complain of the result. The fact remains, however, that the defendant sought to eliminate all question of measurement, but succeeded in eliminating only his own expert testimony relating thereto.

[3] Two jurors on the regular panel were discharged, when it was disclosed on their examination that they had been subpœnaed as witnesses for the plaintiffs. They were not called to testify. The controversy over this point is spirited. While no substantial prejudice appears to have resulted in this instance, the practice is not to be encouraged.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance herewith. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 77)

AULTMAN & TAYLOR MACHINERY CO. v. SCHIERKOLK. (No. 20747.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SALES ⚷124—RESCISSION ON GROUND OF FRAUD—EVIDENCE.

The evidence considered, and held, the dedefense of rescission on the ground of fraud was not established, because of failure to return or offer to return the property sought to be replevined, to the plaintiff at the place of sale. Held, further, the defense that the debt for which the property was claimed as security had been paid was not sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 303–312.]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚷553(1)—RECORD—MATTERS CONSIDERED.

Statements of facts not shown by the record, but made in defendant's brief to aid his case, cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2461, 2462, 2466–2471.]

Appeal from District Court, Washington County.

Replevin by the Aultman & Taylor Machinery Company against E. Schierkolk. Demurrer to defendant's evidence sustained, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Edgar Bennett and Charles W. Clarke, both of Washington, Kan., and T. H. Polack, of Marysville, for appellant. J. R. Hyland, of Washington, Kan., and Pulsifer & Hunt, of Concordia, for appellee.

BURCH, J. The action was one of replevin by a chattel mortgagee for a threshing machine. A demurrer was sustained to the defendant's evidence, and he appeals.

[1] The controversy was before the court on the occasion of a former appeal. Machinery Co. v. Schierkolk, 95 Kan. 737, 149 Pac. 680. As there indicated, the principal defense was rescission on the ground of fraud. The evidence disclosed that the sale was negotiated at Lincoln, Neb., and was completed by delivery of the engine at Lanham, Neb., the defendant paying the freight from Lincoln to Lanham. The evidence further disclosed no return of the engine to the plaintiff at the place of sale, or offer to return, except a conditional one. Frick Co. v. Fry, 75 Kan. 396, 89 Pac. 675; Cooper v. Ragsdale, 96 Kan. 772, 153 Pac. 516. Therefore the defense of rescission failed. Another defense was that the debt secured by the chattel mortgage had been paid before the action was commenced. The evidence, which need not be recited, failed to sustain the defense.

[2] Certain statements of facts not shown by the record made in the defendant's brief to aid his case cannot, of course, be considered.

The judgment of the district court is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 172)

GERMAN-AMERICAN STATE BANK v. WOODWARD. (No. 20931.) *

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INDEMNITY ⚷12 — OBLIGATION — DISCHARGE.

One of a number of parties who each contracts to indemnify a bank against loss to the amount of a certain share of that part of an obligation left after the application of the proceeds of a sale of certain property, or to deposit a sufficient sum to assure the payment of that share of the obligation, is not discharged by reason of the fact that the amount deposited in good faith by another of the contractors finally turns out to be insufficient to pay his share.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indemnity, Cent. Dig. §§ 26, 27.]

2. INDEMNITY ⚷9(1)—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—APPLICATION OF ASSETS—LIABILITY.

A baseball association was indebted to a bank. Directors of the association individually indemnified the bank against loss, each to the amount of one-seventh of tho indebtedness remaining after the application of the proceeds derived from the sale of tho assets of the association. The sale contemplated was a private sale. All the assets had been mortgaged to the bank. They were sold to the bank at chattel mortgage sale for $1,000. About five weeks later the bank sold the assets for $7,500. Held that, in an action against the indemnitors, the $7,500 should be credited on the debt of the association to the bank, and judgment should be rendered against the indemnitors for the remainder of the debt, in accordance with the terms of their contracts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indemnity, Cent. Dig. § 16.]

Appeal from District Court, Shawnee County.

Action by the German-American State Bank against Chester Woodward. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Thos. M. Lillard, B. R. Wheeler, and John L. Hunt, all of Topeka, for appellant. E. D. McKeever, of Topeka, and A. E. Crane, of Atchison, for appellee.

MARSHALL, J. This action was brought to recover on three contracts. The case was tried by the court without a jury. The court made findings of fact and conclusions of law and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The defendant appeals.

Such findings of fact as are necessary for a consideration of the questions presented, are as follows:

"The Topeka Baseball Association was and is a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Kansas.

"That on the 5th day of August, 1912, the said Topeka Baseball Association was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $9,800, evidenced by certain promissory notes.

"That, in pursuance of the request of the state bank commissioner of the state of Kansas, the plaintiff demanded further security of the directors of the Topeka Baseball Association for the payment of their indebtedness to the plaintiff, and in pursuance thereto a certain contract in writing was executed and delivered to the plaintiff, a copy of which is as follows:

---

*Rehearing denied July 11, 1917.

" 'In consideration of the German-American State Bank having agreed to carry the loan heretofore made by the Topeka Baseball Association, amounting now to $9,800, until the franchise, property, and players of said association can be sold, I hereby agree to indemnify said bank against loss to the amount of one-seventh of the balance of said sum remaining due after the application of the proceeds of the sale of said franchise, players, and all other property and assets of said association to the payment of said indebtedness: Provided, however, and this agreement is upon the express condition, that each of the remaining six directors of said association shall obligate himself to pay one-seventh of said deficit after exhausting the assets of said association as aforesaid, or shall deposit a sufficient sum to assure the payment of his proportion of said deficit, and this agreement shall not be binding upon the undersigned until all of said directors have obligated themselves as aforesaid.

" 'Dated Topeka, Kan., August 5, 1912.

" '[Signed] Chester Woodward.
" 'S. J. Bear.
" 'Arch M. Catlin.
" 'F. P. Metzger.
" 'Guilford Dudley.
" 'C. B. Merriam.'

"Afterwards, and on the 17th day of August, 1912, the said baseball association borrowed of the plaintiff the further sum of $3,000, which was evidenced by a note of that date.

"That at or about the time the plaintiff loaned the baseball association the said sum of $3.000 six of the directors of said baseball association individually executed an agreement of that date, which agreement is as follows:

" 'In consideration of the German-American State Bank having agreed this day to loan to the Topeka Baseball Association, at our request, $3,000 additional to the $9,800 already loaned to the said association, I hereby agree to indemnify said bank against loss to the amount of one-fifth of the balance of said sum of $3,000 remaining due and unpaid after the application of the proceeds of the sale of the franchise, players, and other property and assets of said association to the payment of all indebtedness due to the German-American State Bank: Provided, however, that in the event that the two directors, Mr. Henry Auerbach and Mr. Chester Woodward, shall also sign this agreement to indemnify, or shall deposit a sufficient sum with the German-American State Bank to assure the payment of his proportion of said deficit, then and in that event this agreement shall not be binding upon any of the undersigned for more than one-seventh of said deficit.

" 'Dated Topeka, Kan., August 17, 1912.

" '[Signed] Arch M. Catlin.
" 'S. J. Bear.
" 'C. B. Merriam.
" 'Guilford Dudley.
" 'F. P. Metzger.
" 'Chester Woodward.'

"The defendant, Woodward, was absent from Topeka at the time the other parties signed the agreement, but signed the same on his return three or four weeks later.

"That Henry Auerbach on December 16, 1912, for the purpose of complying with the provisions of said contracts of August 5 and August 17, 1912, deposited with the plaintiff the sum of $1,100 to assure the payment of his proportion of said deficit, and that said agreement and deposit was made by the said Auerbach, the remaining director of the Topeka Baseball Association, and the same was accepted by the bank in compliance with the terms of said agreement, and at said time, taking into consideration the value of the property, franchise, and players of the Topeka Baseball Association, it appeared upon reasonable grounds to be a sufficient amount to pay one-seventh of such deficit had the property been sold at the time.

"That on the 28th day of September, 1912, the Topeka Baseball Association borrowed from the plaintiff an additional sum of $2,000, which debt was evidenced by demand note executed by the baseball association in the sum of $2,000.

"That to secure the payment of said $2,000, or any deficit that might result after the sale of the franchise, property, and players of the Topeka Baseball Association and the application of the proceeds to the indebtedness of said ball association to the plaintiff, the directors, acting individually, entered into a further agreement with the plaintiff, a copy of said agreement is as follows:

" 'In consideration of the German-American State Bank having agreed this day to loan to the Topeka Baseball Association at our request $2,000, additional to the $9,800 and $3,000 already loaned to the said association, I hereby agree to indemnify said bank against loss to the amount of one-sixth of the balance of said sum of $2,000 remaining due and unpaid after the application of the proceeds of the sale of the franchise, players, and other property and assets of said association to the payment of all indebtedness due to the German-American State Bank: Provided, however, that in the event that the absent director, C. B. Merriam, shall also sign this agreement to indemnify, or shall deposit a sufficient sum with the German-American State Bank to assure the payment of his proportion of said deficit, then and in that event this agreement shall not be binding upon any of the undersigned for more than one-seventh of said deficit.

" 'Dated Topeka, Kan., September 28, 1912.

" '[Signed] Arch M. Catlin.
" 'S. J. Bear.
" 'Chester Woodward.
" 'Guilford Dudley.
" 'F. P. Metzger.
" 'C. B. Merriam.'

"That Henry Auerbach, September 30, 1912, in furtherance of the agreement, deposited with the plaintiff the sum of $300 to assure the payment of his proportion of said deficit, after the sale of the property of the Topeka Baseball Association, and the proceeds thereof were applied to the indebtedness of said association to the plaintiff, and that said deposit was made by the said Henry Auerbach in compliance with said agreement, and was so accepted by the plaintiff, and that under the circumstances existing at that time, and in view of the value of the property of the Topeka Baseball Association, it appeared upon reasonable grounds to be sufficient to pay one-seventh of the deficit if the property had been sold at that time for its value and the proceeds applied upon said indebtedness.

"At the time of the execution of each of said contracts of August 17 and September 28, 1912, the indebtedness from the baseball association to the plaintiff therein referred to was secured by a mortgage to the plaintiff covering the property of the association, and it was the understanding of the parties signing said contracts that the sale of the assets of the association, referred to therein, should be a private sale, and not a forced sale under the mortgage.

"After the execution of said contracts, and at the request of the plaintiff said ball association executed and delivered to the plaintiff a new mortgage dated June 1, 1914, covering all of its property and assets, including the franchise of the said ball association, for the purpose of securing the payment of the debt then owing to the plaintiff by the said ball association.

"That on the 30th day of June, 1914, five of the directors of said baseball association, one of whom was the defendant in this action, acting individually, executed and delivered to the plaintiff a contract, a copy of which is as follows: 'We, the undersigned, in consideration of the German-American State Bank of Topeka, Kan., renewing the existing indebtedness of the Topeka Baseball Association, and extending the time for the payment of the same to March 1, 1915, do hereby give our consent to the said renewal, and we do hereby further agree that our individual guarantees protecting said German-American State Bank against any loss, each to the extent of one-seventh of any balance or deficiency of the sum remaining due upon said debt after the application of the proceeds of the sale of the franchise, players, and all other property and assets of said association to the payment of said indebtedness, shall continue and shall cover any renewal notes covering said indebtedness executed by the Topeka Baseball Association.'

"That afterwards, and prior to the 18th day of January, 1915, the plaintiff, deeming itself insecure, declared the indebtedness due, took possession of the property described in the mortgage, and in pursuance of the terms of the mortgage, and after due notice, in accordance with the statutes of the state of Kansas, sold in bulk, at public sale, all of the property and assets, including the franchise of the Topeka Baseball Association, for the sum of $1,000.

"The sale conducted under said mortgage was held in the back or directors' room of the plaintiff bank at the place stated in the written notice of sale introduced in evidence, marked P-15, and made a part hereof. Copies of this notice were posted on telephone or telegraph poles within two or three blocks of the bank and place of sale at least ten days prior to the sale, said poles being public places within said city. The place of sale was about a mile and a half from the ball park owned by the baseball association, the lease covering which and all the buildings and improvements thereon were covered by said mortgage and sold at said sale. None of the property sold was exhibited at such sale.

"The property of the baseball association sold at said sale had no cash salable value at the time of such mortgage sale, or at the time it was sold to Savage, as hereinafter found. In connection with the franchise the property has a contingent value of from $5,000 to $10,000, depending largely on the sale of players held under contract.

"After the sale of said property, and with the knowledge of the circumstances of the sale and price for which the property was sold, the baseball association, acting through its directors, and upon the proposition made by the plaintiff that it and its directors should have ten days within which to repurchase the property for $10.000, which was to be in full payment of the indebtedness to the bank, tried to sell the property to one Savage. Being unable to sell the property within ten days, a further extension of time was asked for by them within which to sell the same, which further extension the plaintiff refused to grant.

"On March 3, 1915, the plaintiff, through one of its officers, sold to John Savage the property purchased at the mortgage sale by written contract of sale of said date, introduced in evidence and marked D-22, and made a part hereof, which sale was for the sum of $7,500, payable in a note of a new baseball corporation to be formed, for $5,000, indorsed personally by Savage, due in two years, with interest, with $15,000 of the capital stock of the new corporation deposited with the plaintiff as collateral security to the note, the balance of the purchase price, $2,500, to be paid in stock of said new corporation, as appears by the terms of said contract of sale.

"The plaintiff had performed the conditions and agreements of the contract of indemnity set up in the amended petition of plaintiff. It did not, however, wait upon the baseball association for the payment of all the indebtedness until March 1, 1915, the date named in the contract of June 30, 1914, a copy of which is set out in finding 14, but declared the indebtedness due and sold the property in January, 1915, as hereinbefore found, applying the sale price, $1,000, on the indebtedness. The balance of the indebtedness has not been paid.

"The defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $2,278.72, the same being one-seventh of the deficit remaining unpaid after the application of the proceeds of the sale of the assets and property of the Topeka Baseball Association to the indebtedness hereinbefore found of the association to the plaintiff bank."

[1] 1. The defendant urges that, because Auerbach did not deposit a sum sufficient to discharge one-seventh of the obligation, the defendant is not liable on either of the first two contracts. The obligations described in these contracts amounted to $12,800, one-seventh of which was more than $1,800. Auerbach deposited $1,100 to cover his share of these obligations. There was nothing to show that either Auerbach or the bank fraudulently did anything to avoid Auerbach's depositing a larger sum. It must be assumed that they acted in good faith and took into consideration the value of the property of the defendant association. The property at that time had some value. The defendant should not be released from his obligation on account of the smallness of Auerbach's deposit, until it is shown that Auerbach or the defendant, or both, acted without good faith in the matter.

[2] 2. The defendant contends that he is not liable on either of the contracts for the following reasons: That there was no sale of the property such as was contemplated in the contracts; that the sale took place before March 1, 1915, in violation of the contract of June 30, 1914, and that the judgment rendered against him was for more than one-seventh of the loss sustained by the plaintiff. These propositions are so interwoven that they can best be discussed and disposed of together.

The chattel mortgage sale was a forced sale, made in violation of the spirit of all the agreements between the plaintiff and the defendant. The sale was within the terms of the contract between the plaintiff and the baseball association. The liability sought to be enforced was not the liability of the baseball association, but that of the defendant. The defendant's contract was to indemnify the plaintiff against loss. The loss sustained by the plaintiff was the difference between the value of the property at the time it was sold to Savage, and the amount of the plaintiff's claim against the baseball association. It was difficult to determine the value of the property and of the franchise sold to Savage. The amount for which the property sold at the chattel mortgage sale cannot be said to represent its value at that time. The amount named as the price paid by Savage for the property and the franchise was probably as near their value as could be ascertained. That amount was $7,500.

Auerbach, by depositing $1,100 to meet his share of the obligation under the contracts set out in the fifth and sixth findings of fact, and by depositing $300 to meet his share of the obligation under the contract set out in the tenth finding of fact, complied with those agreements on his part; and if the amounts deposited by him were not sufficient to pay one-seventh of the entire obligation, the loss occasioned thereby must be sustained by the plaintiff, and cannot be used to augment the obligation of Woodward. It does not appear from the abstract how this matter was determined by the trial court.

Seven thousand five hundred dollars should be deducted from the total debt of the baseball association, the payment of which was guaranteed by the defendant and his associates, and judgment should be rendered against the defendant for one-seventh of the remainder.

The trial court is directed to modify its judgment as herein indicated, and, upon being so modified, the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 110)

NIESCHBURG v. NOTHERN et al.*

(No. 20893.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CONTRACTS 🔑19—REVOCATION OF OFFER—ACCEPTANCE.

Where an offer is made by a vendor to assign his right in a certificate of purchase, issued under a foreclosure sale, for a certain sum if accepted within a fixed time, it may be revoked by him until it is accepted; but, if the vendee elects to accept the offer and gives notice of his acceptance within the time limited, such an accepted offer fixes the obligations of the parties and becomes a binding contract, and the execution of the assignment and the payment of the consideration must then be made within a reasonable time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 57-60.]

2. CONTRACTS 🔑22(1), 24—OFFER—FORM OF ACCEPTANCE.

To be effective, the acceptance must comply with the terms of the offer, and, if it prescribes a method of signifying acceptance or the conditions upon which the acceptance must be made, such method or conditions must be followed; but, when it is not so prescribed, acceptance may be made by any legal means.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 67-77, 79-84, 87-92, 100-108.]

3. CONTRACTS 🔑16—MORTGAGES 🔑552—ASSIGNMENT OF CERTIFICATE OF PURCHASE — REASSIGNMENT—DEFENSE OF ILLEGALITY.

When the contract becomes effectual by an acceptance, the vendee may assign his rights in it to another, and it is held herein that the vendor, having recognized the validity of the assignment made by the vendee and the rights of the assignee, is not permitted thereafter to set up the defense that the assignment was illegal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 49-56, 71-92; Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 1580.]

Appeal from District Court, Saline County.

Action by Albert F. Nieschburg against J. R. Nothern and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant J. R. Nothern appeals. Affirmed.

David Ritchie, of Salina, for appellant. J. A. Fleming and Burch, Litowich & Royce, all of Salina, for appellee.

JOHNSTON, C. J. J. R. Nothern, who held a second mortgage on property belonging to W. T. Chase, foreclosed the same, bid in the property at sheriff's sale for $1,550, and afterward on February 10, 1916, offered to assign his interest in the property, under the certificate of purchase, to Chase for $1,200, providing the latter acted upon the proposition on or before Saturday the 12th of February. The following memorandum was made:

> "I hereby agree with W. T. Chase to take $1,200.00 in cash on or before Saturday night 2—12—1916, for my second mortgage on S. ½ S. W. ¼ 33—13—3 and release it of record with all expenses paid, and W. T. Chase agrees to either take or reject same on said date. J. R. Nothern. W. T. Chase."

The next day Chase's agent, Kell, telephoned an acceptance to Nothern, telling him the money would be ready for him, and arrangements were made at that time for the parties to meet the following day to close the transaction. Some time before the next day, Chase assigned his rights under this agreement to Albert F. Nieschburg, to whom he also conveyed his equity in the property. On the following day, Nothern and Kell met at the office of Nothern's attorney, who insisted that the proper method of transferring the certificate was by written assignment, and he, accordingly, drew up an assignment of the certificate to Nieschburg, and the instrument was signed and acknowledged by Nothern and his wife. Due to the fact that it was necessary to take the assignment out in the country for Mrs. Nothern's signature and the fact that the bank would be closed by the time it was returned, the parties all agreed to postpone the final transfer and payment until the following Monday. On Monday morning, Nothern refused to complete the transaction unless he received $1,400 for the assignment. On the previous Friday, Nieschburg had placed money in the bank for use in fulfilling his contract, but his offer of payment of $1,200 was refused.

Nieschburg brought this action to enforce Nothern's contract, and he alleged that the memorandum made on February 10th, through mutual mistake of the parties, failed to show the exact agreement made, and that the contract should be reformed to show that the defendant in consideration of $1,200 agreed to assign the certificate of purchase and his interest in the premises to Chase, and that the "second party agrees that he will on or before said time accept or reject the proposition of first party to accept said sum for said certificate of purchase, and if he so accepts that he will pay to first party at said time said sum of money." The petition prayed for a specific performance of the contract as reformed. Defendant alleged that he was induced by Chase's agent, Kell, to make the $1,200 offer by false representations that the party who held the first mortgage on the premises, which was executed by defendant, was about to enforce it against the latter. It was also alleged that the agreement was without consideration, and that the offer made by defendant was withdrawn before acceptance or performance by plaintiff. The court found in favor of the plaintiff, ordering the contract to be reformed and decreeing that it be specifically enforced.

---

*Rehearing denied June 15, 1917.

[1, 2] The merits of the controversy lie within a very narrow compass. Did the offer made by defendant and accepted by Chase become a binding and valid contract, or was it no more than an offer which defendant was at liberty to withdraw at any time before payment of the consideration was made? Defendant's agreement was an offer to sell and transfer his interest acquired under a certificate of purchase at a fixed price within a given time. It was subject to revocation until there was a valid acceptance of the offer. Although unilateral at its inception, it became bilateral and absolute when the offer was accepted according to its terms, and thereafter the obligations of the defendant and the vendee were mutual and could be specifically enforced. Chadsey v. Condley, 62 Kan. 853, 62 Pac. 663. The acceptance in such a case must, of course, correspond with the offer, and, if they accord, the agreement becomes complete and binding from the date of acceptance. Caldwell v. Frazier, 65 Kan. 24, 68 Pac. 1076. The reciprocal promises of the parties afforded sufficient consideration. The unequivocal promise of the vendee that the offer was accepted and that payment would be made when the assignment was executed on the following day consummated a valid contract. If the offer had prescribed a particular method of acceptance, or had prescribed certain conditions, compliance with such method or conditions would have been essential to a valid acceptance. There was nothing in the defendant's offer prescribing a method by which the vendee should signify his acceptance, and no question was raised by the defendant as to the sufficiency of the notice or the form of acceptance when they were given and made. The offer did not provide that it should not become binding and effective until payment or tender of payment was made, and if, when the offer was first made, the vendee had then agreed to accept it, the contract would at once have become binding, and the parties would have had a reasonable time to execute the assignment and make the payment.

In Breen v. Mayne, 141 Iowa, 399, 118 N. W. 441, there was an option to purchase land before a fixed time at an agreed price payable upon the delivery of the deed, and it was held that the vendee might indicate his acceptance within the specified time in any lawful method, and that the making of the deed and the payment of the purchase price were matters to be performed within a reasonable time and were not essential to the completion of the contract. See, also, Mansfield v. Hodgdon, 147 Mass. 304, 17 N. E. 544; Penna. Mining Co. v. Smith, Appellant, 207 Pa. 210, 56 Atl. 426; Penna. Mining Co. v. Martin, Appellant, 210 Pa. 53, 59 Atl. 436; Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 14 S. E. 249.

Here the defendant treated the acceptance as sufficient when it was made and agreed to complete the transaction and make the transfer on the following Saturday, which was within the time fixed in the offer; not only that, but he executed the assignment and procured his wife to join in the execution, and the delivery would have been made and the transaction closed on Saturday but for the agreement of the parties, made for their own convenience, to postpone the completion until the following Monday.

Defendant cites Winders v. Kenan, 161 N. C. 628, 77 S. E. 687, which holds that the acceptance must accord with the terms of the offer, and, if they do not accord, the parties are not bound. Some of the language used proceeds on the theory that something more than notice of acceptance is essential to a valid contract. However, the contract in that case was interpreted to mean that payments were essential to the acceptance of the offer, and it was also held that the vendee had never offered to pay the stipulated amount.

Ind. & Ark. Lbr. & Mfg. Co. v. Pharr, 82 Ark. 573, 102 S. W. 686, is also cited as opposed to the ruling herein. That case approves the rule that, if the optionee elects to accept an offer according to its terms within the time limited and gives notice of acceptance to the owner, the accepted offer becomes a binding contract. There, however, the letter written by the holder of the option was deemed to be insufficient to constitute an acceptance. It did not say that the defendant accepted the offer, and, besides, the letter showed that the steps which he proposed to take towards acceptance were not to be taken until after the expiration of the option.

[3] There is nothing substantial in the objection that the rights of Chase could not be assigned and transferred to the plaintiff. When the offer was accepted by Chase, it became a valid contract for the sale of the interest held by the defendant, and it was subject to assignment. When defendant was informed of the assignment, no objection was made upon that ground, nor in fact upon any other. The assignment of the certificate which was prepared and which was signed by the defendant was made to the plaintiff, and not to Chase, and by agreement it was left in the custody of defendant's attorney until the transfer should be completed on the following Monday. Having recognized the validity of the assignment to plaintiff and his rights as assignee, it was too late for him to "mend his hold," when the action was brought, by an objection to the assignment to plaintiff.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 72)

FIRST NAT. BANK OF EUREKA v. WILSON et al. (No. 20740.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING 🔑201(3)—NATIONAL BANK — ACTS OF OFFICERS — DEFENSE OF ULTRA VIRES.

Where a national bank undertakes through its officers to assist a customer in the financial transaction of exchanging her land for certain lien notes and other property, and agrees to hold the deed conveying the land to the customer until the lien notes should be properly indorsed by the other party guaranteeing their payment, and the officers of the bank after receiving compensation for their services accept the notes without the proper indorsement and then deliver the customer's deed to the land, in violation of their agreement, by reason of which the customer suffers loss, the bank may not, when sued for the loss so occasioned and after enjoying the benefits of the transaction, set up the defense that the agreement made and the business done was in excess of its charter powers, nor escape liability upon the ground that the acts of its officers were ultra vires.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 996, 997.]

2. BANKS AND BANKING 🔑262 — NATIONAL BANK—ACTS OF OFFICERS—AGENCY.

Under the evidence, it is held, that the officers of the bank in making and carrying out the agreement were acting for the bank, and not for themselves individually.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Banks and Banking, Cent. Dig. §§ 1001-1006.]

Appeal from District Court, Sedgwick County.

Action by the First National Bank of Eureka against Nannie Wilson and another, with cross-petition setting up a counterclaim. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Howard J. Hodgson, of Eureka, and Campbell & Campbell, of Wichita, for appellant. Foulke, Matson & Wall, of Wichita, for appellees.

JOHNSTON, C. J. The First National Bank of Eureka brought this action against Nannie Wilson and Mamie E. Wilson upon a promissory note given in renewal of a note dated December 17, 1910. The defendants filed a cross-petition setting up a counterclaim to the bank's demand. The jury's verdict was in favor of the defendants, who recovered judgment for costs. The plaintiff appeals.

[2] The facts upon which the defendants' counterclaim was based were substantially as follows: About September, 1910, the defendant Nannie Wilson entered into an oral agreement with Ira A. Braden to exchange her land in Greenwood county and some personal property for certain land in Texas and five vendor's lien notes belonging to Braden. Desiring to have her agreement in writing and her interests carefully protected, she sought the assistance of the plaintiff bank, and the assistant cashier referred her to Ira P. Nye, then vice president of the bank. He undertook to draw up a contract showing the agreement between defendant and Braden, to look after her interests in the transaction, and to see that she was fully protected in the exchange of properties. The vice president was instructed to deliver the papers conveying the defendant's property to Braden upon the latter's fully complying with his part of the agreement, part of which was to furnish an abstract showing a good merchantable title to the Texas property and also to guarantee the payment of the vendor's lien notes by his indorsement. This part of the agreement as incorporated in the contract written by Nye was expressed as follows:

> "And to furnish abstract showing good merchantable title and to indorse, assign, transfer and set over to said first party (Nannie Wilson), five certain promissory notes for $1,158.60 each."

The first of these notes became due January 1, 1911. Nye delivered to Braden the papers conveying title to defendant's property, but accepted the vendor's lien notes from Braden indorsed without recourse, and the abstract which he accepted failed to show good title to the Texas land. The defendant was unable to collect payment of the lien notes when due, and, being unable to resort to Braden for their payment, had to take the land securing the notes, from which she was unable to realize their full value. This fact, together with the partial failure of title to the Texas land, subjected defendant to a loss much greater than the amount of the plaintiff's demand; but, the statute of limitations having run against her claim, she was not allowed to offset more than the amount of the plaintiff's claim against her. It was in expectation of realizing upon the first lien note due January 1, 1911, which was left with plaintiff bank for collection, that defendant had borrowed from plaintiff the $700 for which she executed her note. A renewal note for this indebtedness was the note sued upon in this action by plaintiff.

The bank contends that Nye acted for himself in the transactions with defendant, and not for the bank, nor as an officer of the bank. This was a question of fact upon which the evidence was conflicting, and it may safely be said that the finding that he was acting for the bank is not without support. Defendant was unwilling to close the deal unless the bank would take care of her interests and see that she had a square deal. She therefore applied to the bank, and its vice president undertook to protect her interests, and, among other things, to obtain the indorsement of the lien notes by Braden. At this time, she asked the vice president the question: "Will your bank stand back of me in this transaction? Will you draw the contract and stand by it?" And he answered, "Certainly." In the contract which was drawn up it was provided that the deeds, abstracts, and papers should be deposited in the bank. In the correspondence conducted in carrying out the transaction most of the letters written by Nye were signed as vice president. After the deed was executed by defendant and left in the bank and the question of its delivery arose, the vice president said:

> "You can trust this bank, Mrs. Wilson. It will be all right for you to leave this deed signed here, and we will see that it is not delivered to Mr. Braden until his securities are approved."

In one letter written by Nye to defendant as to the collection by the bank of one of the lien notes he said:

> "You see he made it payable to you, and without your indorsement we could not collect it."

Later, according to the defendant's testimony, the cashier told Mamie Wilson, the daughter of defendant, that the bank had handled the deal very badly for her mother, and added:

> "If I had been in the bank at the time, your mother should never have made the deal."

A number of other letters written by the vice president tended in some degree to show that it was a bank, rather than an individual, transaction. A charge of $20 was made for transacting the business, and this the defendant paid. Under the evidence, it must be held that the verdict settles the dispute as to the capacity in which the vice president was acting, and is a final determination that he was acting for the bank throughout the transaction.

[1] There is a contention, however, that the business was beyond the scope of the bank's charter powers, and that it could not be bound by the acts or agreements of its officers. The preparation of the contract and examination of abstracts are probably outside the scope of the ordinary business of banking, but the handling of the notes and securities and the collection of them were incidental to the banking business. It is well known that country banks exercise many of the duties and powers of loan and trust companies and assist their patrons in closing up financial deals like the one under consideration. But granting that the officers exceeded the charter powers of the bank to some extent, it undertook the business, transacted it in a way, and accepted compensation for its services and for the responsibility which it assumed. It failed to perform its agreement, in that it accepted the notes without indorsement and guaranty and delivered the executed deed of defendant which it was holding. Banks, like individuals, are liable for the wrongs which they commit and the injuries which they cause. In a consummated transaction wherein it gained an advantage and occasioned an injury and loss to defendant, it cannot defend by saying that it exceeded its charter powers when it made the agreement and undertook to perform it. It is not permitted to enjoy the benefits of a transaction like this, even if it be not strictly within the business of banking nor incidental to it, and escape liability upon the ground that its acts were ultra vires. Cooper v. National Bank, 40 Kan. 5, 18 Pac. 937; Town Co. v. Morris, 43 Kan. 282, 23 Pac. 569; Town Co. v. Russell, 46 Kan. 382, 26 Pac. 715; Town Co. v. Lincoln, 56 Kan. 145, 42 Pac. 706; Railroad Co. v. Johnson, 58 Kan. 175, 48 Pac. 847; Opera House Co. v. Loan Association, 59 Kan. 778, 53 Pac. 761; Harris v. Gas Co., 76 Kan. 750, 92 Pac. 1123, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171.

It must be held therefore: First, that the agreement was made by the bank; and, second, that it is responsible for the injury and loss which resulted from the negligent acts of its officers.

The view taken disposes of the objections made to the rulings upon evidence and also to the instructions. We find no material error in the proceedings, and therefore the judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 231)

REYNOLDS v. CLARK et al., Board of Grainfield Rural High School Dist. No. 4 et al. (No. 21401.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 19, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Schools and School Districts 🔑97(4)—Construction Bonds—Election—Statute.

After a rural high school district has been organized by proceedings conducted under chapter 311, Laws 1915, but not extending to the voting of bonds for the construction of a building or the selecting of a site, an election to determine the question of issuing bonds for the construction of a building may be called by the rural high school district board on petition presented to such board.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. § 226.]

2. Injunction 🔑169 — Temporary Injunction—Dissolution—Notice.

When a temporary injunction has been granted after notice and a hearing, it is within the discretion of the district court, or judge, to hear a motion to dissolve the injunction, notice having been given, before the time for trial on the merits.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. §§ 372, 384.]

Appeal from District Court, Gove County.

Action for injunction by S. S. Reynolds against Frank B. Clark and others as the Board of Grainfield Rural High School District No. 4 and others. Temporary injunction dissolved, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. H. Thompson, of Gove, and T. L. Bond, of Salina, for appellant. J. P. Coleman, of Topeka, for appellees.

BURCH, J. The action was one to enjoin the issuance of bonds voted by a rural high school district to enable it to construct a rural high school building. A temporary injunction was dissolved, and the plaintiff appeals.

The district was organized under the rural high school district act, chapter 311, Laws 1915, but the organization proceedings did not extend to the voting of bonds or the selecting of a site for a building. For a year or more a rural high school was conducted in a rented building. In February, 1917, a petition for an election to vote bonds for the construction of a building was presented to the rural high school board. The board called the election, the election was held, and the result was favorable to the issuance of bonds. The plaintiff contends the election was void because the petition was not presented to the board of county commissioners, and the election was not called by that body.

Section 1 of the act authorizes electors residing in certain territory to form a rural high school district. Section 2 reads in part as follows:

> "Whenever a petition, signed by two-fifths of the legal electors residing in the territory of the proposed rural high school district, to be determined by an enumeration taken for this purpose, shall be presented to the board of county commissioners of the county in which lies the greatest portion of territory comprising said district, reciting the boundaries of said proposed district and requesting said board of county commissioners to call a special election to vote on establishing and locating a rural high school and to vote bonds for the construction of a high school building, the proposed location and the amount of the bonds proposed to be stated in the petition, it shall be the duty of the board of county commissioners forthwith to call a special election in said proposed district to vote on establishing and locating a rural high school and to vote bonds therefor." Gen. Stat. 1915, § 9348.

Section 3 provides among other things that if the territory of the proposed district embrace an incorporated city of more than 300 population, the vote in city and country must be taken and counted separately, and the proposition to form a rural high school district must carry in both city and country. Section 4 relates to canvass of the vote, report of the result, and election and term of office of rural high school district officers. Section 5 relates to district meetings, board meetings, and the levy and collection of taxes. Section 6 reads as follows:

> "The rural high school board shall have the care and control of all property belonging to the high school district and, except as herein provided, shall have the powers prescribed by law for school district boards. The rural high school board is hereby authorized to secure a site, selected as provided in section 2 of this act, either by donation or purchase; or such site may be condemned in the manner provided in chapter 86, Session Laws of 1909, for the condemnation of property for school sites in cities and school districts." Gen. Stat. 1915, § 9352.

Other provisions of the act cover the subjects of taxation when the district lies in two or more counties, supervision by the county superintendent, course of study, admission of pupils, and annexation of adjacent territory.

[1] Considering the entire act in the light of the purpose to be accomplished, the legislative intention is clear enough. To facilitate not merely the institution but the speedy institution of rural high schools, authority was given to organize a district, select a site, and vote bonds for the construction of a building, all at one election. Electors are not obliged, however, to avail themselves of all their privileges at once. They may organize a district, and the district may then elect officers, maintain a school, levy taxes, and otherwise fulfill the general purpose of the act. In the beginning, whether full advantage of the act be taken or not, it is necessary that some competent authority pass on the petition, call the election, canvass the returns, and declare the result. The board of county commissioners was chosen as the proper body to do this for a "proposed" district. After a district has been organized, there is no reason why it should not conduct a bond election and select the site for a high school building without outside assistance or supervision, as well as conduct other elections, construct the building, maintain the school, levy taxes, and perform other corporate functions.

The plaintiff argues that the provisions of section 6 relating to selection of a site are inconsistent with the view just stated. Those provisions of section 6 were intended as a grant and not as a limitation of power. If in the initial proceeding a site has been selected, the district board may acquire that site by donation, by purchase, or by condemnation. If no site were selected when the district was organized, then the board has the power prescribed by law for school district boards (Gen. Stat. 1915, § 8972), as well as the power of condemnation.

The district contains the city of Grainfield, an incorporated city of more than 300 inhabitants. The plaintiff says a separate vote of electors of town and country was not taken, as prescribed by section 3 of the act. Section 3 was designed to prevent the electors of an incorporated city from forming a rural high school district which includes outside territory, without the consent of a majority of the electors of the outside territory voting at the election. Bonds for the construction of a building are not mentioned. It is not necessary to decide whether or not the town and country vote on the proposition to issue bonds at an election called under section 2 should be taken and counted separately. The provision for a separate vote does not apply to an election held after a district has been organized.

[2] A matter of practice is presented. A temporary injunction was granted after notice and a hearing. Afterwards a motion to dissolve the temporary injunction was filed. Notice of hearing was given, and after a full hearing the motion was sustained. The appeal is from the order dissolving the temporary injunction. Section 262 of the Civil Code (Gen. St. 1915, § 7160) contains this provision:

> "If the injunction be granted without notice, the defendant, at any time before the trial, may apply, upon notice, to the court in which the action is brought, or any judge thereof, to vacate or modify the same."

The plaintiff says he ought not to have been put to the trouble and expense of a rehearing of the case before the time for trial on the merits arrived. That was a matter to be considered by the district court. Section 262 of the Civil Code does not forbid a re-examination of the grounds for restraint, and the vexation or injustice occasioned by a temporary order may quite outweigh the inconvenience and expense attending a hearing on a motion to dissolve.

The judgment of the district court is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 135)

COLLINS v. MORRIS. (No. 20902.)*

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

NEW TRIAL 🔑74—GROUNDS—VERDICT CONTRARY TO EVIDENCE.

In an action under the statute (section 11672, Gen. Stat. 1915) to recover treble damages for the destruction of several shade trees of plaintiff, the defendant admitted that because he was angry at the plaintiff he set fire to one of the trees, which all the evidence showed to be of some value. Held, that a verdict in defendant's favor should have been set aside, and a new trial ordered. Collins v. Morris, 97 Kan. 264, 155 Pac. 51.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 150.]

Appeal from District Court, Miami County.

Action by J. C. Collins against John Morris. Judgment for defendant, motion for new trial overruled, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

E. J. Sheldon and S. J. Shively, both of Paola, for appellant. A. Lane and M. A. Lane, both of Paola, for appellee.

PORTER, J. This action is to recover treble damages for the alleged destruction by defendant of six shade trees which plaintiff claims were growing on his land near the division fence between his farm and that of the defendant. The jury found generally for the defendant. A motion for a new trial was overruled, and the court rendered judgment against plaintiff for costs, from which he appeals.

At a former trial there was a judgment for the defendant, which on appeal was reversed. Collins v. Morris, 97 Kan. 264, 155 Pac. 51. The facts are set forth quite fully in the former opinion, and it will be unnecessary to restate them. The former judgment was reversed because it was manifestly contrary to the evidence, and therefore it was held that the court should have set aside the verdict and granted a new trial.

It was pointed out in the former opinion that there was error in the admission of certain testimony respecting the value of plaintiff's land for farm purposes before and after the trees were destroyed, from which testimony the court applied an erroneous measure of damages. Although the error was not properly raised by the appeal, the law was declared in the former opinion so that the correct rule might be applied on the second trial. There is no claim of error in respect to that matter in the present case.

In this appeal errors are alleged respecting the admission of testimony, the giving of instructions, and in permitting the jury over plaintiff's objection to be taken out to view the premises. We find no error in any of these rulings. It is true the trees had been destroyed a considerable time before the trial, but there was no abuse of discretion in sending the jury to view the place where the stumps of the trees stood; the court having fully charged the jury not to talk with any person in regard to the case. Moreover, there is no showing that anything improper took place.

The only claim of error which requires consideration is the refusal to grant a new trial. The former reversal was placed squarely upon the ground that the defendant admitted that he set fire to one of the trees, and, when asked why he did this and whether he intended to burn the tree, stated, in substance, that trouble arose between him and Collins because the latter claimed he was farming part of the public highway; that he was angry and set fire to the tree. His testimony at the second trial was to the same effect. In answer to questions asked him by counsel he testified:

> "Q. Did you burn one of those trees a little on the north side? A. I did. Q. Which one was it? A. There on the corner. Q. The west tree? A. Yes. Q. What were you doing there that day when you burned that tree? A. Plowing. Q. What, if anything, happened to you while you were plowing there? A. I was plowing. Of course, he said I was farming the public highway, and went down there and talked to their neighbors, and I took the brush and straw and burned that tree; that is what I did. Q. When you testified before I believe you said about catching your plow on a root? A. Oh, yes; I catched it to a root, and he monkeyed with me long enough and got me mad. Q. What did you do? A. I went after a bunch of straw. Q. Where did you go to get the straw? A. I went to Cap Collins' pasture, right opposite it. Q. How big a bunch of straw did you get? A. Well, a handful. Q. What did you do with the straw? A. Flung it over there and put a match on it and set it afire. Q. Which side of the tree did you set it on? A. On the south side. Q. Then after you put it on the south side of the tree what did you do? A. I went on plowing. Q. Did the straw just lay there? A. Oh, I lit the straw; I set it afire. Q. Did it scorch the tree a little? A. Just a little. Q. That was the west tree? A. Yes; that was the west tree; that is, on the corner. Q. Now, John, did > you ever burn any other tree along that line? A. No, sir. Q. Never burned any other tree? A. No, sir."

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Rehearing denied July 11, 1917.

On cross-examination he was asked why he burned the tree, and replied:

> "Mr. Collins write for me and said I farmed 20 feet of the public highway;' that is where the trouble came in there."

Several other trees near the partition fence were shown to have been burned or girdled, and a finding that defendant was responsible for their destruction could not be said to have been unwarranted by the evidence. But he denied having anything to do with their destruction, and there was a conflict in the evidence as to their exact location and whether they were on the plaintiff's land or that of the defendant. Notwithstanding the general verdict is against the plaintiff as to all the other trees, it was just as much the duty of the trial court to set aside the verdict and to grant a new trial in the present instance as it was before. There was evidence of the value of the tree destroyed, although it was conflicting; but a shade tree such as all the evidence shows the one in question to have been has some value, a fact of which courts should and will take judicial notice. Upon the undisputed facts the jury had no right arbitrarily to find that such a tree had no value. It was the duty of the jury to find its value and allow the plaintiff three times the amount as damages for the willful trespass. Where a jury refuses upon undisputed facts to return a proper verdict, it becomes the duty of the court to set the verdict aside and order a new trial.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 78)

SENNING v. ARKANSAS VALLEY INTERURBAN RY. CO. (No. 20768.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CARRIERS 🔑304(1)—DUTY TO LICENSEE—NOTICE OF STARTING OF CAR.

In an action against an interurban electric railway company, the plaintiff's evidence tended to show these facts: He came to the company's station about dusk with friends who were leaving. After they had boarded the car, and before it started, he went down into the space between it and the station platform to look for a coin his little daughter had dropped. The platform was about 2 feet above the ground and 5 feet from the track. Passengers were received and discharged by a gangplank laid to the rear steps. As the defendant was stooping over, facing away from the car, it started without any signal being given, and as the front wheels turned in the other direction on a curve the rear step protruded and struck him. Held:

In the aspect most favorable to the plaintiff, he was but a licensee while in the place between the platform and the track, and the company owed him no duty to give him warning of the starting of the car.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1104, 1110–1114, 1124.]

2. CARRIERS 🔑304(1)—STARTING CAR—NEGLIGENCE.

If such a duty had been owing to him, the omission to perform it would have constituted mere negligence, and not wanton misconduct.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1104, 1110–1114, 1124.]

3. CARRIERS 🔑325—INJURY TO ONE AT STATION—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In that case his own failure to use reasonable care for his safety would bar a recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1348.]

Appeal from District Court, Sedgwick County.

Action by George Senning against the Arkansas Valley Interurban Railway Company. Demurrer to plaintiff's evidence sustained, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Earl Blake, W. A. Ayres, and C. A. McCorkle, all of Wichita, for appellant. Chester I. Long and A. M. Cowan, both of Wichita, for appellee.

MASON, J. George Senning, while standing beside the track of the Arkansas Valley Interurban Railway Company, was struck by the rear step of a car as it swung around a curve. He brought an action against the company on account of the injury received. A demurrer to his evidence was sustained, and he appeals.

The accident took place just as the car was leaving the station at Wichita. The platform used by passengers is about 15 feet wide and 2 feet high, and a little longer than one of the cars. The track is about 5 feet east of the platform, paralleling it for its full length, but a curve to the east begins about opposite its south end. Passengers are received and discharged by means of a gangplank placed from the platform (near the north end) to the rear step of the car. The plaintiff had gone to the station with friends who were leaving by the 7 o'clock car on the evening of October 14th. When the party reached the station, the car was already there. The plaintiff accompanied his friends to the gangplank, and after they had crossed it he walked south along the platform about two-thirds of the length of the car, to where his wife and little daughter were standing. He passed them, and stopped for 5 or 10 minutes talking with an acquaintance. His daughter then came to him and told him she had dropped a coin to the ground below the platform. He undertook to find it. He descended the steps at the south end of the platform, which brought him upon the sidewalk of the street, which runs east and west. He then walked north between the car and the platform about a third of the length of the car and lit several matches, looking for the coin. While he was stooping over, facing to the west, the car started, moving to the south. As the front wheels turned to the east on the curve, the rear steps protruded to the west and struck the plaintiff over the right kidney, causing the injury of which he complains. As the car stood upon the straight track, the overhang was about a third of the distance from the rail to the platform. The curve caused the rear steps to protrude, at the point where the plaintiff was struck, to about half the distance. The nearest the steps were brought to the platform by the swing at any point was about 2 feet. The negligence relied upon is the starting of the car without signal or warning. The defendant maintains that it owed no duty to the plaintiff in this regard, and that in any event his recovery is precluded by his own conduct.

[1] 1. The failure of the defendant's employés to give a signal before starting the car cannot be a basis of liability to the plaintiff, unless the omitted duty was one they owed to him (Express Co. v. Everest, 72 Kan. 517, 83 Pac. 817); and this could not be the case unless they knew of his presence or had reason to expect it. Clearly the ground between the track and the platform was not a place where passengers, passers-by, or bystanders were ordinarily to be looked for. The plaintiff, in the most favorable aspect, was a mere licensee, and the defendant was under no obligation to be actively vigilant in protecting him against danger. 33 Cyc. 767; 29 Cyc. 452; note, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 916; note, L. R. A. 1915B, 827. A suggestion is made that, as the plaintiff lit several matches, it may be inferred that he was seen by some of the defendant's employés; but we regard the inference as too remote. The petition did not allege that any employé saw the plaintiff.

[2] 2. Even if it should be assumed that the defendant did owe a duty to the plaintiff to give a signal before the car was started, the omission to do so could amount to no more serious misconduct than ordinary negligence. The evidence was not capable of supporting a reasonable inference that the defendant's employés anticipated or should have anticipated that the car would strike the plaintiff, and were indifferent to the consequences.

"One who is properly charged with recklessness or wantonness is not simply more careless than one who is only guilty of negligence; his conduct must be such as to put him in the class with the willful doer of wrong. The only respect in which his attitude is less blameworthy than that of the intentional wrongdoer is that, instead of affirmatively wishing to injure another, he is merely willing to do so. The difference is that between him who casts a missile intending that it shall strike another and him who casts it where he has reason to believe it will strike another, being indifferent whether it does so or not." Railway Co. v. Baker, 79 Kan. 183, 189, 98 Pac. 804, 807 (21 L. R. A. [N. S.] 427).

In the case just cited it is said of the circumstances necessary to warrant characterizing as wanton the conduct of trainmen towards a person in a position of peril:

"Nor is it enough that they know some one might be in the place of danger; the probability must be so great—its obviousness to the employés so insistent—that they must be deemed to realize the likelihood that a catastrophe is imminent and yet to omit reasonable effort to prevent it because indifferent to the consequences." 79 Kan. p. 187, 98 Pac. 804, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427.

[3] 3. If, therefore, the defendant did omit a duty which it owed to the plaintiff, the omission was not such as to create a liability, regardless of his own conduct. He knew, when he went between the platform and the track, that the car was likely to start within a short time. The place, although obviously not intended for the use of the public, was not necessarily one of great danger. There was abundant room for a person to stand between the platform and the nearest point to which any part of the car could approach it. The exercise of reasonable care required the plaintiff to keep himself beyond the reach of the end of the car as it swung around the curve. The outward swing of the rear steps as the front wheels took the curve was a matter of which he was chargeable with knowledge, since it is a common, if not universal, characteristic of such cars, and is a necessary consequence of the end of the car projecting over the wheels. Note, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 679; note, L. R. A. 1915C, 605, and prior notes in that series. Incidentally, if he was not aware of this phenomenon, then notice that the car was about to move would not have advised him of his danger.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 200)

STATE v. HANKS. (No. 21265.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Arson 🔑18—Information—Insurance.

In a prosecution for arson in the third degree, an information is not fatally defective because it fails to allege that the property was at the time insured against loss or damage by fire.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arson, Cent. Dig. §§ 30–32, 34–37.]

2. Indictment and Information 🔑137(6)—Quashing—Grounds.

In a prosecution under section 98 of the Crimes Act (section 3425, Gen. Stat. 1915) for arson in the third degree, the information charged that defendant burned certain personal property which was insured in the Sun Insurance Office with the intent to defraud the insurer. A motion to quash the information on the ground that it did not allege that the property was insured against loss by fire is held to have been properly overruled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 486.]

3. Arson 🔑37(1)—Conspiracy 🔑47—Sufficiency of Evidence.

The evidence examined and held sufficient to sustain the charge of conspiracy to burn and the burning of the property charged in the information.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Arson, Cent. Dig. § 71; Conspiracy, Cent. Dig. §§ 105–107.]

4. Criminal Law 🔑944—New Trial—Newly Discovered Evidence.

For reasons stated in the opinion, the action of the trial court in denying the motion for a new trial is approved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2335.]

Appeal from District Court, Saline County.

William Hanks was convicted of arson in the third degree, his motion for a new trial was overruled, and he appeals. Affirmed.

G. A. Spencer and A. R. Buzick, Jr., both of Salina, for appellant. S. M. Brewster, Atty. Gen., and W. B. Crowther, L. W. Hamner, C. W. Burch, B. I. Litowich, and La Rue Royce, all of Salina, for the State.

PORTER, J. William Hanks and Robert Kelly were jointly charged with a conspiracy to burn and with having burned the furniture in Kelly's house, which was insured in the Sun Insurance Office, with the intent to defraud the insurer. Hanks demanded and was given a separate trial, and was tried and convicted of arson in the third degree. Kelly had made an oral and written confession as to the facts of the conspiracy and was a witness for the state. After the conviction of Hanks the charge against Kelly was dismissed.

On the hearing of the motion for a new trial Kelly repudiated his confession and attempted to exonerate Hanks. He was immediately arrested and placed in jail on a charge of perjury, and the hearing was postponed several days. Later he testified again reiterating his confession, and said that his repudiation had been procured at the suggestion of Hanks; that his brother had also told him that the attorneys for Hanks had said that, the charge against him having been dismissed, there was no reason why he might not testify in favor of Hanks. The court overruled the motion for a new trial, and Hanks appeals.

[1, 2] There was a motion to quash because the information did not allege that the insurance on the furniture was against loss by fire, and it is insisted that the information was fatally defective in this respect, because the insurance might have been against loss by tornado or lightning, or some hazard other than fire. The information was drawn under section 98 of the Crimes Act (section 3425, Gen. Stat. 1915), which defines arson in the third degree as:

> The burning of "any building, boat or vessel, or any goods, wares, or merchandise, or other chattels, which shall at the time be insured against loss or damage by fire, with intent to defraud or prejudice the insurer," etc.

The defendant cites in support of his contention the following statement from 5 Corpus Juris, 567:

> "So it must be alleged that the property burned was at the time insured against loss or damage by fire."

We have carefully examined nearly every case cited in the note. The majority of them do not support the text, although a few of them do. In many of the cases the indictment expressly charged that the property was insured against loss by fire, and in several of the cases the question is not mentioned. This court has already taken the contrary view in State v. Jessup, 42 Kan. 422, 22 Pac. 627, where an indictment worded substantially as the one in the present case was held sufficient as against a motion in arrest of judgment. The defendant seeks to draw a distinction between the two cases because there was no motion to quash the information in the Jessup Case. In the opinion, however, independently of the manner in which the question was raised, it was said:

> "We think that the averments of the information as made were in legal effect equivalent to a charge that the barn at the time of its destruction was insured against loss or damage by fire. It is a principle of pleading that whatever is included in, or necessarily implied from, an express allegation, need not be otherwise averred. Baysinger v. People, 115 Ill. 419 [5 N. E. 375]. The defendant, the court, and the jury all well understood from the information the offense with which the defendant was charged; this is too clear to admit of serious doubt." 42 Kan. 424, 22 Pac. 628.

In Hart v. State, 181 Ind. 23, 103 N. E. 840, the indictment alleged that the property was insured in a policy which had been issued by the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn. The statute contained the same requirement as ours. The motion to quash was based solely upon the absence of a direct averment that the insurance was against loss or damage by fire. The court held the indictment sufficient "since the name of the company, standing alone, would warrant the inference that the insurance was against fire loss, and the further allegation that the property was fired to defraud that company compels such inference." Syllabus 4. It was said in the opinion that it was necessary to allege that it was insurance against loss or damage by fire, but that the Indiana Code of Criminal Procedure "requires no greater degree of certainty in criminal pleadings than is required in civil ones," and that "certainty, to a common intent, at least under the Code system, is attained when the pleading shall be deemed to allege all that can be implied from the direct allegations therein, by a reasonable and fair intendment." 181 Ind. 25, 103 N. E. 846.

In the case at bar the name of the insurance company mentioned in the information does not contain the words "fire insurance," but it seems absurd to contend that the defendant was not fully informed of the exact nature of the charge against him. The insurance must necessarily have covered the kind of loss naturally resulting from the act of setting fire to the property. If the insurance had been against some kind of loss other than by fire, burning the property could not have defrauded the insurer, and the purpose of the conspiracy is alleged to have been to defraud the insurance company. We regard the point, however, as too technical to invite serious consideration except for the fact that the numerical weight of authority appears to be in favor of defendant's contention. The conflict of authority can only be explained by the different attitude courts take as to the relative importance of purely technical omissions and defects in criminal procedure. In this state technical objections which do not affect the substantial rights of the defendant are disregarded. Section 293, Crim. Code; section 8215, Gen. Stat. 1915; State v. King, 165 Pac. 665.

[3] It is seriously insisted that "there is not one word of evidence in this record which even remotely tends to show the existence of a conspiracy between this appellant and Robert Kelly," and it is further said that the defendant was convicted solely upon the testimony of a confessed perjurer. Quite naturally the defendant did not testify directly to the conspiracy, but there was circumstantial evidence to prove it in addition to the confession of Kelly. The furniture burned was in a house rented by Robert Kelly and occupied by himself and family. He held a policy of fire insurance to the amount of $300 on the furniture. Guthrie, brother-in-law of Kelly, lived about two blocks distant. Hanks is a cousin of Guthrie. The evidence was that defendant, took an empty five-gallon oil can from Guthrie's to Kelly's house on the 20th of September. Later in the day he took the same oil can to a grocery store near by where he purchased and paid for five gallons of coal oil and ordered it delivered at the Kelly home. He returned to the Kelly home and ate his noon meal and his supper there. The oil was delivered about 5 o'clock in the afternoon and placed upon an outside back porch. After supper the Guthrie family, the Kelly family, and Hanks left the Kelly house together and walked to the post office. The Guthries and the Kellys went to an air dome show, leaving the defendant near the post office at about 8 o'clock. The fire was discovered at 10:20 p. m. The fire chief found that coal oil had been thrown upon the bed and furniture in one room where the furniture was practically consumed, and the bedding in another room was saturated with oil and partly burned. There was no connection between the two rooms. A hole had been broken in the wall between the kitchen and another room and a broom saturated with coal oil had been placed in the hole. The house was closed, and the fire had apparently burned very slowly. The five-gallon can was found to be half full of oil, and a two-gallon can used by the Kelly family stood in the kitchen half full. Hanks attempted to prove an alibi and had a number of witnesses testify that he went to bed that night very early. He had a room at another place.

[4] After Kelly confessed to the officers, he was taken into the presence of Hanks, where he accused Hanks of burning the property and of persuading him to allow it to be done. He accused Hanks of having told him after the fire that he had burned it and how he burned it. The officers asked the defendant if these statements were true, but he refused to answer. He was asked a number of times whether he would say that Kelly was lying, and said:

"No; he wouldn't say that he was."

He was certainly very considerate of Kelly's feelings. His attitude was the same as if he had remarked:

> "I would not go so far as to say that my friend here has made a false statement; possibly he may be laboring under a misapprehension of the facts."

There was abundant circumstantial evidence to sustain the charge of the conspiracy and of the offense of arson. Our views of the ruling denying a new trial are well expressed by the following observations made by the trial court in passing upon the motion:

> "The motion for a new trial contains all the statutory grounds, but the only one seriously urged in this hearing is that of newly discovered evidence. The defendant relies upon the State v. Keleher, 74 Kan. 631, 87 Pac. 738. I am familiar with the facts in that case, and I do not think I misapprehend the law as stated in that decision. Neither do I fail to recognize the wisdom and justice of that decision. But the case at bar is easily distinguished from the Keleher Case.
>
> "Immediately after the conviction of Hanks and the dismissal of Kelly, Hanks began to importune Kelly to repudiate the statement made by him to the county attorney. It will be noted that he did not say to Kelly: 'Kelly, you have done me a great wrong. The statement you made to the county attorney is false, and you know it is false. That statement helped to convict me, and I want you to right that wrong. I want you to be a witness for me at the hearing of my motion for a new trial, and I ask you to say to the court that I am innocent, that I had nothing to do with the transaction.' What he did say to Kelly was: 'Now, Kelly, you are out of danger. The case against you has been dismissed. No one can trouble you any more. I want you to repudiate your statement to the county attorney and swear that I had nothing to do with setting fire to the furniture.' And it appears that it had required several weeks of persuasion to get Kelly to repudiate that statement and to testify at this hearing as he has testified.

"The defendant has had a fair trial. The verdict of the jury is a righteous verdict, and the court can without hesitation approve it. Having observed what occurred at the trial of this case, including the demeanor of the witnesses, as well as all the proceedings in this hearing, and having no doubt whatever of the defendant's guilt, I feel that to grant a new trial simply because Kelly has been induced to repudiate a confession that I firmly believe was true would be to make of this case a ridiculous farce."

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 195)

GRAY v. BOARD OF COUNTY COM'RS OF SEDGWICK COUNTY et al. (No. 21260.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑348—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—GENERAL PURPOSE.
The general purpose of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Gen. St. 1915, § 5896 et seq.) is to provide for compensation to workmen injured in hazardous employments carried on for the purpose of business, trade, or gain.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑364—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—EMPLOYERS SUBJECT—COUNTY—"TRADE OR BUSINESS."
A county in resurfacing a county road is not engaged in trade or business within the terms or operation of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Business; Trade.]

Johnston, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from District Court, Sedgwick County.

Suit under the Workmen's Compensation Act by G. S. Gray against the Board of County Commissioners of Sedgwick County, Kan., and others. Demurrer to petition overruled, and the defendants appeal. Order overruling demurrer to petition reversed and cause remanded, with directions to sustain the demurrer.

Ross McCormick and Glenn Porter, both of Wichita, and H. O. Caster, of Topeka, for appellants. Campbell & Campbell, of Wichita, for appellee.

WEST, J. The plaintiff was employed by the county commissioners to work with his team hauling gravel for use on a county road in Sedgwick county, which the board and engineer were grading and surfacing. While thus engaged his foot slipped and was caught under the wheels of his loaded wagon and injured. He sued the county under the Workmen's Compensation Act. A demurrer to the petition was overruled, and the county appeals, averring that it was not an employer engaged in trade or business within the terms of the statute.

[1] The general scheme of this legislation has been to enable those engaged in operating hazardous industries to compensate workmen injured therein and add the cost to the price of the product, thus extending the burden to the consumer.

[2] Assuming without deciding that hauling gravel from the gravel pit to place on a public highway is within the act on the theory that the employment is "on, in or about a * * * mine or quarry" (section 5900, Gen. Stat. 1915; section 5903, defining "mine"; section 5903, subd. D, defining "quarry"), the question arises as to whether the county was an employer engaged in its trade or business. Section 5900 provides:

> "This act shall apply only to employment in the course of the employer's trade or business on, in or about a railway, factory, mine or quarry, electric, building or engineering work, laundry, natural gas plant, county and municipal work, and all employments wherein a process requiring the use of any dangerous explosive or inflammable materials is carried on, which is conducted for the purpose of business, trade or gain. * * *"

This section seems to cover first employment in the course of the employer's trade or business in certain places or kinds of work, and, second, all employments dangerous in the way mentioned and conducted for the purpose of business, trade or gain. The words "county and municipal work" were added by the Legislature of 1913, and if applied only to the case of one who contracts to do county or municipal work and employs workmen therein, are clear enough. But running through the entire language are the two ideas not only of an employment in certain classes of work, but an employment therein by an employer in the course of his trade or business conducted for a profit. The provisions of the statutes of various other states are quoted showing that in many of them the clear use of terms has left the matter as to municipalities free from doubt, but they do not aid much in the construction of the statute before us. As applied to this case the amended provision may be thus read:

> "This act shall apply only to employment in the course of the employer's trade or business on, in or about * * * county and municipal work, and all employments wherein a process * * * is carried on, which (employment) is conducted for the purpose of business, trade or gain: each of which employments (all those previously mentioned) is hereby determined to be especially dangerous * * * and as to each of which employments it is deemed necessary to establish a new system of compensation for injuries to workmen."

If engaged in county work in the course of employer's trade or business for profit the workman is within the statute, whether the work is actually hazardous or not, such work being deemed and declared dangerous. Agricultural pursuits and employments incident thereto are declared non-hazardous and exempt. In amending the section it was the intention to add county and municipal work and exclude agricultural work, thus changing the kinds of employment to which the act was to apply. It was a change in employments, not in employers. Before the amendment a contractor doing county or municipal work was not within the statute, unless engaged in doing work actually hazardous. Now such work is in effect made hazardous by being declared so and brought within the operation of the act. The definition of "employer" was left as before to include "any person or body of persons corporate or incorporate, and the legal representatives of a deceased employer or the receiver or trustee of a person, corporation, association or partnership." But persons corporate or incorporate in order to be employers within the act must employ the workmen in the course of their trade or business, terms which do not naturally or properly apply to a county in the administration of its affairs. "Business" has been held to be synonymous with "calling," "occupation," or "trade," and defined as "any particular occupation or employment engaged in for a livelihood or gain." City of Topeka v. Jones, 74 Kan. 164, 86 Pac. 162, 87 Pac. 1133.

Under the provisions of section 8765 of the General Statutes of 1915, the county engineer or township trustee was required to keep certain roads in repair and authorized to enter upon adjoining land and carry away gravel, the expense thereof to be allowed by the highway commissioners and paid by the board of county commissioners when such matter is used upon a county or state road. Counsel in his brief asks:

> "When Sedgwick county undertook to operate a sand pit and to build or resurface the North Lawrence Avenue road by direct employment of labor, instead of by contract, the county doing the identical work that a contractor is now doing on the South Lawrence Avenue road, was it exercising a governmental function?"

In Pfefferle v. Com'rs of Lyon Co., 39 Kan. 432, 436, 18 Pac. 506, 508, it was said of counties:

> "They are usually denominated quasi corporations, and their principal functions are governmental and political, and not private or of a strictly corporate character. Counties are principally mere political subdivisions of the state, mere instrumentalities of the state government, brought into existence merely for the purpose of aiding and assisting the state in promoting justice, in preserving peace, quiet and good order in the state, and of promoting the welfare and happiness of the citizens thereof; and these objects are the ones which counties are designed to subserve when they are authorized to build, own, and keep county jails. These objects do not partake at all of a private character; and they are not engaged in as business transactions, nor for the purpose of increasing the wealth of the county as an organization."

In Silver v. Clay County, 76 Kan. 228, 91 Pac. 55, it was held that counties are mere auxiliaries to the state government, and partake of the state's immunity from liability, and are in no sense business corporations. In that case damages were sought for the abandonment of a highway and the removal of a bridge. In the opinion it was said that since the organization of the state it has been the duty of counties and townships to maintain public roads and bridges. In Shawnee County v. Jacobs, 79 Kan. 76, 81, 99 Pac. 817, 819 (21 L. R. A. [N. S.] 209), it was held that a county engaged in building a bridge upon a public highway acts as a subdivision of the state government, and is not liable for the negligent performance of such work unless expressly made so by statute. In the opinion it was said:

> "The duty of building bridges and maintaining the public highway has devolved upon the counties and townships of this state since its organization. In the performance of this duty the county acts as an agency of the state, and is no more liable for its acts while so engaged than the state itself would have been if doing the same work."

In Griswold v. City of Wichita, 99 Kan. 502, 504, 162 Pac. 276, 277, an action to recover for the death of a policeman killed in the discharge of his duties, in holding that the deceased was not a workman as defined by the compensation act, and in speaking of th amendment of 1913 adding the words "county and municipal work," it was said that it may have been the intention of the Legislature to relieve any doubt that might exist as to the application of the act to county and municipal work "which is conducted for the purpose of business, trade or gain," "provided the nature of the work is such as to render it especially dangerous and hazardous to life and limb of the workmen engaged therein." It was also said that the theory of the act is that the employer may without loss to himself distribute the burden upon the consumers which constitute the public. "Many good reasons might be suggested for including within the scope of the act workmen employed in hazardous enterprises by cities engaged in conducting a business for profit, as electric light or waterworks plants, because a city, like any private individual engaged in trade or business, could pass on to the public at large the burden by adding to the cost of the service. But where a city is engaged merely in the exercise of its governmental functions we think it clear that the workman, no matter how hazardous his employment, would not come within the spirit and purpose of the compensation act any more than the clerks and stenographers in the case of Udey v. City of Winfield [97 Kan. 279, 155 Pac. 43], supra. So that even though a policeman be regarded as a workman in the employ of the city, and notwithstanding the performance of his duties places him at times in a dangerous and hazardous situation, still, the employer, the city, is not engaged in trade or business, and therefore a policeman is not within either the spirit or letter of section 2 of the act, which limits its application to persons employed for the purpose of the employer's trade or business." 99 Kan. p. 506, 162 Pac. 277.

The distinction between cities and counties was pointed out in Beach v. Leahy, 11 Kan. 23, and referred to in Fisher v. Township, 87 Kan. 674, 677, 125 Pac. 94, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 554, and Haddock v. McDonald, 98 Kan. 628, 159 Pac. 402. Cities have been held liable for certain acts or omissions from which counties are relieved, and in view of the unvarying rule to relieve the latter from all liability not expressly imposed by statute it would be a departure to hold the defendant county liable. In Udey v. City of Winfield, 97 Kan. 279, 155 Pac. 43, and Knoll v. City of Salina, 98 Kan. 428, 157 Pac. 1167, the question before us was not raised. It is now presented for the first time. It must be held that the county was not engaged in trade or business so as to bring this case within the application of the compensation act.

The order overruling the demurrer to the petition is reversed, and the cause remanded. with directions to sustain such demurrer.

BURCH, MASON, PORTER, MARSHALL, and DAWSON, JJ., concurring. JOHNSTON, C. J., dissenting.

(101 Kan. 228)

ROBERTS et al. v. CITY OF OTTAWA.

(No. 21256.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917. Rehearing Denied, July 11, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MASTER AND SERVANT 🔑364—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—EMPLOYER—CITY.

A city in constructing a lateral sewer, while exercising its proprietary power, is not engaged in an enterprise involving any element of gain or profit, and therefore is not within the terms or operation of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Gen. St. 1915, § 5900).

Johnston, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from District Court, Franklin County.

Action by Fannie Roberts and others against the City of Ottawa. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

F. M. Harris, of Ottawa, for appellant. W. S. Jenks, of Ottawa, for appellees.

WEST, J. The plaintiff sued for the death of her husband caused by the caving in of a lateral sewer in which he was at work. The plaintiff recovered, and the defendant appeals.

Some point is sought to be made touching the failure of the deceased to use certain safeguards, but the only material question concerns the applicability of the Workmen's Compensation Act to the defendant city in this case. A lateral sewer to be paid for entirely by property owners and in no part by the city at large was to be built and the work was let to certain men who employed the deceased. The specifications contained many provisions to the effect that the work was to be done under the supervision of the city engineer or such assistants as might be placed in charge of the work by the mayor and council. Incompetent persons engaged upon the work were to be discharged upon the written requisition of the engineer and in various ways not necessary to recount the construction of the sewer was to progress under his supervision.

It is claimed by the city that in constructing this sewer at the sole expense of the property owners it was not engaged in trade or business, but in a purely health measure carried on under the governmental side of its activities. On the other hand it is urged that the city is within the act because it was engaged in its municipal business, and although it had let the work out to contractors it was still sufficiently in charge thereof to be within the purview of the statute. This is a companion case to Gray v. Com'rs of Sedgwick County, 165 Pac. 867, just decided, a somewhat different question, however, being involved. Was the city engaged in its trade or business within the meaning of section 5900 of the General Statutes of 1915? That the rule applying to cities is quite different from that affecting counties and other quasi municipalities is indicated in the decision referred to and authorities therein cited. In Freeman v. Chanute, 63 Kan. 573, 66 Pac. 647, in distinguishing between the different powers of a city, it was said:

> "In the exercise of its quasi private or corporate power a municipality is like a private corporation, and is liable for a failure to use its power well or for an injury caused by using it negligently. In building its waterworks, gas, electric light plants, sewers, and other internal improvements which are for the exclusive benefit of the corporation, it is in the exercise of its quasi private power and is liable to the same extent as are private corporations." 63 Kan. 577, 66 Pac. 648.

In Bowden v. Kansas City, 69 Kan. 587, 77 Pac. 573, 66 L. R. A. 181, 105 Am. St. Rep. 187, 1 Ann. Cas. 955, the following expression from Johnston v. District of Columbia, 118 U. S. 19, 6 Sup. Ct. 923, 30 L. Ed. 75, was quoted with approval:

> "But the construction and repair of sewers according to the general plan so adopted are simply ministerial duties; and for any negligence in so constructing a sewer, or keeping it in repair, the municipality which has constructed and owns the sewer may be sued by a person whose property is thereby injured." 69 Kan. 593, 77 Pac. 575, 66 L. R. A. 181, 105 Am. St. Rep. 187, 1 Ann. Cas. 955.

In the opinion itself it was said:

> "When a municipal corporation assumes the performance of a public duty which was permissive only and enters upon the discharge of such duty, and through the negligent performance thereof by its authorized agents one is injured either in person or property, the corporation cannot escape liability by saying that the performance of this duty was not imperative."

In Fisher v. Township, 87 Kan. 674, 125 Pac. 94, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 554, numerous authorities were cited touching the different sorts of liability attaching to cities and merely quasi corporations, and it was said:

> "While the soundness of this distinction has been questioned it is too firmly fixed in the jurisprudence of this state, following the weight of authority elsewhere, to be overturned except by legislative action."

In Butler v. Kansas City, 97 Kan. 239, 155 Pac. 12, L. R. A. 1916D, 626, Hibbard v. City of Wichita, 98 Kan. 498, 159 Pac. 399, L. R. A. 1917A, 399, and Frost v. City of Topeka, 98 Kan. 636, 161 Pac. 936, a pesthouse, a public park, and a detention hospital, respectively, were involved and held to concern only the governmental action of a city.

Under the rulings referred to distinguishing between a city's governmental and proprietary powers the building of the lateral sewer in question doubtless comes within the latter rather than the former. But, as pointed out in the Gray Case, in order to bring the city within the statute this proprietary work must have been in the nature of a business or trade involving the idea of profit or gain. Certainly the construction of a lateral sewer to be paid for by the property owners of a given sewer district is not trade or business in the sense of profit, or in any commercial sense. The question of subcontractor is discussed by counsel, but section 4 of the act (section 5898) imposes on the principal only such liability as would rest on him had he employed the workman himself. Hence the question is not one requiring further discussion.

If the Legislature intended to bring cities and counties within the operation of the act it is remarkable that no apt or clear language indicating such intention was used. On the contrary, section 2 of chapter 218 of the Laws of 1911—the original act—provided for an election in certain cases involving "the individual negligence * * * of the directors or of any managing * * * agent of such employer if a corporation, or of any of the partners if such employer is a partnership." The term "managing agent" does not naturally or ordinarily apply to cities. Section 16 (section 5910) provides that: "Employers affected by this act shall report annually to the state commission and factory inspector," certain things including particulars as to all releases of liability, the penalty for failure to report being the invalidation of such releases. Can it fairly be said that the Legislature intended to require these reports from cities and other municipalities?

The statute must be liberally construed, but the courts cannot go beyond the Legislature and add what was omitted, or change the character and manifest object, purpose, and limitations of the enactment. There being an utter absence of all elements of business or trade in the usual sense and meaning of the words and no possibility of gain to the city by way of profit out of the work it was doing or having done, it must be held that the compensation act does not apply.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

BURCH, MASON, PORTER, MARSHALL, and DAWSON, JJ., concurring. JOHNSTON, C. J., dissenting.

(101 Kan. 37)

FARMERS' & MERCHANTS' STATE BANK OF CONCORDIA v. BOARD OF COM'RS OF CLOUD COUNTY. (No. 20675.) *

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ANIMALS 🔑32—CONDEMNATION—CERTIFICATE—ATTACK.

In an action against a county founded upon a certificate issued by the state live stock commissioner, reciting the condemnation of certain cattle as infected with tuberculosis, and ordering payment to their owner of the amount fixed by the appraisement, such certificate is not open to attack except on account of fraud, collusion, or similar misconduct. Following Cory v. Graybill, 96 Kan. 20, 149 Pac. 417.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Cent. Dig. § 82.]

2. ANIMALS 🔑32—CONDEMNATION—CERTIFICATE—FRAUD.

In such a case evidence that the appraisers, by advice of the live stock commissioner, appraised the cattle at their sound value, has no tendency to show fraud or its equivalent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Cent. Dig. § 82.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑289—REVIEW—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

A ruling excluding certain evidence held not to be reviewable because it was not produced at the hearing of the motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1691-1696.]

4. ANIMALS 🔑32 — CONDEMNATION — ACTION ON CERTIFICATE—PROOF.

In such a case it was not necessary for the plaintiff to plead that the cattle were not within certain excepted classes for which no compensation is allowed, nor to prove in the first instance any fact other than the issuance of the certificate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Cent. Dig. § 82.]

Appeal from District Court, Cloud County.

Action by the Farmers' & Merchants' State Bank of Concordia, Kan., against the Board of County Commissioners of Cloud County, Kan. Judgment for plaintiff on a directed verdict, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Rehearing denied September 21, 1917.

M. V. B. Van De Mark and Sturges & Sturges, all of Concordia, for appellant. Pulsifer & Hunt and Clyde L. Short, all of Concordia, for appellee.

MASON, J. The state live stock commissioner issued to M. P. Knudson three certificates stating that cattle belonging to him had been condemned as being infected with tuberculosis and disposed of in accordance with the statute (Gen. Stat. 1915, §§ 11083–11086), and ordering the payment by Cloud county of half their appraised value, and in the case of four animals, which a post mortem examination showed not to have been infected, of the whole value. Knudson assigned the certificates to the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Concordia. The bank presented them for payment, and on this being refused brought an action upon them against the county. A verdict was directed in favor of the plaintiff, on which judgment was rendered. The defendant appeals.

[1] 1. A reversal is asked principally on the ground that the defendant was not allowed to introduce evidence tending to show that irregularities were committed with respect to the condemnation of the cattle, that the appraisement was excessive, and that the cattle were brought into the state under such circumstances that compensation to the owner is forbidden by the statute. It has already been determined in a mandamus for the payment of a similar certificate (and the rule is necessarily the same in an action like the present) that the certificate given by the live stock commissioner is conclusive upon the county in the absence of fraud, collusion, or similar misconduct. Cory v. Graybill, 96 Kan. 20, 149 Pac. 417.

[2] 2. The defendant maintains that the evidence introduced and offered was sufficient to take to the jury the question of fraud in the appraisement. Its evidence on this point was mainly to the effect that the cattle were appraised at too high a figure. This had no tendency to show fraud. State v. White, 82 Kan. 777, 109 Pac. 402. There was also testimony, however, that the appraisers, under the advice of the assistant live stock commissioner, valued the cattle as if they were not diseased. If an appraisement were shown to have been made under a radical mistake of law as to the proper basis of valuation, it might be set aside on the ground that it did not represent the judgment of the appraisers as to the matter committed to them. See, in this connection, 2 Page and Jones on Taxation by Assessment, § 672; 26 Cyc. 162; 28 Cyc. 1168; Notes 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 525, 98 Am. St. Rep. 871; State v. Stockwell, 7 Kan. 103. "But the statute does not contemplate that a condemned animal shall be appraised at the value of the carcass because diseased and because it is to be slaughtered at once. If this were true, the alternative given the owner by section 23 (Gen. Stat. 1915, § 11101) would amount to nothing." Cory v. Graybill, supra. The law manifestly intends that the cattle condemned as tubercular, upon which disease has produced no effects visible to ordinary observation, shall be appraised at their sound value. Its policy is that an animal which after expert examination is believed to be infected shall be killed, the loss to be borne wholly by the public if the belief proves ill founded, and otherwise to be shared equally with the owner. To make a deduction from the apparent value of the suspected animal because of the suspicion would defeat the purpose of the statute.

[3] 3. The defendant called the live stock commissioner as a witness and asked him whether he had made any inquiry as to the origin of the cattle or as to how long they had been in the state. An objection to questions of this character was sustained. The defendant then offered to prove that the cattle were brought into the state in violation of the rules of the live stock sanitary commission, and the offer was rejected. In the defendant's brief it is argued that error was committed in these rulings because the evidence if admitted would have had a tendency to show that the commissioner made no investigation as to the origin of the cattle, and neither knew nor cared where they came from, and that such conduct tended to prove fraud and collusion. From the abstract it appears that no offer in this connection was made at the trial beyond what has just been stated—that no explicit suggestion of a want of good faith on the part of the commissioner was made in connection with the offer. And upon the hearing of the motion for a new trial there was no showing that in fact the commissioner had not investigated the origin of the cattle. Therefore no ruling in connection with this matter is reviewable. Code of Civil Procedure, § 307 (Gen. St. 1915, § 7209).

[4] 4. These considerations practically dispose of the case, and only brief mention need be made of the complaints of specific rulings. The petition is criticized for its failure to allege facts showing that the cattle were not within any of the classes for which under the statute no compensation is to be made. Inasmuch as the certificates were sufficient to make a prima facie case, and were only assailable for fraud or its equivalent, it was not necessary for the plaintiff to plead the nonexistence of the exceptional conditions that would have prevented liability on the part of the county. Objections are made to the competency of evidence introduced by the plaintiffs showing the disposition of the cattle. As the certificates were sufficient in themselves until successfully attacked the introduction of other evidence by the plaintiff, although unnecessary, could not have been prejudicial. Complaint is made that the order to pay was addressed to the county instead of to the board of county commissioners, but the difference in the form of expression is not important. The official title of the county as a litigant is "the board of county commissioners" (Gen. Stat. 1915, § 2532); but doubtless any apt designation would serve the same purpose.

The judgment is affirmed. All the Justices concurring.

(101 Kan. 44)

PATTERSON v. UNCLE SAM OIL CO.

(No. 20682.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. June 9, 1917.)

Appeal from District Court, Sedgwick County. Action by George W. Patterson against the Uncle Sam Oil Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial upon terms to be imposed by the court.

Redmond S. Brennan, of Kansas City, Mo., for appellant. Dedrick & Dedrick and Adams & Adams, all of Wichita, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This case was submitted in connection with the foregoing case of Hortense Patterson v. Uncle Sam Oil Co., 165 Pac. 661; and, the questions in issue being substantially identical in the two cases, the judgment in this case is also reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to grant a new trial upon terms to be imposed by the court.

(97 Wash. 43)

MEZGER et ux. v. HAZELWOOD IRRIGATED FARMS CO. et al. (No. 13766.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 19, 1917.)

1. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑110—Rescission of Contract—Grounds.

The fact that trees had not been properly cared for would not furnish a ground for rescission, by the purchaser, of a contract for the purchase and sale of real estate; but the remedy for breach of that portion of the contract would be an action for damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 196, 197.]

2. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑44—Rescission of Contract—Evidence—Sufficiency.

In an action by the purchaser, seeking to rescind a contract for the purchase of real estate, on the ground that the vendor fraudulently represented that the land was suitable for a home, evidence held to support a finding that the representations made by defendants were made in good faith, and were in fact true, and that the land was suitable for a home site.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 69–76.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; Henry L. Kennan, Judge.

Action by George E. Mezger and wife against the Hazelwood Irrigated Farms Company and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Carl Ultes, Jr., of Spokane, for appellants. Cullen, Lee & Matthews, of Spokane, for respondents.

MAIN, J. The purpose of this action was to rescind a contract for the purchase of real estate. The cause was tried to the court without a jury, and resulted in findings of fact, conclusions of law, and a judgment denying the rescission. From this judgment, the plaintiffs appeal.

The facts are these: On January 25, 1909, the appellants, being then residents of the city of Chicago, in the state of Illinois, purchased from the Hazelwood Irrigated Farms Company, a corporation doing business at Spokane, Wash., five acres of irrigated land, located near the city of Spokane. The selling agent, through which this transaction was consummated, was Neely & Young, a corporation located in the city of Spokane. The negotiations leading up to the purchase of the land were conducted by correspondence. The appellants at no time saw the land prior to February 13, 1914, when they came West for the purpose of locating thereon. By the terms of the contract of purchase, the Hazelwood Irrigated Farms Company was to prepare the land, set it to trees, and care for the same for a period of one year. In addition to this, it was contracted between the parties that the Hazelwood Irrigated Farms Company would cultivate and take care of the orchard for a period of four or five years additional for a stipulated consideration. When the appellants came West, and viewed the land and the trees thereon, they were dissatisfied in two respects: First, that the trees were not in as good condition as they should be; and, second, that there was a depression on the south end of the tract, next to the highway, which rendered it undesirable as a home site. After tendering a deed to the Hazelwood Irrigated Farms Company, demanding the return of their money, and giving notice of a rescission, the appellants instituted the present action.

[1] The fact that the trees had not been properly cared for, if it be a fact, would not furnish a ground for rescission, because the remedy for a breach of that portion of the contract would be an action for damages. Crampton v. McLaughlin Realty Co., 51 Wash. 525, 99 Pac. 586, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 823; 3 Elliott on Contracts, § 2049. If we understand the contention of the appellants correctly, they claim that it was represented to them, prior to the purchase, that the land was capable of producing a commercially bearing orchard, and that the trees would come into bearing between four and five years after planting, and that the tract was a suitable place for a home, all of which, it is claimed, was false and untrue. There is little evidence in the record that would sustain the contention that the tract of land was incapable of producing a commercially bearing orchard, and that the trees would not come into bearing within five or six years.

[2] The principal contention, however, is that the tract of land was not suitable for a home, because there was a depression on the south end thereof, upon which, during the spring rains and freshets, water would accumulate. The evidence upon the extent to which the water would cover the land, its depth, and the duration of time that it would remain thereon was conflicting. If that offered by the appellants correctly described the extent, depth, and duration of the time that the water remained upon the land, the representation that the tract was suitable for a home site would doubtless be fraudulent. On the other hand, if the evidence offered by the respondents correctly presents the situation, there was no false representation. The trial court found that the representations made by the respondents were in good faith, and were in fact true, and that the particular tract in question was suitable for a home. After a careful consideration of all the evidence, we think it supports the findings and judgment of the trial court.

There are a large number of assignments of error, by which questions of fact only are presented. It would serve no useful purpose to review in detail the evidence of the respective parties, balancing one against the other, and show wherein the preponderance lies, by pointing out the weakness of one and the strength of the other. It is sufficient to say that, in our opinion, the appellants failed to establish their charge of fraud, and, as above stated, the question of damages for breach of the contract to properly care for the trees cannot be determined in this action.

The judgment will be affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and CHADWICK, MORRIS, and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 18)

SMITH et al. v. BARBER et al. (No. 13923.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 18, 1917.)

1. Specific Performance 🔑97(1) — Sufficiency of Plaintiff's Performance—"On the Contract."

Under a land contract making time of the essence and calling for payment by plaintiff on the land of $143.50 to the state on the contract outstanding, plaintiff could not require specific performance, where he had not made such payment, and, on defendant's paying the amount due the state, had merely demanded of defendant a statement of the amount so paid by her; for the phrase "on the contract" means according to the terms of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 286-290, 294, 295.]

2. Specific Performance 🔑3 — Performance by Plaintiff of Contract.

In suit for specific performance, whether or not defendant was entitled to rescind and forfeit the contract was immaterial, since plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the strength of his own case and not upon the weakness of the defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 3½.]

3. Specific Performance 🔑99 — Performance by Plaintiff of Contract.

A party cannot enforce specific performance of a contract while in default of its terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 299-304.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; E. H. Sullivan, Judge.

Action by Del Cary Smith, administrator and others, against Anna Barber and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Tolman & King, of Spokane, for appellants.
E. J. Farley, of Spokane, for respondents.

MORRIS, J. Appeal from a decree denying specific performance of a contract for the purchase of real estate. Prior to October, 1910, Owen H. Barber and Anna Barber were husband and wife. On the 3d day of August, 1907, they entered into a contract with the state of Washington for the purchase of certain real estate in the city of Spokane. The purchase price was fixed at $300, of which $30 was paid at the time of the execution of the contract and the remainder was to be paid in nine annual installments on March 1st, with interest on all sums then unpaid. By a decree of divorce in October, 1910, this property was set aside to Anna Barber as her separate property. In November, 1910, Owen H. Barber and Anna Barber entered into the contract which forms the basis of this action, and which is as follows, so far as material:

"It is hereby agreed, by and between Anna Barber, divorced wife of O. H. Barber, the party of the first part, and O. H. Barber, the party of the second part, that the said party of the first part will sell to the said party of the second part, his heirs and assigns; and the said party of the second part will purchase of said party of the first part, her heirs, executors, or administrators, the following described lot, tract or parcel of land situated in Spokane county, state of Washington, to wit: An undivided half interest in lot 12, block 31, subdivision of school section 16, township 25, range 43, E. W. M., with the appurtenances thereto belonging, on the following terms:

"1. The purchase price of said land to be $1,000 of which the sum of $1,000 has this day been paid as earnest money, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged by the said party of the first part, and the further sum of $143.50, to be paid the state of Washington, on a contract now outstanding with interest thereon from date until paid at the rate of six per cent. per annum.

"2. Said land to be conveyed by good and sufficient deed to the said party of the second part, when said purchase price shall have been fully paid.

"3. Time is the essence of this contract.

"4. If the said party of the second part fails to pay the whole sum of said purchase price and interest, within the time above specified, then the said party of the first part may if she so elect rescind this contract, and in that case all payments made by said party of the second part shall be forfeited."

Owen H. Barber died the following April, and the appellants are his administrator and heirs. On July 18, 1913, nothing having been paid upon the contract by Owen H. Barber, Anna Barber served upon his administrator a notice of forfeiture, appellants being given until the 29th day of July to comply with the contract and make the payments therein designated; and on December 24, 1913, the contract still being uncomplied with, a second notice of forfeiture was served in which the contract was declared rescinded and forfeited. On December 7, 1914, the administrator tendered to respondent the sum of $180 as payment of the amount due under the contract, which tender was refused, and the same, with interest, was repeated at the trial and the amount deposited with the clerk of the court. The lower court found that plaintiffs had failed to show any right to recover, and that the action should be dismissed.

[1-3] Appellants' first contention is that under his contract Owen H. Barber was privileged to pay the sum of $143.50 to the state at any time within the term of the contract, and that a payment as late as March 1, 1916, the day of the final payment, would be a compliance with his contract with Anna Barber. The contract calls for a payment of $143.50 to be paid the state of Washington by Owen H. Barber "on the contract now outstanding with interest thereon from date until paid at the rate of six per cent." The phrase "on the contract" means according to the terms of that contract. There was due the state at that time, according to the terms of the contract, a sum in excess of $143.50. There was neither allegation nor proof that prior to instituting this action Owen H. Barber or his representatives had made a payment of any sum to the state, or had attempted in any way to comply with the terms of the contract. The second amended complaint upon which the action was tried alleges that subsequent to the death of Owen H. Barber in April, 1911, Anna Barber paid the state the amount due upon the contract of purchase with the state; that appellants have demanded of her a statement of the amount so paid, which demand has been refused, and that they were informed by Anna Barber that she would reject and refuse to accept any tender that might be made. The proof goes no further. Certainly this is not sufficient to support an action for specific performance. Appellants say little in their brief concerning their right of recovery but say much concerning respondent's right to a forfeiture. Whether or not respondent was entitled to rescind and forfeit the contract is immaterial. Appellants must recover, if at all, upon the strength of their own case, and not upon the weakness of the defense. Their right to a specific performance of the contract between Owen H. Barber and Anna Barber depends upon strict compliance with that contract on the part of Owen H. Barber. This they failed to prove. Nor did they offer any justification or waiver of their failure in this respect. A party cannot enforce specific performance of a contract while in default of its terms.

Kiefer v. Carter Contracting & Hauling Co., 59 Wash. 108, 109 Pac. 332. Under the terms of the contract between the Barbers it contemplated a future, not a present, sale, conferring neither right nor title upon the vendee until by compliance with its terms he had himself performed. The term of the contract necessary to be complied with in order for Owen H. Barber to have the right of performance was the payment of $143.50 to the state of Washington. No proof of such compliance having been offered, no conveyance under the contract could be enforced. Younkman v. Hillman, 53 Wash. 661, 102 Pac. 773; Tieton Hotel Co. v. Manheim, 75 Wash. 641, 135 Pac. 658.

The record is susceptible to no other judgment than that appealed from. It is affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and CHADWICK, MAIN, and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 22)

GRIFFITH et al. v. GIFFORD et al.

(No. 13924.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 18, 1917.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⚿36(2) — MISREPRESENTATIONS.

The presence of wild snapdragon upon a farm was of such material consequence as to justify rescission of the contract for purchase of the farm because of misrepresentation as to its existence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 40, 53.]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⚿44 — ACTION FOR RESCISSION.

In action to rescind a contract for purchase of real estate on the ground of fraud, evidence held to show material misrepresentations by vendor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 69-76.]

3. CONTRACTS ⚿99(1)—RESCISSION.

Where fraud is charged as the basis of rescinding a contract, it must be established by clear and convincing evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 448-453, 1197.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; Wm. A. Huneke, Judge.

Action by H. S. Griffith and others against Charles Gifford and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded, with direction.

Zent & Powell, of Spokane, for appellants.

MAIN, J. This action was brought to rescind a contract for the purchase of real estate on the ground of fraud. The trial in the superior court resulted in a judgment denying rescission, from which the plaintiffs appeal.

The facts out of which the litigation arose are these: For some time prior to the month of March, 1916, the appellants had owned and occupied a farm in Grant county, which they had sold a short time prior to entering into the transaction out of which this controversy arose. After selling the farm in Grant county, Mr. Griffith, in looking about for the purchase of another place, came to Latah, in Spokane county. This was in what is referred to in the evidence as the "Palouse country." After coming to Latah, he met friends there, who warned him against purchasing a farm upon which there was any "wild snapdragon." After being so warned, he fully made up his mind not to purchase a farm if there was growing thereon any of that weed. A few days after coming to Latah, Griffith was taken by one J. S. Farrelly, who lived in, or near, that town, six miles into the country to look at a place then owned by the respondents. Two or three days after having made this trip, Griffith met the respondent Charles Gifford in Latah, and talked with him relative to the farm. During this conversation, Farrelly asked Gifford if there was any snapdragon on the farm, and received the reply, "not to my knowledge." Shortly after this conversation, or within a few days, Gifford took Mr. and Mrs. Griffith out to see the farm, and, as the Griffiths both testified, while they were driving along the highway ajacent thereto, they inquired whether there was any snapdragon on the place, and received the positive answer that there was not. Gifford denies this conversation. Upon this trip, the parties did not go over the place; but, a few days later, Gifford and Griffith again visited the farm and walked over it. The place had been owned by the respondents for seven years prior to this time, and had been occupied by them during all of that time, with the exception of one year. The negotiations referred to resulted in a contract on March 30, 1916, by which the respondents sold to the appellants the farm, consisting of approximately 70 acres, for the sum of $8,300. Of this sum, $1,780 was paid in cash, and the balance was to be paid by the transfer of notes and a mortgage then owned by the appellants. After making this contract, and on the 17th day of April, the appellants went into possession of the farm. Thereafter, and on the 28th day of that month, Mr. Griffith, while plowing, preparatory to planting a crop, discovered what he thought might be wild snapdragon. He had never seen it before, as it did not grow where he had previously lived and farmed land. After inquiry, Griffith learned that the weed he had discovered was wild snapdragon. He then sought Mr. Gifford, and demanded his money back, as well as rescission of the contract. This, the latter, after considering for a few days, declined to do. Thereafter, and during the succeeding month, the appellants vacated the place and instituted this action. Neither party to the controversy being willing to exercise control over the farm during the litigation, by mutual arrangement the management thereof was given to a third person.

[1] The first question is whether the presence of wild snapdragon upon the farm was of such material consequence as to justify a rescission of the contract, providing there had been misrepresentation relative to its existence. The evidence shows that wild snapdragon is a noxious weed, and, when it once appears upon a farm, it is practically impossible to eradicate it. So serious is its presence considered that, when it appears, some farmers build a fence around it and cover the ground with salt. The appellants offered evidence to the effect that the presence of snapdragon upon a farm would materially reduce its salable value. The respondents offered no evidence on this question. The amount of snapdragon which was discovered upon the place after the appellants went into possession thereof consisted of approximately ten patches, located near the center of the farm. These patches varied in size from about 11 by 13 feet, down to places where there was only an individual plant. The party to whom the management of the place was committed, during the pendency of this litigation, testified that he had covered the three larger patches with tar paper, and that it took about 250 square feet thereof. One of the witnesses, testifying for the respondents, referred to a patch of snapdragon 6 feet across as "quite a large patch." Taking into consideration the character of the weed, and the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of its total extinguishment, as well as the size and number of patches, together with the fact that the presence of such weed will materially reduce the value of a farm, we cannot hold that a misrepresentation relative thereto would be upon an immaterial matter, such as would not justify the rescission of a contract.

The next question is whether there was a misrepresentation. The trial court made no formal findings of fact and conclusions of law, but recited in the judgment that wild snapdragon was growing upon the farm in the fall of the year 1915. The evidence shows that this weed has a distinctive flower, and a pronounced odor, especially when cut or bruised. During the year 1915, the portion of the farm where the snapdragon was produced a crop of oats. When this crop was harvested, Mr. Gifford testified that he shocked the oats, and admitted that he shocked the oats over the very place where the snapdragon was found by Griffith. The stubs, from which the plant had been cut, along with the oats, were still on the ground during the following spring. If Griffith, who had never seen snapdragon, before moving upon this farm, was able to discover its presence there within 12 days after he took possession, and at a time of year when its discovery would be much more difficult than when the flower would appear later in the season, it does seem strange that its presence there was not known to the former owner, who admitted that he knew what snapdragon was when he saw it. The testimony of the Griffiths on the one side, and Gifford on the other, as to the conversation relative to snapdragon, hereinbefore referred to, cannot be reconciled. It might be said that a way of reconciliation could be found by assuming that the Griffiths might have confused this conversation with the previous conversation, occurring in Latah, where Gifford admits that he stated that there was no snapdragon upon the place, to his knowledge; but this assumption would overlook the fact that Mrs. Griffith was not present at the previous conversation. It seems altogether reasonable that the Griffiths, after having been warned relative to purchasing a farm with this weed upon it, and after having determined not to purchase such a farm, should inquire specifically in relation thereto. The trial judge, in seeking to reconcile this conflicting testimony, thought that the Griffiths might have confused the conversation that they testified to as occurring upon the highway adjacent to the farm with the previous conversation in Latah, but doubtless overlooked the fact, as already pointed out, that Mrs. Griffith was not present at that conversation.

[2, 3] We cannot escape the conclusion that, under the evidence in this case, the appellants were entitled to a rescission of the contract. The rule undoubtedly is, as pointed out by the respondents, that fraud, where charged, must be established by clear and convincing evidence; but we think the appellants have met the requirements of this rule.

The judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded, with direction to the superior court to enter a judgment in favor of the appellants.

ELLIS, C. J., and CHADWICK, MORRIS, and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

(96 Wash. 632)

WILLETT et ux. v. CITY OF SEATTLE. (No. 13408.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 15, 1917.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑1021, 1022—IMPROVEMENTS — DAMAGES — NECESSITY OF CLAIM—STATUTE.

Under Charter of City of Seattle, art. 4, § 29, requiring claims against the city for damages to accurately locate and describe the defect which caused the injury, accurately describe the injury, contain the items of damage claimed, and providing that claims for damages, whether sounding in tort or contract, must be presented within the time and in the manner therein provided, a claim for damages from flooding due to a street improvement not being a damaging which was an indispensable and integral part of the improvement nor necessarily anticipated by the plan, and intended in the performance of the work, but a consequential or resulting damage sounding in tort, no action therefor could be maintained, where such item was not included in the claim previously filed by the property owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2193.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑1021, 1022—IMPROVEMENTS — DAMAGES — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY.

In view of Charter of City of Seattle, art. 4, § 29, in an action for damages caused by a street improvement, where it appeared that the claim filed did not mention an item of damage by reason of overflow of plaintiff's land, testimony as to the overflow was properly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2193.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑404(3) — IMPROVEMENTS — ACTION FOR DAMAGES — JURY QUESTION.

Whether the lot was damaged by steam shovels during the progress of the work, and the amount of such damages, held for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 997.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; R. B. Albertson, Judge.

Action by O. L. Willett and wife against the City of Seattle. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Edward Judd, of Seattle, for appellants. Hugh M. Caldwell and Robert H. Evans, both of Seattle, for respondent.

MAIN, J. The purpose of this action was to recover damage to property by reason of the improvement of a city street. The cause was tried to the court and a jury, and resulted in a verdict in favor of the defendant. the plaintiffs appeal.

The facts are these: On the 19th day of June, 1908, and for some time prior thereto, the appellants were the owners of a tract of land, consisting of approximately 15 acres, which had been platted into blocks and lots, and was known as O. L. Willett's addition to the city of Seattle. Extending along the south side of this addition was Graham street, with which the streets appearing upon the plat of Willett's addition intersected. On the date mentioned, the respondent city contracted for the improvement of Graham street. This improvement, in front of a portion of Willett's addition, involved a deep cut; in front of another portion, a fill of considerable height. Across Willett's addition was a small perennial stream, flowing to the south, and across Graham street. In making the fill, the city failed to provide an adequate drain or culvert under the fill, through which the water of the stream could pass, and, as a consequence, a portion of Willett's addition was flooded and damaged. During the time the work was being performed, some of the lots of the addition, abutting upon the cut, were dug into by the steam shovels. The action, as first brought, sought an injunction restraining the improvement, because of its interference with the access to Willett's addition. After this action was brought, a stipulation was entered into by which the work was permitted to continue. Prior to the institution of the action, and on April 19, 1909, the appellants filed a claim for damages with the city council, "by reason of the grading of Graham street," and "entirely cutting off access to Graham street from Thirty-Fifth Avenue South, one of the streets dedicated in the plat of said addition (Willett's addition); and that the said grading is being so conducted that a heavy cut is being made along and on Graham street in front of the center and west side of said addition, so as to cut off access to Graham street from Thirty-Third Avenue South, one of the streets dedicated in the plat of said addition." In this claim for damages, no mention is made of the flooding of a portion of Willett's addition by reason of inadequate drainage. Another claim for damages was filed on May 31, 1913, and in this no item of damages for flooding is mentioned. On September 15, 1914, an amended complaint was filed, upon which issue was joined by answer, and the cause, in due time, proceeded to trial.

Upon the trial, the appellants offered evidence as to damages sustained by reason of the flooding, to which objection was made by the city, and sustained by the trial court. The reason for this ruling was that the flooding was not claimed as an item of damages in either of the claims filed.

[1] Upon this appeal, the first question is whether the filing of a claim with the city is a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action for damages caused by the flooding. Section 29 of article 4 of the charter of the city of Seattle requires, among other things, that claims for damages "must accurately locate and describe the defect that caused the injury, accurately describe the injury, * * * contain the items of damages claimed, and be sworn to by the claimant." Under this charter provision, claims for damages, whether sounding in tort or contract, must be presented within the time and in the manner therein provided. International Contract Co. v. Seattle, 69 Wash. 391, 125 Pac. 152; International Contract Co. v. Seattle, 74 Wash. 662, 134 Pac. 502. Where, however, the property taken or damaged is contemplated by the plan of the work, and is a necessary incident to the making of the public improvement, no claim is necessary, because, strictly speaking, the property owner's action rests neither in tort nor contract. In other words, where the taking or damaging is an indispensable and integral part of the improvement, necessarily anticipated by the plan, and intended in the performance of the work, no claim is necessary, because the property owner is only recovering the compensation which he would have received had the city, prior to making the improvement, brought an action in condemnation for the purpose of having the damages for the taking or damaging determined. Kincaid v. Seattle, 74 Wash. 617, 134 Pac. 504, 135 Pac. 820; Jorguson v. Seattle, 80 Wash. 126, 141 Pac. 334. In the Kincaid Case, damages were sought, because the toe, or foot of the slope of a fill necessarily extended over onto the plaintiff's lots, and consequently the taking there was contemplated by the plan of the work, and was a necessary incident to the making of the public improvement. This question is fully and thoroughly discussed in the Kincaid and Jorguson Cases, and the limitations of the rule pointed out, and it seems unnecessary to again enter upon a discussion of the question. In the present case, the item of damages for flooding was neither contemplated by the plan of the work, nor a necessary incident in making the improvement in Graham street. Such damages were consequential or resultant, and therefore sound in tort, for which no action could be maintained, unless a claim therefor had been filed as required by the provision of the city charter above referred to. In the cases of Wendel v. Spokane County, 27 Wash. 121, 67 Pac. 576, 91 Am. St. Rep. 825, and Farnandis v. Great Northern R. Co., 41 Wash. 486, 84 Pac. 18, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1086, 111 Am. St. Rep. 1027, cited by the appellants, the question of the necessity of filing a claim was not involved. It may be that there is some language in the opinion in each of those cases that is not in harmony with the views expressed in the Jorguson Case, supra; but, if those cases are not in accord with the Jorguson Case, they are necessarily modified to the extent that there is lack of harmony.

[2] It is next claimed that, if the filing of a claim is necessary, under the claims filed, the testimony as to the flooding should have been admitted. In neither of these claims was there any mention made of an item of damages by reason of the overflow of the land, caused by an inadequate drain under the fill. The charter provision requires that the claim shall specify the items of damages. In Casassa v. Seattle, 75 Wash. 367, 134 Pac. 1080, it was held that, under this charter provision, an action could not be maintained for an item of damage not covered by the claim. It follows that the ruling of the trial court in sustaining the objection to the offered testimony should not be disturbed.

[3] Lastly, it is contended that the trial court erred in not entering judgment for the appellants for damages in a substantial amount, notwithstanding the verdict of the jury. The basis of this contention is that the appellants were entitled to damages to the lots abutting upon the cut, which were dug into by the steam shovels during the progress of the work. Whether there was damage in this regard, and, if so, how much, under a proper instruction, was submitted to the jury. The evidence was conflicting. That offered in behalf of the appellants, if accepted by the jury, would sustain a verdict in a substantial amount. That offered by the respondent, if accepted by the jury, would result in a verdict in favor of the respondent. Upon this conflicting evidence, the question was one for the jury.

The judgment will be affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and MORRIS, CHADWICK, and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

(96 Wash. 683)

BUCK v. EQUITABLE LIFE ASSUR. SOC. OF THE UNITED STATES. (No. 13810.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 15, 1917.)

1. INSURANCE ⇨400 — LIFE POLICY — "AMOUNT DUE."

"The amount due," in provision of life insurance policy that it shall be indisputable after a year as to amount due, means the amount due in law and fact, and not an amount written therein by mistake as its cash surrender value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1086.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Amount Due.]

2. CONTRACTS ⇨93(5)—MISTAKE—RELIEF.

Relief from error in contract shown with certainty will be granted where to enforce it as written would be harsh, though the mistake be unilateral.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 419.]

3. ESTOPPEL ⇨95—BY SILENCE.

Where insured shortly after issuance of his life policy was informed by insurer's letter that the cash surrender value at end of 15 years of $1,000 written in the policy was a mistake, and under the application should be $408, and that only $408 would be paid, he was estopped by his silence, preventing action for reformation, to claim more.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. §§ 285-287.]

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⇨40(1) — DEFENSES.

The general statute of limitation merely bars actions, and not defenses of mistake and estoppel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 212.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Snohomish County; Guy C. Alston, Judge.

Action by Seralpha A. Buck against the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with instructions.

Kerr & McCord, of Seattle, for appellant. Cooley, Horan & Mulvihill, of Everett, for respondent.

MORRIS, J. On January 8, 1901, appellant issued to respondent a life insurance policy in the sum of $1,000 containing the following option:

"If the assured be living and this policy is in force on the twenty-second day of December, 1915, the said assured, or assigns, may surrender the policy to the society and draw the guaranteed cash value of $1,000 together with the cash dividend then apportioned, consisting of the policy's full share of the surplus profits as determined by the actuaries of the society."

It was further provided in the policy that it should be indisputable after one year from its issue, providing all premiums were duly paid. Upon the expiration of the 15-year period provided for in the option respondent gave notice of his election to surrender the policy and withdraw $1,000 as the guaranteed cash surrender value thereof, together with the cash dividends then apportioned to the policy in the sum of $161.07. The appellant in its answer set up affirmatively that the sum of $1,000 included in the option as the cash surrender value of the policy was inserted therein by mistake of a clerk in its office at the time the policy was issued, and that the correct amount should be the sum of $408. Reformation of the policy was asked for in this respect. The lower court found in favor of the respondent.

On behalf of the appellant it was shown that the blanks in the printed form of policy were filled out by an employé who had been in its service at that time but one day. His duty was to prepare policies for execution by the officers of the company and to fill in the blanks from the document furnished him, known as the "application heading," which showed the kind of policy, the face amount thereof, the amount of the cash reserve, and other details. The application heading furnished the clerk in this instance was as follows:

"No. 1016922
Premium Dividend 15 Yrs. C. R. 408.
Agency Seattle - 1st pay't.
Reg. date Dec. 22, 1900
Form No. 22700—2 Made out Amt. 1,000
Age 53. Kind P. D. Life
Dec. 22, 1915
A. 56. 64"

The policy issued herein complies with the application heading with the exception of the amount of the cash reserve, the correct amount of the cash reserve being indicated on the application heading by the symbols "C. R. 408," which amount should have been inserted in the option instead of $1,000. There is no question but that the insertion of the sum of $1,000 instead of $408 as the cash reserve value of this policy was a clerical error. It is also undisputed that policy holders at the age of respondent must pay an annual premium of $86.59 not only upon policies in the appellant company, but in all life insurance companies in order to receive a cash surrender of $1,000 at the end of 15 years. It is also undisputed that the payment of an annual premium of $56.64, the amount paid by the respondent, by a policy holder of his age would in no life insurance company entitle the policy holder to recover at the end of 15 years a cash reserve value of more than $408. It appears from the testimony of respondent that he was surprised when he received this policy, though he contends it is the policy the soliciting agent told him would be written. He seems to have known enough about life insurance to appreciate this unusual feature of his policy. He told other agents about it, and when they expressed doubts as to a man of his age having a policy with a 15-year cash reserve value of $1,000, he made a wager with them and exhibited the policy. He commented upon the unusual feature of the policy to some representative of appellant at its Seattle office, which was the first intimation appellant had of the mistake in the option. The Seattle office reported the condition of the policy to the home office, and the home office on September 22, 1904, wrote the following letter:

"September 22, 1904.

"S. A. Buck, Esq., Monroe, Wash.—Dear Sir: Information has come to the society to the effect that policy No. 1016922, issued by the society on your life in December, 1900, is not in accordance with the terms of your application therefor; that is to say, it is alleged that the guaranteed cash value of your policy, at the end of its accumulation period in 1915, is written in option 1, on the third page of the policy contract as $1,000, when the amount should be $408. You are hereby notiued, therefore, that if policy No. 1016922, is continued in force hereafter by the payment of further premiums, the amount which the society will pay as the guaranteed cash value of the contract at the end of the period is $408.

"We would state further that if the change from $408 to $1,000 was made after policy No. 1016922 left this office the society is not bound thereby. If you will return this policy No. 1016922 to this office for inspection we shall be glad to look it over, and, if it is found to be incorrect, to reissue it in accordance with the terms of your application.

"Yours very truly,
"S. S. McCurdy, Assistant Registrar."

Respondent received this letter in due course of mail, but made no reply thereto other than he says he told some one in the Seattle office on the occasion of a subsequent visit that it was not his mistake, and he intended to enforce the policy as it was written, unless the company would refund him his money with interest. Under these circumstances we do not think the lower court was justified in holding the policy as written represented the true contract between the parties. The policy as written lacked mutuality, a necessary ingredient to all contracts. Respondent, it is clear, knew of the mistake, and with the knowledge of the error retained his policy and refused to submit it for correction. Knowing of the error and refusing its correction, he cannot now take advantage of it. Gray v. Supreme Lodge, Knights of Honor, 118 Ind. 293, 20 N. E. 833; Doll v. Prudential Insurance Co., 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 434.

Respondent's application and the premiums he paid called for a policy with a cash surrender value of not to exceed $408. That was the contract he made and the cash reserve, and the only cash reserve he paid for. He should be content with his bargain, and not seek to take advantage of an obvious mistake.

It is suggested that, when it realized that a mistake had been made in the cash reserve valuation, appellant should have taken some steps looking to a reformation of the policy. Appellant had indicated in its letter to respondent its purpose to recognize $408 as the guaranteed cash reserve value of this policy if continued in force for the 15-year period. It could not surrender the policy or cancel it, because there could not be any change if respondent should die before the expiration of the 15-year period nor after that period, unless respondent elected to exercise the option he only could exercise.

[1] The provision in the policy that it should be indisputable after one year as to the amount due avails naught to respondent. The appellant is not attempting to dispute the policy nor prevent a recovery thereon. It is simply contesting as to the amount due thereon. "The amount due" in the language of this clause can mean no other sum than the amount due in law and fact. Appellant is seeking, not to avoid the payment of this amount, but to have the policy truthfully express the amount correctly due. The vice of respondent's contention that the amount written in the policy is incontestable after one year is shown by a simple illustration. Suppose that, instead of writing the amount correctly as $408, the decimal point had been omitted and the amount read $40800. No one would have the hardihood to contend that in case of nondiscovery of the mistake until after the lapse of one year appellant would be bound to pay such sum to respondent and was forever barred both in law and fact from contesting the amount shown to be due on the face of the policy.

[2] Respondent argues that, if there was a mistake, it was not mutual, but only on the part of appellant, and that the evidence lacks that clearness that must be shown before either party can take advantage of the mistake. This case falls within all rules in which litigants have been granted relief from contractual errors. So far as we know, it has always been the law that, where there is certainty of error, appropriate relief will be granted. Courts are always open to receive and enforce equitable considerations, and even in cases of unilateral mistakes it has been held that the contract would not be enforced when it would be harsh to do so. 36 Cyc. 606; 6 R. C. L. 623.

[3] Respondent knew that the company regarded his policy as written enforceable only to the extent of its straight life feature, and that, if continued as to its guaranteed cash value in case he survived the 15-year period, it would refuse to pay him more than $408. If this was not satisfactory to respondent and if he was not willing to keep his policy under this condition, he should have replied to the letter written him. Good faith would at least demand that much. Not to do so would lead the company to believe that he acquiesced in its intent as expressed in its letter of September 22d. These facts support appellant's plea of estoppel. When duty calls for speech silence will work an estoppel when such silence operates a fraud upon the other party. It was a fraud upon appellant when respondent by his silence encouraged the belief that the policy would be satisfied by the payment of $408 at the end of the 15-year period in order to prevent them from taking some action looking to the reformation of the policy in this respect, while respondent intended to thus mislead it and enforce the policy as written when the time arrived.

[4] Neither does any general statute of limitation defeat appellant's defense. So long as respondent had a cause of action upon his policy, so long could appellant assert any defense thereon which would excuse it from subjecting itself to respondent's demand. Statutes of limitation bar actions, and not defenses to actions. Appellant was not seeking any affirmative relief against respondent. It was seeking only to defend against an unjust claim.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with instructions to enter a judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $569.07, which sum is the aggregate of the cash surrender value of this policy and $161.07, cash dividend apportioned to the policy.

ELLIS, C. J., and CHADWICK, MAIN, and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

(96 Wash. 665)

LARSON v. ALASKA S. S. CO. (No. 13708.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 15, 1917.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨276(3) — PROXIMATE CAUSE OF INJURY — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence that plaintiff seaman in descending a hatchway grasped an insecure table pedestal which failed to support him, etc., held to sustain a verdict that the pedestal's insecurity proximately caused his injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 951, 959.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⇨288(16), 289(37) —CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—JURY QUESTION.

Plaintiff seaman's contributory negligence and assumption of risk in grasping an insecure table pedestal when descending a hatchway pursuant to a boatswain's order are jury questions, since such boatswain was a vice principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 1086, 1129.]

3. ADMIRALTY ⇨2 — PERSONAL INJURY TO SEAMAN—SAVING OF COMMON-LAW REMEDY.

Under Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, § 24, 36 Stat. 1091 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 991[3]), giving federal district courts original jurisdiction of admiralty causes, but saving to suitors the right to a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it, a state common-law court has jurisdiction of an action in personam by a seaman for personal injuries occurring off Alaskan coast and arising from the vessel's unseaworthiness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Admiralty, Cent. Dig. §§ 18-28.]

4. DAMAGES ⇨132(1)—EXCESSIVENESS.

Two thousand and six hundred dollars damages held not excessive for permanent personal injuries to a seaman.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 372.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; Mitchell Gilliam, Judge.

Action by Alex Larson against the Alaska Steamship Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bogle, Graves, Merritt & Bogle, of Seattle, for appellant. Walter S. Fulton, of Seattle, for respondent.

CHADWICK, J. Alex Larson brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained while working as a seaman on the steamship Victoria. The ship was anchored off shore in Alaska on the 14th day of June, 1915. Larson was ordered by the boatswain to go down into the hold preparatory to working cargo. No. 4 lower hold is covered by a hatch which is 12 by 14 feet. When in place it makes a part of the dining saloon floor. It has no combing, and, as described by one of the witnesses, is "as smooth as a table." A dining room table and a row of chairs on iron pedestals are built directly over, and screwed to the doors of, the hatch. When the hatch is opened, the chairs and table are removed, and the doors are folded back on either side by means of a line from a winch. The hold is about 25 feet deep. It is reached by means of a perpendicular ladder placed some 7 or 8 inches back of and under the hatch opening. Directly forward of the hatch opening is another table, and a row of chairs. The pedestals supporting the chairs for this second table are screwed into the deck or the floor of the dining saloon about 2 or 3 feet from the edge of No. 4 hatch. It was the custom of the seamen to hold onto one of the forward stationary pedestals while securing a foothold and handhold on the ladder when descending into the hold of the ship. The testimony shows that when the pedestals supporting the chairs over the hatch doors were removed, one of them was left standing loose near the fixed pedestals of the forward table. When respondent started to descend the ladder, he took hold of the unfastened pedestal with his right hand and a fastened pedestal with his left hand. To secure a hold with his hand on the ladder, he released his left hand, thus throwing his weight on the unfastened pedestal which, giving way, caused him to fall into the hold below. The jury found that Larson had received permanent injuries, and returned damages in the sum of $2,600. The facts will be further noticed in the course of the opinion.

From a judgment upon the verdict, defendant has appealed. Respondent predicates his right to recover upon appellant's alleged failure to furnish respondent with a safe place to work, and the lack of proper appliances to enable him to safely carry out the boatswain's order to go down into the hold, as well as its negligence in placing the loose pedestal in front of the hatch ladder. The manner of descending into the hold may be more particularly described. One doing so must lie flat on the floor with his feet and legs over the opening. The ladder cannot be safely reached with the feet without some secure hold for the hands, or for one hand after a foothold has been secured. One hand must be released and reached under the edge of the hatch and gripped upon the uppermost rung of the ladder when the act of descending can be finished without inconvenience or danger.

While the act of descending is, under any circumstances, attended with some danger, and puts a seaman to the exercise of great care for his own safety, and while it may be, as the testimony tends to show most strongly, that toggles, a ring bolt, or a rope to be thrown around the stationary pedestal should have been provided, we think it unnecessary to follow counsel in their rather elaborate discussion of this phase of the case, for, whatever may have been necessary under ordinary conditions, we have here to deal with an extraordinary condition. That is the placing of a loose pedestal at a place where one of experience, in the proper course of his employment, might throw his weight upon it to his own hurt or injury. Indeed the experienced man, the one most accustomed to do the thing required, would be the one most apt to reach for the pedestal without conscious thought of the possible insecurity of the thing.

[1] Passing then to the ultimate fact, we have no hesitation in saying that the jury was justified in finding that the proximate cause of the injury was the placing of the loose pedestal at a place where a man in the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety might take hold of it. It is not charged that respondent put the pedestal where it was, and surely there is no principle that would hold him to the rule of contributory negligence for acting upon appearances, and without a particular examination as to the security of the pedestals immediately in front of the place where he was compelled to descend. But if respondent is not to be exculpated from the charge of contributory negligence as a matter of law, the facts are clearly sufficient to carry the case to a jury, and appellant is concluded by the verdict.

Appellant's first hope must necessarily lie in the contention that the loose pedestal was placed in a position to invite disaster by a fellow servant; that the negligence, if any, was that of a fellow servant, and not of appellant, and hence no recovery can be had. We think the doctrine of fellow servant cannot apply for two reasons, equally obvious. The clearing of the hatch for removing cargo from the hold was done under the immediate direction of the boatswain who was in the exercise of all the authority possessed by the master or mate. He was a vice principal. The duty of care for the safety of the workman was upon the ship. The work being under the personal direction of one of higher authority than any of the seamen, the principal was bound to answer for the negligence of men as well as the insecurity of methods or means. For it would be the ultimate of illogic to hold that a principal could be held when directing, or for failure to direct, and could not be held for a thing when done under his direction. The principal must act through an instrumentality of his own choosing which is but another way of saying that it is the duty of the principal to furnish a reasonably safe place to work, and to keep that place reasonably safe during the progress of the work. Such duty is not performed by offering a safe place to work, but extends to "all the instrumentalities, machinery, and appliances which, from the nature of the work, directly affected the safety of the place." Westerlund v. Rothschild, 53 Wash. 626, 102 Pac. 765.

[2] That the boatswain, supervising the work and executing the will of the master of the ship, was a vice principal, we have no doubt. Respondent being hurt while following the directions of the boatswain, the question of contributory negligence and assumption of risk were for the jury.

The second reason which finds response in our minds, although we do not bottom our decision upon it for reasons hereinbefore assigned, is that before the question of fellow servant can be considered by the court we must find as a matter of law that the fixed pedestal was itself a safe appliance, and that the accident would not have happened if the loose pedestal had not been left where it was. Whether the fixed pedestal was a safe appliance was clearly a question for the jury. Many witnesses testified that there should have been a ring bolt or toggles, or a rope to aid the seamen. One of appellant's own witnesses says that there should have been a rope to throw around the fixed pedestal to relieve the reach between the pedestal and the ladder below.

[3] Appellant finally contends that respondent cannot recover because the obligations of the parties are governed by the maritime law; that under the maritime law all members of the crew, with the possible exception of the master, are fellow servants:

that the liability of the master or owner exists whether the accident is attributable to negligence or accident, but the remedy in all cases is limited to a recovery for maintenance and cure. The Osceola, 189 U. S. 159, 23 Sup. Ct. 483, 47 L. Ed. 760. The right to maintain an action in the state courts depends upon a proper construction of section 9 of the federal Judiciary Act. 1 Stat. L. 77, R. S. § 563, re-enacted March 3, 1911, § 24, 36 Stat. L. 1091:

> "The District Courts shall have original jurisdiction as follows: * * * Of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it."

If we understand counsel aright, it is contended that there is no such thing as a common-law action under the maritime law; that there is a definite distinction between a common-law action, or right of action at common law, and a common-law remedy; that it is not a remedy in the common law which is saved, but "a common-law remedy"; that the right to recover for maintenance and cure irrespective of negligence was in no case allowable at common law, and that therefore the remedy lies in the statute and, so resting, a right at common law cannot be asserted, for—

> "surely a vessel and its owners are not to be subjected to all the liabilities of both the common law and the admiralty law, in an action brought in a common-law court without being entitled to the corresponding benefits (as far as its defenses are concerned) of such laws. Either the admiralty law in its entirety is enforceable in such courts or it is not enforceable to any extent."

Appellant cites The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 431, 18 L. Ed. 397; The Glide, 167 U. S. 606, 17 Sup. Ct. 930, 42 L. Ed. 296; The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624, 19 L. Ed. 266; The Golden Gate, Fed. Cas. No. 574; The Isabella, Fed. Cas. No. 7100; Knapp v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 638, 20 Sup. Ct. 824, 44 L. Ed. 921; Schuede v. Zenith S. S. Co. (D. C.) 216 Fed. 566. In Schuede v. Zenith, supra, which is asserted to be a case directly in point, it is said:

> "But for the exception in the act of 1879 (section 711, R. S.), carried into the present Judicial Code, allowing suitors recourse to a competent common-law remedy, it would seem that the citations above, asserting the controlling force of general and statutory maritime law, indicate the necessity to overrule the motion before the court. To advance that saving clause as a reason why the plaintiff may escape what he may assume to be the disadvantages incident to his maritime contract and seek the advantages of the state law in his suit in a state court upon such a contract is, in our judgment, to misapprehend what is meant in this provision by the word 'remedy.' It must be observed, as suggested by Justice Field, in The Moses Taylor, supra, quoted approvingly in The Glide, 167 U. S. 606, 617, 17 Sup. Ct. 930, 42 L. Ed. 296, that what is saved to a suitor 'is not a remedy in the common-law courts, but a common-law remedy'; that is, as we paraphrase it, the suitor who has a right of action growing out of a maritime contract may not go into a law court to find a new remedy, but he may employ a common-law forum, if one is found competent to work out the rights involved in his contract. In the case before us, the maritime law is not so favorable to the plaintiff touching the range of defense to his action as would be the Ohio law; but those defenses which he seeks to avoid are incidents to and, as against him, liabilities of his contract. They help define his contract of employment, and hence, although employable against him in defense, are no part of the remedy, as that term is used in the saving clause of the Code. The clause 'leaves open the common-law jurisdiction of the state courts over torts committed at sea' (The Hamilton, 207 U. S. 398–404, 28 Sup. Ct. 133, 52 L. Ed. 264), and, in our judgment, does nothing else. The extent of liability for such a tort to be enforced in a common-law jurisdiction is to be restrained by the law which created the relation in which it was committed. * * * In the case of a cause of action for an injury incurred in the course of a maritime employment, to avoid the manifest inconveniences and inequalities involved in plaintiff's interpretation of the saving clause in question, it is not only reasonable, but well within the language of the law, to require whichever court, state or federal, is entered to work out a remedy, to enforce the general and uniform law maritime under which the contract of employment was made."

In Cornell Steamboat Co. v. Fallon, 179 Fed. 293, 294, 102 C. C. A. 345, 346, it was held:

> "The contract between the defendant and the deceased is a maritime contract, and establishes their relation as well in courts of law as in courts of admiralty. A seaman injured in the service of the vessel has a right to recover against the vessel and her owners for his wages and the expenses of his maintenance and cure to the end of the voyage, or as long as he has a right to wages, whether he is or they are guilty of negligence or not. And this is the extent of his right to recover. There is an exception, apparently a departure from the maritime law, but established by so many decisions that the Supreme Court has declined to disturb it, viz. that if the seaman's injury is due to the personal negligence or default of the shipowners, as, for instance, to the unseaworthiness of the vessel or her tackle, or failure to supply proper medical treatment and attendance he may recover full indemnity. The Iroquois, 194 U. S. 240, 24 Sup. Ct. 640, 48 L. Ed. 955; The Osceola, supra; The Troop, 128 Fed. 856, 63 C. C. A. 584. As no personal negligence or default is imputed to the defendant, the decedent would not have had a right to full indemnity if he had lived, but only to his wages and the expense of his maintenance and cure."

It is asserted that this court has inferentially held that the remedy afforded by the maritime law is exclusive. Sanders v. Stimson Mill Co., 32 Wash. 627, 73 Pac. 688. On the other hand, respondent contends that this case falls within the exception noted in the case cited in the Cornell Steamboat Co. Case. That is, any defect in the ship, its tackle, or appliances for working its cargo is enough to render the ship unseaworthy within the meaning of that term as employed in the case of The Osceola, supra, and to permit a recovery of full indemnity to the extent of the injury. That such a defect brings the case within the rule of unseaworthiness is held in the case of The Argo, 210 Fed. 872, 127 C. C. A. 456, where a recovery was allowed for failure to guard machinery. That confusion should follow the federal statute is evident from its terms. To avoid what would often operate as a denial of justice, the courts, without confessing the motive as it seems to us, have injected a saving clause in the term "unseaworthiness." The Osceola, supra.

The federal act "saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it * * * leaves open," as is said by Justice Holmes in the case of The Hamilton, 207 U. S. 398, 28 Sup. Ct. 133, 52 L. Ed. 264, "the common-law jurisdiction of the state courts over torts committed at sea." "This, we believe, always has been admitted." The question was, Congress having remained silent, whether a state could legislate so as to extend the jurisdiction of its courts over questions maritime. The court reasoned, inasmuch as the state courts had power to follow their own notions about the law in such cases, that the power of a state to speak through its other mouthpiece, the Legislature, could not be denied, and while it may be, as is said in the Schuede Case, that the case of The Hamilton does not, in its terms, go beyond a holding that the federal statute extends jurisdiction to the state courts over torts committed at sea, yet in its spirit and its logic it must be taken at a greater worth, for the power to exercise a common-law jurisdiction, without the right to give such remedy as the common law would afford if the case were between ordinary litigants, would be to grant a right and deny the very remedy named in the act, that is, a common-law remedy. To hold with the Schuede Case, that a grant of jurisdiction to the state courts means no more than a power to give the same remedies as are allowable under the maritime law, would be to deny the primer definition of jurisdiction; that is, the power to hear and determine. To determine must, of necessity, mean the power to enter a judgment consistent with the common law if the court hearing the case has common-law jurisdiction, and the case falls within the exception noted.

The right to maintain an action in personam even to the extent of aider by attachment is recognized in Rounds v. Cloverport Foundry, 237 U. S. 303, 35 Sup. Ct. 596, 59 L. Ed. 966. There the question whether a contract for repairs was a maritime contract, a breach of which could be determined only in the federal courts, was squarely put. The court considered the same saving statute which is now relied on. It was held that the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts extended to cases in rem, and that no controversy might arise as to the meaning of the term in rem, as it is used in our discussions of the maritime law, it was defined:

> "The proceeding in rem which is within the exclusive jurisdiction of admiralty is one essentially against the vessel itself as the debtor or offending thing—in which the vessel is itself 'seized and impleaded as the defendant, and is judged and sentenced accordingly.'"

And, further, in discussing the question of concurrent jurisdiction:

> "As this court said in Johnson v. Chicago, etc., Elevator Co., supra [119 U. S. 388, 7 Sup. Ct. 254, 30 L. Ed. 447], in reviewing Leon v. Galceran, supra [11 Wall. 185, 20 L. Ed. 74], it was held that 'the action in personam in the state court was a proper one, because it was a common-law remedy, which the common law was competent to give, although the state law gave a lien on the vessel in the case, similar to a lien under the maritime law, and it was made enforceable by a writ of sequestration in advance, to hold the vessel as a security to respond to a judgment, if recovered against her owner, as a defendant; that the suit was not a proceeding in rem, nor was the writ of sequestration; that the bond given on the release of the vessel became the substitute for her; that the common law is as competent as the admiralty to give a remedy in all cases where the suit is in personam against the owner of the property; and that these views were not inconsistent with any expressed in The Moses Taylor [4 Wall. 411, 18 L. Ed. 397], in The Hine v. Trevor [4 Wall. 555, 18 L. Ed. 451], or in The Belfast [7 Wall. 624, 19 L. Ed. 266].'"

As thus understood, we find nothing in the federal cases inconsistent with a former decision of this court (Ransberry v. North American T. & T. Co., 22 Wash. 476, 61 Pac. 154). Sanders v. Stimson Mill Co., supra, in no way trenches upon the doctrine of this case. There a recovery was properly limited for the injury was the result of an accident. There was no testimony showing or tending to show a breach of duty or of obligation on the part of the owner or the unseaworthiness of his ship. Our conclusion is that an action in personam may be maintained for a tort committed on the high seas if the accident is attributable to the "unseaworthiness" of the vessel; that the common-law courts of a state have jurisdiction concurrent with the federal courts when proceeding in personam; and that the state court will grant the relief that a common-law court would have granted had the case been originally triable in such court.

Objection is made that the accident having occurred on the high seas, and not within the territorial jurisdiction of the courts of Washington, respondent must seek his remedy in the federal courts, or take his remedy in the state court under the maritime law. It may be that the Schuede Case so holds. Counsel insists that it does. But we prefer to hold what we conceive to be the better rule. Having held that the action is one in personam, it follows that it is transitory, and appellant is subject to suit in any court having jurisdiction of the person. Jurisdiction over the person is not questioned in this case. Moreover, if actions arising out of the unseaworthiness of a ship are not within the federal statute, it follows that a want of jurisdiction cannot be urged when the action is brought in the state courts. Objection is made to one of the instructions, but, with this view of the law, we think it was not prejudicial.

[4] While the recovery in this case is substantial, and is probably more than any one of us would have been willing to return, if we were sitting as jurors, we think it is not so far out of proportion to the injuries received by the respondent as to bear inherent evidence of the passion and prejudice of the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and MORRIS, MAIN, and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 1)

DU BOIS LUMBER CO. v. DIETDERICH et al. (No. 13852.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 15, 1917.)

1. Logs and Logging 🔑32 — Liens — Waiver.

Under Rem. Code 1915, § 1177, making it the duty of a purchaser of liened logs to see that the purchase money is applied to satisfaction of claims entitled to liens, lien claimants did not waive their right to the fund realized on execution sale under their judgment because before the sale they permitted the one who became such purchaser to saw the logs; no one being prejudiced thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 86–88.]

2. Logs and Logging 🔑33(1)—Liens—Enforcement of Rights.

Under Rem. Code 1915, § 1177, making it the duty of a purchaser of liened logs to see that the purchase money is applied to satisfaction of claims entitled to liens, such money may in an interpleader action by the purchaser, all parties being before the court, be awarded to such lienors, though they have not previously begun a suit to foreclose their lien.

3. Garnishment 🔑13—Property Subject.

A garnishment entitled plaintiff to nothing as to a fund; the logs which produced it, sold by defendant to garnishee to be delivered to garnishee, not having come into garnishee's possession when the writ was answered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. §§ 21–24.]

4. Logs and Logging 🔑30 — Laborers — Priority over Garnishment.

Under provision of Rem. Code 1915, § 1206, rights under logger's lien for labor are superior to rights under garnishment of same date based on a claim other than for labor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 80–82.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Clarke County; R. H. Back, Judge.

Action in interpleader by the Du Bois Lumber Company against L. T. Dietderich and others. From the judgment, Ben J. Bell and another appeal. Affirmed.

H. W. Arnold and R. C. Sugg, both of Vancouver, for appellants. McMaster, Hall & Drowley, of Vancouver, for respondents.

MAIN, J. The plaintiff in this case, having in its possession the sum of $1,176.85, to which it made no claim, and there being a number of other parties asserting conflicting rights to the fund, brought this action in interpleader, for the purpose of having the conflicting claims to the fund determined. All parties interested were made defendants in the action. From the judgment entered, two of the defendants appeal.

The facts out of which the litigation grew are substantially these: Henry Haselhorst, one of the appellants, on the 9th day of February, 1915, being then the owner of about 160 acres of timber land, situated in Clarke county, near the town of Yacolt, sold the standing timber thereon to L. T. Dietderich and John Studer, copartners, doing business under the name of Dietderich & Studer. The purchase price was $1.50 per M. according to the scale of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, over which road the logs were to be transported from Yacolt to Vancouver. Dietderich & Studer then sold the logs to the respondent Du Bois Lumber Company, for $6.50 per M., mill scale, delivered at the company's mill in Vancouver. According to the terms of the contract between Dietderich & Studer and Haselhorst, payment was to be made to the latter on the 10th day of each month for all logs cut during the previous month. Dietderich & Studer, after making the contract to deliver the logs to the Du Bois Lumber Company, proceeded with their logging operations. The first few payments due Haselhorst were made to him direct by Dietderich & Studer. About June, 1915, or a few months after operations had been in progress under the contract, Haselhorst became dissatisfied with the manner in which Dietderich & Studer were making the stumpage payments, and went to the Du Bois Lumber Company and asked it to hold out for him the money due him for stumpage. He was told by that company that it would hold out the stumpage, but that it would not guarantee it. Dietderich & Studer subsequently assented to the arrangement made by Haselhorst with the lumber company relative to the payments. All payments due Haselhorst for stumpage under his contract up to October 1, 1915, were made either by Dietderich & Studer, or by the Du Bois Lumber Company. On or about October 26, 1915, Dietderich & Studer ceased logging operations. They were then indebted in a considerable sum for wages due their employés. On October 27, 1915, the labor claimants filed a claim of lien upon the logs then in Clarke county to secure payment of the work and labor performed by each of them, and immediately after commenced an action to foreclose the same. In this action judgment was entered in favor of the labor claimants for the amount due them, aggregating $1,660.87, and attorneys' fees in the sum of $88.15. Either before or immediately after this judgment was entered an arrangement was made with the Du Bois Lumber Company to pay the freight on the logs then in the possession of the railroad company, as well as the expense of conveying them through the booms to the mill, and the lumber company agreed to be responsible for the logs, or their value at the time they were sold under execution. Upon this judgment execution was issued, and the liened logs were sold on November 16, 1915, by the sheriff to the Du Bois Lumber Company, for $1,525.90. The proceeds of this sale were applied upon the labor claimant's judgment, leaving a balance due thereon of approximately $245.85. On the 27th day of October, the day on which the labor liens were filed, the appellant Ben J. Bell, then having a judgment against Dietderich & Studer, caused a writ of garnishment to be issued and served upon the Du Bois Lumber Company. The lumber company answered the writ, admitting the possession of $1,176.85, and alleging that it possessed no other money or property belonging to Dietderich & Studer. This answer Bell controverted. The present action was begun on November 17, 1915, and, as above stated, Haselhorst and Bell, the labor claimants, and other interested parties, were made defendants. Bell claimed under his writ of garnishment; Haselhorst that he was entitled to the fund under an equitable assignment, and that, by virtue of the arrangement which he made with the Du Bois Lumber Company in June, which was assented to by Dietderich & Studer, the lumber company became obligated to pay him for all logs which had been cut and delivered to that company subsequent to October 1, 1915. Upon the trial of the action it developed that the $1,176.85 was the sum of money which the lumber company was owing Dietderich & Studer at the close of business on October 26th for the logs scaled and sawed up to that time. The labor claimants' lien, filed on the 27th, covered logs then in possession of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and held for freight charges, as well as all logs in the booms which were branded "J. S.," this being a designating mark of the Dietderich & Studer logs. On November 16th, when the execution sale took place, all logs were sold which up to that time had been scaled and sawed by the mill company. After November 16th the mill company scaled and sawed other logs branded "J. S." to the value of $206.

From what has already been said it appears that there are three sums in controversy: (a) The $1,176.85, which was the balance owing by the lumber company for logs cut up to the close of business on the 26th day of October; (b) the value of the logs cut subsequent to October 26th and prior to the sale on November 16th, amounting to $1,525.90; and (c) the value of the logs cut subsequent to November 16th, amounting to $206. The $1,176.85 item, by the findings and judgment of the trial court, was awarded to Haselhorst. From this judgment the labor claimants did not appeal. Bell did not except to the findings, and in this court joins in Haselhorst's brief. It therefore must be assumed that, as to this fund, he is not seeking to disturb the judgment awarding it to Haselhorst. Under these circumstances no further reference need be made to this fund.

[1] As to the other two funds, the appellants claim that the court was in error in awarding them to the labor claimants, because it is contended that the labor claimants had waived their right to a lien. This claim of waiver is based on the fact that the labor claimants, not being able to advance the freight on the logs held by the Northern Pacific Railway Company and the boom charges, through their attorneys, arranged with the Du Bois Lumber Company to advance the freight and pay the expenses of booming, and consented that the logs might be sawed, provided the lumber company would hold itself responsible for the value thereof at the time of the sale. This, we think, did not amount to a waiver. In view of the statute (Rem. Code, § 1177) which makes it the duty of a purchaser of liened logs to see that the purchase money has been applied to the payment of such bona fide claims as are entitled to liens upon the property, the method adopted by the lien claimants of permitting the logs to be sawed before the execution sale took place, while irregular, should not deprive the lien claimants of the right to the fund realized upon such sale, in the absence of a showing that the appellants had been prejudiced by such procedure. So far as Haselhorst and Bell are concerned, they were in no worse position by reason of the procedure adopted than they would have been had the foreclosure of the labor liens been conducted with strict legal formality.

[2] As to the $206 item, prior to this action no suit had been begun to foreclose upon the logs which produced that fund, but in this action all the parties were before the court, and there appears to be no reason why the court could not award the fund to the labor claimants in this proceeding as well as if there had been an independent proceeding to foreclosure the liens.

As already suggested, the statute makes it the duty of one purchasing logs on which there is a lien within the 30 days in which the claimant has a right to file the lien to see that the purchase money is appropriated to the satisfaction of the liens, and, construing this statute in Livingstone v. Lovgren, 27 Wash. 102, 67 Pac. 599, it was said:

> "Under section 5945 (Rem. Code, § 1177), supra, it will be seen that if the purchaser, purchasing logs on which there is a lien within the 30 days in which the claimant has to file his lien, fails to see that the purchase money is appropriated to the satisfaction of the liens, he is liable. Under this section it was lawful for the appellant to purchase the logs for their full value and apply the proceeds to the lien claims."

In the present case the lien claimants had valid liens upon the logs which produced the fund of $1,525.90, as well as the $206. The trial court did not err in sustaining the labor claimants' superior rights to these two funds.

There is some controversy over the terms of the arrangement entered into by which the lumber company agreed to hold and pay to Haselhorst each month the money which was due Dietderich & Studer upon the logs sawed during the previous month. The appellants claim that this arrangement obligated the lumber company to pay all such sums to Haselhorst. The respondent lumber company claims that it only agreed to hold out and pay to Haselhorst all stumpage due or to become due under his agreement with Dietderich & Studer on or about the 10th day of each month for all "J. S." logs delivered and received during the previous month, but that it did not assume or guarantee such payments. The trial court found that the arrangement was as contended for by the respondent, and from our examination of the record we are convinced that the testimony amply sustains this finding.

[3] Referring more particularly to the appellant Bell, he would have no claim, under his garnishment, to the $206 item, because at the time the writ was answered the logs which produced this item had not come into the possession of the lumber company. Frieze v. Powell, 79 Wash. 483, 140 Pac. 690.

[4] He would have no right to the $1,525.90 item, even though the logs which produced this item were in possession of the lumber company at the time the writ was served, and the answer thereto made, because, under section 1206, Rem. Code, the labor claimants' rights, under their lien claims, were superior to Bell's rights under the writ of garnishment.

The judgment will be affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and MORRIS, CHADWICK, and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

(96 Wash. 658)

VAN HORST v. VAN HORST. (No. 13692.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 15, 1917.)

DIVORCE 🔑245(2)—ALIMONY—MODIFICATION OF DECREE.

A default decree entered in an action for divorce provided that defendant should pay plaintiff $50 per month alimony and deliver to her a certificate of corporate stock in an amount equal to one-half of the community interest in the stock of a corporation, found by the court to be $4,250. On petition to modify this decree it appeared that the community did not own the stock as found, but that defendant, though having subscribed for 60 shares, for which he was paying on the installment plan, actually owned only 12 shares of $50 each; that his monthly salary was $200, of which $50 was credited on his stock subscription; that the community indebtedness was $1,815 exclusive of interest; that defendant had overdrawn his salary account in the sum of $1,412.40; that plaintiff since the date of the original decree had been paid the $50 per month alimony; that plaintiff was an able-bodied woman, 38 years of age, able to earn $15 per week, and that there were no children; and that defendant had remarried and was living with and supporting his wife. Held, that the court properly modified the decree so as to require defendant to deliver to plaintiff only 6 shares of stock and properly refused to increase the alimony payable monthly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 693.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; Boyd J. Tallman, Judge.

Action for divorce by Annie Van Horst against Paul Van Horst, wherein plaintiff filed a petition praying for modification of a default decree obtained by her and defendant also filed a petition seeking modification of the decree. The original decree was modified and plaintiff appeals and defendant cross-appeals. Affirmed both on original and on cross-appeals.

Frank A. Paul and Walter S. Fulton, both of Seattle, for appellant. B. S. Grosscup and W. C. Morrow, both of Tacoma, for respondent.

WEBSTER, J. On April 28, 1908, plaintiff and defendant were married at Victoria, British Columbia. On May 8, 1915, plaintiff instituted an action for divorce against defendant in the superior court of King county. On June 25, 1915, after personal service on defendant, a default decree was entered, granting to plaintiff an absolute divorce and awarding her the household furniture and alimony at the rate of $50 per month, payable weekly in advance. It was further provided in the decree that defendant should deliver to plaintiff a certificate of stock in the Standard Chemical Company, a Washington corporation, equal to one-half of the interest of the community composed of plaintiff and defendant in that corporation. It was provided in the decree that, upon proper application in the future, the decree might be modified to conform to changed circumstances of the parties. The decree was supported by findings to the effect that defendant had abandoned plaintiff, had been guilty of cruelty toward her, had inflicted upon her personal indignities which rendered her life burdensome, and had failed to make suitable provision for her support; that there was no community real property belonging to the parties, but that they were the owners of the following community personalty: (1) Household effects amounting to not to exceed $100 in value; and (2) an equitable interest to the extent of $4,250, par value, in the capital stock of the Standard Chemical Company; that defendant was an abled-bodied man, a chemist by profession, and was capable of earning from $140 to $250 per month in salary.

On January 31, 1916, plaintiff filed a petition in the original action, praying for a modification of the decree, alleging, among other things, that she was heavily burdened with debts incurred prior to the decree of divorce; that defendant's salary had been increased since the entry of the decree, and that he was at that time capable of earning not less than $250 or $300 per month; that he was in arrears in the payment of alimony, and that he had not delivered to her the certificate of stock in the Standard Chemical Company as provided in the decree. She prayed that the decree be modified so as to allow her alimony at the rate of $25 per week, and that defendant be cited to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt for failing to transfer to her the above-mentioned certificate of stock. On February 9, 1916, defendant also filed a petition seeking a modification of the decree, and set forth in substance that the finding upon which the original decree was based, to the effect that the community was the equitable owner of capital stock in the Standard Chemical Company amounting to $4,250, was erroneous and was the result of a misunderstanding between himself and the attorney for plaintiff; that at the time of the entry of the decree he was employed by the Standard Chemical Company, and had subscribed for 60 shares of the capital stock of the company of the par value of $50 each, for which he was paying in monthly installments; that since April 15, 1915, he had been earning a salary of $150 per month in cash and a credit of $50 per month upon his stock subscription contract; that he had been carrying a large amount of indebtedness, the most of which had been incurred for the benefit of the community; that he had paid to plaintiff all of the alimony awarded to her in the decree; that plaintiff was a young woman in good health; that she was an experienced and competent bookkeeper and stenographer, and was capable of earning from $65 to $100 per month. He prayed that the decree be modified by striking from it the provision relating to the transfer of stock in the Standard Chemical Company, and that alimony at the rate of $50 per month as fixed in the original decree be permitted to stand.

Both petitions were heard on March 27, 1916, resulting in a decree denying plaintiff's application for increased alimony, but providing that alimony at the rate of $50 per month, payable weekly in advance as provided in the original decree, should be paid by defendant; that as between plaintiff and defendant the unpaid community indebtedness antedating the entry of the original decree, amounting in the aggregate to $1,815 exclusive of interest, should be paid by defendant, and in the event that any of the creditors holding the claims representing that amount should enforce payment thereof against plaintiff, either by suit or otherwise, she should be entitled to judgment over against defendant for the amount for which she had been held liable. It was further provided that the original decree, directing defendant to deliver to plaintiff a certificate of stock in the Standard Chemical Company in an amount equal to one-half of the community interest therein found by the court to be $4,250, be modified, and that, it appearing to the court that at the time of the hearing defendant was the owner of 12 shares of the capital stock of the Standard Chemical Company of the par value of $50 each, that he should, within 90 days from the date of the entry of the decree, issue or cause to be issued to plaintiff a certificate for 6 shares thereof, but that the remaining 6 shares and such stock as defendant might thereafter earn should be his sole and individual property. The decree was supported by findings to the effect that the finding upon which the original decree was based—that the community composed of plaintiff and defendant was the equitable owner of capital stock in the Standard Chemical Company of the par value of $4,250—was erroneous; that the true facts were that defendant had, on March 1, 1915, subscribed for 60 shares of the capital stock of that company, and on the same day a resolution was passed by the company fixing defendant's salary at $200 per month, of which $150 was to be payable in cash and $50 per month was to be credited upon his stock subscription agreement, so that 1 full share in the stock of the company should be paid for by defendant's services at the end of each month of his employment; that his salary had not been increased since the date of the resolution, and that the total credits upon his stock subscription from March 1, 1915, to February 29, 1916, under the agreement evidenced by the resolution amounted to $600, or 12 shares of stock at the par value of $50 each; that the amount of community indebtedness was $1,815, exclusive of interest; that from April 17, 1915, to February 28, 1916, defendant had, by permission of the company, overdrawn his salary account in the sum of $1,412.40, for which he had executed his promissory notes which were then unpaid; that plaintiff had received from defendant since the date of the original decree the sum of $445, being in full of alimony as provided in the decree to the time of the hearing; that plaintiff is an able-bodied woman, 38 years of age, capable of earning $15 per week, and that there were no children of the parties to be cared for; that defendant had remarried and was living with and supporting his wife.

Plaintiff, considering herself aggrieved, has appealed from that portion of the decree refusing to increase the alimony from $50 per month to $25 per week, and also from that part thereof which adjudged her to be the owner of 6 shares only of stock in the Standard Chemical Company. The defendant, also being dissatisfied with the disposition made of the case, appeals from that portion of the decree which adjudges that, as between himself and plaintiff, he is wholly and solely liable for the unpaid community obligations, and also from that part thereof ordering him to deliver to plaintiff a certificate for 6 shares of the capital stock of the Standard Chemical Company.

The questions presented are whether the lower court erred (a) in modifying the original decree in respect to the provision requiring defendant to deliver to plaintiff capital stock of the Standard Chemical Company in an amount equal to one-half of $4.250, and adjudging that plaintiff was entitled to only 6 shares of stock of the par value of $50 each; (b) in denying plaintiff's application for an increase of alimony; and (c) in adjudging that as between plaintiff and defendant the latter should be solely liable for the community indebtedness antedating June 25, 1915.

There is very little dispute between counsel as to the law of the case, the questions presented being largely dependent for their solution upon the facts. It would serve no useful purpose to enter into a detailed discussion of the evidence relating to the life and affairs of this unhappy and unfortunate couple. That plaintiff invested substantial amounts of money in various companies with which defendant was connected there can be no doubt. That these investments proved to be disastrous is perfectly plain. But whether this result was brought about through lack of business judgment on the part of the defendant, or was due to other and more serious delinquencies on his part, or was due to causes over which he had no control, is rather incidental in a proceeding of this character. The money invested was lost and consequently is not before the court for division. If this were an action for an accounting between plaintiff and defendant, many elements might enter into the case that cannot properly be considered in a proceeding such as this. The court, in making a disposition of the property of the spouses incidental to granting a decree for divorce, is necessarily limited by the amount of property in the hands of the court for division. Palpably it cannot divide that which does not exist. In making provision for the wife in the way of alimony the court is also powerless to compel the husband to pay more than he is able to pay, no matter what his conduct may have been in wasting or dissipating property belonging to the wife.

The modification of the original decree in respect to the amount of stock owned by the community in the Standard Chemical Company was clearly right. It was conclusively established by the evidence that the community did not own stock in that company of the par value of $4,250. Plaintiff no doubt in good faith believed that the community was the equitable owner of that amount of stock in the company, but the fact remains that the parties did not own it, and consequently it was impossible for the defendant to comply with the decree with respect to it. The defendant prior to the decree claimed to have an oral agreement with one Burkheimer by the terms of which he was to share equally with Burkheimer in the profits or dividends derived from 85 shares of stock in the company, but for some reason not disclosed by the record this contract, if it ever existed, was not carried into effect. At all events the agreement to share the dividends declared upon the stock would not create an equitable title in defendant to the shares of stock themselves. The defendant subscribed for 60 shares of stock in the company for which he was paying in services at the rate of $50 per month, and the stock acquired under this agreement constituted his only holding in the company. At the time of the hearing it appeared that defendant had actually paid for or earned 12 shares of stock in the company, and he was required by the court to transfer to plaintiff 6 shares thereof as her sole and individual property. But in this connection it should be borne in mind that defendant was required to pay $1,815 with interest, representing the aggregate amount of community indebtedness antedating the decree of divorce, and it is quite plain that in order to enable him to meet these obligations the court adjudged to him the remaining 6 shares then paid for and such additional shares as he might thereafter acquire under his subscription contract.

The evidence adduced clearly established that plaintiff is a business woman of considerable experience; is a competent stenographer and bookkeeper; is 38 years of age and in robust health. The finding was well within the facts that she was easily capable of earning $65 per month. There are no children to be cared for, and it would seem that, by supplementing her own income to the extent of $50 per month in the way of alimony, she will be comfortably provided for and maintained.

A careful reading of the abstract in connection with frequent references to the statement of facts induces the conviction that the decree of the lower court, when considered from all viewpoints, is as nearly just and equitable as the nature of the case and the circumstances of the parties will permit. In disposing of questions of this character resort must necessarily be had to practical considerations, remembering always that the garment must be measured according to the cloth.

The decree will be affirmed both upon the original and upon the cross-appeal.

ELLIS, C. J., and CHADWICK, MAIN, and MORRIS, JJ., concur.

(96 Wash. 689)

ALLEN v. ALLEN (ALLEN et al., Garnishees).

(No. 13879.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 15, 1917.)

1. JUDGES 🔑30 — FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW—PLACE OF SIGNING.

Under the specific provisions of Rem. Code 1915, § 42, a judge of the superior court may sign his findings and conclusions of law and judgment outside the county, and where such documents were signed without the county and immediately filed in the county of suit, the judge acted within his jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judges, Cent. Dig. § 143.]

2. TRIAL 🔑395(8)—FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW—NECESSITY OF NOTICE.

As a matter of law, plaintiff is not entitled to notice of the time and place of signing the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 934.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1074(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—VACATING JUDGMENT.

The irregularity in signing a vacation of judgment outside the county is no ground for reversal in the absence of showing of prejudice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4248, 4249.]

4. JUDGMENT 🔑743(3)—RES JUDICATA—TITLE.

A judgment confirming title in the garnishee to certain diamonds is conclusive in the garnishment proceeding which was between the same parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1253, 1277.]

5. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES 🔑206(2)—NECESSITY OF RELATION OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

A gift of diamonds by an attorney to his daughter-in-law made 32 days after the attorney had withdrawn funds belonging to a client is not void or fraudulent as to the client as a creditor, the relation between attorney and client being the fiduciary one of principal and agent, and not debtor and creditor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. § 630.]

6. JUDGMENT 🔑683—CONCLUSIVENESS—PERSONS CONCLUDED.

Judgment for assignee of client's claim against attorney for moneys converted reciting date on which attorney became indebted to client is not binding upon a garnishee who received a gift from the attorney, as a finding of the date when the attorney became a debtor, to provide basis for claim that the gift was in fraud of the creditor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1206.]

7. GARNISHMENT 🔑193—DISCHARGE OF GARNISHEE—WAIVER OF CLAIM.

Where the attorney at the trial admitted that the principal was not indebted to his client's assignor at the time the principal made a gift to the garnishee, a discharge of the garnishee was warranted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. §§ 381, 382.]

8. GARNISHMENT 🔑191—COSTS—ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Under Rem. Code 1915, § 704, permitting taxation of attorney's fees against plaintiff in garnishment when the garnishee is discharged, there was no error in taxing attorney's fees of $100 in one garnishment or $200 in another garnishment proceeding, though no evidence was taken as to the value of the services.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Garnishment, Cent. Dig. §§ 372-379.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; E. C. Mills, Judge.

Action by Laura Allen against J. H. Allen, wherein Benna K. and J. Howard Allen, Jr., were garnished. From judgments discharging the garnishees, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jay C. Allen, of Seattle, for appellant. Bronson, Robinson & Jones, of Seattle, for respondent.

MAIN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court, discharging two writs of garnishment.

The facts are these: Some time during the month of March or April, 1914, Jay C. Allen, an attorney at law, residing at Seattle, intending to be absent from the state a number of months, arranged with J. H. Allen to look after his law business during such absence. Jay C. Allen, at this time, and for some time prior thereto, was, and had been, an attorney for one John Joyce. Prior to July 6, 1914, there had been paid into the registry of the court the sum of $6,797.64 for the benefit of Joyce. On the date last mentioned, J. H. Allen, as an attorney for Joyce, withdrew this money from the registry of the court. After being absent for a number of months, Jay C. Allen returned to Seattle, and shortly after his return and early in the month of October Joyce called his attention to the fact that he had not received the money which had been withdrawn from the registry of the court by J. H. Allen. At this time J. H. Allen was insolvent and unable to pay over the money. On October 22, 1914, the respondent Laura Allen advanced the money to pay Joyce, and took an assignment of his claim against J. H. Allen. On December 7, 1914, Laura Allen brought an action upon the assigned claim against J. H. Allen. On the same date Laura Allen caused a writ of garnishment to be issued in the case which she had brought against J. H. Allen, and served upon Howard Allen. On January 11, 1915, Laura Allen brought an action against J. H., or J. Howard Allen, Jr., who, to avoid confusion, will be referred to as Howard Allen. In this action it was claimed that Howard Allen was indebted to J. H. Allen in a large sum of money, and judgment was therein sought against Howard Allen. On January 19, 1915, Laura Allen brought an action against Howard Allen and Benna K. Allen, his wife, claiming that on January 9, 1915, J. H. Allen, for a valuable consideration, had conveyed and transferred to the plaintiff therein his right, title, and interest in and to certain property. It was claimed in the complaint that Howard Allen and wife held certain of the property covered by this assignment in trust for J. H.

Allen, and judgment was sought, declaring such trust, and for an accounting. The two actions last referred to were consolidated, and were tried before the Honorable Everett Smith, one of the judges of the superior court for King county, the trial having occurred during the month of April. On May 3, 1915, Laura Allen caused a writ of garnishment to be issued out of the same action in which Howard Allen had previously been made garnishee defendant, and caused the same to be served upon Benna K. Allen. These writs of garnishment were respectively answered by Howard Allen and Benna K. Allen, each denying that they had in their possession, or under their control, money or property belonging to J. H. Allen. These answers were controverted by Laura Allen. On November 29, 1915, the issues in the two garnishment proceedings came on for trial before the Honorable Edward C. Mills, judge of the superior court for Walla Walla county, then sitting in King county. On March 9, 1916, two judgments were entered, one discharging Howard Allen as garnishee, and the other discharging Benna K. Allen as garnishee. In the garnishment proceeding against Benna K. Allen, formal findings of fact and conclusions of law were made and entered. In the proceeding against Howard Allen, no findings were made other than a recital in the judgment. On March 15, 1916, Laura Allen made a motion to vacate the findings of fact and conclusions of law, which was subsequently overruled. From the judgments discharging the garnishees, this appeal is prosecuted.

[1] It is first claimed that the judgment discharging Benna K. Allen as garnishee should be reversed, because the appellant had no notice of the time and place that the findings and conclusions of law would be presented to Judge Mills for signature. A copy of the findings and conclusions of law were served upon the attorney for the appellant on the 6th day of March, 1916. On the 8th day of March the findings and conclusions of law and judgment were signed by Judge Mills in Walla Walla county, and by him were returned to the attorneys for the respondent, who caused them to be filed in the superior court of King county. In signing the findings and conclusions of law and judgment in Walla Walla county, Judge Mills did not exceed his jurisdiction. Section 42, Rem. Code; State ex rel. Calhoun v. Superior Court, 86 Wash. 492, 150 Pac. 1168.

[2] As a matter of law, the appellant was not entitled to notice of the time and place of signing the findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment. Upon this question, in Lindsay v. Scott, 56 Wash. 206, 105 Pac. 462, it was said:

> "The appellants were not entitled to notice of the time and place of signing the findings of fact, conclusions of law, or judgment, as a matter of law, nor were they deprived of the benefit of exceptions for want of notice. The right to except continues until the lapse of five days after notice of the filing of the findings, under the express terms of the statute, and repeated rulings of this court."

[3] It is next contended that the judge before whom the case was tried had no jurisdiction to hear and determine the motion to vacate the findings and judgment in any county other than King county. The hearing and determining of the motion to vacate was irregular and not authorized by the statute; but, unless prejudice is shown, it does not furnish a ground for reversal. The cause here is tried de novo, and since we are of the opinion that the motion to vacate was properly denied, a new trial should not be ordered. In Shaw v. Spencer, 57 Wash. 587, 107 Pac. 383, it was said:

> "The case was heard in the court below before Judge Holcomb of Adams county. After his return to Ritzville, the judge heard and denied a motion for a new trial, interposed by the appellants, and upon this ruling the first error is assigned. After providing that superior judges may make and sign certain orders outside of their respective counties, section 1 of Laws of 1901, p. 76 (Rem. & Bal. Code, § 41), expressly provides, 'That nothing herein contained shall authorize the judge to hear any matter outside of the county wherein the cause or proceeding is pending, except by consent of the parties.' Under this provision, a judge of the superior court cannot properly hear a motion for a new trial outside of the county wherein the cause is pending, except by consent of the parties, and the action of the trial judge in this respect was irregular; but the case is heard here de novo, and no prejudice has resulted to any party in interest, if the new trial was properly denied."

[4] Upon the merits, we will first consider the appeal from the judgment discharging Benna K. Allen as garnishee. On August 7, 1914, J. H. Allen gave to Benna K. Allen, his daughter-in-law, certain articles of personal property, included in which were three diamond rings, which were chiefly valuable on account of the diamonds. It is these three diamonds which are the basis of the controversy upon this appeal. There are two reasons why the judgment of the trial court should not be disturbed: First, if we understand the record correctly, the title to these same diamonds was tried in the consolidated cases heard before Judge Smith, and Benna K. Allen's title thereto was sustained. The property described in the complaint in that action includes "three diamond rings (one 3⅝ carat, one 1 1/7 carat, and one small one)." Laura Allen, in her controverting affidavit, in the garnishee proceeding against Benna K. Allen, described the diamonds which the latter had in her possession, and which it is contended were given to her in fraud of creditors, as follows: "Three diamond rings, one 3⅝ carat, one 1 1/7 carat, and one small one."

[5] The other reason why the judgment in favor of Benna K. Allen should not be disturbed is that, even though the diamonds were given to her as a present, and there was no consideration other than love and affection, it was not fraudulent as to John Joyce, through whom Laura Allen claims.

because it does not appear that, at the time this present was made, John Joyce was a creditor of J. H. Allen, or that the transfer was made for the purpose of defrauding him as a subsequent creditor. As already stated, the money was withdrawn from the registry of the court by J. H. Allen on the 6th day of July, 1914. The diamonds were given to Benna K. Allen on August 7, 1914. When J. H. Allen withdrew the money, he was acting as the attorney for Joyce, and the fact that, between the two dates mentioned, the money was not turned over to Joyce does not raise a presumption that, during that time, there had been a conversion. The relation between Allen and Joyce, when the money was withdrawn, was the fiduciary one of principal and agent, and not debtor and creditor, growing out of either contract or tort. 2 R. C. L. p. 1022; 6 C. J. p. 694; Thornton on Attorneys at Law, vol. 1, § 346; Goodyear Metallic Rubber Co. v. Baker's Estate, 81 Vt. 39, 69 Atl. 160, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667, 15 Ann. Cas. 1207.

[6] There is no evidence in the record from which it can be inferred that the relation of principal and agent was changed to that of debtor and creditor prior to the time when the diamonds were given to Benna K. Allen. It is true that the findings in the case of Laura Allen v. J. H. Allen, which were signed and filed on January 12, 1917, recited that J. H. Allen became indebted to Joyce on July 6, 1914, in the sum of $6,797.64, but Benna K. Allen was not a party to that action, and would not be bound by the findings and judgment therein. In Henry v. Yost, 88 Wash. 93, 152 Pac. 714, the latter had deeded, on August 30, 1912, certain property to one H. E. Schroeder in trust for Mrs. Yost. Subsequently Henry sued Yost and another for conversion of a band of sheep, and obtained judgment on February 25, 1913, and on July 10, 1913, brought an action against Yost and wife and Schroeder and wife to set aside the conveyance to Schroeder, which had been made in trust for Mrs. Yost. Upon the trial of the latter action, it was not shown that the conversion of the sheep had occurred prior to the time of the conveyance from Yost to Schoeder. It was there said:

> "Had Henry proved that his cause of action existed when the deed was given to Schroeder, he would have established a prima facie case of fraud, and the burden then would have been on the grantor and grantee to prove the validity of the conveyance. The only proof offered of this claim, however, was the record in the case of Henry v. Yost and Day. The judgment in that case is not even prima facie evidence, as against Mrs. Yost and Schroeder and wife, who were strangers to that judgment, of any indebtedness or liability of Yost to Henry prior to the time it was rendered. Eggleston v. Sheldon, 85 Wash. 422, 148 Pac. 575. To hold that, as against Mrs. Yost and Schroeder, it proves the previous existence of the alleged facts on which it was based and the time when those alleged facts occurred, would be to bind Mrs. Yost and Schroeder by the results of a litigation in which they did not appear, of which they had no notice or knowledge, and in which they had no opportunity to participate. The judgment established the indebtedness of Yost to Henry, but did not of itself prove the previous existence of the facts on which it was based. No other evidence of the indebtedness was introduced; consequently Henry did not establish that he was a creditor of Yost when the conveyance was made, and did not show a prima facie case of fraud. The judgment did prove him to be a creditor as of the date it was rendered, which was six months after the execution of the deed. Henry, having proved himself to be a subsequent creditor, could, by showing that the conveyance was made with intent to defraud him, have had it set aside and the property subjected to the lien of his judgment. The burden of such a showing was on him, and he failed to meet it. No evidence was introduced, except the judgment in the tort action, to show that the deed was given in anticipation of the judgment, and we have found that the judgment alone was ineffectual to prove the cause of action then existing against Yost. The appellant then has failed to prove either that he was a creditor when the deed was executed, which would have put upon Mrs. Yost or Schroeder the burden of vindicating the deed, or that the conveyance was made to defraud him as a subsequent creditor. Failing in both, he has not established his right to have the deed set aside and the property subjected to the lien of his judgment. The trial court properly dismissed the action."

Applying the doctrine of that case to the facts in the present case, the action must fail, because it does not appear that Joyce became a creditor of J. H. Allen prior to the time the diamonds were given to Benna K. Allen, or that the gift was made to defraud Joyce as a subsequent creditor.

We will refer now to the case against Howard Allen. When the cause came on for trial upon the issues framed in the garnishment proceeding, the statement of facts shows the following:

> "Mr. Allen: I am not asking for the car now. The car was given before this debt arose. I am not asking for the car.
>
> "Mr. Bronson: You don't contend for anything but the diamonds?
>
> "Mr. Allen: That is all, because the debt was not in existence at the time he gave the car.
>
> "The Court: Then the automobile, I take it, is eliminated?
>
> "Mr. Bronson: Yes.
>
> "The Court: Upon the statement of Mr. Allen it seems to me the court ought to dismiss the action against J. H. Allen, Jr., on your statement, Mr. Allen.
>
> "Mr. Bronson: Then, if your honor please, we ask to be allowed an attorney's fee at the proper time.
>
> "Mr. Allen: For that very reason I don't want to try it now.
>
> "The Court: I don't want you to claim your attorney's fee in that case by trying it here. I cannot hold that automobile. Do you admit they are entitled to judgment in that case?
>
> "Mr. Allen: Yes.
>
> "The Court: You may take judgment, and the court will allow attorney's fee.
>
> "Mr. Allen: We will attend to that later when I get through with this case."

[7] Upon this record, it seems to us, the court was authorized to discharge Howard Allen as garnishee. It was not error to enter a judgment to that effect.

[8] One other question is presented, and that is attorney's fees. In the proceeding against Howard Allen, a fee of $100 was allowed as costs; in that of Benna K. Allen,

$200. There was no testimony taken in either case as to what would be a reasonable judgment for attorney's fees. The statute (Rem. Code, § 704) provides that, where the garnishee is discharged, the costs of the proceeding, including a reasonable compensation to the garnishee for attorney's fee, shall be taxed against the plaintiff. In Carr v. Bonthius, 79 Wash. 282, 140 Pac. 339, it was said:

> "The court found that $250 was a reasonable attorney's fee to be allowed for the foreclosure. It is argued by the appellant that there was no evidence to support this conclusion. But we held in Warnock v. Itawis, 38 Wash. 144, 80 Pac. 297, that no evidence was necessary in such cases; that the court was as competent to judge what was a reasonable attorney's fee in such a case as the ordinary witness who might be called. There was no error in this finding."

The court did not err in awarding attorney's fees as specified in the judgments.

Affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and CHADWICK, MORRIS, and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 7)

CRANE v. WASHINGTON WATER POWER CO. (No. 13773.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 18, 1917.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑144—RIGHT TO COMPENSATION—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

A contract by which defendant agreed to pay plaintiff attorney $25,000 on his securing a permit from the Department of the Interior to flood certain acreage, and further to pay $25,000 if within three years he secured and caused to be vested in defendant the perpetual right to flood such acreage, did not entitle the attorney to payment of the second $25,000 upon his securing a permit under Act Cong. Feb. 15, 1901, c. 372, 31 Stat. 790 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 4946) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the use of public lands, but providing that any permission so given may be revoked in his discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 332, 333.]

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑144—RIGHT TO COMPENSATION—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION—"PERPETUAL RIGHT."

The words "perpetual right" in such contract contemplated securing an irrevocable right, or some right in addition to the permit under such statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 332, 333.]

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT 🔑144—RIGHT TO COMPENSATION—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

In such case, where the secretary revoked the permit and defendant employed another attorney to secure a reversal of the revoking order, the plaintiff attorney was not entitled to compensation on the theory that defendant had prevented his performing, since proceedings as to original permit could in no way interfere with his attempting to secure the perpetual right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 332, 333.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑714(2) — SCOPE OF REVIEW—FILING DOCUMENTS.

If demurrer was sustained to the fourth amended complaint, whereupon plaintiff refused to plead further and appealed, he could not file before the appellate court pleadings of the defendant in other suits in different states inconsistent with the pleadings filed in the instant case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2960.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; R. B. Blake, Judge.

Action by A. A. Crane against the Washington Water Power Company. Judgment dismissing the action, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Robertson & Miller, of Spokane, Fred D. Crane, of Cœur d'Alene, Idaho, and Isham N. Smith, of Wallace, Idaho, for appellant. Post, Russell, Carey & Higgins, of Spokane, for respondent.

MAIN, J. The purpose of this section was to recover an attorney's fee in the sum of $25,000, alleged to be due upon a written contract. To the fourth amended complaint, a demurrer was interposed and sustained. The plaintiff refused to plead further, and elected to stand upon this amended complaint. Thereupon judgment was entered, dismissing the action, from which the appeal is prosecuted.

The complaint is too voluminous to be here set out in full, but the controlling facts therein stated may be summarized as follows:

The appellant is an attorney at law, duly licensed under the laws of the state of Idaho, and residing in that state. The respondent is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Washington, and is a public service corporation, owning and operating certain electric light and power plants in the city of Spokane, and at Post Falls, Idaho. Immediately prior to the year 1908, the respondent had constructed, or had in the course of construction, a dam at Post Falls, Idaho, by which to impound the waters of the Spokane river and Lake Cœur d'Alene. Much of the land around the shore line of the lake, and along the tributaries adjacent thereto, was low, which the impounding of the water would cause to be inundated. Before the respondent would have a right to overflow a considerable portion of the land, it was necessary to secure a permit from the Secretary of the Interior, authorizing the overflow of the lands belonging to the federal government. For the purpose of securing this permit from the federal government, a contract between the parties was entered into, as follows:

> "It is hereby agreed by and between the Washington Water Power Company with A. A. Crane, that if the said Crane shall, within six months from the date hereof, to the satisfaction and approval of counsel and attorneys for said company at Spokane, Washington, procure and cause to be vested in said company, license, power and authority from the United States through its Secretary of the Interior, to back and hold water upon and flood and overflow with > water so much of the Cœur d'Alene Indian Reservation in the state of Idaho, and also any lands in any national or government park within the exterior boundaries of said reservation as said boundaries existed January 1, 1908, as are below an elevation of two thousand one hundred and twenty-eight feet above mean sea level, including all mounds, raises, hills and elevations within the exterior boundaries of said elevation of twenty-one hundred and twenty-eight feet, which said right to flood and overflow the said lands and to have and maintain as a reservoir, shall conform to and be granted under that certain act entitled, 'An act relating to rights of way through certain parks, reservations and other public lands,' approved February 15, 1901, and contained in 31 Statutes at Large at page 790; and any other act or law of the United States which may be applicable; then, and in those events, said the Washington Water Power Company shall and will pay to said Crane the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, or so much thereof as remains after paying any and all claims, demands and charges which said company may see fit to pay and which may have to be paid to secure said rights from the United States or Indians or any Indian, or any other person on said reservation having or claiming to have any valid or legal interest in said lands, or any part thereof; but no amount shall be paid on this contract as herein provided, by the Washington Water Power Company other than such as may be necessary to be paid to the United States and fees legally collectible by the officers of the United States, except on and with approval of said Crane.

>
> "Said sum of $25,000.00, or any part thereof, shall not be due or payable, except upon the written certificate of said Spokane attorneys of said company, which certificate shall be given and payment made to said Crane, within sixty days after full compliance with this contract by said Crane; provided said Crane shall fully comply with all the terms hereof within three years from the date of this contract.
>
> "The said Crane agrees to use his best efforts to secure the aforesaid rights as to, upon and over the whole of the lands hereinbefore mentioned and to transfer, or cause the same to be transferred to said company, its successors or assigns, as soon as secured.
>
> "If said Crane shall not secure said rights and the whole thereof, as and when herein provided, said the Washington Water Power Company shall not be liable to said Crane, or any other person, for any sum or amount whatever.
>
> "It is further agreed that if the said Crane shall, within three years from the date hereof, to the satisfaction and approval of counsel and attorneys of said company at Spokane, Washington, procure and cause to be vested in said company the perpetual right, power and authority to back and hold water upon and flood and overflow and to maintain reservoir upon and over the land hereinbefore described, then and in that event the said the Washington Water Power Company shall pay the said Crane the further sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, payable on the certificate of counsel and attorneys of the Washington Water Power Company as hereinbefore provided with reference to the other payment hereinbefore agreed to be made upon the conditions and provisions hereinbefore set forth.
>
> "Dated at Spokane, Washington, this 22d day of December, 1908."

After this contract was entered into, the appellant proceeded to the city of Washington, D. C., and there, as attorney for the respondent, made application to the Department of the Interior, and through the office of Indian Affairs, for a permit to enable the respondent to overflow the lands mentioned in the contract, under the provisions of the act of Congress of February 15, 1901, as provided in the contract. On February 2, 1909, the Secretary of the Interior, after a hearing, and proceedings had through the Office of Indian Affairs, issued a permit, authorizing the respondent to overflow the lands mentioned, but requiring, as a consideration therefor, that certain Indians, who were occupants of the lands, be paid for damages sustained by reason of the overflow waters at the rate of $1.25 per acre. More than $7,500 was paid to the United States, for the benefit of the Indians, the same being taken from the first $25,000 mentioned in the contract. After the right to overflow was granted, the Department of the Interior, in issuing patents by the United States to entrymen under the homestead laws, inserted a clause therein that such lands were subject to the rights of the Washington Water Power Company under the permit theretofore issued. It is alleged that, in securing the grant, or permit, above mentioned, from the United States, through the Secretary of the Interior, the appellant has caused to be vested in the respondent "perpetual right, power and authority" to flood and overflow the lands covered by the permit. Some time after the permit had been issued, the Department of the Interior required the Washington Water Power Company to show cause why its grant, or permit, should not be revoked. Thereafter a hearing was had by the Department of the Interior, and on July 29, 1910, an order was entered, revoking the permit. On the 22d day of April, 1912, the Secretary of the Interior entered an order, setting aside the previous revocation, holding that the same was arbitrary and unjustifiable, and there did not appear to be any sufficient reason for the revocation. While the matter was proceeding in the Department of the Interior, on an application to set aside the previous revocation of the permit, the respondent substituted other attorneys for the appellant in that proceeding.

The first question is whether the appellant had done all that he was required to do, under the written contract, in order to recover the second $25,000 mentioned therein. There is no controversy here over the first $25,000, as that has already been paid. A careful reading of the contract discloses that, by the terms thereof, the appellant was to do two things, the first being to procure and cause to be vested in the respondent, "license, power and authority" from the United States, through the Secretary of the Interior, to flood or overflow certain lands, which permit was to—

> "conform to and be granted under that certain act entitled, 'An act relating to rights of way through certain parks, reservations and other public lands,' approved February 15, 1901, and contained in 31 Statutes at Large at page 790; and any other act or law of the United States which may be applicable."

The other thing which the appellant was authorized to do under the contract is contained in the last paragraph thereof, and was that, if within three years, he should procure and cause to be vested in the respondent "the perpetual right, power and authority to back and hold water upon and flood and overflow" the land before described, he should be paid the sum of $25,000.

It is not claimed that the appellant caused any permit to be issued, other than that above mentioned, which was issued under the act of February 15, 1901, but it is claimed that this permit vested in the respondent the perpetual right, power, and authority to flood the lands mentioned. By the Act of February 15, 1901, it is provided that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and empowered under general regulations, to be fixed by him, to permit the use of rights of way through the public lands, forest, and other reservations of the United States, for electrical plants, poles, and lines for the generation and distribution of electrical power, etc. This act contains the proviso:

> "That any permission given by the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act may be revoked by him or his successor in his discretion, and shall not be held to confer any right, or easement, or interest in, to, or over any public land, reservation, or park."

[1] It seems plain that a permit to flood lands, issued under this act of Congress, would not, and could not, confer a perpetual right to flood or overflow land. The proviso quoted gives the Secretary of the Interior authority to revoke in his discretion, and provides that any permit issued thereunder shall not confer any right, or easement, or interest in, to, or over any public land. A right subject to these limitations could not well be considered perpetual.

[2] It is argued, however, that the word "perpetual" must be given a meaning which the parties to the contract intended, having regard to the subject-matter thereof and the surrounding facts and circumstances, and this proposition cannot well be disputed. Looking again to the contract, it first provided for license, power, and authority from the United States to flood the land, which should be issued under the act of February 15, 1901, and fixed the compensation for that service. It will be noticed that, in this part of the contract, the word "perpetual" is not mentioned. In the second part of the contract, which is found in the last paragraph, an additional compensation in the sum of $25,000 is to be paid, provided the appellant, within three years from the date of the making of the contract, should procure and cause to be vested in the respondent the "perpetual right, power and authority" to flood the land. This would indicate that, in order to earn the second $25,000 mentioned, the appellant was to secure a greater right than could be obtained under the act of February 15, 1901. It was obviously not the intention of the parties, at the time the contract was executed, that the $25,000 mentioned in the last paragraph should become due when a permit should be issued by the Department of the Interior, under the act of February 15, 1901.

[3] Some mention is made in the briefs of section 2339, United States Revised Statutes (Comp. St. 1916, § 4647), but it was held in United States v. Utah Light & Power Co., 209 Fed. 554, 126 C. C. A. 376, and 230 Fed. 328, 144 C. C. A. 470, by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, that that section of the Revised Statutes is not applicable where the right to burden public lands involves the generation, manufacture, or distribution of electric power. The appellant, not having caused the perpetual right to flood the land to be vested in the respondent, as mentioned in the last paragraph of the contract, is not entitled to the $25,000, which was to be paid him if he secured that right, unless he has been prevented from performing that part of the contract by the respondent. It is alleged, as above stated, that, after the permit was issued and revoked, and while the cause was pending in the Department of the Interior, seeking restoration of the permit and the setting aside of the revocation, other attorneys were substituted for the appellant in that proceeding, but this would not prevent the appellant from proceeding under the last paragraph of the contract, which involved the perpetual right.

The permit, as finally sustained by the Department of the Interior, was under the act of February 15, 1901, and, as already stated, in our opinion, did not vest in the respondent a perpetual right. Had the appellant been permitted to handle the litigation which resulted in sustaining the permit and setting aside the previous revocation, he would have been in no different position than he now is. Not having secured the perpetual right, as provided for in the concluding paragraph in the contract, and not having been prevented from performing that part of the contract by any act of the respondent, the service for which the $25,000 there mentioned was to be compensation has not been rendered, and no recovery can be had therefor.

[4] In the reply brief, two cases are referred to, which had been instituted in the District Court of the United States for the District of Idaho, Central Division, in each of which the Washington Water Power Company, the respondent here, was defendant, and request is made for permission to file and have the court consider certified copies of the pleadings in those cases, and, in the event that this request is denied, that the appellant be permitted to amend his fourth amended complaint. To sustain either of these requests would be to adopt a procedure unknown to the laws of this state. When the trial court sustained the demurrer to the fourth amended complaint, the appellant refused to plead further, and elected to stand thereon, and brought the matter to this court by appeal, for the purpose of reviewing the ruling of the trial court. Whether the judgment of the trial court is right must be determinated from the facts alleged in the complaint, and these can neither be enlarged nor modified by any facts that may appear in the pleadings in the two cases mentioned. The request tó file will be denied, and also the request to permit, in this court, an amendment of the fourth amended complaint. While it is not material, it may be said that the apparent purpose of the request to file the papers, or to amend, was to get before this court the fact that, in the federal court, where those actions are pending, the respondent had taken a different position upon the law from that it here takes, but, if the respondent here (defendant in those cases) there took an unsound position upon the law, that would not be a good reason to deny it the right here to urge a correct view of the law.

The judgment will be affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and CHADWICK, MORRIS, and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

(96 Wash. 646)

MURRAY et ux. v. CITY OF SEATTLE.
(No. 13611.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 15, 1917.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑939—PRESENTATION FOR REVIEW—RECORD.

A statement, in the transcript of the record on appeal, of the grounds of a motion for a new trial, will be presumed to be correct, rather than a substantially different statement contained in the abstract of the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3804–3806.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1078(1)—PRESENTATION FOR REVIEW—ABANDONMENT—BRIEFS.

An objection made below in an action against a city, that the claim sued on was not properly verified, will be deemed abandoned on appeal when not presented in the brief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4256.]

3. TIME 🔑9(4)—PRESENTATION OF CLAIM.

Under a city charter provision requiring that claims against a city be filed within 30 days, a claim filed November 30th, after occurrence of an accident on October 30th, is one day late.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Time, Cent. Dig. §§ 19–23.]

4. EVIDENCE 🔑17 — JUDICIAL NOTICE — DATES.

The court will take judicial notice that the last Sunday of October, 1915, came on the 31st of the month, and that therefore an injury sued for could not have been received on Sunday, October 30, 1915.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 21.]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑231(3)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF OBJECTION.

A general objection to evidence on the ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, will not save a point on appeal, where such objection is not sufficiently specific to call the court's attention to the particular point sought to be raised.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1299; Trial, Cent. Dig. § 199.]

6. TRIAL 🔑84(4)—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF OBJECTION.

An objection to the introduction in evidence of a claim filed against a city, that it was incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and insufficient, did not present the point that the claim had not been filed in time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 217.]

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑812(7) — CLAIM FOR DAMAGES—DATE OF INJURY.

It is not necessarily fatal to a claim for damages filed against a city that it inaccurately stated the date on which the injuries were received, where the city charter does not specify that such date shall be stated, and the claim was in fact filed within the time fixed by the charter, and the city was not misled to its prejudice by the statement of an incorrect date.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1702.]

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑812(4) — PRESENTATION AND FILING OF CLAIMS—SUBSTANTIAL COMPLIANCE.

That charter provisions relating to the presentation and filing of claims against municipalities are mandatory does not render insufficient a substantial compliance with such provisions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1699.]

9. ELECTRICITY 🔑13—ACTION FOR INJURIES—NOTICE OF DEFECT OR OBSTRUCTION—NECESSITY.

In an action against a city for injuries due to electric light wires falling across a street in consequence of negligence of the city in permitting the wires to be supported by decayed poles, it was not necessary to show that the city had either actual or constructive notice of the existence of the obstruction in the street; it being only in cases where the negligence relied on is the city's failure to remove an obstruction and repair a defect in the street not caused by its own act or negligence that the question of notice of the obstruction or defect is an essential element.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Electricity, Cent. Dig. § 6.]

10. JUDGMENT 🔑199(3) — NOTWITHSTANDING VERDICT—EVIDENCE.

Where, in a personal injury case against a city, a cause of action based on negligence of the city was supported by substantial evidence, a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was properly denied.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 367.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; Boyd J. Tallman, Judge.

Action by Carl Murray and wife against the City of Seattle. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hugh M. Caldwell and Frank S. Griffith, both of Seattle, for appellant. Walter S. Fulton, of Seattle, for respondents.

WEBSTER, J. This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries. The material allegations of the complaint are substantially these: That on October 30, 1915, at about 12:15 p. m., plaintiffs were driving their automobile south on Eighth Avenue Northwest between Seventy-Third and Seventieth Streets West, in the city of Seattle; that about 200 feet north of Seventieth Street West, on the west side of Eighth Avenue Northwest, two electric light wires maintained by the city of Seattle had through its negligence been caused to fall and be suspended across Eighth Avenue Northwest. The specific acts of negligence charged against the defendant were that at the point where the wires had fallen the defendant had them attached to a pole which was wholly insufficient in strength to support them and which was not reasonably adapted to the purpose for which it had been used; that, because of long use of the pole, it had become further weakened by rot and decay and by reason thereof fell, causing the wires to be suspended across the avenue in such manner as to constitute a menace to persons having occasion to use the same; and further that the defendant negligently and carelessly permitted the wires to remain across the avenue after they had fallen notwithstanding its officers, agents, or employés knew of their condition, or by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence ought to have known thereof; that plaintiffs, without fault on their part, while using the avenue for the purpose of travel, came in contact with the wires, causing the injuries set forth in the complaint; that on November 30, 1915, plaintiffs caused to be presented to the defendant and filed with the city clerk their duly verified claim for damages; and that more than 60 days had elapsed since the filing of the claim, and the same had neither been rejected nor allowed. Attached to and made a part of the complaint was a copy of the claim which states that the accident occurred on October 30, 1915. The defendant answered, denying all of the allegations of the complaint and affirmatively pleading contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiffs, which was denied by the reply. Upon these issues the cause was tried, resulting in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiffs.

The defendant appeals, setting forth five assignments of error, which present two questions for review: (a) Did the court err in admitting in evidence the notice of claim filed with the city clerk? (b) Did the court err in denying the defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict? At the trial both of the plaintiffs testified that the accident occurred on October 30, 1915, and testimony to the same effect was given by two other witnesses testifying in behalf of plaintiffs. When counsel for plaintiffs offered in evidence the claim for damages filed with the city, the defendant objected to its admission upon the ground that it had not been verified as required by the city charter, and that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and insufficient." The objection was overruled and the claim was received in evidence. At the close of plaintiffs' case, the defendant announced that it also rested, and immediately moved the court for an instructed verdict in its favor upon the grounds that no notice either actual or constructive of the existence of the obstruction in the street had been brought home to the defendant, and that "the claim allowed in evidence is irrelevant, immaterial, and insufficient." The motion was denied, and the case, under instructions to which no exceptions were taken, was submitted to the jury.

After the verdict had been returned, but before it had been filed by the clerk, the defendant moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict upon the grounds, among others:

> "9 (1) That plaintiffs failed to prove that the city had notice either actual or constructive of the wires being in the street or of the pole to which they were attached being blown down," and "(3) that the claim filed with the defendant on November 30, 1915, was not a sufficient claim on which to base an action."

At no time during the trial was the specific objection made that the claim had not been filed within the time limited by the city charter; counsel for defendant contenting himself with the objection to the verification of the claim and that same was incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial, and insufficient.

[1] The abstract of the record, in setting forth the grounds upon which the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was based, states the third ground in the following language:

> "That the claim filed with defendant on November 30, 1915, was not a sufficient claim on which to base an action, not being filed in time."

But by reference to the transcript it is found that the words "not being filed in time" were not included as a part of the third ground of the motion. It must therefore be assumed that the transcript rather than the abstract is correct, and consequently it appears from the record that the point that the claim had not been filed in time was not raised in the lower court in any manner.

[2] The objection in the court below that the claim had not been properly verified seems to be abandoned on appeal, as the point is not presented in the briefs. We shall therefore not pause to discuss that question.

[3-5] If it be conceded that the accident occurred on October 30, 1915, the claim filed on November 30, 1915, was one day late. Ehrhardt v. Seattle, 40 Wash. 221, 82 Pac. 296. Counsel for plaintiffs, however, insist that the accident actually happened on October 31, 1915, but that through mistake and inadvertence the date was stated in the notice of claim and in the complaint filed pursuant to it as October 30, 1915, and that this error ran through the whole case; that date being assumed as correct in propounding questions to the witnesses. In support of this contention, it is called to our attention that, in the cross-examination of the plaintiff Carl Murray, he testified that the accident occurred on Sunday, and that the court should take judicial notice of the fact that there was no Sunday in the month of October, 1915, which fell on the 30th day of that month; the last Sunday in October, 1915, being on the 31st day of the month. It is further urged in behalf of the plaintiffs that, if counsel for the defendant had at the trial interposed an objection to the introduction of the claim in evidence upon the ground that it had not been filed in time, the mistake could easily have been explained and corrected, and that by failing to raise the question at that time the point should be deemed to have been waived. In addition to the testimony of Carl Murray that the accident happened upon Sunday, the record discloses that Walter R. North also testified that the accident occurred on Sunday, and that the defendant immediately sent men to the scene of the accident and repaired the wires. It is perfectly plain from the statement of facts that a mistake was committed either in the date of the accident or in the day of the week on which it occurred. If plaintiffs received the injuries complained of on Sunday, October 31, 1915, the notice filed on November 30, 1915, was timely. The court will take judicial knowledge of the fact that the last Sunday in October, 1915, came on the 31st day of the month, and therefore that the accident could not have occurred on Sunday October 30, 1915. It is well settled in this state that a general objection to the introduction of evidence upon the ground that it is incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial will not be sufficient to save the point on appeal, when such objection is not sufficiently definite and specific to call to the attention of the court the particular point sought to be raised. The purpose of requiring an objection to evidence is to give the court to understand the reason or ground upon which the proffered evidence should be rejected, so as to enable the court to intelligently pass upon the question, to the end that cases may be tried upon proper evidence and that new trials and reversals on appeal may be avoided. When an objection fails to accomplish this, it falls short of its purpose and of right should be construed to be no objection whatever. Seattle v. Hewetson, 164 Pac. 234; Evergreen Farm v. Attalia Land Co., 91 Wash. 192, 157 Pac. 487; State v. Spangler, 92 Wash. 636, 159 Pac. 810; Coleman v. Montgomery, 19 Wash. 610, 53 Pac. 1102; Liebenthal v. Price, 8 Wash. 206, 35 Pac. 1078.

[6] We are of the opinion that adding the word "insufficient" to the words "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial," did not in this instance tend in any way toward making the objection more specific. An objection to the claim upon the ground that it is insufficient is not reasonably calculated to call to the court's attention the fact that the point relied upon is that the claim had not been filed in time. Under the charter of the city of Seattle, the notice of claim is required to be in certain form and to contain certain specific information, and an objection that it is insufficient merely challenges the form or substance of the claim itself. The point that the claim had not been filed within the time fixed by the charter is in no manner suggested by such an objection. If counsel for the defendant intended to rely upon the point that the claim had not been filed in time, common fairness demanded that he should frankly state his objection to the court. If the point was well taken and presented a situation from which plaintiffs were unable to relieve themselves, no injury could have been suffered by the city. If, upon the other hand, by interposing a veiled and misleading general objection plaintiffs were entrapped into making an involuntary sacrifice upon the alter of technicality, the wisdom and fairness of the rule requiring objections to be specific becomes at once apparent.

In Cowan v. Bucksport, 98 Me. 305, 56 Atl. 901, it was held that, where the written notice of injury received upon a highway required by statute is offered in evidence and is objected to upon the ground of insufficiency, no other ground being stated, the objection will not raise the point that the claim had not been filed within the statutory period. In that case counsel for plaintiff said:

> "We offer a copy of the 14 days' notice. I understand that, without admitting that it is a complete notice, it is admitted that the town officers received a copy like this one we offer."

Counsel for defendant replied:

> "I understand that the town officers received a copy of that notice. I object to the notice—to the sufficiency of it."

The copy was admitted in evidence and exception noted. Upon appeal it was urged by defendant that it had not been shown that the notice had been received by the town officers within the time fixed by law. The court said:

> "We think the point now made is within the category of points to be made at the trial, or to be considered as waived. It was not made at the trial, and no intimation was given that it would be made. Had it been made at the trial and sustained, the plaintiff would either have supplied the evidence or submitted to an adverse verdict. If not sustained, the defendant could have excepted, and thus regularly and seasonably brought the question here. The point, not having been made at the trial, cannot be sustained here, even if it be otherwise sustainable."

In this connection, it seems proper to consider the question of whether it would have availed plaintiffs anything had the specific objection been made in the lower court that the claim had not been filed in time. Section 29, art. 4, of the charter of the city of Seattle, provides:

> "All claims for damages against the city must be presented to the city council and filed with the clerk within thirty days after the time when such claim for damages accrued, and no ordinance shall be passed allowing any such claim or any part thereof, or appropriating money or other property to pay or satisfy the same or any part thereof, until such claim has been first referred to the proper department, nor until such department has made its report to the city council thereon, pursuant to such reference. All such claims for damages must accurately locate and describe the defect that caused the injury, accurately describe the injury, give the residence for one year last past of claimant, contain the items of damage claimed, and be sworn to by the claimant. No action shall be maintained against the city for any claim for damages until the same has been presented to the city council and sixty days have elapsed after such presentation."

[7] It will be seen that by the terms of the charter it is not required that the claim itself shall state the time of the occurrence of the accident. It provides merely that the claim shall accurately locate and describe the defect that caused the injury, accurately describe the injury, state the items of damage claimed, give the residence for one year last past of the claimant, and be sworn to by him. It further provides that a claim containing this information shall be presented to the city and filed with the clerk within 30 days after the time when the claim for damages accrued. Under such a charter, we think it may well be said that, if the notice of claim contains the required information and is in fact filed within the time specified, it is a literal compliance with the charter. The provisions of the charter do not, either by their terms or by their intendments, require that the claim shall state the date of the accident or that it shall show upon its face that it is filed within 30 days thereafter, and to construe the charter otherwise would be to read into it a provision which the city has not seen fit to incorporate in it. Whatever the rule may be applicable to cases arising under statutes or charters requiring the time of the accident to be stated in the notice—and upon this question we express no opinion—we are convinced that under a charter such as that now before us it is not necessarily fatal to the claim if it fails to state the exact date upon which the injuries were received, providing the claim was in fact filed within the time fixed and the city is not misled to its prejudice by reason of an incorrect date being stated.

In the case of Marcotte v. Lewiston, 94 Me. 233, 47 Atl. 137, the Supreme Judicial Coure of Maine had before it a question practically identical with the one presented in this case. The statute there before the court required the claimant within 14 days after the occurrence of the injury to give written notice to the municipality, "setting forth his claim for damages and specifying the nature of his injuries and the nature and location of the defect which caused such injury." In the notice filed the injury was stated to have occurred on February 12, 1898, and the declaration alleged the same date. At the trial the plaintiff offered evidence tending to show that the accident actually happened on February 13th, instead of the 12th. The evidence was excluded and a verdict ordered for the defendant. In considering the question on appeal, the court said:

> "Did this error in the date of the accident defeat the action? We think not. The cause of action was complete, if this was a defective way, of which defendant had 24 hours' previous notice, and an injury was received thereby while plaintiff was in the exercise of due care, and without fault on his part. The date of the accident is in no sense an element. The statute is remedial, and to be construed and applied as such. The right to the remedy accrues when the injury is received, but to protect towns against possible fraud and stale claims, where opportunity for investigation may be lost, and discovery of evidence difficult, the statute requires the party, within 14 days after its occurrence, to give written notice to the municipal officers, 'setting forth his claim for damages, and specifying the nature of his injuries, and the nature and location of the defect which caused such injury.' The manifest purpose of this requirement is to afford opportunity to the town officers to examine the place, ascertain from persons having knowledge of the facts while the recollection is fresh, all the attending circumstances, and determine as to the liability of the town, and prepare its defense if the town officers decide to defend. Blackington v. Rockland, 66 Me. 332; Wadleigh v. Inhabitants of Mt. Vernon, 75 Me. 79; Low v. Windham, 75 Me. 113.
>
> "For all these purposes it is immaterial upon what day the accident occurred. Nothing in the statute requires statement of the day. The notice must be given within 14 days. If given within that limit, it will be sufficient if no specific day is named. The plaintiff is allowed that time to ascertain the precise location and character of the defect, and the nature and extent of his injury, and to state them on paper, and the investigation of the town officers should cover the same range. The court would not be justified in importing into the notice a requirement, not in the statute, which is not of the essence of the right, and is unimportant to the town.
>
> "It is quite easy, in reckoning back 14 days, to make an error of one day, and it seems a hardship to deprive a party of all remedy because of such mistake. Plaintiff could have no object intentionally to misstate, and it is inconceivable that in any investigation the town might make of the occurrence it would fail to discover the facts as they were on the 13th, even if they were enquiring of the 12th. * * * Notwithstanding the date of the 12th in the notice and in the declaration, it was competent for the plaintiff to show that the accident occurred on the 13th."

We are satisfied that the reasoning in this case is sound and that the conclusion reached is in keeping with the spirit of our own holdings.

In Frasier v. Cowlitz County, 67 Wash. 312, 121 Pac. 459, this court said:

> "The purpose of these provisions, as applied to a claim arising from a tort, is to enable the municipality to investigate both the claim and the claimant while the occurrence is recent and the evidence available, to the end that it may protect itself against spurious and unjust claims. When the claim substantially complies with the legislative requirement and these ends are subserved, the claim has accomplished the purpose intended."

In Lindquist v. Seattle, 67 Wash. 230, 121 Pac. 449, in considering the sufficiency of compliance with charter provisions requiring notice of claim to be filed with the city, it was held that, where there is a bona fide effort to comply with the law and the claim filed actually accomplishes the purpose of notice as to the place and character of the defect in the street, it is sufficient, though defective if the deficiencies are not such as to be actually misleading. After citing cases in support of the rule, Judge Ellis said:

> "These, and many other decisions which might be cited, show that this court has never adopted that Draconic strictness of construction which would sacrifice the just and reasonable purpose of the law to a technical exactness of terms, making it a pitfall for the ignorant and unskillful, rather than a reasonable protection against the fraudulent and designing."

See, also, Decker v. Seattle, 80 Wash. 137, 141 Pac. 338; Hammock v. Tacoma, 40 Wash. 539, 82 Pac. 893; Bell v. Spokane, 30 Wash. 508, 71 Pac. 31.

[8] While it is true that in this jurisdiction the provisions of statutes and charters relating to the presentment and filing of claims against municipalities have been held to be mandatory, it does not follow that a substantial compliance with them is not sufficient. Even a mandatory or imperative statute may be satisfied by substantial compliance with its terms. Dillon, in his Treatise on Municipal Corporations (5th Ed. § 1613, p. 2819), states the rule in this language:

> "The provisions of the statute prescribing the terms and contents of the notice, such as the time and place of the accident, the nature of the injury, the defect in the street or highway, or the cause of the injury, must be substantially complied with; otherwise, the condition precedent to the right to maintain the action has not been performed, and the action will not lie."

In Hammock v. Tacoma, supra, this court approved the statement of Judge Thompson, in his Commentaries on the Law of Negligence, with respect to the certainty required in describing the place of the accident, saying that it voiced the almost unanimous sentiment of the courts upon the subject. And we are of the opinion that his statement in section 6328 of the same work, wherein he says that it will generally be sufficient if substantial accuracy is attained in the notice with respect to the time of the accident, is equally sound under a charter or statute which does not require the time of the accident to be stated in the notice of claim.

We conclude upon this branch of the case that, inasmuch as the charter does not require the time of the accident to be stated, and the discrepancy in the date given in the claim in this case involves a period of one day only, and there is no claim or contention that the city was in any manner deceived or misled to its prejudice, and there is enough in the record to indicate that plaintiffs could have explained the mistake and have shown that the injuries complained of in fact occurred on October 31, 1915, if the point had been raised in the lower court, and hence that the claim was actually filed in time, the city cannot be heard to say for the first time in this court that the notice of claim was not timely.

[9] This brings us to the second assignment, that there was not sufficient evidence to show that the city had notice, either actual or constructive, of the existence of the obstruction in the street. If the sole negligence relied on by plaintiffs had been that of the failure of the defendant to remove the obstruction within a reasonable time after knowledge actual or constructive of its existence, we would be inclined to hold that the evidence was not sufficient. But it must not be overlooked that it is alleged in the complaint, and there is substantial evidence in the record to sustain the allegations that the defendant was guilty of negligence which caused the obstruction to be in the street. In such case, the condition complained of is due to the act or neglect of the city itself, and no notice of any kind either actual or constructive is necessary. It is only in cases where the negligence relied on is the failure of the city to remove an obstruction or to repair a defect in the street not caused by its own act or neglect that the question of notice of the obstruction or defect is an essential element. McQuillin, Municipal Corporations, vol. 6, § 2808; Thompson, Commentaries on Negligence, vol. 5, §§ 5993 and 6016; Tewksbury v. Lincoln, 84 Neb. 571, 121 N. W. 994, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 282.

[10] The defendant did not move for a new trial but predicates error upon the denial of its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Inasmuch as there is a cause of action alleged, based upon the primary negligence on the part of the city which caused and brought about the obstruction in the street, and these allegations are supported by substantial evidence, there is sufficient foundation upon which the verdict of the jury can soundly rest. The motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was therefore properly denied.

The judgment is affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and MORRIS, MAIN, and CHADWICK, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 31)

ACKERSON v. ELLIOTT et ux. (No. 13174.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 19, 1917.)

1. TRUSTS 🔑101 — CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS — PURCHASE BY RENTING AGENT.

The constructive trust arising from secret purchase by an agent of his principal's property which he advised the principal to sell was not affected by the fact that he was a mere renting agent, where he had invited and secured the principal's trust and confidence in him; the equitable principle governing constructive trusts depending, not upon the technical nature of the agency, but on the trust and confidence actually reposed in the agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 152.]

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS 🔑100(8) — CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS—FRAUD—DISCOVERY.

Action for recovery of land on the theory of constructive trust was not barred by defendant's adverse possession, the action being, in substance, one for relief on the ground of fraud, and less than the three years specified by Rem. Code 1915, § 159, having expired after plaintiff's discovery of the fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 487.]

3. TRUSTS 🔑365(2)—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS—LACHES.

In action to enforce constructive trust arising from secret purchase by agent of principal's property, defendant could not base the defense of laches upon knowledge of other agents of the principal, since the agent so purchasing should have himself informed the principal that he was purchasing for himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 571.]

4. RECORDS 🔑19—TRUSTS 🔑365(3) — CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS—RECORDING MORTGAGE—NOTICE TO BENEFICIARY.

In suit to establish a constructive trust as to land secretly purchased by agent from principal, the recording of the deed from defendant agent's straw man to defendant was not notice to the principal or her other agents; for the recording of an instrument is only constructive notice to those acquiring interests subsequent to the execution of the instrument.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Cent. Dig. § 44; Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 570.]

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS 🔑103(3) — CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS—NOTICE OF REPUDIATION OF TRUST.

The mere adverse possession by the agent was not an open repudiation of the constructive trust so as to start running of statute of limitations; such possession being evidence merely of claim of title, and not evidence as to the manner of acquiring such title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 508; Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 570.]

Fullerton, J., dissenting.

En Banc. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; King Dykeman, Judge.

Action by S. Louise Ackerson against J. S. Elliott and wife. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

John W. Roberts, Arthur E. Nafe, and Dwight Hartman, all of Seattle, for appellant. James B. Bruen and James B. Murphy, both of Seattle, for respondents.

PARKER, J. This action was commenced in the superior court for King county by Mrs. S. Louise Ackerson against J. S. Elliott and wife, seeking recovery and reconveyance to her of a 50-acre tract of land in that county near Seattle, which she claims was acquired from her by J. S. Elliott under such circumstances as to constitute him a trustee holding the title thereto in trust for her, and also seeking an accounting for the rents and profits of the land. After the commencement of the action and the filing of the answer, verified by J. S. Elliott in person, he died, leaving his wife surviving him, who thereupon became the executrix of his estate, and thereafter, she, as executrix, being substituted as defendant, the case proceeded to trial and judgment against plaintiff denying the relief prayed for by her, from which she has appealed to this court.

In the year 1899 Mrs. Ackerson was the owner of the tract of land in question and other real property in King county. In that year she placed all of her property in King county in the hands of J. S. Elliott as her agent for the purpose of caring for and renting the same. It does not appear that he was then given authority to find purchasers for any of the property, though he did thereafter find purchasers for some of it to whom sales were made by Mrs. Ackerson, she recognizing Elliott's services in that behalf and paying him compensation therefor measured by commissions upon the selling prices. The evidence indicates quite clearly that, while Elliott was primarily employed by Mrs. Ackerson merely as her renting agent, she came to depend upon him in some measure for information and advice concerning conditions in Seattle and vicinity affecting her property there, not only as to its earnings, but as to the possibility of its sale. She even advised with him to some extent in relation to the purchase of other property in Seattle. Numerous letters passed between them in which conditions touching her property interests in Seattle and vicinity were discussed at considerable length by each of them. She has been at all times since prior to the year 1899 a nonresident of this state, and was unacquainted with the tract of land in question and its value. As showing the nature of the relation of confidence which had grown up between them, we here notice portions of some of the letters passing between them. On January 8, 1901, Elliott wrote to Mrs. Ackerson a somewhat lengthy letter advising her of conditions in and about Seattle, as the same affected her property interests there, accompanying the letter with copies of Seattle newspapers, stating that he sent her these copies to advise her of the progress the city was making. In this letter he had considerable to say as to the advisability of her selling some of her property and also improving some of it, not mentioning the property here in question, however. On February 13, 1901, she answered this letter, evidently appreciating the information it gave her, referring to it as "your good long letter of January 8th." In this answering letter she said to him:

> "I shall be glad to keep in communication with you and to be advised by you."

And further on, referring to the possibility of a sale of certain of her property, she said:

> "If you have what you consider a good offer for it, submit it to me and I will lose no time in replying. I depend upon your advice above all others."

On December 24, 1901, in a letter to Elliott Mrs. Ackerson said:

> "I am remembering old friends and sending the seasons greetings. I want to express to you my best wishes."

Then, after mentioning matters touching the value of and possibility of a sale of certain of her property, she said:

> "I have such confidence in your judgment I would value your opinion if you would favor me with it as in the past."

These expressions on the part of Mrs. Ackerson manifestly were prompted by numerous and lengthy letters written to her by Elliott relating to her property interests in King county apart from the mere renting of her property. Such was the relationship existing between them and which continued up until a short time following the occurrence of the acts complained of by Mrs. Ackerson here involved, which resulted in Elliott acquiring this land from her. His agency for her ceased a short time thereafter because of the fact that all her property there had been sold; the sale to Sanderson for Elliott of this land being among the last.

Since about the year 1901 M. F. Backus, of Seattle, has represented Mrs. Ackerson as her banker in Seattle, to whom the rents collected by Elliott were turned over by him, and to whom interest and mortgage loans due to Mrs. Ackerson were paid by those owing her in Seattle. Since prior to the year 1899 John P. Hartman has been attorney for Mrs. Ackerson in all her affairs requiring the services of an attorney in Seattle. Neither Backus nor Hartman has been her real estate agent for the purpose of finding purchasers of her property, neither of them being engaged in the real estate business, though they advised her to some extent touching the sale of her property there from time to time.

In January 1903, the land in question being still in Elliott's hands as agent for the purpose of renting the same, and the relation between him and Mrs. Ackerson touching her property interests in King county being as above noticed by us, he secretly caused one Sanderson to purchase the land for him from Mrs. Ackerson for $7,500, he furnishing to Sanderson the money therefor, a deed from Mrs. Ackerson to Sanderson being executed January 29, 1903, and a deed from Sanderson to Elliott being executed in consummation of the deal on March 2, 1903, both of these deeds being recorded in the auditor's office of King county on March 12, 1903. Sanderson at the instance of Elliott went to Hartman and offered $7,500 for the land; Hartman not knowing the relation existing between Elliott and Sanderson. Hartman was unacquainted with the land and did not know its value. He communicated this offer to Elliott, asking Elliott's advice as to whether or not he (Hartman) should advise Mrs. Ackerson to accept the offer. Eliott advised Hartman that it was a good offer and all that the land was worth, and that he thought Mrs. Ackerson should be advised to accept it. Hartman and Backus considered the matter, both being unacquainted with the value of the land and both depending upon the advice of Elliott as to its value. They concluded to advise Mrs. Ackerson to accept the offer made by Sanderson. Hartman so wrote Mrs. Ackerson, inclosing a deed for her to execute in the event she accepted the offer. She thereupon concluded to accept the offer, executed the deed, and returned the same to Hartman, who delivered it to Sanderson upon the payment of the purchase price agreed upon. This was all done without any knowledge whatever upon the part of Mrs. Ackerson, Hartman, or Backus that Elliott was in fact the purchaser of the land. A short time prior to this secret purchasing of the land by Elliott he had been offered $10,000 for the land. The evidence, we think, shows that the land was in fact then worth more than $7,500, that Elliott knew it was worth more. and that that fact prompted him to thus purchase it secretly. Except as to a small portion of the land, Elliott has been in possession of it by his tenants at all times since he acquired it through Sanderson from Mrs. Ackerson in 1903. For this small portion he received $12,606 as the result of a condemnation proceeding several years after so acquiring the land. He also received additional sums for rent collected since 1903, and also a small sum for cedar shingle bolts sold from the land. Deducting the purchase price of $7,500 paid by him through Sanderson to Mrs. Ackerson for the land in 1903 and taxes and other moneys expended by him which it is conceded he is in any event entitled to credit for as against the land and Mrs. Ackerson's claim thereto, he received $1,136.48 more than he expended up until April 6, 1915, the date of verifying his answer in this case. Neither Mrs. Ackerson, Hartman, or Backus knew that Elliott had secretly purchased the land through Sanderson in 1903 until shortly before the commencement of this action in January, 1915. There is evidence in the record indicating that both Hartman and Backus learned, possibly as early as the year 1906, that Elliott had become the owner of the land, but the evidence, we think, renders it certain that neither of them had knowledge of the manner in which Elliott became such owner until shortly before the commencement of this action. The evidence, we think, also renders it certain that Mrs. Ackerson did not learn either of Elliott's ownership of the land or of the manner of his acquiring the land until shortly before the commencement of this action.

[1] Counsel for Mrs. Ackerson contend that Elliott's agency with reference to the land in question was such that he could not lawfully secretly purchase the land through Sanderson from her, and that when he did so purchase it he acquired it and held it in trust for her, if she should timely make election to have the sale so treated. Counsel for

Elliott apparently concede that such would be the law of the case if Elliott's agency had been one to sell the land for Mrs. Ackerson, but insist that Elliott's agency was only to rent the land for her, and that, his agency being so limited, he was as free to purchase it from her in the manner he did as any stranger would be. We have not had called to our attention any decision of the courts dealing with the claimed right of a mere renting agent to secretly purchase the property of his principal which is in his charge as such agent. It seems to us, however, that the good faith and loyalty due from Elliott to Mrs. Ackerson growing out of his relation to her and existing at the time of the purchase of the land by him through Sanderson, though at the beginning of his agency he was nothing more than a mere renting agent, forbade him from secretly acquiring any interest in the land. The trust and confidence he invited her to repose in him and which she did repose in him became such that she had a right to rely upon his acting with reference to this land as well as her other property in King county wholly in her interest, uninfluenced by any interest of his own. It seems to us that the rights of Mrs. Ackerson as against Elliott and his estate are governed by the principles so well stated in 1 Story's Equity Jurisprudence (13th Ed.) § 308, as follows:

> "It is undoubtedly true, as has been said, that it is not upon the feelings which a delicate and honorable man must experience, nor upon any notion of discretion to prevent a voluntary gift or other act of a man whereby he strips himself of his property, that courts of equity have deemed themselves at liberty to interpose in cases of this sort. They do not sit, or affect to sit, in judgment upon cases as custodes morum, enforcing the strict rules of morality. But they do sit to enforce what has not inaptly been called a technical morality. If confidence is reposed, it must be faithfully acted upon, and preserved from any intermixture of imposition. If influence is acquired, it must be kept free from the taint of selfish interests and cunning and overreaching bargains. If the means of personal control are given, they must be always restrained to purposes of good faith and personal good. Courts of equity will not therefore arrest or set aside an act or contract merely because a man of more honor would not have entered into it. There must be some relation between the parties which compels the one to make a full discovery to the other or to abstain from all selfish projects. But, when such a relation does exist, courts of equity, acting upon this superinduced ground in aid of general morals, will not suffer one party, standing in a situation of which he can avail himself against the other, to derive advantage from that circumstance; for it is founded in a breach of confidence. The general principle which governs in all cases of this sort is that, if a confidence is reposed and that confidence is abused, courts of equity will grant relief."

In McNutt v. Dix, 83 Mich. 328, 47 N. W. 212, 10 L. R. A. 660, we have a striking illustration of how one inviting trust and confidence in himself was held accountable to the one he volunteered to serve, though he apparently acted in the best of faith, in acquiring the property from the owner whom he was assuming to serve. Dix was the administrator of an estate. Looking to the settlement of the estate, one Hastings contemplated buying up the interests of the heirs. Mrs. McNutt, one of the heirs, was advised by Dix by letter to sell her interest for $450, apparently a fair price, sending her a deed for execution should she decide to sell. This was done by Dix as a means of prompt and economic settlement of the estate and without any notion of acquiring the interest himself or for profit to himself. The deed was executed by Mrs. McNutt leaving a blank space for the name of the grantee, specifying $450 as the consideration, and forwarded to Dix. He then tried to get Hastings to accept the conveyance and pay the $450: This Hastings did not do, claiming he was then unable to do so. Later Dix inserted his wife's name in the deed and sent $450, the agreed purchase price, to Mrs. McNutt. Later Dix sold the interest to Hastings for $600. The action was to recover the $150 excess received by Dix upon the theory that he was accountable therefor to Mrs. McNutt, as her trustee. Disposing of the contention made in behalf of Dix that he was at liberty to so acquire the interest of Mrs. McNutt under the circumstances shown, the court said:

> "There is some force in the position taken by defendant, under the particular circumstances of this case; but there are certain legal principles which stand in the way of his being permitted to keep the money received by him on the sale of this property, if he had undertaken to act for the plaintiff as her agent in making this sale. The law is very strict in scrutinizing the conduct of those who are acting in a fiduciary relation.
>
> "In Moore v. Mandlebaum, 8 Mich. 441, this court, in speaking of one who had assumed to act as the agent of another, said: 'In that confidential relation he was bound to the utmost degree of good faith, and had no right, while professing to act in that capacity, to make himself the agent of other parties for the purchase of the land he was authorized by the plaintiff to sell, nor to take any advantage of the confidence his position inspired to obtain the title himself. Nor could he make a valid purchase from his principal while that confidential relation existed without fully and fairly disclosing to his principal all the propositions he had received, and all the facts and circumstances within his knowledge, in any way calculated to enable his principal to judge of the propriety of such sale.'"

It is true it may be said that Elliott was not assuming to act for Mrs. Ackerson in the sale of this land, but we think that the trust and confidence which he had invited Mrs. Ackerson to repose in him touching all her property interests in King county became such that he could not secretly acquire an interest in any of her property there without violating that trust and confidence.

In Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, 78 Am. Dec. 192, the subject of an agent acquiring secretly an interest in the property of his principal to which the agency relates is learnedly reviewed at length, the court holding that a clerk of a broker employed to make sale of land who has access to the correspondence between his principal and the vendor stands in such a relation of confidence to the vendor that, if he becomes the purchaser, he is chargeable as trustee for the vendor, and must reconvey or account for the value of the land. The following authorities lend support to our conclusion: Trice v. Comstock, 121 Fed. 620, 57 C. C. A. 646, 61 L. R. A. 176; Hindle v. Holcomb, 34 Wash. 336, 75 Pac. 873; Carson v. Fogg, 34 Wash. 448, 76 Pac. 112; Landis v. Wintermute, 40 Wash. 673, 82 Pac. 1000; Easterly v. Mills, 54 Wash. 356, 103 Pac. 475, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 952; 31 Cyc. 1444.

We are of the opinion that in acquiring title to the land Elliott received and held it in trust for Mrs. Ackerson, which trust would continue until such time as she would learn of the circumstances under which he acquired it and such further time as she would be permitted by law to disaffirm the sale.

[2, 3] It is further contended in behalf of Mrs. Elliott that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, and that she and her husband had acquired title to the land before the commencement of this action by adverse possession. Being of the opinion that the land was acquired in trust for Mrs. Ackerson, we think it follows that the statute would not run against her so long as that trust relation existed. While this is an action on her part to recover the land, it is, in substance, an action for relief upon the ground of fraud, and, as we have already noticed, Mrs. Ackerson did not discover the fraud, to wit, Elliott's manner of acquiring title to the land, until very near the time of the commencement of this action. It seems plain, therefore, that she is not barred by the statute of limitation, since less than three years expired after her discovery of the fraud. Section 159, Rem. Code. In this connection it is further contended that Mrs. Ackerson has been guilty of laches. This seems to be rested upon the theory that, some three years following the acquisition of the land by Elliott,. Hartman and Backus, Mrs. Ackerson's attorney and banker in Seattle, knew that he had become the owner of the land. We have already noticed that their knowledge was nothing more than this, and did not go so far as to amount to knowledge of the manner in which he had acquired title to the land nor as to when he acquired title to the land. If Elliott had been under no obligation to inform Mrs. Ackerson himself that he was purchasing the land for himself, there might be some room for argument of counsel in his behalf that the knowledge acquired by Backus and Hartman should be imputed to Mrs. Ackerson, but in view of Elliott's duty in this respect we think that neither he nor his wife, as his successor in interest, can base any claim upon the knowledge so acquired by Backus or Hartman, even if we should concede that their knowledge was of the manner in which Elliott had acquired the title, instead of the mere fact that he had acquired the title.

[4] Some contention is made that the recording of the deeds from Mrs. Ackerson to Sanderson and from Sanderson to Elliott in March, 1903, was notice to Mrs. Ackerson, Hartman, and Backus. Plainly this is not so, since it seems to be well-settled law that the recording of an instrument is only constructive notice to those acquiring interests subsequent to the execution of the instrument. There was nothing prompting either Mrs. Ackerson, Hartman, or Backus to look to the public records to discover the fraud practiced upon Mrs. Ackerson of which they had no suspicion until very shortly prior to the commencing of this action. Maurer v. Reifschneider, 89 Neb. 673, 678, 132 N. W. 197, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 643. Our decision in Johnstone v. Peyton, 59 Wash. 436, 110 Pac. 7, is in harmony with this view, though that involved the placing upon record a judgment which had been fraudulently obtained by default. It was there held that the defendant, having no actual knowledge of the rendering of judgment against him, was not bound by the record thereof as notice.

[5] It is further suggested that there was an open repudiation of the trust by the adverse possession of Elliott during the 12 years following the acquiring of the title by him. We may concede that his possession was so open and plain as to advise all persons that he was claiming title to the land, but this was no evidence to any one that he had acquired the property fraudulently in violation of his duty to Mrs. Ackerson in 1903. Had she been advised of Elliott's manner of acquiring the land which gave rise to the trust in her favor and failed to make timely claim to the land after discovery thereof, this so-called repudiation of the trust by Elliott and holding of possession during these years might have defeated Mrs. Ackerson's claim here made, but any repudiation of the trust, to be available against Mrs. Ackerson, must have been such as advised her of the existence of the trust as well as of its repudiation, under the circumstances of this case.

We conclude that the judgment must be reversed, and Mrs. Ackerson awarded the land, and that the Elliott estate is bound to account to her for all sums received by Elliott from the sale of a portion of the land through condemnation proceedings, rent collected, and shingle bolts sold therefrom, less the moneys paid out by him to Mrs. Ackerson through Sanderson as the purchase price of the land and moneys paid out by him for taxes and other expenses in connection with his holding the land. This, as we have noticed, left a balance due Mrs. Ackerson at the time of the commencement of this action of $1,136.48, the amount of which is conceded to be correct by counsel for Mrs. Elliott. Indeed, this result is arrived at from Elliott's own statement of the moneys received and paid out by him attached to his answer.

The case is remanded to the superior court, with directions to enter a decree in favor of Mrs. Ackerson quieting her title to the land and directing its reconveyance to her by a commissioner. The superior court is also directed to render a judgment in favor of Mrs. Ackerson against the estate of J. S. Elliott, deceased, to be paid in the due course of administration for the sum of $1,136.48, or in the event additional sums have been paid out by Elliott or Mrs. Elliott, as executrix, for taxes upon the land or other proper expenses in connection therewith, and additional rents and profits have been derived by them from the land since the commencement of this action, then the superior court is directed to take an accounting thereof and render judgment for the sum so found to be due Mrs. Ackerson.

MOUNT, HOLCOMB, CHADWICK, MORRIS, and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

FULLERTON, J. I think the facts of this case justify an affirmance of the judgment below. I therefore dissent from the conclusion of the majority.

ELLIS, C. J., took no part. MAIN, J., took no part.

ST. LOUIS & S. F. R. CO. et al. v. GIDDINGS. (No. 7736.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. Oct. 3, 1916. Second Petition for Rehearing Denied June 6, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CARRIERS ⟹397½—LOSS OF BAGGAGE—LIABILITY—STATUTE.

Under section 807, Revised Laws of 1910, the liability of a carrier of baggage of a passenger intrusted to its care is that of a common carrier, and in the event of loss, unless the same is occasioned by the act of God or unavoidable accident, the carrier is responsible therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1519–1528.]

Commissioners' Opinion, Division No. 3. Error from County Court, Oklahoma County; William H. Zwick, Judge.

Action by Della T. Giddings against the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company, and James W. Lusk and others, receivers. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

R. A. Kleinschmidt and Fred E. Suits, both of Oklahoma City, for plaintiffs in error. Ledbetter, Stuart & Bell, of Oklahoma City, for defendant in error.

HOOKER, C. On January 16, 1915, the defendant in error telephoned the Union Ticket office at Oklahoma City and engaged a pullman reservation from Oklahoma City to Muskogee on the Frisco train which is due to leave Oklahoma City at midnight. About 6 o'clock p. m. of the same day she sent her trunk to the Frisco passenger depot by an experienced baggageman who deposited the same on the platform of the company at the depot in the place where the custom and rules of the company required baggage to be deposited, and at the time he deposited the trunk on said platform he was seen by the baggageman of the company, and the employés of the company subsequently saw the trunk of the defendant upon the platform where it had been deposited. About 10 o'clock of the same night she went to the passenger depot, procured her a ticket to Muskogee, paid for her pullman reservation, and attempted to locate her trunk, but was unable to do so.

It is admitted that the company received this baggage, but it contends that its liability, if any, is that of a warehouseman, and not of a common carrier. The company asserts that because the defendant in error had not purchased a ticket, and because it was necessary for directions to be given to the company before the transportation of said baggage could commence, that liability as a common carrier could not attach in this case, and that from the time of the delivery of said baggage to it until the purchase of the ticket, or the giving of those directions by the defendant in error, that it held the baggage only as a warehouseman. With these contentions we cannot agree. The authorities are uniform upon the proposition that one may be entitled under a certain state of case to the rights of a passenger before he purchases a ticket, and the law imposing this liability upon the company should be and is extended to the baggage of passengers likewise before a ticket is purchased.

The evidence here discloses that for years it had been the custom and practice of the company to require baggage received by it for transportation to be deposited at this particular place, so that the same might be weighed, and that was done largely for the convenience of the employés of the company. The agent of the defendant in error had been in the business of delivering trunks for years and was acquainted with this custom of the company, and upon this occasion he complied with it as he had been in the habit of doing before. The baggageman of the company saw him deliver the trunk and place the same at the customary place, and under the facts and circumstances he must have known that this trunk was delivered to the company for transportation, and not for storage. Section 807 of the Revised Laws of 1910 is as follows:

> "The liability of a carrier for luggage received by him with a passenger, is the same as that of common carrier of property."

Under the view we take of this statute if the company received this trunk as baggage, its liability as a common carrier is fixed, and it is estopped from now asserting that it received the same as a warehouseman. The object of this statute is to fix the liability of a common carrier for baggage received as that of a carrier of property, which is that of an insurer, and it can only be relieved from liability by the act of God or unavoidable accident. In the case of Kansas City, M. & O. Ry. Co. v. Fugatt, 150 Pac. 669, L. R. A. 1916A, 545, this court said:

"Though the real character of the articles intended as baggage, but which are not properly such, is not stated to the carrier when it accepts them for carriage, if from the facts and circumstances surrounding their acceptance it ought to know that they are not properly baggage, knowledge on its part of their true character will be presumed, and it will be considered as having assumed the liability of a common carrier. Hutchinson on Carriers, § 1250, and Elliott on Railroads, § 1649."

Further in this case it is said:

"The liability of a common carrier for the loss of baggage, at common law, is, in section 1651, Elliott on Railroads, defined to be: 'The general rule is that the carrier is liable for baggage as a common carrier, that is it is liable for the loss or injury to the baggage at all events, except where the loss or damage is caused by the act of God, or "unavoidable accident," in the sense in which the term is sometimes used and the act of the owner or by public enemies.' And it is thus stated in 3 A. & E. Enc. of Law, 546: 'The liability of a carrier for baggage * * * intrusted to its care is that of an insurer; and its liability unless specially restricted is the same as its common-law liability as a carrier of goods.' * * * The rule announced is the correct one where custody and control of the baggage has been surrendered into the carrier's keeping by the passenger."

In the case of Cone v. So. Ry. Co., 85 S. C. 524, 67 S. E. 779, 21 Ann. Cas. 159, it is said:

"The general rule is that the liability of a carrier does not begin until delivery and acceptance of the goods, but it is not always necessary to show actual delivery and express acceptance, for there may be an implied or constructive delivery and acceptance, or the matter may be determined by the custom of the carrier. 4 Elliott on Railroads, § 1403; Hutchinson on Carriers, § 118: 'The carrier may assent to the delivery of baggage at its station without notice to its agents; and this assent may be implied from its custom and course of business in allowing baggage to be deposited at its depots; but whether such delivery is to be regarded as binding the carrier is a question of fact for the jury to determine.' Such liability may arise before the purchase of a ticket or demand for check to one intending to become a passenger, who has his baggage placed at the proper place on the station premises within a reasonable time before the departure of the train." See authorities cited in opinion.

In 14 Ann. Cas. 912, the note attached to the case of So. Ry. Co. v. Bickley, it is said:

"The giving of a piece of baggage into the possession of the agent of a carrier and the acceptance thereof by him for transportation constitutes a sufficient delivery to render the carrier liable." See authorities cited.

"A delivery to, and acceptance by, a carrier is shown where it appears that an intending passenger sent a trunk to the depot the night before his departure, as was customary with passengers taking the morning train, and that the trunk was locked up in the carrier's baggageroom." Green v. Railway Co., 41 Iowa, 410.

"Where baggage is deposited at the place set apart for the receipt of baggage, and the agent of the carrier is notified thereof and expresses his consent thereto, there is a sufficient delivery to render the carrier liable." See authorities cited.

"And if baggage is deposited upon the platform near the baggageroom and the baggageman, upon being notified, gives directions to leave it there, a sufficient delivery is shown." [Lake Shore & Michigan So. Ry. Co. v. Foster] 104 Ind. 293 [4 N. E. 20, 54 Am. Rep. 319].

"In an action against a common carrier, to recover the value of a trunk and its contents alleged to have been lost by the negligence of defendant at its depot, it appeared that an expressman took the plaintiff's trunk, at his request, to the depot mentioned. The trunk had a card fastened on it, marked with the plaintiff's name and the place of his destination. The expressman placed the trunk by the side of a baggage crate, situated opposite a window in the ticket office, through which it might be seen. He informed the agent of the defendant in charge of the depot where the trunk was, and such agent replied 'all right,' and told two men, who were in the depot, to take care of it, whereupon the expressman left the depot. The plaintiff arrived later in the day and purchased a ticket. Upon applying for a check for his baggage, the trunk could not be found. The court, affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, said: 'It is not easy to see what further act could be required of the plaintiff in order to make the delivery complete. No further act of his could put the property more fully within defendant's control.'" See authorities cited.

"In Hickox v. Naugatuck R. Co., 31 Conn. 281, 83 Am. Dec. 143, it appeared that the plaintiff took his trunk to a station at 11 a. m. and requested that it might be checked for the next train, which started at 3 p. m.; that he was informed that it was not the custom to check baggage until about 15 minutes before the time when the train should leave, whereupon he left his trunk in the care of the agent of the company in the baggageroom of the station; and that at the customary time it was checked for him and put on the cars, and that he went on the same train. Certain articles were removed from the trunk, but when and where did not appear. The action was framed on the theory that the carrier was liable as carrier, and it was urged that if the articles were taken after it was left at the station and before it was checked, there could be no recovery. The court held, however, that the liability as carrier commenced when the trunk was given into the care of the agent."

In 4 Elliott on Railroads, § 1651, it is said:

"The liability of the company as a common carrier begins, as a rule, at the time the baggage is delivered to it for its transportation unless the time of such delivery be an unreasonable length of time before the owner's intended departure. In order that the liability as a common carrier should exist is not always necessary that the passenger should have purchased a ticket, nor that he should even make the journey which he intends to make. As persons often become entitled to the rights of passengers before the purchase of a ticket, so the liability of the carrier for baggage often begins before the purchase of a ticket or even before the company becomes liable to the owner of the baggage as a passenger. Where a person in good faith intends to take passage on a railway train or the like and delivers his baggage to the company a reasonable time in advance of the anticipated journey, it seems that the company will be liable for such baggage as a common carrier from the time of such delivery and acceptance. And in such cases the company may be liable although the person does not purchase a ticket or make the proposed journey, as for instance, where he is prevented from so doing by the loss or destruction of the baggage before the journey begins."

In Woods v. Devin, 13 Ill. 747, 56 Am. Dec. 483, it is said:

"A common carrier of passengers is responsible for the baggage of a passenger. His duty in this respect is the same as that of a common carrier of goods; and he can only excuse himself for the nondelivery of the baggage of a passenger by showing that it was lost by the act of God or of the public enemy. His responsibility commences when the baggage is delivered to him or his authorized agent. Camden and Amboy Railroad v. Belknap, 21 Wend. [N. Y.] 354. His compensation for carrying the baggage is included in the fare of the passenger. [Orange County Bank v. Brown] 9 Wend. 85 [24 Am. Dec. 129]; [Hawkins v. Hoffman] 6 Hill, 586 [41 Am. Dec. 767]. Prepayment of the fare is not necessary in order to charge the carrier for the loss of the baggage. [Citizens' Bank v. Nantucket Steamboat Co.] 2 Story, 16 [Fed. Cas. No. 2,730]."

In Logan v. Railroad Company, 11 Rob. (La). 24, 43 Am. Dec. 199, it is said:

"Liability of carrier attaches when baggage is received to be transported on any part of the road."

In the case of Ladue v. Griffith, 25 N. Y. 364, 82 Am. Dec. 361, it is said:

"When a person is both carrier and warehouseman, it is well settled that if the deposit of the goods in the warehouse is a mere accessory to the carriage, and not subject to any particular order of the owner, or if there deposited for the purpose of being carried further, the responsibility of the party having them in charge, is that of a carrier."

In Green v. Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad Co., 38 Iowa, 100, it is said:

"It is not claimed that defendant would be liable without a delivery, either actual or constructive, of the property to its agent or servant. That a delivery may be made at the proper place of receiving such baggage under the express assent or authority of the carrier without notice to its employés will not, we presume, be disputed. It is equally clear upon principle that this assent may be presumed from the course of business or custom of the carrier. Upon evidence of this character contracts based upon business transactions are constantly established. The citation of authority is not required to support this position. See [Merriam v. Hartford & New Haven R. Co.] 20 Conn. 354 [52 Am. Dec. 344]. The instruction which is the foundation of plaintiff's objection directs the jury that there was no evidence of a delivery of the trunk to the defendant. In this we think there is error. There was evidence tending to show a course of business on the part of defendant, a custom, to receive baggage left at the station house, as in this case, without notice to plaintiff's servants. Upon evidence of this character, it was proper that the facts should have been left to the determination of the jury, whether there had been a delivery of the property within the rules above announced—whether a course of business—a custom, had been established, to the effect that a delivery of baggage at the station house without notice was regarded by defendant as a delivery to its servants, and whether plaintiff's trunk was received under this custom."

Under the view we take of the record in this case, it must be held that the company accepted the trunk of the defendant in error as baggage for the purpose of transporting the same to Muskogee, Okl., where the defendant in error intended to go at the time she delivered the trunk to the company, and that the company, having accepted the same as baggage for transportation, is by the provision of section 807 of the Revised Laws of 1910 made liable as a common carrier, and is therefore responsible to the defendant in error for the loss of this baggage.

The judgment of the lower court is therefore affirmed.

PER CURIAM. Adopted in whole.

(13 Okl. Cr. 577)

TALKINGTON v. STATE. (No. A-2742.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. July 2, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION ⚿51(2) — VALIDITY—SIGNATURE OF ASSISTANT COUNTY ATTORNEY.

An information, signed in the name of the county attorney by a duly appointed and qualified assistant county attorney, is valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. § 161.]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⚿236(1)—OFFENSE —SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for unlawfully conveying intoxicating liquor, the evidence considered, and held sufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 308.]

Appeal from County Court, Carter County; Thomas W. Champion, Judge.

Steve Talkington, convicted of unlawfully conveying intoxicating liquors, appeals. Affirmed.

William Pfeiffer, of Oklahoma City, for plaintiff in error. The Attorney General and R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DOYLE, P. J. This appeal is from a judgment of conviction on an information charging that Steve Talkington did unlawfully convey, "10 cases of whisky, from a point on the Cornish and Wilson road on the line between Jefferson and Carter counties to a point on said road about three miles east of said county line." On the 23d day of February, 1916, judgment was entered in accordance with the verdict of the jury, and he was sentenced to be confined in the county jail for 30 days and to pay a fine of $150, and in default of the payment of said fine be further confined until the same is satisfied at the rate of $1 per day.

The following is, in substance, the testimony introduced at the trial: W. H. Ward and Jim Gaunt, deputy sheriffs, testified that on the 2d day of July, 1916, they saw the defendant about three miles east of the county line between Carter and Jefferson counties on the Cornish and Wilson road; that he was going east in an automobile; that they stopped him, and found he was conveying 10 sacks, each sack containing 12 quart bottles of whisky. The defendant offered no testimony.

⚿For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

[1] The first assignment of error is based upon the action of the court in overruling the defendant's motion to quash the information. The ground of said motion is:

> "Because said information is not signed by the county attorney, or his authorized assistant, in the manner provided by law."

The record shows that the defendant asked to have the county attorney sworn to testify in support of his motion. Thereupon Mr. A. J. Hardy, county attorney, stated:

> "I admit I did not sign my name to the information in this case."

Mr. Hardy then called W. F. Bowman, who testified that he was assistant county attorney at the time the information was signed and filed and the signature thereto, that is, "A. J. Hardy, County Attorney," was signed by witness; that Mr. Hardy at the time was county attorney and witness the duly appointed and qualified assistant county attorney. Our Procedure Criminal provides:

> "The county attorney shall subscribe his name to informations filed in the county, superior or district court and indorse thereon the names of the witnesses known to him at the time of filing the same." Section 5694, Rev. Laws.

In McGarrah v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. 21, 133 Pac. 260, it is said:

> "An unqualified reading of the words of the statute would make it necessary for the county attorney himself to subscribe his own name to all informations; but it has been held that the county attorney need not himself subscribe his name to an information, as it is sufficient if it be done by his legally appointed assistant."

And see Fooshee v. State, 3 Okl. Cr. 666, 108 Pac. 554. Thus it appears that the name of the county attorney was signed by his duly appointed and qualified assistant, and the county attorney was himself present insisting on the validity of the signature, and he personally prosecuted the case. The motion to quash was very properly overruled.

[2] Finally it is insisted that the court erred "in refusing to advise the jury to return a verdict of not guilty." Counsel for the defendant contends that the evidence fails to show that the liquor in question was conveyed from the point on the Cornish and Wilson road on the county line to a point on said road about three miles east as alleged. There can be no doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence in this case to warrant the verdict of the jury. After a careful examination of the record we have failed to discover anything whereof the plaintiff in error has just right to complain. The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed. Mandate forthwith.

ARMSTRONG and MATSON, JJ., concur.

(13 Okl. Cr. 563)

FLETCHER v. STATE. (No. A-2450.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. July 2, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS 🔑226—OFFENSE—EVIDENCE—BOOKS OF EXPRESS COMPANY.

The books required to be kept by express companies, railroads, and other transportation companies under the provisions of section 6 of chapter 70, Session Laws 1911, when properly identified by the person in possession and control of the same, are admissible in evidence in a case where the defendant is charged with a violation of the prohibitory liquor laws of this state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 282-286.]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS 🔑238(1)—UNLAWFUL SALE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Evidence examined, and held sufficient to authorize the trial court to submit the case to the jury.

3. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1183 — REMARKS OF COUNTY ATTORNEY.

Certain remarks of the county attorney, unauthorized by the evidence and tending to appeal for the infliction of a severe penalty, condemned. On account of these remarks the judgment is modified, and the penalty reduced to the minimum.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3195-3198.]

Appeal from County Court, Custer County.

Bob Fletcher was convicted of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Modified and affirmed.

M. L. Holcombe, of Pawhuska, for plaintiff in error. S. P. Freeling, Atty. Gen., and R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

MATSON, J. [1] It is first contended that the court erred in admitting in evidence certain records of the American Express Company kept at Custer City, Okl., the place where the alleged sale was made, showing shipments of both whisky and beer to this plaintiff in error and received by him during the period of one month previous to the date of the alleged offense. It is contended that these records were not properly identified or authenticated. These records were introduced in connection with the witness J. M. Cummings, who testified that he was the agent for the Frisco Railroad Company at Custer City, Okl., and that he had possession of the records of the office of that station showing the shipments of intoxicating liquors received by various persons of that town. The records appear to be those of the United States Express Company, and it is contended that there is no showing that the witness was the agent for the express company, et cetera. The witness, however, testified that these were a part of the records of his office, and that they were in his possession and under his control, that they were records showing the shipments of intoxicating liquors, and that he was familiar with the same. Had plaintiff desired to do so, he could have examined the witness as to whether or not the records of the express company were kept as a part of the railroad records at that station. This he did not do. It is a matter of general knowledge in this state that in towns the size of Custer City it is the policy of such companies to have but one agent who attends to both the railroad and express business. In the absence of a contrary showing, where the witness testifies that he is the custodian of such records, that they are under his possession and control, and that he is familiar with them, the proof is sufficient to admit of their introduction in evidence under the provisions of section 6 of chapter 70, Session Laws 1911, which provides as follows:

> "All express companies, railroad companies and transportation companies within this state are hereby required to keep a separate book in which shall be entered, immediately upon receipt thereof, the name of the person to whom liquors are shipped, the sale of which is prohibited by laws of this state, the amount and kind received, the date when received, the date when delivered and by whom delivered, and to whom delivered, after which record shall be a blank space in which the consignee shall be required to sign his name, before such liquors are delivered to such consignee, which book shall be open to the inspection of any officer of this state, whether such officer be a state, county, or municipal officer, at any time during business hours of the company. Such books shall constitute prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated and be admissible as evidence in any court of this state having jurisdiction or in any manner empowered with the enforcement of the prohibition laws of this state."

The record introduced was shown to be one required to be kept under the foregoing statute. After proper identification the original was admissible in evidence in this case.

[2] It is also contended that the court erred in refusing to sustain the motion of the plaintiff in error to direct a verdict of not guilty at the conclusion of the State's evidence. The evidence in this case is substantially as follows:

The prosecuting witness, Harry Koch, testified that several boosters from the town of Clinton were traveling about over Custer county and adjoining counties on the 17th day of June, 1914, scattering posters to advertise the coming Fourth of July celebration at Clinton. They were traveling in a Ford car, and when they got to Custer City, Koch, who was an old-time friend of the defendant, Fletcher, instructed the driver of the car to drive to Fletcher's house in the southwest part of that town. When they got to the house Koch went in and inquired of Fletcher if he had something to drink, to which Fletcher replied, "I have got some tin top," and Koch said, "Well, give me some tin top." He was given five or six bottles of "tin top." Koch also saw a half pint bottle of whisky sitting on the shelf in the room, and asked Fletcher what he would take for it. Fletcher said he would not sell it, but that he was not looking and that he (Koch) could steal it if he wanted to. Koch then took the whisky, and left $1.25 on a table in the room. He took the whisky and the so-called "tin top" out to the automobile, and he and the other parties with him drank it while on the trip. The charge is for selling beer and whisky to Koch. Koch testifies that he does not know what the "tin top" was; that it was in beer bottles; that he had drank beer before, but could not tell whether this was beer or not. He admitted, however, getting the whisky, but said he did not intend to leave any money for the whisky. The parties who were with Koch in the car testified that they drank some of this stuff that was in the beer bottles, and that it tasted like beer and looked like beer; that it did not have any labels on it; that they drank a small bottle of it apiece, and did not feel any intoxicating effects. They were uncertain as to whether or not it was beer. Some of them, however, drank some whisky which they testified positively to be whisky. It was also shown by the record of the express office at Custer that on the 16th day of June, 1914, the day before the boosters made this trip, the defendant, Fletcher, had received from the express office a cask of beer, and had receipted for the same. He had also about a month previous to that date received a package containing a gallon of whisky. A day or two after the booster trip the sheriff, armed with a search warrant, searched the defendant's residence and found therein a cask or barrel of empty beer bottles. The bottles were not labeled, but on the top blown in the glass they were branded "beer." The question therefore in this case is whether or not the facts were sufficient to authorize the trial court in submitting the question of whether or not there was an implied sale of both beer and whisky on the part of the defendant to the prosecuting witness, Koch. From the manner in which these witnesses testified it is clearly evident that they were very reluctant witnesses for the state. The prosecuting witness was a personal friend of the defendant, and had known him some eight or ten years. He evidently was well enough acquainted with him to know that he could obtain intoxicating liquors at his home; the prosecuting witness at one time having been a resident of Custer City and familiar with the people who lived there. It is undisputed that on the day before this transaction took place the defendant became possessed of a cask of beer. The fact that he designated it "tin top" appears, and must have been so considered by the jury, to be a subterfuge. We believe the evidence sufficient to justify the conclusion upon the jury's part. The manner in which the whisky was obtained by the prosecuting witness indicates that the giving of the whisky was also a subterfuge to avoid a sale. We cannot say that the court erred in refusing to instruct or direct a verdict of not guilty at the conclusion of the State's case.

The only evidence offered by the defendant was that of two physicians of Custer City who testified that they had never received or got any liquor from the defendant. One of these witnesses, without objection on the part of defendant's counsel, was permitted on cross-examination to testify that among certain people of Custer City the defendant had the reputation of being a booze peddler, or bootlegger. The evidence of these two physicians had no direct bearing upon the question of whether or not a sale was made in this instance. Their evidence in no way conflicted with the testimony of the State's witnesses.

[3] It is also contended that the judgment should be reversed because of certain prejudicial remarks made by the county attorney in his closing argument to the jury, which alleged remarks are contained in a recital in the case-made which shows that counsel for the defendant objected thereto and asked the court to withdraw the same from the consideration of the jury, which request was denied and exception reserved. In the argument the county attorney called the defendant "a devilish bootlegger," and this was his second offense. There is no evidence in the record that the defendant had theretofore ever been convicted of violating the prohibitory liquor laws of this state. The remarks were prejudicial, and, in our opinion, had a tendency to prejudice the jury to such an extent that a severe penalty was given the defendant.

In view of these remarks it is our opinion that the judgment should be modified by reducing the fine from $200 to $50, and the term of imprisonment from 90 days to 30 days, and that the judgment as thus modified be affirmed.

DOYLE, P. J., and ARMSTRONG, J., concur.

(53 Mont. 585)

BARKER et al. v. CONDON et al. (No. 3840.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. May 28, 1917.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS 🔑51(3)—APEX OF VEIN AS WITHIN CLAIM—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover the value of ore taken from a vein alleged to apex in plaintiffs' mining claim, evidence held insufficient to show that the apex of the vein from which the ore was taken was within plaintiffs' claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 139.]

2. MINES AND MINERALS 🔑51(3)—EXTRACTION FROM VEIN BEYOND SIDE LINES—PRESUMPTION.

If plaintiffs had been found extracting ore from a vein beyond their side lines and beneath the surface of defendants' claim, the presumption would be against them, and prima facie they would be trespassers, until they made it appear that they got there by following the lode on its dip from its apex within their lines.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 139.]

3. MINES AND MINERALS 🔑38(14)—CLAIM OWNERS—PRIMA FACIE RIGHT—ASSUMPTION OF ANGLE OF VEINS.

Owners of mining claims are prima facie entitled to all ore beneath the surface of the claims, and it is fair to assume, in the absence of contrary showing, that the vein or veins will continue to extend upward at the same angle as exhibited below.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 101.]

4. MINES AND MINERALS 🔑38(14)—PRESUMPTIVE RIGHT TO ORE—OPINION OF WITNESSES.

Ore presumptively belonging to defendants, because beneath the surface of their claims, cannot rightfully be taken from them, because the owners of an adjoining claim produce witnesses entertaining the opinion that the vein containing the ore has its apex in the adjacent claim; the presumption favoring defendants cannot be overturned by speculative conjecture or intelligent guess.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 101.]

Appeal from District Court, Cascade County; J. B. Leslie, Judge.

Action by Leonie E. Barker and H. P. Brown against Daniel Condon and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying new trial, defendants appeal. Judgment reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the complaint.

This action was brought to recover the value of ore taken by defendants from a vein alleged to apex in the Ripple lode mining claim, owned by plaintiffs. Plaintiffs demanded judgment for a perpetual injunction and for the value of the ore extracted.

Defendants in their answer denied that they had extracted ore from any vein having its apex within the Ripple lode, and denied generally the other allegations of the complaint. Further answering, the defendants alleged that the Montana Gold, Silver, Platinum & Telurium Mining Company was the owner of the Tom Hendricks and the Sixteen to One lode claims, which, at the times mentioned in the complaint, were under lease to the defendants; that the Sixteen to One lode lies between the Tom Hendricks lode and the Ripple lode; that the vein from which the defendants extracted the ore in dispute is the Sixteen to One claim and Tom Hendricks claim, and within the exterior boundaries thereof extended vertically downward; and that no ore was taken from said vein outside of vertical planes drawn through the end lines of said claims.

The case was tried to the court and a jury. At the conclusion of the evidence the case was dismissed as to T. C. Power and Louis Heitman, originally joined as defendants. Plaintiffs offered evidence in support of their contention that the vein from which the ore was taken had its apex in the Ripple claim and was disclosed in a little tunnel within the claim and near corner No. 4. The defendants offered evidence tending to show that the vein from which the ore was extracted was nearly vertical, and that, if it maintained the same dip in its course upward to the surface, would not apex within the Ripple lode. At the conclusion of all the evidence, defendants moved for a directed verdict on the ground, among others, that there was no evidence to show that the vein from which the ore was taken had its apex in the Ripple lode. This motion was overruled. The jury brought in its special findings in favor of plaintiffs. The net value of the ore extracted was found by the referee to whom the matter was referred by the court, to be $144.05. Thereafter judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs. This appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial.

J. A. Walsh, of Helena, and W. F. O'Leary, of Great Falls, for appellants. Cooper, Stephenson & Hoover, of Great Falls, for respondents.

WORD, District Judge (after stating the facts as above). All the questions raised by the assignments of error are resolved in favor of the respondents, except one, and that is: Is there any evidence in the record showing, or tending to show, that the vein from which the ore was taken has its apex within the Ripple lode? In view of the admitted fact that the ore extracted came from beneath the surface of the Tom Hendricks and Sixteen to One claims, respondents concede that the burden is upon them to establish their right to go within the boundaries of said claims and extract ore. Have the plaintiffs and respondents discharged this burden resting upon them? Have they established by competent or any evidence the existence, within the lines of their claim, of the apex of the vein or of that portion of the vein from which the defendants extracted the ore sued for? Upon this point the evidence offered by plaintiffs is, in substance, as follows:

John W. Wade testified that he had surveyed the Ripple lode and the tunnels, shafts, and upraises made by plaintiffs in the working and development of that claim. That Exhibit C for plaintiffs was a map of the Ripple lode, showing these workings, drawn to scale, and also included the Sixteen to One and a portion of the Tom Hendricks claims; that the Ripple vein has a north and south course, and dips east into the mountain; that in a little tunnel about 20 feet long, near corner No. 4 of the Ripple lode, and within that claim, there is a well-defined vein about 18 inches or 2 feet wide; that this vein carries ore, has a dip to the east of about 20 feet in 100, and, in the opinion of the witness, is the apex of the Ripple vein and the apex of the vein from which the ore was taken beneath the surface of the Sixteen to One and Tom Hendricks lodes; that upon Exhibit C the witness has drawn a red line, marked "Apex as Developed by Surface Openings," to indicate the cropping or upper edge of the apex of the Ripple vein; that the dotted line at the south end of the claim is an extension of the south end line, marked "3" and "4," in the same direction; that the lines in red, marked "Big Snowy Tunnel" indicate the workings of the defendants beneath the surface of the Sixteen to One and Tom Hendricks claims. The witness concludes that the vein in the little tunnel near corner No. 4 is the apex of the Ripple vein, and the same vein from which the ore in dispute was taken, because it has about the same dip and the same character of ore as has the vein disclosed in the Big Snowy tunnel; because the vein in the little tunnel is on a line with the upraises from the vein to the surface farther north in the Ripple claim; for that the crosscuts on the surface, and made by the Joki tunnel for a distance of nearly 200 feet, and by the Tom Hendricks tunnel, run by the defendants, show that there is no other vein than the Ripple vein from which the disputed ore could come; that the Ripple vein always dips into the mountain, that is, to the east; that the veins below and to the west dip to the west, and that there is no other vein which could apex in the little tunnel near corner No. 4 except the Ripple vein; that most of the openings where they took the dip of the vein are necessarily short, but that the dips show a trend out of the ground that will bring the apex into the red line marked "Apex as Developed by Surface Openings"; that in the Lower tunnel, at a point marked "E–F", about 755 feet north of corner No. 4, the vein is almost vertical; that beyond the south end line of the Ripple claim the development work done by defendants shows that the vein turns southwesterly, and the dip of the vein is about 61 feet in 100, and that, keeping that dip, it would apex below where it does apex near corner No. 4 of the Ripple lode; that at the point "C–D" upon the map, about 390 feet north of corner No. 4, the Lower tunnel is about 250 feet deeper than the Pierce-Westgard tunnel; that in this distance the variation is 31 feet; that the Pierce-Westgard tunnel is 140 feet deeper than the Weidell tunnel, at the point "C–D," and that between these tunnels at this point the vein dips from 20 to 25 feet; that from the Weidell tunnel to the surface there is an upraise 80 feet in length, marked "Weidell upraise"; that the dip of the vein between the surface and the Weidell tunnel is about 30 feet.

On cross-examination the witness Wade testified, in substance, as follows: That the Weidell tunnel is about 160 feet above the Westgard tunnel; that at the point "C–D" there is no upraise from the Westgard tunnel to the Weidell tunnel; that the top of the

Linquist upraise is 141 feet above the Westgard tunnel, figured vertically; that at the point marked "E–F Upraise to Surface" the vein is vertical between the Lower tunnel and the Westgard tunnel, and between the Westgard tunnel and the surface there is a dip of 15 feet, or 20 feet in a distance of 80 feet, and below it is nearly vertical; that at the Weidell upraise it is 161 feet from the Westgard tunnel up to the Weidell tunnel, and from the Lower tunnel up to the Westgard tunnel it is 253 feet; perpendicularly it is about 30 feet shorter, the dip being about 10 feet in 100; that at the point "C–D," tne last cross-section going south, there is more variation between the tunnels than at any other point; that at the point where the Lower tunnel as projected crosses the south end line of the Ripple claim, it is 253 perpendicularly, and about 35 feet laterally below the Westgard tunnel; that at the point where the Joki tunnel cuts the vein it is about 90 feet vertically, and about 15 feet laterally, above the Westgard tunnel; that the red line marking the theoretical apex is about 65 feet from where the Joki tunnel crosses the drift on the vein; that the witness has no knowledge of the Ripple vein coming to the surface at any point between the Weidell upraise and the south end line of the Ripple claim, a distance of 387 feet; that the witness does not know where the vein exposed in the Joki tunnel—the uppermost tunnel—comes to the surface; that the vein shows in the south drift from the Joki tunnel for a distance of 112 feet; that the south end of this drift from the Joki tunnel is not directly over the Westgard tunnel, but very close to it; that it lacks 2, or 3, or 5 feet of being directly over that tunnel; that the perpendicular distance from the south end of this drift to the Westgard tunnel is about 120 feet; that the vein continues beyond the south end of the drift; that the lead may turn to the right, but the vein continues; that at the most southerly part in this drift from the Joki tunnel, as shown upon the map (plaintiffs' Exhibit C), the Westgard tunnel, the Barker winze below the Westgard tunnel, and the Joki drift, are almost in a perpendicular line, that is to say, the vein disclosed in each is nearly perpendicular; that the lead after it leaves the Ripple claim on the south makes an abrupt turn to the right of 45 degrees, and shows a slope of 61 degrees, to the end of the Ripple; that in the little tunnel near corner No. 4 of the Ripple, the vein is 18 or 20 inches wide; that the little tunnel runs across the vein; that the vein dips into the hill; that only 5 or 6 feet of this vein are exposed; that the vein has a dip of 21 or 22 feet to the 100, a very decided dip; that this little tunnel is 15 or 16 feet from corner No. 4; that the difference in elevation between the point where the apex line, the red line, crosses the south end line and the Westgard tunnel is 325 feet; that in this distance there are no developments to show where the vein is; that we have a measurement of 23 feet to the 100 between defendants' and plaintiffs' workings, which, if maintained to the surface, would bring the apex close to the vein in the little tunnel near corner No. 4.

On further cross-examination, the witness Wade testified that at the point H, about 210 feet north from corner No. 4, the pitch from the Westgard tunnel to the Joki tunnel is 8 feet in 100; that the pitch from the Joki tunnel to the theoretical apex is about 60 feet in 100; that the witness wishes the jury to understand that at the point H he has no idea or conception or belief that the apex of the vein at that point would reach the apex indicated by the red line; that to what extent the actual apex will leave the theoretical apex line between the Weidell upraise, and the end line of the claim cannot be told; that the wave of the lead as indicated below, and particularly as indicated at the point beyond the line of the Ripple ground, might do anything and still reach what is the apex right here in the little tunnel; that it is all theoretical except from—"this point to this point." "Q. When you say 'this point,' what do you mean? A. I mean the point over the Weidell upraise. It is all conjecture as to the actual position beyond the development in the Lower tunnel. Q. Does the vein in the little tunnel dip to the point marked '3' at the southerly end? A. No. It dips to the east. It is not my contention, and not that of any of our witnesses, that the little vein has the same dip of the other one. It is all conjecture as to the actual position beyond the development in the Lower tunnel, or that the other one maintains its dip until it reaches there. I am sure it will not. After it reaches this point it will rise a short distance and then will strain up and fall back as it always does. Q. Now, Mr. Wade, it being 375 (387) feet from the Weidell upraise—your last observation and this little tunnel—and approximately 400 feet from that tunnel down to the Big Snowy tunnel, and all that is undeveloped; nothing to show the trend or dip of the vein, and as you say these veins are liable to dip over and strain up, how can you base any theory upon which you can say to the jury that the apex is in any particular place? A. Well, it is impossible for any mortal man to tell to what extent that vein will wave and in what particular manner it will come to the surface and reach the point we have indicated here. In what manner it will reach there no mortal man can tell until it is developed and run through; but it is plain to my mind that it does reach there, because this apex belongs to something, and if it doesn't belong to something else in the neighborhood, it must belong to this lead."

Other witnesses called by plaintiffs gave support to the testimony of Mr. Wade upon the question here considered. Gus Weidell, a witness for plaintiffs, testified on his direct examination that at the point in the Big Snowy tunnel, referred to by both Wade and Leininger as a place where the vein had its greatest dip, there did not seem to be any walls; that there were no solid walls. Charles W. Helmick testified that there was a vein definitely disclosed on the north side of the little tunnel near corner No. 4; that the ground at that point was pretty badly shattered; that there was a more or less defined wall on the east side; that the vein was 15 or 20 inches wide, with an eastern dip.

A summary of plaintiffs' evidence discloses that, in the little tunnel near corner No. 4, the ground is pretty badly shattered; that this tunnel is about 20 feet long; that a vein is disclosed therein having a more or less defined wall on the east side; that this vein has not been developed laterally; that it dips to the east; that the nearest surface opening on the vein is the Weidell upraise, 387 feet north; that the next point where the Ripple vein comes to the surface is the Linquist upraise, 210 feet north of the Weidell upraise; and that the next and last point where the vein reaches the surface is the Pierce and Westgard upraise, 165 feet north of the Linquist raise; that at the Pierce and Westgard upraise the Lower tunnel is about 250 feet below the Westgard tunnel, and the Westgard tunnel is about 90 feet below the surface. The Weidell tunnel at the Weidell upraise is about 80 feet below the surface; the Westgard tunnel about 140 feet below the Weidell tunnel, and the Lower tunnel about 250 feet below the Westgard tunnel. At the point where the Joki tunnel cuts the vein, the distance to the surface is about 90 feet, the Westgard tunnel is about 190 feet below the Joki tunnel at this point, and the lower tunnel about 240 feet below the Westgard tunnel. At the Pierce and Westgard upraise the vein is vertical between the lower and the Westgard tunnels; and between the Westgard tunnel and the surface, a distance of about 90 feet, the vein departs 30 feet from the vertical. At the Weidell upraise the vein dips about 40 feet between the lower tunnel and the Weidell tunnel, a distance of about 390 feet; from the Weidell tunnel to the surface the dip of the vein is greater. Going south from the Weidell upraise, the vein straightens up. At a point about 40 feet north of the line of the Ripple claim between corners 4 and 5, the vein is nearly vertical, and it maintains this position for a distance of 150 feet or more, going south in and through the ground claimed by the defendants.

[1] It is to be noted that at the place in the defendants' claims from which the disputed ore was mined, east of, and a distance horizontally of about 120 feet from the vein in the little tunnel, and over 400 feet beneath the surface, the vein is nearly vertical; and that, if it maintains the same dip to the surface, it will come up within the surface boundaries of defendants' claims. From the whole evidence offered by plaintiffs, we conclude that it does not appear even probable that the apex of the vein from which the ore was taken is within the Ripple claim. Going south from the Weidell upraise towards the vein in the little tunnel, a distance of 387 feet, no one can say from the development now upon the Ripple claim where the Ripple vein will apex, much less that it will apex in the red line marked upon the map, "Apex as Developed by Surface Openings." True, as disclosed in the Pierce-Westgard and Weidell upraises, the dip of the vein is greater as it nears the surface; but at no point south of the Weidell upraise does the vein as it appears in the tunnels or the stopes have a dip which, if maintained to the surface, would bring it out on or near the theoretical apex line. At the south end of plaintiffs' claim the vein is nearly vertical. It is nearly vertical in the Big Snowy tunnel, driven by the defendants, and does not make a turn or bend to the west until beyond the point where it is cut by plaintiffs' south end line continued in its own direction. At most we have an opinion or belief declared by plaintiffs' witnesses that in some way, not made to appear by any development work now existing, the apex of the vein from which defendants took the ore sued for is in plaintiffs' claim, and is shown in the little tunnel near corner No. 4. But this vein in the little tunnel has never been developed so much as a foot beyond the tunnel walls. Whether it persists or disappears; whether it straightens up or flattens out—are all matters of conjecture.

[2] If plaintiffs had been found extracting ore from a vein beyond their side lines and beneath the surface of defendants' claims, the presumption would be against them, and, prima facie, they would be trespassers until they made it appear that they got there by following the lode on its dip from its apex within their lines. In order that a vein may be followed extralaterally, identity throughout is essential. Butte & Boston Min. Co. v. Lexington, 23 Mont. 177, 58 Pac. 111, 75 Am. St. Rep. 505.

[3] Not only are the defendants prima facie entitled to all ore beneath the surface of their claims (Maloney v. King, 25 Mont. 188, 64 Pac. 351; Parrot S. & C. Co. v. Heinze, 25 Mont. 139, 64 Pac. 326, 53 L. R. A. 491, 87 Am. St. Rep. 386; Maloney v. King, 30 Mont. 161, 76 Pac. 4; Anaconda Min. Co. v. Pilot-Butte Min. Co., 52 Mont. 184, 156 Pac. 409), but as a working hypothesis it is fair to assume, in the absence of a contrary showing, that the vein or veins there found will continue to extend upward at the same angle as exhibited below. Brewster v. Shoemaker, 28 Colo. 176, 63 Pac. 309, 311, 53 L. R. A. 793, 89 Am. St. Rep. 188.

[4] In any event, ore presumptively belonging to defendants, because beneath the surface of their claims, cannot rightfully be taken from them, for that the owners of an adjoining claim have produced witnesses who entertain the opinion that the vein containing the ore has its apex in this adjacent claim, and this presumption which attends defendants "is not overturned by speculative conjecture or intelligent guess." Heinze v.

B. & M. Co., 30 Mont. 484, 488, 77 Pac. 421, 423; Collins v. Bailey, 22 Colo. App. 149, 125 Pac. 543.

That plaintiffs might by work done upon their vein from its apex down to the disputed territory, furnish substantial evidence that their claims, as to the identity of their vein with the vein found in defendants' ground, are well founded need not be questioned here; it suffices that they have failed to present such evidence in this suit, and as it appears they have presented all the evidence at this time available to them, it follows that the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the complaint. It is so ordered.

Reversed and remanded.

SANNER and HOLLOWAY, JJ., concur. Hon. R. LEE WORD, a judge of the First Judicial District, sat in place of the Chief Justice.

(54 Mont. 1)

PADDEN v. MURGITTROYD et al.

(No. 3776.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. June 12, 1917.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨232(2)—REVIEW—EVIDENCE—OBJECTION—ARGUMENT.

Where objection to the admission of evidence went to the degree of evidence, and the argument on appeal went to its competency, the appellate court will not consider propriety of the rulings admitting the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1430, 1431.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨853 — REVIEW — MATTERS CONSIDERED—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where no criticism is made of the instructions at the time of their settlement, they become the law of the case on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1524, 3405.]

3. COVENANTS ⇨122—BREACH—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for damages alleging the breach of covenants of warranty in a deed in that a granary which was on the land when purchased had been subsequently removed by the vendor's tenant who claimed it as his personal property, evidence held to show that the granary was the personal property of such tenant, and that this was known to the purchaser at the time the conveyance was made to him, both from information received by him and the manner in which it rested upon the land.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Covenants, Cent. Dig. § 224.]

4. FIXTURES ⇨4—ELEMENTS.

As a general rule, the manner of an attachment to realty, the adaptability of the thing attached, to the use to which the realty is applied and the intention of the one making the attachment, determine whether the thing attached is realty or personalty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fixtures, Cent. Dig. §§ 3, 6.]

Appeal from District Court, Flathead County; T. A. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Guy E. Padden against Dora Murgittroyd and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

J. H. Stevens, of Kalispell, for appellants. H. A. Paddock, of Polson, for respondent.

BRANTLY, C. J. On August 28, 1913, the defendants executed a warranty deed to 80 acres of land situate in Flathead county, and delivered it to the Flathead County State Bank at Polson, Mont., with instructions to deliver the same to the plaintiff upon his fulfilling on or before January 10, 1914, the conditions embodied in a written escrow agreement between the plaintiff and the defendants which accompanied the deed. These conditions were: That the plaintiff would pay the defendants $3,200 as the purchase price of the land, $1,000 upon the execution and deposit of the deed, $500 on or before January 10, 1914, with interest at the legal rate on $2,200 from the date of the deposit of the deed, until that time, and execute and deliver to defendants a first mortgage upon the land to secure the payment of $1,700, the balance of the purchase price, which was to become due and payable within five years. The plaintiff having fulfilled the conditions, the deed was delivered to him and he entered into possession of the land on or about January 6, 1914. Prior to the sale to the plaintiff the land had been occupied by B. F. Kashner as lessee of the defendants. When the deed was executed the term of the lease had not yet expired. In order to be able to deliver possession to the plaintiff, the defendants secured from Kashner a release of his rights. Kashner owned adjoining lands. He had theretofore constructed thereon a granary, described as 14 feet in width by 16 feet in length, with a shingle roof sloping from a height of 11 feet in front to 9 feet in the rear. It was constructed upon heavy timbers which were designed to serve as skids so that it could be moved from place to place as occasion required. During the term of his lease, Kashner had moved it from his own land to that in controversy. When the lease was surrendered, the granary was not removed, but it was understood by Kashner and the defendants that Kashner could remove it later. No mention was made of the granary either in the deed to plaintiff or the agreement accompanying it. A short time after plaintiff took possession, Kashner sought to remove the granary to his own land. The plaintiff refused to permit him to do so and proceeded to convert it into a dwelling house. Thereupon Kashner brought an action against plaintiff in a justice's court in claim and delivery to recover possession of it, with the result that he was awarded judgment for $150, the value of it, and costs taxed at $18.50. The plaintiff paid the judgment, and thereupon brought this action for damages, alleging that the covenants of warranty in the deed had been broken by defendants, in that the granary was a part of the lands, tenements, and hereditaments conveyed by it to the plaintiff. The defendants, besides denying that they had breached the covenants in the deed as alleged, averred that at the time of the execution and delivery of the deed, the granary was personal property; that plaintiff knew this fact; that it was not owned by the defendants; and that it was not conveyed, or intended to be conveyed, by the deed. There was issue by reply. At the trial, the plaintiff had verdict and judgment for $195.60 and costs, taxed at $156.60. Defendants have appealed from the judgment and an order denying their motion for a new trial.

[1] The integrity of the judgment is assailed on the grounds that the trial court erred to the prejudice of the defendants in admitting certain evidence, and that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. We shall omit consideration of the propriety of the rulings admitting the evidence, for the reason that the argument of counsel in this court presents a question wholly different from that raised by his objection at the trial. The plaintiff was permitted to testify as to what the result was in the justice's court, including the amount of the judgment recovered against him and the fact that he had paid it. The objection was that this was not the best evidence; whereas the argument of counsel goes to the competency of the evidence to show the value of the granary. In other words, the objection went to the degree of the evidence, and not to its competency. The ruling, though it may be conceded to have been erroneous as made, may not be held erroneous on a ground different from that submitted to the trial court.

[2] The vital question in the case is presented by the second contention. The theory upon which the trial proceeded, as is disclosed by the instructions submitted to the jury, was this: That when one conveys land to another, presumptively all buildings permanently resting upon it are included unless there is some reservation or exception thereof made in the instrument of conveyance, and hence that the burden was upon the defendants to show that the granary was the personal property of Kashner, and that this fact was known to the plaintiff at the time the conveyance was made to him. We shall not stop to consider whether the theory upon which the trial court proceeded was the correct one or not. Since no criticism was made of the instructions at the time of their settlement, they became the law of the case for the purpose of these appeals.

[3] The defendants, we think, fully sustained the burden cast upon them. That the granary was the personal property of Kashner there was no controversy. Neither was was there any controversy but that, as between him and the defendants, its character as such was fully understood and recognized. This was apparent both from the statements of the defendants and from the plan of its construction as well as the use for which it was intended, viz. to be moved from place to place as occasion or convenience for its use required, as was usually the case with such structures in that community, for it was erected upon skids to facilitate this mode of use. It was not attached to the surface, nor was it resting permanently thereon. Neither was there any controversy but that in August, when the plaintiff was negotiating for the purchase from the defendants, he went upon the land and observed fully the situation of the granary, the method of its construction, and the use to which it was then devoted. It was situated, not in connection with other permanent buildings or improvements, but at an isolated place in the field where the grain crop for that year had been threshed. The testimony of several of the witnesses tended strongly to show that at the time of the negotiations in August, and later, before the plaintiff made his second payment and took possession, he was fully informed of Kashner's rights. Both the defendants and the notary who prepared the deed and the agreement testified categorically that the ownership of the granary was fully discussed, and that it was understood that it was not included in the transaction. These witnesses all testified that the plaintiff was fully informed that the land was under lease to Kashner; that he owned the granary; that after the papers had been prepared and executed ready for deposit, it was noticed that they contained no mention of the granary; that it was suggested by the notary that they should be amended by incorporating the exception, but that the plaintiff insisted that this was not necessary, as the situation was fully understood. Prior to his taking possession and during the month of December, the plaintiff occupied other land of the defendants adjoining that in controversy, preparing to take possession. He was then informed that the granary belonged to Kashner. He nevertheless moved it and converted it into a dwelling. Two other witnesses testified that during the winter following the purchase, plaintiff admitted to them that while he knew that Kashner owned the granary, since it was not mentioned in the contract he could hold it and intended to do so. The statements of all these witnesses were denied by the plaintiff. If the verdict rested upon this conflicting testimony alone, there would be merit in the contention of counsel for plaintiff that it was the exclusive province of the jury to resolve the conflict, and that its resolution of it became binding on this court. When, however, we consider the undisputed evidence as to the ownership of the granary, the plan of its construction manifesting the use as well as the mode of use for which it was intended, and the manner in which it rested upon the land, we are compelled to the conclusion that the plaintiff fully understood the character of it as personal property, that the defendants did not intend to convey it to him, and that he did not acquire title to it by his purchase. His denial of the statements of the witnesses was insufficient to overcome the inference made necessary by the physical facts, which were not controverted.

[4] In Montana Electric Co. v. Northern Valley Min. Co., 51 Mont. 266, 153 Pac. 1017, it was said:

> "As a general rule, the manner in which the attachment is made, the adaptability of the thing attached to the use to which the realty is applied, and the intention of the one making the attachment, determine whether the thing attached is realty or personalty."

Accepting this as the determinative rule, the conclusion must follow that the plaintiff knew from the beginning that the granary was the personal property of Kashner. True, the granary was resting upon agricultural land and was intended for the housing of grain; but the character of its construction and the manner in which it rested on the land wholly excluded the idea that it was the intention that it should become permanently affixed to it. The evidence therefore wholly fails to justify the verdict.

The judgment and order are therefore reversed, and the cause is remanded to the district court, with direction to enter judgment for the defendants.

Reversed and remanded.

SANNER and HOLLOWAY, JJ., concur.

(175 Cal. 315)

CLINE v. LEWIS, County Auditor.

(L. A. 4781.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1917. Rehearing Denied July 5, 1917.)

1. OFFICERS 🔑100(2)—INCREASE OF COMPENSATION.

Charter of Los Angeles County (St. 1913, p. 1500) § 52, providing that the compensation of any elective county or township officer shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he is elected, nor within 90 days preceding his election, makes the amount of compensation such an officer shall be entitled to during his term of office depend on the law in existence on the ninety-first day preceding his election.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. § 154.]

2. COUNTIES 🔑55 — ORDINANCES — TIME OF TAKING EFFECT.

Under Const. art. 11, § 7½, subjecting the provisions of county charters as to powers and duties of supervisors to the control of the general laws, Charter of Los Angeles County (St. 1913, p. 1487) art. 3, § 11, requiring the board of supervisors to provide by ordinance for the compensation of elective officers, etc., and Pol. Code, § 4058, providing for the enactment of ordinances by the initiative process and also for referendum votes upon ordinances passed by the board of supervisors, and providing that, with certain exceptions, no such ordinance shall go into effect before 30 days from its final passage, within which time it is subject to referendum, an ordinance of the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county fixing the salary of the county sheriff was not in force as an existing law until 30 days after its passage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 71, 72.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Petition for writ of mandate by John C. Cline against Walter A. Lewis, Auditor of Los Angeles County. From judgment for petitioner, respondent appeals, and the appeal is transferred from the District Court of Appeal. Reversed.

Thomas Lee Woolwine, Dist. Atty., and Geo. E. Cryer, Chief Deputy, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Daniel M. Hunsaker, and Hunsaker & Britt, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The appeal before us was taken, in the first instance, to the District Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District. The justices of that court differed in opinion, and the cause was accordingly transferred to this court.

While the appeal was pending in the District Court of Appeal, an opinion, of which the following is a copy, was prepared by Presiding Justice Conrey, of that court:

> "This is an appeal by the respondent in the court below from a judgment granting the petitioner's demand for a peremptory writ of mandate.
>
> "At the general election held in November, 1914, the petitioner was elected to the office of sheriff of Los Angeles county for the term beginning January 4, 1915. Claiming that his salary is $5,000 per year, he presented demands computed at that annual rate for the months of January to November, 1915. Appellant, as county auditor, refused to audit these demands for any sum in excess of a salary computed at the rate of $4,000 per year.
>
> "Ordinance 326 (New Series) of the county of Los Angeles, as adopted by the board of supervisors under date of June 2, 1913, provided for a sheriff's salary which, during the term of petitioner, was to be $4,000 per annum. On the 1st day of August, 1914, the board of supervisors passed and adopted an ordinance amending said Ordinance 326, and thereby providing that the salary of the sheriff of Los Angeles county should be $5,000 per year. We are called upon to determine whether this latter provision applies to the sheriff's present term of office.
>
> [1] "Section 52 of the charter of Los Angeles county (Stats. 1913, p. 1500) states that 'the compensation of any elective county or township officer shall not be increased nor diminished during the term for which he was elected, nor within ninety days preceding his election. * * *' As applied to the sheriff, this plainly means that the amount of compensation to which the sheriff shall be entitled during his term of office shall be controlled by whatever law was in existence on the ninety-first day preceding the election, with respect to the salary of that office for and during the ensuing term. August 1, 1914, was the ninety-fourth day preceding the general election of that year. If the ordinance passed on that date was not an existing law for a full period of 90 days prior to November 3, 1914, it cannot be the law under which petitioner may claim his salary. This brings us to certain questions arising under the provisions of section 4058 of the Political Code, under which it is claimed that the ordinance could not become a law until 30 days after its final passage by the board of supervisors.

"The authority for county charters is derived from section 7½, art. 11, of the state Constitution, and it is there declared that a county charter, when duly adopted and approved, 'shall supersede all laws inconsistent with such charter relative to the matters provided in such charter.' It is further declared, among other things, that county charters shall provide 'for the powers and duties of boards of supervisors; * * * provided, that the provisions of such charters relating to the powers and duties of boards of supervisors and all other county officers shall be subject to and controlled by general laws.' The charter of Los Angeles county, in article 3, § 11, thereof, declares it to be the duty of the board of supervisors to 'provide, by ordinance, for the compensation of elective officers and of its appointees, unless such compensation is otherwise fixed by this charter.' It is conceded that under this section valid ordinances may be passed establishing the salary of a sheriff. It is equally clear that there may be two existing and valid ordinances at the same time, one operative with respect to the current term, and another postponed in its operation to a subsequent term.

"The charter is silent as to the time when ordinances shall take effect and as to the subjects of initiative and referendum, and under the foregoing provisions of the Constitution these matters are subject to be controlled by the provisions of the Political Code as a part of the general law of the state. Section 4058 of the Political Code provides for the enactment of ordinances by the initiative process and also for referendum votes upon ordinances passed by the board of supervisors. As to the latter, we find therein the following provision: That no ordinance passed by the board of supervisors (with exceptions not applicable in the present case) 'shall go into effect before thirty days from its final passage; and if, during said thirty days, a petition signed by qualified electors of the county equal to ten per cent. of the entire vote cast therein for all candidates for governor of the state at the last preceding general election at which a Governor was voted for, protesting against the passage of such ordinance, be presented to the board, the same shall thereupon be suspended from going into operation, and it shall be the duty of the board to reconsider such ordinance. If said board shall thereupon not entirely repeal said ordinance, it shall submit the same to a vote of the electors either at a general election or a special election to be called for the purpose, and such ordinance shall not go into effect or become operative, unless a majority of the voters voting upon the same shall vote in favor thereof.'

"A legislative act cannot become operative until it has become a law, but the time when it becomes operative may be much later than the date when it becomes a law. This is illustrated by frequent instances where legislative acts by their own terms are not to go into effect until a certain date named. It is well illustrated by the instance to which I have referred of two laws in existence at the same time, one establishing the present salary of a public office and another establishing the future salary of that office. 'The Constitution (article 11, § 9) clearly implies that there must be a law in force, fixing the compensation of every county and township officer at the date of his election, and it imperatively forbids any increase of that compensation by a law subsequently enacted. It permits, however, an increase of compensation to the person to be elected to the ensuing term, and if such increase is provided it must be by a law for that limited purpose takes effect long before the expiration of the current term; the old law remaining in the meantime in full effect as to the incumbent. In such a case the operation of the amended law is postponed, not because it is unconstitutional, but because the courts, construing it in the light of the Constitution, hold that such was the intention of the Legislature.' Smith v. Mathews, 155 Cal. 752, 757 [103 Pac. 199, 202].

"When it is said in section 4058, supra, that no ordinance 'shall go into effect before thirty days from its final passage,' and again that, where a referendum petition has been filed, 'such ordinance shall not go into effect or become operative, unless a majority of the voters voting upon the same shall vote in favor thereof,' is it merely intended that the operation of the ordinance and its enforceability in any concrete case shall be postponed? Or do the words 'shall go into effect,' or 'shall not go into effect,' mean that it shall not be an existing ordinance in any event during the period of 30 days from its final passage by the board of supervisors, and (if referendum petition be filed) until further approved at the referendum election? In the case In re Pfahler, 150 Cal. 71, 84 [88 Pac. 270, 275, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 11 Ann. Cas. 911], the Supreme Court gave full consideration to the initiative and referendum provisions of the charter of the city of Los Angeles and expressed its view as to the effect of such provisions as follows: 'The effect of the provisions of the Los Angeles charter, as amended, is to give the legislative power vested in the city to the council and mayor, subject to such control by the electors as is given them by the initiative and referendum provisions. The reserved power of the electors to directly enact such ordinances as the council refuses to enact, as well as their power to effectually veto ordinances adopted by the council, is made paramount to the power of the council and mayor, the council being without power to repeal or amend an ordinance so enacted, and the objection that under the initiative we have "two equal co-ordinate lawmaking bodies, the one absolutely independent of the other," is therefore without foundation. This feature renders the decision in Ex parte Anderson, 134 Cal. 69, 66 Pac. 194, 86 Am. St. Rep. 236, a decision strongly relied on by petitioner, inapplicable, for the only thing decided therein was that there could not be under our system of government two equal, co-ordinate lawmaking powers, "each existing without any restrictions the one upon the other."' The analogy suggested in the foregoing quotation between the referendum and the familiar power of veto tends to support the view that an ordinance or statute, during the period when it remains subject to referendum, has no validity as a law, for it will scarcely be contended that bills which are subject to executive veto have any validity or can be considered as existing laws until the time has expired withing which such veto might be exercised.

"Section 4057 of the Political Code provides with respect to county ordinances that 'no ordinance passed by the board shall take effect within less than fifteen days after its passage,' and further provides for publication of each ordinance within said period of 15 days. If the referendum provisions of section 4058 do not have the effect to postpone for 30 days after its passage the time when an ordinance becomes a law, and if in a given case the referendum petition be filed within the 30 days, but more than 15 days after the date of the passage of the ordinance, then the effect of a subsequent unfavorable vote upon the ordinance at the referendum election will be that of a repeal of an existing law; on the other hand, a favorable vote by the electors will not be a part of the process of enactment of the law, but will be merely a refusal to veto such existing law. The language of the statute does not require that we adopt a view so far out of harmony with the theory of referendum legislation. Where the law governing the process of enactment requires something to be done before the proposed enactment shall take effect, it generally means that the enactment shall not be a law until that thing has been done. Thus, where the statute provided that a county ordinance should not take effect until it had been published in its entirety, and the entire ordinance was not published, it was treated as a nonexisting ordinance. People v. Russell, 74 Cal. 578 [16 Pac. 395.]

[2] "It is my conclusion that the ordinance passed by a vote of the board of supervisors on August 1, 1914, amending Ordinance 326, was not in any sense in force as an existing law until a time less than 90 days preceding petitioner's election as sheriff; and that his salary for the current term is not to be measured by that amendment.

"The judgment should be reversed."

The quoted opinion contains an adequate statement of the facts involved in the controversy. We think, too, that the learned presiding justice made correct disposition of the legal questions presented. We adopt his opinion as the expression of our own views, adding merely the statement that the conclusion reached is in harmony with the decision of this court in Harrison v. Colgan, 148 Cal. 69, 82 Pac. 674.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. I concur. Were the question a new one in this state, I would feel very doubtful as to the correctness of the conclusion as to the proper construction of the charter provision involved. It seems to me, however, that the construction that must be given to section 52 of the Los Angeles county charter, so far as pertinent to the case at bar, is determined by the decision of this court in Harrison v. Colgan, 148 Cal. 69, 82 Pac. 674. I do not think that what was said as to when the salaries there involved were increased can be held to be obiter dictum. That decision was rendered in the year 1908. The Los Angeles county charter was framed and submitted to and approved by the electors of the county in the year 1912. In all material respects section 52 thereof is similar to the provision of the Constitution considered in Harrison v. Colgan, supra, and I do not think we would be warranted in holding otherwise than that it was adopted in the light of that decision and with the meaning given thereby to similar language.

(175 Cal. 366)

BELL v. MOLONEY et al. (S. F. 7236.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1917.)

1. Trusts 🔑34(2)—Bank Deposit.

A trust is created where one deposits money in the bank to the credit of herself "or" her daughter, receives a passbook on which their names are written and gives directions, accepted by the bank, that the deposit shall be paid to either of them on production of the passbook.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 44.]

2. Gifts 🔑30(4) — "Gift Inter Vivos" — Bank Deposit.

A valid gift inter vivos within Civ. Code, §§ 1146 and 1147, defining gifts and providing how they may be made, was made of money deposited by the donor in a bank to the credit of herself "or" daughter, where the daughter, under directions of her mother and pursuant to her mother's expressed intent to make a gift, reduced the money to possession and reported that action to her mother.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gifts, Cent. Dig. § 56.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Gift Inter Vivos.]

3. Witnesses 🔑246(1)—Examination—Interrogation by Judge.

Where it appears to the judge that by taking part in the examination of a witness he may aid in bringing out the truth or prevent a misunderstanding, it is his right and duty to take part therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 852, 856.]

4. Trial 🔑29(3)—Statement of Court—Interrogation of Witness.

Where, in an administrator's action for conversion of money belonging to the estate, it appeared that a witness misunderstood the purport of a question when she replied that she had an interest as an heir in the money sought to be recovered, it was not erroneous, as a prejudgment of the principal issue, for the court to interrogate the witness and inform her that such money was not in the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 82.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Andrew J. Bell, administrator of the estate of Catherine McGuire, deceased, against Lillie Rose Moloney and another. From judgment for defendants and denial of new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. J. Kierce, of San Francisco, for appellant. Joseph Farry, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Andrew J. Bell, as administrator of the estate of Catherine McGuire, deceased, brought suit for the alleged conversion by Lillie Rose Moloney of the sum of $2,088.46, which he alleged to have been the property of her mother, Catherine McGuire. James J. Moloney was joined as a defendant because he is the husband of said Lillie Rose Moloney. It is alleged in the complaint that Mrs. McGuire died on or about June 21, 1912; that during her lifetime the money here in dispute was deposited with a certain banking establishment to the credit of Catherine McGuire or Lillie R. Moloney; and that the latter withdrew and converted the fund on or about the 14th day of March, 1912. By the answer Mrs. Moloney admitted the withdrawal of the sum of $2,088.46 from the bank, but averred that she was at the time of such transaction the owner and entitled to the possession of said sum. Further answering defendants averred that Catherine McGuire during her lifetime created a trust of the sum deposited whereby it was to become the property of Mrs. Moloney at Mrs. McGuire's death; and it was also pleaded that during her lifetime Mrs. McGuire had made a valid gift of the money to Mrs. Moloney. The case was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment was given and entered in favor of defendants. From this judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

The court found that in August, 1897, Catherine McGuire and Lillie Rose Moloney deposited $160 in the bank to the credit of both of them, receiving a passbook on which their names were written: that they then and there in writing directed the banking corporation to pay and said corporation agreed to pay any sum or sums of money then or thereafter deposited to the credit of their account to either one of the depositors who should demand and receipt for the same and produce the passbook; and that on March 14, 1912, Mrs. Moloney withdrew $2,088.46, the balance then on deposit, and thereby closed the account. It was also found that at the time of the original deposit it was Catherine McGuire's intention to create and she did create a trust of said deposit in favor of her daughter, and that upon the death of said Catherine McGuire said Lillie Rose Moloney became the owner of the balance of the fund. The court further found that on or about March 14, 1912, Catherine McGuire gave and transferred to her daughter, Lillie Rose Moloney, all of the money then on deposit in the bank as evidenced by the bank book. There is abundant evidence to support these findings and the judgment based thereon. Respondent, Mrs. Moloney, lived with her mother at No. 49 Farren street, San Francisco. According to the uncontradicted testimony, on August 12, 1897, at the request of Mrs. McGuire, the respondent, her daughter, accompanied her to one bank where the mother withdrew a sum of money and then they went to another bank where at the mother's instance and request the money was deposited to the credit of "Lillie R. Maloney [an obvious clerical error] or Catherine McGuire." A printed form furnished by the bank was filled and executed at that time. The material part of the writing was as follows:

> "Pay all of any sum, or sums, of money that are now or may hereafter be deposited with you, by us, and entered in passbook No. 113,847 to whichever of us, the undersigned, shall demand and receipt for the same and produce said book.
>
> "[Signed] Lillie R. Maloney.
>
> her
> "Catherine X McGuire.
> mark
>
> "Witness: F. E. Wagner."

According to Mrs. Moloney's testimony her mother told her that the deposit was made in that form so that upon Mrs. McGuire's death her daughter might have all the money then on deposit because, as the mother asserted, she had confidence that the daughter would use the money as she wished to have it applied. Mrs. Moloney said that upon one occasion her mother read a will to her, and when she asked why the money in that certain bank was not mentioned the mother replied that there was no necessity for such mention as that had been fixed otherwise. Later, according to Mrs. Moloney's testimony, her mother told her to take the money from the bank and put it in a safe deposit vault so others should know nothing about it, as she (the mother) did not want any one but respondent, Mrs. Moloney, to have it. Mrs. Rock, another daughter of Catherine McGuire, corroborated Mrs. Moloney in this part of her testimony, and also stated that their mother had frequently said that this money was so deposited that Mrs. Moloney could have it upon her death. Plaintiff and another witness testified to certain alleged conversations with Mrs. Moloney and the former to certain purported declarations of Mrs. McGuire shortly before her death which tended in some degree to contradict the evidence offered on behalf of defendants, but with this conflict we are not concerned, the court below having reached its conclusions, as we have seen, upon ample evidence.

[1] It is true, as respondent's counsel say, that the entire transaction may be upheld upon the theory of a trust supported by such authorities as Booth v. Oakland Savings Bank, 122 Cal. 19, 54 Pac. 370; Drinkhouse v. German Savings & Loan Society, 17 Cal. App. 162, 118 Pac. 953; Sprague v. Walton, 145 Cal. 228, 78 Pac. 645; Cahlan v. Bank of Lassen County, 11 Cal. App. 535, 105 Pac. 765; Thomas v. Lamb, 11 Cal. App. 717, 106 Pac. 254; Carr v. Carr, 15 Cal. App. 480, 115 Pac. 261; Culver v. Lompoc Valley Bank, 22 Cal. App. 379, 134 Pac. 355.

[2] But there was also abundant evidence to support the finding of a valid gift inter vivos as Mrs. Moloney, corroborated by her sister, told of taking the passbook and at her mother's direction reducing the money to possession, and of reporting that action to her mother. Thus actual dominion over the property, together with declarations of the donor's intent to give, were shown. These were ample circumstances to support a finding of a gift between living persons. Sections 1146, 1147, Civ. Code; Field v. Shorb, 99 Cal. 661, 34 Pac. 504; Russell v. Langford, 135 Cal. 356, 67 Pac. 331; 20 Cyc. 1204.

Counsel for appellant accuses the learned judge of the superior court, who presided at the trial, of being unfair toward plaintiff "in his attempt to make the witness" (Mrs. Rock) "testify that she had no interest in the outcome of the litigation and no interest in the estate, which, up to the point of interruption, she conclusively showed she had." (We quote from the brief.) The criticism is without merit. The witness had said upon cross-examination, "I have an interest in this money as an heir." After she had again made that declaration in the form of an affirmative answer to a leading question from the cross-examiner the court took part in the inquiry and the following occurred:

"The Court: What interest have you in it? A. An interest in the estate. Q. This money is not in the estate. Do you realize that? A. I don't mean to say that the property—no. Q. What do you mean? A. I mean that it is this way: That my sister is always interested in these things and naturally I was an heir also. Q. In what way are you an heir? A. In the interest of my sister. Q. Do you realize that according to your sister's story this money was given to her absolutely and nobody else in the world? A. Sure. Q. What right have you in it, what interest have you in it? A. The interest of my sister. Q. I don't understand what you mean. Have you any right to any part of this money? A. No, not at all. Q. Could you claim it at any time? A. No. Q. That is what Mr. Kierce wants to know when he asks you what interest you have in it. A. I misunderstood Mr. Kierce."

The quotation demonstrates the propriety of the court's interruption. The witness had testified regarding her mother's declarations that the money in question was to go to Mrs. Moloney, and that no mention was made of it in the will because it was disposed of otherwise. This testimony, followed by the statement that the witness had an "interest" in the property "as an heir," called for an explanation, and the court by a few questions developed the fact that Mrs. Rock was not using the word "interest" in its technical sense of "part ownership" or "right to participate in" the money, but with a very different meaning. Counsel criticizes the court for saying, "The money is not in the estate, do you realize that?" By the use of these words, says counsel, the court "assumed that it had already concluded the very issue in the case against the appellant." Commenting further upon this matter in his brief counsel uses the following language:

"This was a very unfair interruption of the examination of the witness for the very question involved in this proceeding was whether the money belonged to the estate of the deceased, Catherine McGuire, or belonged to the sister of the witness then on the witness stand. The court had no right whatever, either to interrupt the cross-examination of an unfair witness, or to assume in advance that the very money which was the subject of his own inquiry, did not belong to the estate at all."

[3, 4] There is nothing in the record to justify this criticism. It is the right and the bounden duty of a judge of a trial court to take part in the examination of a witness whenever he believes that he may aid in bringing out the truth or in preventing a misunderstanding. By remarking that the money was not in the estate the learned judge was not declaring a prejudgment of the principal issue in the case, but was uttering a fact about which there was no dispute among the litigants. That the money had been taken by Mrs. Moloney and used as her own was charged and not denied. That it was out of the estate was the very reason for the administrator's suit. The purpose of the action, so far as he was concerned, was to force her to return an equivalent sum to the estate. Until and unless it should be restored to the estate the witness could have no interest in the money as an heir and the judge was very properly endeavoring to discover why she declared herself so interested in a fund which, according to her testimony, her mother had disposed of some months before the latter's death.

We have carefully examined the other assignments of error, and find them without merit.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 399)

In re DE ROME'S ESTATE.

DE ROME v. GREAT WESTERN SMELTING & REFINING CO.

(S. F. 7819.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 8, 1917. Rehearing Denied July 5, 1917.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS 🔑93(1)—MANAGEMENT OF BUSINESS — LIABILITY OF ADMINISTRATOR.

An administrator managing a business belonging to an estate is personally liable for debts which cannot be paid from the profits of such business.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 407, 408.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑151(2)—ACCOUNT—WHO MAY APPEAL—"PARTY AGGRIEVED."

A creditor furnishing material to an administrator conducting a manufacturing business is not a "party aggrieved" within Code Civ. Proc. § 938, regulating parties who can appeal from an order settling an administrator's final account, since the administrator personally, and not the estate, is liable for the debt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 947, 948.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Party Aggrieved.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Louis De Rome, deceased. From an order settling the administrator's final account and decreeing distribution, the Great Western Smelting & Refining Company appeals. Affirmed.

Louis H. Brownstone, of San Francisco, for appellant. Dudley Kinsell, of Oakland, and Mastick & Partridge, of San Francisco, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal from an order settling the final account in the estate of Louis De Rome, deceased, and decreeing distribution of certain machinery and of $1,067.77 in the possession of the administrator to the widow and the four children of said Louis De Rome.

The record reveals the fact that, after his appointment as administrator of the estate of his deceased father, Louis M. De Rome conducted the affairs of the business which was the principal asset of the estate. The elder De Rome had operated a bronze and bell foundry and the business was continued by the administrator of his estate. Admittedly the debt due to appellant was incurred during the period in which the work in the foundry was thus carried on, without order or permission of the court by Louis M. De Rome. Respondent insists that, upon the authority of decisions of this court, notably In re Rose, 80 Cal. 166, 22 Pac. 86, Great Western Smelting & Refining Company is not a "party aggrieved," and therefore is not entitled to appeal from the order settling the account. Section 938, Code of Civ. Proc.

Appellant admittedly is not contending upon this appeal that the estate is liable for its debt, but only is seeking to have the administrator account for money received by him officially and (so it is contended) not properly accounted for. There were two accounts filed. In one the administrator set forth certain payments as "family allowance," but no formal order for such an expenditure had ever been made by the court. Before any proceedings looking to the settlement of this account had been taken, a second one was filed omitting all reference to family allowance and taxes. This is the account which was settled. It is argued by appellant that the unauthorized payment of these sums by the administrator amounted to an appropriation of the assets of the estate by him. But there was no showing that this money came from the profits of the business conducted by the administrator, and under the authority of Estate of Rose, supra, the estate was not interested except in the profits of that enterprise. Therefore the court held that the administrator could not be compelled in this probate proceeding to account for the money.

[1, 2] From this decision the Great Western Smelting & Refining Company is in no position to appeal. As was said in the Rose Case, the administrator who assumes the perils of the management of a business belonging to an estate does not, by so doing, subject the estate to the liabilities growing out of his conduct of the enterprise. They are his liabilities and he may pay them out of the increase of the business, but if by so doing a loss to the estate is sustained he must make that loss good. This has been the rule of law for many years, and one who, like the corporation here appealing, deals with an administrator who is conducting a manufacturing enterprise with the property of the estate, does so with full knowledge of its situation as a creditor. Since the liabilities are the administrator's, it follows that errors in his accounting with the estate, if any there be, are not the affairs of his personal creditor. Clearly Great Western Smelting & Refining Company is not a "party aggrieved" within the meaning of section 938 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it cannot matter to that corporation what decree the court may have entered. Estate of Piper, 147 Cal. 606–608, 82 Pac. 246; Estate of Walden, 168 Cal. 759, 145 Pac. 100.

The order and decree are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 309)

FARNSWORTH et al. v. CASHIN.

(S. F. 7252.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1917.)

COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT ⟹5(1) — ACTION ON NOTE.

Where defendant in action on a note left in escrow an agreement that in consideration of a new note and a certain mortgage the time of payment should be extended and the suit should be dismissed, together with the note and mortgage, for signature by one of the plaintiffs, but thereafter withdrew the papers from escrow before signature, there was no compromise of the litigation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 10, 11, 14–16.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by O. G. Farnsworth and J. H. Cluck against K. S. Cashin. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, for appellant. Barnard & Watters, of Fresno, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The action was on a promissory note for $2,000, and the judgment, which included costs and attorney's fee, was for $2,249.05. The answer admitted the execution of the note for the amount due plaintiffs from defendant in consideration of services rendered by plaintiffs in the sale of certain land. It was alleged, however, in the answer that after the commencement of the action a writing had been executed by defendant and O. G. Farnsworth, one of the plaintiffs and copartner of the other plaintiff, J. H. Cluck, whereby the time of payment was extended and it was mutually agreed that defendant should execute a new note for $2,030, secured by a mortgage on specified real property, and certain crops, and that the suit should thereupon be dismissed. It was also averred that defendant tendered the note and mortgage to plaintiffs, and that subsequently plaintiff Cluck without reason refused to sign the agreement. The purported contract was pleaded by copy as an exhibit.

It is contended that upon the showing made the trial of the case should have been continued until the date of the maturity of the note. It fully appears, however, upon the testimony of plaintiffs and of the lawyer, who drew the alleged agreement, that defendant left the contract in escrow with the note and mortgage to be delivered only upon condition that Mr. Cluck, who was absent from home during the preliminary negotiations between his coplaintiff and Mr. Cashin would, upon his return to Fresno, attach his signature to the agreement. Mr. Cluck having refused to sign the instrument, defendant took the note and mortgage and left the attorney's office. A few days later he came back and asked for the agreement. At first the lawyer refused to surrender it because the copies of the instrument had been left in escrow, but upon plaintiff's statement that the "deal was off" and his assurance that he wanted the paper in order that he might show it to another lawyer, he was permitted to take it.

Clearly the agreement never was executed. It was drawn for execution by both plaintiffs, and the defendant never intended that it should become effective upon the signing of the instrument by one of the partners only. But even if we regard it as an executed agreement (which we can only do by overlooking the fact that the minds of the parties never met), the defendant by withdrawing the note and mortgage from escrow refused to perform his part of the contract, and therefore was in no position to enforce any supposed rights under it. No defense to the action was established. All that defendant succeeded in proving was an unsuccessful attempt to compromise the litigation.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 263)

GIBSON v. McREYNOLDS et al. (L. A. 3809.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 4, 1917.)

1. CONTRACTS 🔑346(16) — PLEADING AND PROOF—VARIANCE.

There is no fatal variance between the contract alleged, which was termed a "special contract," and the one found by the court, which was an "express contract," although its terms were not precisely those of the alleged contract.

2. CONTRACTS 🔑346(1)—PLEADING — VARIANCE—STATUTORY RIGHT—RECOVERY ON EXPRESS CONTRACT.

That a party to a contract has rights founded on his status as a locator does not exclude existence of or recovery upon an express contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1714, 1718.]

3. CONTRACTS 🔑346(10) — PLEADING AND PROOF—"VARIANCE."

The mere fact that the contract found by the court differed in scope from that pleaded did not constitute a "variance," the difference being merely in degree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1737-1743, 1746, 1747, 1749.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Variance.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1039(13)—REVERSAL —IMMATERIAL ERROR—"VARIANCE."

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 469, providing that no variance between pleading and proof is material unless the adverse party has been prejudiced thereby, a simple variance in degree of contract alleged and proved did not prejudice defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4086.]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1052(4)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

Error, if any, in admitting a copy of a document without accounting for the absence of the original, was not prejudicial, where the adverse party subsequently sufficiently accounted for the absence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4174.]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑204(1)—PRESERVATION OF EXCEPTIONS — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

An objection to the admission of evidence not made or argued at the trial will not be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1258; Trial, Cent. Dig. § 172.]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑926(5)—SCOPE OF REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

In an action against two defendants, where a conversation admitted was admissible as against one defendant but not against the other, the court on appeal will not presume that it was admitted other than as against the defendant as to whom it was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3729, 3742.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by G. R. Gibson against O. O. McReynolds and another. From judgment for plaintiff and order denying motion for new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John W. Kemp, of Los Angeles, and Geo. E. Whitaker, of Bakersfield, for appellants. Frank H. Short, of Fresno, and E. L. Foster, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

By his pleading G. R. Gibson alleged: That he and the defendants had entered into "a special agreement whereby the plaintiff was to have a certain interest equivalent to that of defendants in certain placer mining claims to be located upon unappropriated government land, under the laws of the United States in the county of Kern." That thereafter, in pursuance of the agreement, defendants and their wives, with J. A. Stroud, G. W. Derby, and their wives and the plaintiff, made mineral locations upon certain lands designated as follows: "Sections 14, 12, 4, 8, 26 and the N. E. ¼, N. W. ¼, and the S. E. ¼ of section 2, and the N. W. ¼, S. W. ¼ and S. E. ¼ of section 24, all in township 32 south, range 24 east, M. D. M." That thereafter plaintiff conveyed to defendant O. O. McReynolds all his right, title, and interest in the said locations so that the said

McReynolds might conduct negotiations for disposing of the property. That plaintiff paid his proportion of the expenses of location, recording, and assessment work, and such other amounts as were demanded by defendants for holding the mining claims. And that all of the other locators conveyed to McReynolds their interests for the better carrying on of the selling or otherwise disposing of the properties. Then follow allegations regarding a sale of 920 acres of the land. It is alleged that McReynolds stated in writing to plaintiff that the latter's proportion of the 920 acres was 80 acres. Then follow averments that Parker Barrett offered plaintiff $550 as his share of the amount paid on account of the sale; that plaintiff refused to accept Barrett's check for that amount; that Barrett and McReynolds had received $4,000 in cash and $4,000 in notes of the vendee for plaintiff's 80 acres; and that plaintiff had sent $75 to Barrett as balance due on his proportion of the expense connected with the holding of the property, but that Barrett had refused to accept it. Judgment was demanded that defendants be declared trustees and that defendant McReynolds be required to pay plaintiff $4,000; to transfer to him $4,000 in the notes of the Lakeview Oil Company of Midway, the vendee of the 920 acres; to assign to him his proportion of the agreement involving the remainder of the purchase price; and to transfer to said Gibson his share of the lands described in the proportion of 80 acres to 920 acres.

The gist of the defenses pleaded by the defendants McReynolds and Barrett is found in the amendments to their amended answers. Barrett avers, in the amendment to the amended answer, that in October, 1908, he and his wife, together with O. O. McReynolds, J. M. Dunn, and G. W. Derby and their wives, formed an association for the purpose of making locations on oil lands in Kern county; that they proceeded to make such locations; that, while the locations were being made it was suggested that plaintiff might render assistance in the development and protection of the lands; that it was mutually agreed between Barrett and Gibson that the former would request his associates to place plaintiff's name on some of the claims being located in lieu of the name of Barrett's wife; that the request was made and granted, and, accordingly, the name of plaintiff was placed upon five of the mineral location notices; that the total expense of locating and developing the lands was $930; and that it was agreed between Barrett and his associates McReynolds, Derby, and Dunn that plaintiff should be requested to pay one-sixth of such expenditure or $155. It is not alleged in any of the pleadings that plaintiff joined in said agreement, or that he bound himself to pay one-sixth of the expenses. It is further averred that plaintiff contributed only the sum of $80 toward the payment of the sum of $155, and that Barrett was compelled to pay the other $75 to his associates. The pleading also contained the averment that:

> "The said plaintiff agreed with this defendant that his, said plaintiff's, interests in any proceeds obtained from the sale of the lands should be based upon the amount which said plaintiff had contributed toward the protection and development of the said lands and should be such percentage of 20 acres of the lands as included in the said five claims upon which the plaintiff's name appeared as a locator."

Barrett further alleged that he paid to plaintiff $500, which was more than Gibson was entitled to receive from the proceeds of the sale of the option or 20 acres of the land, which was plaintiff's proportionate share. There is also an averment of a settlement between plaintiff and Barrett. As a separate defense, Barrett pleads that Gibson had never paid any consideration except $80 for an interest in the property, and that he was equitably entitled to receive of the proceeds of the transaction with the Lakeview company only an amount proportionate to his payment towards the expenses.

The amendment to the amended answer of defendant McReynolds follows the theories of that of defendant Barrett. It does not, however, set forth any agreement between Barrett and the plaintiff to the effect that the latter's interest in the proceeds derived from the sale of the lands should be based upon the amount of Gibson's contribution to the expenses, and it does not plead the alleged settlement between Barrett and Gibson. This pleading also contains the assertion that Gibson agreed with Barrett to pay his proportion of locating and protecting the five mineral locations of which he was one of the locators.

The court found that in October, 1908, plaintiff and defendants entered into an agreement that plaintiff was to join with defendants in the location of certain placer mining claims and was to have an interest in said claims. The court found against plaintiff upon his assertion that he was interested in all of the property in the same proportion as was each of the other locators. There were findings that plaintiff's interest in the 920 acres was 20 acres net and that his original interest in the locations amounted to 80 acres and was so stated by defendant McReynolds in writing. There were findings against the claim of settlement as set up by Barrett and against Gibson's averment that he had paid $75 in addition to the $80 admittedly contributed by him. There were findings against the special defense. The court also found that the sums actually paid by plaintiff were largely in excess of his share of the expenses incurred in connection with the claims in which he actually had an interest.

[1-3] The appellants insist that there is a fatal variance between the contract alleged by plaintiff and the one found by the superior court, and that therefore the judgment should be reversed. In the plaintiff's pleading the contract was styled a "special" agreement. They do not attach any peculiar magic to the word "special," except as that epithet emphasizes the fact that plaintiff declares upon an express contract. There is no merit in their contention. While it is true that the court did not find the exact contract pleaded by plaintiff, the defendants themselves asserted the existence of an express agreement by which Gibson was to share in the proceeds of the sale of those rights obtained in and to the lands described in the notices on which plaintiff's name appeared as a locator. The judgment is not based upon a finding of an implied contract. On the contrary, the court found that in the month of October, 1908, plaintiff and defendants entered into an agreement that plaintiff was to join with defendants in the location and was to have an interest in certain mining claims. The theory of appellants seems to be that, where a court finds that the rights of a party to an agreement are those of a locator, the existence of an express contract is absolutely negatived. But the fact that a party to a contract has rights founded upon his status as a locator does not exclude the existence of or recovery upon an express contract. For example, the law will imply that two partners will share the losses or the profits of their business, but such implication will not exclude proof of the existence of an express contract to the same effect. The enterprise outlined and proven in this case was in the nature of a partnership, and, while perhaps plaintiff's rights as against the government or against those claiming in opposition to the locations made by him or his associates would rest entirely upon implication, his rights as against his fellow locators depended, as alleged and found, upon an express contract. It is true that plaintiff claimed greater scope for his contract than the court found, but that circumstance did not produce a variance between the allegations and the proof such as requires a reversal of the judgment. Such difference as there was did not lie in kind, but in quantity and degree, and was not in contemplation of law a variance. Plate v. Vega, 31 Cal. 384.

[4] But in any view of the case defendants suffered no injury. The trial was had upon the issues arising out of the contractual relations of the parties, and whether we call the contract an express or an implied one we cannot see that defendants were injured by any variance between averment and proof. Section 469, Code Civ. Proc.; Herman v. Hecht, 116 Cal. 553, 48 Pac. 611; Herd v. Tuohy, 133 Cal. 55, 65 Pac. 139; Lyles v. Perrin, 134 Cal. 417, 66 Pac. 472; Cheda v. Bodkin, 158 Pac. 1025–1029; Gordon v. Cadwalader, 172 Cal. 254–257, 156 Pac. 471.

The court did not err in denying the motion for nonsuit. The plaintiff testified to the existence of the agreement, and defendants not only set up a contract in their pleadings, but they alleged that the consideration was Gibson's promise to pay his proportion of the expenses incurred in developing and protecting the oil bearing lands. That he did pay something was admitted, the principal controversy being in regard to the amount.

Certain of the findings are attacked on the ground that they are not supported by the evidence. One objection is that the court erred in finding that plaintiff paid his share of the costs of locating the land and other amounts demanded by defendants. One of the defendants, McReynolds, testified that $930 had been spent upon the location, assessment work, protection, etc., of the lands. Plaintiff was interested in one-fourth of the total locations. He was therefore bound to pay his proportion of $232.50, which is one-fourth of $930. There were ten locators upon each of the five tracts in which he was interested. Upon the basis of one-tenth of the obligation, he would be bound to pay $23.25, and, even upon the claim of appellants that his duty was to bear one-sixth of the expense, his share of the burden would be less than half of the amount, $80, concededly paid by him.

Appellants attack the finding that the interest of Gibson was 80 acres net and was so stated by defendant McReynolds in writing. This finding is based upon a letter from McReynolds to Gibson informing him that he was associated with others in the locations made on November 16, 1908, on five quarter sections therein described. There was no declaration in terms that such interest amounted to 80 acres, but, as respondent's counsel says, that is "a mere matter of arithmetic." There were 10 locators and 800 acres. The result is obtained by a simple division of 800 by 10.

[5, 6] Appellants attack the ruling of the court in admitting a copy of a certain memorandum received by plaintiff from defendant Barrett. The document was admitted in evidence without proof of the loss of the original or accounting in any way for its nonproduction. Counsel for defendants, when the document was offered at the trial objected that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, and not shown to be a copy." As the witness Gibson had sworn that the paper was "an exact copy" of the original, there was evidence to support the ruling admitting it. The objection now urged by appellants was neither made nor argued at the trial and will not be considered here. But, if the court erred in accepting the writing, defendants were uninjured, as defendant Barrett later testified that the original was returned to him and that he had it among his papers. But when he looked for it he could not find it. Thus defendants themselves sufficiently accounted for the failure of plaintiff to produce the original memorandum.

[7] The superior court permitted a witness named Myers to testify to a conversation had with defendant Barrett when defendant McReynolds was not present. The conversation was clearly admissible as against Barrett, and we are not to presume that the court considered it for any other purpose. We cannot see that the error, if error it was, prejudiced defendant McReynolds. The gist of the conversation was that Mr. Barrett expressed the belief that by failing to meet an assessment or call for $25 Mr. Gibson had either put himself in jeopardy of losing or had lost rights worth $8,000. We do not feel called upon to reverse the judgment or the order before us for review, merely because the court failed to declare the intention of limiting the effect of the testimony of Myers to the case against Barrett.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 311)

CITY OF BEVERLY HILLS v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (L. A. 4012.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1917.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟹192 — WATERWORKS — RIGHT TO MAINTAIN PIPE LINE—ACCEPTANCE OF GRANT BY CITY.

In the absence of requirement that a municipality formally accept a legislative grant of the right to maintain water pipes in any road, street, or highway, the question as to whether a municipality asserting such right to use the public highway for such purpose has in fact accepted the offer must be determined from the action taken with a view of acquiring the same.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 279.]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟹192 — WATERWORKS — ACCEPTANCE OF GRANT OF RIGHT TO USE HIGHWAYS—STATUTE.

Where the city of Los Angeles irrevocably committed itself to the work of installing a pipe line by expending hundreds of thousands of dollars therein, and, prior to the incorporation of a city of the sixth class through which the line must run, the board of supervisors of the county, at the request of the city of Los Angeles, granted the city the use of highways in question to construct the pipe line through and across them, the state's grant, offered to every city by St. 1911, p. 852, of the right to use highways, for water lines, etc., was accepted by the city of Los Angeles prior to the incorporation of the city of the sixth class, through which the pipe line must pass.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 279.]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟹134—OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS—GRANT BY STATE.

The state's grant, resulting from a city's acceptance of the state's offer to permit the use of highways for a water pipe line, constituted a contract, the property right in which is protected by the federal Constitution, the extent of the right being measured by the purpose for which the grant was made and accepted—i. e., for the construction of the contemplated pipe line as an entirety.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 344.]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟹192 — WATERWORKS—PIPE LINE — USE OF HIGHWAYS.

So far as the construction by a city of a water pipe line contemplated the use of intervening highways between the origin and end of the line, the right to use such highways, under the state's grant to every city, offered by St. 1911, p. 852, attached and became effective as completely as though the pipes had been actually laid when the grant was accepted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 279.]

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟹134—OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

Where one city obtained from another the right to use the latter's streets for a water pipe line, the latter could not, after a part of such line had been installed, revoke the grant or add new conditions and restrictions which might nullify and render the grant inoperative.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 344.]

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟹134—OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS—AGENCY FOR STATE.

Where the state itself could not change or revoke its grant to a city of the right to use highways for a water pipe line on account of the constitutional prohibition against impairing the obligation of contracts, another city, to which, on its incorporation, the management of some of the highways involved was given, was equally bound to respect the grant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 344.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by the City of Beverly Hills, a municipal corporation, against the City of Los Angeles, a municipal corporation, the Board of Public Service Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles, and another. From a judgment for defendants, and an order dissolving a restraining order, and an order denying an injunction pendente lite, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and orders affirmed.

Emmet H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., Wm. B. Himrod, Deputy City Atty., and W. B. Mathews, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. In this action plaintiff sought a decree perpetually enjoining the city of Los Angeles from laying, constructing, and maintaining a pipe line over, through, across and under certain streets of the city of Beverly Hills for the purpose of conveying water from the source of supply thereof to the city of Los Angeles. The result of the trial was a judgment in favor of defendants and denying plaintiff's right to an injunction from which, and an order dissolving a restraining order made upon filing the complaint, and an order denying an injunction pendente lite, plaintiff has appealed.

The facts, as to which there seem to be no just ground for dispute, are that for some six or seven years prior to the filing of the complaint the city of Los Angeles had been engaged in the construction of the Los Angeles aqueduct extending from a point in the Owens river in Inyo county to a point in San Fernando valley in Los Angeles county about 21 miles northwesterly from the city of Los Angeles, where defendants had, for the purpose of receiving and impounding water so conducted from Owens river through said aqueduct, constructed reservoirs.

Beverly Hills, located in Los Angeles county, was under and by virtue of the general laws incorporated as a city of the sixth class on January 26, 1914, prior to which time it was unincorporated territory. By an act of the Legislature, approved April 10, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 852), it was provided:

> "That there is granted to every municipal corporation of the state of California, the right to construct, operate and maintain water and gas pipes, mains or conduits, electric light and electric power lines, and telephone and telegraph lines, along or upon any road, street, alley, avenue or highway, or across any railway, canal, ditch or flume which the route of such works intersects, crosses or runs along, in such manner as to afford security for life and property; but the municipality shall restore the road, street, alley, avenue, highway, canal, ditch or flume thus intersected to its former state of usefulness, as near as may be: Provided, however, that such municipality may not use any street, alley, avenue or highway within any city and county or incorporated city or town, for such purpose, unless the right so to use the same is granted by a two-thirds vote of the governing body of such city and county, or incorporated city or town."

Prior to the incorporation of the city of Beverly Hills and while said act of the Legislature was in full force and effect, defendants, as found by the court, designed, projected and located a route from said reservoirs over and along which to construct a pipe line to conduct the water therefrom to the city of Los Angeles which route of said pipe line was surveyed, projected, and located across San Fernando valley to Franklin canyon, thence through the unincorporated territory of Beverly Hills, and in part over and across the public highways therein to the city of Los Angeles, the construction of which pipe line contemplated an expenditure of $1,500,000, two-thirds of which sum had, prior to January 26, 1914, been expended, and a large part of the material required for use in installing the pipe line from Franklin canyon to the city of Los Angeles purchased, some of which had been delivered along said route prior to the incorporation of Beverly Hills. It was also made to appear that the only practical and feasible route for such pipe line between Franklin canyon and the city of Los Angeles was through Beverly Hills.

[1] Appellant concedes that the city of Los Angeles might have acquired the right to the use of the highways by acceptance of the legislative grant, but insists that such acceptance could be manifested only by the actual use of the highway prior to the incorporation, which use thereof, to the extent occupied, must be deemed the measure of said defendant's right thereto. The legislative grant is in terms general and applies to every municipality in the state, but it contains no provision for the formal acceptance thereof by a corporation desiring to avail itself of the proffered grant of such right. Hence, in the absence of such requirement, the question as to whether a municipality asserting such right to use the public highway for the purpose named has in fact accepted the offer must be determined from the action taken with a view of acquiring the same.

[2] The intention of the city of Los Angeles to construct the pipe line from Franklin canyon through the territory known as Beverly Hills and over the public highways of which it had, prior to the incorporation of plaintiff, surveyed and located the route for the said pipe line, was clearly indicated by the extent and nature of the work prosecuted by defendants with the purpose of conducting water to the city, in which undertaking the city of Los Angeles had, in reliance upon the grant so made by the state, irrevocably committed itself by the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars in the prosecution of the work of installing the same. Moreover, the record discloses that on January 6, 1914, prior to the incorporation of Beverly Hills, the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county, assuming authority so to do, and at the request of defendants, adopted an ordinance whereby it, in express terms, granted to the city of Los Angeles the use of the highways in question for the purpose of constructing the pipe line through and across the same. That the offered grant so made by the state was accepted by said defendant prior to the incorporation of the city of Beverly Hills, in our opinion, admits of no doubt. City Ry. Co. v. Citizens', etc., R. R. Co., 166 U. S. 557, 17 Sup. Ct. 653, 41 L. Ed. 1114; Russell v. Sebastian, 233 U. S. 195, 34 Sup. Ct. 517, 58 L. Ed. 912, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1282; Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. South Bend, 227 U. S. 544, 33 Sup. Ct. 303, 57 L. Ed. 633, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 405.

[3, 4] The grant resulting from defendant's acceptance of the state's offer constituted a contract, the property right in which is protected by the federal Constitution (Russell v. Sebastian, supra, and the cases therein cited), and the extent of which right is measured by the purpose for which the grant was made and accepted. This, as we have seen, was for the construction of a pipe line as an entirety from Franklin canyon to the city of Los Angeles, and, in so far as the construction thereof contemplated the use of the intervening highways between said termini, the right to use the same attached and became effective as completely as though the pipe had been actually laid.

[5, 6] Assuming, in the absence of the accepted legislative grant, that defendant had obtained from the city of Beverly Hills the right to use its streets for a pipe line, clearly it could not, after a part of such line had been installed, revoke the grant or add thereto new conditions and restrictions the effect of which might nullify and render the grant made wholly inoperative. Dillon's Municipal Corporations (5th Ed.) § 1242. And yet that is the effect of appellant's contention. No doubt exists as to the power of the state to make the grant, which, when accepted as we have seen, constituted an inviolable contract the extent of which is measured by the purpose for which it was intended, and in the exercise of which right defendant was limited alone by the language used in the grant. And since the state itself could not change or revoke it, the city of Beverly Hills, to which, upon its incorporation as a city of the sixth class, the management of the highways therein was given (Stats. 1915, p. 828, § 862, subd. 4; General Laws, Act 2348), is equally and likewise bound.

The power to control such highways, by general laws as to such cities given their boards of trustees, must as to appellant be deemed to have vested subject to the right of defendant, acquired by the legislative grant approved April 10, 1911, to use the highways in question over, across, in, and along which to construct and maintain its pipe line for the purpose specified in the grant. This view renders it unnecessary to discuss other grounds upon which respondent bases its claim to the use of the highways.

The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(175 Cal. 305)

LOS MOLINOS LAND CO. v. MacKAY.

(Sac. 2320.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1917.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑101—TERMINATION OF CONTRACT FOR VENDEE'S DEFAULT—NOTICE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where a contract for the sale of land provided that if any installment of the price, or interest, should be in default for 60 days, the vendor might terminate the contract by notice in writing, served personally or by mail to the holder's last known post office address, and the vendor, on default for more than 60 days in payment of interest, notified the holder in writing by mail at his post office address that his rights under the contract were terminated, the contract canceled, and that all payments made were forfeited, there was a compliance with the terms of the contract on the part of the vendor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 170–174.]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑117—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—SURRENDER OF POSSESSION.

A purchaser of land, payment to be made in installments, who wishes to rescind the contract, may do so only by surrendering the land to the vendor, whereupon he is in position to sue for the portion of the price paid; if he chooses to retain possession under the contract, he may do so only by paying the purchase price and interest according to his agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 209.]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑299(4) — DEFENSE—FRAUD IN SALE OF LAND.

In a vendor's action to quiet title and to have the contract declared terminated for the purchaser's default in payment, and to remove vendee from the land, etc., where defendant failed to deny any of the essential averments of the complaint, he could not defend on the theory that plaintiff had been guilty of fraud; the action being in ejectment, and an independent tort not being available against such pleading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 842.]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑299(4)—COUNTERCLAIM—DAMAGES—FRAUD.

In vendor's action to quiet title, and for repossession after breach of contract, a counterclaim, alleging fraud and asking for money judgment by way of damages, does not arise in the same transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. § 842.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Suit by the Los Molinos Land Company, a corporation, against T. C. MacKay. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

P. H. Coffman and A. H. Ludeman, both of Red Bluff, for appellant. W. P. Johnson, of Red Bluff, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued to have a certain contract for the sale by it of land to the defendant declared at an end by reason of defendant's breach thereof, to obtain a decree for the removal of defendant from the land involved in the contract, and to quiet title to said real property. Defendant demurred to the complaint, and, the demurrer being overruled, answered, and also pleaded a counterclaim. Demurrers of plaintiff to defendant's pleadings were sustained without leave to amend, and after the taking of testimony judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff as prayed. From this judgment, defendant appeals.

[1] The only objection to the sufficiency of the complaint which is urged by appellant's counsel in their briefs is that the pleading does not indicate whether or not the defendant was served with notice to quit the premises prior to the commencement of the action. This objection is without merit. The contract, which was fully set forth in the complaint, provided that if any installment of the purchase price, interest, or taxes should become due and be in default for 60 days Los Molinos Land Company might terminate all of the rights of the holder of the contract by notice in writing served personally or by mail to the last known post office address of said holder. The complaint, after setting forth the default of defendant for more than 60 days in the payment of an installment of interest, avers that he was notified, on a day specified, in writing by mail at his post office address at Los Molinos, Cal., that his rights under the contract were terminated, the contract canceled, and that all payments theretofore made were forfeited. This was a sufficient compliance with the terms of the agreement, and the court properly overruled the demurrer to the complaint.

The complaint contains allegations to the effect that plaintiff and defendant executed the pleaded agreement; that defendant went into possession of the land under said contract; that he was then occupying the premises; that certain interest had become due for a period of more than 60 days; that said interest was still unpaid; that plaintiff, exercising its option given by the terms of the contract, had declared the said agreement at an end, and the payment previously made on account of the purchase price forfeited. None of these allegations was denied by the answer, but defendant pleaded certain alleged fraudulent representations operating to induce defendant to purchase the land; the offer of defendant, on discovery of the fraud, to rescind the contract and restore the land, on repayment of the amount paid on the purchase price, and plaintiff's refusal to accept the terms so offered. The counterclaim sets up the alleged fraudulent acts of plaintiff in inducing defendant to enter into the contract, and prays recovery of $350, the initial payment on the purchase price, $350 alleged to have been expended by defendant in efforts to produce crops on the property, and $100 counsel fees.

[2-4] The demurrers to the answer and counterclaim were properly sustained. A purchaser, wishing to rescind a contract of this sort, may only do so by surrendering the land to the vendor. He is then in a position to sue for the portion of the purchase price previously paid; or, if he chooses to retain possession under the contract, he may only do so by paying the purchase money and the interest according to the terms of the agreement. Gervaise v. Brookins, 156 Cal. 103-108, 103 Pac. 329; Empire Investment Co. v. Mort, 169 Cal. 732-737, 147 Pac. 960; Empire Investment Co. v. Mort, 171 Cal. 336-339, 153 Pac. 236. Having failed to deny any of the essential averments contained in the complaint, MacKay could not defend upon the theory that plaintiff had been guilty of fraud. This is an action in ejectment, and an independent tort is not available against such a pleading. There was nothing in the contract by which the vendor guaranteed the quality of the land or its productiveness, and all of the allegations of fraud in the answer and counterclaim relate to misrepresentations and concealments regarding such matters. There was nothing in the fraud which prevented the defendant from carrying out the stipulations contained in the writing and then suing for the damages suffered because of plaintiff's misrepresentations and concealments, if any there were; or he might have surrendered the land and sued while the contract was still of full vitality, praying for its rescission on account of the vendor's fraud and for damages. Having chosen to permit the vendor to rescind on account of his (the vendee's) own failure to comply with the terms of the contract, he is in no position to set up plaintiff's fraud, either as an answer or by way of counterclaim, as against the action in ejectment, because such purported counterclaim may not be said to arise out of the same transaction. The counterclaim does not tend to defeat plaintiff's recovery, which was for the repossession of the land after admitted breach of the contract of sale by the vendee. Defendant's demand was for a money judgment by way of damages, and cannot be said to arise out of the same transaction. See Empire Investment Co. v. Mort, 169 Cal. at page 738, 147 Pac. 960, and cases there cited.

Our conclusion upon this subject makes it unnecessary to discuss the sufficiency of defendant's allegations of fraud as matters of pleading.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 293)

J. FRANK & CO. v. NEW AMSTERDAM CASUALTY CO. (S. F. 7302.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1917.)

1. Insurance 🔑371—Rights of Insurer—Waiver.

While an insurer may stand upon the letter of its contract, it may waive its provisions when placed in the policy for the insurer's benefit, and may by its conduct be estopped from asserting defenses otherwise available.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 943-946.]

2. Insurance 🔑388(5)—Rights of Insurer—Waiver.

Where the insurer, under an indemnity policy issued to J. & Co. as an individual, defended a suit brought against J. & Co. as a corporation, it waived the defense of misrepresentation in the policy as to the status of the insured.

3. Insurance 🔑388(5)—Rights of Insurer—Waiver.

In such case, where the insurer permitted a judgment against the insured to become final, it could not afterwards deny the binding force of the policy.

4. Insurance 🔑390—Rights of Insurer—Waiver.

When an insurance company, with full knowledge of all the facts, enters into negotiations and relations with the assured, recognizing the continued validity of the policy, the right to a forfeiture for any previous default which may be asserted is waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1037, 1038.]

5. INSURANCE 🔑665(8)—RIGHTS OF INSURER—WAIVER.

Evidence held to show that the insurer had full charge of a suit against the insured, so that it was bound by the judgment in such suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1725.]

6. EVIDENCE 🔑78—PRODUCTION OF EVIDENCE—CORPORATE RECORDS—PRESUMPTIONS.

The mere fact that the corporate books and papers were not brought into court, though such action was suggested, but not ordered by the judge, does not raise the presumption that there was no corporate action regarding the matter involved when such action was prerequisite to maintaining a suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 98, 100.]

7. INSURANCE 🔑665(4)—LIABILITY OF INSURER—INDEMNITY POLICY.

Evidence held to show that the insured against whom a judgment was recovered had paid the judgment, so as to render the insurer liable therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1722.]

8. INSURANCE 🔑558(1)—RIGHTS OF INSURER—WAIVER.

While requirement in indemnity policy that notice of probable liability be given to the home office of the insurer is reasonable and just, it is waived when the insurer actually assumes control of the litigation involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1382, 1383, 1389, 1390.]

9. INSURANCE 🔑514—LIABILITY OF INSURER—INDEMNITY POLICY.

In suit under an indemnity policy binding the insurer to pay any judgment recovered against the insured, the insurer may inquire whether the judgment has been paid, but not where the funds with which to pay it were obtained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1298.]

10. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1058(2)—HARMLESS ERROR.

Error, if any, in excluding testimony was harmless where the same witness was subsequently permitted to testify to all the matters as to which his testimony was previously excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4195, 4201.]

11. INSURANCE 🔑555—INDEMNITY POLICIES—CONSTRUCTION.

A prohibition in an indemnity policy against waiver of its conditions except in writing does not apply to stipulations to be performed after loss, such as giving notice and furnishing preliminary proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 1367–1373, 1382–1390.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by J. Frank & Co. against the New Amsterdam Casualty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lilienthal, McKinstry & Raymond, of San Francisco, for appellant. Louis H. Brownstone, of San Francisco, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The facts are simple. Cousins, an employé of plaintiff, was injured and brought suit for a large sum of money in damages. Defendant, a surety company, which had issued a policy in favor of plaintiff, took charge through its counsel of the defense in that action. Cousins obtained a judgment for $2,500 against J. Frank & Co., and the attorney for the New Amsterdam Casualty Company, although promising that an appeal would be taken, allowed the judgment to become final. The judgment was paid and this suit was by J. Frank & Co. (a corporation) to compel repayment of the amount of said judgment from its insurance carrier, New Amsterdam Casualty Company (a corporation). The defense was highly technical, and was based for the most part upon alleged rights of the insurer under its policy, which were waived by its assumption of liability evidenced by its undertaking the defense in the suit of Cousins against his employer.

[1-3] Appellant's first point is that it was not bound by the terms of the policy to indemnify plaintiff for any loss because it did not, as found by the court, enter into a contract of insurance with "the plaintiff" (a corporation), but with J. Frank & Co., an individual. Undoubtedly an insurance corporation may usually stand upon the letter of its contract, and where the policy is based upon a warrant of status by the person, firm, or corporation seeking insurance, the insurer may in certain cases be relieved of liability by misrepresentations of the applicant, even when there is an absence of fraud. But an insurance company, like any other contracting party, may waive provisions placed in the policy solely for its own benefit and may by its conduct be estopped from asserting defenses which might otherwise be available. We do not mean to say that the mere statement by the assured of individual rather than corporate status would avoid the policy if timely objection were made, but it is certain that whatever the rights of the casualty company may have been by reason of the false statement in the policy, it is now prevented by its own conduct from taking any advantage of that representation because it undertook the defense of its assured, under the recognized duty imposed by the contract, when J. Frank & Co. was sued as a corporation. The same able counsel who represented the interests of the defendant on behalf of the surety company in Cousins v. Frank & Co. (a corporation) conducted the defense in this action. The complaint in the action for damages described J. Frank & Co. as "a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of California." This was admitted by lack of denial in the answer, and that pleading was verified by Mr. Frank as president of the corporation. Thus the misnomer as well as any similar infirmity was waived by the conduct of the surety company. Moreover, the surety company, by failing to appeal on behalf of J. Frank & Co. from the judgment in the suit for damages, deprived the latter of important and valuable rights. The president of J. Frank & Co. was told that counsel for the surety company had the matter of a settlement in hand, that an effort to settle was being made, but that no agreement would be made which would involve the payment of more than $200. Having permitted the insured thus to alter its position, the surety company may not now seek to deny the binding force of the policy.

[4] When an insurance company, with full knowledge of all the facts, enters into negotiations and relations with the assured, recognizing the continued validity of the policy, the right to a forfeiture for any previous default which may be asserted is waived. Murray v. Home Benefit Association, 90 Cal. 402–407, 27 Pac. 309, 25 Am. St. Rep. 133; Knarston v. Manhattan Life Insurance Co., 124 Cal. 74–78, 56 Pac. 773; Knarston v. Manhattan Life Insurance Co., 140 Cal. 57–62, 73 Pac. 740.

Appellant attacks as not sustained by the proof the finding to the effect that the insurer erroneously inserted in the policy a designation of the assured as an individual. In view of our decision with reference to waiver of conditions, this finding is immaterial, and we are relieved from the necessity of discussing the alleged lack of evidence applicable to it.

[5] Another finding which, according to appellant, is unsupported is the one by which the court declared that "defendant through its attorneys had entire charge of the defense of said action" (meaning the suit of Cousins against J. Frank & Co.) It is asserted that because there was a claim by Cousins for an amount in excess of the maximum liability under the policy, the surety company deemed itself bound to invite Mr. Brownstone, who had acted in other matters for J. Frank & Co., to become associated with its counsel. Unquestionably he was asked to participate in the preparation and trial of that case, but he refused to accept the invitation. Mr. Raymond, one of the attorneys for defendant in this action, while on the witness stand, speaking of Cousins v. Frank, said: "I had absolute charge and control of the case." The finding is therefore fully supported, because it appears clearly from the testimony that Mr. Raymond was acting in behalf of the surety company when appearing for the insured.

[6] The court found that plaintiff paid in full the judgment in favor of Cousins on the 24th of February, 1913, together with interest and costs, amounting in the aggregate to $2,635. In attacking this finding appellant again lays great stress upon the personal as distinguished from the corporate entity. The evidence tends to show, as appellant admits, that M. M. Morris loaned to the corporation $2,000, to be applied to the payment of the judgment, but appellant insists that the remainder, $635, was paid by Mr. Frank personally. Appellant calls attention to the provision in the policy to the effect that no action by the assured against the surety company will lie to recover for any amount except a loss "actually sustained and paid in money by the assured." After the recovery of judgment and before its payment J. Frank & Co. made an assignment for the benefit of creditors. Subsequently the sum of $2,000 was borrowed from Morris on the security of a purported assignment by the corporation, J. Frank & Co., of its rights under the policy and the satisfaction of judgment was obtained on the same day. Yet there is no proof, according to appellant, of any corporate act, either in the execution of the note to Morris, the making of the assignment or the payment of the judgment; and, further, it is argued in appellant's behalf that by failure to produce the corporation's records (although ordered to do so by the court), respondent established the presumption against it that there was no corporate act touching the matter of the settlement of the judgment. This last contention is without merit. It is true that the court suggested to counsel for J. Frank & Co. that he would better get the minutes and other books of the corporation during an adjournment, but there was no order to produce them, and if there had been the surety company easily might have requested its enforcement. This was not done. The mere fact that the books and papers were not brought into court did not create the presumption for which appellant contends.

[7] There is no pretense that the proof does not show the payment of the judgment in actual money on behalf of J. Frank & Co. It is therefore immaterial to the insurance carrier how or when that corporation obtained the money or the credit which enabled it to pay Cousins the amount due. However, it does appear from the testimony of Mr. Frank that the assignment to Mr. Morris of the proceeds of any judgment against the surety company, given as security for the loan, was made after a meeting of the directors of the corporation, and as the president signed the assignment for the company, presumably he did so in the fulfillment of the formal action and instruction of the board of directors. Mr. Frank was the alter ego of the corporation owning all the stock except that necessary to qualify other directors. He had been sued on his liability as a stockholder after the judgment was obtained by Cousins against the corporation, and for that reason he arranged, as he testified, to get the loan for J. Frank & Co. We are of the opinion that the evidence supports the finding of payment of the judgment against it by J. Frank & Co., the corporation.

[8] There was a motion for nonsuit based upon alleged failures on the part of the assured to obey certain requirements of the policy, namely, to send to the home office of the insurer written notice of the accident to Cousins, and after the commencement of the action by said Cousins to forward to the home office the summons served upon J. Frank & Co. in that suit. Of course the conditions of the policy requiring notice to the home office of probable liability are intended primarily to afford opportunity to the insurer promptly to take charge of a defense. Such requirements are reasonable and just, but they are waived when, as in this case, the insurer actually does assume control of the litigation growing out of the accident. Knarston v. Manhattan Life Insurance Co., supra. There was no error in the denial of the motion for nonsuit.

[9] Certain rulings relative to the admission of evidence are specified as erroneous. The admission of the policy issued to J. Frank & Co., an individual, and the acceptance in evidence of the judgment roll in Cousins v. J. Frank & Co. (a corporation) were justified upon principles discussed above. Certain questions were propounded to Mr. Faull, a representative of appellant, by which it was sought to bring out the details of a certain conversation between him and Mr. Frank. These interrogatories were evidently designed to elicit testimony about Mr. Frank's declarations regarding the sources from which he expected to obtain funds for the payment of the judgment in favor of Cousins. The court, in sustaining objections to these questions, ruled that counsel had a right to discover whether or not the loss had been actually sustained and paid in money, but the learned judge said he did not see that the examination was addressed to such a purpose. Whereupon one of the counsel for defendant said: "I think your honor is right." We agree with the court and with counsel's opinion expressed at that time.

[10] Another exception was based upon the ruling sustaining the objection of plaintiff to a question directed to Mr. Morris in which it was sought to have him say with whom he had a conversation about the loan to plaintiff. If the ruling was erroneous it was not harmful to appellant, because later in the examination Mr. Morris testified very fully concerning the conversations and all of the circumstances connected with the making of the loan.

An expert insurance broker, Mr. MacMeans, was asked if the rates of insurance for individuals were different from those charged to corporations. Over defendant's objection he was permitted to answer. In view of that which we have decided with reference to the waiver in the matter of the incorrect designation of plaintiff in the policy, this error, if it was error, is entirely immaterial.

[11] The waiver evidenced by the conduct of the insurer is also a sufficient answer to the specification of error based upon the admission in evidence of certain conversations between Mr. Frank and Mr. Raymond, attorney for the surety company, and others between Mr. Frank and Mr. Vella, that corporation's adjuster. These conversations did not, as appellant insists, relate to prohibited waivers of the terms of the policy on the part of agents. They merely referred to the action of the company through its agents after it had waived all informalities and all possible objections by assuming control of the litigation. The prohibition in a policy against waiver, except in writing, does not apply to those stipulations which are to be performed after loss such as giving notice and furnishing preliminary proof. Carroll v. Girard Fire Insurance Co., 72 Cal. 297–300, 13 Pac. 863; Wheaton v. North British & Mercantile Insurance Co., 76 Cal. 415–426, 18 Pac. 758, 9 Am. St. Rep. 216. In the case at bar the conduct of the insurer, without reference to the statements of its agents, was sufficient to show its assumption of full liability under the policy.

Appellant's final point admittedly is not supported by the record, but in the brief of appellant it was announced that a motion in diminution of the record would be made, to the end that the argument might become relevant. No such motion has been made. Therefore we may not consider the argument on that point.

Judgment and order affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 292)

McCORMACK v. McCORMACK. (S. F. 7144.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1917.)

1. DIVORCE 🔑39—SUFFICIENCY OF FINDINGS.

Findings that the parties' marriage had been declared null and void in another state sufficiently supported decree denying divorce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 160.]

2. DIVORCE 🔑183—APPEAL—RECORD—QUESTION PRESENTED—FINDINGS.

Where the evidence is not incorporated in the record on appeal in divorce case, no question arises as to its sufficiency to support findings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 569.]

3. EVIDENCE 🔑80(1)—PRESUMPTIONS—LAW OF ANOTHER STATE.

In the absence of contrary evidence, the law of another state touching the subject in question will be deemed to be the same as that of this state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 101.]

4. JUDGMENT 🔑815—FOREIGN—CONSIDERATION—CONSTITUTION.

The final judgment of another state, whether erroneous or not, is, under Const. U. S. art. 4, § 1, requiring full faith and credit to be given to judicial proceedings of other states, entitled to same weight and consideration as though rendered by the court of this state where want of jurisdiction is not shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1445–1448.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

Suit for divorce by Henrietta Elizabeth McCormack against Robert Hughson McCormack. Decree denying divorce, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

West & de Journel, of San Francisco (T. C. West, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant. Frank J. Hennessy, of San Francisco, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, J. pro tem. This is an appeal prosecuted by plaintiff upon the judgment roll alone from a decree denying her a divorce from the defendant.

It appears from the findings that on March 11, 1907, the parties were married in the province of British Columbia, Canada; that thereafter on March 12, 1908, in an action therefor brought by defendant herein against plaintiff herein, the superior court of Kings county, state of Washington, after due and regular proceedings had therein, made and entered a judgment whereby it declared the marriage so contracted by the parties null and void, which judgment is in full force and effect; and that at the time of the commencement of the action the parties were not husband and wife.

[1, 2] That these findings support the judgment admit of no possible question, and, since the evidence upon which they were made is not incorporated in the record, no question arises as to the sufficiency thereof to support the findings. Redlands, etc., W. Co. v. Redlands, 121 Cal. 365, 53 Pac. 843; Estate of Brown, 143 Cal. 450, 77 Pac. 160.

[3, 4] Appellant insists that, since the marriage contracted in Canada was valid, the superior court of Washington, though concededly having jurisdiction of the parties, could not legally declare it void. The Supreme Court of that state has held otherwise. See Johnson v. Johnson, 57 Wash. 89, 106 Pac. 500, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 179. There is nothing in the record showing the grounds upon which the court acted in annulling the contract of marriage. Presumably, since the contrary is not made to appear, and as the law of Washington touching the subject in the absence of evidence to the contrary is deemed to be the same as that of this state (O'Sullivan v. Griffith, 153 Cal. 502, 95 Pac. 873, 96 Pac. 323; Fox v. Mick, 20 Cal. App. 599, 129 Pac. 972), the action for annulment was based upon some one of the grounds specified in section 82 of the Civil Code as cause for annulling the marriage. With this, however, we are not concerned, since, whether erroneous or not, the final judgment of the superior court of Washington declaring the marriage null and void—there being nothing to show want of jurisdiction—is under section 1, art. 4, of the federal Constitution, entitled to the same consideration and weight as though rendered by a court of this state. Philbrook v. Newman, 148 Cal. 174, 82 Pac. 772. The appeal is without a semblance of merit.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

(175 Cal. 345)

In re CAMPBELL'S ESTATE. (L. A. 4854.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1917.)

1. WILLS 🔑81—INVALID GIFT TO CHARITY—SEPARABLE PROVISIONS.

Where a will left an estate in trust during life of testatrix's son, on whose death the trust was to "cease and determine," and on such termination the estate was to go to the son's lawful issue and another, and in default of such issue three-fourths thereof to a hospital and one-fourth to certain others, the will further providing that "the invalidity of any use or trust herein shall not vitiate such as are valid," the validity of no other provisions of the will than the disposition to the hospital would be affected by Civ. Code, § 1313, invalidating devises or bequests to charities exceeding one-third of the estate; such disposition to the hospital not being part of a single and indivisible scheme.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 201, 202.]

2. WILLS 🔑15 — VALIDITY OF CHARITABLE DEVISE.

In such case, where the present value of the distributable assets was about $15,000, and the trustee was directed to use, for the purposes of the trust, such portion of the principal, in addition to the income, as he might deem necessary, the determination whether the hospital would receive, under the will, of the distributable assets of the estate, more than the third allowed by Civ. Code, § 1313, could not be had until the termination of the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 36.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Maria Campbell, deceased. Appeal by Isidore B. Dockweiler, trustee, and another, from decree of partial distribution. Reversed.

Isidore B. Dockweiler, Thomas A. J. Dockweiler, and W. D. Finch, all of Los Angeles, for appellants. Earle M. Daniels and Julius V. Patrosso, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an appeal by Isidore B. Dockweiler, as trustee under the will of Maria Campbell, deceased, and by the Los Angeles Infirmary, a corporation, as legatee under said will, from a decree of partial distribution whereby there was distributed to Jose Boniface Arzaga substantially an undivided two-thirds of the property of the estate of said deceased. The theory upon which this distribution was made was that as to such property the attempted disposition made by the will of deceased was ineffectual and void under our law, with the result that as to the same the deceased died intestate, and that said property passed to said Jose Boniface Arzaga, the sole surviving child and sole heir of said deceased.

Deceased died August 14, 1913. Her will executed April 23, 1913, gave all her property to Isidore B. Dockweiler in trust for certain purposes specified therein. Substantially stated, the material provisions as to the trust were as follows: The trust was to continue until the death of her son, Jose, on the happening of which event it was expressly declared that "the trust hereby created shall cease and determine." The trustee was fully authorized during the continuance of the trust to care for, preserve, and manage the property, and in the event that the net income was at any time insufficient for the proper care and support of the son, to use such portion of the principal as he deemed necessary for that purpose. During the existence of the trust he was required to distribute and pay out the net rents, issues, profits, interest, and dividends of the estate, as follows: $10 per month to her housekeeper, Eulalia Marquez, as long as her son, Jose shall live, and the remainder to or for the use and support of her said son. If said Eulalia Marquez died before her son, then the monthly $10 theretofore paid her was thenceforth to be paid to or for the use and support of said son. This constituted the whole of the trust upon which the property was bequeathed to the trustee. It was then provided in apt terms what should become of the property upon the termination of the trust, and to whom it should belong. These provisions were substantially as follows: If the son, Jose, left lawful issue surviving him, all of the property "shall immediately vest" in said lawful issue, provided said Eulalia Marquez be not then alive, and if the latter did survive the son, then $1,000 shall vest in her, and the remainder in the son's lawful issue. If said son died without lawful issue, but leaving a surviving wife, then $1,000 shall vest in said Eulalia Marquez, and one-fourth of the remainder in said surviving wife and the other three-fourths in the Los Angeles Infirmary, a corporation conducting a hospital in Los Angeles, for the purpose of founding, endowing, and maintaining free beds for deserving sick poor. If said son died without leaving lawful issue or surviving wife, one-fourth shall vest in said Eulalia Marquez, and the remaining three-fourths in said Los Angeles Infirmary for the purpose above stated, provided that, if said Eulalia Marquez did not survive the son, her share shall vest in said Los Angeles Infirmary. The will further provides:

> "The invalidity of any use or trust herein declared, if ever decreed by a court of competent jurisdiction, shall not vitiate such as are valid."

According to the agreed statement of facts dated January 20, 1916, found true by the lower court, the following facts appear: Deceased died, as has been said, August 14, 1913. Her estate consisted entirely of personal property. The son, Jose, sole heir at law, attained the age of 31 years on June 5, 1915. He is married, his wife, Margaret L. Arzaga, being 32 years of age. There is as yet no lawful issue of such marriage. Said Eulalia Marquez is alive, and is in her forty-seventh year of age. The present value of the estate is, according to the findings of the court, $15,379.48, out of which $250 for a monument is to be paid. The present value of the bequest to the Los Angeles Infirmary, according to the American Experience Table of Mortality, with interest at 5 per cent. is, under the conditions most favorable to it, viz. the death of the son without leaving either lawful issue, a wife, or Eulalia Marquez surviving him, less than $4,000.

Section 1313, Civil Code, after prohibiting bequests or devises to any charitable or benevolent society or corporation, or to any person in trust for charitable uses, except by will "duly executed at least thirty days before the decease of the testator," declares:

> "And if so made, at least thirty days prior to such death such devise or legacy, and each of them shall be valid: Provided, that no such devises or bequests shall collectively exceed one-third of the estate of the testator, leaving legal heirs, and in such case a pro rata deduction from such devises or bequests shall be made so as to reduce the aggregate thereof to one-third of such estate; and all dispositions of property made contrary hereto shall be void, and go to the residuary legatee or devisee, next of kin, or heirs, according to law."

It was upon the theory that the provisions as to the vesting of all the property in the Los Angeles Infirmary upon certain contingencies, and three-fourths thereof upon certain other contingencies, were void as to two-thirds of the property, as being in violation of this section, and that as a result thereof the son, as sole heir, there being no residuary legatee, was entitled at once to take such two-thirds, that the distribution complained of was made to him.

[1] 1. It seems clear to us that, even if it be conceded that the disposition in favor of the Los Angeles Infirmary is invalid to the extent stated, nevertheless the son was not entitled to have the property distributed to him free of the trust. Such disposition in favor of the infirmary was no part of the trust, but a thing entirely apart from and independent thereof. As in Hornung v. Sedgwick, 164 Cal. 629, 130 Pac. 212, the provisions as to the disposition of the corpus upon the death of the son constituted no part of the trust and were solely by way of prescribing to whom the property to which the trust related should belong upon the termination of the trust, and of a bequest of the property subject to the execution of the trust. The trust for the benefit of the son and Eulalia Marquez for the life of said son was in all respects valid, and by its terms the trustee was to hold all of the property until the happening of the event which would terminate the trust, viz. the death of the son. The attempted bequest was subject to this trust. If such bequest was to any extent invalid by reason of the provisions of section 1313, Civil Code, it may be conceded that the heirs of the deceased would succeed to the interest as to which the invalidity existed, but manifestly they could take no other or different interest than the Los Angeles Infirmary was given by the will. All the property of deceased other than such interest was otherwise effectually disposed of by the will, and it was only as to this interest that any invalidity can be fairly claimed. The bequest to the Los Angeles Infirmary was also entirely contingent upon the death of the son without lawful issue surviving him, and in part contingent upon his death without leaving a wife surviving, and it was wholly subject to the complete execution of the trust. An heir succeeding by reason of the invalidity in part of this bequest under section 1313, Civil Code, could take nothing different or greater. There is no failure to dispose by will as to anything else. The paramount trust would necessarily exclude such heir from enjoyment of any of the property until its termination, i. e., until the death of the son; and by virtue of other provisions of the will he would then take only in the event of the death of the son without leaving lawful issue surviving.

The decree as made destroys the valid paramount trust to the extent of two-thirds of the property of deceased, and cuts out the valid bequest to possible surviving lawful issue of the son to the same extent, as well as the bequest to the possible surviving wife of the son, who may or may not be the present wife. It cannot be sustained upon any principle or rule of law of which we have knowledge.

The contention of respondent is that by the scheme embodied within the terms of the will more than one-third of the estate is devised to a charitable corporation, and that as a necessary consequence the devise of the entire estate to Dockweiler, trustee, to effectuate and carry out the purpose thereof, is void as to two-thirds of the estate so devised in trust, and that consequently, there being no residuary legatee, the testatrix died intestate as to this portion. As we have seen, the disposition to the Infirmary is no part whatever of the trust, and the devise to Dockweiler is in no sense one "to effectuate and carry out" the same. It was entirely competent under our law for the deceased to create this trust for the benefit of Eulalia Marquez and her son, for the life of the latter, and it, being a valid trust as to all the property, must stand regardless of any question of the invalidity in part of a bequest of what remains after the termination of the trust. So far as this particular question is concerned, respondent's case can be no stronger than it would have been had the will failed to contain any provision whatever as to the succession to the property upon the termination of the trust. In that case his succession as sole heir on the theory that deceased died intestate in part would necessarily have been subject to the trust for his life in favor of himself and Eulalia Marquez as to all the property.

There is no decision in this state contrary to the views we have expressed, and in none of the cases cited by learned counsel for respondent does any such question appear to have been discussed. Under our statutes the only disposition rendered void by the statute is the disposition made to charitable purposes, and if that attempted disposition be subject to other effectual disposition of the same property, its invalidity cannot affect such other disposition; that is at least, unless it constitutes part of a single and indivisible scheme, which, in our judgment, is not the situation here.

[2] 2. It is further claimed by appellant that it is not shown that more than one-third of the estate of testatrix is left by the will to the Los Angeles Infirmary. This court has held that, under section 1313, Civil Code, the one-third which may lawfully be given to charitable purposes is one-third of what remains after payment of debts and charges of administration; the value being ascertained as of the date of distribution. Estate of Hinckley, 58 Cal. 457, 516. The statute thus prohibits the giving to the Los Angeles Infirmary of more than one-third in value of the distributable assets of deceased. We have seen that the present value of the distributable assets is slightly over $15,000. We do not see how it is possible for a court to determine at this time that the will gives to the Infirmary more than one-third of this. It is true that under the will it does take, in a certain contingency, all that remains after the execution of the trust, and in another contingency three-fourths of all that remains. But what portion of the estate may so remain no one can foretell, and there is no basis for any ascertainment of that fact. All of the income of the property is to be devoted for the whole life of the son to the use and support of himself and Eulalia Marquez, and, as already stated, the trustee was directed to use, in addition to the income, such portion of the principal as he might deem necessary for the proper care, maintenance, and support of the son. The son had an expectancy of life of over 30 years. In view of the comparative smallness of the estate, two-thirds thereof might well be consumed for this purpose. There is no way of even approximately determining. It is all in the realm of conjecture. It is in this respect a similar case to that presented in Rich v. Tiffany, 2 App. Div. 25, 37 N. Y. Supp. 330, in which it was held that a computation must necessarily be deferred until the death of the life tenant, because no possible basis could be furnished therefor at any previous time. And even as to what may remain, no one can foretell whether the Infirmary will ever take anything at all, in so far as the beneficial enjoyment of the property is concerned; for, if the son die leaving lawful issue him surviving, a condition certainly quite within the possibilities, it will receive nothing. It would seem that, in view of these conditions, the proportionate value of the interest given to the Infirmary cannot be ascertained, and the only way in which the rights of all parties can be fully protected is at this time to distribute all the property to the trustee, for the purposes of the trust, reserving the matter of further distribution until the termination of the trust, at least in so far as the charitable bequest is concerned. In view of what we have already said as to the paramount character of the trust in so far as any succession by the son is concerned, this result is in no degree unfair to him. It is the valid and paramount trust that excludes him as such successor during his life, and if he has in fact any interest in that capacity, as may hereinafter be determined, it is an interest that he can convey or dispose of by will, and that, if he dies intestate, will pass to his heirs. Any such interest that he might now properly obtain by decree of distribution would be no different in this respect, as we have already seen. The valid trust precludes all else.

The statute simply precludes gifts to charity in excess of one-third of the value of the entire distributable assets. Surely it must be that a showing of bequests excessive under this statute is essential to an adjudication of invalidity and consequent succession by another. In view of the character of the bequest here it is impossible to make any such showing at this time. Unless there be such excess there can be no intestacy. We cannot bring ourselves to the conclusion that the mere fact that attempted charitable bequests may in the future be ascertained to be excessive under the statute is sufficient to warrant a present conclusion that they are excessive, and therefore invalid in fact, and that consequently the residuary legatee or heir succeeds to a portion thereof.

3. Even if there were no right in the trustee to use the principal for the purposes of the trust, and if the right of the Infirmary to receive all of the property on the death of the son was fixed and certain, and not contingent upon the absence of lawful issue, its interest would be subject to the life estate or interest for the life of the son, vested in the trustee, for the sole benefit and enjoyment of Eulalia Marquez and the son. This life interest and the remainder constitute the whole of the property. In no contingency does the Infirmary take it all, but at best only the whole remainder after the determination of the life interest. Can it be fairly held that such a remainder exceeds in value one-third of the distributable assets? According to the decision of the Court of Appeals of New York in Hollis v. Drew Theological Seminary et al., 95 N. Y. 166, the only way in which this can be ascertained in such a case as we have mentioned is by ascertaining the present value of the life interest and the present value of the remainder, which together should be the precise value of the distributable assets, and if the total value of the remainder does not exceed one-third of the total value, there is no violation of the statute. In this case there was no such showing of excess over one-third. In fact, as we have seen, the showing, so far as made, was to the contrary. But in view of the possibility of consumption of portions of the principal for the purposes of the trust, we have here no such case as the one suggested, and it is unnecessary to determine whether the rule declared in Hollis v. Drew, etc., supra, is the correct rule, under our statute, for determining the question of excess where the right of the legatee to succeed to certain specified property upon the determination of a prior life estate or interest therein is fixed and certain.

The decree appealed from is reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge, pro tem.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.

HENSHAW, J. I concur. The Chief Justice clearly points out that the bequest to charity forms no part of the trust scheme and can take effect only on the termination of the trust. So also he shows the impossibility of any court declaring at this day the value of the property which on the happening of certain future contingencies the testatrix designed should go to charity. In addition to this is the perfectly plain proposition that our statute against charitable devises and bequests is and can be violated under these circumstances only when the devise or bequest does take effect and at that time is shown to be illegal for excess. When the contemplated contingency has arisen, then, and then only, may the living parties in interest contest the bequest for them, and then only can it be determined whether or not the law has been violated.

(175 Cal. 322)

CURTIS et al. v. UPTON et al.

UPTON v. EASKOOT et al.

(S. F. 7095, 7096.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1917.)

1. EJECTMENT ⇐111(9)—FINDINGS—CONFINING TO PLEADINGS.

In an action of ejectment, where the land described in the complaint, title to which was put in issue by the answer, was not bounded by the Dodge survey, it was error for the court to make findings upon the theory that the land within such survey was the only land in controversy, as it was bound by the issues as framed by the pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 342, 343.]

2. EJECTMENT ⇐111(9)—FINDINGS—OUSTER—EVIDENCE.

In an action of ejectment, where defendants denied title of plaintiffs to all or any part of the land described in the complaint, a finding that there was no ouster held not sustained by the evidence, where it did not appear that the land in possession of defendants was no part of land described in the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 342, 343.]

3. JUDGMENT ⇐660—CONCLUSIVENESS—SUBSEQUENT ACTIONS.

A former judgment, although erroneous, is conclusive between the parties or their successors in interest in all subsequent actions involving the same questions and properly within the scope of the issues which might have been raised and determined.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1171.]

4. BOUNDARIES ⇐37(3) — EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where the position of the southerly corner of the ranch could only be ascertained by resort to other calls, a survey retracing the lines and distances given in the original survey was legal and sufficient evidence of the true site of the corner, in the absence of countervailing evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 186–191.]

5. BOUNDARIES ⇐7—GOVERNMENT SURVEY—ESTABLISHMENT—EVIDENCE.

Where the post set to mark the southerly corner of the survey had been lost, it was the duty of the court to ascertain, if possible, the true corner, or, if that was impossible, the approximate position, where there was evidence thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 58–65.]

6. BOUNDARIES ⇐3(3) — SURVEYS—NATURAL OBJECTS.

In determining the position of a tract of land from a description or survey, natural objects referred to as bounds prevail over the measurement of lines and angles, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2077, providing that, where there are certain definite and ascertained particulars in the description, the addition of others which are indefinite or unknown does not frustrate the conveyance, which is to be construed by the first-mentioned particulars.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Boundaries, Cent. Dig. §§ 6–19.]

7. NAVIGABLE WATERS ⇐36(3)—LANDS UNDER WATER—BOUNDARIES.

Where a meander line is run for the purpose of calculating the area of land granted, the shore line constitutes the real boundary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Navigable Waters, Cent. Dig. § 186.]

8. EJECTMENT ⇐120(1)—WRIT OF RESTITUTION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where successors of defendant in whom title was quieted against plaintiffs showed that plaintiffs were in possession of at least a part of the land, their motion for a writ of restitution should have been granted in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 380, authorizing such writ against defeated parties in possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 380, 384–387.]

In Bank. Appeals from Superior Court, Marin County; Edgar T. Zook, Judge.

Actions by J. F. D. Curtis and another against A. H. Upton and another, and by A. H. Upton against A. D. Easkoot and others. From an adverse judgment in the first suit and from a motion denying a new trial, and from an order denying their motion as successors of defendants in the second suit for a writ of restitution upon the judgment entered therein, plaintiffs in the first suit and as successors to defendant Easkoot appeal. Judgment and orders appealed from reversed.

Robert Harrison, of San Francisco, Thomas P. Boyd, of San Rafael, and Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck and Edward Lynch, all of San Francisco, for appellants. George H. Harlan, of San Rafael, and R. H. Countryman, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The above-entitled actions involve the same controversy. Case No. 7095 is an action in ejectment, and the plaintiffs J. F. D. Curtis and H. L. Curtis appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. In case No. 7096, the same persons appeal from an order denying their application, as successors of A. D. Easkoot, for the issuance of a writ of restitution upon a judgment entered in said action in favor of said Easkoot against the plaintiff and intervener. We will consider the cases in the order of their number on our calendar.

1. No. 7095. Curtis v. Upton.

The complaint in this case alleges that plaintiffs, "by themselves and by their predecessors in interest," were, on November 9, 1905, the owners, seised in fee and possessed of the parcel of land described as follows:

"Beginning at the post placed by the United States surveyor at the southerly corner of that portion of the Baulinas rancho, which lies on the east side of Baulinas (also spelled Bolinas) Bay, said post being south, 28½° east, fifteen and $^{80}/_{100}$ (15.80) chains from the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of section No. 33, in township No. 1 north, range No. 7 west, M. D. M., said post also being south 51½° west, six chains 30 links, and thence south 38½° east fourteen (14) chains from the house of Captain Easkoot as it stood in the month of October, 1858, thence following the line of said rancho, as described in the patent therefor executed by the United States of America to Gregorio Briones, and recorded in the office of the recorder of said county of Marin, in Liber A of Patents, at page 146, and along the line of ordinary high-water mark on the northeasterly shore of said Baulinas Bay as it existed in A. D. 1858, north 38½° west twenty (20) chains, thence crossing the tide lands in said Baulinas Bay and the sand bar and beach adjoining same on the southwest, south 51½° west fourteen (14) chains more or less to the line of low water of the Pacific Ocean on said beach, thence along the line of said low water of the Pacific Ocean south 60¼° east twenty-three (23) chains, and thence north 55¼° east five (5) chains more or less to the point of beginning. Being portions of Marin county tideland surveys Nos. 10 and 34."

It further alleges that the defendants without right entered upon said land, ejected the plaintiffs therefrom, and have ever since wrongfully withheld possession thereof. It is further alleged that on November 9, 1905, in a certain action in the superior court of Marin county, being the action involved in the above-entitled case No. 7096, a judgment was duly given and made that said A. D. Easkoot was the owner in fee and possessed of the two tracts of land referred to in the above description as "tideland surveys Nos. 10 and 34," and that neither the said A. H. Upton nor said Nathan H. Stinson had any right, title, or interest in or to said parcels or either of them; that afterwards the plaintiffs succeeded to the title of said Easkoot to said lands; and that said Nathan H. Stinson thereafter died and Amos H. Stinson has been appointed executor of his estate.

The complaint sets forth the descriptions of said tideland surveys Nos. 10 and 34 as given in the judgment in Upton v. Easkoot. They are as follows:

"Survey No. 10 state tidelands, Marin county, township No. 1 north, range No. 7 west, M. D. M., sections Nos. 28, 29 and 33, fractional portions of said sections more particularly described in the field notes of said surveys as follows: Beginning at the post placed by the United States surveyor at the southerly corner of that portion of the Baulinas rancho which lies on the east side of Baulinas Bay, said point being S. 28½° E. 15.80 chains from the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 33, township No. 1 north, range No. 7 west, M. D. M., thence following the line of said rancho N. 38½° W. 72.20 chains, thence crossing the tidelands S. 42½° W. 20. chains to sand bank, thence S. 54° E. 71.70 chains to the place of beginning. Containing 70.17 acres."

"Survey No. 34 state tidelands, Marin county, township No. 1 north, range No. 7 west, M. D. M., section No. 33, fractional portions of said section being more particularly described in the field notes of said survey as follows: Beginning S. 28½° east 15.50 chains from the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of section 33, township No. 1 north, range 7 west, M. D. M., thence north 60¼° W. 16.36 chains, thence crossing the beach of the Pacific Ocean to low water 5. chains, thence along the Pacific Ocean at low water S. 60¼° east 16.36 chains, south 47½° east 35. chains, thence crossing the beach to high water mark 5. chains, thence north 47½° west 35. chains to the place of beginning. Containing 16.45 acres."

Issue was joined upon the allegations that the plaintiffs were the owners of the land first described in the complaint, that the same or any part thereof was a portion of said tideland surveys or either of them, that the defendants or either of them had ousted the plaintiffs without right from said land or any part thereof, and that the plaintiffs are or ever have been the owners in fee or otherwise of any part of said surveys. With respect to the judgment pleaded in the complaint, the answer alleges that it is void because of the uncertainty of the description therein given of the land adjudged to belong to Easkoot.

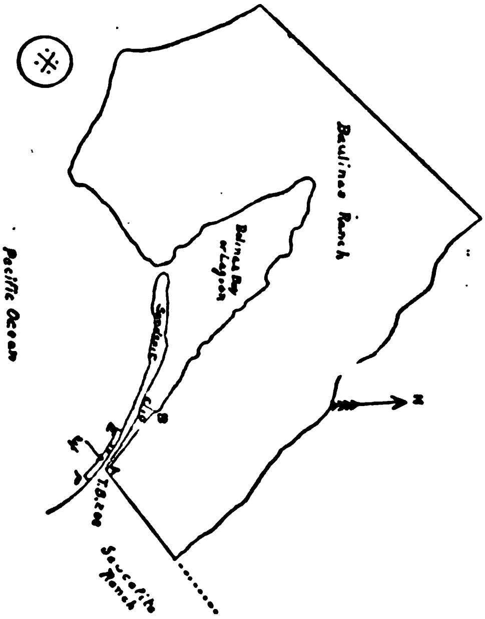
The court found that the allegations of the complaint to the effect that the plaintiffs or their predecessor in interest, Easkoot, are or were the owners of the land sought to be recovered, and that the defendants had wrongfully ousted plaintiffs therefrom, and each of said allegations, were untrue. With respect to the judgment, it found that it was true that it was therein adjudged that Easkoot was the owner in fee of the lands described (being tideland surveys 10 and 34, aforesaid), but that it was not true that said judgment declared anything as to the position of said land. There is also a finding to the effect that a surveyor named Dodge, some two months before the action was begun, had set an iron bolt in the ground as the beginning point of the parcel of land sought to be recovered, and that the tract of land attempted to be described in the complaint was the tract beginning at said iron bolt and running thence according to the courses given in the description in the complaint, that said iron bolt was not set at the southerly corner of the Bolinas ranch, that the tract of land so marked out from said bolt did not include any portion of tideland surveys Nos. 10 and 34, and that the beginning point of the lands described in tideland survey No. 10, aforesaid, is not at the bolt set by Dodge as such beginning point.

As conclusions of law upon the findings the court stated that the plaintiffs were not the owners of, nor entitled to the possession of, nor in possession of, the tract of land attempted to be described in the complaint, and that the defendants were entitled to a judgment that the plaintiffs take nothing by their said action.

Judgment was thereupon given that the plaintiffs take nothing by their action herein, and that they were not the owners of, nor seised in fee of, nor possessed of, nor entitled to the possession of, the tract of land described in their complaint, "which said tract of land," it proceeds to declare, "is located in Bolinas township in the county of Marin, state of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows:

"Beginning at an iron bolt, or pipe, described in the findings in this case as the 'second iron bolt,' which was driven in the ground on the 25th day of August, 1910, by George M. Dodge, a civil engineer and surveyor acting for and on behalf of the plaintiffs in the above-entitled action, which said iron bolt, or pipe, is located as follows: Commencing at an iron bolt which was, on said 25th day of August, 1910, set by the said George M. Dodge at a point upon the site of the house of Captain Easkoot as it stood in the month of October, 1858, as the site of said house was established by the testimony of Benjamin G. Morse, Peter Crane and Stephen A. Richardson, which testimony was taken at the trial of the above-entitled cause, said iron bolt, marking the site of Captain Easkoot's house, being located upon the hill at the north and northeast of the 'arenal' or 'sandpit' dividing Baulinas Inner Bay from the Pacific Ocean and running thence from said iron bolt marking the site of Captain Easkoot's house, south 51½° west 6.30 chains and thence south 38½° east 14 chains to said second iron bolt or pipe and the point of beginning of the lands herein described; running thence from said second iron bolt, or pipe, north 38½° west 20 chains to a point; thence south 51½° west 14 chains to a point and thence south 60¼° east 23 chains to a point and thence north 55¼° east 5 chains more or less to said second iron bolt or pipe above referred to, the point of beginning."

The following map shows approximately the relative positions of the Bolinas ranch, the Bolinas Bay or Lagoon, and the sandspit, as they appear on the map accompanying the patent from the United States to Briones for said ranch. It also shows the positions of the two tideland surveys:



The words "or lagoon" are not in the patent or survey or on the map.

The westerly and easterly boundaries of survey No. 10, according to the legal effect of the description, coincided with the lines of ordinary high tide, as they existed in 1863 when the survey was made. Survey No. 34 purports to cover a strip of tideland 5 chains wide, beginning on the outer shore of the sandspit some 16.36 chains from its junction with the main shore and extending along the sandspit to its said junction and thence about 35 chains southerly along the main shore. The land sought to be recovered does not include all of either of these surveys. It embraces a tract in the form of a trapezium, one side of which extends 20 chains northwesterly from the southerly apex of survey No. 10, and the opposite side whereof extends 23 chains along the line of ordinary low tide on the outer shore of the sandspit, whereas survey No. 10 extends to a distance of 72.20 chains along the line of the Bolinas ranch, and survey No. 34 runs along said outer shore a total distance of 51.36 chains. The center of the sandspit lies above high-water mark, and the land sought to be recovered includes a part of this portion of the sandspit within its boundaries.

The patent of the Baulinas ranch, now usually spelled Bolinas, was introduced in evidence, including the map and field notes of the survey thereof, to which the patent refers. These documents show that the southerly corner of the part of the Bolinas ranch lying on the east side of Bolinas Bay was established on the shore of Bolinas Bay "opposite a long sand bar or 'arenal' whose general course is N. 60° W. slightly curving to the left," and that the surveyor there set a post marked "T. B. 208." This corner is the point of beginning of tideland survey No. 10. It therefore fixes the position of that survey. The field notes state that survey No. 10 includes "that tract of tideland at the southeastern extremity of Bolinas Bay lying between the Baulinas rancho and the sand bank which divides Bolinas Bay from the ocean." The title to tideland vests in the state. State ownership is also shown of survey No. 34, since its beginning point, according to the calls, is situated N. 28½° W. 30 links from the corner of the ranch, and its lines cross the beach and cover the land between the high and low tide lines of the beach fronting on the Pacific Ocean. The state patents were introduced in evidence showing that in 1871 the state granted to A. D. Easkoot the lands included in these two tideland surveys. Easkoot's ownership of the two tracts on November 9, 1905, is also established by the judgment in Upton v. Easkoot, as set forth in the complaint, as aforesaid. The fact that this judgment was given, and its terms as well, are admitted by the pleadings. It is also admitted that Easkoot's title subsequently passed to the plaintiffs, at least as early as the decree of distribution of Easkoot's estate. Therefore it follows that at the time this action was begun the title to these two tideland surveys was vested in the plaintiffs.

The description of the land sought to be recovered, as set forth in the complaint, shows that parts of it are included in the two surveys, the title whereof was, as above shown, vested in plaintiffs. With respect to the parts so included, the findings and judgment that plaintiffs are not the owners thereof are, on the face of the pleadings and by the terms of the patents introduced in evidence, clearly erroneous.

The state patents purport to convey state tidelands only, and they could convey none of the upland of the sandspit, for, as it was neither school land nor swamp land, the state had no title to that upland. The terms of the descriptions of the surveys imply that no upland was intended to be included therein and they should be construed to embrace only tidelands, to which the state held title. The plaintiffs therefore failed to establish a record title to this upland along the center of the sandspit.

[1, 2] This action was begun on October 28, 1910. The survey made by Dodge on August 25, 1910, referred to in the judgment, purporting to establish and mark on the ground the precise position of the southerly corner of the Bolinas ranch, was made for the plaintiffs, apparently in preparation for beginning this action. Plaintiffs' attorneys in drawing the complaint may have supposed that the description set forth therein bounded the tract included in the Dodge survey. But the complaint makes no reference to that survey or to the iron bolt set by Dodge to mark the corner. The description in the complaint fixes the southerly corner of the portion of the Bolinas ranch lying on the east side of Bolinas Bay as the beginning point and ending point of the boundaries of the tract of which recovery is asked. The answer denies that the defendants have ousted plaintiffs of the possession of the parcel described or any part thereof. This put in issue the true position on the ground of the parcel described, it being necessary to fix the position in order to determine whether or not the possession of Upton or Stinson extended over any part of it. The survey of Dodge was evidence to prove that position. But it was not conclusive; not even upon the plaintiffs. It could not change the allegations of the complaint, nor change the issue raised thereby from an inquiry as to the true position on the ground of the southerly corner of that portion of the Bolinas ranch, to an inquiry confined to the question whether or not the iron bolt was set upon the right spot. It was the duty of the court to consider all the evidence on the subject and therefrom to find the fact of the true position of the corner and determine whether or not the defendants had taken possession of any part of the tract claimed by the plaintiffs, when measured from such true position. The findings first declare that the description set forth in the complaint does not include the tract surveyed by Dodge and actually claimed by the plaintiffs, and thereupon, proceeding upon the theory that the land included in the Dodge survey was the only land in controversy, declare that the allegation that the defendants ousted the plaintiffs of a part thereof is untrue. The court was not authorized to do this. It was bound by the issues as framed by the pleadings. The finding that the defendants had not ousted the plaintiffs cannot be considered as sustained by the evidence, unless it appears therefrom that the land in possession of the defendants did not include any part of the land described in the complaint measured from the true location of the ranch corner. The evidence shows that they had taken possession of a part of the tract described in the complaint, if it is located, as it must be, by reference to that corner. The finding that there was no ouster is therefore contrary to the evidence, and the part of the judgment relating to the Dodge survey was unwarranted by the pleadings.

The judgment roll in Upton v. Easkoot was introduced in evidence. The complaint of Upton alleged that he was the owner of the land included in the sandspit, describing it by metes and bounds. Stinson's complaint in intervention alleged that Stinson was the owner of the sandspit. Each asked to have his title thereto quieted against all the other parties to the action. Easkoot answered alleging that he owned tideland surveys Nos. 10 and 34, above described; that he had been, continuously for more than 30 years next before the beginning of the action, in the exclusive and actual and uninterrupted possession thereof under claim of title thereto by virtue of said state patents to him, and asking judgment quieting his title thereto against the claims of Upton and Stinson. The findings were that neither Upton nor Stinson was the owner, or entitled to the possession, of the sandspit, or any part thereof, and were in favor of Easkoot on all the allegations of his answer as aforesaid. It was also found that the patent of the United States to Briones, under which both Upton and Stinson claimed their alleged titles, did not include, or convey to Briones, any portion of the sandspit, that it extended only to the line of ordinary high tide of the bay, as it existed in October, 1858, and that Stinson was not the owner of, nor entitled to the possession of, any of the land described in his complaint in intervention which is situated south or southwesterly of the northeasterly shore of Bolinas Bay, sometimes called Bolinas Lagoon, at the line of ordinary high tide thereon as the same existed in the month of October, 1858.

The judgment declared that Upton take nothing by his action, that Stinson should take nothing by his complaint in intervention, that Easkoot was the owner of said tracts of land designated as tideland surveys Nos. 10 and 34, particularly describing them, and of the other tidelands claimed in his answer, that neither Upton nor Stinson had any right, title, or interest in the same, or any part thereof, and that they each be enjoined from asserting any claim thereto

[3] This judgment is conclusive in favor of Easkoot and in favor of plaintiffs herein as his successors in interest and privies in estate, and against both Upton and Stinson upon all the points decided thereby.

"A former judgment between the parties to an action is conclusive in all subsequent actions involving the same question, not only as to the matters actually decided in the former controversy, but as to all matters belonging to the subject of the controversy and properly within the scope of the issues which also might have been raised and determined." Southern P. Co. v. Edmunds, 168 Cal. 418, 143 Pac. 598; Koehler v. Holt Mfg. Co., 146 Cal. 337, 80 Pac. 73.

The former judgment operates in favor of or against privies in estate of the original parties, and it "is none the less a bar for the reason that it is erroneous." Lamb v. Wahlenmaier, 144 Cal. 95, 77 Pac. 766, 103 Am. St. Rep. 66.

It follows therefore that the judgment in Upton v. Easkoot determines, not only that the plaintiffs in case No. 7095 are the owners of all of the land described in the complaint that is embraced within the two tideland surveys, but also that the northeasterly line of survey No. 10 is the line of ordinary high tide of Bolinas Bay, or Lagoon, as it existed in October, 1858, regardless of its present position. This will be important upon a new trial of the action, if, as the evidence indicates, the winds or waves have made accretions to the shore which have raised the surface of all or a part of tideland survey No. 10 above the line of ordinary high tide of the bay. In that event, the tideline of 1858 will determine the boundary between the lands of plaintiffs and Stinson.

[4-6] It appears from the evidence that the post set in 1858 to mark the southerly corner of the Bolinas ranch and all monuments of the tideland surveys and all traces thereof have long since disappeared. The position of the southerly corner of the ranch can only be ascertained by resort to other calls of the patent and survey. Dodge attempted to locate it by retracing the line from the collateral call to Easkoot's house, the position of which he determined from statements of persons once familiar with it. The court below found that Dodge did not locate the true corner. Proceeding apparently upon the theory that the plaintiffs were bound to prove the true position of said corner and that, if they failed to do so, their patents and the judgment in Upton v. Easkoot were all ineffectual to establish any right to the land claimed, the court gave judgment against them. This theory might possibly be correct, upon the question of an ouster, if the plaintiffs had produced no evidence of the position of the corner and none had been given on behalf of the defendants. But the testimony of Dodge of his survey retracing the line, according to the courses and distances given in the original survey, back from the site of the Easkoot house to its beginning point, was legal evidence of the true site of the corner. In the absence of countervailing evidence, it would have been sufficient proof thereof. Weaver v. Howatt, 171 Cal. 308, 152 Pac. 925. It was rejected as proof because the resurvey by Richardson, starting from a known natural monument of the original survey on the northeasterly side of the ranch and verified by other monuments mentioned in the calls of the survey found by him between that point and the southerly corner, together with evidence of other inconsistent facts, satisfied the court that the Dodge location was wrong. But it was the duty of the court to ascertain, if possible, the true position of the corner, accurately, if it could be done, or approximately within reasonable limits if the exact position could not be ascertained with absolute certainty. Weaver v. Howatt, supra, 171 Cal. 307, 152 Pac. 925; Weaver v. Howatt, 161 Cal. 86, 118 Pac. 519. The Richardson survey was, of itself, evidence of the actual position of the true corner; obviously, it was more convincing to the court below than that of Dodge. It was the duty of the court to decide the question of fact in accordance with its own views of the preponderance of the evidence. The difference in the position of the corner in the two surveys was about 300 feet. If the Richardson location had been taken as the true one and the lines of the tideland surveys run accordingly, it would have shown that survey No. 10 included some tidelands of the bay, and that if the tideline as it existed in 1858 were considered as the boundary of that survey it would probably have included a part of the land described in the complaint. It would certainly have shown that survey No. 34 was partly within the boundaries of the land sued for. It is a strip 5 chains wide and 51.36 chains long lying between the lines of the ordinary high and low tides on the beach of the southwesterly side of the sandspit fronting directly on the Pacific Ocean, and the place called for as its point of beginning is on its high-tide line 35 chains from one end, 16.36 chains from the other, and, according to its calls in connection with those of survey No. 10, this beginning point is situated north 28½° west 30 links from the southerly corner of the Bolinas ranch aforesaid. In determining the position of a tract of land from a description or survey, natural objects referred to as bounds prevail over the measurement of lines and angles. Code Civ. Proc. § 2077. The distance, 30 links, must yield to the calls for the tide lines. Hence, wherever the point of beginning of survey 34 may be, its southwesterly line is the low-tide line of the Pacific Ocean, and it extends landward to ordinary high-tide line. The lines of the tract sought to be recovered, as described in the complaint, include a part of this survey.

[7] The terminus of the southeasterly line of the Bolinas ranch, it being the common boundary of that and the Saucelito ranch, is at the line of ordinary high tide of the Pacific Ocean, or of Bolinas Bay, as the case may be. The determining factor as to its location is the position of the common boundary. If it should be determined that its true terminus is on the shore of the ocean southerly of the sandspit, that point must be the southerly corner of the Bolinas ranch, regardless of the other calls of the survey and patent to Briones. But, it is necessary to add, the judgment in Upton v. Easkoot definitely determines that, in that event, the call of the patent in the course next following in the survey, "thence along the shore of Baulinas Bay at ordinary high-water mark north 38½° west," must be ignored for the distance between the true corner and the nearest point in the southeasterly extremity of the bay as it existed in 1858. It is to be noted further that the course above given, "north 38½° west," is not the exact course of the shore line, but is the course of a meander line run to approximately locate the shore line and to afford the means for calculating the area of the land granted. Where a meander line is run for this purpose, the shore line constitutes the real boundary. Foss v. Johnstone, 158 Cal. 119, 110 Pac. 294; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 384, 11 Sup. Ct. 808, 838, 35 L. Ed. 428.

The question of the effect of gradual accretions may become important with regard to the lines of surveys Nos. 10 and 34 bordering upon the sandspit. Recently, in Strand Imp. Co. v. Long Beach, 174 Cal. ——, 161 Pac. 975, the court decided that the common law that gradual accretions from natural causes to land abutting upon water belong to the owner of the upland applied to lands fronting upon tidal waters and to the shores of the ocean. It may be that accretions to the inner side of the upland of the sand bar have covered a large part of survey No. 10 and have raised it above the high-tide line. The effect of the judgment in Upton v. Easkoot is that neither Upton nor Stinson can claim any title to the sandspit, as against plaintiffs here. Having no right to the sandspit, they could not claim accretions thereto.

We now proceed to the consideration of case No. 7096.

2. No. 7096. Upton v. Easkoot.

This is the case in which, as stated in the previous discussion, judgment was given in favor of Easkoot against the plaintiff, Upton, and the intervener, Stinson.

Easkoot, in his so-called answer therein, alleged his ownership in fee, and his possession, of four parcels of land, particularly described, among them being the tracts hereinbefore referred to as tideland survey No. 10 and tideland survey No. 34, and prayed judgment that Upton and Stinson be adjudged to have no right, title, or interest therein, and that they each be enjoined from asserting any claim thereto, and for general relief. The judgment was that Easkoot was the owner in fee of the parcels described, that neither Upton nor Stinson had any right, title, or interest therein, and that they each be forever enjoined from making or asserting any claim to the same, or any part thereof, as against Easkoot.

In October, 1910, after the death of Easkoot and after his estate in the lands was distributed to J. F. D. Curtis and H. L. Curtis, they filed a notice of motion for the issuance of a writ of restitution upon said judgment against said Upton and the executor of Stinson, who had died in the meantime. The ground of the motion was that after the entry of said judgment said parties had, contrary to its terms, entered into possession of portions of the land therein adjudged to Easkoot and were holding possession thereof and claiming title thereto. The portion which they were so claiming is the tract sought to be recovered in Curtis v. Upton, No. 7095. The description thereof is set forth at the beginning of part No. 1 of this opinion. The court below denied the motion and refused to order the writ. From this order the said moving parties appeal.

Before the hearing of the motion, the moving parties, Curtis and Curtis, began the action, the subject of the first part of this opinion, for the recovery of said parcel in dispute. The motion and the action were heard and tried together upon the same evidence. The court denied the motion upon the same grounds upon which it refused to give judgment for the plaintiffs in the aforesaid action, that is to say, because it was, as it believed, unable to identify upon the ground the exact position of the southerly corner of the Baulinas ranch. What we have said in the discussion of that case is applicable here, and we need not repeat it in full. There was evidence from which the position of the corner, and therefrom the position of the land in dispute, could have been ascertained with reasonable certainty, and it was the duty of the court to determine the same and make its order accordingly.

[8] Upon the evidence before it, the result would have been a determination that the moving parties were entitled by the judgment to the possession of a part, at least, of the land claimed by them. If Upton or Stinson were in possession of any of those portions, the writ should have been issued. The answer of Easkoot, though denominated by him an answer, contained all the allegations necessary to a cause of action to quiet title or determine conflicting claims to real property, and it prayed for affirmative relief of that character. The judgment in his favor was, in effect, a judgment declaring and quieting his title. It was as effectual for that purpose as if it had been made in a formal action of that nature. In such a case, a writ of possession may be issued at the instance of the prevailing party to place him in possession, if he is out of possession, or to restore him thereto if the losing party re-enters. Code Civ. Proc. § 380; Landregan v. Peppin, 94 Cal. 465, 29 Pac. 771.

In case No. 7095, the judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

In case No. 7096, the order denying the motion for a writ of restitution is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.; MELVIN, J; HENSHAW, J.

(175 Cal. 417)

In re DREYFUS' ESTATE.

Appeal of HERBOLD et al.

(L. A. 4975.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1917. Rehearing Denied July 5, 1917.)

WILLS 🔑132—OLOGRAPHIC WILL—"WRITTEN."

Under Civ. Code, § 1277, requiring an olographic will to be "entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator himself," a will written and dated by testator on a typewriter and signed by him with pen and ink is not entitled to probate as an olographic will; the word "written," as used in the statute in the year 1872 when enacted, not including the process of making letters on paper with a typewriter, which is essentially a process of printing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 341.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Write—Writing.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Gustav Dreyfus, deceased. Petition by Philip Herbold to probate a document as decedent's last will. From order refusing to admit the document to probate as a will, petitioner and another appeal. Affirmed.

Neighbours, Hoag & Burke, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

SHAW, J. Philip Herbold filed a petition for the admission to probate of a document, as the last will of the decedent, Gustav Dreyfus. The petition alleges that this paper was not attested by any witness, that it was wholly in typewriting, except the signature of the decedent thereto, that said signature was written by the decedent with pen and ink, and that the remainder of the document, including the proper date, was written by the decedent himself by the manipulation of a typewriting machine. The evidence was to the same effect. Thereupon the court below made its order refusing to admit the document to probate as a will. From this order the petitioner and said Maurice Blumlein, the latter being the sole beneficiary under the purported will, have appealed.

Our Code requires that an olographic will shall be "entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator himself." Civ. Code, § 1277.

To ascertain the meaning of this requirement, we must look to the reasons which led to its enactment, the conditions then existing, and the object sought to be attained thereby. Originally in England, by the ecclesiastical law and the common law, wills could be made by oral declaration. Gould v. Safford, 39 Vt. 505; Ex parte Thompson, 4 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 154; Harrington v. Stees, 82 Ill. 50, 25 Am. Rep. 294; 30 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 560. This was found to be so fruitful of fraud and perjury that the statute of frauds was enacted providing that nuncupative wills could be made only by persons in their last sickness, to be proved by three witnesses, or by soldiers in service or mariners at sea, and that in all other cases a will must be a signed writing, attested, and subscribed by at least three credible witnesses. Statutes prescribing the manner of executing wills of all kinds and the degree of proof necessary to establish them have for their prime object the prevention of frauds and perjuries, or as the supreme court of Louisiana puts it, "to prevent imposition and abuse." Knight v. Smith, 3 Mart. O. S. (La.) 162. Our Code provision allowing olographic wills was first enacted in 1872. The commissioners who drafted the Civil Code, in their note, recommend it on the ground that it "may not, and indeed, it is confidently claimed in those countries where olographic wills are recognized, does not give rise to as many attempts at fraudulent will-making and disposition of property as where it does not exist."

From time immemorial, letters and words have been written with the hand by means of pen and ink or pencil of some description, and it has been a well-known fact that each individual who writes in this manner acquires a style of forming, placing, and spacing the letters and words which is peculiar to himself and which in most cases renders his writing easily distinguishable from that of others by those familiar with it or by experts in chirography who make a study of the subject and who are afforded an opportunity of comparing a disputed specimen with those admitted to be genuine. The provision that a will should be valid if entirely "written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator," is the ancient rule on the subject. There can be no doubt that it owes its origin to the fact that a successful counterfeit of another's handwriting is exceedingly difficult, and that therefore the requirement that it should be in the testator's handwriting would afford protection against a forgery of this character. In 1872 the only mode of writing in use was by pen and ink or pencil. There were then in existence some crude machines for imprinting letters on paper by means of small levers similar to those now used in typewriters; but the practical modern typewriter, now in almost universal use, was unknown. It was not perfected until 1875 and did not come into general use until several years thereafter. The language of section 1277, by the common usage of the language in 1872, or even at the present time, would mean that the entire will must be in the "handwriting" of the testator. This would not include any sort of printing by the use of type, whether on a printing press or placed at the end of a rod manipulated by keys.

While it is true that a will made wholly by the testator and by means of a typewriter may be said to have been made "by the hand of the testator himself," it would not be true, accurately speaking, that such a will had been "written" by him. The process of making letters on paper with a typewriter is essentially a process of printing. The type fixed on a bar is stained with ink and then pressed against the paper, leaving its imprint precisely as in a printing press. The word "written," as used in section 1277, in the year 1872, had no such signification. There are cases where a word in a statute aptly describing a thing then well known has been extended so as to include some other thing afterwards invented or used to accomplish the same or a similar purpose and within the general statutory intent and object. For example, "carriage," meaning a wheeled vehicle, has been held to include the subsequently invented bicycle. But the reasons for these extensions of meaning have no application here. They were made to carry out the spirit and object of the statutory provision. The meaning here contended for would greatly enlarge the opporunities for successful forgeries by taking away the means of detection which the Legislature had in mind and would defeat the purpose of the statute by destroying the safeguards which its requirements were designed to secure.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

(175 Cal. 363)

EWALD v. KIERULFF et al. (S. F. 7227.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1917.)

1. TRUSTS ⟹371(6½)—PLEADING—DEMURRER—LACHES.

The defense of laches in neglecting to enforce an express trust for a long time may be raised by demurrer in action based on such a trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 596.]

2. TRUSTS ⟹365(2)—ENFORCEMENT—LACHES.

Where plaintiff had known for 43 years that a trustee, taking title from him to an undivided interest in lots for partition, had repudiated the trust by divesting himself of title to the lots, and had been aware for at least 33 years that the trustee or his representatives had been in a position to carry out the terms of the trust, he was barred by laches from enforcing the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 571.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Edward Ewald against T. C. Kierulff and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas V. Cator, of San Francisco, for appellant. Mastick & Partridge, T. C. Kierulff, and H. F. Chadbourne, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This action was brought against the executors of the will of John Nightingale, deceased. The heirs of said Nightingale were also made parties defendant. The original complaint was filed March 12, 1913. In due course an amended complaint was filed. Defendants demurred to this pleading, and their demurrer was sustained, and plaintiff refusing to amend within the time allowed by the court, judgment was accordingly entered in favor of defendants. The appeal is from this judgment.

By the amended complaint it is alleged that John Nightingale died about March 20, 1912, and the usual formal matters relating to the probate of the will and the proceedings thereunder are set forth. It is alleged that prior to 1870 plaintiff was the owner of certain lands in the city and county of San Francisco, among which were the parcels designated as "blocks Nos. 991 and 992 of outside lands"; that for certain reasons title to plaintiff's property was held for him by a trustee who was one of his kinsmen; that Nightingale and others owned similar outside lands separately and as tenants in common; and that prior to the year 1870, such owners, including plaintiff and Mr. Nightingale, agreed to a partition of their properties by lot so that segregated title in fee might be placed by proper conveyances in the names of the respective owners according to their interests. There are further allegations to the effect that John Nightingale, knowing that plaintiff was entitled to receive a conveyance on demand, in fee, of an undivided half interest in blocks Nos. 991 and 992, requested plaintiff to convey said interest to said Nightingale; that on December 17, 1870, plaintiff made, executed, and delivered his deed of conveyance as requested; and that said conveyance was made pursuant to an agreement which was later reduced to writing as follows:

> "San Francisco, Dec. 19, 1872.
>
> "Mr. Edward Ewald: The deed received by me from you dated 17 December, 1870, to the one undivided half of blocks Nos. 991 and 992 of outside lands is given in trust to hold for me and for the object of partition, and when such partition is had you will be entitled to receive from me in an equal amount of land segregated and of equal value.
>
> "John Nightingale."

The amended complaint contains further averments that plaintiff, fully relying upon the agreement, permitted the title in said blocks to become permanently vested in other persons; and that Nightingale, up to the time of his death, owned ample outside lands with which to satisfy plaintiff's claims under the trust, the partition of outside lands having been completed before the year A. D. 1880, and Nightingale having received thereby segregated title to large quantities of such outside lands similar to the two blocks in which he had acquired plaintiff's interest. The prayer is that the executor and heirs of John Nightingale be required to make conveyance of a suitable part of such lands belonging to the estate in execution of the trust.

[1, 2] The only question argued in the briefs and the only one necessary for consideration by this court is whether or not the superior court was justified in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint on the ground of laches. Plaintiff contends that the basis of his action is an express trust in writing; and that while laches may operate as evidence to defeat the plaintiff's demand upon an issue of fact, lapse of time alone will not upon demurrer avail in an action based upon an express trust admitted by the demurrer to exist. In support of this doctrine counsel for plaintiff cites certain authorities from the state of New York; but whatever the rule may be in any other jurisdiction it is well settled in California that the defense of laches may be raised by demurrer. In the case before us it appears by the affirmative averments of the complaint that the trustee was in a position to carry out the terms of his trust agreement at least as early as the year 1880, and that a decade earlier he had conveyed away all interest in the two blocks of outside lands numbered 991 and 992. There is no statement that plaintiff was ignorant of either of these facts, and under an elementary rule of pleading we must assume that he had knowledge of them. Plaintiff having known for 43 years that Mr. Nightingale had divested himself of all title to the two lots and by so doing had violated and repudiated the trust, and having been aware for at least 33 years that the said Nightingale or his representatives had been in a position to carry out the terms of the trust, was bound to plead, if he could, on seeking relief in a court of equity, circumstances showing good faith and reasonable diligence on his part. The burden was upon plaintiff to explain, if he could, his long-continued acquiescence in acts hostile to his claim. This he did not do, and it was therefore perfectly proper to sustain the demurrer on the ground of laches, a defense which, under an unbroken line of authority in California, may be raised by demurrer. Bell v. Hudson, 73 Cal. 285, 14 Pac. 791, 2 Am. St. Rep. 791; Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 147 Cal. 245, 81 Pac. 516; Elliott v. Clark, 5 Cal. App. 8, 89 Pac. 455; Elliott v. Bunce, 10 Cal. App. 741, 103 Pac. 897; Emerson v. Kennedy Mining & Milling Co., 169 Cal. 718, 147 Pac. 939.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 270)

WINBIGLER v. SHERMAN. (L. A. 4449.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 4, 1917. Rehearing Denied July 2, 1917.)

1. Mortgages 🔑354—Sale—Notice.

If a trust deed specified the kind and manner of notice of sale, a sale without giving the notice as required would be invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1051–1058, 1068, 1069.]

2. Appeal and Error 🔑1008(1)—Review—Findings.

In an action to require the purchaser at a sale under a trust deed to convey the property to the mortgagor on the ground that the sale was void, where neither the pleadings nor the findings of fact show the provisions of the trust deed relative to notice of sale, the finding to the effect that notice was not published as required by the trust deed is conclusive in so far as the motion to vacate the conclusions of law and the judgment and to enter another and different judgment are concerned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3955.]

3. Mortgages 🔑356—Deed of Trust—Notice of Sale.

Where a trust deed provided that the trustee should first publish notice of the time and place of sale with a description of the property to be sold at least twice a week for four successive weeks in some newspaper in a city and county named, a notice of sale of which the last publication was on January 22d, and in which the day noted for sale was February 6th, was publication of notice in accordance with the requirements of the trust deed, since it was not necessary that the four weeks be next preceding the date and the date fixed was not unreasonably remote from the period of publication.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1063–1067.]

4. Appeal and Error 🔑1008(1)—Review—Findings.

The findings of fact are conclusive upon the appellate court except as to the provisions of the trust deed and a letter admitted in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3955.]

5. Mortgages 🔑369(3) — Sale — Setting Aside—Inadequacy of Purchase Price.

Where land is sold under a deed of trust, mere inadequacy of the purchase price is not sufficient ground for refusing to give full effect to such sale, although where the inadequacy is gross very slight additional evidence of unfairness or irregularity is sufficient to warrant setting it aside.

6. Mortgages 🔑369(3) — Sale — Setting Aside—Inadequacy of Purchase Price in Connection with Other Objections.

Where property worth at least $5,000 was sold under a deed of trust for $500, the purchaser being a nominal creditor and assignee for collection, the facts that there was a known dispute between the original mortgagor and mortgagee as to the adequacy of the consideration for the secured notes, and that the mortgagee wrote the mortgagor after notice by publication for sale under the deed of trust had been commenced, a letter, couched in such terms as to lead the mortgagor to believe that foreclosure proceedings had not been commenced, and that without actual notice before that time the mortgagor learned of the sale one-half hour before the time fixed, and requested a postponement for a reasonable time to enable him to procure the money to pay the amount due, held to constitute such an irregularity in the proceedings, together with the gross inadequacy of consideration, as to warrant setting aside the sale and ordering the property to be conveyed by the purchaser to the mortgagor.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court of Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Theo. A. Winbigler, as special administrator of the estate of Karl Wenzel, deceased, against W. H. A. Sherman. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a motion to set aside the conclusions of law and judgment and to amend the same and enter another and different judgment, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appealed to the District Court of Appeal, where an appplication for hearing in the Supreme Court was granted. Affirmed.

E. W. Forgy and John T. Jones, both of Los Angeles (Jones & Weller, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant. H. C. Head, of Santa Ana (R. T. Walters and Ernest C. Griffith, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This appeal was originally heard and decided by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, and an application for a hearing in this court was subsequently granted. The following statement as to the nature of the case, the action of the trial court, and the appeals, is taken from the opinion of the district court of appeal:

> "Karl Wenzel executed to Charles A. Meyer, Jr., as trustee, a trust deed to secure the payment of certain promissory notes made by Wenzel to Fairbanks-Morse & Co., a corporation. Default having been made by nonpayment of one of the notes when it fell due, defendant W. H. A. Sherman, to whom the notes had been transferred, demanded that the real property described in the trust deed be sold by the trustee in accordance with the provisions of the trust deed. Sale was made by the trustee in conformity with that demand, and a deed of conveyance was executed to Sherman as purchaser at the sale. Karl Wenzel died on the 27th day of February, 1915, and the plaintiff was appointed special administrator of his estate. As such administrator the plaintiff instituted this action to obtain a decree, requiring that the defendants convey the property to the plaintiff upon payment by him of the amounts due under said notes and deed of trust. The defendants having filed their answer, the case went to trial, and the court made its findings and a decree ascertaining the amount of said indebtedness, and requiring that upon payment of that amount with interest as ascertained in the decree, the defendant Sherman should convey the described premises to plaintiff; and it was provided that upon failure to make such conveyance the deed be made by a commissioner appointed for that purpose. Within ten days after the entry of judgment the defendant Sherman gave notice of motion, and thereafter in due course made his motion for an order to set aside and vacate the conclusions of law and the judgment and to amend the same and enter another and a different judgment, to wit, a judgment that the plaintiff take nothing against the defendant and for costs in favor of the defendant. This motion was made as permitted by section 663 and 663a, Code of Civil Procedure, upon the grounds that the findings of fact do not support the conclusions of law or the judgment and that such findings of fact do require conclusions of law and judgment in favor of the defendant. The court having made its order denying that motion, the defendant Sherman has appealed from the order, and also from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial."

It may be added that the amount of indebtedness found by the trial court included all expenses of sale.

[1, 2] It cannot be held that the findings of fact do not support the conclusions of law or the judgment. Regardless of all questions in connection with the matter of the inadequacy of price, it is explicitly found that the trustee's sale of the land was not in compliance with the terms of the trust deed and the law, in that the notices of sale "were not published twice a week for four weeks next preceding the date of said sale, and in that more than one week elapsed after the last publication of said notices before the date of the said sale." Of course if the trust deed required the kind and manner of notice so specified in the finding, a sale had without giving the same would be invalid. Neither pleadings nor findings of fact show the provisions of the trust deed relative to notice of sale, and the finding to the effect that notice was not published as required by that instrument is conclusive in so far as the motion to vacate the conclusions of law and the judgment and to enter another and different judgment is concerned. The motion, therefore, was properly denied.

[3] The finding just referred to is, however, assailed on the appeal from the judgment and order denying a new trial as being without sufficient support in the evidence. The deed of trust is set out in the statement on appeal, and a reading thereof in connection with the findings of the trial court as to the publication had shows that notice of the sale was published in all respects as required thereby. So far as material this instrument provided:

> "Said trustee * * * shall first publish notice of the time and place of such sale, with a description of the property to be sold, at least twice a week for four successive weeks in some newspaper published in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California."

The trial court found "that notices of said sale were published by said trustee in the Los Angeles Daily Journal, a daily newspaper published in Los Angeles county, Cal., twice a week for four weeks," specifying the date of first and last publication. The last publication was on January 22, 1915, and the day noted for the sale was February 6, 1915. Publication of notice in accord with the requirements of the trust deed is thus shown. The point appears to be that the publication was not sufficient because not made for the four weeks "next preceding the date" of sale, and this appears to have been the view of the learned trial judge. But the trust deed, as we have seen, contains no such requirement, calling simply for publication "at least twice a week for four successive weeks." Upon this point the District Court of Appeal said:

> "Counsel for respondent have not referred to any decision holding that under a trust deed in the form here presented the publications of the notice of sale must be continued down to the very time of the sale; therefore, we may be justified in assuming that there is no such decision. In addition to that, however, we have examined some of the principal text-books and digests, and we fail to find any declaration of law in support of respondent's contention. The rule, of course, is that in executing a power of sale the trustee must act in good faith and strictly follow the requirements prescribed by the trust deed with respect to the manner of sale. The date fixed for the sale in the present instance was not unreasonably remote from the period of publication of the notices. The fact that it was a few days later than it might have been after the beginning of publication of the notice was a fact rather favorable than otherwise to the interests of the debtor."

The finding referred to is without support in the evidence.

[4] This result does not require a reversal, however, if the other findings sufficiently support the judgment. The claim of respondent is substantially that the gross inadequacy of price for which the land was sold by the trustee, in connection with the circumstances found, sufficiently supports the conclusion of the trial court that the sale was inequitable and fraudulent, and that the purchaser should not be allowed to retain the property. The findings of fact, which are conclusive upon us except as to the provisions of the trust deed and a certain letter hereinafter referred to which are the only matters of evidence contained in the statement on appeal, show the following facts: The notes of deceased secured by the trust deed were given to Fairbanks-Morse & Co. for the aggregate amount of $536.65 in consideration of the agreement of the latter to furnish and install certain pumping machinery on the land of deceased, a parcel of 15 acres in Orange county. The deed of trust covered all of said land. The trustee under the deed, Meyer, was at all times an employé of Fairbanks-Morse & Co. The pumping machinery was installed, and after the first note, one for $100, became due (October 1, 1914), deceased made complaint that the same was defective, and certain alterations were made therein by the vendor. Apparently the machinery was still unsatisfactory, complaint being made as late as the very day of sale. In the meantime, Fairbanks-Morse & Co. transferred the notes to defendant Sherman, who was a bill collector who had theretofore collected bills and accounts for it. The inference is that they were transferred solely for purposes of collection. On or about December 21, 1914, Sherman caused the trustee to advertise the land for sale under the trust deed. The first publication of notice was on December 31, 1914, the sale being noticed for February 6, 1915, "at the west door of the courthouse in the city of Los Angeles." On January 6, 1915, Sherman wrote deceased as follows, the letter being taken from the statement on appeal:

> "I have your letter of December 29th, and will say that I do not know anything about troubles you speak of, regarding the pumping plant. That is a matter that is between yourself and Fairbanks-Morse & Co. As to the trust deed, I have instructed the trustee to start foreclosure proceedings, so unless you care to pay the matter off at once, the same will be foreclosed in due course of time."

Deceased had no actual notice of the intended sale until about one-half hour before the time fixed, when he went to the place of business of Fairbanks-Morse & Co. for the purpose of negotiating with the latter about the alleged defects in the machinery, and then and there for the first time learned of the intended sale. He at once went to Sherman and the trustee, and talked with them about the matter, and requested a postponement of the sale for a reasonable time to enable him to procure the money and pay the amount due. The amount due, including expenses of sale, was only $680.58, and the actual value of the property was not less than $6,500, subject to a prior mortgage for $1,500. The trust deed fully provided for and authorized postponements of sale by the trustee. The request for a postponement was denied, and the sale was made to Sherman, the only bidder, for $500, the amount of his bid. Promptly after the sale deceased procured the necessary money and offered to Sherman a sum sufficient to pay all amounts due, including principal, interest, costs of sale and expenses, on condition that Sherman reconvey the property to him, and his offer was rejected. The trustee executed his deed to Sherman. The price paid was not more than one-tenth the actual value of the land, and was grossly inadequate. Another similar offer was made by this plaintiff to Sherman before the commencement of this action, and the same was refused. It is further found upon these facts "that the sale was inequitable and fraudulent."

[5] Although another rule prevails in some jurisdictions, it is the settled rule in this state that mere inadequacy of price is not a sufficient ground for refusing to give full effect to such a sale as this. This rule was recognized, and many authorities cited, in Odell v. Cox, 151 Cal. 73, 90 Pac. 194, where an execution sale was involved. In that case, however, a judgment vacating an execution sale was affirmed on the theory that there were circumstances which, considered in connection with the grossly inadequate price paid, were sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court that there was such unfairness and undue advantage resulting in gross inadequacy of price as warranted the vacating of the sale. It was said in the opinion that, notwithstanding the rule that mere inadequacy of price is insufficient to warrant setting aside the sale:

> "Where the inadequacy is palpable and great, very slight additional evidence of unfairness or irregularity is sufficient to authorize the granting of the relief sought."

Several authorities were cited in support of this statement, including the case of Schroeder v. Young, 161 U. S. 334, 16 Sup. Ct. 512, 40 L. Ed. 721, in which the court, after saying that courts are not slow to seize upon other circumstances impeaching the fairness of the transaction as a cause of vacating it, especially if the inadequacy be so gross as to shock the conscience, said:

> "If the sale has been attended by any irregularity, * * * if any undue advantage has been taken to the prejudice of the owner of the property, or he has been lulled into a false security; or, if the sale has been collusively, or in any other manner, conducted for the benefit of the purchaser, and the property has been sold at a greatly inadequate price, the sale may be set aside, and the owner permitted to redeem."

This court said:

> "We think there can be no doubt under the authorities that where, in addition to gross inadequacy of price, the purchaser has, in the language of the United States Supreme Court, 'been guilty of any unfairness or has taken any undue advantage,' resulting in such gross inadequacy and consequent injury to the owner of the property, he will be deemed guilty of fraud warranting the interposition of a court of equity in favor of the owner who is himself without fault."

[6] In the case at bar, there can be no doubt that there was gross inadequacy of price. Property worth at least $5,000 was purchased for $500. The purchaser was the nominal creditor, having a claim, including all expenses, of only $680.58, secured many times over by this trust deed. Moreover, he was apparently only an assignee of Fairbanks-Morse & Co. for purposes of collection, its employé and representative. The trustee was an employé of the same corporation. All parties knew that a dispute existed between deceased and Fairbanks-Morse & Co. as to the adequacy of the pumping machinery furnished in consideration of the giving of the notes, and that deceased was endeavoring to obtain from the company some remedying of the alleged defects. On the very day noted for the sale, without any actual notice that notice of sale was being published, or that a time had been fixed therefor, he visited the office of the company for that purpose. It was only then that he learned of the proposed sale, only one-half hour before the time fixed. The letter written to him on January 6, 1915, by Sherman was couched in such terms as to convey to the mind of deceased that "foreclosure proceedings," as they were termed therein, had not as yet been commenced, and, as substantially found by the trial court, such proceedings would actually be commenced only "in due course of time," and this, although a time for the sale had actually been fixed and notice by publication actually commenced nearly a week before. Whether by design or otherwise it was well calculated to lead deceased to believe that no proceeding for a sale, which would leave in him no right of redemption and would effectually cut off all his rights in regard to his property, had as yet been begun. It certainly tended to lull him into a false security to this extent, if indeed the use of the term "foreclosure proceedings" did not convey to his mind the idea of proceedings of which actual notice would be given him. Learning that such a sale was in fact noticed only one-half hour before the time fixed therefor, he requested of both the purchaser and the trustee a postponement for a reasonable time to enable him to procure the proportionately small amount of money to pay the amount due. This request, perfectly reasonable under the circumstances and one that could be granted without in the slightest degree prejudicing the creditor in so far as the collection of the full amount due was concerned, was refused, with the result that the whole property was sold to the creditor for one-tenth of its actual value. We are of the opinion that under all the circumstances the refusal of the creditor to consent to a postponement and of the trustee to grant the same so savored of oppression and unfairness and an apparent desire to acquire the property of deceased for a mere pittance that, taken in connection with the gross inadequacy of price, it constitutes such an irregularity in the proceedings as to sufficiently support the conclusion and action of the trial court.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial and the order denying the motion to vacate the conclusions of law and judgment and to enter another and different judgment are affirmed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(175 Cal. 278)

RAUER v. HERTWECK et al. (S. F. 7081.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 4, 1917.)

1. Trial 🔑165 — Motion for Nonsuit — Hearing.

On motion for nonsuit, the evidence and every inference that may fairly be drawn from it must be viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff's claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 373, 374.]

2. Execution 🔑256(2) — Sale — Action to Set Aside—Evidence.

In an action to set aside an execution sale of real estate, evidence held to show that the sale was fairly conducted, and that plaintiff's loss can be more properly attributed to the neglect of his own interest than to any unfairness on the part of the judgment creditor or the purchasers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 730, 731.]

3. Execution 🔑251(1) — Sale — Setting Aside—Inadequacy of Price.

Mere inadequacy of price, however gross, is not itself a sufficient ground for setting aside an execution sale legally made, but there must, in addition, be proof of some element of fraud, unfairness, or oppression, before a court will be justified in depriving the purchaser of his legal advantage, although where the price is greatly disproportionate to the actual value, very slight evidence of unfairness or irregularity will suffice to authorize the granting of relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 708.]

4. Attorney and Client 🔑104 — Knowledge of Client—Setting Aside—Grounds.

Where an attorney had actual knowledge of the entry of judgment against his client, such knowledge is in law the knowledge of the client himself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. §§ 92, 93.]

5. Execution 🔑222(1) — Sale — Notice to Judgment Debtor.

As Code Civ. Proc. § 692, regarding notice of sale under execution, does not require notice to be given to the judgment debtor, neither the judgment creditor, the sheriff, nor the purchasers are under any obligation to give the judgment debtor such notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 629, 630.]

6. Execution 🔑230 — Sale — Soliciting Bids.

No inference of impropriety is to be drawn from the fact that attorneys for the judgment creditor informed one of the purchasers at an execution sale that a sale was to be had, and suggested that he bid, since the judgment debtor is benefited, rather than harmed, by any action which tends to increase the number of bidders.

[Ed. Note.—For. other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 648–652, 698.]

7. Execution 🔑256(2) — Sale — Action to Set Aside—Answer—Construction.

In an action to set aside an execution sale of real estate, an answer, alleging that defendants had no part in or concern with the issuance of the execution, or the levy upon or the sale of the premises other than attend the sale and become purchasers thereat, and that if, in said proceedings, there was any intent to prevent plaintiff from having knowledge thereof, or if such knowledge was intentionally concealed from plaintiff the defendants had no part therein, and were in no way responsible therefor, was clearly designed to dissociate the defendants from any connection with the purpose to take any unfair advantage of the plaintiff, and was a sufficient denial of any knowledge on their part of such purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 730, 731.]

8. Execution 🔑224—Sale by Lots or Parcels—Statute.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 694, regarding the conduct of sales of property under execution, in an action against the purchasers to set aside an execution sale of real estate, where there was nothing to indicate that the real estate consisted of more than one lot or parcel, a sale in parcels was not required.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. §§ 636–639, 705.]

9. Judgment 🔑237(3) — Default against One Defendant.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 579, providing that in an action against several defendants the court may, in its discretion, render judgment against one or more of them, leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper, in an action to set aside an execution sale of real estate brought against two defendants, who did not have any unity of interest or claim, and in which plaintiff took a default judgment against one defendant, a subsequent judgment against the other defendant was not void, and hence execution for costs could issue thereunder.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 419.]

10. Judgment 🔑504(3) — Collateral Attack—Presumption.

Where it does not appear that two defendants, in an action to set aside an execution sale of real estate, had any unity of interest or claim making it improper to render several judgments against them, it will be presumed on collateral attack that they did not.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 946.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by J. J. Rauer against Edward Hertweck and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. M. Anthony, of San Francisco, for appellant. S. L. Strother and G. L. Aynesworth, both of Fresno, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This action was brought to set aside an execution sale of real estate. The court below granted the motion of the defendants for a nonsuit, and thereupon entered judgment in their favor. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

In October, 1910, one Webb brought an action against Rauer and others to quiet his title to certain lands in Fresno county, and, in June, 1912, obtained judgment against Rauer quieting his title, and for costs amounting to $15.90. On December 19, 1912, an execution was issued on said judgment for costs. The sheriff levied the writ upon a tract of real estate in Fresno county, described as "Lot No. 7, Linda Vista Tract," belonging to Rauer, and sold said tract on the 18th day of January, 1913, to Hertweck and Sparkman, the defendants in this action, for the sum of $46. The sheriff duly made his return on said sale, and, on the 20th day of January, 1914, issued his deed to Hertweck and Sparkman, the purchasers at the execution sale. The complaint alleges that on the day of the execution of the sheriff's deed, and long prior thereto, the plaintiff was the owner of the land so sold, and that the same was worth between $100 and $150 per acre. He further alleges that he was ignorant of the judgment against him, of the issuance of the writ of execution, of the sale of the property, and of the issuance of the sheriff's deed, until about the 4th day of February, 1914; that no one ever notified him of the proposed sale of his property, although the defendants in this action, the attorneys for the judgment creditor, and the sheriff knew that plaintiff's residence was at the city of San Francisco. It is alleged that the writ of execution was issued and levied, and the sale made, with the intent to prevent all knowledge thereof on the part of plaintiff until after the sale and the issuance of the deed thereon, and that all said acts were intentionally concealed from the plaintiff for the purpose of depriving him of the whole of his land for a mere nominal sum. In addition, it is alleged that the sheriff did not offer the land for sale in any smaller parcel than the 20 acres. The plaintiff brought this action on February 13, 1914, offering by his complaint to refund to the defendants the amount paid by them to the sheriff.

By their answer, the defendants, Hertweck and Sparkman, allege that since the execution of the deed they have been the owners of the land. They deny that the land was worth any more than $35 per acre, and deny that plaintiff was ignorant of the judgment, of the execution, of the sale, or of the issuance of the deed by the sheriff, as alleged in the complaint. They further allege that they had no part in or concern with the issuance of the execution, or the levy upon or the sale of said premises, other than to attend at said sale, and become purchasers thereat, and that if, in said proceedings, there was any intent to prevent plaintiff from having knowledge thereof, or if such knowledge was intentionally concealed from plaintiff, they, said defendants, had no part therein, and were in no way responsible therefor. They also deny the allegation that the land was not offered for sale in subdivisions.

[1, 2] Upon a motion for nonsuit, the evidence, and every inference that may fairly be drawn from it, must be viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff's claim. Goldstone v. Merchants' Ice, etc., Co., 123 Cal. 625, 56 Pac. 776; Hanley v. California Bridge, etc., Co., 127 Cal. 232, 59 Pac. 577, 47 L. R. A. 597; Estate of Ricks, 160 Cal. 450, 117 Pac. 532. But, giving to the plaintiff every benefit to which he is entitled under this rule, we think it must still be held that he failed to establish a case entitling him to relief.

[3] There was testimony in support of the allegation of the complaint relative to the value of the land. The 20 acres must therefore be taken to have been worth between $2,000 and $3,000. The sum bid at the execution sale was only $46. Clearly, therefore, the purchase price was but a small fraction of the value of the property. It is, however, well settled in this state that mere inadequacy of price, however gross, is not itself a sufficient ground for setting aside a sale legally made. There must, in addition, be proof of some element of fraud, unfairness, or oppression, before a court will be justified in depriving the purchaser of his legal advantage. Where, however, the price obtained is greatly disproportionate to the actual value, very slight evidence of unfairness or irregularity will suffice to authorize the granting of the relief. These rules are clearly stated, and the authorities cited, in Odell v. Cox, 151 Cal. 70, 90 Pac. 194. The same principles are declared and applied in Winbigler v. Sherman (L. A. No. 4440) 165 Pac. 943, recently decided in this court.

[4] What, then, does the proof in this case show with respect to the unfairness of the sale? The plaintiff, Rauer, testified that he had no knowledge of the judgment, or of the proceedings on execution. But it appears without dispute that on June 21, 1912, 11 days after the entry of the judgment, Mr. H. M. Anthony, the attorney representing him in the action of Webb v. Rauer (and who also represents him here), filed, on behalf of Rauer, a notice of appeal from said judgment, and an undertaking to support such appeal. These facts furnish conclusive evidence that Rauer's attorney had actual knowledge of the entry of the judgment against his client, and such knowledge is, in law, the knowledge of Rauer himself. 6 C. J. 638; Mabb v. Stewart, 147 Cal. 413, 81 Pac. 1073. Besides this, there is uncontradicted evidence that on June 17, 1912, the attorneys for Webb wrote to Rauer's attorney, requesting payment of the judgment for the costs; that they mailed him a copy of the bill of costs, and received a letter of acknowledgment; and that, in October, 1912, they again wrote him asking that his client pay the costs. Both requests for payment were ignored. The execution was not taken out until two months after the sending of the second letter.

The notice of sale was published and posted in strict conformity with the requirements of section 692 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but no one gave Rauer or his attorney personal notice that the sale was to take place. The sheriff and the undersheriff testified that they knew who Rauer was, and could have found his address. Hertweck, one of the defendants, had done business with Rauer. He knew that Rauer's place of business was in San Francisco, and that he was reputed to be a man of means. Sparkman, the other defendant, had never heard of Rauer. He testified that he first heard of the proposed sale of the land when one of the attorneys for Webb told him that there was to be an execution sale, and asked him if he did not want to bid.

[5] The evidence which we have summarized constitutes plaintiff's entire showing on the question of the fairness of the sale. We are unable to find in it anything going to show fraud, unfairness, or oppression. The main stress of the appellant's argument is put upon the point that neither the judgment creditor, the sheriff, nor the purchasers notified the judgment debtor of the proposed sale. But there was no obligation upon them to give him any such notice. The statute defines how notice of an execution sale must be given. To say that a sale may be set aside because some other notice was not given would be to amend the statute, and this we cannot, of course, do. When the officer conducting the sale has done the acts prescribed by the Code, he has done his full duty. He is not required to search for the debtor and give him any further notice than that which the law exacts. Nor is any such duty imposed upon the judgment creditor. Much less is one who may contemplate bidding at an execution sale called upon to concern himself with the question whether the debtor has actual knowledge of the proceeding.

[6] No inference of impropriety is to be drawn from the fact that the attorneys for the creditor informed one of the defendants that a sale was to be had, and suggested that he bid. The judgment debtor is benefited, rather than harmed, by any action which tends to increase the number of bidders.

[7] It is argued that the complaint alleges, and the answer fails to deny, that the defendants knew that the writ was issued, and the sale made, with the intent to prevent knowledge thereof by the plaintiff, and to deprive him of his land. We think the complaint, properly construed, does not charge that the defendants knew of the alleged intent. But, in any event, the answer was clearly designed to dissociate the defendants from any connection with the purpose, which, so far as they could know, may have been entertained by others, to take an unfair advantage of the plaintiff. This may fairly be interpreted as a denial of any knowledge on their part of such purpose, and it was apparently so treated at the trial.

The attempt to show unfairness in the sale comes down simply to this: That the execution sale was regularly made upon due statutory notice, but that the judgment debtor did not, in fact, know of the sale, and no one gave him notice of it. He did, however, know that a judgment had been entered against him, and must be deemed to have known that his property might be levied on at any time. He failed to pay the judgment, and took no steps to protect his property until many months after the entry of judgment. He then found that a sale had been had, and that the time for redemption had expired. The resulting loss can more properly be attributed to his neglect of his own interests than to any unfairness on the part of the judgment creditor of the purchasers. The case presents none of the peculiar circumstances of oppression or inequitable conduct which were held, in Odell v. Cox and in Winbigler v. Sherman, to justify relief from a sale made for an inadequate price.

[8] It is claimed that the sale was irregular because the land was not offered in subdivisions. Assuming that the evidence shows that the sale was made as claimed by the appellant, there is no evidence that the situation was such as to require the sheriff to sell the land otherwise than as a whole. Section 694 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that:

> "When the sale is of real property, consisting of several known lots or parcels, they must be sold separately."

The land is described in the record as "Lot No. 7 of the Linda Vista tract." There is nothing to indicate that it consisted of other known lots or parcels. A sale in parcels was not therefore required. Gleason v. Hill, 65 Cal. 17, 2 Pac. 413; Connick v. Hill, 127 Cal. 165, 59 Pac. 832; Meux v. Trezevant, 132 Cal. 487, 64 Pac. 848.

Finally, the appellant makes the point, raised by an amendment to his complaint, that the judgment upon which the execution was issued was void. It appears that the original action of Webb was brought against two defendants, Dewey Navigation & Trading Company and Rauer, for the purpose of quieting Webb's title to certain lands. Dewey Navigation & Trading Company defaulted, and Webb took judgment against it on March 28, 1912. This judgment, it is alleged in the amendment, is still in force. Rauer answered, and thereafter Webb took against him the judgment which formed the basis of the execution. The appellant's contention is that since, as this court has often stated, there can be but one final judgment in a case, the action was disposed of by the judgment against Dewey Navigation & Trading Company, and that the later judgment against Rauer was void.

[9] Without regard to other possible answers to the contention, the rule relied upon has no application to actions in which separate and independent relief is sought against several defendants. The court may, under the express provision of section 579 of the Code of Civil Procedure, render judgment against one or more of the defendants, "leaving the action to proceed against the others, whenever a several judgment is proper." Cole v. Roebling Construction Co., 156 Cal. 443, 105 Pac. 255; Bell v. Staacke, 159 Cal. 193, 115 Pac. 221.

[10] It does not appear that the two defendants in the suit brought by Webb had any unity of interest or claim making it improper to render several judgments against them. On this collateral attack on the judgment, it will be presumed that they did not.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; MELVIN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

(175 Cal. 300)

HOLDEN et al. v. MENSINGER et al.

(Sac. 2314.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1917.)

1. Appeal and Error 🔑909(1)—Presumption in Favor of Judgment.

In the absence of a showing that an action was not timely commenced, the presumption on appeal will be in favor of the judgment rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3675.]

2. Appeal and Error 🔑680(1)—Transcript—Contents—Order Overruling Demurrer.

An objection that transcript failed to show order sustaining or overuling demurrer was frivolous, where the record showed appellant's recognition of the fact that it had been overruled.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2880.]

3. Mechanics' Liens 🔑281(1)—Description of Property—Sufficiency of Evidence.

In suit to foreclose mechanic's lien, it was immaterial that witnesses colloquially spoke of the building as the "M. theater," where there was evidence of correct description, ownership, and knowledge of work done.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 565-567.]

4. Mechanics' Liens 🔑290(3)—Findings—Conformity to Pleadings.

Where mechanic's lien claimants sued in individual capacity and as copartners, and lien claim was filed in firm name, findings declaring that such individuals comprised the named firm did not create a fatal variance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 594.]

5. Pleading 🔑398 — Variance Between Allegations and Proof.

The variance between pleading and proof is fatal only where it has misled or may serve to mislead the adverse party, as where proof is addressed to issues different than the specific issues which the defendant was brought into court to meet, in which case it will be presumed that he was misled to his injury; he not being sufficiently advised, so as to be prepared to meet such allegations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 1338.]

6. Mechanics' Liens 🔑277(5) — Variance Between Claim and Complaint.

There was no variance between mechanic's lien claim, filed in name of a partnership with which contract was alleged to have been made, and the complaint, naming plaintiffs in their individual capacity and as copartners.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 552.]

7. Mechanics' Liens 🔑135 — Sufficiency of Claim — Necessity of Stating Plaintiff's Firm Name.

The law does not require that members of a copartnership shall be specifically named in filing a copartnership lien claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 209.]

8. Partnership 🔑197—Pleading—Use of Firm Name.

A complaint in a partnership's mechanic's lien foreclosure will be demurrable, where it charges in the name of the copartnership alone.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 360.]

9. Partnership 🔑197 — Action by Partners—Use of Firm Name.

Although a copartnership may be sued under its fictitious name, under Code Civ. Proc. § 388, in action brought by the partnership, the full names of all partners must be stated, since that was the rule at common law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. § 360.]

10. Partnership 🔑212—Action by Partners—Failure to File Certificate.

It was not a fatal defect that a complaint by partnership using a fictitious name did not show filing of certificate required by Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468, and the omission merely subjected the complaint to a plea in abatement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 404-407, 410, 414.]

11. Appeal and Error 🔑1039(2)—Harmless Error—Action by Partner—Failure to File Certificate.

A partnership's failure to show filing of certificate regarding its fictitious name, as required by Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468, was immaterial, where that issue was fully tried, and compliance therewith shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4075.]

12. Mechanics' Liens 🔑263(10)—Dismissal of Principal Debtor—Effect on Property Owner's Liability.

The dismissal of primary debtors, personally liable, in mechanic's lien foreclosure, did not release the property from the lien, since the action was not analogous to that of a mortgage foreclosure, and in a mechanic's lien foreclosure the real property is an independent fund, to which the lien claimant may resort without regard to the personal liability of him with whom he has contracted, and is an action in rem.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 481.]

13. Mechanics' Liens 🔑263(9)—Joinder of Primary Debtor and Property Owner.

In mechanic's lien foreclosure, the primary debtor and the owner of property impressed with a lien may be joined as defendants; but they are not both necessary parties defendant to the same action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 479.]

14. Mechanics' Liens 🔑291(1)—Judgment—Deduction of Other "Claims."

Code Civ. Proc. § 1193, requiring deduction of all other claims from the judgment, in contractor's suit to foreclose mechanic's lien, refers to valid lien claims filed for work done for the contractor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 599.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Claim.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by Thomas Holden and another against W. R. Mensinger and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Griffin & Carlson and J. M. Walthall, all of Modesto, and John L. McVey, of Oakland, for appellant. Austin Lewis and R. M. Royce, both of Oakland, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal from a judgment given in favor of plaintiffs in their action as contractors to foreclose their mechanic's lien upon the property of appellant, Mensinger. Plaintiffs sued in their individual capacity and as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of the Thomas Holden Decorating Company, a copartnership. Their lien claim was filed in the name and on behalf of the Thomas Holden Decorating Company, a copartnership. The material which they furnished and the labor which they performed were in and about the decoration of a theater erected on the appellant's land.

[1] Appellant advances against the judgment certain untenable and highly technical propositions. Thus, he declares that the transcript does not show that the action was commenced within 90 days after the filing of the lien claim. This manifestly arises from the fact that the original complaint was superseded by an amended complaint, which appears in the transcript. He raised no plea of the statute of limitations, and does not even now contend that the action was not commenced in time, as manifestly it was, or he would have been at pains to show the contrary. Suffice it to say that, in the absence of a showing of the fact, the presumption will favor the judgment.

[2] He next contends that he interposed a general demurrer, and that "the transcript fails to show that any order was made by the court sustaining or overruling this demurrer." Again it may be said that the objection is wholly frivolous, in view of the fact that in more than one place in the record it is shown that appellant's counsel knew and recognized the fact that the demurrer had been overruled. Thus:

> "Mr. Royce. Well, may it please the court, we had a demurrer interposed upon the ground the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and the demurrer was overruled."

[3] Still further, it is argued that there is no testimony in the record showing that any materials were furnished or labor performed upon the property, or any part of it, against which the lien is sought. This contention is based upon the fact that in their evidence many of the witnesses colloquially spoke of the building as the "Modesto Theater." But the property was described as being "on Tenth street, and located on lots 9, 10 and 11, block 56, and is known as the Mensinger Block." It is further abundantly established that Mensinger owned the land, and not only knew of the erection of the theater, but knew personally the work that was being done by these plaintiffs.

[4] Appellant next contends that there is a fatal variance between the lien claim and the complaint, which are as above indicated, and the findings, which declare that "Thomas Holden and Charles Frederick Holden comprise the firm of Thomas Holden Decorating Company, a copartnership," etc. Upon broad grounds the contention is without merit.

[5] A variance is fatal only when it has misled, or by its nature may serve to mislead, an adverse party; as, where he is brought into court to meet specific issues of fact, and the proof is addressed to quite different issues, it will be presumed that he has been misled to his injury in not being sufficiently advised of the nature of the action, so as to be prepared to meet it with evidence. But where this reasoning fails of applicability the variance itself ceases to be fatal, and such manifestly is the situation here presented.

[6, 7] But more specifically there is no variance whatsoever between the lien claim and the complaint; the lien claim properly declaring that the contract was with the copartnership, since in fact it was. Nor is there any requirement in the law that in filing a copartnership lien claim the members of the copartnership shall be specifically named.

[8, 9] Coming, next, to the complaint, it would have been demurrable if it had charged in the name of the copartnership alone. Gilman v. Cosgrove, 22 Cal. 356. While a copartnership acting under a fictitious name may be sued in that name (Code Civ. Proc. § 388), the rule governing its prosecution of an action is that the full names of all the partners must be stated. "Partners cannot, at common law, sue or be sued by their partnership names; but by statute in some of the states, as in Ohio, Iowa, etc., this is allowed, and so far partnerships are treated as corporations. Elsewhere their demands are joint and personal, and must be enforced by them as individuals." Bliss, Code Pleading, § 145; Williams v. S. P. Railroad Co., 110 Cal. 457, 42 Pac. 974; Clement v. British American Assurance Co., 141 Mass. 303, 5 N. E. 847.

[10] It is next urged by appellant that there is a fatal defect in the complaint, in that it appears upon the face of it that the copartners were doing business under a fictitious name, and the complaint itself does not aver a compliance with sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code, which averment is asserted to be necessary when upon the face of the pleading the fictitious name of the copartnership appears. Sweeney v. Stanford, 67 Cal. 635, 8 Pac. 444; Alaska Salmon Co. v. Standard Box Co., 158 Cal. 567, 577, 112 Pac. 454. But neither of these cases decides, nor does any other case decide, as appellant contends, that this omission is a "fatal defect." The omission merely subjects the complaint to the special defense of a plea in abatement, which plea was not here interposed.

[11] Upon the trial satisfactory evidence was offered of the timely filing of an adequate certificate. The fact, therefore, was established against appellant's contention, and while, had the complaint been more carefully drawn, it would have pleaded this compliance with the sections of the Civil Code, the omission becomes immaterial, in view of the fact that the issue was fully tried and determined against the contention of appellant.

[12] Plaintiffs dismissed their action against Poland, the original contractor, and against the Coast Theater Company, who, it may be conceded, were primarily liable for plaintiffs' claim. It is contended that this dismissal of the primary debtors personally liable relieved the property of appellant, Mensinger, from the lien. To plaintiffs' argument that no personal or deficiency judgment could be entered against the landowner, Mensinger, the complete answer is that no such judgment was entered. To the argument that the property should be released from the burden of the lien by virtue of the dismissal against the primary debtor, an analogy is sought to be drawn between actions such as this and actions to foreclose mortgages resting on private contract and the rights of sureties and guarantors. The analogy is fallacious. In a mortgage or in a suretyship the liabilities are based upon an agreement of the parties, and by operation of law the release or discharge of the debtor releases the sureties for the debt. In the case of a mechanic's lien the real property is in its nature an independent fund, to which the lien claimant may resort without regard to the personal liability of him with whom he has contracted. It is an action in rem. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565.

[3] Our cases hold (Giant Powder Co. v. Flume Co., 78 Cal. 193, 20 Pac. 419) that the primary debtor and the owner of the property impressed with the lien may be joined as defendants in a single action. But it is not declared that they are necessary parties defendant, and the ground of the ruling is simply that of convenience in avoiding a multiplicity of suits.

[14] It is contended, because the copartners employed an artist to do a part of the decorative work and he testified to the value of the labor and material furnished by him, that this artist had an independent claim for the value of these services, and consequently that it was error to include this amount in the judgment given in favor of plaintiff. The evidence was abundant to support the court's finding of the value of the work done and material furnished. However, the testimony of the artist, a son of one of the copartners, but not a member of the copartnership, was that the value of his services was $1,250, that he had received no part of it, and had filed no lien claim for it. Section 1193 of the Code of Civil Procedure, at the time of the trial of this action, provided that:

> "Any contractor shall be entitled to recover upon a lien filed by him only such amounts as may be due him according to the terms of his contract, after deducting all claims of other parties for work done and materials furnished as aforesaid and embraced within his contract."

This contention also is without merit. Manifestly the "claims" for which deductions are to be made are claims based upon valid lien claims filed for work done or material furnished to the claimant contractor, and therefore to be deducted from the amount of his recovery, for the plain and principal purpose of this provision is to protect the owner against the possibility of being forced to make double payments. Such laborers, artisans, or materialmen could only have a recovery against the owner by filing their lien claims and prosecuting their actions, and therefore, we repeat, it is only in such cases that section 1193 contemplates a deduction. It would not only do violence to the statute, but would work a grave injustice upon these plaintiffs, if they were not allowed to recover from the owner the value of these services, for the payment of which they are legally bound to the man who performed them.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 336)

RYSTINKI v. CENTRAL CALIFORNIA TRACTION CO. (Sac. 2331.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1917.)

1. Carriers 🔑314(1, 2)—Injury to Passenger—Complaint.

In action by passenger against street railroad, a complaint, setting forth the defective state of the track and roadbed and that near where plaintiff was injured the car, by reason of such condition, was caused to swing violently, etc., whereby plaintiff was violently thrown, etc., held to sufficiently set forth the manner of the injury and defendant's negligence as its cause.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1273, 1275½.]

2. Pleading 🔑365(1)—Motion—Waiver.

Where the court failed to rule on defendant's motion to dismiss a count of the complaint, the motion was waived by failure to renew it before the close of the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1163-1165, 1167, 1170-1172.]

3. Carriers 🔑318(4) — Negligence as to Passengers.

That at some time before a passenger's injury the conductor on the car was conversing with a passenger did not indicate breach of duty towards the injured passenger, where he was available to give the signal when she decided to have the car stopped, and it did not appear that he was in a position where he could not see the alighting passenger and give the signal to resume the trip after she might alight.

[Ed. Note.—For, other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1307, 1308.]

4. Appeal and Error 🔑1053(1)—Evidence Tentatively Admitted — Cure by Subsequent Instruction.

Where cross-examining testimony of a witness as to a certain point was stricken out by a plenary ruling as not being proper impeachment.

any ill effect of such testimony as to the adverse party was removed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4178, 4184; Trial, Cent. Dig. § 977.]

5. Witnesses ⇨323—One's Own Witness—Impeachment.

In action by passenger against street railroad for injuries by being thrown from the car because of rough track, where a witness for plaintiff failed to testify as expected that the track was rough and the movements of the car erratic, but denied those very things, it was permissible for plaintiff to impeach such testimony, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2049, as to impeaching one's own witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1096.]

6. Trial ⇨253(4) — Duty to Passengers — Instruction.

In action for injuries to street railroad passenger, an instruction that "common carriers of passengers bind themselves to carry safely those whom they take into their cars, so far as human care and foresight will do so, that is, with the utmost care and vigilance of a very cautious person, and such carriers are responsible for any, even the slightest, negligence," preceded by an instruction that common carriers are required to do all that human care, vigilance, and foresight "reasonably can do under all the circumstances" to prevent accidents to passengers, correctly stated the law, and did not impute to the carrier the duties of an insurer nor cut off the carrier from the benefits of the law with reference either to contributory negligence or inevitable casualty.

7. Carriers ⇨321(23) — Injury to Passengers—Instructions.

In action by passenger for injuries, where, although plaintiff had abandoned a count of negligence in starting the car, the gist of the negligence relied on was defendant's operation of the car over a track so rough that plaintiff was thrown from the car, instructions covering defendant's duty in the operation of its cars were properly given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1335, 1336.]

8. Trial ⇨253(4) — Instructions Ignoring Issues.

In action by a passenger for injuries, an instruction on the care required by a passenger, stating that "it is no defense to this action that the plaintiff by her own act has contributed to her injury; it must appear that by her own fault she has so contributed"—was not objectionable as entirely excluding the defense of contributory negligence, but properly left for the jury's determination the question whether plaintiff's acts were negligent or not.

9. Carriers ⇨316(1)—Injury to Passenger—Burden of Proof.

Mere injury to a passenger does not place upon the carrier the duty of explanation, but the establishment of such injury, coupled with proof of coincident and unusual happening to the car, does cast upon defendant the burden of exculpation by inevitable casualty or some other cause which human care and foresight could not prevent, or by the contributory negligence of the passenger.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 1261, 1262, 1283, 1285, 1294.]

10. Trial ⇨253(4)—Instructions—Damages—Ignoring Statute.

In action for personal injuries, an instruction that "the law does not prescribe any fixed or definite rule of damages, but leaves their assessment to the common sense and unbiased judgment of the jurors," was not objectionable as ignoring Civ. Code, § 3283, allowing damages for detriment resulting after the commencement of an action in tort or certain to result in the future, since the statute does not more definitely prescribe the manner of assessment of such damages than does such instruction.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Hilda Rystinki against the Central California Traction Company. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Butler & Swisler, of Sacramento, for appellant. Welsh & Henry, of Sacramento, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued for damages for personal injuries received as alleged by being thrown from one of the electric street cars of defendant upon which she was traveling as a passenger. Judgment for $5,000 was awarded, and defendant has taken this appeal therefrom.

[1] The plaintiff sought to plead her cause of action in two counts of the second amended complaint, by the first of which her fall from the car and the consequent bodily injury were ascribed to the sudden starting and putting in violent motion the car from which plaintiff was about to alight, without giving her sufficient time to reach the ground safely. By the second count it was alleged, in substance, that plaintiff was thrown from the car and injured by reason of the operation of said car over a defective track and roadbed which caused it to "jerk and swing and sway back and forth." This part of the pleading was unsuccessfully attacked by general and special demurrers and the court's rulings thereon are assigned as errors by appellant upon the ground that it does not appear that plaintiff was thrown from the car by reason of the negligence set forth; that there is no announcement of any causal connection between defendant's negligent maintenance of a defective track and roadbed and the violent throwing of plaintiff to the ground. While the pleading might be made clearer, we think it does sufficiently set forth the manner of the injury and the negligence of defendant as the causative element thereof. The defective state of the track and roadbed is set forth quite in detail, and the complaint contains an averment that at and near the point where plaintiff was injured, the car, by reason of such condition, was caused to swing violently, etc. The pleading also contains the averments that:

> "By reason of the said insufficient, unsuitable, and unsafe and defective condition of said roadbed and track, as aforesaid, and the negligent excavation of gravel and dirt under and about the same, as aforesaid, thereby greatly weakening the same, * * * and causing the said car upon which plaintiff was as such passenger to violently jerk and swing and sway back and forth, all as aforesaid, * * * the said plaintiff, without any fault or negligence on her part, was violently thrown from said car to the ground headfirst and thereby rendered unconscious, and sustaining great damage and injury."

This is followed by a somewhat minute description of the injuries.

[2, 3] At the trial plaintiff elected to rely upon the cause of action pleaded in the second count, whereupon defendant moved to dismiss the first count. The court did not at that time grant the motion, but said:

> "I prefer to let the matter be retained and not dismissed at this time. We will pass on that later on."

The motion was not renewed. We do not see that the plaintiff was prejudiced by the court's action, even though the ruling was made in the presence of the jury. Moreover, the motion was waived by failure to renew it before the close of the trial. It is argued, however, that the court erred in admitting evidence properly relative only to the first cause of action and in giving instructions suitably applicable only to matters pertaining to that count. The testimony which, as appellant asserts, was erroneously considered, related to the conduct of the motorman and conductor. Plaintiff herself testified that, after she indicated to the conductor her desire to leave the car at Rose avenue, he pulled the strap attached to the bell and walked into the car; and that she did not know what he did there. Questions were propounded to the motorman (who was called as a witness by plaintiff) tending to show that some time before the car reached the place where plaintiff was injured the said motorman looked into the car and observed the conductor in conversation with a woman. The instructions to which appellant objects as prejudicial contain certain references to the responsibility of a corporation for the management of its cars, and it is argued that the testimony regarding the conduct of appellant's servants, coupled with these instructions, misled the jury into the belief that plaintiff was depending upon the first cause of action which had been abandoned. The trouble with this argument is that the indicated conduct of the motorman and the conductor was not negligent. Surely the motorman's glance into the car at a time prior to the accident was not negligence, or, if negligence, was not and could not have had any relation to plaintiff's injuries. Nor did the fact that at that remote period the conductor was conversing with a passenger indicate breach of duty toward plaintiff on his part because he was available to give the signal when she decided to have the car stopped. Entering the car after ringing the bell was not a negligent act on his part because it does not appear that he was in a position after going inside the car from which he could not see the passenger and give the signal to resume the trip after she might alight. Nor did the instructions relative to the duty of a corporation in operating its cars tend to mislead the jurors, because the case was clearly tried upon the theory not that defendant's servants caused plaintiff's fall from the car by their negligent starting of the car but that she was precipitated to the ground by its movement from side to side in consequence of the imperfect condition of the track and roadbed.

Plaintiff called as a witness Mr. Thum, who had been motorman on the car from which she was thrown. Some questions were asked of him relative to the conductor's conversation with a lady in the car as it was passing the race track some time before the accident. His answers did not satisfy plaintiff's counsel, and they were permitted to cross-examine their witness with reference to alleged statements made to them regarding that matter. This was improper, as was the introduction of impeaching testimony upon the same subject, to the effect that Thum had said to counsel in a conversation at his own home on a date designated that he had seen Johnson, the conductor, leaning over and talking to a blonde woman. The only real difference between the actual testimony of the witness and his purported statement to counsel was that on the stand he said he saw Johnson speaking to the lady, while in his statement, as quoted by the impeaching witnesses, he said Johnson was holding a conversation with her. The impeachment was quite as immaterial as was the testimony itself. But Thum was asked questions about the condition of the roadbed and track at the point where plaintiff was injured, and he was interrogated with reference to the jolting or jarring of the car just before the accident occurred. He replied, in substance, that the roadbed and track were all right at that place and that the car did not sway, jump, or jerk. Counsel were permitted to cross-examine him and to lay the foundation for impeachment by asking if he did not say to them at a time and place indicated and in the presence of persons named that just before plaintiff left the car it jerked, lurched, and wobbled and that on numerous occasions at that part of the road the roughness of the track had caused the trolley to be thrown off the wire. Witness denied making such statements. Subsequently a motion was made to strike out all of Mr. Thum's testimony on the ground that it was elicited in the course of a cross-examination which plaintiff's counsel were not properly permitted to conduct as the witness (so defendant's counsel argued) had stated nothing to the detriment of the plaintiff's case. In ruling on the motion the learned judge who presided at the trial called attention to the fact that witness testified in a damaging way to plaintiff's case when he said the car did not swing nor sway and that therefore impeachment regarding that matter was perfectly proper if witness had made different statements before the trial. Regarding the cross-examination of the witness upon the subject of the presence of one woman in the car, the court said:

> "In reference to the other point, he testified first rather vaguely about whether there were one or two women on the car. I examined him then myself and the witness stated there was one woman on the car. I asked him, do you state that is a fact that there was one woman on the car, and he said, 'Yes.' * * * I assume that, before they get through, they will prove that there were two women there in connection with their case. If they do not prove that, that part of their evidence, that part of the impeachment, contradictory statements will be stricken out."

[4, 5] Afterwards when Mr. Welsh, of plaintiff's counsel, took the stand to testify with reference to the interview which he and Mr. Henry, his colleague, had with Mr. Thum, the court said:

> "In view of the testimony appearing that counsel for plaintiff has not attempted to prove that there were two women on the car at the time of the accident, and it developing that was not part of their case, nor the theory upon which they base their right to recover, the testimony of the witness Thum that there was only one woman on the car at the time of the accident was not contrary to their theory and was not adverse testimony, and the impeachment to that extent will not be permitted. The testimony on that behalf will be stricken out; the remaining portion of the testimony, however, may stand, as to the condition of the track and so forth, remains in the case; so any testimony by yourself, Mr. Welsh, will be limited to that."

The argument made by appellant is that this ruling did not strike out nor limit the ill effect of that part of the testimony which tended to show that the conductor was talking to a woman and neglecting his business. There is no force in this contention. The ruling was plenary and removed from the consideration of the jurors all of the testimony regarding the presence of a woman other than the plaintiff in the car, and consequently it also took from the jury all statements referring to a supposed conversation between her and the conductor. Impeachment of the witness upon his testimony that there was no jar nor unusual motion of the car at the time of plaintiff's injury was perfectly proper. Undoubtedly it is the rule, sustained by such authorities as People v. Jacobs, 49 Cal. 384, People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 529, 75 Pac. 101, and a score of others, that where a witness called by a party to an action has simply failed to testify as expected it is not permissible for the party calling him to prove that he had previously made statements which if sworn to at the trial would tend to support the case of the proponent of the witness. In order to justify such impeachment, the witness must give testimony against the party calling him. But that is just what Thum did. Called, and therefore indorsed by plaintiff, he not only failed to meet the expectation that he would say the track was rough and the movements of the car erratic, but he denied those very things, thereby entitling plaintiff to remove if possible, the impression that such testimony must have made. Section 2049, Code Civ. Proc.; Zipperlen v. Southern Pacific Co., 7 Cal. App. 206-214, 93 Pac. 1049.

[6] Appellant specifies as prejudicial error the giving of certain of the instructions. The court told the jury that:

> "Common carriers of passengers bind themselves to carry safely those whom they take into their cars, so far as human care and foresight will do so, that is, with the utmost care and vigilance of a very cautious person; and such carriers are responsible for any, even the slightest negligence."

By the instruction immediately preceding this one the jurors were informed that common carriers are required to do all that human care, vigilance, and foresight "reasonably can do under all the circumstances" to prevent accidents to passengers. Taken together, these instructions correctly state the law. They do not impute to the carrier the duties of an insurer, as appellant contends that they do, nor does the expression "responsible for any, even the slightest negligence," cut off appellant from the benefits of the law with reference either to contributory negligence or inevitable casualty. The degree of caution and care imposed upon a carrier of passengers is properly defined by the instruction. Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574-585, 22 Pac. 266, 5 L. R. A. 498, 13 Am. St. Rep. 175; Bosqui v. Sutro R. Co., 131 Cal. 390-401, 63 Pac. 682; Roberts v. Sierra Ry. Co., 14 Cal. App. 180-195, 111 Pac. 519, 527.

[7] Two other instructions are criticized, not because wrong in principle, but because they related in part to the duty of defendant in the management of the car—an issue which, according to appellant, had been abandoned. It is true that plaintiff had abandoned that count which related to defendant's alleged negligence in starting the car in such manner as to project plaintiff from the platform to the street, but the negligence averred in the other count did not exclude all questions regarding the operation of the car. The gist of the averred negligence was, indeed, the defendant's operation of its car over a track so rough and unsuitable that plaintiff a passenger, was thrown and injured. Therefore the instructions covering the duty of a common carrier in the operation of its cars were properly given.

[8] Another instruction contained the following as its opening sentence:

> "It is no defense to this action that the plaintiff by her own act has contributed to her injury; it must appear that by her own fault she has so contributed."

This language is followed by a statement of the rule requiring of a passenger only ordinary prudence, not very great care. Appellant's objection goes to the first sentence, which, as its counsel assert, informed the jury, in effect, that the defense of "contributory negligence" should be disregarded by them altogether. We discover no such vice in the quoted sentence. Indeed, it was very appropriate to the facts of this case as disclosed by the undisputed evidence. It was shown that plaintiff arose from her seat and prepared to alight from the car before reaching her destination. Assuming that she was thrown from the car by its unusual motion, it may be truly said that her acts of arising to her feet and leaving the part of the car in which she had been seated contributed in a sense to her injury, but it was for the jury to determine whether such acts were negligent or not, under all of the circumstances revealed by the evidence.

[9] The court gave the following instruction:

> "You are instructed that contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff cannot be presumed from the mere fact of injury but must be proved. On the other hand, proof of the injury, coupled with proof that it proceeded from a sudden, unusual or violent jerking, or swinging, or swaying of the car, while the plaintiff was preparing to alight, casts upon the defendant, the burden of proving that the injury, was occasioned by inevitable casualty or some other cause which human care and foresight could not prevent, or by the contributory negligence of the plaintiff." (The italics are ours.)

With the exception of the italicized portion, this is the same instruction condemned by this department in Steele v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 168 Cal. 375-377, 143 Pac. 718; but the addition of the words in italics rescues the instruction from the vice of the court's direction to the jury which we there reviewed. It is true that the mere injury to the passenger does not place upon the carrier the duty of explanation but the establishment of such injury, coupled with proof of coincident and causal collision, derailment, or other unusual happening to the car does cast upon defendant the burden of exculpation as indicated by the instruction.

[10] The giving of two other instructions is assigned as error. By one of these the jurors were told that:

> "The law does not prescribe any fixed or definite rule of damages, but leaves their assessment to the common sense and unbiased judgment of the jurors."

The other instruction was in the form approved in Ryan v. Oakland Gaslight & Heat Co., 21 Cal. App. 14-22, 130 Pac. 693—a case in which this court denied a petition for transfer. This court has frequently approved the statement in Aldrich v. Palmer, 24 Cal. 513-516, that:

> "In actions for personal torts the law does not attempt to fix any precise rules for the admeasurement of damages, but, from the necessity of the case, leaves their assessment to the good sense and unbiased judgment of the jury."

It is argued, however, that the instruction was erroneous because it ignored section 3283 of the Civil Code, which does, as appellant insists, prescribe a fixed and definite rule for the assessment of damages for detriment resulting after the commencement of an action in tort or certain to result in the future. It is true that the cited section does enumerate certain injuries for which compensation may be awarded, but the manner of assessment of such damages is no more definitely prescribed than in the instruction criticized. That instruction merely assigned to the unbiased judgment of the jury the assessment of the amount of damages, if any, to be awarded.

Error is predicated upon the modification by the court of proposed instructions and refusal to give certain proposed charges. We have examined these assignments and are satisfied that they are without merit. The charge to the jury was full, clear, and fair, and defendant was not injured by any of the rulings regarding which complaint was made.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 371)

LEONARD v. JAFFRAY. (L. A. 3606.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1917.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑972(5)—TAXATION—AFFIDAVITS TO ASSESSMENT ROLL.

Under an ordinance requiring the assessor to "take and subscribe an affidavit in the assessment roll," and that the city clerk must deliver the corrected assessment roll to the council with "an affidavit thereto affixed, subscribed and sworn to by him," where such affidavits, although signed, were not properly sworn to, the city had no jurisdiction to sell property so assessed for nonpayment of the tax; the proper authentication of the equalized assessment roll being made prerequisite to all future proceedings.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑972(5)—AFFIDAVIT TO ASSESSMENT ROLL.

Where an ordinance provided that the clerk's affidavit must be subscribed and sworn to and affixed to the corrected assessment roll, neither the prima facie evidence of the regularity of antecedent proceedings furnished by deed to the city nor the curative clause of the ordinance relating to informalities was available against a clear showing that the clerk failed to properly authenticate the corrected roll.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑980(4)—SALE FOR TAXES—ORDINANCE—"SUBSTANTIAL."

In view of Los Angeles City Charter, § 46, requiring collection and enforcement of municipal taxes to be in substantially the same mode as in case of state and county taxes, and Pol. Code, § 3897, requiring notice of sale for state and county taxes for three successive weeks, an ordinance providing for sale for municipal taxes upon only ten days' notice was invalid; such ten days' notice not being a "substantial" compliance with the charter and Political Code, for the length of time during which a notice must be given is quite as substantial as the requirement that notice must be given at all.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2127.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Substantial.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by R. W. Leonard against J. R. Jaffray. From judgment for plaintiff and order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

B. P. Welch and J. R. Jaffray, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Crouch & Crouch and Chas. S. Conner, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff sued to quiet title to the following described real property in the city of Los Angeles:

> "Lot 4, in Block 'H,' of Glassell's subdivision of part of lots 3, 6 and 7, in block 39, Hancock's survey as per map thereof on file in Book 6, page 138, of Miscellaneous Records, in the office of the county recorder of said county."

It was alleged that plaintiff was "the owner in fee and entitled to the possession of" the land. Defendant, Jaffray, answered, setting up his own possession and title, and also filed a cross-complaint to which plaintiff made answer. By his cross-complaint J. R. Jaffray asked to have his title to the property quieted as against Leonard's claims. The cause was tried partly upon stipulation and partly upon testimony and documentary proof. Judgment was in favor of plaintiff. From said judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial defendant and cross-complainant appeals. Some of the facts stipulated were that "R. N. Withnell was formerly the owner of said lot, and he transferred the title to his daughter, Grace E. Leonard, who died a widow, leaving no will, and leaving Richard W. Leonard her son and only heir at law, who is now the administrator of her estate"; that the city taxes upon the said lot for the year 1903 have never been paid except by way of sale of the lot; and that "certain proceedings were had in 1904 for the purpose of selling said lot to said city for nonpayment of said taxes of 1903, and in 1909 a deed was made to the city under such proceedings, there having been no redemption or repurchase of said lot from said city by any one." The purported deeds to the city and from the city to James R. Jaffray were stipulated into the record by copies, plaintiff admitting their execution, but reserving the right to make all legal objections to them. The final paragraph of the stipulation is as follows:

> "The right, title and interest of said James R. Jaffray in and to said lot is derived and deraigned through the several proceedings above mentioned and should it be made to appear that an essential element of such proceedings is wanting, and that the defect is incurable, then and in that case his title fails and he has no other interest in the lot than the amount he paid, provided such payment is found to be a legal claim against the same, and in case there has been a compliance with law in such proceedings, then and in that case all the right, title and interest of Richard W. Leonard or those through whom he claims, as administrator or in person, has been wholly divested and terminated, including all rights of redemption or repurchase from the city."

[1, 2] The most important question to be determined therefore is this: Did the city ever acquire title to the property through the tax proceedings? The court found the assessment for the year 1903 deficient and defective in this, that the assessor's affidavit as required by law was not attached to the assessment book. It was found that the assessment book contains what purports to be such affidavit in the form required by law and subscribed by the assessor, but it is not sworn to as in the statute required, before any officer entitled to administer an oath. The requirement of the ordinance under which the purported assessment of plaintiff's land was made is that on or before the first Monday of July in each year the assessor must "take and subscribe an affidavit in the assessment roll" in substantially a prescribed form. The ordinance further provides that the city clerk, who is ex officio clerk of the board of equalization, must record all changes, corrections, and orders made by the board, and on or before the last Monday of August must deliver the assessment roll so corrected to the council with "an affidavit thereto affixed, subscribed and sworn to by him" in a prescribed form. The required form was made out and signed by the clerk, but no jurat was attached to it. These omissions of the officers charged with the duty of authenticating the assessment were fatal to the acquiring of jurisdiction to sell the property to the city. Respondent depends upon the rule announced in Miller v. Kern County, 137 Cal. 516, 70 Pac. 549, and we can see no escape from the conclusion supported by that case that at least the proceedings following the clerk's omission properly to certify the equalized roll were invalid. It was said in that case that without the affidavit of the clerk affixed to the assessment book the auditor had no power to compute the taxes. True, the requirements of the ordinance were not exactly the same as those of the law considered in the Miller Case in that the roll was not passed to the auditor or other officer for extension of the levy after equalization, but the proper authentication of the equalized roll is none the less made prerequisite to all future proceedings. Neither the prima facie evidence of the regularity of the antecedent proceedings furnished by the deed to the city nor the curative clause of the ordinance relating to informalities is available against the clear showing that the clerk failed to authenticate the corrected roll as required by the ordinance. If the ordinance merely commanded that an affidavit should be taken and sworn to when the equalization of the taxes was completed, perhaps the appearance of the affidavit without a jurat might be cured by the presumption of regularity; but the ordinance requires that the affidavit must be subscribed and sworn to and affixed to the assessment roll. Without a proper jurat the writing in the record is not an affidavit at all, but amounts merely to a certificate. It is not even a statement on oath, and it entirely fails to measure up to the requirements of the statute. Metcalf v. Prescott, 10 Mont. 283–294, 25 Pac. 1037;

Cosner's Administrator v. Smith, 36 W. Va. 788, 15 S. E. 977; Gordon v. State, 29 Tex. App. 410, 16 S. W. 337.

It is to be noted that section 63 of the ordinance, which is called by counsel the "curative clause," is essentially the same as section 3885 of the Political Code, which was in effect when Miller v. Kern County, supra, was decided; yet a compliance with the terms of the statute requiring the subscription and attachment to the roll of an affidavit was held necessary in that case. Speaking of the affidavit of the clerk and that of the tax collector the learned commissioner who wrote the opinion in the Miller Case said:

> "These affidavits are in effect the certificate or authentication of the assessment as it leaves the county board of equalization and as made to conform to the requirements of the state board, and, we think, are essential to its validity."

[3] This court is also in accord with the contention of respondent that the ordinance, under which the attempt to sell the property for taxes was made, was in contravention of the charter of the city of Los Angeles. By this ordinance it was provided that before sale by the city of property which had been sold to it for municipal taxes the clerk should fix a date for such sale and give notice thereof by publication for at least ten days in a daily paper. The deed upon which appellant relies recites a publication for a period of only ten days. It also recites a posting for ten days, which is likewise in consonance with the ordinance. But the charter provides that the mode and manner of collecting delinquent municipal taxes and enforcing the tax lien shall "substantially be the same as the mode and manner at the time prescribed by law for the collection of state and county taxes." The same section of the charter (No. 46) contains the further provision that:

> "All such proceedings, sales, certificates and conveyances had, made and executed by them in pursuance thereof, shall be of like force, effect and validity as is or may hereafter be given by law to like proceedings and acts in the manner of the collection of state and county taxes in said county."

But by section 3897 of the Political Code the analogous notice concerning state and county taxes must be published in a newspaper for at least three successive weeks, and must be posted for at least the same period. The ordinance fails to measure up to the requirements of the charter provision. It is no answer to this point to say that when a taxing power has acquired private property by due process of law it may resell without notice to the former owner or may give such notice as in its discretion may seem proper. Appellant's position on this subject is met by the simple fact that the state has provided for notice and the manner of giving it. As Mr. Justice Lorigan said in delivering the opinion of this court in Smith v. Furlong, 160 Cal. 522–529, 117 Pac. 527, 530:

> "It is true, as said in Fox v. Wright, 152 Cal. 61, 91 Pac. 1005, that it is not necessary for the state after it has acquired the title to property under delinquent tax sales to provide for any notice to the delinquent owner that the state intends to sell the property; that it could provide for disposing of it at private sale. But the state has not pursued this course. It has provided that a sale shall be made by it after notice to the delinquent owner and provided how that notice shall be given."

Nor may it be justly said that the publication of the notice for ten days is a "substantial" compliance with the charter and the incorporated sections of the Political Code. The length of the time during which a notice must be given is quite as substantial as the requirement that notice must be given at all.

Appellant's counsel contend that without reference to the findings against the validity of the various proceedings through which he asserts title, nevertheless respondent should have no relief because he has traced title to the city through a deed resulting from delinquency in payment of valid taxes and has not proven any tender to the city of the amount for which he is delinquent. The title, as say counsel, stands in the city (unless conveyed by the city to defendant which plaintiff denies). Therefore, they argue, plaintiff under his own proof has no concern with defendant or his claims. As the proceedings leading up to the deed to the city were invalid there is no room for this contention.

Other findings of the court against the validity of the sale are analyzed in the briefs, but we need not discuss them because the errors to which we have adverted above were sufficient to prevent the acquirement of title by the city, appellant's alleged predecessor in interest, or in any view to make the attempted transfer to him of no effect.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 387)

In re CARR'S ESTATE.

In re FUHRMAN et al.

(S. F. 8084.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1917.)

1. Appeal and Error 🔑173(6)—Objection Below.

On appeal from decree of final distribution based on compromise of contest of testator's will, it could not be contended that the stipulation of compromise was invalid because no power of attorney was introduced to prove the authority of one who signed as attorney in fact and at law for contestees, where the decree affirmatively showed that the attorney was in court at the hearing, and there was no objection at that time to the manner or sufficiency of proof of the compromise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1088.]

2. Appeal and Error 🔑877(2)—Appeal by Executor.

An executor could not, on appeal from decree of distribution, contend that the court was without jurisdiction to distribute the assets of the estate except as directed in the will, since, as such executor, he had no interest in the manner of such distribution, being a mere stakeholder and not a party interested except in the appeal from that part of the judgment which denied him compensation for extraordinary services.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3563, 3564.]

3. Executors and Administrators 🔑497—Extra Compensation.

The trial court could not be said to have abused its discretion in denying an executor extra compensation for drawing an answer to contest of the will and in appearing at certain continuances of the hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 2117–2124.]

4. Appeal and Error 🔑151(6)—Parties Aggrieved.

Creditors of an estate of deceased beneficiary of a will of C., whose claims were not presented or litigated in the hearing on final distribution of C.'s estate under such will and a compromise of contest thereof, cannot appeal from the final distribution decree in C.'s estate, not being "parties aggrieved" within Code Civ. Proc. § 938.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 951, 952.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of William Joseph Carr, deceased. From judgment, order, and decree of distribution, Alfred Fuhrman, as executor, and others, appeal. Appeals of Alfred Fuhrman, as executor of the estate of Victory, of Alfred Fuhrman, as creditor of said estate, and the appeal of the city and county of San Francisco, dismissed. On appeal of Alfred Fuhrman as executor of the estate of Carr, judgment affirmed.

Alfred Fuhrman, Carl W. Mueller, Percy V. Long, City Atty., and Maurice T. Dooling, Jr., Asst. City Atty., all of San Francisco, for appellants. Adolphus E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents. Alexander D. Keyes, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ. Walter Perry Johnson, of San Francisco, for devisees of Alice Victory.

MELVIN, J. These appeals are from a judgment, order, and decree of distribution in the estate of William Joseph Carr, deceased. Alfred Fuhrman appeals as executor of the last will of said Carr, as executor of the last will of Alice Victory, deceased, and individually as a creditor of the estate of Victory. The city and county of San Francisco appeals as a creditor of the latter estate.

William Joseph Carr died testate on December 5, 1914. After proceedings duly had in that behalf Alfred Fuhrman, Esq., an attorney of this court, was appointed executor and qualified. By the terms of the will the three sons of the testator, John J., William T., and Walter R. Carr, were bequeathed each $1; to Maud R. Carr there was a bequest of $250; and the residue was left to Alice Victory, aunt of the testator, who at the time of William Joseph Carr's death was residing at the City and County Relief Home in San Francisco. On May 14, 1915, the three sons of the testator filed their petition for contest of the will after probate, alleging that at the time of making the purported will William Joseph Carr was mentally incompetent to make testamentary disposition of his property. The executor filed an answer to this contest, and after the matter was at issue trial was postponed from time to time until the last day of February, 1916, when Mr. Fuhrman, as executor, filed his first and final account with an accompanying report and a petition for settlement of said account and for distribution. In the petition, after referring to the pending contest, he used the following language:

> "The said executor has now been informed that said contestants desire to withdraw and dismiss said petition and contest—and desire this estate to be closed, because they have effected a compromise with the heirs of Alice Victory, deceased, the residuary legatee of the above-named deceased."

It appeared, further, from the petition that Alice Victory had died on the 5th day of June, 1915, and that Mr. Fuhrman had been appointed and had qualified as executor of her estate. Hearing of the petition was duly had. At said hearing it appeared that the sons of William Joseph Carr had entered into an agreement with the two legatees of the estate of Alice Victory deceased, who were James Caldwell, a nephew, and Edward Finley, a friend. By the terms of this writing it was stipulated that for and in consideration of the dismissal of the contest, the court was asked to distribute one-half of the assets of the Carr estate to John J. and Walter R. Carr, from which was to be deducted $100 to be paid in settlement of an unallowed portion of an undertaker's claim and $250, the legacy to Maud R. Carr. The contest having been dismissed, the court made its decree distributing one half of the assets of the estate of William Joseph Carr to the estate of Alice Victory, deceased, and the other half to the former contestants, subject to the agreed deductions. The court also denied Mr. Fuhrman's request for extra compensation for extraordinary services.

[1] Appellant Fuhrman, in his various capacities, contends that the stipulation between the contestants in the estate of Carr and the legatees in the estate of Victory is worthless because no power of attorney was introduced to prove the authority of Mr. Johnson, who signed as attorney in fact and at law for Alice Victory's beneficiaries. This contention is without merit. If any informality appears Mr. Fuhrman is not injured as he does not represent the persons apparently bound by Mr. Johnson's action. But the decree affirmatively shows that Mr. Johnson was present in court representing his clients and principals at the hearing, and there was no objection at that time on the part of any one to the manner or the sufficiency of the proof of the compromise.

[2, 3] It is next contended that the court was without jurisdiction to distribute the assets of the estate except as directed in the will. This objection is without merit. Alfred Fuhrman, as executor of the estate of Carr, has no interest in the manner of distribution of the assets of that estate. He is, as such executor, a party indifferent, and it is his duty to deliver the residue of the estate to the persons designated by the court. He is a mere stakeholder of the estate. Estate of Healy, 137 Cal. 474–478, 70 Pac. 455; McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 81–90, 70 Pac. 1008; Estate of Murphy, 145 Cal. 464, 78 Pac. 960; Jones v. Lamont, 118 Cal. 499, 50 Pac. 766, 62 Am. St. Rep. 251; Estate of Williams, 122 Cal. 76, 54 Pac. 386. There is an exception to this rule in a case where the assets would be depleted by the ordered distribution to such an extent that the executor could not pay the debts of the estate or where a personal liability would be imposed upon him by reason of his obedience to the court's orders (Estate of Murphy, supra), but the exception does not cover the case before us. The executor of the Estate of Carr, therefore, is not a "party interested" except in the appeal from that part of the judgment which denies him compensation for extraordinary services. The personal services of the executor which were outside of the usual ones rendered in the administration of an estate consisted in the drawing of an answer to the contest and in appearing at certain continuances of the hearing. We cannot say that the court abused its discretion in holding that the executor was entitled to no extra compensation for this work.

[4] As executor of the estate of Victory or as creditor of that estate Mr. Fuhrman has no standing as an appellant from the decree in the Carr estate, nor has the city and county the right to appeal therein for the reason that their claims were not presented nor litigated in the hearing. Estate of McDermott, 127 Cal. 450–452, 59 Pac. 783; Estate of Crooks, 125 Cal. 459, 58 Pac. 89. They had no claims against that estate, and their appearance here is based upon the assumption that under no conditions could the court distribute any part of the assets of the Carr estate except literally, as provided by the will. This, as we have seen, is erroneous. The court had jurisdiction to make the decree and the appellants connected with the estate of Victory have no place in the record of the Carr estate. It does not even appear by any record which we are authorized to accept that claims were allowed against the estate of Victory, nor that said estate is insolvent. There is printed in the transcript a certificate by the clerk of the city and county of San Francisco that two claims had been allowed and approved by the judge in that estate, one in favor of Alfred Fuhrman for $32, and the other in favor of the city and county for $1,195; but there is nothing to show that by pleading or otherwise either the indebtedness or the alleged insolvency of Alice Victory's estate was ever called to the attention of the judge at the hearing of the petition for distribution in the matter of the estate of Carr. Therefore, under the authorities last above cited, we must hold that the executor and creditors of the Victory estate are not "parties aggrieved" within the meaning of section 938 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Therefore the appeals of Alfred Fuhrman, as executor of the estate of Victory, of Alfred Fuhrman, as creditor of said estate, and the appeal of the city and county of San Francisco, are dismissed. As to Alfred Fuhrman, in his capacity as executor of the estate of Carr, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 361)

In re BROWNE'S ESTATE. (S. F. 7857.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1917.)

1. WILLS ⟹675—PRECATORY TRUST.

A will leaving the residue of testator's property to his son, "save and except I desire that he pay out of said property" certain sums to certain persons, did not create a precatory trust in favor of such persons.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1587–1589.]

2. WILLS ⟹675—PRECATORY TRUST.

Precatory words are not to be regarded as creating a trust unless it appear that the testator intended to impose an imperative obligation and to exclude the exercise of discretion on the part of the person to whom the recommendatory words are addressed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1587–1589.]

3. WILLS ⟹675—PRECATORY TRUST.

Where testator's desire that certain sums be given to certain persons is expressed, not to his executor, but to one of the beneficiaries under his will, it may be regarded only as a mere request, and not as partaking of the nature of a command.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. §§ 1587–1589.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Thomas H. Browne, deceased. From a portion of decree of distribution, Cora McGarvey and another appeal. Affirmed.

⟹For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

R. F. Mogan and M. M. Getz, both of San Francisco, for appellants. Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Cora McGarvey and Edith Johns appeal from that portion of the decree of distribution by which the entire residue of the estate, consisting of about $32,200, was distributed absolutely to Clarence W. Browne, a son of the testator; the theory and contention of appellants being that the will of Thomas H. Browne created a precatory trust in their favor.

In the will, after making in direct and positive language eight certain specific bequests to his collateral relatives, the testator used the following language:

> "All the rest and residue of my property of every kind, character and nature whatsoever, whether real or personal, I give and bequeath unto my beloved son, Clarence W. Browne, save and except I desire that he pay out of said property to Miss Cora McGarvey, the sum of two hundred dollars ($200.00), and to Miss Edith Johns the sum of two hundred dollars ($200.00)."

[1-3] Clearly the words above quoted are not sufficient to create a precatory trust in favor of the appellants. Whatever may be the rule elsewhere, "it is the settled law in California that precatory words are not to be regarded as creating a trust unless it appear that the testator intended to impose an imperative obligation and to exclude the exercise of discretion on the part of the person to whom the recommendatory words are addressed." Estate of Purcell, 167 Cal. 176-179, 138 Pac. 704, 705. This rule is derived from and supported by numerous authorities, including Estate of Mitchell, 160 Cal. 618, 117 Pac. 774; Estate of Marti, 132 Cal. 666, 61 Pac. 964, 64 Pac. 1071; and Kauffman v. Gries, 141 Cal. 295, 74 Pac. 846. It is to be observed that the testator's desire is expressed not to his executor, but to one of the beneficiaries under his will. Under such circumstances it may only be regarded as a mere request, and not as partaking of the nature of a command. Estate of Marti, supra; Estate of Pforr, 144 Cal. 121, 77 Pac. 825.

The judgment of final distribution from which the appeal is taken is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 377)

CAMERON v. AH QUONG et al. (S. F. 7292.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1917.)

1. Pleading 🔑369(1) — Intervention — Election Between Causes of Action.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 441, as to pleading several defenses, which applies as well to different counts in a complaint, and section 427, subd. 8, permitting joining causes of action growing out of the same transaction, intervener in ejectment need not elect between two causes of action in his intervention complaint, both asserting adverse possession, the second detailing the manner in which intervener entered and occupied, and, in addition to prayer for decree of the fee, asking for alternative relief by payment of intervener's mortgage thereon and taxes paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1199, 1200, 1203, 1204.]

2. Executors and Administrators 🔑444(1) —Intervention—Complaint.

In ejectment by executor, where the complaint fully avers plaintiff's status as executor, such status need not be averred in intervention complaint; the latter complaint being essentially defensive to plaintiff's claim of title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 1813, 1814, 1837-1841.]

3. Ejectment 🔑50—Intervention—Pleading.

In ejectment by an executor, an intervener alleging adverse possession under mortgage need not plead compliance with Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1493, 1500, as to presenting claims against estates, he not suing the executor's estate upon the mortgage notes, although asking for alternative relief that they be paid as a condition of his surrender of possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 139, 145.]

4. Appeal and Error 🔑867(3)—Scope of Review—Insufficiency of Complaint.

The alleged insufficiency of complaint in intervention may not be considered on appeal from order denying new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3479.]

5. Appeal and Error 🔑1050(1)—Harmless Error—Admission of Evidence.

The admission in evidence of an assignment of mortgage executed by one purporting to act as attorney in fact, without proof of his power of attorney, was not prejudicial where no sufficient objection was made to failure formally to prove such authority, and it appeared that the assignment had been executed and acknowledged in due form before a notary public.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1068, 1069, 4153, 4157.]

6. Evidence 🔑577—Testimony at Former Trial—Absence of Witness.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 8, allowing proof of the testimony in former action between the parties, of a witness out of the state, it was not abuse of discretion to admit transcript of testimony at such former trial of a Chinaman, where another Chinaman testified that such witness had departed for China nine years before, although the latter admitted that he was merely told of the former's departure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2406.]

7. Mortgages 🔑214 — Consent of Mortgagor to Mortgagee's Possession.

That assignee of mortgages was put in possession of the mortgaged land by the assigning second mortgagee in 1895, and, as owner and holder of the two mortgages, which, together with the assignment, were of record, openly held it personally or by tenants until commencement of ejectment in 1903, sufficiently showed the mortgagor's consent to such possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 492-496.]

8. Mortgages 🔑214—Consent of Mortgagor to Mortgagee's Possession.

Consent of the mortgagor to possession of the mortgaged premises by the mortgagee may be shown by circumstances as well as by direct evidence of formal and declared acquiescence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 492-496.]

9. Mortgages 🔑188—Possession by Mortgagee.

If a mortgagee obtain possession in any peaceful mode, he may retain it against the mortgagor or the latter's assignee until the mortgage debt is paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 469, 471–475, 479–481.]

10. Mortgages 🔑213 — Ejectment by Mortgagor Against Mortgagee.

Unless the mortgage debt is paid, a mortgagor may not maintain ejectment against his mortgagee who has obtained possession of the mortgaged premises in a peaceful mode.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 482–491, 1576.]

11. Pleading 🔑236(2)—Amendment.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 472, as to amendments of course, it was not abuse of discretion to refuse to plaintiff in ejectment permission to amend his answer to complaint in intervention to plead limitations and that there had been no accounting by intervener for rents and profits of the property; the motion coming after the cause had been in litigation many years and had once been considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 601.]

12. Appeal and Error 🔑1010(1)—Sufficiency of Support by Findings.

Where there are clear and sustained findings to uphold the judgment, this is sufficient, notwithstanding insufficiency of evidence to sustain immaterial findings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3979–3981, 4024.]

13. Appeal and Error 🔑231(8)—Specific Objection.

Plaintiff in ejectment, in appealing from judgment making certain mortgages a lien on his property, could not for the first time urge lack of formal evidence of their nonpayment, where his specifications of error failed to recite in what particulars the findings of nonpayment were insufficient, and the cause had evidently been tried on the theory the mortgages had not been paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 1439; Trial, Cent. Dig. § 194.]

14. Appeal and Error 🔑867(4)—Findings.

The objection that a finding is not one of fact, but a conclusion of law, cannot be raised on appeal from an order denying motion for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3481.]

15. Appeal and Error 🔑867(4)—Scope of Review—Conclusions of Law Not Supported by Findings.

Contentions that certain conclusions of law are not supported by the findings are not available to one appealing from denial of motion for new trial; he not having proceeded under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663, 663½, as to motions to vacate judgment because conclusions of law are not supported by findings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3481.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Ashley D. Cameron, executor, against Ah Quong; Chin Shin intervening. From denial of plaintiff's motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Welles Whitmore, of San Francisco, for appellant. F. H. Short and F. E. Cook, both of Fresno (Carl E. Lindsay, of Fresno, of counsel), for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

This is the second appeal in this case, the first having been decided by the District Court of Appeal of the Second District (Cameron v. Ah Quong, 8 Cal. App. 310, 96 Pac. 1025). The issues as originally framed and the judgment given are thus set out in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal:

> "Action in ejectment. The plaintiff alleges ownership of the lands in dispute and ouster by the defendant, and prays for restitution of said premises, for damages for withholding the same, and for the sum of $1,750 as the value of the rents and profits from January, 1898, to and including a portion of the year 1903.
>
> "The defendant, Ah Quong, answering the complaint, specifically denies the material averments thereof, and then pleads the bar of the statute of limitations.
>
> "Chin Shin intervened, and as a first cause of action sets up title to the lands in dispute by adverse possession, and alleges that the defendant, Ah Quong, holds possession of the same as his tenant; and as a second cause of action intervener alleges that he is the owner of two certain mortgages subsisting against the premises, and of which he acquired ownership by purchase from, and assignment by, the respective mortgagees, and that by reason of his said ownership of said mortgages the 'plaintiff is not entitled to the judgment in this action prayed for by him, or to any relief whatever.'
>
> "The plaintiff interposed an answer to the first cause of action set out in intervener's complaint, denying in detail the material allegations thereof, and moved to strike out the second count in said complaint on the ground, among others, that it 'does not allege possession or right of possession.' The court refused to grant the motion to strike out the alleged second cause of action, and the plaintiff made no answer thereto.
>
> "Upon the issues thus made up, a trial was had, and a judgment rendered that the plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of the lands in controversy, and that he be given possession thereof, 'provided that before he shall be entitled to have actual possession or occupation of said lands and premises, or any part thereof, or any right to any writ or process out of this court to place him in possession thereof, he, said plaintiff, shall first pay to said intervener, said Chin Shin, the full amount of the principal sums and accrued interest due to said intervener under the terms and provisions of said two mortgages owned by said intervener and as set forth in the findings of the court herein,' etc."

The original judgment was reversed solely because the intervener failed to allege possession of the property which was the subject of the litigation.

When the cause went to the superior court for another trial the intervener filed his third amended complaint in intervention in which it was alleged that, with the consent of the mortgagors, the intervener more than five years prior to the commencement of this action entered into and continuously has since held possession of the land in dispute, that he has cultivated it, and that he has paid, satisfied, and discharged all taxes upon it. His pleading contains the further averment that he held the property under an agreement with the mortgagors that his possession should remain undisturbed until the payment and satisfaction of the mortgages, and that, if the said mortgages should not be paid and satisfied, the intervener should have, hold, and possess for himself the fee simple to the property.

Like its predecessors, this amended complaint included a plea of title by adverse possession in the second cause of action, and in the setting forth of both causes it was averred that defendant Ah Quong occupied the premises as the intervener's tenant.

The plaintiff answered the third amended complaint in intervention, denying the allegations therein contained with respect to possession, and making other denials which, as respondent insists, were so ambiguous as not to be real traverses of the averments which they were designed to meet—a contention which we will have occasion to discuss further.

The second trial resulted in a judgment that plaintiff was not entitled to recover any sum whatever against defendant or intervener by way of rents, profits, or damages, that the intervener was entitled to have paid to him the sums of $1,000 and $2,500, with interest on two certain notes secured by two described mortgages, and that he be maintained in full possession of the property until such payment and all of it be made. It was further adjudged that plaintiff should have and recover possession of the land in controversy provided he should first pay to the intervener the sums of money and interest thereon due under the terms of said mortgages.

[1] Appellant says that the two causes of action pleaded in the third amended complaint in intervention are antagonistic, and that intervener should have been compelled to elect upon which of them he intended to depend. Two motions seeking to have the court require such election were made by appellant. Both were denied by the court, and these rulings were correct. The two causes of action which were pleaded were not so antagonistic as to require the intervener to reject one of them before trial or previous to judgment. In the statement of each cause of action the intervener asserted that he had acquired title by adverse possession, but in the second he set forth in detail the manner in which he obtained entrance to the property and maintained his occupancy thereof. He asked for judgment decreeing that he was the owner in fee, but there was an alternative prayer that, if plaintiff's right to recovery of the land should be found to exist, the court should impose as a condition to intervener's surrender of the property, the payment by the plaintiff of the amounts due on the notes, secured by the mortgages, and the repayment of the taxes which the intervener had paid. Clearly the two causes of action arose out of the same transaction, and, even if they were antagonistic, the pleading would be governed by the provisions of section 441, Code of Civil Procedure. It is true that the cited section treats of the setting forth of inconsistent defenses, but the same rule has been held to apply to different counts in a complaint. Stockton Combined Harvester & Agricultural Works v. Glens Falls Insurance Co., 121 Cal. 167–171, 53 Pac. 565; The Code also expressly permits the joining of causes of action growing out of the same transaction (section 427, subd. 8, Code Civ. Proc.), and election will not be ordered by the court in such cases. Remy v. Olds, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 240, 34 Pac. 216, 21 L. R. A. 645; Estrella Vineyard Co. v. Butler, 125 Cal. 232–234, 57 Pac. 980; Tanforan v. Tanforan, 159 Pac. 709–711.

[2-4] Appellant asserts that the pleading of intervener's second cause of action is of no validity because said complaint in intervention does not aver the presentation for allowance to Cameron's executor of a claim, based upon the two mortgages nor the rejection of such a claim, and because there is no allegation of Annie L. Cameron's death and the qualification of Ashley D. Cameron as executor of her will. The second contention is unsound because the appellant fully averred his status as an executor in his own pleading by which this action was inaugurated, and is scarcely becomes him to complain of the absence of a similar allegation from the complaint in intervention which in its essence is defensive to appellant's assertion of title in and right to possession of the land. There is no merit in the argument that respondent had no standing as a litigant in such an action as this until and unless he had complied with the provisions of sections 1493 and 1500 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The intervener has not sued for nor has he obtained judgment against the estate of Annie L. Cameron, deceased, upon the promissory notes set forth in his pleadings, nor has he asked or obtained a decree foreclosing the mortgages. On the contrary, the executor of that estate has a judgment against intervener, entitling said executor to possession of the land in controversy when he shall do equity by paying the amounts due on the mortgages. There was no demurrer to the complaint in intervention, and the cause was evidently conducted upon the same theories of the respective litigants as those which appeared in the original trial. Besides, the alleged insufficiency of the complaint may not be considered on an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186; Bode v. Lee, 102 Cal. 583, 36 Pac. 936; Rauer v. Fay, 128 Cal. 523, 61 Pac. 90; Swift v. Occidental Mining & Petroleum Co., 141 Cal. 161, 74 Pac. 700; Coburn v. California Portland Cement Co., 144 Cal. 81, 77 Pac. 771; Sharp

v. Bowie, 142 Cal. 462, 76 Pac. 62; Bell v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 144 Cal. 560-562, 77 Pac. 1124.

[5] Appellant calls special attention to the alleged error in admitting in evidence the purported assignment of the mortgage for $1,000 given by M. J. and J. W. Laymance to William Frisbie Lewis. The assignment of this mortgage to Chin Shin bears the name of "William Frisbie Lewis, by Irving C. Lewis, his attorney in fact." Appellant insists that the assignment was not admissible until after proof of the existence of Irving C. Lewis' power of attorney from William Frisbie Lewis. When the instrument with the assignment was offered this objection was not made. Appellant did object on the ground of irrelevance, etc., and on the further ground "that it does not appear to be an assignment by William Frisbie Lewis. It appears," said counsel, "to be an assignment by William Frisbie Lewis by Irving C. Lewis, his attorney in fact." That is just what it appeared to be, and counsel's objection did not amount to anything more than the statement of an obvious fact. He made no objection based upon failure formally to prove Irving C. Lewis' authority to act as attorney in fact. It did appear, however, that the assignment had been executed and acknowledged in due form before a notary public. Under these circumstances we cannot see that appellant was injured by the court's ruling.

Appellant's counsel discusses in his brief certain alleged errors in connection with the trial of the first cause of action, but, as the court found against respondent upon his alleged title by prescription, these matters have become immaterial to the discussion of the pending apeal.

Nor was the appellant injured by the admission in evidence of the power of attorney from respondent to Chin Bock Guy and Chin Kin Yow. After calling attention to the fact that this power of attorney was not used by Chin Bock Guy in leasing the premises to the defendant, Ah Quong, counsel asserts that its admission in evidence was prejudicial error without explaining why. There was no serious error in its admission.

[6] The court permitted the intervener to read in evidence the transcript of the testimony given at the former trial by Ah Quong. Appellant specifies this as error upon the ground that the proper foundation for the introduction of this testimony was not laid. The only witness upon the subject of Ah Quong's departure was Joe Dun, who upon direct examination testified positively that Ah Quong was in China. On cross-examination he said that Ah Quong had departed for China nine years before. Witness admitted that he neither accompanied Ah Quong nor saw him go on board the boat, but was told of his departure. While the proof of the absence of the witness from the state was not very strong, we cannot say that it was entirely insufficient to justify the ruling admitting the testimony. No absolute rule may be stated with reference to the sufficiency of the showing required to justify the introduction of a deposition or of testimony given at a former trial. 13 Cyc. 990. We cannot say that the court abused its discretion in admitting the testimony upon the proof of absence offered under the authority given by the eighth subdivision of section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[7-10] The substance of appellant's motion for nonsuit, which was denied by the court, was the asserted failure of intervener to show that he was in possession of the property with the consent, approval, and knowledge of plaintiff. The motion was properly denied because the evidence was amply sufficient to show such possession. Intervener was put in possession by Mr. Chapman, one of the mortgagees, in 1895. He took the land as owner and holder of the two mortgages, which, together with the assignment were of record, and personally or by tenants he held the land openly until the commencement of this action in 1903. Consent of the mortgagor may be shown by circumstances as well as by direct evidence of formal and declared acquiescence, and it was fully proven here. If a mortgagee obtain possession in any peaceful mode, he may retain it against the mortgagor or the latter's assignee until the mortgage debt is paid. Cooke v. Cooper, 18 Or. 142, 22 Pac. 945, 7 L. R. A. 273, 17 Am. St. Rep. 709. And in California it is settled that a mortgagor may not maintain ejectment against his mortgagee unless the debt is paid. Spect v. Spect, 88 Cal. 437-443, 26 Pac. 203, 13 L. R. A. 137, 22 Am. St. Rep. 314; Faxon v. All Persons, 166 Cal. 707-720, 137 Pac. 919, L. R. A. 1916B, 1209; Raggio v. Palmtag, 155 Cal. 797, 103 Pac. 312. These and other authorities to the same effect were discussed in the opinion in Cameron v. Quong, supra (the former appeal in this case decided by the District Court of Appeal), and the court stated that the evidence appeared clearly to disclose that the equities of the case were decidedly with the intervener. Our examination of this record brings us to the same conclusion.

[11] Appellant's counsel applied during the trial for permission to amend his answer pleading the statute of limitations and setting up the fact that there had been no accounting for the rents and profits of the property. The motion was taken under advisement and was never the subject of a formal ruling by the court. But, even if we should regard the court's failure to act as tantamount to a denial of the motion, we cannot say that the court abused its discretion by such denial, because the motion came after the cause had been in litigation for many years and had once been considered on appeal. Section 472, Code of Civil Procedure, did not give appellant a right to file such an amendment as of course. Manha v. Union Fertilizer Company, 151 Cal.

581, 91 Pac. 393. There being no pleading by which an accounting of rents and profits by intervener was demanded, it follows that the court did not err by failing to decree such an accounting.

[12] Insufficiency of the evidence to sustain certain of the findings is specified by appellant. Most of them are immaterial findings upon which the judgment does not rest. For example, let us take the findings that the amount of rents and profits from 1898 is not the sum alleged or any other sum, and that the taxes were paid by the intervener. These were not material to the judgment as rendered. While some of the criticized findings may be characterized as "lame and inconclusive," there are clear and sustained finding to uphold the judgment. Such support is sufficient. American National Bank v. Donnellan, 170 Cal. 9-15, 148 Pac. 188.

[13] For the first time on appeal the argument is made that no evidence was offered at the trial regarding the nonpayment of the two mortgages. The complaint in intervention positively alleges nonpayment, and the denial is only upon information and belief. The cause was evidently tried upon the theory that the mortgages had not been paid. But appellant may not take advantage of any alleged lack of formal evidence of nonpayment because his specifications of error fail utterly to recite in what particulars the findings of nonpayment are insufficient. Heilbron v. Kings River, etc., Co., 76 Cal. 11, 17 Pac. 933; Green v. Green, 103 Cal. 108, 37 Pac. 188; Parker v. Reay, 76 Cal. 103, 18 Pac. 124; Anthony v. Jillson, 83 Cal. 296-299, 23 Pac. 419; Wise v. Wakefield, 118 Cal. 107-109, 50 Pac. 310; De Molera v. Martin, 120 Cal. 544, 52 Pac. 825.

[14] There was a finding that in 1899 Chin Shin began an action to foreclose the mortgage for $2,500, that in 1902 a judgment of dismissal was made and entered therein, but that said judgment was not a final adjudication of the rights of the parties. That there was such an action and that it was dismissed for failure to prosecute and because summons was not served within three years from the commencement thereof were facts appearing in evidence. The finding is attacked, however, as being not one of fact, but a conclusion of law. Even if it be conceded that this is a conclusion of law which is improperly labeled a finding, it is not for that reason vulnerable to attack on appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

[15] The contentions that certain conclusions of law are not supported by the findings are not available to plaintiff on this appeal; for he did not proceed under the provisions of sections 663 and 663½ of the Code of Civil Procedure. Shafer v. Lacy, 121 Cal. 574, 54 Pac. 72; Patch v. Miller, 125 Cal. 240, 57 Pac. 986; Swift v. Occidental Mining and Petroleum Company, 141 Cal. 161, 74 Pac. 700.

The order denying appellant's motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 391)

WINCHESTER v. WINCHESTER.

(Sac. 2262.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 8, 1917. Rehearing Denied July 5, 1917.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE 🔑267(1)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY — CONVEYANCE WITHOUT WIFE'S CONSENT.

Under the direct provisions of Civ. Code, § 172, a husband's deed of community property, made without consideration, is not binding upon his wife.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 896, 929, 930, 936.]

2. EVIDENCE 🔑390(5) — PAROL EVIDENCE — DEED.

While parol evidence is admissible under Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 2, to prove a deed's real consideration, yet it is inadmissible to show that a deed passing the fee title on its face was intended to reserve certain rents to the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1726.]

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE 🔑254 — COMMUNITY PROPERTY—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Property deeded to a husband upon his agreement to pay the grantor or his wife a specified annual sum, held a purchase, and not a gift, and the land becomes community property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 897-899.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by Sarah A. Winchester against George E. Winchester. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. M. Boardman, of Susanville, and Louis P. Boardman, of San Francisco, for appellant. R. M. Rankin and Grover C. Julian, both of Susanville, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action by the plaintiff Sarah A. Winchester, in her own behalf and as administratrix of the estate of L. E. Winchester, her husband, against the defendant to cancel a deed executed by her said husband during the marriage, purporting to convey to the defendant George E. Winchester a certain tract of land acquired by L. E. Winchester during the said marriage, and to declare that the plaintiff is the owner of said land. Judgment was given for the defendant. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

[1] The plaintiff and L. E. Winchester were married in 1884, and thereafter they lived together as husband and wife until the death of L. E. Winchester, on March 1, 1912.

L. E. Winchester acquired the land on November 21, 1906, by deed from his father, Elliot Winchester. The deed recited a consideration of $300. The conveyance by L. E. Winchester to George E. Winchester was made on February 29, 1912, without a valuable consideration, as a gift to George, and without the written consent of the plaintiff. It is the claim of the plaintiff that the land was community property, and that the deed of the husband thereof having been made without consideration, was not binding upon the wife, but may be avoided by her. This would be the effect of such a deed, under section 172 of the Civil Code. This action was brought to assert this claim.

[2] The defendant admitted the making of the deed of gift by L. E. Winchester to George E. Winchester without the consent in writing or otherwise of the wife, but asserted that the deed from Elliot Winchester to L. E. Winchester whereby the latter acquired title to the land was a gift from the grantor to the grantee, in consequence whereof said land became the separate property of L. E. Winchester instead of community property, wherefore, he says, the deed of gift by L. E. Winchester to him, being of the separate property of the husband, was valid and free from interference by the plaintiff as the surviving wife of L. E. Winchester. The question whether it was community property, or the separate property of L. E. Winchester, is the point at issue upon this appeal.

On November 21, 1906, Elliot Winchester and L. E. Winchester executed a contract in writing whereby L. E. Winchester agreed to pay to Elliot Winchester annually as long as the latter should live, the sum of $300, and in case the wife of said Elliot survived him, to pay said wife an additional sum of $300 after his death; in consideration whereof the said Elliot Winchester agreed to convey to L. E. Winchester the tract of land in controversy, in fee simple. Contemporaneously with the execution of this contract, and as a part of the same transaction, the deed was executed by Elliot Winchester to L. E. Winchester. Evidence was offered and admitted over the objection of the plaintiff to the effect that in the conversation between the parties leading up to and immediately preceding the execution of said contract and deed, the parol understanding was that Elliot Winchester should make a gift of the property to L. E. Winchester, but should reserve the rents and profits thereof, so long as Elliot lived, and that the contract and deed were executed to carry out this intention to make a gift and reserve the rents and profits. It was upon this evidence that the defendant based his claim that the conveyance from Elliot Winchester to the plaintiff's husband was a deed of gift, the effect whereof would be that the property became the separate estate of said husband, and not the community property of the marriage.

The defendant's theory is that, although the evidence was not admissible to vary the terms of the deed so as to change or defeat its effect as a conveyance of the title to the land, nevertheless it was properly admissible to contradict the recital of the deed as to the consideration thereof and to show the real consideration. If this were the only effect of the evidence it might have been competent. But it was not the only effect. Parol evidence is admissible to show that the true consideration of a contract was not that which the contract recites, that it was something different, either a different valuable consideration, or a good consideration such as love and affection, instead of the valuable consideration recited. Code of Civil Procedure, § 1962, subd. 2. But evidence of this character cannot be allowed, in the case of a deed, "when thereby the legal operation of the instrument to pass the entire interest according to the purpose therein designated would be defeated." Hendrick v. Crowley, 31 Cal. 475; Mowry v. Heney, 86 Cal. 475, 25 Pac. 17. The conveyance from Elliot Winchester to L. E. Winchester, being in form a grant, bargain, and sale deed, its legal effect, according to its terms, was to immediately pass from Elliot Winchester to L. E. Winchester the entire title in fee simple to the land described, the present absolute ownership thereof. Civil Code, §§ 1105, 762, 679. The fee-simple estate thus passed included the present absolute right to all the rents and profits, free from any and every claim of the grantor thereto. The effect of the evidence introduced, if it could have the effect intended by the respondent, would be that instead of the deed being a conveyance of the entire fee, it would be a conveyance with a reservation to the grantor, during his lifetime, of the rents and profits of the land conveyed, to the amount of $300 a year. To the extent of the reservation of the rents during the life of the grantor, which constituted a substantial part of the fee-simple estate which the deed by its terms purported to convey, the agreement shown by parol evidence would have defeated the conveyance. Under the rule above stated it was incompetent and inadmissible for that purpose. The court below erred in so far as its decision was based on this parol evidence. The rights depend on the effect of the deed and the agreement aforesaid.

[3] This writing was not a contract for the execution of a deed to L. E. Winchester as a gift with a reservation of rents during the lifetime of the grantor, or otherwise. It was a contract of purchase whereby L. E. Winchester agreed to pay to Elliot Winchester each year of the latter's life the sum of $300, and to the wife of Elliot, if she survived, an additional sum of $300, in consideration whereof Elliot Winchester agreed to convey the land in controversy to L. E. Winchester in fee simple. By the terms of the writings, therefore, and they are binding upon the parties, it was not a deed of gift, but a purchase of land, for a valuable consideration, made during the existence of the marriage relation, and it was to be paid for and was paid for out of the earnings of the husband and wife during the marriage. It would therefore be community property. The fact that the payments may have been made out of the profits of the land would not alter the effect of the transaction in this respect. The profits derived from land so purchased would constitute earnings of the community, and would be community property.

The court should have concluded that the property was the community property of the spouses, and that the plaintiff was entitled to have the deed canceled in so far as her interests were concerned, and to have adjudged to her the interest to which she was entitled under the law by reason of the fact that the community real estate had been given away by the husband, during the marriage, without her written consent. Whether her right extends to the whole estate, or only to the share which she would take of the community property by inheritance, is a question not discussed, and which we cannot now consider.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; LAWLOR, J.

(175 Cal. 284)

CITY OF SAN JOSE v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al.

(S. F. 7961.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 4, 1917.)

1. RAILROADS 🔑99(5)—GRADE CROSSINGS — SEPARATION OF GRADES—POWER OF RAILROAD COMMISSION.

A city which had elected, in accordance with Const. art. 12, § 23, as to the Railroad Commission, and St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 168, as to such election, to transfer to the Railroad Commission the city's control over public utilities, could not claim that Public Utilities Act (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 18) § 43, authorizing the Commission to prescribe the proportions in which the expense of grade separation at a railroad crossing shall be divided between the railroad and municipality, was unconstitutional as giving the Commission power to impose upon the city an obligation to pay money from its treasury, contrary to Const. art. 11, § 13, prohibiting the delegation to any commission of power to interfere with any municipal improvement, money or property, or Const. art. 11, § 6, as to state control of municipal affairs, since Const. art. 12, §§ 22, 23, by their plenary provisions, exclude all consideration of other parts of the Constitution conflicting with the Public Utilities Act, where the matters treated by that statute are cognate and germane to the subject of the regulation of public utilities, as is the matter of apportionment of the expense of a railroad crossing grade separation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 298, 300–303.]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑309(1) — RAILROADS 🔑99(5)—DUE PROCESS—HEARING BEFORE RAILROAD COMMISSION.

Nor could such a city, where it had actually appeared and had a hearing before the Commission and opportunity for review, object that the omission of the statute in terms to provide for service of process or notice upon the city, being an omission to provide for due process, deprived the Commission of power to acquire jurisdiction over the city, since not only is such power to summon and hear parties interested necessarily involved in the judicial authority enjoyed by the Commission, but, by section 53 of the statute, power to prescribe rules of practice and procedure is conferred on the Commission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 929, 930; Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 298, 300–303.]

3. RAILROADS 🔑99(5)—GRADE CROSSINGS—SEPARATION OF GRADES — ORDER OF RAILROAD COMMISSION.

The Railroad Commission's order of apportionment between city and railroad of grade separation expense was not invalid as failing to require the railroad to obtain a franchise from the city for such crossing as a prerequisite to grant of authority to cross such street, where the order did not assume to enumerate all the conditions with which the railroad must comply.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 298, 300–303.]

In Bank. Original application by the city of San Jose for writ of review against the Railroad Commission of the State of California and another. Writ of certiorari dismissed.

Earl Lamb, of San Jose, for petitioner. Douglas Brookman, of San Francisco, for respondent Railroad Commission. Henley C. Booth and George D. Squires, both of San Francisco, for respondent Southern Pac. Co.

MELVIN, J. Certiorari to review the order of the Railroad Commission in the matter of the Southern Pacific Company's application for permission to construct and maintain certain crossings in the city of San Jose. The Southern Pacific Company proposed to cross 35 streets and highways intersecting its contemplated route which it intends to construct for the greater part on its private right of way. The order of the Railroad Commission grants the railroad corporation permission to cross 34 of the streets and highways at grade. Regarding the thirty-fifth crossing at West Santa Clara street commonly known as "The Alameda" an order was made that the Southern Pacific Company might have permission to construct its tracks only upon condition that there should be a separation of grades. The city of San Jose seems to concede that if a crossing is proper at this point, the grades should be separated, but vigorous attack is made upon that part of the decision of the Railroad Commission, which is as follows:

"The expense of caring for its tracks during the course of construction and laying its tracks in the subway after its completion, together > with all expenses incident thereto, shall be borne by San Jose Railroads. All other expense except that in connection with the track work of the Southern Pacific Company, shall be borne fifty (50) per cent. by Southern Pacific Company, thirty-five (35) per cent. by City of San Jose and fifteen (15) per cent. by Santa Clara County or the State Highway Commission, as the legal rights in the premises of the two latter parties may hereafter appear."

This order is attacked upon the grounds (1) that the Railroad Commission exceeded its authority and jurisdiction in determining that the city of San Jose should bear a proportion of the cost of this crossing; and (2) that the order is unlawful because it does not require, as a prerequisite to the granting of the permission to cross "The Alameda," that the railway corporation should obtain a franchise from the city of San Jose.

In accordance with the provisions of section 23, art. 12, of the Constitution and by the procedure furnished by the act of 1911 (Statutes Extra Session 1911, p. 168), San Jose has elected to transfer and has passed to the Railroad Commission the city's control over public utilities. Therefore, as counsel for the Railroad Commission reminds us, this proceeding does not present the issue of a conflict between state and municipal powers by which we were confronted in City of Los Angeles v. Central Trust Company of New York, 159 Pac. 1169. In his concurring opinion in that case, Mr. Justice Henshaw said:

> "Touching a public utility operating wholly within the corporate limits of a municipality, no reason can be perceived why its regulation and control might not, with propriety, be intrusted to the municipal authorities; but the condition is very different where the operations of the utility extend beyond the boundaries of a city and where its services are rendered to several, or to many other communities and cities. In such cases it is manifest that the welfare of all concerned (of the utility, of the public and of the state) is best conserved by placing the whole control under a single board or commission (in this state, the Railroad Commission) empowered to adjust all questions which may arise, in the light of all interests entitled to consideration."

[1] We have here, therefore, a surrender by the city of San Jose, under the Constitution and the appropriate statute of the control over public utilities which was formerly exercised by that municipality. In the exercise of that authority, so conferred, the Commission finds ample warrant for its order in section 43 of the Public Utilities Act:

> "(a) No public road, highway or street shall hereafter be constructed across the track of any railroad corporation at grade, nor shall the track of any railroad corporation be constructed across a public road, highway or street at grade, nor shall the track of any railroad corporation be constructed across the track of any other railroad or street railroad corporation at grade, nor shall the track of a street railroad corporation be constructed across the track of a railroad corporation at grade, without having first secured the permission of the Commission; provided, that this subsection shall not apply to the replacement of lawfully existing tracks. The Commission shall have the right to refuse its permission or to grant it upon such terms and conditions as it may prescribe.
>
> "(b) The Commission shall have the exclusive power to determine and prescribe the manner, including the particular point of crossing, and the terms of installation, operation, maintenance, use and protection of each crossing of one railroad by another railroad or street railroad, and of a street railroad by a railroad, and of each crossing of a public road or highway by a railroad or street railroad and of a street by a railroad or vice versa, subject to the provisions of section 2694 of the Political Code, so far as applicable, and to alter or abolish any such crossing, and to require where, in its judgment, it would be practicable, a separation of grades at any such crossing heretofore or hereafter established and to prescribe the terms upon which such separation shall be made and the proportions in which the expense of the alteration or abolition of such crossings or the separation of such grades shall be divided between the railroad or street railroad corporations affected or between such corporations and the state, county, municipality, or other public authority in interest."

But petitioner contends that this provision is unconstitutional in that it gives to the Railroad Commission power to impose upon the city of San Jose an obligation to pay money from its treasury. It is argued that section 13, art. 11 which prohibits the Legislature from delegating to any commission power to interfere in any way with any municipal improvement, money, or property, is a distinct limitation upon the Legislature which prohibits it from allowing the Railroad Commission to appropriate, in effect, money from the treasury of the city of San Jose. Section 6 of the same article is invoked as an inhibition against state control of municipal affairs. To the latter objection the obvious answer is that the people of the city by solemn and orderly election have surrendered their right to control in this sort of municipal affairs. That right has not been taken away by the Legislature, but by legislative permission has been vested by the people of San Jose in the Railroad Commission. Having thus abdicated their police powers with respect to the regulation of public utilities, the people of that city have lost such protection as might, under other circumstances, be afforded by the parts of the Constitution cited in their behalf because sections 22 and 23 of article 12, by their plenary provisions, exclude all considerations of other parts of the Constitution, if any there be, conflicting with or contradictory to the Public Utilities Act, if only the matters of which that statute treats are cognate and germane to the subject of regulation of public utilities. Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 137 Pac. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822. In the opinion in that case, which was prepared by Mr Justice Henshaw, the following language was used at page 658 of 166 Cal., at page 1125 of 137 Pac. (50 L. R. A. [N. S.] 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822):

> "We regard the conclusion as irresistible that the Constitution of this state has in unmistakable language created a Commission having control of the public utilities of the state, and has authorized the Legislature to confer upon that Commission such powers as it may see fit, even to the destruction of the safeguards, privileges, and immunities guaranteed by the Constitution to all other kinds of property and its owners."

Upon the same subject, Mr. Justice Sloss, delivering the concurring opinion, said (166 Cal. 702, 137 Pac. 1143, 50 L. R. A. [N. S.] 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822):

> "If the Railroad Commission has acted in conformity with the powers granted to it by the Legislature, the validity of its order cannot be questioned in this court or elsewhere under a claim of violation of any provision of the state Constitution other than the provisions relating to the Railroad Commission. This statement is, however, to be taken subject to the qualification that the powers conferred by the Legislature on the Railroad Commission must be such as are cognate and germane to the purposes for which the Railroad Commission was created; i. e., the regulation and control of public utilities."

That the control of the manner of constructing railroad crossings is a vital and material part of the regulation of railroads and is germane to that subject is too evident to need supporting argument. The right of apportionment of the cost by the Commission to the parties benefited by the crossing is a proper element of this cognate power. That a city receives benefit from a safety device such as that here contemplated may not be doubted. In Town of Polk v. Railroad Commission, 154 Wis. 523, 143 N. W. 191, the court was considering a question very like the one presented to us here. The Railroad Commission had made an order for the construction of an overhead crossing to span the tracks of a railroad. By the order the town was required to bear 10 per cent. of the cost of construction. This part of the order was attacked by the town on the ground that the duty of making crossings of highways safe rested upon the railroad corporation. The attack was unsuccessful, the court holding that "the Legislature in the exercise of its police power had a perfect right to enact the law," and, further, that it was "neither inequitable nor illegal to require the owners of the three public highways involved to contribute to the expense of the overhead crossing."

In a later case, Milwaukee v. Railroad Commission, 162 Wis. 127, 155 N. W. 948, the city of Milwaukee sought to have vacated and declared of no force an order of the Railroad Commission apportioning to the municipality a certain percentage of the cost of establishing separation of grades at designated crossings. The order was upheld, and in the opinion written by Mr. Chief Justice Winslow we find an answer to the argument advanced by the representative of San Jose in this proceeding that the railroad company creates the dangerous condition at street crossings, and that it should therefore bear the entire expense of removing the peril to the users of the highways by the establishment of separated grades. We quote from the opinion as follows:

> "The law seems to be the fruit of an honest and enlightened attempt on the part of the Legislature to deal equitably and fairly with a great municipal problem. Milwaukee has during the last half century become a great and prosperous city. Its greatness and prosperity have come because of its commerce, and its commerce has come largely because of its railroads. Without them Milwaukee as we know it today would not exist. The growth of the city and of the railroads has been coincident, interdependent, inseparable, and from this growth has arisen the great danger of the grade crossing. Why should not the expense of removing that danger be equitably shared by the different agencies whose joint growth has brought it about?"

The Court of Appeals of New York took occasion to express similar views. In re Erie Railroad Co., 208 N. Y. 486, 102 N. E. 562, was a proceeding in which the court was reviewing the action of the Public Service Commission in making an order which failed to recognize that part of the statute by which the Commission was directed to apportion the cost of crossings not at grade between the railroad, the municipality and the state. Upon this matter the court spoke, in part as follows:

> "We see no reason why equitably and properly the expense of a construction for avoiding a grade crossing by a new track, which is necessarily connected with and results in the elimination of an existing grade crossing, should not be divided between the two purposes thus accomplished, and properly apportioned so far as the latter feature is concerned."

See, also, People ex rel. Town of Scarsdale v. Public Service Commission, 173 App. Div. 164, 159 N. Y. Supp. 48.

[2] Petitioner insists that as the statute does not in terms provide for service of process or notice of any sort upon the city, or that the city's rights be examined at any hearing, the Railroad Commission might well take the property of the municipal corporation without due or any process of law. It is said that the statutory omission deprives the Commission of the power to acquire jurisdiction of the city for the purpose of imposing liability for the cost of the improvement, and that as jurisdiction may not be imposed by consent, the argument of petitioner is not met by the fact that the city actually did have notice and was heard by the Commission before the judgment and award were made. We do not regard the omission to provide definite process to bring the city before the Commission at a hearing on the necessity for a safe crossing as being fatal to the acquirement of jurisdiction over the municipality by the Commission. The latter is both a court and an administrative tribunal. As a judicial body it has by implication all the powers necessary for the exercise of its duty. The city of San Jose does not complain that it had no day in court. It had notice to appear; actually did appear and was heard upon issue joined and evidence produced; and it had opportunity for review of the judgment. But aside from the power to summon and hear parties in interest, one which is necessarily involved in the judicial authority enjoyed by the Commission, section 53 of the Public Utilities Act confers upon it power to prescribe rules of practice and procedure. Action has been taken under this authorization, and it is shown that in the controversy between the city and the public service corporation these rules were followed.

[3] Petitioner's remaining point is that the Commission acted in excess of its jurisdiction in failing as a prerequisite to the grant of any authority to the Southern Pacific Company to cross certain specified streets in the city of San Jose, to require the said company to obtain a franchise from the municipality for such crossing. There is no merit in this point. The order of the commission did not assume to enumerate all of the conditions with which the public service corporation must comply before being permitted to cross the streets in question. Whether or not a franchise to be granted by the city was requisite for the extension of the tracks across the streets, the Commission was not called upon, and we are not now called upon, in this proceeding, to determine. In the exercise of the police power conferred upon it, the Commission was merely deciding how the safety of the public should be best preserved when the crossings should be made, if the contemplated extension should be consummated. The order was prospective both in its terms and its scope.

The writ of certiorari is dismissed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.

HAMILTON v. WARNEKE. (No. 9099.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. May 7, 1917.)

Error to County Court, City and County of Denver; William C. Hood, Jr., Judge.

Attachment by Robert Hamilton against the Commerce State & Savings Bank, in which E. A. Warneke intervened, claiming the attached fund. From a judgment for the intervener, discharging the garnishee, plaintiff brings error. Application for supersedeas denied, and judgment affirmed.

E. L. Clover, of Denver, for plaintiff in error. Henry Howard, Jr., of Denver, for defendant in error.

WHITE, C. J. Warneke sold a threshing machine to one Wheeler, receiving in payment therefor notes secured by a chattel mortgage. These notes were made payable to the order of one Rohder, to whom Warneke was indebted. As between Rohder and Warneke it was agreed that the former should hold the notes as security for the debt of the latter; and thereafter, Warneke having paid the debt, Rohder indorsed the notes and redelivered them. Subsequently Warneke made arrangements with one Clayton to assist him in securing a small loan of the Commerce State & Savings Bank; Clayton being acquainted with the officers thereof, which was not the case with Warneke. Thereupon the two called at the bank and executed their joint note for a loan, and Clayton, who had possession of the Rohder notes, indorsed the same and they were handed to the bank as collateral security to the aforesaid note for the loan; Warneke at the time telling the cashier that the Rohder notes were his, though his name did not appear thereon. Clayton, with the consent of Warneke, negotiated with the maker of the notes for payment of the same, offering a substantial discount, but had no negotiations in that regard with the plaintiff. The plaintiff, learning of the effort of Clayton to sell the notes at the price designated, which had been communicated to the bank, and the bank authorized to deliver the notes upon receipt of a designated sum, paid the purchase price thereof to the bank, received the notes, and instantly garnished the money in the hands of the bank as the property of Clayton. The notes were at all times the property of Warneke, and, he having intervened in the attachment suit, the court so found, discharged the garnishee, and rendered judgment accordingly. It is this judgment that is involved here, and which the plaintiff in error seeks to have reversed.

We think the findings of the court, which are in substance as above stated, were amply supported by the evidence. Hamilton acquired title to the notes, but the money which he paid therefor, less the lien held thereon by the bank, belonged to Warneke, and at the time of the levy Clayton had no interest therein. The proceedings were in all respects regular, and the findings of the court proper.

The application for supersedeas will therefore be denied, and the judgment affirmed.

HILL and TELLER, JJ., concur.

(96 Wash. 698)

STATE v. MOUNTAIN TIMBER CO.

(No. 12560½.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. July 16, 1917.)

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Cowlitz County; Wm. T. Darch, Judge.

Action by the State of Washington against the Mountain Timber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeals. Affirmed.

Edmund C. Strode, of Lincoln, Neb., Imus & Gore, of Kalama, and Coy Burnett, of Portland, Or., for appellant. W. V. Tanner, Atty. Gen., and John M. Wilson, of Olympia, for the State.

PER CURIAM. This case involves the same issues as those presented in State v. Mountain Timber Co., 75 Wash. 581, 135 Pac. 645, which was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of error. In a recent decision by that court (Mountain Timber Co. v. State of Washington, 243 U. S. 219, 37 Sup. Ct. 260, 61 L. Ed. —) the decision of this court was affirmed.

For the reasons stated in both cases above referred to, the judgment herein is affirmed.

(97 Wash. 698)

In re SEWARD PARKE AVE. IN CITY OF SEATTLE. (No. 13814.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. May 22, 1917.)

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, King County.

In the matter of the petition of the City of Seattle for laying off of a public street to be known as Seward Parke Avenue, as provided by Ordinance No. 32174. Judgment affirmed.

Winfield R. Smith, of Seattle, for appellant. Alfred H. Lundin and Edwin C. Ewing, both of Seattle, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Counsel have filed a stipulation herein whereby it is agreed that, as identical questions are involved, the disposition of this case shall be controlled by our decision in In re Northlake Avenue, 165 Pac. 113.

For this reason, the judgment herein is affirmed.

(97 Wash. 700)

WEAVER v. ROHRER. (No. 13763.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 11, 1917.)

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County.

Action by Henrietta Weaver against G. A. Rohrer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Danson, Williams & Danson, of Spokane (Geo. D. Lantz, of Spokane, of counsel), for appellant. Harry L. Cohn, of Spokane, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Action for malpractice in the treatment of a Colle's fracture. The only assignments of error are based upon the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. Having read the record, we are unable to say that there is no evidence to justify a recovery. It would serve no good purpose to recite the evidence which sustains the verdict. It is enough to find that while, as in most cases of this character, the evidence is conflicting, there is competent evidence to the effect that appellant's treatment of respondent's arm was improper, and that as a result respondent suffered damage.

The case having been fairly submitted to the jury upon a plain question of fact, the judgment must stand.

(33 Cal. App. 545)

SHOENHAIR v. JONES. (Civ. 2228.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 27, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 26, 1917.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑523 — ACTION BY HOLDER—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action by holder of a note, evidence held sufficient to justify inference that title was regularly acquired by plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1822–1825.]

2. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑209—TRANSFER WITHOUT INDORSEMENT.

Where heirs of assignee of a note sent the note to plaintiff, it was not necessary that a formal indorsement or assignment in writing be executed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 423, 425–427, 497, 498, 501.]

3. BILLS AND NOTES 🔑139(3)—CONSIDERATION—SURRENDER OF PRIOR NOTE.

The surrender of a prior unpaid note is sufficient consideration for the making of a renewal note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 340, 350–354.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by George J. Shoenhair against S. A. T. Jones. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Shepard & Alm, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Hanson, Hackler & Heath, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. The suit was on a promissory note executed by the defendant to the plaintiff. The appeal is from the judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff, and is presented on the judgment roll and a brief bill of exceptions.

[1] The only point argued in the briefs is that raised by the appellant, who insists that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding of the superior court as to any consideration having been rendered to the defendant in exchange for the making of the instrument sued upon. This defendant originally made her note payable to two persons named Gardner and Cowan, who assigned the same to Clara Wherry without recourse. Clara Wherry died, and this first note appeared in the hands of plaintiff who, after negotiation with the defendant, accepted the note here sued upon in lieu of the note made at the prior time, and surrendered the former note. The point in appellant's argument arises wholly upon the construction to be given to testimony furnished by the plaintiff. The plaintiff first testified that he was "the owner and holder of the note" and as to the amount which had been paid thereon, and that the note was made in consideration of the surrender of the prior note as before mentioned. He then, identifying that prior note which was shown to him, testified as follows:

> "That is the note which I surrendered to the defendant in this action in consideration of the execution and delivery of the note set forth in the complaint. At the time of the execution and delivery of the note set forth in the complaint Mrs. Clara Wherry was dead. * * * The estate of Clara Wherry was never probated and no executor or administrator of her estate was ever appointed. Mrs. Wherry gave me the note for $400 before she died, but she never indorsed or assigned the same to me. As a matter of fact the note had been in my possession during all the time that Mrs. Wherry owned the same and I was her agent, and held it as such. When Mrs. Wherry died I sent the note for $400 and the mortgage given to secure it to her relatives in the East; they sent it back to me."

[2, 3] We think the court was justified in inferring from this testimony that title to the note was regularly acquired by the plaintiff from Mrs. Wherry. It was not necessary that there should have been a formal indorsement or assignment executed in writing. Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, vol. 1, § 28 (last paragraph); Ogden on Negotiable Instruments, p. 98; Humboldt M. Co. v. N. W. Pac. Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 181, 135 Pac. 503. Assuming, as we think was properly decided, that the plaintiff was the legal owner and holder of the first note, it will not be necessary to cite authority to such an elementary proposition that the surrender of that note, which had not been paid, furnished full consideration for the making of the obligation here sued upon.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

(33 Cal. App. 550)

WHITE v. HAYWARD. (Civ. 2223.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 28, 1917.)

1. Exchange of Property 🔑8(4)—Misrepresentations — Reliance — Evidence — Sufficiency.

Evidence held to sustain finding that one party to an exchange of real property did not rely upon the representations made to her by the other party, but made an independent investigation for herself.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. § 17.]

2. Trial 🔑397(2)—Findings of Fact—Unnecessary Findings.

Where the matters which are found necessarily defeat the plaintiff's right of recovery, it is unnecessary that the findings should dispose of any further issues.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 941.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Mary L. White against Homer T. Hayward. From an order denying motion for new trial after judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. E. Bledsoe, of San Bernardino, for appellant. I. W. Bull and J. E. Burnham, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The only questions presented are as to whether certain of the findings are in accord with the evidence and as to whether certain issues are found upon at all.

The action was brought to rescind an executed contract of exchange and for damages, the subjects of the exchange being certain real property of the appellant, situated in California, and certain notes held by the respondent and which were secured by mortgages on real property near Ft. Morgan, Colo. Judgment went for the respondent. The negotiations leading up to the trade were held at Pomona, Cal., and the rescission was asked because of certain misrepresentations claimed to have been made by respondent concerning the Colorado property, in his endeavor to bring about the exchange. The nature of these representations it is not necessary to mention, as the trial court found with appellant that they were not true. It was further found, however, that "plaintiff did not rely on each, all, or any of the representations made by the defendant," and it is to the question of the propriety of this finding that we must first give attention, as it is one of the findings assailed by appellant.

The appellant herself, speaking of her first interview with respondent on the subject of the proposed trade testified as follows:

> "He gave me the address of a bank at Ft. Morgan, and some real estate agents' names, but I do not remember the names. The bank, I think, was the First National. This was about the last of December, 1910, or the first of January, 1911, and I told Mr. Hayward I would investigate, and if I found the land and mortgages as represented, we would come to some agreement, and we agreed to meet at Mr. Burnham's office. * * * A short time after that, a week or two later, in answer to a telephone message, I went to Mr. Burnham's office, in Pomona, * * * and met Mr. Hayward again. In the meantime I had spoken to Mr. Kennedy, an officer in the bank at Pomona, where I do business, the First National, and had him write > to the Ft. Morgan bank as to the value of these securities. I do not remember whether I got any report from him about it before I agreed to the trade or not, but I never saw any letter he received. I remember getting some information some time that had come to Mr. Kennedy, but I don't remember just what it was, because before I had obtained it, either the trade was made or I had decided to make it. * * * When I went to Mr. Burnham's office, Mr. Hayward was there, or else he soon came in. I told him I had decided to make the trade, and we signed up an agreement."

On her cross-examination the appellant testified further:

> "At the time of our first meeting and just before he left Mr. Hayward told me to investigate the values of the mortgages and the lands described in them, and gave me the name of the First National Bank of Ft. Morgan, Colo., to write to, to ascertain the character of the lands and the values of the mortgages, and some weeks later it was agreed that 15 days more to investigate the character of the lands and the values of the mortgages should be given me."

The agreement signed at Mr. Burnham's office set forth the terms of the trade, and contained this provision:

> "Mary L. White to have 15 days to investigate values of property covered by said mortgages."

One of appellant's witnesses, who was present at her first interview with respondent, testified that Mrs. White "said that if she found the property was as he represented that she would make the trade."

The testimony produced on the part of the respondent amplifies what is above quoted from appellant's case, and but a small part of it need be mentioned, considering the extent to which appellant's own case gives support to the finding in question. Respondent says that his first interview with Mrs. White occurred in the early part of December. He then says, inter alia:

> "She asked for references, and on the back of another of my business cards I gave her the name of the First National Bank of Ft. Morgan, the Morgan County National Bank, the Home Savings Bank, Mr. Dunn and Mr. Layton, who were real estate men, and Mr. Farnsworth, who was the county treasurer."

He further says that their next meeting was about ten days later, and that appellant then said to him:

> "I have considered this proposition, and it looks reasonably favorable to me."

The parties met again, according to respondent, in the first week in January, at Mr. Burnham's office, the conference evidently being the same one which appellant says was held at that place. Mr. Hayward states what there occurred:

> "She said 'I am ready to trade with you.' I said to her, 'Mrs. White, have you made a thorough investigation of the Colorado property?' and she said, 'I have not received an answer to the last inquiry yet.' Then I said, 'I will put my property in escrow, leaving you the privilege of withdrawing this at any day or moment that you see fit, without even the thought of calling me up; if you find that the Colorado property is not as you expect, you may withdraw from this without any preliminaries at all. We will draw up the contract, and I will put my stuff in escrow that will bind me and not you.'"

It was then that the contract was drawn allowing appellant 15 days for further investigation as to the value of the Colorado property.

The record also shows that Mr. Kennedy, who is mentioned in the testimony of appellant, wrote to the First National Bank at Ft. Morgan concerning the Colorado property, and the letter is reproduced in the transcript. Mr. Kennedy testified:

> "We got an answer, and showed it to her. I think we gave her the letter. We asked as to the value of the lands, and the answer seemed satisfactory as to values and to Mrs. White."

[1] We have been at some pains to quote from the record, as the finding upon this particular question controls the case; but we need not go further, although there is other evidence in support of the finding. It is plain that Mrs. White desired to make an independent investigation in the premises, that, after a considerable time spent in negotiation and apparent investigation, she contracted for a further delay for the purpose of making additional inquiry, and that she expended that time in such inquiry. Under such circumstances, a finding that she did not rely upon the representations of respondent was amply justified, even though her testimony, as shown in the record, contains the statement that she did rely on them.

[2] There are five other findings of the trial court to which appellant takes exception, but what is found in them upon the issues which they purport to cover is of no moment, as such issues were upon matters subordinate to and which are controlled by the very proper finding that the appellant did not rely upon the representations made by respondent. "Where the matters which are found necessarily defeat the plaintiff's right of recovery, it is unnecessary that the findings should dispose of any further issues, as all other issues thereby become entirely immaterial." Smith v. Dubost, 148 Cal. 622, 84 Pac. 38.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

(33 Cal. App. 554)

CONKLIN v. WOODY. (Civ. 1839.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 28, 1917.)

1. COUNTIES 🔑54—POWERS OF BOARD OF SUPERVISORS—EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL—STATUTE.

Under Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 16, authorizing boards of supervisors "to direct and control the prosecution" of suit "to which the county is a party, and, by a two-thirds vote of all the members, [to] employ counsel to assist the district attorney in conducting the same," such board may not delegate authority to the district attorney or any other person to make the employment, but must pass a resolution declaring its determination so to do and specifying the name of the person employed and the terms of the employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 71, 72.]

2. COUNTIES 🔑113(5)—POWERS OF BOARD OF SUPERVISORS — EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL — STATUTE.

Under Pol. Code, § 4041, subd. 16, it is beyond the power of a board of county supervisors to subject a county to any expense for the employment of counsel to act in criminal cases.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 174, 179.]

3. OFFICERS 🔑100(1)—INCREASE OF COMPENSATION—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

The employment by a county board of supervisors of counsel to assist the district attorney in the prosecution of criminal cases would increase the compensation of the district attorney in violation of the Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 152, 153, 155–157.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Mandamus by N. E. Conklin against S. A. Woody. From a judgment directing the issuance of a mandate against the defendant, he appeals. Reversed.

Matthew S. Platz, of Bakersfield, for appellant. N. E. Conklin, of Bakersfield, in pro. per.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment directing the issuance of a mandate against the defendant requiring him as auditor of the county of Kern to draw a warrant in favor of the petitioner in payment for services and certain expenses incurred as described in the demand of petitioner filed and approved by the board of supervisors of said Kern county.

On the 2d day of March, 1915, the board of supervisors of Kern county, by more than a two-thirds vote, adopted the following resolution:

"It appearing to the satisfaction of the board that the communication delivered to this board on the 10th day of February, 1915, from the district attorney, discloses the situation supported by facts that make it necessary, in order to have the cases now pending in our superior court and which were pending at the time the present district attorney entered upon his duties, promptly and diligently prosecuted, as the law requires, in connection with the handling of the current business of the county, that it will be necessary for the district attorney to incur expense in the employment of special prosecutors or counsel, and it further appearing from said communication and from facts within the knowledge of this board that action should be instituted for the recovery of penalty upon bonds given to the county on bail for present fugitives from justice and under liquor licenses revoked, and the board being of the opinion that it would be in the interest of the county to have this work done forthwith, and such expense incurred therefor, be it therefore resolved that the necessity for incurring of said expense exists, and that the district attorney be, and he is hereby, authorized to incur for the purpose of employing not exceeding three special prosecuting attorneys or counsel for a term or terms not to exceed three months, not to exceed $125 per month for each of such prosecutors or counsel, such services to be rendered in the prosecution of criminal cases and prosecuting of suits upon said bonds."

Pursuant to the authority alleged to have been conferred under this resolution, the district attorney employed petitioner, and he later filed his demand with the board of supervisors. The demand was itemized as required by law, the first item of which was for rental of an automobile in traveling from Bakersfield to Taft:

"In investigation and searching for evidence in criminal case of People v. Aden, $10.00."

The second was of a like kind for automobile use to certain points in Kern county and itemized as being:

"In case of People v. Reigan, expense of district attorney's office $15.00."

The last item was stated as follows:

"To services as special prosecutor and counsel in prosecution of criminal cases and in prosecution of suits upon bonds, being bail bonds and liquor bonds, said claim being for services rendered for and during March, 1915, per resolution of the board of supervisors, $125.00."

By this appeal two questions are made as against the judgment: (1) That the board of supervisors was without power to delegate to the district attorney the right to employ special counsel for any purpose in either civil or criminal cases; (2) that the board of supervisors was without power to make any employment of special counsel, except for the purposes of suits to which the county was a party.

[1] Among the enumerated powers of boards of supervisors as contained in section 4041, subd. 16, Political Code, such boards are authorized "to direct and control the prosecution * * * of all suits to which the county is a party, and, by a two-thirds vote of all the members, may employ counsel to assist the district attorney in conducting the same." A provision in like terms has been contained in the various county government acts in force for many years. By this provision a board of supervisors is authorized to contract with outside counsel and employ such counsel for the purpose of assisting the district attorney in conducting "suits to which the county is a party." The authority is not given to the board to authorize some other person to make the employment. We apprehend that it would be essential, where such employment is made, that the board of supervisors pass a resolution declaring its determination so to do and specifying the name of the person employed and the terms of the employment. The resolution first recited herein does not purport to make an employment with any person for any of the purposes specified. Therefore we think that the claim as presented by petitioner was not one which the board was authorized to allow.

[2] For the purpose of considering the second point made, we may assume (our conclusion being to the contrary, however) that the employment of petitioner by the district attorney was regular, and that the board of supervisors could in the manner attempted delegate its authority. There is the further limit placed upon the power of the board to be exercised in that direction, to wit, that it may only employ counsel to assist the district attorney in "suits to which the county is a party." County of Modoc v. Spencer, 103 Cal. 498, 37 Pac. 483. From the resolution as adopted by the board it appears that the employment intended to be authorized was a general one, and that it was intended to give the district attorney the right to have assistance at the cost of the county for the prosecution of criminal cases, as well as in suits to recover the penalty upon various bonds. It was beyond the power of the board of supervisors to subject the county to any expense for the employment of counsel to act in criminal cases.

[3] Moreover, by so doing the compensation of the district attorney would be increased, which is forbidden by the Constitution. The itemized claim filed by petitioner shows that the services for which he claimed compensation of $125 were services rendered in both criminal cases and in the prosecution of suits upon bail and "liquor" bonds. It may have been that the expense incurred for auto hire could have been properly allowed as contingent expense of the district attorney authorized to be paid by section 4307 of the Political Code, but the board of supervisors was not advised by the statements contained in the demand of petitioner as to how much of the $125 claimed was for services in criminal cases for the allowance of which no authority of law existed.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

(33 Cal. App. 566)

STEPHENS et al. v. WEYL-ZUCKERMAN & CO. (Civ. 1559.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 2, 1917.)

1. Sales 🔑179(3)—Delay in Delivery—Waiver of Right to Claim Damages.

By insisting upon delivery of goods, after seller's delay, failing to demand penalty, and accepting goods, the buyer did not waive right to recover damages for the delay, although by such action he might waive the right to rescind the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 458.]

2. Sales 🔑81(1)—Construction of Contract—Time of Delivery.

Where the seller expressly stipulated to complete construction of a boat "two weeks after arrival of the engine, but in no event later than June 1, 1914," time of delivery was of the essence of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 217.]

3. Sales 🔑150(3)—Recovery of Damages for Delay in Delivery—Time of Essence of Contract.

A buyer's right to recover just compensation for delay in delivery after accepting goods is not affected by the fact that time was not of the essence of the contract in view of Civ. Code, § 1492, providing that where time is not of the essence of the contract, and where delay in performance is capable of exact compensation, an offer of performance accompanied by an offer of compensation, may be made at any time after it is due, but without prejudice to creditor's rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 356.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Norton, Judge.

Action by Theodore J. Stephens and another against Weyl-Zuckerman & Co. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. C. Campbell, Weaver, Shelton & Levy, of San Francisco, for appellant. Daniel V. Marceau, of Stockton, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. [1] The action is for the balance due for the construction by plaintiffs of a gasoline launch under an express contract requiring the payment by defendant of the sum of $1,550, and providing that the launch should be completed on June 1, 1914. The boat was not ready on time, but was accepted by defendant, which claimed, however, that it was entitled to a rebate or recoupment in consequence of the damage caused by the delay. It was, though, found by the court that there was a waiver of any such claim and the real controversy revolves around this consideration. The basis for the court's conclusion is found in these facts:

> "Defendant, with knowledge of the fact that said launch would not be completed in the time specified by said contract, did not insist upon any penalty from plaintiffs but urged them to rush said launch to completion. That plaintiffs did rush said launch to completion. During the period prior to August 8, 1914, in which payments were made as hereinafter set forth, defendant did not at any time threaten plaintiffs for any penalty for their failure to deliver the boat on time but rather urged plaintiffs to complete the boat as soon as possible; that plaintiffs did complete the boat as soon as possible; that prior to August 8, 1914, defendant raised no objection as to the failure of plaintiffs to complete the same on June 1, 1914."

We think, however, that the learned trial judge failed to distinguish between the right to rescind or abandon the contract and the right to insist upon compensation for the damage caused by the delay. The former was undoubtedly waived, but the other legal privilege was unaffected by the acts detailed in said finding. The distinction between the two methods of redress as to waiver is quite clearly shown by the authorities. In Crocker-Wheeler Co. v. Varick Co., 43 Misc. Rep. 645, 88 N. Y. Supp. 412, the subject of litigation was a contract to furnish and install two elevators. The trial judge held that the conduct of defendant "in urging plaintiff to continue and hurry completion of the work and finally accepting the same when performed and paying therefor a large part of the stipulated price thereof" was a waiver of damages for the failure to complete the work within the prescribed time. It was determined, however, by the appellate division that the defendant waived simply any right it might have asserted to plead the delay as a defense to an action for the agreed price, the court saying as to the other question:

> "It did not, however, thereby waive its right to counterclaim for any actual damage it might have suffered by reason of the delay. * * * The error into which the court below fell was in treating defendants' acquiescence in the completion of the contract as a waiver of damages for nonfulfillment, instead of only a waiver of any defense to a claim for the contract price."

In Howard et al. v. Thompson Lumber Co., 106 Ky. 566, 50 S. W. 1092, appellant agreed to build a tramway and haul logs for appellee. Compensation was to be paid as the work progressed, but a certain percentage thereof was to be retained and appellants' rights thereto forfeited if they did not perform as agreed. In an action by appellants, the defense of tardy performance was pleaded and appellee responded by alleging a waiver. In the course of the opinion it was stated that after the failure to furnish the logs within the time agreed upon, appellee "continued to receive and pay for the logs delivered and urged defendants to go on with their contract." The court, after quoting from Lawson on Contracts, declared:

> "Appellee, in accepting the logs actually delivered, and paying therefor, and in urging and encouraging appellants to go ahead with the work, waived its right to claim the forfeiture of the 10 per cent. on monthly settlements and the 75 cents per thousand feet for failure to complete the tramway, and appellants are entitled to maintain this action to recover the amount due them under the contract for logs actually delivered; but appellee is entitled to recoup by way of set-off or counterclaim damages sustained on account of the failure of appellants to keep their contract, unless such failure was occasioned by the fault of appellee."

The Supreme Court of this state declared the same principle in Bryson v. McCone, 121 Cal. 153, 53 Pac. 637, as follows:

> "But consent on the part of plaintiff that defendants might continue the work after the stipulated time was not a waiver of damages or of the breach. Upon the breach plaintiff, not being himself in default, had the right to rescind or permit the defendants to complete the work and sue for damages occasioned by the default."

It was similarly held by the Supreme Court of Michigan in Buick Motor Co. v. Reid Mfg. Co., 150 Mich. 118, 113 N. W. 591, wherein the defendant urgently insisted upon the delivery of the goods contracted for after the stipulated time had expired; by the Supreme Court of the United States in Phillips & Co. v. Seymour, 91 U. S. 646, 23 L. Ed. 341, wherein it was stated that upon a contract for the sale of personal property to be delivered upon a certain day it might be received afterward and the vendor could recover for it, but that the vendee might recoup by setting up a cross-demand for damages for the delay; by the Supreme Court of Michigan in Pittsburgh Co. v. Scully, 145 Mich. 229, 108 N. W. 503, wherein it was held that defendant, by receiving and paying for coal that was not promptly shipped, did not waive the claim for damages because the coal was not promptly delivered. Many other cases to the same effect are cited by appellant, and they seem to recognize the rule as of general acceptance. The justice of this view is affirmed in Page on Contracts, vol. 3, p. 2320, upon the ground that:

> "The party not in default is often constrained by his necessities to take what he can get under his contract when he can get it. Such conduct does not and should not operate as a waiver of the right of action for damages."

We can perceive no just ground for holding that any of the facts recited by the court, or all combined, should operate as a waiver of the right to claim whatever damages accrued to appellant by reason of the failure on the part of respondents to keep their engagement. Assuredly, the failure to demand a penalty or to use threatening or acrimonious language is no evidence of a relinquishment of this right. The effort to induce respondents to complete the work as speedily as possible and the payment of the several installments as they were due were entirely consistent with the purpose of claiming whatever might be due defendant under the contract. It was the duty of appellant to make the payments as called for, and its urgency as to the completion was evidence of good faith and a desire to save respondents as well as appellant from unnecessary loss.

Some cases are cited by respondents which, it is claimed, support the view of the lower court, but upon examination they appear disappointing and inadequate for the purpose. In Eyster v. Parrott, 83 Ill. 517, it seems the only waiver related to "the right to demand a forfeiture of the work already done" and the court allowed the defendant the damages which he had suffered by reason of the delay in completing the building. The question of the right to recover damages for delay did not arise in Paddock v. Stout, 121 Ill. 571, 13 N. E. 182, Tidwell v. Southern Engine Works, 87 Ark. 52, 112 S. W. 154, or Stiewel v. Lally, 89 Ark. 195, 115 S. W. 1134. The right to recover damages for delay was recognized in Davis v. Fish, 1 G. Greene (Iowa) 406, 48 Am. Dec. 387, but it was held that certain considerations were too remote and speculative to be regarded in determining the loss. Therein it was stated:

> "But the rule is settled beyond question, that if a job of work is of some use and value to the employer, or vendee, though improperly done, or not within the stipulated time, still the workman or vendor is entitled to recover as much as the work is reasonably worth, making such reasonable allowance as the cir> cumstances may require. * * * In connection with this point it may be appropriately observed that in case of a breach of such specific contract, if the injured party can protect himself from damage, he is bound to do so if practicable, at a moderate expense, or by ordinary efforts; and he can charge the delinquent party for such expense and efforts only, and for the damages which could not be prevented by the exercise of such diligence."

The decision in Medart, etc., Co. v. Dubuque, etc., Co., 121 Iowa, 244, 96 N. W. 770, turned upon an agreed settlement of the claim for damages evidenced by a complete payment, but it was held that partial payment and acceptance alone did not constitute a waiver of the claim. Baldwain v. Foss, 71 Iowa, 389, 32 N. W. 389, decided that:

> "If a note that has been obtained by fraud is voluntarily paid by the maker with full knowledge of all the facts, he cannot recover the amount so paid."

The soundness of that decision could hardly be questioned. In Reid v. Field, 83 Va. 26, 1 S. E. 395, it was held that defendant by executing his note for the full amount due had waived his claim for an equitable set-off for damages caused by the delay in delivering the merchandise. The gist of the decision in Sirch E. & T. Laboratories v. Garbutt, 13 Cal. App. 435, 110 Pac. 140, was to the effect that having accepted the work, knowing it was defective, and having paid for it, the defendant could not recover the money paid. The point involved herein was not considered in that case. A question similar to the one before us arose, however, in the subsequent case of Machinery & Electrical Co. v. Y. M. C. A., 22 Cal. App. 416, 134 Pac. 724, and the same court declared:

> "It is well settled that an owner may receive and use a structure built for him by a contractor without necessarily waiving his right to offset damages occasioned by defects or imperfect completion against the contract price."

It will be noticed that none of the cases cited by respondents is directly in point. As to those holding that full payment constitutes a waiver of damages for delay, it may be said, also, that the weight of authority seems to be the other way. We content ourselves as to this with a citation of the cases appearing in appellant's brief: Johnson v. Baltimore Glass Co., 74 Kan. 762, 88 Pac. 52, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1114, 11 Ann. Cas. 505; Industrial Works v. Mitchell, 114 Mich. 29, 72 N. W. 25; Clydebang, etc., Co. v. Castenada, A. C. 1905, 6 (decided by the House of Lords); North Alaska, etc., Co. v. Hobbs, Wall & Co., 159 Cal. 380, 113 Pac. 870, 120 Pac. 27, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 501; Gilmore v. Williams, 162 Mass. 351, 38 N. E. 976. There is, indeed, a sentence in the opinion of this court in Mannix v. Wilson, 18 Cal. App. 601, 123 Pac. 981, that seems encouraging to respondents, but if read with the context it will not be so understood.

[2, 3] As to whether time was of the essence of the contract there would seem to be little doubt in view of the positive agreement that the boat was to be completed "two weeks after arrival of engine, but in no event later than June 1, 1914." But, as pointed out by appellant, this does not affect the question involved herein, but only the consideration whether one party can regard the contract as broken or forfeited by the failure of the other to perform on the specific day. Even if time is not of the essence, the aggrieved party is entitled to just compensation for the delay. Civ. Code, § 1492. We do not mean to hold that it may not be shown that appellant waived its claim for any damage in consequence of the delay, but we are satisfied that the facts found by the court below are not sufficient to justify such conclusion.

In the event of another trial if respondents claim a waiver they should set it up with due formality by permission of the court, that the issue may be unquestionably presented for determination.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(33 Cal. App. 561)

MILLOGLAV v. ZACHARIAS. (Civ. 2035.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 2, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 30, 1917.)

1. Trusts 🔑74 — Resulting — Repugnant Provisions—Statute.

Where the plaintiff furnishes the purchase price of land on which a trust is sought to be impressed, taking title in the name of defendant in trust for himself, a condition of the agreement that the defendant shall not sell or incumber the property is not repugnant to the trust, since the trust which is presumed to result under these circumstances by the terms of Civ. Code, § 853, is necessarily one by which the grantee is bound not to sell or incumber the property to the injury of the person for whose benefit the trust was presumed to arise, and such a condition is not invalid because the parties had expressly agreed that such should be the effect of the trust relation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 105, 106.]

2. Trusts 🔑81(1) — Constructive—Breach of Oral Agreement to Support.

Where plaintiff, relying on the confidential relation between himself and defendant, buys land and causes it to be conveyed to defendant relying on her promise to support him in her home to be established therein for the balance of his natural life, if she violates her promise the property is impressed with a trust arising out of her actual or constructive fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 115.]

3. Trusts 🔑374—Decree—Adjustment of Equities.

Where defendant, contrary to an agreement to support plaintiff in a home erected on land which she held in trust for him, incumbered the property and appropriated the proceeds, the court may, in an action to enforce such trust, provide that defendant pay plaintiff such proceeds less the amount contributed by her to the equipment of the home.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. §§ 607-612.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Donahue, Judge.

Action by N. P. Milloglav against Lydia Zacharias. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Stoney, Rouleau, Stoney & Armstrong, of San Francisco, for appellant. Rose & Silverstein, of Oakland, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to have declared a trust in his favor arising out of the facts set forth in his complaint. The appeal is taken upon the judgment roll without a bill of exceptions, and hence the appellant's contentions are limited to two: First, that the judgment is not supported by the pleadings; and, second, that it is not justified by the findings of fact and conclusions of law in the case.

The complaint is in two counts, in the first of which it is alleged in substance that the plaintiff, who is the father of the defendant, furnished the purchase price of the lands upon which a trust is sought to be impressed, and that the title was taken in the name of the defendant in trust for and for the benefit of the plaintiff and with the understanding that she was not to incumber or sell the property; that in violation of said understanding the defendant has already incumbered said property by a deed of trust to secure her promissory note in the sum of $2,000 borrowed money, which she has wrongfully appropriated to her own use; and it is further averred that she threatens to convey and dispose of the property to some person or persons unknown to the plaintiff for the purpose of cheating and defrauding the plaintiff out of his right, title, and interest in the said property.

It is contended by the appellant that the first count of the plaintiff's complaint does not state a cause of action for the reason, as she urges, that the trust alleged therein to have been created is an express trust; and, since the condition of the trust agreement was that the grantee of the title would not sell or incumber the property, this condition, being hostile to the grant, is void. In support of this contention, the appellant strongly relies upon the cases of Prey v. Stanley, 110 Cal. 423, 42 Pac. 908, and Ripperdan v. Weldy, 149 Cal. 667, 87 Pac. 276.

[1] We cannot give our support to the appellant's contention, nor to the application to this cause of the foregoing cases upon which she relies. The averments of the first count of plaintiff's complaint as above summarized bring this case clearly within the terms of section 853 of the Civil Code, which provides that:

"When a transfer of real property is made to one person, and the consideration therefor is paid by or for another, a trust is presumed to result in favor of the person by or for whom such payment is made."

The trust which would be presumed to so result would of necessity be one by which the grantee would be bound not to sell or incumber the property to the injury of the person for whose benefit the trust was presumed to arise; and the mere fact that the parties had understood or agreed that such should be the effect and terms of the trust relation would not in any way militate against the creation or validity of the trust which came into being under the terms of the foregoing section of the Civil Code. The cases above referred to and relied upon by the appellant have no application to such a state of facts as is presented by the first count of the complaint in this case. They refer to cases where a fee-simple title has by the act and intent of the parties passed to the grantee, and where an attempt was made in restraint of alienation to impose a condition repugnant to the interest created by the conveyance of the property. But no such situation is presented by the case at bar according to the averments of the first count of plaintiff's complaint. We think therefore that the appellant's objection to the sufficiency of the first count of the complaint herein is not well taken.

The appellant makes a similar objection to the second count of the complaint. The averments of this count are in substance that prior to the 22d day of September, 1913, the plaintiff was approached by the defendant with the proposition that if he would purchase the property in question herein and cause the same to be conveyed to the defendant, she would care for, support, and maintain him in her home to be established thereon for the balance of his natural life, and would not sell or incumber or otherwise dispose of said property or any portion thereof; and that, relying upon these promises of the defendant, the plaintiff did supply the sum of $4,500 as the purchase price of said property and caused the same to be conveyed to said defendant; but that, notwithstanding her promise and agreement, she refuses to prepare his meals or otherwise care for him as she had agreed to do, and has incumbered the property for a debt of her own in the sum of $2,000, and has further threatened to convey or dispose of the same for the purpose of defrauding the plaintiff out of his right, title, and interest therein.

At the time of the trial of the action, the court permitted both counts of the plaintiff's complaint to be amended so as to conform with the proofs by the insertion in each of an averment to the effect that the plaintiff had great confidence and trust in the defendant arising out of the relation between them, and relying upon said confidence, and fully believing that the defendant would hold said property in trust for plaintiff as agreed, the plaintiff had directed said conveyance to be made to the defendant.

[2] We are able to perceive no material difference in these two counts of the plaintiff's complaint in so far as they each aver facts from which a resulting trust would arise in favor of plaintiff. It is true that the second count in the complaint amplifies somewhat the terms and requirements of such trust by the addition of the provisions calling for the care and maintenance of the plaintiff in the home of the defendant upon the purchased property. These added conditions are quite common in trusts of this character and are not hostile to them; and we are of the opinion that the averments of this second count in plaintiff's complaint, taken in connection with the later amendment thereto, averring the existence of a confidential relation between the parties, upon which the plaintiff relied, in investing the defendant with the apparent title to the property in question, bring this case within the range of those authorities in this state which deal with the subject of trusts arising out of actual or constructive fraud on the part of those persons who are invested with apparent but not real ownership of the property. Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; Id., 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186; Alaniz v. Casenave, 91 Cal. 41, 27 Pac. 521; Odell v. Moss, 130 Cal. 352, 62 Pac. 555; Jones v. Jones, 140 Cal. 587, 74 Pac. 143; Lauricella v. Lauricella, 161 Cal. 61, 118 Pac. 430. Under these authorities we are satisfied that the complaint herein in both its counts, and especially as amended at the trial, states a cause of action.

[3] The final contention of the appellant is that the findings do not support the judgment. The findings reveal a somewhat different state of facts from those averred in the complaint, and they are also somewhat prolix and detailed in an apparent effort on the part of the trial court to make them responsive to the averments and denials of the defendant's cross-complaint and to the averments of the answer thereto. Without rehearsing these matters in detail, it may be said that the main divergence of the findings of the trial court from the averments of plaintiff's complaint springs from a finding to the effect that the defendant had contributed the sum of $850, which she had placed in the hands of the plaintiff to be used in the establishment of the home of the parties, and which may have been used in buying the furniture therefor, since the court expressly finds that the purchase price of the real estate did not consist of moneys belonging to the defendant. The court undertook to equalize these matters in its judgment by providing therein that the defendant should pay over to the plaintiff the sum received by the incumbrance of the property less whatever credit she would be entitled to by reason of her contribution to the equipment of the home. We think this sort of adjustment of the monetary affairs of the parties was fully within the discretion of a court of equity. While the court does not make an express finding upon the subject of fraud on the part of the defendant, it does find the facts from which the implication of fraud would necessarily arise; and we are otherwise of the opinion that the findings of the court, taken as a whole, are responsive to the issues in the case, and that they support the conclusions of law and the judgment based thereon.

It follows that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(33 Cal. App. 536)

ROBINSON v. RISPIN et al. (Civ. 1618.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 26, 1917.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS ⚿109—CONTRACTS—WELL-DIGGING CONTRACT.

In contractor's damage suit for landowner's breach of contract to drill not less than 2,000 feet and not less than two nor more than four wells, a 400-foot well accepted by the landowner need not be credited with 1,000 feet.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 214.]

2. DAMAGES ⚿40(2)—PROFITS — WELL-DIGGING CONTRACT.

Profits to be earned from digging oil wells are not too speculative and remote to be a basis for damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 74–78.]

3. MINES AND MINERALS ⚿109—CONTRACTS—BREACH—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff contractor's testimony that defendant landowners did not supply him with casing, fuel, and water to be used in digging oil wells sustains a finding that defendants' default prevented plaintiff from completing the work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mines and Minerals, Cent. Dig. § 214.]

4. CORPORATIONS ⚿243(3) — LIABILITY ON STOCK—TRUSTEE.

Under the direct provisions of Civ. Code, § 322, a minor's trustee holding corporate stock is personally liable on such stock.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 947.]

5. CORPORATIONS ⚿171 — STOCKHOLDERS—EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff may prove that defendants were corporate stockholders by their testimony, especially where plaintiff's efforts to have the corporation's books produced pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1000, met persistent opposition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 633–636.]

6. ASSIGNMENTS ⚿107 — CONTRACTS — ASSIGNEE'S LIABILITY.

While the mere assignment of an executory contract does not make the assignee liable to the other party, yet, where the contract is fully performed, the benefit inures solely to the assignee, and he recognizes the contract as binding, he is liable to the other party equally with his assignor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. §§ 186, 187.]

7. NOVATION 🔑12 — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

A defendant's testimony that a corporation agreed to assume the obligations of his contract, etc., held sufficient to sustain a finding of novation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Novation, Cent. Dig. § 12.]

8. NOVATION 🔑12—EVIDENCE.

Under the direct provisions of Civ. Code, § 1531, subd. 2, a novation may be established by showing the substitution of a new debtor in place of the old one.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Novation, Cent. Dig. § 12.]

9. NOVATION 🔑12—PAROL EVIDENCE.

Parol evidence is admissible to establish a novation in a written contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Novation, Cent. Dig. § 12.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by E. W. Robinson against H. A. Rispin and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed, and new trial ordered as to defendant Rispin, and affirmed in other respects.

Boutwell Dunlap and John E. Alexander, both of San Francisco, for appellants. R. H. Cross, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. On November 10, 1910, plaintiff and defendant Rispin entered into a written agreement for the drilling of certain oil wells in Kern county. Robinson agreed to furnish the tools and labor and drill two or more wells for which Rispin agreed to pay him $4.50 for each vertical foot drilled. Rispin was "to furnish all necessary fuel, water, tubing, and casing at the well being drilled," and Robinson agreed to do the work according to certain specifications "in a thoroughly workmanlike manner under the instructions of said Rispin," and it was further provided that Robinson should not be compelled to drill to a depth exceeding 1,000 feet in any one hole, and "that this contract shall cover a total of not less than 2,000 feet of drilling and not less than two nor more than four wells, and that there shall be no unnecessary delays by either party, either in the drilling of the wells or the furnishing of casing, fuel and water." On December 23, 1910, after Robinson had moved his crew and appliances to the land where the work was to be done, but before he had actually begun drilling, Rispin assigned all his right, title, and interest in said land (which he held under option agreements) and all his interest under said agreement with Robinson to the defendant corporation, Lost Hills Central Oil Company. The court found that the defendant corporation accepted the assignment and the benefits and obligations arising from the agreement with Robinson, with full knowledge of all the facts relating thereto, and the work thereafter proceeded under its directions and instructions. The work was begun on December 28th, and after innumerable delays, which the court found were caused by the failure of the corporation to furnish the necessary casing, fuel, and water, he succeeded, on or about the 23d day of February, 1911, in reaching a depth of 400 feet and it was mutually agreed that the well known as "well No. 1" should be abandoned as an oil well and should be converted into and used as a water well for further operations on the property. Plaintiff was thereupon paid $1,800 for the said 400 feet, and he moved his drilling appliances to another point on the land, and he proceeded to drill well No. 2 until at the end of June, 1911, he had reached a depth of 907 feet. It was found that he could proceed no further by reason of the failure of appellants to furnish the necessary casing, and hence he ceased the drilling operations. After waiting until November 25, 1911, for defendants to furnish the casing to enable him to proceed with the work he brought suit to recover the amount due him for the work actually done, for the damages which he had sustained by reason of defendants' breach of their agreement to furnish him with the requisite fuel, water, and casing, and damages for their refusal to permit him to go on and complete the drilling to the extent of the 2,000 minimum feet provided in the contract. The court's judgment was in favor of plaintiff in the aggregate sum of $6,421.25 against the defendants Rispin and Lost Hills Central Oil Company and a several judgment against Benjamin Goodwin, A. B. Smith, H. A. Rispin, and J. S. Ourish as stockholders of said corporation, for the sum of $1,589.41 each.

At the trial appellants made common cause, and they were represented by the same attorney. On the appeal another attorney appears for Rispin, and he and the other appellants assume a somewhat antagonistic attitude as to the proper theory of the case. However, they are in accord in urging several grounds for a reversal of the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial, and these will first receive attention.

Plaintiff was awarded the sum of $1,529.25 for the loss of the profits which he would have made if permitted to complete the contract. As to the various objections to the particular finding some brief suggestions may be submitted.

[1] The court was not bound to consider the 400-foot well as though it had been drilled to the depth of 1,000 feet. There was no agreement to that effect, according to the testimony of plaintiff, and in the original contract the number of feet actually drilled was the important consideration. The parties did not even contemplate that any well should be of definite depth, but there was a limit to the number that should be developed. There was no greater reason for crediting this particular well with 1,000 feet than for so considering the other one of 907 feet. In view of the testimony of plaintiff that well "No. 1" was accepted as complete to be used for supplying water, and that it was not through any fault of his that it was drilled no deeper, the court was justified in the number of feet it allowed for said work.

[2] As to damages, the rule is, no doubt, that those of a special nature must be pleaded. General damages are said to be the natural and necessary result of the act complained of, while special are the natural, but not the necessary, consequence of such act. It has been held, however, that the loss of profits on a contract of this kind is the necessary consequence of a breach, and therefore it is not required to be specially pleaded. Tahoe Ice Co. v. Union Ice Co., 109 Cal. 249, 41 Pac. 1020; Germain Fruit Co. v. Armsby Co., 153 Cal. 585, 96 Pac. 319. Nor are such profits too speculative and remote to be a basis for damages. This consideration is thoroughly discussed in Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 48 Pac. 62, and it is sufficient to quote therefrom the following sentence:

> "But where the prospective profits are the natural and direct consequences of the breach of the contract, they may be recovered; and he who breaks the contract cannot wholly escape on account of the difficulty which his own wrong has produced of devising a perfect measure of damages."

[3] Appellants are equally at fault in the contention that plaintiff failed to show that he was prevented by the defendants from completing the work. We need not quote from the record, but we deem it sufficient to say that plaintiff testified positively that defendants failed to supply him with the casing, fuel, and water as they agreed, and therefore it was impossible for him to continue the work. Furthermore, he testified that they abandoned the enterprise and requested him to come to San Francisco to assist them in disposing of defendants' interest in the land. Plaintiff's case did not rest upon the theory that he was prevented by the failure of defendants to pay him what was due, and therefore the doctrine of the case of Cox v. McLaughlin, 54 Cal. 605, has no application. It is rather an instance of the failure to furnish material which was to be used in the work and which was made a condition precedent to the performance by plaintiff, and it is governed by the principle expounded and applied in Alderson v. Houston, 154 Cal. 3, 96 Pac. 884.

As to the damages caused by delay, it may be said also that support for the finding is contained in the record. It is pointed out in respondent's brief, and it is not controverted in the final brief for appellants.

[4, 5] There was a dispute as to the number of shares of stock in defendant corporation held by some of the other defendants. However, the finding of the court in that respect seems abundantly supported. There was no controversy as to the number of shares outstanding and that said defendants were stockholders. It was admitted by the answer that Ourish owned 25,000 shares. Rispin and Goodwin admitted on the stand that each owned the same number. Smith's testimony showed also that he was liable for 25,000 shares, as he admitted that this number stood in his name as trustee for his son, a minor of the age of 16 years. Section 322, Civ. Code. We can see no valid objection to the method adopted for the proof of these facts. They were matters peculiarly within the knowledge of defendants, and they were competent witnesses to testify as to the number of shares owned by each. Indeed, plaintiff endeavored to have the books of the corporation produced, that the matter might be set at rest, but he encountered serious and persistent opposition. Steps were taken for this purpose as provided by section 1000 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but we need not follow them in detail. Appellants may have acted in good faith, but they seemed strongly averse to a complete inspection by respondent of the records involved in the controversy. We think, under the circumstances, that the court was justified in holding that its order in reference to an inspection of the books had not been complied with and in assuming the facts to be as claimed by plaintiff. However, aside from this, the evidence was sufficient to support the finding.

We have thus noticed the foregoing contentions, although we would probably be justified in concluding that they had been abandoned by appellants; as no reference is made to any of them in the closing briefs.

We come now to the points where appellants diverge and to which the closing arguments are addressed.

The contention of the corporation defendant, the Lost Hills Central Oil Company, is that it never assumed any liability under the contract made by Robinson and Rispin. There can be no doubt, however, that the record supports the finding of the court to the effect that Rispin transferred, set over, and assigned all his right, title, and interest, under the agreement made by him with Robinson, to the defendant corporation, this transfer having been made on December 23, 1910, while the contract was wholly executory; that the defendant corporation voluntarily accepted the assignment and the benefits and obligations arising from the transaction and the agreement with Robinson, with full knowledge of all the facts relating thereto, and thereafter requested Robinson to perform the work stipulated under and pursuant to the terms of that agreement. The evidence is epitomized in the brief of respondent, but it is not necessary to repeat it here.

[6, 7] The case seems to fall clearly within the principle of Cutting Packing Co. v. Packers' Exchange, 86 Cal. 574, 25 Pac. 52, 10 L. R. A. 369, 21 Am. St. Rep. 63; Anderson v. De Urioste, 96 Cal. 404, 31 Pac. 266; Freze

v. Moore, 1 Cal. App. 587, 82 Pac. 542; and section 1589 of the Civil Code. Of course, as suggested by respondent, the mere assignment of the rights under an executory contract would not make the assignee liable to the other contracting party. Such was the case of Lisenby v. Newton, 120 Cal. 521, 52 Pac. 813, 65 Am. St. Rep. 203. But where, after the assignment is made, the executory provisions of the contract are fully performed, the benefit inuring solely to the assignee, and where by his actions he holds himself out as personally liable and recognizes the original contract as binding upon him, he is liable to the other party equally with the assignor. Such is this case, as was Jones v. Allert, 161 Cal. 234, 118 Pac. 794. Indeed, there is much evidence in the record that the corporation was the real party in interest, Rispin being a mere intermediary. Furthermore, we may say that, if the court had found that there was a novation, the substitution of the corporation for Rispin with the intention of releasing the latter from liability, the finding would be supported. There is much in the record tending to this view. It will be sufficient to refer to a portion of the testimony of Rispin. He said: That he presented to the directors of Lost Hills Central Oil Company the contract between him and Robinson, and that they directed him what to do under the contract; that the corporation paid Robinson what was due under the agreement; that there was an understanding that the corporation was to assume the obligations of the contract; "that it would take my place in the contract with Mr. Robinson; that the contract would be practically between Mr. Robinson and the corporation, and not with myself;" and that he notified Mr. Robinson that the corporation had assumed the contract. In fact, appellants attempted to go further and show that at the time of the execution of the said contract between Robinson and Rispin it was understood and agreed that the corporation, when formed, should be substituted for Rispin. That attempt involves what appellant Rispin claims was a prejudicially erroneous ruling of the court. The purpose of the questions addressed to the witness was stated by counsel as follows:

> "I wish to show by Mr. Rispin and to follow that testimony up that at and subsequent to the time when this contract was executed, on November 10, 1910, there was a distinct agreement between Mr. Rispin and Mr. Robinson, an agreement incidental to the agreement of November 10, 1910, to the effect that that agreement as signed was to be assumed by a corporation which Mr. Rispin was at that time organizing, and that the corporation would take over and assume the liability under that contract; that there was an agreement between them to that effect. And following that I wish to show that that agreement was fully and completely executed and carried out, and that the liability was assumed by the corporation; that the liability of the corporation was assented to by Mr. Robinson, and that Mr. Robinson looked to the corporation as the party liable and released Mr. Rispin from all obligations because of the writing which was introduced by plaintiff here as the contract; further that all the facts and circumstances surrounding the case are proper to be shown in order that the judge may properly construe the instrument in question; and further that the evidence of what transpired at that time would be admissible upon the ground of showing lack of consideration as far as Mr. Rispin was concerned. Those matters, I believe, are fully set forth in the allegations of the answer, sufficient to have them admitted as evidence. If there is any question in the mind of the court that these matters are not fully set forth in the answer of Mr. Rispin so that this evidence should be admitted, I then ask for leave to amend so that those matters can be fully shown."

[8, 9] The court, however, regarded it as an effort to vary the terms of the written instrument, and would not permit the questions to be answered. In this we think the court erred. The purpose was not to vary the terms of the contract, but to show a collateral agreement that the contract should be assumed by another. There is no doubt a novation could be shown by proving the substitution of another party for Rispin in the contract. Section 1531, Civ. Code, subd. 2. In order to prove this, there must be, of course, evidence of an agreement to that effect. Plaintiff must have consented to it in order to constitute a novation. That he so agreed at the time of the execution of the original contract would naturally be a significant circumstance in the chain of proof relied upon to establish the novation. Proof of the substitution is not required to be in writing, but may consist of parol evidence. If it was not permissible to show such an agreement at the time the written contract was executed, it could not be shown at all. The same objection could be made as to a question addressed to any subsequent agreement between the parties as at the time the written contract was executed. Upon respondent's theory the novation could not be proven unless it was embodied in a written instrument. This, however, is not the law, and the contention of respondent is based upon an erroneous conception of the rule as to varying the terms of a written instrument. In Farmers' Nat. Gold Bank v. Stover, 60 Cal. 389, defendant attempted to prove that plaintiff had agreed that a certain note and mortgage was taken by plaintiff as substitution for and in full payment of the note sued on. The evidence was admitted and thereafter excluded. The Supreme Court said:

> "This was error. The evidence which was admitted and afterwards excluded tended to prove that the bank had accepted the individual note and mortgage of Stover as a substitute for the note in suit, for the purpose of extinguishing the obligation arising from it, or of releasing the parties to it who had become insolvent. If the note and mortgage were, in fact, taken as a substitute for the note in dispute, with the intent of extinguishing the obligation of it, or releasing the parties to it, the transaction constituted a defense by way of novation, under sections 1530, 1531, 1532, of the Civil Code; and the defendants were entitled to have it presented to the consideration of the jury upon the evidence adduced to sustain it."

As to the sufficiency of the pleadings to present the issue, the Supreme Court therein approved Kirstein v. Madden, 38 Cal. 158, and Stringer v. Davis, 30 Cal. 318, wherein it was held that the trial court, if application should be made therefor, should allow such amendments to be made as will enable the court to try and determine the cause on the merits.

In Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, it was held that parol evidence offered for the purpose of showing that a subsequent written contract, which it is claimed superseded and annulled a prior written contract upon which the other is based, had been executed upon the consideration and agreement that the prior contract should be canceled and all claims of the plaintiff against the defendant thereunder waived, is not incompetent as having the effect to vary or contradict the terms of either of the written instruments or to add any terms thereto. Said the court:

> "Such evidence is as admissible as is oral testimony that the terms of a written agreement have been fully performed by the parties, or that the instrument evidencing such agreement has itself been canceled and destroyed by the concurrent act of both parties. In either case the object and effect of such evidence is not to change any of the terms of the contract, but to show that the contract has no longer any existence, and therefore cannot be made the basis of an action."

So here the purpose was to show that said agreement no longer had any existence as between the original parties, but that it had been superseded by a contract between plaintiff and the corporation. That the terms and conditions of the contract remained the same, that practically the only change was the substitution of another obligor, manifestly presents no different legal aspect from the case where an entirely different contract has been substituted.

If the rule is to be applied as claimed by respondent, then no effect could be given to that portion of section 1698 of the Civil Code which provides that:

> "A contract in writing may be altered * * * by an executed oral agreement."

Such executed agreement could not be shown for the reason that it would be in effect to permit parol evidence to vary the terms of a written instrument. That a novation had been effected was one of the important defenses relied upon by appellant Rispin, and we think he should have been afforded the fullest opportunity to establish it.

As to the appellant corporation we may suggest that its attitude here appears quite inconsistent with its position at the trial. Therein all of the defendants, as we have stated, were represented by the same attorney, who insisted, as we have seen, that there was a complete novation, that the corporation had been substituted in the original contract for Rispin, and it complained somewhat bitterly because it was denied the privilege of making that clear to the court. It is true also that the motion for a new trial was joint and not several, and there is a joint appeal from the judgment. However, no point is made as to this, and we think justice requires that the judgment against Rispin for the sum of $6,421.25 should be reversed, and a new trial had upon the issue whether he was released from liability upon the contract by virtue of said alleged novation, and that the judgment and order should be affirmed in all other respects. It is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

(33 Cal. App. 557)

MANOR v. DUNFIELD. (Civ. 1638.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 30, 1917.)

1. TROVER AND CONVERSION ⚷40(1) — POSSESSION OF PLAINTIFF—ILLEGAL TAKING—KNOWLEDGE OF DEFENDANT — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In suit for conversion of an automobile, evidence held to justify findings that plaintiff was in the possession and entitled to the possession of the machine when it was delivered to defendant by plaintiff's employé, that it was illegally taken from plaintiff, and that defendant had knowledge or the means of acquiring knowledge of plaintiff's claim to its possession.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trover and Conversion, Cent. Dig. §§ 232, 240, 244.]

2. PLEDGES ⚷11 — POSSESSION — CLAIMS OF CREDITORS—STATUTE.

Where plaintiff was in possession of an automobile through his employé, the driver of his auto-stage line, he had such possession as to protect himself against the claims of creditors, as contemplated by Civ. Code, § 3440, providing what transfers are presumed to be fraudulent, though the possession came to plaintiff by his employé's pledging the car with him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. §§ 28–35.]

3. PLEDGES ⚷43—PLEDGOR'S TRANSFER OF INTEREST—EFFECT ON PLEDGEE.

Where plaintiff's employé, driver of an auto-stage line, pledged an automobile with plaintiff, and thereafter had control over the car entirely by virtue of his employment and under plaintiff's direction, the employé had no right to deprive plaintiff of the possession of the machine, and his attempted transfer of his interest to a third person had no effect on plaintiff's claim to the car.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. § 102.]

4. NOVATION ⚷5—CONTRACT OF SALE.

Where plaintiff assumed the obligation of his employé under the latter's contract to buy an automobile, and the substitution was recognized by the seller of the car, there was a complete novation, and plaintiff was entitled to the rights and subject to the liabilities of the sale, which was conditional.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Novation, Cent. Dig. § 5.]

5. SALES ⚷467—CONDITIONAL SALE—RIGHT TO POSSESSION.

The vendee of personalty under a conditional sale contract is entitled to possession until he loses the right by virtue of his violation of some provision of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1354, 1358–1364.]

6. SALES 🔑480(4)—CONTRACT—PERFORMANCE —PRESUMPTION.

It is presumed that the successor by novation of the buyer of an automobile by conditional sale contract will make the final payment on the car.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1444, 1445.]

7. SALES 🔑480(1) — CONDITIONAL SALE — FAILURE TO COMPLETE CONTRACT—PENALTY.

If the successor by novation of the buyer of an automobile by conditional sale contract does not complete his contract by paying for the car, he is liable to the penalty of forfeiture.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1440, 1442, 1446.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by J. A. Manor against J. D. Dunfield. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Millington & Millington, of Colusa, for appellant. U. W. Brown and Harmon M. Albery, both of Colusa, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. One F. E. Partain entered into a contract with one G. L. Sanders for the purchase of a Ford automobile. Afterward by agreement a Rambler machine was substituted for the Ford. There is no doubt that the said Sanders was the owner of the Ford, and there is sufficient circumstantial evidence that he was also the owner of the Rambler, although the direct evidence is to the effect that the latter belonged to Sanders Bros. This is of no importance, however, as it is indisputable that both G. L. Sanders and Sanders Bros. agreed to the substitution of one machine for the other. The Ford machine was delivered to Partain, but, on account of his failure to meet the payments called for by the contract of sale, G. L. Sanders again took possession of it. Partain and plaintiff then entered into an agreement, whereby the latter was to pay Sanders what was due, and the machine was to be turned over to plaintiff and used by him on his auto-stage line. It was further agreed that the machine was to be restored to Partain whenever he repaid plaintiff the amount of money so advanced to Sanders. Plaintiff then made arrangements with G. L. Sanders to pay him the amount due, the sum of $108.40; Sanders understanding that the machine was to be turned over to plaintiff. There was some question as to the form of the receipt offered by Sanders, so he was informed that the money was in the bank and he could get it when he gave a proper receipt. Before the payment was made, plaintiff was injured and was thereafter in a sanatorium for some time. While there he had his brother pay Sanders $133.40, the amount due at that time on the machine. This payment was made on September 11th. On September 15th, Partain, who was working for plaintiff, driving his automobiles on his stage line, traded said Ford machine for the Rambler. Plaintiff knew nothing of this until the 1st of October, when Partain brought it to plaintiff's house and turned it over to him. From the time of the trade or substitution of one machine for the other, the Rambler was used on plaintiff's auto-stage line, driven by plaintiff's drivers, and had on it his stage sign and license number. Furthermore, it was stored in a garage in Colusa in the name of and by plaintiff, and bills against the same were charged to him, and he had possession of the machine until November 13, 1916. On November 1st, Partain quit working for plaintiff, and the Rambler remained in possession of the latter. On November 11th, plaintiff met G. L. Sanders and said to him that he had the money for the November payment on the machine, but that he had some money coming in the following week and he could make the whole payment on Wednesday, to which Sanders consented, telling plaintiff that the Rambler was his and for him to take it; the car standing near at that time. However, before the following Wednesday, namely, on November 13th, Partain went to the garage, took possession of the machine, drove it away, and thereafter assigned all his interest under the contract with Sanders to Dunfield and directed the bill of sale to be made to him. The bill of sale was so executed by Sanders Bros. and G. L. Sanders; but, before its execution, one Jake Whalen, manager of plaintiff's stage line, in the presence of defendant, his attorney, and Partain, demanded possession of the machine, showing the attorney an order for its possession he had from G. L. Sanders. Defendant heard the order read over the phone to Sanders. Whalen stated the reason he obtained the order was on account of the fact that Partain had run off with the car to Arbuckle. Said order was dated November 5th and prior to the said agreement between plaintiff and G. L. Sanders as to the final payment, and defendant knew that Whalen was in the employ of plaintiff. Partain did not repay to plaintiff any portion of the money the latter had paid to Sanders, nor did he offer to do so. On November 15th, plaintiff demanded of defendant the possession of the machine, but it was refused and the suit followed.

[1] The foregoing statement embodies a fair inference from the evidence, and the facts thus appearing justified the findings of the court that plaintiff was in the possession and entitled to the possession of the machine at the time it was delivered to defendant, that it was illegally taken from him, and that defendant had knowledge or the means of acquiring knowledge of plaintiff's claim to the possession of it.

[2-5] No extended consideration of the situation seems necessary. The facts are not complicated, and the legal principles involved are rudimentary and familiar. As between plaintiff and Partain there was a pledge of the machine which was to continue until plaintiff was repaid the amount of money that he advanced to Sanders. In that respect the case falls within the provisions of section 2986 of the Civil Code. There was the necessary agreement between the parties, an actual delivery of the property, and a visible, unequivocal, and continued change of possession. By nothing said or done had plaintiff forfeited or yielded his right to said possession. Plaintiff's possession was such as to satisfy the requirement even of absolute ownership and to protect against the claims of creditors as contemplated by section 3440 of the Civil Code. That Partain had some degree of control over the machine is of no moment, since it was entirely by virtue of his employment and under the direction of plaintiff that he was authorized to use the machine. Any other use or assumption of control by him was a violation of his agreement with plaintiff. As a legal proposition, therefore, it is altogether clear that Partain had no right to deprive plaintiff of the possession of the machine, and his attempted transfer of his interest to defendant had no effect whatever upon plaintiff's claim. As to the relation of plaintiff and G. L. Sanders, there was a complete novation. Plaintiff assumed the obligation of Partain under the contract of sale, and his substitution was recognized by Sanders. The agreement between plaintiff and Partain was ratified by Sanders, who accepted plaintiff as the debtor instead of Partain. Hence plaintiff was entitled to the rights and subject to the liabilities of the conditional sale. He was not in default, and there had been no declared forfeiture at the time he was deprived of the possession of the machine. It follows that even the owner could not take the property away from him, for it will not be disputed that the vendee is entitled to the possession until he loses the right by virtue of his violation of some provision of the contract. Indeed, as far as G. L. Sanders is concerned it could probably be held that by reason of his express agreement with plaintiff he could not question the latter's ownership of the property. Sanders Bros., for reasons already stated, are equally bound with the father.

The only theory upon which defendant could hold the property would, manifestly, be that he was an innocent purchaser for value without notice. We think it not unreasonable to conclude, however, that he had knowledge of the contract with plaintiff and that the arrangement with him was for the purpose of defeating plaintiff's claim. At any rate, there was sufficient evidence that defendant was put upon inquiry, and he ought to have found out, if he did not, that the machine was wrongfully taken from the possession of plaintiff.

[6, 7] It may be suggested that, under the view taken by the court, complete justice may be done to all the parties. It was found, not that plaintiff was the owner of the machine, but entitled to the possession of it by reason of the pledge. To become the owner he must make the final payment. It is presumed he will do this, and thus may appellant be reimbursed for his payment. It is no violent presumption to assume that the machine is not as valuable as it was; but if plaintiff does not complete his contract he is liable, of course, to the penalty of forfeiture. Even Partain, no doubt, will be accorded ample opportunity to redeem the machine so that he may become the proud owner, not of the somewhat lowly Ford, but of the more pretentious Rambler.

We have not quoted from the decisions cited; but, if interesting suggestions concerning the legal questions more or less involved herein are desired, we may refer to Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503, 76 Am. Dec. 500; Goldstein v. Hart, 30 Cal. 372; George v. Pierce, 123 Cal. 172, 55 Pac. 775, 56 Pac. 53; and Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 128 Pac. 751.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART. J.

SYMES INVESTING CO. v. DE SOLLAR.

(No. 8591.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. May 7, 1917.)

1. BROKERS 🔑88(12)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In broker's action against an owner for commissions, a requested instruction that a broker serving both parties could not recover, etc., held not required by evidence that plaintiff referred to the prospective tenant as his client and thought he should be paid for negotiating a sale of fixtures between such tenant and a former occupant, where no commission was paid by, or demanded from, such tenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 125, 127.]

2. BROKERS 🔑88(9) — ACTION FOR COMMISSIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a broker's action for commissions against an owner, an instruction that plaintiff must prove his employment, and mere fact that he asked defendant at what price he was willing to lease his property did not establish relation of principal and agent, held sufficiently favorable to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 127.]

Teller, J., dissenting.

En Banc. Error to District Court, City and County of Denver; George W. Allen, Judge.

Action by Herbert S. De Sollar against the Symes Investing Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Fred Farrar, J. Foster Symes, and Ivor O. Wingren, all of Denver, for plaintiff in error. William H. Dickson, of Denver, for defendant in error.

HILL, J This action is to recover a commission by a real estate agent for securing a tenant for a store building. Verdict and judgment were for plaintiff. It is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. The testimony is conflicting. It is unnecessary to set forth its contents, but is sufficient to say that an examination of it discloses that there is sufficient competent testimony upon which the verdict can be sustained.

[1] It is claimed the testimony discloses that the defendant in error was working for both parties, and therefore could not recover a commission from either, without an express contract and full knowledge of this fact, and that the court erred in refusing to give defendant's instruction No. 13 on this question. It reads:

> "The court instructs the jury that an agent or broker cannot at the same time act for two parties whose interests are adverse, and in order to entitle such an agent or broker to a commission from either party, where the circumstances are such, the broker or agent must prove that the party from whom he claims a commission knew all the facts and circumstances and expressly agreed to pay the agent or broker a commission for his services."

We agree with the trial court that there was no testimony sufficient to warrant the giving of this instruction. We cannot agree that there is any testimony tending to disclose that the defendant in error was representing both parties. It is true that in one of his conversations with the manager of plaintiff in error he admits referring to Mr. Bloom as his client, but when asked what he meant by that he said:

> "When I referred to Mr. Bloom, of the Bloom Jewelry Company, in my cross-examination, as my client, I meant that Mr. Bloom was simply a tenant that I had in mind, who was looking for a location. Mr. Bloom never paid me any commission in this matter, he never agreed to pay me any commission, and I did not expect any commission from him."

The facts contained in this statement stand uncontradicted, and when the testimony is considered as a whole, it discloses that the defendant in error simply had an acquaintance with Mr. Bloom; that he knew it was necessary for him to secure a new location; that in his business as a real estate agent he solicited from the owners of storerooms the privilege of renting them, etc.: that in securing tenants he took advantage of his knowledge pertaining to the needs of his acquaintances in this respect, just the same as an agent would of his knowledge concerning prospective buyers. The record also discloses that a Mr. Behen had a lease from plaintiff in error for this room, which had some time to run; that he had advised the manager of the plaintiff in error that he would consider giving up the room, and the latter had stated to him it would allow him to do so, provided another tenant was secured, who would take a lease on the same terms; that, in order for defendant in error to get his deal through between the plaintiff in error and Mr. Bloom, it was necessary that Bloom and Behen arrive at an understanding concerning the sale and purchase of the Behen fixtures, etc.; and that the defendant in error devoted considerable time looking to this end, which was ultimately accomplished.

We cannot agree that these facts altered the condition between the parties. According to the jury's finding, the defendant in error was employed to and found a customer for the plaintiff in error, who took a lease on its room for a term of years. In order to bring this about, it was necessary to negotiate with another tenant and arrive at some agreement between him and the prospective tenant. This the agent did, not for the purpose alone of consummating the deal between them concerning the fixtures, but for the ultimate purpose of being able to consummate the deal for the long-term lease between the landlord and the prospective tenant. By assisting in the negotiations between the two tenants, the agent was successful in accomplishing what he started out to do, namely, securing the execution of the term lease; when this was accomplished, if employed for this purpose, he was entitled to his commission. It is true Mr. Behen testified that the defendant in error said to him, during the negotiations between him and Bloom, that he thought he should be compensated for all the work he had done; but the witness further said, "He really did not ask me for it." The record discloses that he spent a great deal of time in the negotiations between Bloom and Behen, and he may have thought that he should have been compensated for this work; but there is nothing to show that he contracted with or made claim against either Mr. Bloom or Mr. Behen for any compensation concerning the lease, or even for his work between Bloom and Behen. Whether he should be paid a commission by Mr. Behen for the sale of his fixtures is not before us, but we cannot agree that his labor in this respect should defeat his recovery in this action, or was evidence tending to show that he was to be paid his commission for the lease by other than the plaintiff in error. The record discloses that the defendant in error showed Mr. Bloom other locations. We cannot agree that this tends, as claimed, to establish that he was the agent of Mr. Bloom in this transaction; but, to the contrary, we see no difference in this act than in any real estate agent showing a prospective purchaser sundry homes of different owners with a view of making a sale of one.

[2] Instruction No. 5, complained of, reads:

> "The court instructs the jury that to entitle the plaintiff to recover a commission from the defendant the plaintiff must prove a contract of employment, either express or implied, and the mere fact that the plaintiff asked the manager of the defendant at what price he was willing to make a lease on the storeroom known as No. 824 Sixteenth street does not of itself establish the relation of principal and agent between defendant and plaintiff."

This instruction was as favorable to the plaintiff in error concerning the question therein referred to as it could ask.

The judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

TELLER, J., dissents. ALLEN, J., not participating.

HOME STATE BANK v. HUNKEY.

(No. 8354.)

(Supreme Court of Colorado. June 4, 1917.)

1. Mortgages 🔑163(2)—Unrecorded Mortgage—Priority of Subsequent Mortgage.

Where, to buy a farm, a brother borrowed from his sister money for which he executed his note to her, and thereafter he executed a deed of trust to a bank, with the agreement that the deed was not to be recorded, and still later, on his failure to make payment of principal and interest on his note to his sister, the brother proposed to another sister to give the lending sister a new note, and asked that the lending sister send him the amount due, which she did, and he, acting for himself, and not as agent for the lending sister, executed a note and mortgage for the amount, caused the mortgage to be recorded, and afterwards forwarded it to the sister, in the absence of knowledge on her part of the unrecorded mortgage to the bank, the first recorded mortgage to the sister was a prior lien, since, by the recording act, a second mortgage, if first recorded, is in law given preference over a prior unrecorded mortgage; the law raises the presumption that the second, if first recorded, was given in good faith for valuable consideration and without notice of prior equities.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 371–379.]

2. Mortgages 🔑186(3) — Foreclosure — Fraud—Burden of Proof.

In suit by a bank holding a prior unrecorded mortgage to foreclose against the holder of a subsequent recorded mortgage, the burden to prove fraud, in that the second mortgage was given and taken with knowledge of the unrecorded mortgage to the bank, rested on the bank.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 454.]

3. Fraudulent Conveyances 🔑102—Dealings Between Brother and Sister—Presumption.

Though the law scrutinizes carefully transactions between brother and sister, there is no conclusive presumption that such transactions are fraudulent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 330–332.]

4. Fraudulent Conveyances 🔑118(1) — Right to Prefer Creditors.

A brother has a right to prefer a sister, just as he has the right to prefer other creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. § 379.]

5. Principal and Agent 🔑180—Notice to Principal.

The rule that notice to the agent is notice to the principal fails when the circumstances are such as to raise a clear presumption that the agent will not perform his duty to transmit his knowledge to his principal, as where the agent is engaged in a transaction in which he is interested adversely to his principal, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 689.]

Error to District Court, Montrose County; Thomas J. Black, Judge.

Suit to foreclose a trust deed by the Home State Bank, a corporation, against Helen E. Hunkey. To review a judgment for defendant, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Catlin & Blake, of Montrose, for plaintiff in error. Sherman & Sherman, of Montrose, and Charles H. Redmond, of Denver, for defendant in error.

SCOTT, J. In 1908, Jacob F. Hunkey purchased a farm in Montrose county from one Main. The purchase price was $6,363, which was made in cash, excepting a mortgage to Main in the sum of $2,675. In order to make this cash payment, Hunkey borrowed from his sister Helen E. Hunkey, defendant in error, then living at Atchison, Kan., the sum of $2,400, for which he executed and delivered to her at the time his promissory note bearing interest at 6 per cent. per annum. He made two interest payments on the note of $150 and $140, respectively. Failing to make payment of the principal and interest on this note, Hunkey, at or about the time of its maturity, wrote a letter to another sister, proposing to give to Helen a new note for the principal and accrued interest, payable two years from date, to bear interest at 8 per cent. per annum and to be secured by mortgage on his farm, subject to the Main mortgage, and asked that Helen send him the amount due. This she did without writing a letter, but upon a slip of paper, and gave the amount due as $2,860. Upon receiving this statement of amount, and on the 30th day of August, 1913, Hunkey executed the note and mortgage as proposed, and on the same day caused the mortgage to be recorded and afterwards forwarded to the defendant in error, who accepted it. On the 29th day of March, 1913, the said Jacob F. Hunkey executed and delivered to the plaintiff in error, the Home State Bank of Montrose, his promissory note in the sum of $3,600, and to secure the same executed and delivered to the said bank a trust deed covering said premises, but with the agreement that said trust deed was not to be recorded. This trust deed was not recorded until October 1, 1913. The bank brought this suit in foreclosure claiming a prior and superior lien to that of the defendant, Helen E. Hunkey, alleging that said defendant had knowledge of the bank's unrecorded trust deed at the time of the execution and delivery of the mortgage to her, and that Jacob F. Hunkey was acting in the capacity of agent for Helen E. Hunkey, and that the transaction between Helen E. Hunkey and Jacob F. Hunkey was in fraud of the plaintiff's rights. The court found the lien of Helen E. Hunkey to be prior and superior to that of the bank and rendered judgment of foreclosure and sale accordingly.

[1-4] The court made the following findings of fact and conclusions of law:

> "Prima facie, the mortgage to the sister is valid, for consideration, in good faith, and without knowledge of the prior but unrecorded mortgage to the bank. In other words, by reason of the recording acts, a second mortgage, if first recorded, is in law given preference over a prior unrecorded mortgage; the law raises the presumption that the second, if first recorded, was given in good faith, for valuable consideration, and without notice of prior equities.
>
> "Here the State Bank, to overcome the legal presumption in favor of the second mortgage, asserts that it was given with knowledge of the unrecorded mortgage to the bank, and is therefore fraudulent.
>
> "The burden of proving fraud rests upon the bank. To sustain the charge of fraud, the bank says that the grantee of the second mortgage was the sister of the grantor, that she knew he was in debt, that he acted as her agent in the transaction, and that she was therefore bound by any knowledge he possessed as to the existence of the first mortgage.
>
> "While the law scrutinizes carefully transactions between brother and sister, there is no conclusive presumption that such transactions are fraudulent. At most, the law only requires of parties so situated proof that the transaction is what it purports to be, namely, for valuable consideration and without notice of the equities of others.
>
> "A brother has a right to prefer a sister just as he generally has the right to prefer other creditors. That the brother was in debt, that the sister knew it, and that to secure a debt to her he executed the second mortgage, standing alone, would be nothing more than a suspicious circumstance. Circumstances of suspicion are not enough to warrant the court in declaring a mortgage fraudulent. There must be satisfactory proof. Taking the evidence as a whole, it does not satisfactorily or at all establish fraud.
>
> "The undisputed evidence is that the sister advanced the brother the money, to secure which the mortgage was given. That this is so was conceded by counsel for the bank in the argument. Unless, in the transaction involved, the brother must be regarded as having acted as the agent of the sister, and for that reason the sister held to have knowledge of all the brother knew concerning the first mortgage, the action of the bank must fail.
>
> "In the mind of the court the facts do not justify the theory of agency. In the beginning, the brother wrote to another sister asking that the defendant sister figure up what the amount of the indebtedness with interest was, and stating that he would secure it by mortgage. The defendant sister did so. The brother was acting for himself in the proposition as well as in the preparation of the mortgage; the sister was likewise acting for herself. It was nothing more than a transaction between two principals. No third person was involved. The sister by sending a statement of the amount of the indebtedness, by the strongest implication, agreed to accept the mortgage. Under such circumstances, she having knowledge of the intended execution of the mortgage and having agreed to accept it, delivery to the recorder was delivery to her."

This correctly states the law and is approved. There is no contention as to the correctness of the findings of fact.

It will be noted that Jacob F. Hunkey had proposed the execution of the mortgage, and that in compliance with his request Helen E. Hunkey had forwarded to him the amount to be secured thereby, and that the note and mortgage, for the exact amount, and for the time it was to run, and at the rate of interest so proposed, were executed; the mortgage was recorded, and both note and mortgage forwarded to and received and accepted by her before the bank's trust deed was recorded, and before she had knowledge of such trust deed.

The cases of Reynolds v. Black, 91 Iowa, 1, 58 N. W. 922, and In re Assignment of Guyer, 69 Iowa, 585, 29 N. W. 826, are in point and are authority for the judgment of the court. Knox v. Clark, 15 Colo. App. 356, 62 Pac. 334, well sustains the principle. Upon the question of delivery and acceptance it was there said:

> "The question, what constitutes an acceptance by the grantee, is not in all cases free from difficulty. It cannot arise where the execution and delivery of the deed is the conclusion of a transaction conducted by the immediate parties. Nor is it involved where the deed is executed in performance of the grantor's contract with the grantee to convey the land to the latter. In such case, the deed is the consummation of the contract, and the contract contains the assent of the grantee to its execution, so that it is immaterial whether he had personal knowledge of the deed at the time it was made or not."

[5] The rule as to agency properly to be applied to the facts in this case is stated to be:

> "The rule that notice to an agent is notice to the principal being based upon the presumption that the agent will transmit his knowledge to his principal, the rule fails when the circumstances are such as to raise a clear presumption that the agent will not perform this duty; and, accordingly, where the agent is engaged in a transaction in which he is interested adversely to his principal, or is engaged in a scheme to defraud the latter, the principal will not be charged with the knowledge of the agent acquired therein." 31 Cyc. 1595, and authorities cited.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, C. J., and GARRIGUES, J., concur.

(25 Wyo. 122)

HUKOVEH v. ALSTON, Warden of State Penitentiary. (No. 908.)

(Supreme Court of Wyoming. June 27, 1917.)

CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1218—PUNISHMENT—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Comp. St. 1910, § 540, provides that any person between the ages of 16 and 25 years, convicted of a felony, who has not been convicted of a crime punishable by imprisonment in the state penitentiary, may, in the discretion of the court, be sentenced to imprisonment in the reformatory of the state, with which the state board of charities and reform of this state may make arrangements, for a period not exceeding the maximum term provided by the laws of this state for the offense of which he was convicted, etc. Laws 1913, c. 63, § 8, provides that every offender described in Comp. St. 1910, c. 44, who shall have been convicted, shall be sentenced to imprisonment in the Wyoming industrial institute. Laws 1911, c. 107, provides for the establishment of the 'Wyoming Industrial Institute' for the custody of that class of offenders described in Comp. St. 1910, c. 44, and which may be sentenced to terms of imprisonment therein by trial courts, in accordance with the provisions of said chapter. Section 6029, Comp.

St. 1910, makes all offenses punishable by death or imprisonment in the penitentiary felonies. Accused was convicted of robbery under Comp. St. 1910, § 5800. Held, that the discretion conferred upon the court by section 540 was not taken away by the act of 1913, but it was thereby intended only to substitute the Wyoming industrial institute for the reformatory mentioned in section 540, whenever the court in its discretion should impose a sentence of imprisonment in a reformatory instead of the penitentiary, and the words in the act of 1913, "under the provisions of said chapter," referred to section 540 not only as describing the offender but as prescribing the rule for imposing the sentence, and these provisions in those respects were adopted as part of the later statute, with the same effect as if they had been bodily incorporated therein, and hence plaintiff was properly confined in the state penitentiary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3320–3328.]

Original proceeding in habeas corpus by John Hukoveh against Felix Alston, as Warden of the Wyoming State Penitentiary. Writ denied.

Ivan S. Jones, of Kemmerer, for plaintiff.
D. A. Preston, Atty. Gen., for defendant.

POTTER, C. J. This is a habeas corpus proceeding; the plaintiff, John Hukoveh, alleging that he is illegally restrained of his liberty by imprisonment in the state penitentiary. Upon an information charging him with the crime of robbery, and his plea of guilty, he was sentenced by the district court in Lincoln county on February 15, 1917, to imprisonment in the state penitentiary for the term of not less than four nor more than six years; and under a mittimus issued out of said court reciting the judgment, and directing the sheriff to take and deliver the plaintiff to said penitentiary, and the warden and other officers thereof to keep and imprison him therein for the term of said sentence, he was delivered to and received at the penitentiary and is now there confined. The petition alleges these facts, and also that the charge and sentence was for a first offense, and that the plaintiff at the time of the sentence was under the age of 25 years, viz.: 18 years. The facts are not in dispute, but the answer denies that the plaintiff's imprisonment is unlawful.

The contention on behalf of the plaintiff is that the court was without authority to sentence him to imprisonment in the penitentiary, and that its only authority to sentence him to imprisonment was to require that he be imprisoned in the Wyoming industrial institute. That contention is based upon section 540, Compiled Statutes 1910, and section 8 of chapter 63 of the Laws of 1913. Section 540, Compiled Statutes of 1910, is the first section of chapter 44 of that compilation and was enacted as the first section of chapter 90 of the Laws of 1909. It reads as follows:

"Any person between the ages of 16 and 25 years, convicted of a felony, who has not theretofore been convicted of a crime punishable by imprisonment in the state penitentiary, may, in the discretion of the trial court, be sentenced to imprisonment in the reformatory of the state, with which the state board of charities and reform of this state may make arrangements for the care, custody and maintenance of such convict, as hereinafter provided, such person to be confined in such reformatory under the provisions of the law relating to that institution, and under the rules and regulations governing the same, to be treated, cared for, kept and confined in such reformatory in the same manner and for the same period of time, not exceeding the maximum term provided by the laws of this state for the offense of which the offender was convicted, as are convicts sentenced to such institution by the courts of the state in which such institution is situate and located. In imposing sentence in all such cases the courts of this state shall not fix or limit the duration of the period of confinement in such reformatory further than that it shall not in any event exceed the maximum term provided by the laws of this state for the offense of which the prisoner was convicted: Provided, however, that the governor of this state may upon the recommendation of the superintendent, superior officer or governing body of any such reformatory grant to such convict a parole or discharge from said reformatory in accordance with the laws of the state in which the same is situated or the rules of such institution."

The title of the original act was:

"An act authorizing the district court of this state, in sentencing certain persons convicted of felonies, to sentence them to a reform institution of some other state, and authorizing and empowering the state board of charities and reform to make arrangements * * * for the care, maintenance and custody of such persons so sentenced."

The other sections of the act are included in the same order in chapter 44 of the Compiled Statutes aforesaid, except the last section of the act, which declared that it should take effect and be in force from and after July 1, 1909, and they complete the chapter. Those sections provide for the parole and discharge of a person confined in the reformatory; that the board of charities and reform may contract with the authorities of any other state for the care, custody, and maintenance of persons sentenced, under the provisions of the chapter, to the reformatory of another state; and authorize the transfer from the penitentiary to said reformatory, on the order of the Governor when recommended by the board, of any person between 16 and 25 years of age thereafter sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for more than one year, if the Governor is satisfied that the public interest and the welfare of the convict will be subserved thereby. Provision had previously been made by statute for committing to a reform institution of another state juvenile delinquents under the age of 16 years, and statutes to that effect had been in force since 1884, though an exception was made where the conviction was for homicide, and originally where the conviction was either for homicide, arson, or rape. Rev. Stat. 1887, §§ 2332–2336; Laws 1888, c. 57; Rev. Stat. 1899, §§ 4930–4934; Comp. Stat. 1910, §§ 3127–3131. And provision was also made in 1907 for the parole and discharge of juvenile delinquents so committed to an institution of another state. Comp. Stat. 1910, §§ 3132–3135.

Provision having been made by a statute enacted in 1911 for establishing the Wyoming industrial institute, and it having been located at Worland by a vote of the people, as provided by the act, another act was passed in 1913, published as chapter 63 of the Laws of 1913, making further provisions for that institution and containing the provision particularly relied on in support of the contention that plaintiff's sentence and his imprisonment in the penitentiary thereunder is unlawful. That provision is found in section 8 of the act, which reads as follows:

> "Every offender described in chapter 44, Wyoming Compiled Statutes, 1910, who shall have been convicted, shall be sentenced to imprisonment in the Wyoming industrial institute under the provisions of said chapter, and such other juvenile delinquents as in the discretion of the state board of charities and reform should not be confined elsewhere, shall be confined in said Wyoming industrial institute. The term of such imprisonment of any person so convicted and sentenced, shall be terminated by the state board of charities and reform, and (as) authorized by this act. But such imprisonment shall not exceed the maximum term provided by law for the crime for which the prisoner is convicted and sentenced."

It is argued by counsel for plaintiff that the above-quoted provision of the 1913 statute for sentencing the offenders mentioned to imprisonment in the Wyoming industrial institute is to be construed as requiring that every such offender shall be sentenced to imprisonment only in said institute. But we do not so understand or construe that provision, when read, as it must be, in connection with the former statute to which it refers. On the contrary, we think the correct construction of the provision is that, whenever an offender described in the statute referred to (chapter 44, Compiled Statutes) is sentenced to imprisonment in a reformatory of the state instead of the penitentiary, that sentence shall be for imprisonment in the Wyoming industrial institute. That would be our conclusion if based alone upon the language of the statute, but a consideration of the history and purpose of the legislation and other statutory provisions bearing on the question leads inevitably to the same conclusion.

The provision relied on is that a convicted offender described in chapter 44, Compiled Statutes, shall be sentenced to the industrial institute "under the provisions of said chapter." Having thus referred to the other statute not only as describing the offender but as prescribing the rule for imposing the sentence, its provisions in those respects were adopted as part of the later statute "with the same effect as if they had been bodily incorporated therein" (Edwards v. Cheyenne, 19 Wyo. 110, 137, 114 Pac. 677, 122 Pac. 900), except as modified by naming the place of imprisonment, which was intended, as we think and shall endeavor further to show, as a substitute for the reformatory mentioned in the other statute, viz. a reformatory with which the state board of charities and reform may arrange for the care, custody, and maintenance of the convict, and which might be located in another state. It will be observed that the provisions of the other statute (Comp. Stat. § 540) thus referred to are that any person between the ages of 16 and 25 years, convicted of a felony, and not previously convicted of a crime punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary "may" be sentenced, "in the discretion of the trial court," to imprisonment in the reformatory of the state. That statute expressly refers to and covers a crime punishable by imprisonment in the state penitentiary, and merely authorizes a sentence to imprisonment in the reformatory in the court's discretion. It does not require such a sentence or preclude a sentence to imprisonment in the penitentiary. As the section aforesaid of the act of 1913 provides for a sentence to imprisonment in the industrial institute, "under the provisions" of the said statute referred to, the necessary result is to leave the court with authority to exercise its discretion to provide for imprisonment in the penitentiary or reformatory, as provided in that statute. And that seems to be the clear intention of the act of 1913, as indicated by the language employed. The crime of robbery, of which the plaintiff was convicted and sentenced, is made punishable under the general crimes act by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not more than 14 years. Comp. Stat. 1910, § 5800. It is therefore a felony, for all offenses which may be punished by death, or by imprisonment in the penitentiary, are declared by statute to be felonies. Id., § 6029.

That it was intended by the act of 1913 only to substitute the Wyoming industrial institute as the reformatory to which the offenders referred to should be sentenced, instead of a reformatory mentioned in section 540, c. 44, of the Compiled Statutes, whenever the court, in its discretion, should impose a sentence to imprisonment in the reformatory instead of the penitentiary, is further made clear by the first section of chapter 107 of the Laws of 1911, the first act providing for the establishment of the said industrial institute. It was provided by that section as follows:

> "There shall be established within the state a reform institution which shall be known as the 'Wyoming Industrial Institute' for the custody and discipline of that class of offenders described in chapter 44, Wyoming Compiled Statutes, 1910, and which may be sentenced to terms of imprisonment therein by trial courts, in accordance with the provisions of said chapter."

The effect of that provision is to declare only that the institute mentioned shall be established for the custody and discipline of the class of offenders described in the chapter of the statutes referred to who may be sentenced to imprisonment therein, in accordance with the provisions of said chapter, and discloses no intention to prescribe a rule as to the sentence taking away the discretion conferred upon the court by the other existing statute. The words "under the provisions of said chapter," found in section 8 of the act of 1913, were used and intended, we think, in the same sense as the words "according to the provisions of said chapter," in section 1 of the act of 1911; allowing the court the discretion aforesaid.

That act of 1911 provided further for the location of the institute through a vote of the people of the state at the general election in 1912. And the institute having been so located, the act of 1913 was passed, entitled:

> "An act authorizing the purchase of land for site, construction of buildings, establishing, maintaining and administration of the Wyoming industrial institute; providing for officers and employés of same, and for the education and employment of the inmates thereof, and making an appropriation therefor."

By section 1 of that act it is declared that the institute shall be under the management of the state board of charities and reform. Section 2 authorizes said board to purchase or acquire land at or near Worland to be used by the institute, and to erect suitable buildings thereon. Sections 3, 4, and 5 provide for the government of the institute. Sections 6 and 7 contain provisions for a record of the trial of persons sentenced to the institute and for the transfer and delivery of such persons to the institute. Then follows section 8, containing the provisions upon which plaintiff in this case relies; and section 9, declaring that the discipline of the institute shall be reformatory, that criminals therein may be employed in agriculture, horticulture, or mechanical labor, as a means of support and reformation, and that the board may use such means of reformation consistent with the improvement of the inmates as they may deem expedient, and provide such machinery and mechanical appliances as may be required for such purposes. There are succeeding provisions in the act authorizing the board to transfer from the institute to the penitentiary persons who may become incorrigible, or may be shown to have been, at the time of conviction, more than 25 years of age, or to have been previously convicted of crime, or whose presence in the institute appears to be seriously detrimental to its well-being, and to order their return to the institute, and also to transfer to the institute from the penitentiary youthful, well-behaved, and promising convicts therein. And an appropriation is made for carrying out the provisions of the act. The provision for transferring certain inmates to the penitentiary seems to recognize that their crime was punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary.

The purpose of the act, as expressed in its title and all its provisions, other than those found in section 8, is to provide for the establishment, maintenance, and government of the institute and the care and discipline of the persons confined therein. The provisions relating to the sentence of persons to imprisonment in the institute are incidental to the purpose thus stated, and must be construed in that light. Section 8 does not indicate a different purpose. Following the provision as to sentencing offenders described in the statute referred to, it is provided by the section that such other juvenile delinquents as in the discretion of the state board of charities and reform should not be confined elsewhere shall be confined in said Wyoming industrial institute; disclosing the sole object and intent of the section, in line with the general purpose of the act, to declare the institute the reformatory of the state for the confinement of persons theretofore authorized by law to be kept and maintained in reformatory institutions located in other states, except, it would seem, such juvenile delinquents as the board of charities and reform may, in its discretion, cause to be elsewhere confined. We see nothing in this of an intent to interfere with the discretion as to the sentence granted by the provisions of the Compiled Statutes referred to. It may be at least doubtful whether, under the title of the act of 1913, a provision could constitutionally be embraced therein amending the previous statute referred to, and the statute defining the crime and prescribing its punishment, so as to take away the authority to sentence to imprisonment in the penitentiary, or to suffer death where that punishment is prescribed.

We conclude therefore that the plaintiff is not illegally restrained of his liberty, and he will be remanded to the custody of the defendant, the warden of the state penitentiary.

BEARD, J., concurs.

(25 Wyo. 133)

JOHNSON v. ABBOTT. (No. 896.)

(Supreme Court of Wyoming. June 27, 1917.)

1. Fraudulent Conveyances ⟹95(2)—Consideration—Husband and Wife.

A chattel mortgage, given by a husband to his wife to secure a sum then owed her for labor performed by her for about two years just prior to their marriage, and money loaned to him by her which was the proceeds of the sale of real and personal property she owned before marriage, was based on sufficient consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 251, 259.]

2. Fraudulent Conveyances ⟹118(2) — Preference to Creditors — Right to Prefer Wife.

A debtor may prefer one creditor to another, although the preferred creditor is his wife, if his purpose is to pay or secure a bona fide claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. § 380.]

Error to District Court, Hot Springs County; Charles E. Winter, Judge.

Action by W. J. Johnson against Frank Abbott, in which a writ of attachment was issued and levied upon defendant's property. From the action of the court sustaining a motion to dissolve the attachment and discharge the attached property, the plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

John M. Hench, of Thermopolis, for plaintiff in error. C. W. Axtell, of Thermopolis, and Matson & Kennedy, of Cheyenne, for defendant in error.

BEARD, J. Plaintiff in error, as plaintiff below, commenced this action in the district court against the defendant in error, and caused a writ of attachment to be issued and levied upon defendant's property. Defendant moved to dissolve the attachment and discharge the attached property, which motion was upon a hearing sustained, and plaintiff brings error.

[1] The grounds for the issuance of the writ of attachment, as stated in the affidavit therefor, are as follows:

> "(1) That the defendant is about to remove his property, or a part thereof, out of the jurisdiction of the court, with intent to defraud his creditors. (2) That said defendant is about to convert his property, or a part thereof, into money for the purpose of placing it beyond the reach of his creditors. (3) Said defendant has property or rights in action which he conceals. (4) Said defendant has assigned, removed, disposed of, and is about to dispose of his property, or a part thereof, with intent to defraud his creditors."

[2] The motion to discharge the attachment was made upon the ground that the several grounds for the attachment contained in the affidavit therefor were not true. The defendant in his affidavit in support of his motion positively denied that either of said grounds existed or was true. The motion was heard upon affidavits and other evidence. The only ground for the attachment which the evidence tends to sustain is the fourth, that defendant had disposed of his property, or a part thereof, with intent to defraud his creditors. This action was brought upon a promissory note of defendant for $5,500, dated October 10, 1911, due three years after date, with 6 per cent. interest, on which two years' interest had been paid. The action was commenced April 20, 1916. It appears that about November 16, 1914, defendant gave a chattel mortgage on the property to one Duncan for $2,000, and one to the Thermopolis Bank for $600, and on that date one to his wife for $1,950. It is the latter mortgage which plaintiff claims was given to defraud creditors. Defendant testified that the mortgage to his wife was given to secure that sum which he then owed her for labor performed by her for about two years just prior to their marriage in July, 1912, and $521 money loaned to him by her, the same being the proceeds from the sale of some cattle and town lots which she owned before their marriage, and $330 of which he applied to the payment of interest on the note in suit. His evidence as to that is not contradicted, and if believed by the court, as it evidently was, established full consideration for the mortgage to her.

That a debtor may prefer one creditor to another, although the preferred creditor is his wife, we entertain no doubt, if the purpose is to pay or secure a bona fide claim. As stated in National Bank v. Croco, 46 Kan. 629, 26 Pac. 942:

> "It is well settled that a debtor in failing circumstances may prefer one creditor to another, although that creditor should be his wife, and he may in good faith transfer his property at a fair price to her in payment of her bona fide claim."

And in Rockford Boot & Shoe Mfg. Co. v. Mastin, 75 Iowa, 112, 39 N. W. 219, the court said:

> "The evidence tends to show, and we think it is established, that George W. either knew his father was in seriously embarrassed circumstances at the time of the conveyance, or, if not, he had sufficient knowledge thereof to put him on inquiry. But, as he was a bona fide creditor, he had a right to secure himself; and in such case the diligent creditor is entitled to priority over the tardy or less fortunate creditor, unless there was an actual intent to defraud, instead of a desire simply to secure an honest debt."

In Laird et al. v. Davidson, 124 Ind. 412, 25 N. E. 7, a case in which judgment creditors caused executions to be levied upon property which had been conveyed by the debtor husband to his wife, the court said:

> "No difference from what source the appellee (the wife) acquired money, so that such acquisition was not tainted with bad faith, she had a perfect right to loan it to her husband, and take his promissory note therefor; and thereafter, and when in failing circumstances, he had a right to prefer her to the exclusion of other creditors. We think these are not debatable questions."

Without further quotations, as sustaining our views, see Bamberger v. Schoolfield, 160 U. S. 149, 16 Sup. Ct. 225, 40 L. Ed. 374; Micou v. National Bank, 104 U. S. 530, 26 L. Ed. 834; Wait on Fraudulent Conveyances and Creditors' Bills (3d Ed.) § 390; 20 Cyc. 472. In the present case the defendant testified—and it was not contradicted—that when he gave the mortgage to Duncan his wife asked him to give her security for her claim, and he did so. There was no evidence that she had any other purpose than obtaining security.

Evidence of the value of defendant's property at the time the mortgage was given was introduced. It was in sharp conflict, and if, as counsel for plaintiff states, the court decided that defendant was not insolvent, there was sufficient evidence to sustain such finding.

We discover no error in the record, and the order dissolving the attachment and discharging the attached property is affirmed.

Affirmed.

POTTER, C. J., concurs.

(25 Wyo. 138)

STANTON v. CHICAGO, B. & Q. R. CO.

(No. 887.)

(Supreme Court of Wyoming. June 27, 1917.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚷301—PRESERVATION OF GROUNDS FOR REVIEW—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Where the ruling of the trial court in denying a continuance was not assigned as error in the motion for new trial, it will not be reviewed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1743, 1753-1755.]

2. NEW TRIAL ⚷1—MOTION—SUFFICIENCY.

A motion for a new trial which states no statutory ground therefor is insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 1-3.]

3. NEW TRIAL ⚷119—MOTION—FILING AFTER TIME.

The denial of a motion for a new trial filed after the time provided by statute cannot be held erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. § 243.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚷836 — COMPLIANCE WITH RULES—EXCUSE.

The Supreme Court cannot depart from well-established rules of practice and procedure because a party was conducting his own case without the assistance of an attorney.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3247-3261.]

Error to District Court, Natrona County; Charles E. Winter, Judge.

Action by Frederick J. Stanton against the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company and another. Judgment for defendant named, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Frederick J. Stanton, of Denver, Colo., pro se. Burke & Riner, of Cheyenne, for defendant in error.

BEARD, J. The plaintiff in error seeks a reversal of a judgment of the district court of Natrona county, rendered in an action brought by him against the defendants in error, in which action he alleged in his petition that he was the owner of certain real estate situated in said county, that defendant railroad company claimed title thereto by virtue of a warranty deed from defendant Samuel J. Jordon, and that said defendant claimed that said Jordon on August 26, 1910, received a warranty deed to said land from plaintiff. And he alleged that said last-mentioned deed purporting to have been executed by plaintiff to said Jordon was a forgery, and that plaintiff had never parted with his title to said land. He prayed that said pretended deed from plaintiff to said Jordon be declared a forgery and null and void, and that defendants be enjoined and debarred from asserting any claim to said land adverse to plaintiff.

The defendant railroad company answered, admitted that prior to August 26, 1910, plaintiff was the owner of said land, admitted that it claimed title thereto by virtue of a warranty deed from said Jordon, and denied that the deed from plaintiff to said Jordon was a forgery.

Upon the issue thus joined the case was tried to the court, and the court found against the plaintiff, and that the title to said land was in the defendant, Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, and dismissed the action at plaintiff's costs.

The record filed in this court is so imperfect and defective that it is at least doubtful if it presents anything which can, under the well-settled rules of practice, be considered. It appears, however, that the issues were made up in May, 1912, and thereafter the case was set down for trial April 29, 1915, and on the application of plaintiff was continued until June 21, 1915. On that date the cause coming on for trial, the plaintiff not being present or represented by counsel, the court announced:

> "I have here a communication from Frederick J. Stanton, plaintiff in this action, asking for a further continuance of the case."

The application for a continuance was resisted, and by the court denied, and the trial proceeded with, the judgment being entered the same day.

[1] The communication referred to is not included in the bill of exceptions, nor is the ruling of the court denying a continuance assigned as error in the motions for a new trial. That ruling cannot therefore be considered being raised for the first time in this court.

[2] On July 1, 1915, plaintiff filed a motion to set aside the judgment and for a continuance of the case until the next term of the court. The motion contains none of the grounds prescribed by the statute for a new trial. On August 28, 1915, plaintiff filed another motion for a new trial, signed by himself and by two "advising attorneys for plaintiff." These motions came on for hearing and determination August 30, 1915, at which time, the order recites, plaintiff appeared in person and by counsel, A. H. Cobb, Esq., and Joseph N. Baxter, Esq. Upon consideration by the court both motions were denied, to which ruling exceptions were taken. There was no error in the ruling on the first motion, as it was insufficient, stating no statutory ground for a new trial.

[3] The second motion was filed long after the time allowed by law for filing the same had expired, and for that reason alone the denial of the same cannot be held to be erroneous. We have, however, considered the motion and the evidence given in support thereof, and are of the opinion that no abuse of the discretion of the court in its ruling is made to appear.

[4] It appears that plaintiff was conducting his own case without the assistance of attorneys, except as above stated, which may in a measure account for the defects in the record. But this court cannot on that account depart from and disregard the well-established and necessary rules of practice and procedure.

---

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

The judgment is sustained by sufficient evidence, and is affirmed.

Affirmed.

POTTER, C. J., concurs.

(30 Idaho. 25)

HAYTON et ux. v. CLEMANS et ux.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. June 17, 1916. On Rehearing, June 28, 1917.)

1. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS 🔑37(1)—DEEDS—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

Where an action is brought to rescind a contract, to cancel and hold for naught a deed made and delivered, and to secure the recovery of a promissory note given at the time of, and in connection with, the making of the contract and deed, and for a reasonable rental of the premises possessed by defendant subsequent to the making and delivery of the deed, and the complaint alleges that the contract was entered into and the deed and promissory note made and delivered as the result of false and fraudulent representations of defendant known by him to be false and fraudulent when made, and to have been made with the intent to deceive the plaintiff and to have him act upon them, and that the plaintiff relied and acted upon such false and fraudulent representations and thereby suffered injury, held, that the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 66–68, 71.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1011(1)—REVIEW—FINDINGS.

Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, neither the findings nor judgment of the trial court will be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983–3988.]

On Rehearing.

3. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS 🔑37(4)—DEEDS — COMPLAINT — OFFER TO RESTORE CONSIDERATION.

In an action for the rescission of a contract, the complaint need not show that prior to the commencement of the action plaintiff offered to place defendant in statu quo.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 68, 72, 73.]

4. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS 🔑37(4)—ACTION FOR RESCISSION — RESTORATION OF CONSIDERATION.

Where the complaint in an action for the rescission of a contract shows that the consideration received by plaintiff was an interest in land under a contract of purchase, and that such contract has been foreclosed by decree for default in payments due thereunder, which payments defendant represented to plaintiff had already been made, it is not necessary that the complaint should offer to restore to defendant the consideration received as a condition precedent to plaintiff's right to cancellation and rescission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Cancellation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 68, 72, 73.]

Appeal from District Court, Latah County; Edgar C. Steele, Judge.

Action by Charles G. Hayton and wife against W. R. Clemans and wife for the rescission of a contract, for the cancellation of a deed, for recovery of a note, and to recover rental. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

George G. Pickett and A. L. Morgan, both of Moscow, for appellants. Frank L. Moore and J. H. Forney, both of Moscow, for respondents.

BUDGE, J. This suit was brought by respondents in the district court of the Second judicial district, in and for Latah county, against appellants, for the cancellation of a certain deed made by respondents by which certain lands and premises belonging to respondents situate in Latah county, Idaho, were conveyed to appellant W. R. Clemans, and for the cancellation of a certain promissory note for the sum of $1,000 made by respondents and payable to the order of appellant W. R. Clemans.

From the record it appears that respondents were the owners of certain lands and premises situate in Latah county, and that appellants were the owners of an undivided 58 per cent. of an interest in a large tract of land lying in Walla Walla county, Wash. This interest was by virtue of a contract for a sale of said land by one Preston to one Kenworthy. On March 27, 1913, appellant W. R. Clemans proposed to sell to respondent Charles G. Hayton a 25 per cent. or one-fourth interest in and to the lands and premises lying in Walla Walla county. It is charged in the complaint that appellant W. R. Clemans, for the purpose of inducing respondents to enter into this contract, made false and fraudulent representations in five different and distinct particulars: First, that there were 1,800 acres of growing crop upon said Walla Walla lands, when in truth and in fact there were not to exceed 800 acres of growing crop; second, that 320 acres of good land in section 8, township 12 north, range 36 E., W. M., was a part of the tract in which respondents were purchasing an interest, when in truth and in fact it was not a part, and was the land of another; third, that certain valueless land, consisting of 320 acres in sections 4 and 9 of said lands and premises, was not a part of the tract in which respondents were about to purchase from appellant a one-fourth interest; fourth, that for the year 1912 the lands and premises in Walla Walla county produced from 39 to 42 bushels of wheat to the acre, when in truth and in fact for that season the premises produced only 11 bushels per acre; fifth, that there was due from Walter Kenworthy to W. G. Preston, upon the contract, as the purchase price to be paid for these premises, the sum of $33,000 and no more, when in truth and in fact there was due upon this contract the sum of approximately $39,000.

The complaint also sets out that appellant W. R. Clemans made such false and fraudulent representations in each and all of these particulars, knowing the same to be false and untrue, for the purpose of inducing respondents to convey to him the said tract of land belonging to them, mentioned and described as being in Latah county, and for the purpose of inducing them to make, execute, and deliver to him a certain promissory note for the sum of $1,000; that respondents did not know, and had no means of knowing, that the fraudulent representations so made by appellant W. R. Clemans were false and fraudulent; and that, relying upon these representations and believing them to be true, they entered into a contract with said appellant for the purchase of his 25 per cent. or one-fourth interest in and to the lands and premises mentioned and described as being in Walla Walla county, Wash.; that, as a consideration for this purchase, respondents by a good and sufficient deed conveyed to appellant W. R. Clemans the property mentioned and described as being in Latah county, Idaho, at an agreed price of $9,300, and made and delivered to him their promissory note in the sum of $1,000, and assumed and agreed to pay the unpaid balance due under the contract between W. G. Preston and wife and Walter J. Kenworthy, aggregating $33,000 as represented by appellant W. R. Clemans, and further assumed the payment of one-fourth of $20,000 secured by mortgage upon the lands and premises in Walla Walla county, Wash.; that respondents did not discover such fraud until about the middle of April, 1913, and after they had made and delivered to the said W. R. Clemans the deed and note; that, upon discovering that they had been defrauded, they demanded of W. R. Clemans that he reconvey the lands and premises located in Latah county to them and return and surrender to them the said promissory note, with which demand and request he failed and refused to comply.

It is further alleged that on or about June 30, 1913, W. G. Preston and his wife, Matilda Cox Preston, began an action in the circuit court of Washington, Walla Walla county, against respondent Andrew M. Anderson and wife, C. Quesnell and wife, and appellant W. R. Clemans and wife, to annul, vacate, set aside, and rescind the contract between him, W. G. Preston, and Walter J. Kenworthy, for the sale to Kenworthy of the lands in Walla Walla county, and under which these respondents and appellants acquired and held an interest in said lands, which action was predicated upon a breach of this contract by default in the payment of moneys due November 1, 1912, according to the terms of the contract, which payments he (W. R. Clemans) had falsely and fraudulently represented to respondents had been made, and which default in said payment existed at the time the respondents made, executed, and delivered to W. R. Clemans the deed and promissory note; that appellant Clemans failed and refused to perform the conditions of his contract, and permitted W. G. Preston and his wife to prosecute the action to judgment; and that these lands were not redeemed, and the contract between W. G. Preston and Walter J. Kenworthy and all rights and interests thereunder by reason of the default were forfeited.

It is also alleged in respondents' complaint that the rental value of the lands so conveyed to W. R. Clemans was reasonably worth the sum of $4,000 for the years 1913 and 1914, and that from March 27, 1913, and up to and until the filing of the amended complaint, the appellants have been in possession of the lands and premises conveyed to them by respondents, and each and every part thereof.

The respondents prayed judgment in their complaint against appellants for a cancellation of the deed and the note mentioned and described in the complaint, and a reconveyance of their lands and premises to them, and a rescission of the contract to purchase said one-fourth interest in the Walla Walla county lands, for the sum of $4,000, the rental value of the Latah county lands, and for all equitable relief.

Upon the trial of this cause, judgment was rendered in favor of respondents rescinding the contract, canceling and setting aside the deed made and delivered by respondents to appellant W. R. Clemans, and decreeing that W. R. Clemans return and deliver to Charles G. Hayton the promissory note for the sum of $1,000, and awarding judgment in favor of respondents and against appellant W. R. Clemans in the sum of $300 as the rental of the lands conveyed by respondents mentioned and described in their complaint, located in Latah county, for the years 1913 and 1914.

[1, 2] This is an appeal from the judgment and from the order of the court overruling appellants' motion for a new trial. Appellants assign, and rely for a reversal of the judgment and the action of the court in denying their motion for a new trial, upon five specifications of error: First, that the court erred in finding and deciding that the representations made by appellant constituted fraud or in any manner sustains judgment of cancellation of the deed from respondents to Clemans; second, that the court erred in overruling appellants' demurrer to the complaint; third, that the court erred in admitting any evidence over appellants' objection for the reason that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; fourth, that the court erred in overruling appellants' motion for a new trial; fifth, insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, conclusions, and decree.

The foregoing assignments of error raise two material questions: First, does the complaint state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and, second, is the evidence sufficient to support the findings of fact made by the trial court, and the judgment entered thereon?

We have carefully examined respondents' complaint, and are of the opinion that it states a cause of action. Kemmerer v. Pollard, 15 Idaho, 34, 96 Pac. 206; Breshears v. Callender, 23 Idaho, 348, 131 Pac. 15; Brown v. Norman, 65 Miss. 369, 4 South. 293, 7 Am. St. Rep. 663; Pomeroy's Equity Jur. § 688, notes 67, 70, 73, 74.

As to the second contention, the trial court found from all of the testimony of the witnesses that appellant W. R. Clemans, at the time he procured the respondents to enter into the contract referred to in the complaint, to make and deliver the deed to the premises upon which they resided in Latah county, and to execute and deliver the note for $1,000, made false and fraudulent representations to the respondents, which he knew to be false and fraudulent at the time he made them, and which he made with the intention that respondents would act upon them, and that the respondents relied and acted upon such false and fraudulent representations to their injury. That these findings of fact are based upon substantially conflicting evidence is clearly apparent to us from an examination of the record. This being true, under the well-established holding of this court, neither the findings of fact nor the judgment based thereon will be disturbed on appeal. Heckman v. Espey, 12 Idaho, 755, 88 Pac. 80; Hufton v. Hufton, 25 Idaho, 96, 136 Pac. 605; Henry Gold Min. Co. v. Henry, 25 Idaho, 333, 137 Pac. 523; Commercial Trust Co. v. Idaho Brick Co., 25 Idaho, 755, 139 Pac. 1004.

We are therefore forced to the conclusion that the judgment of the trial court should be sustained, and it is so ordered. Costs are awarded to respondents.

SULLIVAN, C. J., concurs. MORGAN, J., did not sit at the hearing of this case, and took no part in the decision.

On Rehearing.

FLYNN, District Judge. A rehearing having been granted in this case, the court has very carefully reconsidered the questions presented to it upon this appeal. The point most strenuously urged is that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in that it does not show that at the time plaintiff claims to have discovered that he was defrauded, and at the time the action was commenced, any offer was made to return to defendant the interest or title to the Walla Walla property. The allegations of the complaint as to the transactions between the parties are sufficiently shown in the original opinion. It is further urged that, not only is the complaint insufficient in this respect, but that the proof shows that no such offer was made, and that therefore the entire case must fail.

[3, 4] The contention of appellant on this point, as I understand it, is that before a party is entitled to rescind a contract he must put, or offer to put, the other party in statu quo by a full restoration of all that he has received. This court has heretofore held that this rule is applicable in cases where a rescission is made before an action is brought, but that such a tender or offer is not necessary as a condition precedent to a suit for rescission, and I feel that such decision is controlling and correct. Gamblin v. Dickson, 18 Idaho, 734, 112 Pac. 213.

After the filing of the original complaint in this action, the rights of all the parties hereto in the Walla Walla property were canceled by a decree of the superior court of Washington for Walla Walla county, forfeiting the rights of all parties claiming under the Preston-Kenworthy contract for default in payment of moneys due November 1, 1912, under the terms of the contract. The amended complaint, on which this action was tried, pleads the decree of the Washington court.

Conceding that it is necessary in a suit for rescission that the plaintiff plead his willingness to restore the consideration received by him and to do equity, do the facts pleaded in relation to the foreclosure of the Washington contract, under which contract both appellants and respondents acquired an interest in the Walla Walla property, obviate the necessity of an offer in the amended complaint to restore the consideration received? I think they do. One of the very purposes of pleading the Washington decree must have been to show that the consideration received by Hayton had gone from his control and could not be returned on account of the decree foreclosing for a default in a payment past due at the time Hayton and Clemans made their contract, which payment Clemans fraudulently and falsely represented had been made. At the time of the filing of the amended or supplemental complaint in this action, Hayton had no interest in the Walla Walla property. His rights had been foreclosed by the Washington decree. He had nothing to tender back to Clemans and was in this condition through no default of his own. Under these circumstances, it would be a futile offer on his part to assign back to Clemans his foreclosed equity in the Walla Walla land.

I agree also with the original opinion, filed in this case, that the findings of fact are based on substantially conflicting evidence and therefore should not be disturbed.

The former opinion of the court in this case is reaffirmed.

BUDGE, C. J., and RICE, J., concur.

(30 Idaho, 534)

STATE v. LEEPER.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. June 28, 1917.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟹1076(2) — APPEAL—RECOGNIZANCE.

Failure to give a recognizance, as provided by section 8324, Rev. Codes, upon appeal to the district court, does not defeat the jurisdiction of that court to hear the case, nor render the appeal subject to dismissal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2708, 2709.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟹1081—APPEAL—JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURT — WAIVER OF DEFECT.

The giving of notice of appeal in the manner provided by section 8321, Rev. Codes, is necessary to the jurisdiction of the district court; but the failure to have affixed thereto the signature of the appellant or his attorney is a formal, rather than a jurisdictional, defect and may be waived.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2722-2724, 2962.]

Appeal from District Court, Clearwater County; Edgar C. Steele, Judge.

Roy H. Leeper was convicted of disturbing the peace, his appeal to the district court was dismissed, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded to district court, with direction to grant a new trial.

Chas. L. McDonald, of Lewiston, for appellant.

MORGAN, J. Appellant was convicted, in the probate court of Clearwater county, of disturbing the peace. A transcript of the docket of the probate court shows that immediately upon the rendition of judgment he gave oral notice of his intention to appeal and, within 10 days thereafter filed a written notice of his appeal to the district court: also that, upon appellant's request, the bail bond theretofore given was refiled as a bond on appeal.

The notice, which appears to be regular in all other particulars, is unsigned. It bears the following indorsement:

> "Service of a true copy of the within notice of appeal is hereby admitted, by receipt thereof, this 10th day of March, A. D. 1915. F. E. Smith, County Attorney."

[1] Respondent moved, in the district court, to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the notice thereof was not sufficient to conform to the requirements of section 8321, Rev. Codes, and upon the further ground that no undertaking of bail, pending appeal, had been filed as provided by section 8324. The motion was granted, and from the judgment and order of dismissal this appeal is prosecuted.

Section 8324 merely provides that a party appealing may, in order to be released from custody or if he desires a stay of proceedings under the judgment, enter into a recognizance for the payment of any judgment, fine, and costs that may be awarded against him on appeal, and that he will faithfully prosecute the same and render himself in execution of any judgment or order entered against him in the district court.

Assuming that refiling the bail bond was not a substantial compliance with the requirements of sections 8324, supra, it may be said that failure to comply therewith would only result in failure to stay the execution of the judgment of the probate court and would not defeat the jurisdiction of the district court to hear the case, nor render the appeal subject to dismissal. In re Schuster, 25 Idaho, 465, 138 Pac. 135.

Section 8321 is as follows:

> "A defendant intending to appeal must give notice of his intention to do so at the time of the trial or rendition of the judgment, and must within ten days after the rendition and entry of the judgment, file with the judge or justice of the court wherein the conviction was had, and serve on the prosecuting attorney of the county, a notice of appeal, entitled in the action, setting forth the character of the judgment, and the intention of the defendant to appeal therefrom to the district court."

[2] The giving of notice of appeal in the manner provided by the foregoing section of the Code is necessary to the jurisdiction of the district court; but, it will be observed, the statute does not require the notice to be signed. Therefore the failure to have affixed thereto the signature of the appellant or his attorney is a formal, rather than a jurisdictional, defect and may be waived. In this case the prosecuting attorney, by accepting service in the manner and form he employed, waived the defect occasioned by the notice not being signed. Wilson v. Wilson, 6 Idaho, 597, 57 Pac. 708; People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal. App. 330, 94 Pac. 407, 419, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717; Livermore v. Webb, 56 Cal. 489; Cella v. Schnairs, 42 Mo. App. 316.

The judgment and order of dismissal are reversed, and the cause remanded to the district court, with direction to grant appellant a new trial.

BUDGE, C. J., and RICE, J., concur.

(30 Idaho, 34)

RATHBUN et al. v. NEW YORK LIFE INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. June 30, 1916. On Rehearing, June 26, 1917.)

INSURANCE ⟹137(2)—LIFE INSURANCE—CONDITION OF HEALTH—LIABILITY ON POLICY.

Where R., desiring life insurance, applied in writing to the insurance company for such insurance, and agreed that the policy of insurance applied for should not take effect unless the first premium was paid and the policy was delivered to and received by him during his lifetime and while he was in good health, and after applying for the policy and before the delivery thereof R. was stricken with appendicitis, from which he died five days after he received the policy, said policy having been sent to him by mail from the insurance company's branch office in Spokane, Wash., in total ignorance of the changed condition of R.'s health, and R.'s friends thereafter paid the first premium, which the company promptly returned when it discovered the fact of R.'s fatal illness, held, that the policy did not take effect by reason of the fact that R. was not in good health at the time it was received by him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 234.]

Appeal from District Court, Latah County; Edgar C. Steele, Judge.

Action by Julia M. Rathbun and husband against New York Life Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. L. Morgan, of Moscow, for appellants. St. Clair & St. Clair, of Idaho Falls, and Forney & Moore, of Moscow, for respondent.

SULLIVAN, C. J. This is an action brought by the mother and father to recover on a life insurance policy issued to their son, Ernest C. Rathbun. A demurrer to the complaint was overruled, and answer filed by the insurance company denying its liability. Thereupon the issues were tried to the court without a jury, and judgment was entered against the plaintiffs, from which this appeal was taken.

The action of the court in overruling plaintiffs' demurrer to the defendant's answer and in overruling plaintiffs' objection to the introduction of any testimony under the allegations of the answer, and in making findings of fact and conclusions of law and entering judgment in favor of the defendant, is assigned as error.

The following facts appear from the record: On the 9th day of April, 1913, Ernest C. Rathbun, son of the plaintiffs, made application to the defendant, New York Life Insurance Company, for a $2,000 insurance policy upon his life, in which policy the plaintiff Julia M. Rathbun was made the beneficiary. Thereafter, on April 17, 1913, the insurance company issued the policy, and the policy recites that the insurance is granted in consideration of the payment of the first premium amounting to $41.68, and the policy contains an acknowledgment of the receipt of such payment. The policy also contains the following, among other, recitations:

> "After its delivery to and receipt by the insured, the policy takes effect as of the 9th day of April, 1913, that being the date upon which the application for such policy was made."

It is alleged in the complaint that subsequent to the execution of said contract, and prior to the 10th day of May, 1913, the policy was delivered to said insured, and that during the month of June, 1913, the beneficiary made due proof of the death of Ernest C. Rathbun in accordance with the terms of said policy, and demanded from said insurance company the payment of the sum of $2,000 as provided in such policy, which payment said company refused, one of the grounds for such refusal being, as appears from the answer, that said policy was issued by the company upon application, and that the applicant paid at the date of application $5 in cash and executed and delivered to the agent who took said application his promissory note for the balance of the amount due for the first premium, and that the policy was forwarded by registered mail addressed to the insured from the company's branch office in Spokane, Wash., and the same was receipted for by one C. L. Williamson, and on the 5th day of May was by said Williamson delivered to Ernest C. Rathbun. On the 28th day of April, 1913, the applicant became ill with appendicitis, and died on the 10th day of May, 1913. It is further alleged that the application for said policy contains, among other things, the following stipulation or agreement:

> "That the insurance hereby applied for shall not take effect unless the first premium is paid and the policy is delivered to and received by me during my lifetime and good health, and that unless otherwise agreed in writing, the policy shall then relate back to and take effect as of the date of this application.
>
> "That any payment made by me before delivery of the policy to, and its receipt by, me as aforesaid shall be binding on the company only in accordance with the terms of the company's receipt therefor on the receipt form which is attached to this application and contains the terms of the agreement under which said payment has been made and is the only receipt the agent is authorized to give for such payment."

As stated above, on the trial of the case judgment was entered in favor of the respondent insurance company.

In its answer and on the trial of the case, the main contentions of the insurance company were: First, that under the terms of the contract the first premium was to be paid in cash; and, second, the policy was not to take effect unless the insured was in good health at the time it was delivered to him. Said contentions are partly based upon the stipulations above quoted from the application for said insurance.

The court in its findings of fact, among other things, found as follows:

> "The court further finds that Ernest C. Rathbun, the plaintiffs' son, applied in writing for insurance on his life, agreeing therein that the insurance thereby applied for should not take effect unless the first premium was paid and the policy was delivered to and received by him during his lifetime and good health. After applying for the policy and before its delivery, the applicant was taken with appendicitis, from which he died. While he was in the hospital, the soliciting agent at Spokane, in total ignorance of the changed condition of the applicant's health, mailed him the policy. The applicant's friends thereafter paid the first premium, which the company promptly returned when it discovered the facts."

The evidence is clearly sufficient to sustain this finding of fact.

Then if the parties understood and agreed that the policy should not become effective unless the first premium was paid and the policy was delivered to and received by the applicant during his lifetime and while he was in good health, and both of those conditions failed, the contract of insurance was never completed, and the policy was of no force and effect. It is a well-recognized rule that life insurance results from contract, and that the true rule is that no other or different rule is to be applied to a contract of insurance than is applied to other contracts. Quinlan v. Ins. Co., 133 N. Y. 356, 31 N. E. 31, 28 Am. St. Rep. 645. In life insurance contracts, the assent of both parties is required as in any other contract. Stephens v. Insurance Co., 87 Iowa, 283, 54 N. W. 139; Weidenaar v. N. Y. Life, 94 Mont. 592, 94 Pac. 1.

In the determination of this case, the application and the policy itself must be examined and considered in order to ascertain the true situation of the parties under the negotiations and agreements between them. Iowa Life v. Lewis, 187 U. S. 335, 23 Sup. Ct. 126, 47 L. Ed. 204; Behling v. N. W. Nat. Life, 117 Wis. 24, 93 N. W. 800.

If we concede in this case that the first premium was paid by the payment of the $5 and the delivery of the insured's promissory note to the agent of the company for the balance, the plaintiffs would not be entitled to recover for the reason that the policy was not delivered to and received by the applicant while he was in good health, but when he was fatally ill. He became ill with appendicitis on the 28th of April, 1913, was operated on that day, and thereafter died on the 10th day of May, 1913, five days after receiving the policy.

Upon a proper construction of the contract between the applicant and the insurance company, and on the evidence introduced on the trial, the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover. The judgment must therefore be affirmed; and it is so ordered, with costs in favor of respondent.

BUDGE, J. concurs. MORGAN, J., did not sit at the hearing, and did not take any part in the decision of this case.

On Rehearing.

FLYNN, District Judge. A rehearing having been granted, this case was submitted on briefs.

We concur in the conclusion reached by the court in its original opinion, that the policy in question never took effect, because it was not delivered to and received by the applicant while he was in good health. The policy provides that "the policy and the application therefor constitute the entire contract between the parties;" and under the terms of the application, it was made a condition precedent to the policy's taking effect that the insured should be in good health when the policy was delivered and received. 14 R. C. L. 900, § 78.

We are not in accord, however, with the intimation that the first premium was not paid, though we are probably precluded from holding otherwise because of the fact that the trial court found that the giving and acceptance of a note for the balance of the first year's premium, after paying $5 cash thereon, was a personal matter between the applicant for insurance and the agent, and that defendant had no rights thereunder or interest therein. The evidence not being before this court, it will be presumed that it supports this finding. McCornick v. Brown, 22 Idaho, 52, 125 Pac. 197. The former judgment of this court is therefore reaffirmed.

BUDGE, C. J., and RICE, J., concur.

(30 Idaho, 537)

STATE v. CURTIS et al.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. June 28, 1917.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1159(3)—APPEAL—QUESTION OF FACT.

Where there is sufficient evidence, if uncontradicted, to justify a conviction, a verdict and judgment based thereon will not be reversed because of conflict in the testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3076.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑59(1) — AIDERS AND ABETTORS—"LIABILITY PRINCIPALS."

Persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense or aid and abet in its commission, should be charged and tried as principals.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 71.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Principal.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1144(14)—INSTRUCTIONS AS A WHOLE—PARTICULAR INSTRUCTION.

All instructions given in a case must be read and considered together, and where, taken as a whole, they correctly state the law and are not inconsistent, but may be reasonably and fairly harmonized, it will be assumed that the jury gave due consideration to the whole charge and was not misled by an isolated portion which, considered alone, does not fully and clearly state the law applicable to the facts in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2767, 2901, 3032.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑941(1) — APPEAL — DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—RULING ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Where affidavits of newly discovered evidence are merely cumulative or corroborative of testimony introduced at the trial, the order of the court denying a motion for a new trial will not be reversed upon appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2328, 2330.]

Appeal from District Court, Twin Falls County; Wm. A. Babcock, Judge.

Zachariah Curtis and Cora Atkinson were convicted of grand larceny, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Guthrie & Bowen and H. C. Hazel, all of Twin Falls, for appellants. J. H. Peterson, Ex-Atty. Gen., T. A. Walters, Atty. Gen., and J. P. Pope, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

MORGAN, J. Appellants were convicted of the larceny of a certain cow, the property of H. P. Larson. From the judgment of conviction and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, they have appealed to this court.

[1] The assignments of error question the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, and it is particularly urged that appellant Atkinson is not shown to have unlawfully participated in taking the animal, nor to have been in any manner connected with the commission of the crime.

It appears from the record that for about four years prior to the arrest of appellants they had been residing upon what is known as the Curtis homestead, where the cow was slaughtered. H. M. Pinkham, a witness for the state, testified that in December, 1914 (the exact date he was unable to fix), while he was employed by appellants, Curtis, early in the morning, left the place, and Mrs. Atkinson stated he was going to the hills to get one of his steers; that later in the day he returned driving two head of cattle; that as he approached the premises Mrs. Atkinson took two cows from the corral and drove them out to meet the cattle Curtis was driving in order to lure them into the corral; that one of the animals driven by Curtis escaped, but the other, being the cow alleged to have been stolen, and described by the witness as "a white-faced cow, crop off right ear, light red with bobtail," was driven into the corral, and was thereafter tied in the stable by appellants and the witness, and late in the afternoon was slaughtered and skinned by Curtis and Pinkham; and that Mrs. Atkinson assisted in dressing the carcass. Pinkham further testified that in the evening of the day the animal was killed he noticed the hide in the manger; that next morning it was gone, and he observed that a pile of manure near the stable had been disturbed; that on the day following the killing of the animal appellants took half of the carcass to Twin Falls, and upon their return Mrs. Atkinson told the witness she had spent nearly all of her share of the proceeds of the sale of the beef, amounting to $15. Pinkham further testified that he was acquainted with the cattle belonging to appellants, and that the animal slaughtered was not one of them; that his suspicions were aroused, and on or about January 12, 1915, he reported the matter to the prosecuting attorney of Twin Falls county. A search of the Curtis premises was made on January 14th, and resulted in the discovery in the manure pile of 19 pieces of hide and the feet of a cow brute, which Pinkham identified as being the hide and feet of the animal slaughtered by himself and appellants. Larson identified the hide as that of his cow, basing his identification upon the color, a portion of his brand found upon one piece of the hide, and a bobbed tail which was also found in the manure pile. Pinkham testified that after appellants were arrested he had a conversation with Mrs. Atkinson in which she asked him to repudiate certain statements he had made concerning the transaction and to lay the blame wholly upon Curtis.

Appellants introduced evidence contradictory of that produced by the state, tending to show that the cow which was killed belonged to them, and that they knew nothing of the hide found in the manure pile. It was also shown that in the event of their conviction Pinkham expected to receive a reward of $500 from the Cattlemen's Association.

It has been repeatedly held, and may be said to be the established rule in this state, that where sufficient evidence is introduced, if uncontradicted, to justify a conviction, a verdict and judgment based thereon will not be reversed because of conflict in the testimony. State v. Nesbit, 4 Idaho, 548, 43 Pac. 66; State v. Silva, 21 Idaho, 247, 120 Pac. 835; State v. Downing, 23 Idaho, 540, 130 Pac. 461; State v. Hopkins, 26 Idaho, 741, 145 Pac. 1095; State v. Bouchard, 27 Idaho, 500, 149 Pac. 464; State v. Mox Mox, 28 Idaho, 176, 152 Pac. 802.

[2] While the record discloses that the animal slaughtered was first in possession of Curtis and afterwards of both the appellants, it also clearly appears that Mrs. Atkinson assisted in bringing it off the range, in butchering, and disposing of it. They were in partnership in the stock business, and she knew their cattle as well as he did. Appellants do not contend they were mistaken in the identity of the animal slaughtered; their defense is that it belonged, not to Larson, but to themselves. Mrs. Atkinson's connection with the larceny is fully covered by section 6342, Rev. Codes, wherein it is provided:

> "All persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense or aid and abet in its commission, * * * are principals in any crime so committed."

Whether she was directly responsible for the original taking or aided and abetted in it, she was properly charged and tried as a principal under the provisions of section 7697, Rev. Codes, which is as follows:

> "The distinction between an accessory before the fact and a principal, and between principals in the first and second degree, in cases of felony, is abrogated; and all persons concerned in the commission of a felony, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, though not present, shall hereafter be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals, and no other facts need be alleged in any indictment against such an accessory than are required in an indictment against his principal."

[3] The action of the trial judge in giving certain instructions to the jury is assigned as error. The portions of the charge complained of will not be quoted here nor commented upon at length. Certain of the instructions given and parts of others, taken alone, which are relied upon by appellants for a reversal, do not fully and correctly state the law, but, read and construed in the light of the entire charge given to the jury, they are not misleading and do not constitute prejudicial error.

All the instructions given in a case must be read and considered together, and where, taken as a whole, they correctly state the law and are not inconsistent, but may be reasonably and fairly harmonized, it will be assumed that the jury gave due consideration to the whole charge and was not misled by an isolated portion thereof. Osborn v. Cary, 28 Idaho, 89, 152 Pac. 473; Cady v. Keller, 28 Idaho, 368, 154 Pac. 629; Taylor v. Lytle, 29 Idaho, 546, 160 Pac. 942; State v. Curtis, 29 Idaho, 724, 161 Pac. 578.

One of the assignments of error brings before us for review an exception taken by appellants to a portion of the argument of counsel for the state wherein the conversation between Pinkham and Mrs. Atkinson, after the arrest, was referred to as a confession. Whether or not her statements on that occasion amounted to an admission against interest, or confession, was a legitimate subject for argument, and we cannot imagine that the jury was in any manner misled by the remarks of counsel.

[4] In support of their motion for a new trial appellants filed affidavits of newly discovered evidence, which, however, tend only to corroborate testimony produced by them at the trial. Where affidavits of newly discovered evidence are merely cumulative or corroborative of testimony introduced at the trial, the order of the court denying a motion for a new trial will not be reversed upon appeal. People v. Biles, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 114, 6 Pac. 120; State v. Davis, 6 Idaho, 159, 53 Pac. 678.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

BUDGE, C. J., and RICE, J., concur.

(85 Or. 677)

BENSON v. JOHNSON.*

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 26, 1917.)

1. PROPERTY 🔑9—EVIDENCE OF TITLE—PRESUMPTION—STATUTE.

The legal probabilities regarding ownership of personal property established by L. O. L. § 799, are not conclusive presumptions, although they are sufficient to support a prima facie case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 78.]

2. PARTNERSHIP 🔑64 — ASSUMED NAME — FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH STATUTE—WAIVER OF DEFECT.

The registration requirements of Laws 1913, p. 270, to be complied with by persons doing business under assumed names before bringing suit, will be waived by failure to object to bringing of the action by answer or demurrer; L. O. L. § 68, providing that a demurrer lies when a pleading attacked shows on its face that plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue, and section 71, providing that when such defects do not appear from the fact of the complaint the objection may be taken by answer, in view of section 72, providing that if such objection be not taken by demurrer or answer it will be deemed to have been waived, excepting only objections to jurisdiction, and that complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 87–91.]

3. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES 🔑263(1)—NECESSITY OF PLEADING—BULK SALES LAW.

The Bulk Sales Law (L. O. L. §§ 6069–6072), as amended by Laws 1913, p. 537, must be pleaded by the creditor who would avail himself of it, since it merely attaches to vendor's conduct a conclusive presumption that the transfer is fraudulent as to any and all creditors of vendor, and gives them a right which they may assert or ignore, and the law has the effect of creating a statutory fraud, necessary to be pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 771–774.]

4. FRAUD 🔑49—PRESUMPTION.

Fraud is never presumed, but must be pleaded and proved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraud, Cent. Dig. §§ 44, 45.]

5. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES 🔑172(1) — BULK SALES LAW—EFFECT.

Failure to comply with the Bulk Sales Law as amended does not affect validity of the transfer as between the parties, but only as against creditors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 523–526, 542.]

6. WITNESSES 🔑269(2)—CROSS-EXAMINATION —MATTER NOT COVERED BY DIRECT EXAMINATION—BULK SALES LAW.

Where a witness testified only to a sale between himself and plaintiff's bankrupt, he could not be cross-examined as to compliance with the Bulk Sales Law as amended, in view of L. O. L. § 860, confining cross-examination to matters stated in direct examination, since noncompliance therewith did not affect the transfer as between the parties the "orthodox rule," extending cross-examination to every issue in the case, not being in force in this state; but such cross-examination could include all elements going to make up the transaction as between the parties, such as circumstances of sale, payment of consideration, time, and place.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 950, 954.]

7. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES 🔑269(1) — PLEADING—ISSUES AND PROOF—BULK SALES LAW.

Where compliance with the Bulk Sales Law as amended was not pleaded, it could not be proved by cross-examination of the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 789–794.]

8. BANKRUPTCY 🔑302(1)—ACTION BY TRUSTEE—NECESSITY OF PLEADING PREFERENCE.

A bankrupt's trustee, claiming that acts of bankrupt and another constituted a preference, must plead such preference.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bankruptcy, Cent. Dig. § 456.]

Department 1. Appeal from Circuit Court, Douglas County; G. F. Skipworth, Judge.

Action by E. C. Benson, as trustee of O. F. Smith and Dee Howard, individually and as partners under the firm name of the Roseburg Garage, against Harley L. Johnson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy of C. F. Smith and Dee Howard, both as individuals and as partners under the firm name of the Roseburg Garage, brought this action in replevin in the ordinary form to recover the possession of certain personal property said to have been owned by Smith prior to plaintiff's election as trustee. The answer admits the official character of the plaintiff and his demands for the custody of the chattels, but otherwise denies the complaint. The defendant alleges that he himself is the owner of all the effects in dispute, with two minor exceptions, which were laid out of the case by stipulation. He claims that the property was taken from him by virtue of the plaintiff's writ, and demands its restoration. The allegation of the defendant's ownership is denied by the reply, which final pleading contains no allegation of new matter. A jury trial resulted in a verdict for the defendant, and from the ensuing judgment the plaintiff appeals.

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Rehearing denied September 19, 1917.

B. L. Eddy, of Roseburg, for appellant. Albert Abraham and O. P. Coshow, both of Roseburg, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] A minor exception will be first determined. It is to the effect that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury, in substance, that it is presumed that things in the possession of a person are owned by him; that a person is the owner of property from exercising acts of ownership over it; and that, until these presumptions are overcome by other evidence, the jury is to accept them as binding so far as they apply to the facts of the case. It is true that section 799, L. O. L., gives these in the list of disputable presumptions. The requests of the plaintiff to instruct the jury about them would have been proper, except for the fact that he sought to make them binding and conclusive. Such legal probabilities are sufficient to support a prima facie case, but the qualification appended would impart to them a quality not mentioned in the statute. For that reason the court was not in error for refusing the direction as propounded.

[2] It is contended by the plaintiff that the testimony was to the effect tnat Howard and Smith were doing business as partners under an assumed name of the Roseburg Garage, and that Smith as an individual was trading under the assumed name of Duffy Auto Company, all without having registered the same as provided by chapter 154 of the Laws of 1913, p. 270. This statute requires such business names to be certified to the county clerk of every county in which the traffic is to be conducted. After making certain declarations about procedure and to whom the act shall apply, it is said in section 5:

> "No person or persons carrying on, conducting or transacting business as aforesaid, or having any interest therein, shall hereafter be entitled to maintain any suit or action in any of the courts of this state without alleging and proving that such person or persons have filed a certificate as provided for in section 1, and failure to file such certificate shall be prima facie evidence of fraud in securing credit."

The plaintiff claims that Smith alone constituted the Duffy Auto Company; that he transferred the property in question to the defendant, who continued under the same name, both without conforming to the statute mentioned. This enactment was construed in Beamish v. Noon, 76 Or. 415, 149 Pac. 522. The substance of that decision was that the statute merely disqualified the party from bringing an action, and that the defect was waived by failing to answer or demur in case it appeared upon the face of the pleadings. A demurrer lies when the pleading attacked shows on its face, among other things, that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue. L. O. L. § 68. By section 71, L. O. L., we find that, when any of the matters enumerated in section 68 do not appear upon the face of the complaint, the objection may be taken by answer; and section 72 reads:

> "If no objection be taken, either by demurrer or answer, the defendant shall be deemed to have waived the same, excepting only the objection to the jurisdiction of the court, and the objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action."

In alleging the property to be his own and demanding its redelivery, the defendant practically instituted a cross-complaint in replevin. If, on account of having acquired the title from one acting under an unregistered, assumed business name, or on account of his own like conduct, he was disqualified to maintain the action, his adversary should have pleaded it either by demurrer or reply. Not having done so, he has waived the same and cannot now urge it.

[3, 4] The plaintiff maintains also that, in making the alleged sale to the defendant, Smith violated what is known as the Bulk Sales Law (L. O. L. §§ 6069-6072), which in its amended form is found in chapter 281, p. 537, Laws of 1913. The substance of the charge in this respect is that Smith transferred practically all his property in trade to the defendant without making a sworn statement of the names and addresses of his creditors, together with the amounts of indebtedness due to each of them, and that on the other hand the defendant here did not notify such creditors of his intention to buy. The act merely attaches to such conduct a conclusive presumption that the purchase, sale, or transfer is fraudulent and void as to any and all creditors of the vendor. The effect of this law is to create a statutory fraud. Upon such a deceit the plaintiff essays to rely before us, and contends that the court was in error in refusing to instruct the jury on the subject or to allow evidence that the sale was in violation of the statute. The pleadings, however, are utterly silent on this subject. It is said in 20 Cyc. 734:

> "Where fraud is an essential ingredient of the cause of action or defense, it must be pleaded and proved. It is never presumed."

To the same purport are Walker v. Goldsmith, 14 Or. 125, 12 Pac. 537, Leasure v. Forquer, 27 Or. 334, 41 Pac. 665, and Leavengood v. McGee, 50 Or. 233, 91 Pac. 453. The fraud of defendant and his vendor, although of statutory origin, constitutes a ground of defense on the part of the plaintiff against the defendant's assertion of title. The legislation cited vests in creditors a right which when acting for themselves they are at liberty either to assert or ignore. If the trustee as their representative would avail himself of it, he must plead it.

The contention of the plaintiff on this subject is presented in another form. The defendant as a witness on his own behalf testified about having advanced money to Smith, only part of which had been repaid, and to making an arrangement about August 28, 1915, whereby in consideration of that indebtedness and an additional sum of money then paid to him Smith transferred the property in question to the defendant. The plaintiff sought to develop on cross-examination of the defendant all he claims with respect to the violation of the Bulk Sales Law and the statute against doing business under an unregistered assumed name. In section 860, L. O. L., it is said:

> "The adverse party may cross-examine the witness as to any matter stated in his direct examination, or connected therewith, and in so doing, may put leading questions; but if he examine him as to other matters, such examination is to be subject to the same rules as a direct examination."

[5-7] The subject of Johnson's testimony was a sale consummated between himself and Smith wherein the latter was the vendor and the witness himself the vendee. It was manifestly good as between themselves. The Bulk Sales Law only creates a conclusive presumption that such a sale is void as against creditors. It is clear that even then it is void only at the option of such creditors. Having testified only to a sale between himself and Smith, the witness could be cross-examined as to all the elements going to make up such a transaction. The circumstances of the sale, the payment of consideration, the time when, and the place where, might be developed on cross-examination, because these are essential elements of and necessarily connected with what the witness asserted was a sale. Whether or not the same was void as to other persons at their election is an entirely different matter and is not a subject of cross-examination. Ah Doon v. Smith, 25 Or. 89, 34 Pac. 1093, cited by the plaintiff, was where the plaintiff testified on his own behalf to the bald fact that he had loaned the defendant the amount mentioned in the complaint. Called upon in cross-examination for time, place, and circumstances, he disclosed that it was money which he had let the defendant have in the course of gambling with each other and which he had won again in that very game. On the ground of public policy, and not to enforce any right of the defendant, the court dismissed the action sua sponte, leaving the parties where it found them. There the moving party sought to affirm an unlawful transaction. Here if the actor in the litigation would disaffirm a convention valid as between the immediate participants, but which is void only at the option of those he represents, he should present averments adapted to that purpose. The case just noted is not apropos here.

The plaintiff is endeavoring to apply to the cross-examination what is styled in the note to St. Louis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Raines, 17 Ann. Cas. 1, as the "Orthodox Rule." By that so-called precept:

> "When a party produces a witness who is sworn and examined, the opposing party is not confined in his cross-examination to the matters upon which the witness is examined in chief, but may extend the cross-examination to every issue in the case."

On the contrary, as stated in the same note:

> "According to the weight of authority in the United States, the cross-examination of a witness is limited to an inquiry into the facts and circumstances connected with the matters brought out on the direct examination of the witness."

Section 860, L. O. L., is a statutory declaration of the American rule and in our judgment was properly applied by the circuit court. Reduced to its lowest terms, the contention of the plaintiff is that, without pleading a defense to the defendant's claim, it may be proved by cross-examination of the defendant. The testimony sought to be adduced to establish the statutory fraud created by the Bulk Sales Law was irrelevant because there was no pleading to support it.

[8] The same may be said of the contentions of the plaintiff about the acts of Smith and Johnson constituting a preference within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Law. The rule is thus laid down in 2 Loveland on Bankruptcy, § 545:

> "In a suit to recover a preference, the trustee should allege and prove the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, the adjudication and his appointment and qualification as trustee of the estate of the bankrupt. * * * He should also allege and prove all the statutory elements constituting a preference, and that the person receiving it, or his agent, had a reasonable cause to believe that it was in effect a preference. * * * If the trustee fails to allege any one of these elements, his bill, declaration or petition is bad on demurrer."

Various assignments of error are pressed upon our attention; but, fairly considered, they all urge upon us a question which should have been pleaded but was not.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

McBRIDE, C. J., and BENSON and HARRIS, JJ., concur.

(84 Or. 632)

PORTLAND GAS & COKE CO. v. GIEBISCH et al.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 26, 1917.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑393—INJURY TO GAS MAINS FROM SEWER CONSTRUCTION—LIABILITY.

A gas company could not recover damages to its mains necessarily resulting from construction of a city sewer, since a municipality does not abdicate its paramount right in a street by giving a franchise therein to a public service corporation, and the gas company's franchise was subordinate to the city's control of the streets.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 937.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑393—CONSTRUCTION OF SEWER—DUTY TO USE CARE.

A municipality and its contractor are obliged to use reasonable care in construction of sewers and will be liable for damages occasioned by negligence in the performance of the work to property of a gas company consisting of its mains, pipes, and appliances situate in the public streets.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 937.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑393—INJURY TO GAS MAINS FROM SEWER CONSTRUCTION—LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE.

Where it was possible to construct sewers without injuring gas mains, the gas company could recover from a city contractor damages for the latter's negligence resulting in disturbance of mains, leakage of gas, and fire.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 937.]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑393—INJURY TO GAS MAINS FROM SEWER CONSTRUCTION—ITEM OF RECOVERY—PATROLLING STREETS.

A gas company could not recover from a city contractor a charge for patrolling the streets in which defendants were constructing a sewer, and by whose negligence gas mains were injured, since, although defendants performed their work with care, plaintiff was chargeable with the duty of patrol and inspection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 937.]

5. GAS 🔑14½—COMPANY'S DUTY TO PROTECT PROPERTY OWNERS.

It is the duty of a gas company to protect residents and property owners from damage arising from the escape of gas caused by sewer construction interfering with gas mains.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gas, Cent. Dig. § 12.]

Department 1. Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah County; Robert G. Morrow, Judge.

Suit by the Portland Gas & Coke Company against A. Giebisch and another. Decree dismissing bill, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and judgment entered for plaintiff.

This is a suit brought originally to restrain the defendants from negligent interference with plaintiff's gas mains in the Montavilla district in the city of Portland. In December, 1913, when the suit was brought, the defendants were engaged in the construction of a sewer in this district, pursuant to a contract given them by the city of Portland. The complaint charges that the work was being done in disregard of plaintiff's rights and to the serious impairment of the service rendered by plaintiff to consumers of gas in the vicinity of the sewer which was under construction. A preliminary injunction was granted by the circuit court. The cause was subsequently put at issue and tried out on the question of damages, after the sewer had been constructed. The lower court was of the opinion that the defendants could not be held liable for negligence in performing the work, and the decree dismissed the bill. Plaintiff appeals.

John A. Laing, of Portland (H. W. Strong, of Portland, on the brief), for appellant.

McCAMANT, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] Defendants' brief cites a respectable line of authority to the effect that a municipality does not abdicate its paramount right in a street by giving a franchise therein to a public service corporation. Booth on Street Railways (2d Ed.) § 42; National Waterworks Company v. City of Kansas (C. C.) 28 Fed. 921; Kirby v. Citizens' Railway Company, 48 Md. 168, 30 Am. Rep. 455; Scranton Gas Company v. City of Scranton, 214 Pa. 586, 64 Atl. 84, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033, 6 Ann. Cas. 388; Gas, Light & Coke Company v. Columbus, 50 Ohio St. 65, 33 N. E. 292; City of San Antonio v. San Antonio Street Railway Company, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 39 S. W. 136; Brooklyn Electric Company v. City of Brooklyn, 2 App. Div. 98, 37 N. Y. Supp. 560. These authorities abundantly sustain the proposition that plaintiff cannot recover in this cause for any damage which necessarily follows from the construction of the sewer. The city of Portland was within its rights in authorizing such construction, and the franchise under which plaintiff maintained its service is subordinate to the paramount control over the streets vested in the municipality.

[2] None of the foregoing authorities on which defendants rely involved charges of negligence. Even if the city of Portland in its corporate capacity had constructed the sewer it would have been bound under the law to exercise due care in the premises and would have been liable for any damages occasioned by its negligence in the performance of the work. Giaconi v. Astoria, 60 Or. 12, 113 Pac. 855, 118 Pac. 180, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1150; Warren v. Astoria, 67 Or. 603, 135 Pac. 527. A contractor performing the work at the instance of the city is also chargeable with the duty of reasonable care, and is liable in damages for negligence in the performance of the work. Pacific Laundry Company v. Pacific Bridge Company, 69 Or. 306, 138 Pac. 221; Millville Gas Company v. Sweeten, 75 N. J. Law, 23, 68 Atl. 1067; 6 McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, § 2695;

8 Dillon on Municipal Corporations (5th Ed.) § 1243. Even if the city of Portland had had the power to relieve the defendants from their obligation to perform the work with due care, it did not attempt to do so in this case. On the contrary, the specifications attached to the contract of the defendants contained the following stipulation:

> "The contractor shall at his own expense carefully protect from injury, trees, buildings, telephone, telegraph, or light poles, water or gas pipes, conduits, drain culverts, or any other structures, public or private, which are encountered or affected by the work, and shall repair any damage done to the said structures, leaving them in as good condition as they were previous to this interference, and the contractor shall be liable for any damages or claims arising from his interference with said structures."

Plaintiff has a property right in its mains, pipes, and appliances situate in the public streets, and this property right is entitled to protection. 20 Cyc. 1168.

[3] The following allegation contained in plaintiff's complaint is admitted by the answer of the defendants:

> "Plaintiff alleges that it is practicable for defendants to so dig said sewer ditch as not to injure plaintiff's gas mains, services, and property, and not to injure its business, and not to disturb or destroy its service to a large number of the people of the city of Portland, by properly bracing the sides of said ditch as the ditch is being dug, and by being careful in its work in and around the services of plaintiff in said streets, the exact location of all of which services and gas mains defendants know and have been informed."

The testimony of the defendant Gieblsch also admits that it was possible for the defendants, by properly shoring up the sides of its ditch, to prevent the earth from sliding and so disturbing the gas mains of plaintiff. The testimony shows clearly that the work done by the defendants materially interfered with plaintiff's pipes and mains. A number of pipes connecting gas mains with the houses of plaintiff's patrons were torn out by the defendants. Plaintiff's mains in other cases were left suspended in the air without support from the earth, resulting in leaks and in a fire which threatened great damage and was extinguished with difficulty. A small part of the damage asserted by plaintiff was admitted by the defendants. Bills to the amount of $43.29, presented by plaintiff to the defendants, were approved by H. W. Joplin on behalf of the defendants.

We think that plaintiff is entitled to relief.

[4, 5] The damages claimed by plaintiff amount to $1,742.91. They are specified and proved with unusual exactness. Included in the above amount is a charge of $778.69 for patrolling the streets on which defendants were working. An additional charge of 10 per cent. for overhead is superimposed on this amount, making the total charge for this purpose $856.56. The evidence fails to satisfy us of the reasonableness of this charge against the defendants. It was the duty of plaintiff to protect residents and property owners in the neighborhood from damage arising from the escape of gas. Sharkey v. Portland Gas Company, 74 Or. 327, 331, 144 Pac. 1152, 145 Pac. 660. The sewer constructed by defendants paralleled plaintiff's gas mains for 14 blocks; at frequent intervals service pipes ran from the mains to houses. Even if defendants had performed their work with care, plaintiff would have been chargeable with the duty of patrol and inspection. This item of plaintiff's claim will therefore be reduced by $500. We are convinced that the remainder is an adequate sum to cover the reasonable expense of such inspection and superintendence as are chargeable to defendants' negligence.

We think that plaintiff should have judgment for its claim, with the above modification.

The decree will therefore be reversed, and a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff for $1,242.91, and for the costs and disbursements in this court and in the circuit court.

McBRIDE, C. J., and BURNETT and HARRIS, JJ., concur.

(84 Or. 643)

WHITE v. PORTLAND GAS & COKE CO.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 26, 1917.)

1. Gas 🔑14½—Highways—Action for Injuries—Liability of Gas Company.

If plaintiff's injury was due solely to the negligence of the automobile driver with whom she was riding as a guest, and not to the manner in which defendant, who laid gas pipes along the highway, had refilled the trenches, she could not recover.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gas, Cent. Dig. § 12.]

2. Gas 🔑14½—Highways—Actions for Injuries—Instructions.

In an action by plaintiff for injuries alleged to have been caused by the wheels of the automobile in which she was riding going down into the loose dirt, refilled into trenches dug along the highway by defendant, when turning out to avoid colliding with an approaching car, where there was evidence that the approaching car was being driven rapidly and taking the greater part of the highway, an instruction that, if the accident was due to the negligence of those in control of the other automobile, defendant was not liable was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gas, Cent. Dig. § 12.]

3. Negligence 🔑93(1)—Guest in Automobile—Due Care.

While the negligence of the driver of an automobile cannot be imputed to a guest therein, the guest must exercise such care for his own safety as a reasonably prudent person would under like circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 147, 148.]

4. Negligence 🔑136(26) — Contributory Negligence—Guest in Automobile—Question for Jury.

Whether the guest in an automobile has exercised reasonable care for his own safety is usually a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 333.]

Department 1. Appeal from Circuit Court, Clackamas County; J. U. Campbell, Judge.

Action by M. L. White against the Portland Gas & Coke Company, a corporation. From an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial after verdict for defendant, it appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

The plaintiff brought this action stating, in substance, that by permission of the county court of Clackamas county the defendant dug a trench along the edge of the traveled portion of the county road leading from the north towards Oregon City and installed therein a gas main, but so negligently refilled it that the highway was rendered unsafe, in that the wheels of vehicles would sink into the fill. She avers, in effect, that as she was riding lawfully in an automobile on that thoroughfare as the guest of a friend who operated the car, it was turned out to the right to meet another one coming from the opposite direction, and while the machine she occupied was being carefully operated and driven slowly, the loose earth in the trench gave way under the wheels so that they skidded, in consequence of which the automobile rolled down the embankment on the right of the road, resulting in her injury. It is admitted that there was an accident at the place mentioned in the complaint, by reason of which the plaintiff received an injury, but otherwise the declaration is traversed in all material particulars. It is stated in the answer that the automobile was being driven at a dangerous rate of speed, and that it was turned out so sharply to the right on meeting the other car that it became unmanageable and ran off the side of the road, causing the injury. As against the plaintiff herself it is alleged:

"That the said accident did not happen through any negligence on the part of said defendant, but happened because the said plaintiff and the person driving said machine, who was under the direction and control of the said plaintiff at the time of the said accident, did not properly or safely drive said machine, but drove the same at a too fast and dangerous rate of speed * * * and the said plaintiff, while the said machine in which she was riding was being operated, although she knew and understood and appreciated all of the conditions under which said machine was being operated, and the speed under which said machine was being operated, at the time, made no remonstrances with the driver of the machine in which she was riding as to the careless and negligent manner in which said machine was being operated, and without objection or remonstrance permitted the said driver to drive the said machine at said dangerous and reckless rate of speed, although the said plaintiff was in a position to warn the driver of the automobile in which she was riding of the impending danger, and said accident could have been avoided had the said plaintiff remonstrated with the driver of said machine, or warned him or protested against the dangerous manner in which said machine was being operated, and said machine was being operated with the consent of the said plaintiff in said dangerous and reckless manner, all of which was sufficient, and should have caused the said plaintiff to understand the conditions, and it was apparent to said plaintiff under the conditions that said automobile in which she was being driven was being driven recklessly and carelessly, all of which was negligence contributing to said accident herein."

This was denied by the reply. The jury trial resulted in a verdict for the defendant. The plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial, urging, among other things, that the trial court erred in giving the following instructions:

"(1) The defendant in this case is not liable for any negligence, if there was any negligence, on the part of Mr. Rands, who was driving this automobile in which the plaintiff was riding at the time of the accident, and if this accident happened solely on account of the negligence of Mr. Rands, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover.

"(2) Contributory negligence is simply the failure on the part of the person injured to exercise reasonable and ordinary care under the particular circumstances. The defendant in his answer has set forth certain allegations wherein it is alleged that the plaintiff in this case was guilty of contributory negligence, contributing to bring about the accident, and I instruct you that if the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing proximately to bring about the accident and injury in any of the particulars set forth in defendant's answer, then the plaintiff cannot recover.

"(3) There has been some evidence in this case that there was another automobile proceeding in a northerly direction on this hill on which the accident happened, and if you should find from the evidence in this case that this accident happened solely on account of the negligence of the automobile that was proceeding in a northerly direction, then I instruct you that the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover in this action, or if you find from the evidence that this accident happened solely on account of the concurring negligence of the people who were in the automobile going in a northerly direction on the hill and the negligence of Mr. Rands who was driving the machine, then your verdict should be for the defendant."

The court allowed the motion, basing its conclusion on the giving of instruction numbered 1, and ignoring the other assignments. The defendant appeals.

H. B. Beckett, of Portland (Geo. C. Brownell, of Oregon City, and Stapleton & Conley and Wilbur, Spencer & Beckett, all of Portland, on the brief), for appellant. C. Schubel, of Oregon City (Livy Stipp, of Oregon City, on the brief), for respondent.

BURNETT, J. (after stating the facts as above). Supporting the complaint there is evidence to the effect that, at the invitation of Mr. Rands as his guest, the plaintiff with her two daughters and his wife went riding in his automobile. Mrs. White sat on the left side in the rear seat, one of her daughters next to her, and Mrs. Rands on the right, while another daughter rode on the right of Mr. Rands on the front seat. They were proceeding towards Oregon City from the north on the main traveled road and were going down a hill which had been cut down, using the excavated earth to make a fill about 10 feet in height near the foot of the hill. This fill was graveled to a width of about 14 feet. The gas main was laid in a ditch approximately 2 feet in depth, about 14 inches in width, and some 2 feet west of the edge of the gravel. The slope on the sides of the fill was quite steep. Testimony on behalf of the plaintiff is to the effect that as they approached it another automobile was being driven quite rapidly up the hill, meeting them occupying the major portion of the graveled road; that the Rands machine was going at the rate of about three or four miles an hour; that when turned to the right the off wheels sank into the loose earth some 6 or 8 inches and ran thus 10 or 15 feet in the ditch when, owing to the declivity, it turned over, rolled down the embankment lodging against a fence and injuring the plaintiff.

The testimony for the defense is to the purport that the track of the off wheels of the automobile driven by Rands led to the right and across the trench at an angle of about 60 degrees, and then proceeded parallel with it some distance, making then a slight turn to the left, and immediately afterwards turning precipitously down the embankment. One of the plaintiff's daughters, testifying, said the other car was coming pretty fast, occupying the greater part of the road, and was larger than the one driven by Rands. The plaintiff stated as a witness that she felt the rush of the air of the car they met, and thought they might collide with it. She says she knew the general lay of the land, and that the gas main had been laid in that neighborhood, but that she did not interfere with or protest with Rands about his method of driving.

[1] The principal complaint of the plaintiff is about the giving of the instruction first quoted. The exception urged before the circuit court was against it as an entirety. The attack made upon it was to the effect that it "did not properly state the law of negligence or contributory negligence which would excuse the negligence of the defendant, and that it assumed as a matter of law the responsibility of the plaintiff for the actions and negligence of Mr. Rands." In the first place it is clear that if "this accident happened solely on account of the negligence of Mr. Rands, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover." This is because there was no relation existing between Rands and the defendant which would render the latter liable for his shortcomings, and consequently that part of the instruction was sound. Therefore if we regard the principle laid down by the precedents to the effect that if part of an instruction objected to is sound it will save the remainder, we cannot countenance the objection to the one in question. Murray v. Murray, 6 Or. 17; Salomon v. Cress, 22 Or. 177, 29 Pac. 439; McAlister v. Long, 33 Or. 368, 54 Pac. 194. Moreover, the charge now under consideration does not. in any way, impute to the plaintiff the negligence of Rands. It is one thing to charge her with his negligence and quite another to exonerate the defendant from its effect. The whole subject of that excerpt was the negligence of Rands. Nothing else was discussed therein, and it was left to the jury to determine whether he was negligent or not. The sum of the situation on that branch of the case is that if the negligence of Rands, provided there was such negligence, was the sole cause of the injury, the defendant could not be held responsible. This is a reasonable paraphrase or interpretation of that part of the charge to the jury.

[2] Plaintiff also urged before the trial court that there was no testimony justifying the instruction numbered 3, to the effect that if the accident happened solely on account of the negligence of the people in the other automobile, or solely on account of their negligence and that of Rands together, the verdict should be for the defendant. As noted above, the testimony tends to show that the other car was being driven rapidly up the hill, taking the greater part of the graveled way, so that it practically crowded the Rands machine out of the road, at least to a large extent. This would be negligence on the part of those in control of the other automobile, and if, as the jury may have found, it operated to compel Rands to turn out to avoid what seemed to be the greater danger of collision, so that this was the single cause of the accident, it would exonerate the defendant. This instruction was predicated on the hypothesis that the mishap resulted solely from the negligence of parties over whom the defendant had no control. In order to sustain this instruction it is only necessary to point out that there was some evidence to go to the jury on that subject.

[3, 4] The most difficult proposition is whether the court erred in giving instruction numbered 2 on the subject of contributory negligence. It has been decided very frequently, and in some of our own precedents, that the negligence of one operating an automobile cannot be imputed to his guest. Tonseth v. Portland Ry., L. & P. Co., 70 Or. 341, 141 Pac. 868. That, however, is not the precise question in hand. The guest cannot abdicate his duty to use reasonable diligence in caring for himself. As said in Thompson v. Los Angeles, etc., Railway Co., 165 Cal. 748, 753, 134 Pac. 709, 712:

> "It is, of course, true that a passenger in a vehicle operated by another is bound to exercise ordinary care for his own safety."

If such passenger is aware that the operator is carelessly rushing into danger, it may be incumbent upon him to take proper steps for his own safety. Whether the occupant has exercised reasonable care in the matter involved is usually a question for the jury. The standard of care is the conduct of a reasonably prudent person in such environments. The application of this rule must be left to the judgment of the 12 triers of the fact. It may be that Rands' attention was so thoroughly riveted upon the approaching car as to make him unconscious of being so near the edge of the embankment, and that if his attention had been called to that matter by the plaintiff, he would have avoided the slope. It may be also that the jury considered she was remiss in her duty in not warning him. We cannot say as a matter of law whether she was heedless or not. It must be left to the jury whether she failed in her duty as a reasonable person under the circumstances in not calling the attention of Mr. Rands to the danger of going over the embankment in his effort to avoid a collision with the other machine. Under the conditions disclosed by the record, the court was not in error in giving an instruction on contributory negligence.

Negligence may be grounded in action or refusal to act, in speaking or failing to speak, all with reference to duty in the premises. We can easily conceive of cases where a clamor of direction by the guest would confuse a driver or chauffeur and increase the danger in a manner amounting to contributory negligence of the passenger. In others the duty to utter warning might be imperative. In some instances it would be rank folly to wrest the reins or the wheel from the hands of the one in charge of the vehicle. In others it might be highly necessary to do that very thing. The court cannot lay down a mathematical precept as a rule of law enjoining in detail what should be said or done or omitted in every juncture of danger. It is plain, however, that an invited guest is not to be supine and inert as mere freight. Accepting the hospitality of his friend does not excuse him from the duty of acting for his own safety as a reasonably prudent person would under like conditions. Whether he does so or not must be decided by the 12 who declare the facts embodied in the verdict.

The distinction between the doctrine that the fault of the driver is not to be imputed to his guest and the other principle that the guest himself may be guilty of contributory negligence in not acting as a reasonably prudent person would in the exigency involved is elaborated in Dale v. Denver City Tramway Co., 173 Fed. 787, 97 C. C. A. 511, 19 Ann. Cas. 1223, and note; Christopherson v. Minn. etc., Ry. Co., 28 N. D. 128, 147 N. W. 791, L. R. A. 1915A, 761, and note, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 683; Wachsmith v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 233 Pa. 465, 82 Atl. 755, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 679, and note; Anthony v. Kiefner, 96 Kan. 194, 150 Pac. 524, L. R. A. 1915F, 876, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 264, and note; Rebillard v. Minn., etc., Ry. Co., 216 Fed. 503, 133 C. C. A. 9, L. R. A. 1915B, 953.

The conclusion is that the trial court did not err in its instructions to the jury, but was mistaken in its ruling granting a new trial. The order to that effect is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded to the circuit court, with directions to reinstate the original judgment for the defendant. Sullivan v. Wakefield, 65 Or. 528, 133 Pac. 641.

McBRIDE, C. J., and BENSON and HARRIS, JJ., concur.

(175 Cal. 395)

CONLIN v. STUDEBAKER BROS. CO. OF CALIFORNIA et al. (L. A. 3980.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 8, 1917.)

1. Judgment 🔑250 — Relief Authorized —Sales.

A judgment allowing plaintiff buyer to retain a purchased automobile, and restoring to him the entire consideration paid therefor, is erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 436.]

2. Sales 🔑398 — Rescission — Amount of Recovery.

Upon rescission of a sales contract, neither of defendant sellers should be required to return more than he actually received, since a rescission action contemplates that the parties be placed in their former position.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1137–1139.]

3. Sales 🔑114—Buyer's Remedies—Election.

A defrauded buyer may elect to rescind the sales contract, or to affirm it and recover damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 288.]

4. Sales 🔑52(4)—Buyer's Action for Damages—Admissibility of Evidence.

Where the buyer, in an action to rescind a sales contract, claimed the batteries in the purchased automobile were old, evidence contradicting this claim is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 129–135.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

Action by C. D. Conlin against the Studebaker Bros. Company of California and L. E. Dresbach. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Horace S. Wilson and George C. Mansfield, both of Los Angeles, for appellants. Chas. S. McKelvey, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Plaintiff alleged in his complaint that the defendants had sold him an electric automobile, for which he had paid $1,700 as follows: $300 in cash and a note for $300 to the defendant, Studebaker Bros. Company of California, and 204 shares of stock of the Peerless Brick & Artificial Stone Company, of the agreed value of $1,100, transferred to the defendant Dresbach. It was alleged that the defendants had falsely represented that the automobile was new and in first-class condition; that the plaintiff, upon learning that the machine was, in fact, old and in poor condition, had notified the defendants that he rescinded his contract, and demanded the return of the consideration paid by him, offering to return the automobile. The demand and offer being refused, he brought this action. The defendants answered, denying many of the allegations of the complaint, and filed a cross-complaint, alleging that the automobile had been put in the hands of the plaintiff under a contract of conditional sale, under which title was to remain in the Studebaker Bros. Company until the note for $300 was paid. The plaintiff having refused payment of said note, the cross-complainants demanded judgment for the recovery of the automobile, or its value, fixed at $1,700. The court found in favor of plaintiff's allegations regarding fraud and rescission. It found that the title was not to remain in the Studebaker Bros. Company until the note was paid, and that said company was not the owner of the automobile, or entitled to the possession thereof, "except on the rescission of the contract with plaintiff." An amendment to plaintiff's complaint, filed after the findings were made, alleges that the 204 shares of stock transferred to the defendant Dresbach had become valueless through no fault of the plaintiff. There is no finding on this allegation. The judgment was that plaintiff's promissory note for $300 be returned to him, and that he have judgment against both defendants for the $300 paid by him, and for $1,100, the agreed value of the 204 shares of stock. The defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

[1] The judgment is open to objection on several grounds. The facts of the transaction were these: Dresbach had bought the automobile from Studebaker Bros. Company, and still owed $600 on the purchase price. He then made a sale to the plaintiff, the agreement being that the plaintiff was to pay him $1,100, and was to pay the Studebaker Bros. Company the $600 still owing to them. Accordingly the 204 shares of stock agreed to be worth $1,100 were transferred to Dresbach, and the Studebaker Bros. Company received $300 in cash and the plaintiff's note for $300. A written agreement of conditional sale was made between Studebaker Bros. Company and the plaintiff. While the complaint alleges, and the court finds, that plaintiff has suffered damage in the sum of $1,700, the action and the judgment are both based upon the theory of a rescission, rather than of an action for damages for fraud. By the judgment there is restored to the plaintiff the entire consideration which he had given for the automobile; that is, his note for $300, the $300 paid by him in cash, and the equivalent in money of the 204 shares of stock, which, as alleged in the amendment to the complaint, had become worthless. But there is no provision in the judgment for the return to the defendants, or either of them, of the automobile itself. So far as the judgment goes, the plaintiff gets back the purchase price paid by him for the automobile and keeps the automobile too. Such a judgment cannot stand. In decreeing the rescission of a contract the court—

---

🔑For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

> "requires equity at the hands of the complaining party as well as from the defendant, and * * * will place the parties in statu quo by requiring the plaintiff to restore to the defendant everything of value which the plaintiff has received under the contract." 18 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 858; Sanchez v. McMahon, 35 Cal. 218; Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 502, 47 Pac. 369, 52 Pac. 797.

It is no answer to this objection to say that the plaintiff, in his complaint and at the trial, asserted his willingness to make a return of the purchased property. It appeared from the evidence that it remained in his possession, and the defendants were entitled to some security for its return beyond the mere expression of plaintiff's willingness to restore it. The judgment should have made the return of the consideration conditional upon the placing of the automobile in the possession of the defendants.

[2, 3] Furthermore, the judgment is erroneous, in that it makes both defendants liable for the return of the entire consideration, although only a part of it had gone to each of them. Studebaker Bros. Company had received (in addition to plaintiff's note) the $300, and Dresbach the shares of stock worth $1,100. Upon a rescission, which contemplates that the parties are to be placed in statu quo, neither defendant should be required to return anything more than that which was obtained by him. If the action had been one for damages for deceit, the two defendants, if jointly connected with the alleged wrong, would both have been liable for the full amount of all damages. But, as we have said, the action was not of that character. The party defrauded may elect to rescind the contract, or to affirm it and claim damages. He cannot do both at the same time. 20 Cyc. 88; Westerfeld v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 129 Cal. 68, 58 Pac. 92, 61 Pac. 667. Here he has elected the former remedy.

[4] Of the alleged errors in rulings on evidence, only one is important enough to require notice. The court should have permitted the defendants to introduce the evidence offered by them on the question whether the batteries in the automobile were new. The plaintiff's main ground of complaint was that the machine was equipped with old batteries. The defendants were clearly within their rights in endeavoring to contradict the testimony which had been offered by the plaintiff on this point.

Other points are made, but the foregoing are sufficient to dispose of the appeal, and to direct the course of proceedings upon the new trial which must be had.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

(175 Cal. 354)

In re ALLEN'S ESTATE.

ALLEN v. UNION TRUST & SAVINGS BANK OF PASADENA.

(L. A. 4714.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1917.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹635(3)—RECORD—FAILURE TO SET FORTH ALL THE EVIDENCE.

An order denying a petition, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1723, to obtain a decree declaring that the homestead of petitioner's deceased had vested in herself, will be affirmed, where the record does not contain all the evidence given at the trial on which the court found that the homestead had been abandoned, and appellant did not request a transcript under section 953a.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2779, 2829.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Clark P. Allen, deceased. Hattie E. Allen, widow, appeals, adversely to Union Trust & Savings Bank of Pasadena, guardian of George E. Allen, from an order denying her petition to obtain a decree that the homestead of herself and her deceased husband had vested in herself. Affirmed.

Charles Lantz, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Hahn & Hahn, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The appeal here presented is from an order denying the petition of Hattie E. Allen, as the widow of the decedent, under section 1723 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to obtain a decree declaring that the homestead of herself and said decedent, declared and filed by her alone, during their marriage, upon a certain lot of land, said lot being her separate property, has vested in her as the surviving spouse. Opposition to her petition was made by the respondent as guardian of the child of the decedent, and also as executor of the estate of the decedent. Thereupon there was a trial of the cause, evidence oral and documentary was introduced, the court made findings to the effect that the declaration of homestead on the lot had been duly filed as alleged, and that subsequently, during said marriage, the petitioner and Clark P. Allen, her husband, abandoned the homestead by executing, acknowledging, and causing to be duly recorded their deed conveying said lot in fee to Harriet E. Winslow. Thereupon the order was made denying the petition.

The record does not set forth the evidence given at the trial upon which the court found that the homestead had been abandoned. The clerk and the judge of the superior court each certify that the record contains true copies of certain documents on file in the cause; but the certificates do not state that these comprise all the documents used at the hearing, or that no other evidence was introduced. The findings state that oral testimony was given. It does not appear that the appellant ever gave to the clerk the notice required by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, specifying the papers to be included in the transcript, or requesting a transcript of the testimony. Hence there is no affirmative showing that she was entitled to a reporter's transcript of the testimony, or to a clerk's transcript of papers on file. Schmitt v. White, 172 Cal. 559, 158 Pac. 216; Pierce v. Works, 171 Cal. 687, 154 Pac. 852; Hibernia S. & L. S. v. Doran, 161 Cal. 118, 118 Pac. 526. There is no bill of exceptions. All presumptions are in favor of the action of the court below. Error must be affirmatively shown by the record. The finding that the homestead was abandoned is sufficient to defeat the petitioner's claim and to support the order appealed from.

---

⟹For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

The order is affirmed.

We concur: VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem; SLOSS, J.

(175 Cal. 356)

In re ALLEN'S ESTATE. (L. A. 4964.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1917.)

1. Appeal and Error 🔑117 — Orders Appealable—Orders in Probate.

An order denying appellant's motion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, to be relieved from the consequences of her failure to propose a bill of exceptions within the time allowed, is not appealable, as it does not come within the single exception to the rule that the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in probate matters extends only to such orders and judgments as are specified in section 963, subd. 3.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 805–812.]

2. Appeal and Error 🔑82(1)—Appealable Order—Statute—Construction.

The provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2, that an appeal may be taken from a special order made after final judgment, has no application to probate proceedings.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 517.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Clark P. Allen, deceased. Hattie E. Allen, widow, appealed from an order denying her petition for a decree adjudging that a homestead had vested in her. The decree was affirmed, and she appeals from an order denying her motion, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, to be relieved from the consequences of her failure to propose her bill of exceptions within the time allowed. Appeal dismissed.

Charles Lantz and Howard F. Shepherd, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. Hahn & Hahn, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Hattie E. Allen, widow of the decedent, appealed from an order denying her petition for a decree that a homestead had vested in her. We have just given judgment affirming the order. Estate of Allen (L. A. No. 4714) 165 Pac. 1010. The opinion filed on that appeal shows that no reporter's transcript or bill of exceptions was brought up. The present appeal has to do with the petitioner's effort to secure such bill of exceptions. It appears that, for some reason, she failed to propose her bill within the time allowed, and then, upon due notice, applied to the court, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for relief from the consequences of such failure. Her motion was based upon the ground of excusable neglect. The court denied the motion, and from the order of denial the widow now appeals.

[1] The appeal cannot be considered. The order sought to be reviewed is not one from which an appeal lies. We have very recently (Estate of Spafford, 165 Pac. 1) had occasion to reaffirm the well-settled rule that the appellate jurisdiction in probate matters extends only to such orders and judgments as are specified in the third subdivision of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Estate of Calahan, 60 Cal. 232; Estate of Lutz, 67 Cal. 457, 8 Pac. 39; Estate of Wiard, 83 Cal. 619, 24 Pac. 45; Estate of Wittmeier, 118 Cal. 255, 50 Pac. 393; Estate of Cahill, 142 Cal. 628, 76 Pac. 383). This rule is subject to the limitation that an appeal will lie from an order granting or denying a motion for a new trial, in those proceedings in probate in which such motion is proper. Estate of Bauquier, 88 Cal. 302, 26 Pac. 178, 532; In re Walkerly, 94 Cal. 352, 29 Pac. 719; In re Spencer, 96 Cal. 448, 31 Pac. 453. But, with this exception, subdivision 3 is the only part of section 963 to which resort may be had in determining what orders or judgments in probate may be made the subject of an appeal.

[2] The provision of subdivision 2 that an appeal may be taken from a special order made after final judgment has no application to probate proceedings. Estate of Walkerly, supra; Estate of Smith, 98 Cal. 636, 33 Pac. 744; Iversen v. Superior Court, 115 Cal. 27, 46 Pac. 817; Estate of Cahill, supra. The order here in question is not embraced within the terms of subdivision 3 of section 963.

Counsel for appellant cites a number of cases, of which Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 33, 29 Pac. 332, is an example, in which this court has entertained appeals from orders granting or refusing the relief which was here sought. None of these, however, was a proceeding in probate. All were civil actions, and the order was therefore appealable as a "special order made after final judgment." Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2.

The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

(33 Cal. App. 296)

GRACA v. RODRIGUES. (S. F. 8247.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 21, 1917.)

1. ASSIGNMENTS 🔑27—CONTRACTS ASSIGNABLE—COVENANT.

A covenant or obligation entered into with one buying a business, binding the seller to refrain from engaging in a like business within specified territorial limits, is assignable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assignments, Cent. Dig. § 40.]

2. GOOD WILL 🔑6(1)—COVENANT IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE—PERSONS ENTITLED TO ENFORCE.

Civ. Code, § 1673, providing that every contract restraining the exercise of a lawful business except as otherwise provided shall be void, and section 1674, providing that one who sells the good will of a business may agree with the buyer to refrain from carrying on a similar business within a specified territory so long as the buyer or any person deriving title to the good will from him carries on a like business therein, do not limit a covenant in restraint of trade to a person deriving title directly from the original buyer, but permit an assignee of the buyer's assignee to rely on and enforce such a covenant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Good Will, Cent. Dig. § 2.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by A. F. Graca against Frank Rodrigues. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

The following is the opinion of Kerrigan, J., in the District Court of Appeals, in which Lennon, P. J., and Richards, J., concurred:

This is an appeal taken on the judgment roll from the judgment sustaining the defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint, the order sustaining the demurrer being made without leave to the plaintiff to amend.

The purpose of the action is to restrain the defendant from conducting a grocery business within a certain locality in the city of Oakland, contrary to an express covenant by him not to engage in a like business within that area. The complaint alleges that the defendant, the original owner of the business, agreed with his immediate covenantees, their executors, administrators and assigns, not thereafter to open or conduct any other grocery store or grocery business within a certain specified limited area; that thereafter said covenantees sold and transferred the grocery store and the good will thereof to one Luz, and assigned and transferred to him the bill of sale and the covenant and agreement just referred to; that Luz on or about February 26, 1916, sold, and delivered the said grocery business together with the good will thereof to the plaintiff, and assigned and transferred to the plaintiff said bill of sale and agreement of defendant. It thus appears from the face of the complaint that the plaintiff is the assignee of an assignee of the original covenantee of the defendant; and for this reason the defendant asserts that the complaint fails to state or show a cause of action in the plaintiff. It is argued in support of the defendant's contention that the action is one to enforce a covenant which is void for the reason that it is in restraint of trade, and does not come within the exception to section 1673 of the Civil Code provided in the section following. Those two sections read, respectively, as follows:

"Sec. 1673. Every contract by which any one is restrained from exercising a lawful profession, trade, or business of any kind, otherwise than is provided for by the next two sections, is to that extent void.

"Sec. 1674. One who sells the good will of a business may agree with the buyer to refrain from carrying on a similar business within a specified city, county, or a part thereof, so long as the buyer, or any person deriving title to the good will from him, carries on a like business therein."

It is argued that under the provisions of these sections the limit to which a covenant in restraint of trade can be carried is in favor of a person deriving title directly from the original purchaser. This position is sustained by the case of Johnston v. Blanchard, 16 Cal. App. 328, 116 Pac. 975, in which the court says: "While appellant does not direct our attention to the fact or make any point thereon, reference to the judgment discloses that it is erroneous in this, that by its terms defendant is enjoined from engaging in or carrying on the business * * * in the county of Los Angeles * * * so long as plaintiff, 'or his successors or assignees,' continue in business." After quoting section 1674, Civil Code, the court, continuing, says: "Under the provision of this section of the Code, plaintiff, who derived his title to the good will of the business by a transfer from W. W. Lee, who was the buyer from defendant, is entitled to have the contract enforced for his protection so long as he carries on a like business in the county, but such right cannot be extended to his successors or assigns. It therefore follows that the judgment, in so far as it has reference to the successors or assignees of plaintiff, is unwarranted and to that extent erroneous."

[1, 2] With diffidence and reluctance we disagree with this view of the law. Good will is an important and valuable incident to a business which the law recognizes and protects. With a business it may be sold or mortgaged, and is property transferable like other property. Civ. Code, § 993. A covenant or obligation entered into with a buyer to refrain from engaging in a like business within specified territorial limits is assignable. Cal. Steam Navigation Co. v. Wright, 6 Cal. 258, 65 Am. Dec. 511. Such contract and good will are valid when held by the assignee of a purchaser even if no reference is made therein to the successors and assigns of the purchaser. 12 R. C. L. 991. In Swanson v. Kirby, 98 Ga. 586, 26 S. E. 71, it appeared that the defendant had sold out his business as a ticket broker to the plaintiff, and had contracted not to open another ticket business in the city of Atlanta without his consent. The purchaser transferred the contract to a third party, who sold the business to another, and the latter entered into partnership with the plaintiff, the original purchaser from the defendant. This partnership was later dissolved and the plaintiff continued in the business alone. It was held that the benefit of the contract not to engage in the ticket business without the consent of the plaintiff passed to the purchaser with each transfer of the business. An examination of the authorities discloses that the law generally provides that the good will of a business may be sold with the business and assigned through successive transfers without limit. We do not believe that the Legislature of this state, when enacting section 1674, intended to adopt a different rule. We can conceive of no good reason why it should have done so, or why the assignee of an assignee of a purchaser of the good will of a business is not as much entitled to protection as any of his predecessors in interest. We think under a reasonable construction of this section that he is so entitled. It is often said that contracts in restraint of trade should be strictly construed, that they are against public policy, and therefore presumably bad; and that their provisions should not be extended by construction or implication so as to favor persons desiring to enforce them beyond what their terms would clearly require. Perhaps the modern rule is that such contracts should be construed without any adverse bias. 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 857; Herriman v. Menzies, 115 Cal. 16, 44 Pac. 660, 46 Pac. 730, 35 L. R. A. 318, 56 Am. St. Rep. 81. However that may be, under the contract here in question the defendant, as vendor, did intend to bind himself in favor of his immediate purchaser and the latter's successive transferees; and the only question that we are called upon to consider is whether the parties to the contract under the sections above quoted have the power to so contract. Construing the sections liberally, as required by the Code of this state, we think the benefit of the covenant of the contract not to engage in the grocery business within the designated limited area passed to the purchasers with each transfer of the business.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and permit the defendant to answer.

On resubmission, Lennon, P. J., filed the following:

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and permit the defendant to answer, for the reasons stated in an opinion filed March 1, 1917, which opinion is hereby adopted as the opinion of the court following the resubmission of the cause, and said opinion is hereby ordered refiled as of this date.

A. Q. Lomba and W. W. Moreland, both of Oakland, for appellant. Gonsalves & Keller, of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District is denied.

The opinion is in conflict with what was said by the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District as to the proper construction of section 1674 in Johnston v. Blanchard, 16 Cal. App. at page 328, 116 Pac. 973, as is shown by the opinion in this case. We are satisfied that the opinion in this case correctly states the law on the point discussed, and that what was said thereon in Johnston v. Blanchard, supra, must be disapproved.

(175 Cal. 358)

FRESNO TRACTION CO. v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. RY. CO. (S. F. 7070.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 7, 1917. Rehearing Denied July 5, 1917.)

1. Negligence 🔑6 — What Constitutes — Noncompliance with Statute.

Failure to perform duty imposed by law is sufficient evidence of negligence, though the person damaged had knowledge of such failure prior to the accident.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 8.]

2. Negligence 🔑56(3) — Noncompliance with Statute—Proximate Cause.

No action for damages can be founded on negligence from failure to perform a duty imposed by a statute, unless such negligence directly contributed to the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. § 70.]

3. Railroads 🔑297(4) — Disobedience of Ordinance—Evidence.

The rule that proof of disobedience of an ordinance constitutes proof of negligence per se is not altered by the fact that the corporation, bound under the ordinance to maintain a safety device, proves its continued disobedience.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 947.]

4. Railroads 🔑297(4)—Violation of Ordinance—Proximate Cause—Proof.

Evidence that the owners of intersecting railway tracks by mutual consent discontinued the use of safety gates required by a city ordinance, and substituted a system of signals by watchmen, conclusively showed that the negligence involved in disobedience of the ordinance was not the proximate cause of a subsequent collision.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 947.]

5. Railroads 🔑345(3)—Evidence Admissible Under Pleading—Ordinance.

In an action by one railway company against another for damages from a collision, due to violation of an ordinance requiring the maintenance of safety gates, the ordinance and proof of its violation were admissible under general allegations of the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1115.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by the Fresno Traction Company against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company. From judgment for plaintiff, and denial of new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

U. T. Clotfelter, of Los Angeles, James Gallagher, of Fresno, and A. H. Van Cott, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Short & Sutherland and Everts & Ewing, all of Fresno (Carl E. Lindsay, of Fresno, of counsel), for respondent.

MELVIN, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment for $3,000 by way of damages and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The cause was tried before a jury. Plaintiff and defendant are transportation companies. Their tracks intersect at a street crossing in the city of Fresno, and at that place, in the nighttime, one of defendant's trains backed into a car belonging to plaintiff, causing the damages for which judgment was given.

The complaint alleged that the injury to the property of the plaintiff was caused by the negligence of defendant's employés in the operation of a freight train. It was specifically charged that defendant's servants were negligent because of the failure to maintain lights upon the rear end of the train which backed into plaintiff's electric car, by reason of the neglect to ring the bell or blow the whistle of the locomotive, and owing also to the fact that a watchman employed by defendant and stationed near the point of intersection of the tracks gave the motorman and conductor of plaintiff's car a signal that a safe crossing might be made. There was also the general allegation, usual in such complaints, that the collision was wholly caused by the carelessness and negligence of the defendant, and without any fault on the part or behalf of plaintiff. The answer denied the acts of negligence specifically set forth in the complaint, and pleaded as a distinct defense that the collision was caused solely and proximately by the negligence of plaintiff's servants.

The principal contentions on behalf of defendant in favor of a reversal (and the only ones requiring discussion by this court) are made in connection with the admission in evidence of an ordinance of the city of Fresno and certain instructions with reference to that by-law given by the court to the jury. This ordinance required the maintenance and operation of safety gates by defendant at the crossing where the accident occurred, and it was shown by the evidence that, in obedience to the mandate of the law, defendant had erected such gates; but because it was shown without contradiction that for several months preceding the collision defendant had ceased to operate the gates, and that this fact was known to plaintiff, and particularly to the motorman in charge of the car which was demolished, it is argued that the ordinary rule with reference to negligence imputable to a defendant by its violation of a statute has no application to the case at bar, and that the introduction of the ordinance and the giving of instructions based thereon amounted to error, entitling the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company to a new trial.

[1, 2] We do not agree with this contention. It is the settled law of California that the failure of any person to perform a duty imposed by law is sufficient evidence of negligence. But no action for damages may be founded upon such negligence unless it directly contributed to the injury. McKune v. Santa Clara Valley Mill & Lumber Co., 110 Cal. 480–486, 42 Pac. 980; Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co., 154 Cal. 663–667, 98 Pac. 1063, 16 Ann. Cas. 1061; Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 368–371, 113 Pac. 663; Simoneau v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 264–269, 136 Pac. 544, 49 L. R. A. (N. S.) 737; Fenn v. Clark, 11 Cal. App. 79–81, 103 Pac. 944; Scragg v. Sallee, 24 Cal. App. 133–143, 140 Pac. 706; Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Company, 26 Cal. App. 318–327, 147 Pac. 90.

[3-5] The rule of law that proof of disobedience of an ordinance constitutes proof of negligence per se is not altered by the fact that the corporation bound under that ordinance to maintain a device intended for the safety of the public proves its continued disobedience to the law. This, of course, will not be disputed, nor will any one deny the right of the legislative body having proper police power to prescribe such automatic appliances rather than the constant attendance of watchmen. Safety gates rarely get out of order and never get drunk or careless. If, however, by mutual consent of the owners of intersecting tracks, use of the safety gates has been discontinued, and a system of signals by watchmen has been substituted, those facts, if proven, constitute a complete showing that the negligence involved in the violation of the law was not the proximate cause of any collision. But it does not follow by any means that, where the negligence of the defendant, in a case like this, is averred generally as well as specifically, the court is in error in admitting the violated ordinance, and in stating to the jury the law substantially as it is expressed in the foregoing citations. The ordinance and its violation became relevant under the general averments of the complaint. Such a matter is essentially one of evidence, and not of pleading. Cragg v. Los Angeles Trust Co., supra; Connell v. Harris, 23 Cal. App. 537, 138 Pac. 949.

As the ordinance was properly received in evidence, it was permissible for the court to instruct the jury upon the law of negligence as declared by our decisions. This was done. That failure to comply with an ordinance such as the one introduced in evidence would be negligence on the part of defendant was stated to the jury; but the jurors were also told that upon the plaintiff was placed the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that "the sole proximate cause of the collision * * * was the negligence of the employés of the said defendant." Taken all together, the instructions fairly stated the law to the jury, and we cannot see that defendant was prejudiced. The motorman in charge of plaintiff's electric car testified unequivocally that he knew of the disuse of the safety gates for several months immediately preceding the collision. The conclusion is almost inevitable, therefore, that the verdict was founded upon other elements of negligence, which were supported by abundant evidence tending to establish also their proximate relation to the destruction of the plaintiff's car.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

(175 Cal. 401)

SCHWARZ & GOTTLIEB, Inc., et al. v. MARCUSE et al. (S. F. 6991.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 8, 1917. Rehearing Denied July 5, 1917.)

1. PARTNERSHIP 🔑64—RIGHT TO SUE—FICTITIOUS NAME.

An action was not maintainable by P. H. M. and E. W. M. under the designation of M. & Son, without filing the certificate contemplated by Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468, prohibiting any partnership from doing business or maintaining an action under a fictitious name without having first filed a certificate with the clerk of the county showing the names of the persons interested as partners.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partnership, Cent. Dig. §§ 87–91.]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS 🔑121 — NOTICE — ESTOPPEL.

In view of the fact that Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1187, 1190, give several starting points for the filing of a mechanic's or a materialman's lien, any one of which may be equivalent to "a completion," not "the" completion, of a building, the owner is estopped to deny the timeliness of a notice, where it is filed within 90 days of completion or abandonment, unless such period is lessened by his act in giving the formal notice provided for by the statute, even though the lien claimant has previously filed and afterwards abandoned a claim filed within 30 days of completion or abandonment of work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. § 164.]

Angellotti, C. J., and Sloss, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Jas. M. Troutt, Judge.

Consolidated actions by Schwarz & Gottlieb, Incorporated, and others against Felix Marcuse and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed as to part of appellants and reversed as to part.

Henry A. Jacobs, of San Francisco, for appellants. Alexander D. Keyes, of San Francisco, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. The case was decided upon appeal by the District Court of the Third Appellate District and was transferred to this court for the purpose of a further consideration of two of the points involved.

[1] The first of these questions was whether or not P. H. Murphy and E. W. Murphy could maintain an action under the designation of P. H. Murphy & Son without filing the certificate contemplated by sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code. If this were a question unaffected by Californian precedent we might, perhaps, hold that the partnership had the right and capacity to sue, but in view of the decisions of this court, and particularly the opinion in the case of North v. Moore, 135 Cal. 621, 67 Pac. 1037 (decided in 1902), in which it was held that "Abrams Bros." was not a designation showing the names of persons interested as partners, we are satisfied that the opinion of the District Court of Appeal written by Mr. Presiding Justice Chipman correctly states the law. Supplementing his comments upon Axe v. Tolbert, 179 Mich. 556–566, 146 N. W. 418, we may say that the statement of the court in that case is not entirely supported by the citations made. The first of these (Castle Bros. v. Graham, 87 App. Div. 97, 84 N. Y. Supp. 120; s. c., 180 N. Y. 553, 73 N. E. 1120) is in absolute conflict with North v. Moore, and is therefore not authoritative in California. The two Californian cases cited by the Michigan Supreme Court (Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 Pac. 659 and Carlock v. Cagnacci, 88 Cal. 600, 26 Pac. 597) involve partnerships in which suit was brought in each instance by partners using their names, but not their initials. Bovee v. De Jong, 22 S. D. 163, 116 N. W. 83, was exactly like the two cases last discussed, and was decided upon their authority. Guiterman v. Wishon, 21 Mont. 458, 54 Pac. 566, was a case in which "Guiterman Bros." was held a sufficient designation of the names of the partners. This also is of no value as authority in this state, owing to the later decision of North v. Moore. Patterson v. Byers, 17 Okl. 633, 89 Pac. 1114, 10 Ann. Cas. 810, the last case cited by the Supreme Court of Michigan in the Axe Case, announces the remarkable conclusion that "Patterson Furniture Company" shows that there is a company composed of persons whose surname is Patterson; and that "it further shows that there are no other members of the firm except those whose surname is Patterson." Evidently the learned justice who wrote that opinion overlooked the fact that commonly the title "Patterson Furniture Company" might indicate a corporation or copartnership in which the stockholders or members might or might not be Pattersons. It will thus be seen that neither by its reasoning nor its cited authority is Axe v. Tolbert of convincing weight.

Upon the appeals of P. H. Murphy & Son and of William A. Fagan we adopt the opinion of the learned district court of appeal as follows:

"Several actions to enforce laborers' and materialmen's liens were consolidated. Of these, the following plaintiffs appeal from the judgment, namely: P. H. Murphy & Son, William A. Fagan, Pope & Talbot (a corporation). There is an appeal also by plaintiffs H. W. B. Taylor and Henry Walter, but the finding as to them is not challenged and the judgment must be affirmed.

"The Claim of P. H. Murphy & Son.

"Respondents assign two grounds in support of the judgment against the claim of P. H. Murphy & Son: First, that the firm name of P. H. Murphy & Son does not show the names of the persons interested in the partnership, and, as it was admitted that P. H. Murphy & Son had not filed with the clerk of the county in which was their principal place of business the certificate required by section 2466 of the Civil Code, they were forbidden by section 2468 of the same Code to maintain the action; second, that the lien was filed too late or at the wrong time.

"Upon the first of these grounds the court made the following finding: 'That at the date of the filing of the complaint in action No. 47202 and during all the times therein mentioned and continuously ever since the date of the filing of the last-mentioned complaint, the plaintiffs P. H. Murphy and E. W. Murphy were partners transacting business in the state of California under a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business, to wit, under the designation of P. H. Murphy & Son. That a certificate stating the names in full of all the members of such partnership and their places of residence was never filed with the clerk of the county in which the principal place of business of such partnership was situated during all the times mentioned in the last-mentioned complaint and in these findings, and that such certificate was not published in a newspaper published in such county or elsewhere, and that the contract and transaction upon which the causes of action of the plaintiffs P. H. Murphy and E. W. Murphy, hereinbefore referred to, are based, were made and had under said partnership name of P. H. Murphy & Son, and for that reason the said plaintiffs P. H. Murphy and E. W. Murphy cannot maintain any action on said contract or transaction.'

"P. H. Murphy testified: 'The firm of P. H. Murphy & Son is a copartnership composed of myself and my son, E. W. Murphy. There are no other members of the firm. We are transacting business in this state. No certificate of copartnership * * * has been filed in the office of the county clerk of the city and county of San Francisco, or has any such certificate been filed elsewhere. The name of my son who is my partner is Edward William; he is not my only son; I have two others.'

"Section 2466 of the Civil Code reads as follows: 'Except as otherwise provided in the next section every person transacting business in this state under a fictitious name and every partnership transacting business in this state under a fictitious name, or a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business, must file with the clerk of the county in which his or its principal place of business is situated, a certificate, stating the name in full and the place of residence of such person and stating the names in full of all the members of such partnership and their places of residence. Such certificate must be published once a week for four successive weeks, in a newspaper published in the county, if there be one, and if there be none in such county, then in a newspaper in an adjoining county.'

"Section 2468 as amended provides: '* * * No person doing business under a fictitious name, or his assignee or assignees, nor any persons doing business as partners contrary to the provisions of this article, or their assignee or assignees, shall maintain any action upon or on account of any contract or contracts made, or transactions had, under such fictitious name, or in their partnership name, in any court of this state until the certificate has been filed and the publication has been made as herein required.'

"The Supreme Court, in North v. Moore, 135 Cal. 621, 67 Pac. 1037, said: '"Abrams Bros." cannot be said to be a designation "showing the names of the persons interested as partners." The firm name might apply equally to a partnership composed of two or more, and might embrace all or only some of the brothers of the name of Abrams. The statute clearly defeats their right to maintain the action against Moore, and leaves them without any right to be heard on this appeal.'

"In Nicholson & Co. v. Auburn G. M. & M. Co., 6 Cal. App. 547, 92 Pac. 651, it was held, as also in Byers v. Bourret, 64 Cal. 73, 28 Pac. 61, that Nicholson & Co. in the former, and J. D. Byers & Co. in the latter, case was not a designation showing the names of the persons interested as partners in the business. Trudel v. Butori, 19 Cal. App. 584, 127 Pac. 76, cited by appellant, is not in point. There the claim of F. X. Trudel & Son was assigned to plaintiff in whose favor judgment was entered, and it was held, on the authority of Gray v. Wells, 118 Cal. 11, 50 Pac. 23, that the assignee could maintain the action. The statute was amended in 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 441), probably because of this decision, making the section applicable to assignees of persons doing business as partners contrary to the provisions of the article, which was not the case prior to the amendment. Section 2468, Civ. Code. Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 Pac. 659, and McLean v. Crow, 88 Cal. 644, 26 Pac. 596, are cited by appellants. In the Pendleton Case it was held that the firm name of Pendleton & Williams was not fictitious, and that 'it was true as far as it went,' and fell short only in not showing the full names of all the partners; that the reason underlying the statute for all practical purposes 'is satisfied by information as to the surnames of the partners.' McLean v. Crow followed this rule.

"In the case of Axe v. Tolbert, 179 Mich. 556, 146 N. W. 418, a contract was entered into in which 'Wm. Axe & Son' were mentioned 'as party of the second part,' the contract relating to an option given second party to purchase certain land. The action was brought by 'Wm. Axe and another, partners as Wm. Axe & Son.' It was urged as a defense 'that plaintiffs had no standing in court for the reason they do not show that they had filed with the county clerk a proper certificate setting forth the names of the members of the firm in compliance with Act No. 101, Pub. Acts 1907.' It appeared that 'no mention was made of this defense in the plea and notice filed.' This, under our decisions, would have been sufficient to justify the court in disregarding the defense, for it has been held that the failure to file the required certificate must be taken advantage of, as matter of defense, by answer or plea in abatement, and will otherwise be deemed waived. Phillips v. Goldtree, 74 Cal. 151, 13 Pac. 313, 15 Pac. 451; Carlock v. Cagnacci, 88 Cal. 600, 26 Pac. 597. It was not necessary to the decision in the Axe Case that the statute should be construed as it was. The court, however, stated that the firm name was not 'an assumed or fictitious name in contemplation of the statute. * * * It gives the full name of the head of the firm, and plainly discloses the identity of the other member. Persons doing business with the firm would be advised who the members were and whom to hold responsible.' The court cites, among others, the cases in 85 and 88 Cal., supra, which, as has been shown, are quite different from the Axe Case, for there the surnames of all the partners were given. The statute in the Axe Case is not before us, and it may refer to 'an assumed or fictitious name.' Our statute deals, not only with fictitious names, but refers also to a name which does not 'show the names of all the persons interested as partners.'

"We cannot accept the reasoning in the Axe Case. The name P. H. Murphy & Son may not be fictitious in the sense of the statute, nor is it claimed so to be by respondents. What they claim is that 'the designation does not show the name of E. W. Murphy.' There were other sons of P. H. Murphy besides E. W., the partner. Respondents in their brief say: 'The word "son" may have been a family name. There is a well known text-book written by a lawyer named Son, "Son on Corporations." In the San Francisco directory we find the firm name "Kingsley & Son," a firm composed of Ampro A. Kingsley and Emma Son. The most that can be said of the name of P. H. Murphy & Son is that it suggests the probability that the partner referred to as Son bears the same name as the partner referred to as Murphy. But the designation does not show the name of Murphy more than once, whereas the statute requires it to show the name of Murphy twice in order to comply with section 2466.' It seems to us our Supreme Court went as far as we should go, without frittering away the statute, in holding, as it did in Pendleton v. Cline and McLean v. Crow, supra, that where the surnames appear the full names are not required. Here, however, we are asked to hold that 'Son' in the designation of the firm not only means Murphy, but a particular son of P. H. Murphy, to wit, E. W. Murphy, whereas in fact he had two other sons. The designation of P. H. Murphy & Son, it is true, as was said in the Axe Case, 'gives the full name of the head of the firm,' but it does not 'plainly or at all disclose the name of the other member,' as was held in that case. It is not sufficient to identify the head of the firm alone. The statute expressly says, where the business is conducted under 'a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business,' the certificate must be filed. We can, in applying the statute, see no difference between the designation 'Abrams Bros.' (North v. Moore, supra), and the designation 'P. H. Murphy & Son.' The identity of the partners or partner is not shown in either case.

"Defendants in their answer alleged that P. H. Murphy and E. W. Murphy were a partnership transacting business in this state under a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business, to wit: Under the designation of 'P. H. Murphy & Son,' and further alleging 'that a certificate stating the names in full of all the members of such partnership and their places of residence was never filed with the clerk of the county,' etc. This answer was filed long before the trial. At the trial, and after the evidence had been given upon the question, counsel 'requested the court, in the event that the court should decide that plaintiffs were such a partnership as would be included under section 2466 of the Civil Code, that a continuance be granted in the trial for the purpose of permitting plaintiffs P. H. Murphy and E. W. Murphy to comply with the provisions of sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code by filing the certificate required and publishing the same, and that the trial of the action thereupon proceed.' It is now urged that the court erred in not complying with this request. Whether the court, against defendants' objection, at this stage of the trial could have granted such request we do not decide, but that it was a matter within its discretion we have no doubt; and we cannot say that its discretion was abused. We think the plaintiffs could not maintain the action, and hence it is not necessary to discuss the second ground urged in support of the judgment.

"The William A. Fagan Claim.

"The court found 'that the plaintiff William A. Fagan was a person transacting business in the state of California under a fictitious name, to wit, the name of Panama Electric Company, and that the said plaintiff never filed in the office of the county clerk * * * a certificate stating the name in full and the place of residence of said William A. Fagan, who was then and there a person transacting business under said fictitious name of Panama Electric Company, and never published such certificate in any newspaper. That the contract and transactions upon which the plaintiff William A. Fagan based his complaint in the said action No. 47202 were in fact contracts made between the plaintiff William A. Fagan, doing business under the fictitious name of Panama Electric Company with the defendant, Felix Marcuse (the contractor), and were in fact transactions had by the said plaintiff under the said fictitious name, and for that reason the said William A. Fagan cannot maintain any action on said contract or transactions.'

"It appeared that Henry Walter and H. W. B. Taylor filed and published a certificate in which they stated that they were partners doing business under the firm name of Panama Electric Company, and that Walter and Taylor were the only members of the firm. Fagan explained in his testimony the reason for this being done as follows: 'The reason Mr. Taylor and Mr. Walter became members of the Panama Electric Company is this: I am a member of local No. 6 of the Electrical Workers, and therefore cannot work on contracts. I asked Taylor and Walter if I might use their names, thus allowing me to work on contracts, and they said I could without giving them any compensation.' Fagan testified further: 'Q. What interest did the Panama Electric Company have in the contract in question? A. All interest. Q. What are the facts of the relation between yourself and the Panama Electric Company with reference to this particular contract and the work done? A. I own the Panama Electric Company; in fact the Panama Electric Company is William A. Fagan. * * * Q. Had the Panama Electric Company received any compensation or any amount for the work done on that building? A. The Panama Electric Company received $300 on account of the work done on that building. Q. When I state Panama Electric Company I mean Taylor and Walter. A. They have earned nothing. I received $300. Total amount I claimed is $650.50. Balance of $350.50 has not been paid.' On cross-examination he testified: 'Q. Mr. Fagan, as I understand you, during the time the Waldmann building was being put up you were doing business as a contractor under the name of Panama Electric Company. You had no partners? A. Legally I think I had. Q. Did you divide the profits? A. No. Q. Did you divide the expenses? A. No. Q. Between you and them the understanding was that it was only their names that were to be used, and that all losses were to be borne by you and you were to get all the profits? A. Yes. Taylor and Walter had no financial interest in the Panama Electric Company; did no work and had no work to be done; purchased no materials and supplied no materials; all done by me alone.'

"As set forth in the complaint the order given by the contractor, Marcuse, under which the work was done was as follows: 'San Francisco, Cal., May 3, 1912. Panama Electric Co., 426—24th Avenue. San Francisco—Gentlemen: You can go ahead with electric wiring at Golden Gate and Pierce at $612.00 as arranged today. Building will be ready in about ten days. Yours truly, Felix Marcuse.'

"We quote from appellant's brief: 'The contention of appellant is that the contract was entered into by Panama Electric Company as the agent of William A. Fagan, although the work was actually performed by William A. Fagan, and that it was not necessary for said William A. Fagan to file such certificate as required by the provisions of sections 2466–2468 of the Civil Code, in order to maintain this action. * * * If H. W. B. Taylor and Henry Walter were willing to enter into contracts for William A. Fagan in order to permit plaintiff Fagan to carry on business, they are the persons to complain, and not defendants herein. The defendants were not injured in any manner by the agreement entered into between Fagan and H. W. B. Taylor and Henry Walter.'

"We cannot accede to this view of Fagan's relation to the Panama Electric Company. He testified that he and the company were identical; that he is the company. If he was the company how could it be his agent in a legal sense, i. e., a distinct and separate entity, acting for him and in his stead? We understand the statute to require, not only that the names of the persons comprising the fictitious partnership must be stated, but truthfully stated. A person should not be permitted to do business under a fictitious name and be protected by a certificate that falsely represents the names of the partners to be some other persons. The very object of the statute would be thwarted if such evasion of the statute were countenanced. The court found, and it is not disputed, that Taylor and Walter had nothing to do with the contract or the building. If they represented the Panama Electric Company, it was a false as well as fictitious company. The real and true Panama Electric Company was Fagan, and as he filed no certificate he cannot maintain the action."

Pope & Talbot Claim.

Regarding the claim of Pope & Talbot a new question arises, but it is one in the solution of which we are aided by a decision of this court given since this matter was discussed by the District Court of Appeal. The essential facts and the question to be decided are well set forth by the District Court of Appeal, and we adopt that part of the opinion as follows:

"Pope & Talbot filed two claims of lien, the first on November 9, 1912; the second on December 27, 1912. Both claims were sufficient in form and substantially identical. Plaintiff failed to foreclose the first claim of lien, but brought an action to foreclose the second lien on March 14, 1913, within 90 days after the filing of the second claim of lien. The court found that, on October 17, 1912, the owners 'began to occupy and use the said building and entered into the occupation and use of the said building on the last-mentioned date, and that such occupation and use of the said building by the defendants (the owners) continued ever since said last-mentioned date; that the said occupation and use * * * has been open, notorious and continuous; * * * that none of the materials referred to in any of the said complaints and no part of the labor therein referred to were furnished after the 17th day of October, 1912; that on the 26th day of October, 1912, all labor upon the said contract between the defendants (the owners) and the said defendant Marcuse (contractor) ceased, and that no labor upon the last-mentioned contract or upon the last-mentioned building has been performed since the last-mentioned date; that at the time when the said labor ceased the last-mentioned contract was not completed, and never was completed; that within 40 days after cessation of labor upon the said contract, to wit, on the 30th day of November, 1912, the defendants (owners) filed for record in the office of the said recorder a notice setting forth the date on which such cessation of labor occurred, to wit, the 26th day of October, 1912, together with their names and the nature of their title and a description of the property sufficient for identification, to wit, the property referred to in the said complaints; that the said notice was verified by the defendants (owners).'

"The court found that: 'The claim of lien filed by the said plaintiff, Pope & Talbot, for recordation the 9th day of November, 1912, was in all respects valid, but that the action to foreclose the lien of said Pope & Talbot was commenced on the 14th day of March, 1913, more than 90 days after the said claim of lien was filed on the 9th day of November, 1912.' The court also found that Pope & Talbot filed another claim of lien 'for the same demand as that for which the said claim of lien on the 9th day of November, 1912, * * * and was precisely similar to that filed on the 9th day of November 1912,' except that it set forth that defendants [the owners] had, on November 30, 1912, filed a notice of cessation of labor upon the said building, and except one or two other statements not necessary to be stated. The court further found that the cause of action of Pope & Talbot 'is barred by the provisions of section 1190 of the Code of Civil Procedure.'

"Appellants contend that, the owners having recorded a notice of the cessation of labor showing, among other facts, that the contractor had on the 26th day of October, 1912, abandoned the contract, this notice gave appellant the right to file a second claim of lien, and that respondents are estopped from questioning the validity of the second claim of lien. Defendants contend that 'by filing their claim of lien upon November 9, 1912, Pope & Talbot perfected their lien, and that their time to foreclose commenced then to run. They could not, by filing a second claim on the 27th day of December, 1913, extend by 48 the 90-day period which the law gave them in which to commence their action of foreclosure. Their lien, and their only lien, is therefore barred by the statute of limitations, and is not saved by the fact that a second claim of lien was thereafter filed'

"Plaintiffs now contend that defendants, the owners, 'are estopped from questioning the validity of the second claim of lien, as the defendants are necessarily barred by their voluntary act in recording a notice of cessation.'"

It is true that, as Mr. Phillips says in his work on Mechanics' Liens:

"Where the law allows 90 days for filing a lien, and 90 days after filing in which to bring suit, and a good lien is filed, the second 90 days begins to run, and the time cannot be extended by amending or filing a new lien, though within the original 90 days." Phillips on Mechanics' Liens, § 323.

The text is supported by Battle v. McArthur (C. C.) 49 Fed. 715, and Mulloy v. Lawrence, 31 Mo. 583, is also to the same effect. In both of these cases the courts were construing a statute of the state of Missouri which gives to a railroad contractor a lien which must be filed within 90 days next after the completion of the work. It was properly held that the filing of one lien under the Missouri statute set in motion the statute of limitations, and that unless suit was brought within 90 days thereafter the lien ceased to exist by the express provisions of the law. But in California we have a very different statute which must be carefully examined in connection with the facts here presented. That is section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure, which in part, is as follows:

"Every original contractor, claiming the benefit of this chapter, within sixty days after the completion of his contract, and every person save the original contractor claiming the benefit of this chapter, within thirty days after he has ceased to labor or has ceased to furnish materials, or both; or at his option, within thirty days after the completion of the original contract, if any, under which he was employed, must file for record with the county recorder of the county or city and county in which such property or some part thereof is situated, a claim of lien. * * * In all cases any of the following shall be deemed equivalent to a completion for all the purposes of this chapter: The occupation or use of a building, improvement, or structure, by the owner, or his representative; or the acceptance by said owner or said agent, of said building, improvement, or structure, or cessation from labor for thirty days upon any contract or upon any building, improvement or structure or the alteration, addition to, or repair thereof; the filing of the notice hereinafter provided for. The owner may within ten days after completion of any contract, or within forty days after cessation from labor thereon, file for record in the office of the county recorder of the county where the property is situated, a notice setting forth the date when the same was completed, or on which cessation from labor occurred. * * * In case such notice be not so filed then the said owner and all persons deraigning title from or claiming any interest through him shall be estopped in any proceedings for the foreclosure of any lien provided for in this chapter from maintaining any defense therein based on the ground that said lien was not filed within the time provided in this chapter; provided, that all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days after the completion of any building, improvement or structure, or the alteration, addition or repair thereto."

In the recent case of Hughes Manufacturing & Lumber Co. v. Hathaway, 161 Pac. 1159, in which a petition for rehearing was denied on January 15, 1917, the court decided, after a review of said section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure, that a claim filed within 30 days after formal notice of completion by the owner (and, of course, the same rule would apply where notice of cessation from work was given) might be foreclosed as if filed within 30 days after the actual completion of the building (and, of course, the same principle is applicable in a case where the contractor had ceased to perform work and the statutory notice had been given). There were not successive liens filed in that case, as here, one prior and one subsequent to the owner's notice of completion, but the purpose and spirit of the statute were reviewed by Mr. Justice Shaw, in part, as follows:

> "The 10 days allowed for filing the notice of completion of such a contract begins to run at the time of its actual completion by the contractor. The lien claimant for materials furnished or labor done under such contract may not know the time of actual completion thereof, and the statute intends that he need not inquire diligently concerning it. He may watch the files of the county recorder and rely on the filing of the notice of completion, which, for the purpose of his time to file his claim of lien, is deemed to be the equivalent of the completion of the original contract under which he claims, and he may then file his claim within 30 days after the filing of such notice.
>
> "If no notice of completion is filed, the claimant is only required to see that his claim is filed before the expiration of the period of 90 days after the completion of the building, that is, of the building as a whole, as provided in the last clause of the section. If his claim is filed within that period and also within 30 days after the filing of the notice of completion of the contract under which he claims, he may rest secure that it is filed in time. If he files the claim within 90 days after completion of the building, and the owner fails to file a notice of the completion of the original contract under which the lien is claimed, within 10 days after its actual completion or 40 days after cessation of labor thereon, the claimant may rely on the estoppel created by the statute to prevent the owner from disputing the timely filing of the action."

[2] The statute gives several starting points for the filing of the mechanic's or materialman's notice of lien, any one of which may be equivalent to "a completion"—not the completion—of the building. Unless the period is lessened by the owner's act in giving the formal notice, provided by the statute, of completion or cessation from the work, he is estopped to deny its timeliness if it be filed within 90 days of completion or abandonment. If Pope & Talbot had chosen to refrain from filing any claim at all until after the owner's act of giving notice of cessation from work, undoubtedly the claim of December 27th would have been entirely available, and the owner might not complain. How, then, is he injured by the abandonment of the original claim and the filing of a new one timed by his own act which by the statute is made "equivalent to a completion"? We can discover nothing operating to his detriment. The first claim of lien was not available against him at the time of the suit because of the limitation of section 1190 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but even if it had been, no court would permit two recoveries for the same items. Under the statute a lien claimant may select any one of several times as "equivalent to a completion." It is our opinion that these periods are not each exclusive of all of the others, or that action by the lien claimant, measured from one period, forecloses him from all resort to the other rights to which he may be entitled under section 1187. Nor do we conclude that because he has filed his claim within 30 days of actual completion or abandonment of work on the building he has inexorably set in motion the limiting restraint of section 1190, Code of Civil Procedure, against all of his rights. Rather do we regard each of those times and circumstances "equivalent to a completion" as setting in motion a new period for the filing of a claim, and that the limitation expressed in section 1190 applies to each of such claims as such, and not to all rights which the claimant may possibly enjoy under any one of them.

The judgment is affirmed as to all appellants except Pope & Talbot. As to that corporation, plaintiff and appellant, it is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. I concur in the opinion and judgment, in so far as the affirmance as to all the appellants except Pope & Talbot is concerned.

I dissent from that portion of our judgment which reverses the judgment of the superior court as to appellant Pope & Talbot. It seems clear to me that, upon the facts stated in the opinion as to the claim of such appellant, the superior court correctly held that the cause of action for enforcement of the lien was barred by the provision of section 1190, Code of Civil Procedure. The lien of that claimant was fully perfected by the first filing, that of November 9, 1912, and, by express provision of the section, the property subject thereto was absolutely freed therefrom by the failure to commence enforcement proceedings in the proper court within 90 days thereafter. That our statute, as held in Hughes Mfg., etc., Co. v. Hathaway, 161 Pac. 1159, authorizes a lien claimant to select any one of several events as equivalent to the completion, within a certain time from which he must perfect his lien by filing his claim, appears to me to be altogether immaterial to the question here involved. Of course, as there held, he may select, at his option, any one of the events so prescribed. But he has only one lien. And when, whatever selection as to date of completion he may make, he has perfected that lien by the filing of a proper claim, the statute (section 1190, Code Civ. Proc.) begins to run against the lien itself, rendering it ineffectual for any purpose at the expiration of 90 days in the event that no action is instituted within that time for its enforcement.

SLOSS, J. I agree with the views expressed by the Chief Justice relative to the claim of Pope & Talbot.

I wish to express, in addition, my dissent from the court's decision on the claim of P. H. Murphy & Son. In my judgment, the firm name "P. H. Murphy and Son" showed "the names of the persons interested as partners," within the fair meaning of section 2466 of the Civil Code. I see no good reason for giving the section the strict interpretation adopted by the court. Anyone dealing with a firm called "P. H. Murphy & Son" would naturally assume (as was the fact here) that the firm was composed of two men named Murphy, P. H. Murphy being the father, and the other member his son. This assumption would be correct in all but very unusual cases. The partnership designation, therefore, disclosed the surnames of the partners, and this, we have held, is sufficient. Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 24 Pac. 659; McLean v. Crow, 88 Cal. 644, 26 Pac. 596.

(33 Cal. App. 586)

MAYBURY RANCH CO. v. DEVENNEY.

(Civ. 1823.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 7, 1917.)

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT 🔑103(12)—IMPLIED AUTHORITY—PURCHASE OF REAL ESTATE.

Where an agent is authorized to use his principal's check to bind a bargain for purchase of land by him, purchaser may assume that agent possesses authority to make contract for the purchase of land, which does not entitle his principal to a deed and a showing of clear title until the full amount of the purchase price has been paid, and is not put upon notice of any limitation on his authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 290.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

Action by the Maybury Ranch Company against William Devenney, substituted for Orange County Title Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. L. Rowland and R. S. Parker, both of Pasadena, for appellant. Williams & Rutan, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment adverse to it and from an order denying a motion for new trial. The suit was brought against the defendant corporation to recover the sum of $500 as money alleged to have been received from and for the use of the plaintiff. The defendant being an escrow holder, William Devenney was substituted in its place, upon the defendant paying into court the amount of money involved in the controversy. The case proceeded to trial as against Devenney, who is respondent herein.

Prior to October, 1913, one Cook was a person well known to the plaintiff corporation; he had served in their employ as superintendent of ranch properties, and on one occasion had acted as agent in the sale of 40 acres of land belonging to the plaintiff. Devenney controlled in some quality of ownership 189 acres of land located in the county of Orange, which was considered to be suitable for the growing of sugar beets. The plaintiff company desired to acquire this land, and were told by Cook that he could secure it at a price of $300 per acre. The president and vice president of the plaintiff corporation had visited and viewed the land and were satisfied with it. On about the 13th of October, 1913, the vice president of the plaintiff company delivered to Cook, on behalf of the company, his personal check for the sum of $500, with direction to Cook to use the money to bind the bargain on the purchase of the property mentioned; the direction being, however, that this money was to be paid into the Orange County Title Company in escrow, pending the bringing down of the title and the making of a contract of purchase. Cook followed the direction given him, and deposited the money with the title company, and secured a contract from Devenney and persons interested with him, which contract was drawn by the escrow officer of the title company. The contract so drawn provided for an initial payment of $7,000 to be made, the $500 being a part thereof, the remaining $6,500 to be paid within 20 days; and thereafter the balance of the purchase price was to be paid at the rate of $5,000 per year, with interest. The contract did not in terms entitle the vendee to a deed and a showing of clear title until the full amount of the purchase price had been paid. The plaintiff, through its officers, after the deposit had been made and the contract executed, insisted that it was entitled to have a deed given it and to give a mortgage back and have a clear title shown upon the completion of the first payment of $7,000. In the evidence of these officers given at the trial they denied any authority in Cook to stipulate for any other conditions as to payments, deed, mortgage, and title. They tendered the $6,500 to the title company and made demand for a deed, which demand was refused as not being within the terms of the contract. This action was then brought. There was some testimony given by the escrow officer of the title company from which the court might have properly concluded that when the demand for a deed was made by the plaintiff, plaintiff's contention was rather upon the matter of the construction of the contract as made than upon the contention of any lack of authority in Cook to close the deal upon the terms so embodied in the contract. It did appear in evidence that Cook was to receive a commission from Devenney (the escrow instructions so recited), and by fair inference from the evidence it may be said that the plaintiff's officers were advised of that fact. In delivering the check for $500 to Cook it seems very clear that the plaintiff was not making a payment to Cook as the agent of the vendor; the money was delivered to Cook to be by him deposited with the title company to close the transaction. That for such purposes Cook acted as the agent for the plaintiff can hardly be denied. Being authorized to deposit the money and so close the deal, we think that Devenney had the right to assume that Cook possessed all authority necessary to complete the transaction in the way it was. Devenney was not put upon notice of any limitation on the authority of Cook. The money was paid on account of the purchase price and a receipt taken therefor from the vendor and a contract drawn binding the vendor to convey upon terms which were indicated by Cook to be satisfactory to the vendee. Under such condition of the evidence we think the trial court was justified in denying to the plaintiff judgment for the recovery of the $500.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

(33 Cal. App. 547)

THOMAS et al. v. CITY OF PETALUMA.

(Civ. 2048.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 28, 1917.)

1. Municipal Corporations 🔑301—Street Improvement—Necessity of Ordinance.

In view of charter, providing that, in absence of procedure for carrying out any granted or implied power, the general law of the state should be followed, where not inconsistent with express provisions of the charter, a city could authorize street improvements as provided by charter without enacting an ordinance relating thereto, although by another section of the charter the council was granted power to pass street ordinances not in conflict with state law, since the passing of such an ordinance would be useless, where the state law was applicable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 802.]

2. Municipal Corporations 🔑294(4) — Street Improvement — Republication of Notices—Cure of Error in Description.

Although street improvement notices did not refer to the proper official city map, the error was harmless, where a correct republication of the notices was made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 783, 791.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Proceeding to determine difference and controversy between J. S. Thomas and others and the City of Petaluma in respect to validity of proceedings for performance of street improvement work. Judgment sustaining validity of proceedings, and J. S. Thomas and others appeal. Affirmed.

W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for appellants. G. P. Hall, City Atty., of Petaluma, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is a proceeding instituted in the superior court of Sonoma county to determine the difference and controversy between the parties named therein in respect to the validity of certain proceedings for the doing of street work in and by the city of Petaluma, whereby the property of the appellants herein was sought to be charged with their proportion of the expense incident to such work. The sole question presented upon this appeal involves the legality of the procedure adopted and pursued by the said municipal corporation in doing the street work in question.

The city proceeded under the provisions of the act of the Legislature approved March 6, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 70); and it is conceded by the appellants that the procedure prescribed in this state law was correctly followed out in making said improvements except in certain respects to be hereafter noted.

[1] The main contention of the appellants is that prior to entering upon the work of such street improvement under said state law the city of Petaluma failed to adopt an ordinance electing to proceed under said law and adopting its procedure as the one to be followed in making said improvements. This contention on the part of the appellants is based upon the terms of section 21 of article 3 of the charter of the city of Petaluma, which reads as follows:

"The council shall have the power by ordinance which shall not be in conflict with any street (state) law now on the statutes of the state of California or which in the future will be placed on the statutes of this state, and such ordinance may embrace all the powers as are granted by any state law now in existence or which shall be in the future in existence.

"To establish and change the grade and lay out, open, extend, widen, change, pave, repave or otherwise improve all public streets and highways and public places, construct sewers, drains and culverts, to plant trees, construct parking, and to remove shrubs and weeds, or cause objectionable shrubs and weeds or any manner of uncleanliness or obstruction to be removed, and compel the owner of the property to pay for such removal, to levy special assessments to defray the whole or any part of the cost of such work or improvements; also to provide for the repair, cleaning and sprinkling of such streets and public places."

Our attention is, however, called by the respondents to section 68 of article 3 of the city charter, which reads as follows:

"In the absence of any procedure for carrying out or effectuating any granted or implied power or authority, the general law of this state, where applicable and where not inconsistent with any express provision of this charter, shall prevail and shall be followed."

It seems clear to us, when these two sections of the city charter of Petaluma are read together, as they must be, that no preliminary ordinance was necessary to entitle the city authorities to proceed immediately under the state law in making the street improvement under review. The city charter did not itself embrace a procedure for the doing of such work; and the only requirement of section 21 of article 3 of its charter is that when this character of work is to be done it should be done by ordinances not in conflict with state laws. The particular state law adopted by the city for the purposes of this work provides that the contemplated improvement shall have its inception in an ordinance of the city, for such the resolution of intention is, as required by said state law. The passage of an additional ordinance by the city resolving to adopt this ordinance required by the state law would be the doing of an idle act; and any construction of section 21 of article 3 of the charter which would require the doing of such act would do violence to the intendments of section 68 of article 3 of the same charter. We find no merit, therefore, in the appellants' contention in this regard.

[2] As to the further point made by the appellants to the effect that there were certain specified defects in the proceedings of the city council in the course of doing the work in question, we find that these all turn upon the question as to whether the references for purposes of description contained in certain notices published during an early stage in the proceedings were to the proper city official map. The record, however, shows that whatever mistakes were made by the city officials in this respect were speedily discovered, and were, we think, sufficiently rectified by republication of the notices in question for the statutory period containing the corrected references to the proper official map. There is no merit, therefore, in the several points urged by appellants predicated upon this corrected error.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(33 Cal. App. 595)

WARD v. GOETZ et al. (Civ. 1812.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 9, 1917.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE 🔑279(2) — SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT—WAIVER OF RIGHTS.

A letter, written by the attorney of a divorced wife to the attorney of the husband, promising to procure from such wife an agreement releasing the husband from liability for back payments of alimony under a property settlement made at the close of former litigation if the husband's attorney would agree to a continuance in another case between the parties in another state, was not a waiver of the wife's right to alimony installments under the settlement agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. § 1057.]

2. STIPULATIONS 🔑7—STATEMENTS OF COUNSEL.

In an action to recover upon a bond for payment of alimony installments under a settlement contract, a statement by the counsel for the defendant that the only question in the case was whether or not plaintiff had waived further payment, and the response of plaintiff's counsel, "All right," amounted to a stipulation that the only question to be tried was whether the plaintiff waived her right to monthly installments from and after a date named.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Stipulations, Cent. Dig. § 14.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Margaret Ward, formerly Margaret Ward Goetz, against Harry X. Goetz and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Ben S. Hunter and Emmett W. Miller, both of Los Angeles, for appellants. Alfred F. MacDonald, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from the judgment. The appellant Goetz and the respondent were formerly husband and wife. Some time prior to February 16, 1911, the respondent commenced an action for separate maintenance against her husband. On the date mentioned, the two entered into an agreement to live apart, the instrument also providing for a dismissal of the maintenance suit and for the payment by the husband to the wife of the sum of $50 each month, so long as they should remain married. As a part of the same transaction, the appellant Goetz, as principal, and the appellant Nebeker, as surety, executed to respondent a bond in the sum of $1,000, securing the payment of the monthly installments. In December, 1913, respondent obtained a divorce by decree of a Nevada court, and her maiden name of Ward was restored to her. With the payment of January, 1913, Goetz ceased meeting the installments agreed by him to be paid to his wife, and this action was commenced to recover on the bond for the payments due from that time forward. The plaintiff had judgment.

[1] The first contention made by the appellants is that Miss Ward has waived her right to collect the installments and that she is estopped to claim them. It appears that there was pending in California a suit for divorce brought by the husband at the same time that the Nevada action was in the courts of that state. One C. N. Gary, a Nevada lawyer, was counsel for the wife in the action in that jurisdiction. At a certain stage of the Nevada litigation, Gary became fearful that the California case might first reach a conclusion and wrote Ben S. Hunter, Goetz's California lawyer, as follows:

> "I will procure from Marguerite W. Goetz and deliver in escrow an agreement that in the event that a continuance for two days be stipulated in the action of Goetz v. Goetz pending in the Sup. Ct. of L. A. County, California, she will release Harry X. Goetz from all liability for back payments or alimony under the property settlement made at the close of the former litigation."

After the writing of this communication, Gary had a conference with Hunter in Los Angeles about the proposed continuance of the California case, and a continuance was then had, although there was no agreement delivered in escrow, or ever entered into, by Miss Ward releasing Goetz from his liability to pay the monthly installments. Nevertheless, it is claimed that a waiver and an estoppel arose against respondent because of the granting of the continuance, following upon the letter from Gary and the conference between him and Hunter. It is not necessary to proceed to the discussion of legal questions in connection with the claims of waiver and estoppel. We need not be concerned as to whether Gary had authority to act for Miss Ward in the premises. The letter certainly was not a waiver of her right to the installments, granting that he had such authority. Whether a waiver resulted from the conference between Gary and Hunter, again granting Gary's authority, depends upon what was said there, and the finding of the trial court is with respondent on that question. That finding is amply supported by the testimony of Gary, and Hunter did not take the stand. As to the question of estoppel, it is enough to say that no estoppel was pleaded. Carpenter v. Markham, 172 Cal. 112, 155 Pac. 644.

[2] The trial court found that the parties had stipulated in open court "that the only issue to be tried was whether the plaintiff had waived her right to said monthly payments from and after the 10th day of January, 1913," and exception is taken to the finding as not supported by the evidence. The point is without merit. Soon after the trial commenced and immediately after respondent had testified that Goetz's last payment to her was the one due on the day mentioned in the finding, counsel for appellants volunteered the following statement:

> "There is only one question, as I understand, and that is whether she has waived future payments. The fact that the agreement was executed and the action that was then filed was dismissed is admitted."

To this remark counsel for Miss Ward responded, "All right," and proceeded with the examination of the witness. The colloquy between counsel was in effect a stipulation, and the language of the finding is a correct presentation of the actual occurrence.

The appellant objects to certain rulings of the trial court in admitting and excluding evidence, but it appears to us that none of them was erroneous.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

(33 Cal. App. 589)

SMALLEY v. HOLT et al. (Civ. 1645.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 8, 1917.)

1. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY 🔑5—ABROGATION OF CONTRACT — PROVISION BY RECEIPT AGREEMENT.

A provision of a land exchange contract that $750 was to be paid as part of the cash consideration was abrogated by the later contract, embodied in the receipt therefor, that it was to be returned if the parties receiving were unable to comply with the main contract in 30 days.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. §§ 5, 6, 8–10.]

2. EXCHANGE OF PROPERTY 🔑8(3)—PLEADING AND PROOF.

In action to recover part payment under land exchange contract for failure of the other party to comply with the contract, the defense of invalidity of the contract for want of consideration, not being pleaded, was not available.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Exchange of Property, Cent. Dig. § 16½.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑1010(1)—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

The question on appeal is, not where the preponderance of evidence on a given issue lies, but whether there is any evidence whatever in support of the finding upon it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3979–3981, 4024.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by M. E. Smalley against H. R. Holt and another. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

R. W. Richardson and Eugene A. Tucker, both of Los Angeles, for appellants. J. W. Ballard, of Los Angeles, and Clyde Bishop, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

WORKS, J. pro tem. This is an appeal from the judgment.

On June 29, 1911, respondent and appellant Holt entered into an agreement for an exchange of real property, together with the passing of certain mortgages and cash considerations as a part of the trade. The sum of $3,000 was agreed by respondent to be paid to Holt when certain abstracts and certificates of title were brought down to date, and it was further provided:

> "$750.00 in cash is to be paid to H. R. Holt on this agreement on or before July 3, 1911, which amount is to be credited and taken out of the $3,000.00 hereinbefore mentioned in this agreement."

On July 1st Smalley paid to appellants the sum of $750, and they executed to him a document in the following form:

> "Received from M. E. Smalley the sum of seven hundred and fifty dollars, which is the first cash payment mentioned in contract made and dated June 29, 1911, by and between H. R. Holt and M. E. Smalley.
>
> "It is hereby distinctly understood and agreed by H. R. Holt and Florence M. Wendell that in case said Holt is unable to comply with the terms of said contract within a reasonable time and within thirty days from this date, the said $750.00, without interest is to be returned to M. E. Smalley."

Florence M. Wendell was a party to the receipt and is a party to the action only because the property agreed in the first contract to be conveyed to Holt was actually to be conveyed to her to hold for him.

The action was commenced to recover the $750 paid to appellants, upon the ground that Holt was unable, up to the time of filing the complaint, which was on September 11, 1911, to comply with the terms of the original agreement by him to be performed. The complaint alleges that Smalley kept and that Holt did not keep all the covenants of the contract of June 29th by them respectively to be performed, thus apparently holding to the idea that the action was based upon that contract. The trial court found for respondent on these issues, and appellants insist that the finding is not supported by the evidence. Respondent rejoins that the allegation of his performance and of Holt's nonperformance under the contract of June 29th was surplusage, and therefore immaterial; that the action is really based on the paper executed July 1st; and that the complaint states and the evidence proved a cause of action under it. Upon which of these agreements was the cause of action founded?

[1] It seems plain that the paper, receipt, or agreement of July 1st displaced the provisions of the contract of June 29th as to the payment of the $750. Under the earlier arrangement, it was to have been paid as a part of a total sum of $3,000, which was a part of the consideration for the trade; under the later, it was made as a payment which might or might not be retained by Holt, depending upon whether he could comply with the main contract within thirty days. The two arrangements concerning the $750 were inconsistent, and the first was abrogated by the second. The cause of action was therefore on the latter, and the allegations concerning performance under the former were immaterial.

[2] The appellant claims that the agreement of July 1st, in the respect that it provided for a possible return of the $750, was void for want of consideration; but the defense is not pleaded, and it is not open to appellant without a pleading to support it.

[3] The trial court found that appellants, "for thirty days next after" July 1, 1911, "failed to comply with the terms" of the two agreements "and were at all times wholly unable to do so." It was further found that this inability to perform was not owing to any conduct of the respondent. In objecting to these findings, and to the others above mentioned, appellants continually insist that Smalley did not prove his case by a preponderance of the evidence; but that point is utterly devoid of interest here. The question on appeal is, not where the preponderance of the evidence on a given issue lies, but whether there is any evidence whatever in support of the finding upon it. This point has been so often decided that it is as well settled as any question in the jurisprudence of California. It is mentioned now only because of the insistent and lengthy argument of appellant upon it. We will assume that appellant has presented the only question which could be presented on appeal in this regard; that is, does the evidence support the findings from which quotation has just been made? We have examined the record, and answer the question in the affirmative. In fact, they find partial support in the admissions in the answer.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

(33 Cal. App. 592)

Ex parte WENMAN. (Cr. 683.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 9, 1917.)

1. DIVORCE ⟹332—FOREIGN DIVORCE—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN.

The doctrine of comity between the states of the Union requires that a judgment granting a divorce and awarding the custody of a minor child rendered by a court of one state shall be conclusive in the jurisdiction of the other states, in the absence of a showing of changed conditions affecting the welfare of the child.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 843.]

2. HABEAS CORPUS ⟹99(4) — CUSTODY OF CHILD.

In view of kidnapping statutes (Pen. Code, §§ 207, 208), where a minor child whose custody was given to his father by a divorce decree in Connecticut was abducted by his divorced mother and taken to California, the California court would, on habeas corpus, award the child's custody to the father in the absence of showing that the father had become an unfit or unsafe person to have such custody.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Habeas Corpus, Cent. Dig. § 84.]

Habeas corpus by Byrd Wilson Wenman, St., against Louise Ladew Nave to recover the custody of Byrd Wilson Wenman, Jr., a minor child. Custody granted to petitioner.

Garret W. McEnerney, Gavin McNab, R. P. Henshall and Andrew F. Burke, all of San Francisco, for petitioner. Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo J. Roche, Hiram W. Johnson, Jr., and Archibald M. Johnson, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a proceeding in habeas corpus brought to recover the custody of a minor child alleged to have been abducted and at present unlawfully detained. The writ having issued a return was made thereto by the person detaining the child, and the matter is before us for decision upon demurrer to the return.

In May, 1914, in the state of Connecticut, the parents of the child, a boy now seven years of age, were divorced, and his custody was by the decree awarded to the petitioner, the father, with the right to the mother to visit her son twice a week at his father's home in the state of Connecticut and to be given his custody during certain vacation periods each year. That decree was subsequently, in the month of June, 1915, modified, by consent of the parties, and as modified provided that the mother should be permitted to visit the boy at his father's said home twice a month, remaining all day, and that he should be permitted to be with his mother at the home of her parents on Easter Sunday and Christmas day of each year, to remain overnight, and to be returned to his father on the following day as soon as reasonably convenient.

In the closing days of December, 1916, the boy's mother (who is the respondent in this proceeding) "abducted and kidnapped" him, says the petition, and caused him to be taken out of the state of New York, where he was at the time visiting her, and brought to the state of California. The child's parents at the time of the entry of the decree were residents of Connecticut. The mother has since remarried and become a resident of the state of New York, and at the time of the alleged abduction the petitioner with the child was temporarily residing in that state.

Kidnapping is denounced as an offense against the law both in Connecticut and New York, and when committed in another state, and the person kidnapped is brought into the state of California, is a continuing offense and punishable in this state. Pen. Code, §§ 207, 208.

[1] The doctrine of comity between the states of the Union requires that a judgment granting a divorce and awarding the custody of a minor child rendered by a court of one state shall be conclusive in the jurisdiction of the other states, in the absence of a showing of changed conditions affecting the welfare of the child. State ex rel. Nipp v. Dist. Court, etc., 46 Mont. 425, 128 Pac. 590, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 256.

In the case of Hartley v. Blease et al., 99 S. C. 92, 82 S. E. 991, it was held in a proceeding similar to this that, where in a suit for divorce the husband was granted the custody of a minor child of the marriage, who was subsequently kidnapped by the wife, the decree itself was evidence of the husband's moral fitness to care for the child, and that, unless his conduct since the rendition of the decree had been such as to render him an unfit guardian, he should, in a proceeding for the recovery of the child, be awarded his custody.

Some of the more important matters with which the respondent charges the petitioner in her return are alleged to have existed prior to and at the time of the entry of the decree of divorce. As to them, we think it evident that the decree is conclusive, and that this court cannot now re-examine them for the purpose of depriving the petitioner of a custody therein awarded to him. Other matters set forth in the return consist of alleged discourtesies to the respondent on the part of the petitioner when visiting the child; of failure to permit the child to remain overnight with her twice a year as in the modified decree provided; of failure to notify her on one occasion when the child was ill, as was required by the terms of the decree. By these and other allegations respondent in effect complains that she has been denied in a large measure the enjoyment of the society of her child contemplated by the decree.

[2] Without stopping to consider that these matters are alleged to have occurred, not in California, but at the domicile of the petitioner and minor in the state of Connecticut, or near there in the state of New York, where evidence concerning them is accessible, and where a proper enforcement of the decree may be readily had, they have little or no bearing on the question of the fitness of the petitioner to have the care and custody of his minor child, even if we concede for the sake of argument that under the circumstances existing in this case the courts of California would be warranted in assuming jurisdiction, and determining under the facts as they exist to-day who is entitled to such custody. It is shown by the record before us that the minor was brought to this state by the respondent in direct violation of a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction of a sister state awarding its custody to the petitioner. The child's presence here is founded on a tort or offense against the law, and it is not made to appear that since the entry of the decree under which the petitioner is now claiming he has become an unfit or unsafe person to have the care and control of his minor child, and it is admitted, at least tacitly, by the respondent in her return that she could not establish her right in the courts of Connecticut or New York, to the relief which, 3,000 miles away from the place where the difficulties between the parties arose, she hopes to get in the courts of this state. Under these circumstances we think there is no question but that a due respect for the orderly administration of the law and according to the doctrine of comity among sister states requires this court to recognize the right of the petitioner under the decree of the court of the state of Connecticut hereinbefore referred to to the custody of Byrd Wilson Wenman, Jr., the said minor.

It is therefore ordered, that said respondent, Louise Ladew Nave, forthwith deliver to the petitioner, Byrd Wilson Wenman, Sr., the said minor child of petitioner and respondent.

(33 Cal. App. 630)

INGRAM v. SLAYTON. (Civ. 1861.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 10, 1917.)

1. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐29(4)—Evidence.

In action for forcible entry, evidence held not to show such forcible entry as defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 1159.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Forcible Entry and Detainer, Cent. Dig. § 140.]

2. Appeal and Error ⇐903—Record.

Where the statement of testimony heard is settled as correct by the trial judge, the appellate court must assume that it shows all the material evidence received in support of the issue made by the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3671.]

3. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐29(3)—Evidence.

In action for forcible entry, evidence by defendant of his title and right is not material, for one who enters where actual possession has been acquired by another may do so only in a peaceable way or under authority of a judgment of court or permission given him by the occupant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Stuart H. Ingram against John T. Slayton. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Childers & Bruce, of El Centro, for appellant. James E. Shelton and Parker & Collier, all of Los Angeles, and Herbert L. Iasigi, of El Centro, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover possession of a certain tract of real property in the county of Imperial, alleging that defendant had forcibly intruded upon his peaceable possession and "by force and by menacing the employés of plaintiff with a show of superior force entered thereon and in a forcible manner ejected plaintiff from the said land. * * * " The court entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, from which this appeal is taken.

[1, 2] The main contention put forth by the appellant is that there is no evidence to sustain the finding of the court as to a forcible entry having been made, as such entry is defined in section 1159 of the Code of Civil Procedure. With this contention we must agree. The statement of the testimony heard is exceedingly meager; but in view of the fact that it was settled as correct by the trial judge, we must assume that it shows all the material evidence received in support of the issue made by the complaint. Richardson v. City of Eureka, 96 Cal. 443, 31 Pac. 458. Counsel for respondent, outside of the record, suggest that the statement was prepared wholly by the appellant, and that it was served and offered for settlement just prior to an earthquake having occurred in Imperial county, and that presumably for that cause the counsel resident in that county, being other than the counsel who appear here, neglected to have the record show a complete statement of the testimony. Respondent is not entitled to have any consideration given to that suggestion. The bill of exceptions presents in abstract form the testimony of the plaintiff and the defendant. The plaintiff testified that he had been in possession of the tract of land, which was raw and brush-covered before he started to work upon it, since the 30th of September, 1912; that he had had several teams at work on the land, off and on, up to the 22d of December, 1913, and that some of the land had been leveled and cleared; that he had an employé on the land on the 22d of December, 1913, but that he (the plaintiff) was at that time in the state of Nevada; that when he returned—the time is not stated—he found the defendant on the land with between seven and eleven teams which were at work. He testified that he had not fenced the land, nor watered it, nor cropped it; that when he first went upon the ground he put a stake at each corner, with a notice stating that he was making a claim to the property, and that when he put up these notices he found other notices, partially obliterated, already posted. Defendant testified that he had known the land since October, 1906, and on the 24th of December, 1909, he did some scraper work upon it and put up notices at each corner stating that he was the successful contestant, and had acquired a 30 days' prior right of entry to the land; that he plowed a furrow around the entire tract at that time in order to establish possession and show the public what his claim was; that he had never abandoned the land; that the first time he knew that plaintiff was on the land was in the latter part of October, 1912, and that in November, 1912, he had informed the plaintiff that he (the defendant) had a prior right of entry, won by a successful contest, and that he would assert his right when the land was restored to entry, to which the plaintiff had replied that he would follow the advice of his attorneys, and that he knew that the land was claimed by the defendant, but thought that he had abandoned it. Defendant further testified that in

December he went upon the land and found a man by the name of Jones there. He then testified as follows:

> "He (Jones) was not doing anything when I went there, but he came out where I was working and asked if I had the consent of Ingram to work there. He then asked me to tell him to get off the land and not to work there. He said Mr. Ingram owed him and he wanted to get his pay and get away. He said that he would tell Mr. Ingram that I just gave him hell. I told him not to tell Mr. Ingram anything of the kind, as I did not want him to carry any such news as that from me. I did not make any threats or exercise any force at all against Mr. Jones whatever. I asked Mr. Jones to eat dinner with us, and he did not show any evidence of being afraid of me.

Defendant offered to prove by an exemplified copy of a record of the United States Land Office that the Secretary of the Interior, upon a contest between the defendant and a third party, had rendered a decision stating that the land would be restored to entry, and that the defendant would be given 30 days after notice of such restoration, during which time he would have a preference right to make entry on the land. Objection was made to this testimony and the offer was refused. It was not shown that the land had ever been restored to entry. It thus appears that there was no proof of any violence, offer of violence, or show of superior force attendant upon the entry of the defendant upon the land. The testimony shows that the plaintiff's possession was more than a scrambling possession; in fact, that he at the time of the defendant's entry had actual peaceable possession of the ground. However, the plaintiff could not succeed in the action unless he established the facts alleged. The proof was wanting to show any circumstances such as those set forth in the complaint and relied upon by the plaintiff. As to the proof required in such a case, we cite, in addition to the section of the Code noted, section 1172, Code of Civil Procedure; Castro v. Tewksbury, 69 Cal. 562, 11 Pac. 339.

[3] The additional point is made that the defendant was entitled to have received the documentary evidence offered showing the action of the land department taken with respect to the contest formerly decided. He says that he was entitled to make this proof to show the nature of his possession and to show a color of right. From the evidence as stated, it is clear that at the time of the entry by the defendant the plaintiff was in actual possession of the land, and no showing of constructive possession could avail the defendant as against the plaintiff on that issue. It is generally held under such facts that the question of the entryman's title is not material to a recovery by his adversary, for one who enters where actual possession has been acquired by another may do so only in a peaceable way or under authority of a judgment of court, excepting, of course, where he enters under some form of permission given him by the occupant. Carteri v. Roberts, 140 Cal. 164, 73 Pac. 818. We think the last contention of appellant is without merit.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

(33 Cal. App. 637)

PEOPLE v. GRANDI. (Cr. 376.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 10, 1917.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⚷1169(3)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In a trial for assault with a deadly weapon, where the defendant admits that he discharged a pistol at the time of the assault, the admission of a pistol not sufficiently identified as that with which defendant did the shooting is harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3139.]

2. ASSAULT AND BATTERY ⚷92 — DEADLY WEAPON—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a trial for assault with a deadly weapon, the fact that the pistol with which the assault was committed was loaded is sufficiently proved where it is admitted that the weapon was discharged, and the prosecuting witness testified that he heard the hissing of the bullets.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Assault and Battery, Cent. Dig. §§ 137-139.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⚷396(2)—COMPETENCY OF EVIDENCE—MATTER GONE INTO BY OPPOSITE PARTY.

Where the state's attorney on cross-examination calls for a written statement which is pure hearsay, but does not introduce it, it is not admissible on behalf of defendant under Code Civ. Proc. § 1854, providing that, when part of an act or writing is given in evidence by one party, the whole truth on the subject may be inquired into by the other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 862.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⚷829(3)—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL OF REQUESTS COVERED.

The refusal of an instruction that to convict jury must find that defendant was armed with a pistol loaded in such a manner that its discharge would produce death or a great bodily injury on person assaulted is not error where it is clearly covered by court's charge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2011.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW ⚷829(8), 1173(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

The refusal of an instruction that accused was presumed to have a good character for the traits involved in the charge on which he is tried is harmless, where no evidence is introduced as to his character; as it is covered by instruction as to presumption of innocence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2011, 3164, 3168.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Flori Grandi was convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon, and appeals. Affirmed.

H. B. Wolfe, of Quincy, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was charged by information filed in the superior court of Plumas county with the crime of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, and was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon. He appeals from the judgment.

The assault occurred on the 20th day of July, 1916, between the hours of 4 and 5 o'clock, p. m., in Clover valley, a short distance from the town of Beckwith, in Plumas county. The party assaulted was one William Tognola. Both men are Italians, and were employed at a dairy owned by one Samuel Bonta. The prosecuting witness, Tognola, on the day before that upon which the assault was committed, mounted a horse for the purpose, as he stated, of going out into a field belonging to Bonta and driving therefrom some calves. Upon his return to the cabin in which he and the defendant had been living, and which was situated near the dairy, the accused, with a large stick or club in his hand, approached Tognola, and, addressing him, said, "You must be killed," or "You will be killed." Becoming frightened at this demonstration upon the part of the defendant, Tognola dismounted from the horse and ran some distance away from the premises. On the following day, at the hour above named, while Tognola was engaged in milking, the defendant again approached him, this time with a pistol, and as Tognola, who saw him approaching with the weapon, started to run from him, fired two shots at the latter, neither of which struck Tognola. This statement of the circumstances under which the assault was committed is taken from Tognola's testimony, which was corroborated by the testimony of one Paul Patonti, another employé of Bonta, and the only other person present at the time of the assault.

The motive for the assault is not clearly shown by the testimony, although Tognola testified that the defendant appeared to have become very angry with him on the day before because he (Tognola) had used the horse, which was the property of Bonta for the above-stated purpose.

Tognola testified that he owned the weapon used by the defendant in making the assault, that he (Tognola) had left the pistol on a table in the cabin, and that the defendant had evidently gone into the cabin and taken it with him, perhaps for the special purpose of assaulting Tognola. The latter further testified that he heard the hissing noise of the bullets as they passed near him, and also said that, after the shooting, he slipped into the cabin through a window, procured some blankets, and went out into the field, where he slept that night. The defendant, during the night left the premises, and was later placed under arrest.

The defendant admitted on the witness stand that he fired two shots from a "gun" at the time of the alleged assault, but positively declared that he did not shoot at Tognola.

The complaint on this appeal is of alleged errors in the action of the court disallowing certain testimony and declining to allow and read to the jury certain instructions requested by the defendant.

[1] Of these asserted errors the first to which attention is directed is in the ruling whereby the pistol with which the prosecution claimed the defendant committed the assault was admitted in evidence. The ground of the objection was that the weapon was not sufficiently identified as the weapon used by the accused on the occasion of the shooting. But, assuming that the weapon was not sufficiently identified as the one with which the defendant did the shooting, the action of the court in admitting it in evidence was clearly without prejudice, since the defendant himself admitted that he had a pistol at the time of the assault and that he discharged it. In view of that admission and of the fact that Tognola testified that the defendant fired the weapon at him, it obviously became a matter of little or no consequence whether the weapon actually used on the occasion of the shooting was identified at the trial and introduced in evidence or not. The only purpose which could be subserved by proof and the identification of the weapon would be to corroborate the testimony of the witnesses that one was in the possession of the defendant at the time of the alleged assault and that he used it as described by the witnesses for the people; and the admission by the accused that he did have such a weapon at the time referred to and discharged it supplied every evidentiary purpose which the production of the weapon itself could possibly have accomplished. It follows that even the introduction in evidence of a pistol which was not used by the defendant on the occasion of the assault could not in any degree have affected the verdict.

[2] It is next contended that there was entirely a failure to prove that the pistol by means of which the alleged assault was made was a deadly weapon. Confessedly it is essential for the people, in a case where, as here, the claim is that the assault charged was committed by shooting a pistol or gun at the prosecuting witness, to show that the pistol or gun used as the means for committing the assault was loaded with powder and ball, or, in other words, that it was, when so used, a weapon which, when employed as a means of assaulting another, is "likely to produce great bodily injury," and we think that there is evidence produced by the prosecution which tended sufficiently to prove that fact. The prosecuting witness and the witness Patonti, as well as the defendant himself, testified that the weapon was fired or discharged and Tognola declared that he heard the hissing sound which always accompanies a bullet as it whizzes through and against the air currents. These constituted circumstances from which the inference would naturally follow that the pistol was loaded.

[3] There was no error in the action of the court in refusing to allow in evidence, on the motion of the defendant, a certain written statement to which a number of the residents of the vicinity of Beckwith had subscribed, and in which it was declared that the reputation of Paul Patonti, a witness for the people, for truth, honesty, and integrity in the community in which he lived was bad. The offer of the statement was made during the examination of the witness Rudolph Righetti, who testified for the defense. It appears that, after the defendant was charged with assaulting Tognola and after it was known that Patonti would give testimony at the trial against the defendant Righetti, an intimate friend of the latter, prepared the statement referred to and went about for the purpose of securing signatures thereto and succeeded in inducing a number of persons to sign it. These facts were brought to light through the cross-examination by the district attorney of Righetti, and the statement was called for by that officer and produced by the witness, but it was not read to the jury by the district attorney. The object of the cross-examination, so far as it was based upon said written statement, was merely to show the interest of Righetti in the case and in behalf of his friend, the defendant. The statement, if received in evidence, would have shown, as before stated, that certain persons regarded the reputation of Patonti for truth, honesty, and integrity as bad, and, under the circumstances under which it was offered as proof, it would, if admitted, have been hearsay, pure and simple. The statement was undoubtedly offered upon the theory that it was allowable under the terms of section 1854 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but, as stated, while the district attorney called for and was given and examined the statement, he read no part of it to the jury, but only referred to it to show that Righetti had taken unusual interest in the case in favor of the accused.

[4] The next assignment involves the action of the court in disallowing the following instruction requested by the defendant:

> "You are instructed that you must find that defendant was armed with a loaded pistol, and by that is meant a pistol loaded in such manner that the discharge of it would produce death or great bodily injury upon William Tognola, and, unless you find the pistol was so loaded, you must find defendant not guilty."

The court defined a deadly weapon within the meaning of section 245 of the Penal Code, and then covered and clearly explained to the jury the proposition contained in the above-quoted instruction as follows:

> "You are instructed that in this case defendant, Flori Grandi, is charged with the crime of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, and you are instructed that, before you can find defendant guilty of the crime as charged, you must be satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt that defendant, Grandi, was armed with a pistol so loaded that it would inflict serious bodily injury or death upon William Tognola under the circumstances as shown by the evidence in this case."

Thus it will be observed the proposition enunciated in the rejected instruction was clearly covered by the court's charge.

[5] It is further objected that error was committed in the rejection of the following instruction, proposed by the defendant:

> "You are instructed that a person accused of a criminal offense is presumed to have a good character for the traits involved in this action for peace and quiet until the contrary is established by competent evidence, and you are further instructed that it is the duty of each and every of you as jurors to give the defendant the benefit of this presumption."

Generally, so far as the writer has observed, such an instruction is never proposed or given where the character of the accused for the traits involved in the charge upon which he is tried is not directly made an issue by the introduction of proof addressed thereto. It cannot be doubted, however, that the instruction correctly states the rule, and it would have been just as well to have given it, since the defendant requested that it be submitted to the jury; but it cannot be assumed, from the fact that the instruction or one bearing upon the subject to which it related was not given, that the jury considered the case upon the hypothesis that the defendant was not a man of good character for peace and quiet. It is, on the contrary, to be assumed, in view of the fact that the defendant's character was not directly assailed by the people, and that it was not made a direct issue by himself—that is, that there was no evidence whatever presented as to his character—that the jury considered the case as it was directly and actually made by the proofs and upon the case as so made arrived at their verdict. But, at all events, under the circumstances, it seems to us that what is said in the rejected instruction was substantially and sufficiently declared in the instruction which was given that the defendant was to be presumed to be innocent until his guilt was confirmed by the evidence beyond all reasonable doubt.

We have now considered all the points urged for a reversal, and, having fully examined and considered the whole record, have found no legal reason for setting at naught the result arrived at below.

The judgment is accordingly affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

(33 Cal. App. 572)

HAY v. McDONALD. (Civ. 1851.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 3, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court, July 3, 1917.)

1. EVIDENCE 🔑459(2)—CONTRACTS OF CASHIER—PARTIES—PAROL EVIDENCE.

Although where a written contract in the form of an I. O. U. was signed by the defendant, followed by the descriptive word "cashier," parol evidence was admissible to identify the party against whom the obligation is legally chargeable, it is not competent for the purpose of exonerating the signer from personal liability.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 1722, 1908, 2110.]

2. BROKERS 🔑7—PAST CONSIDERATION.

Where plaintiff was attempting to sell real property, but failed to make satisfactory terms with the owner as to commission to be paid him, and made a contract with a bank which had authority to sell the land that the sale be made through the bank, and that plaintiff be protected as to commission in an amount stated, a subsequent agreement by the plaintiff to accept the sum of $400 as his commission was not based on sufficient consideration to make it binding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 5–8.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by George Hay against R. McDonald. From a judgment for defendant and from an order denying motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

C. L. Claflin, E. W. Owen, and J. W. Wiley, all of Bakersfield, for appellant. Geo. E. Whitaker and E. L. Foster, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant and from an order of the trial court denying a motion for new trial. The action was brought to enforce payment of $1,000 on an alleged written promise of the defendant. The writing evidencing the alleged agreement was in the following form:

> "Bakersfield, Mar. 29–07.
>
> "I. O. U.
>
> "One thousand dollars on completion of sale of lots 3 & 4 in block 273 in city of Bakersfield.
>
> "R. McDonald, Cashier."

It appears that plaintiff as an agent was attempting to effect a sale of certain real property which was owned by one Weill. Plaintiff had failed to make satisfactory terms with Weill as to the commission to be paid to him for his services, and, learning that the Kern Valley Bank had authority in some contingency to sell the lots of land for the price of $15,000, proposed to the bank through McDonald, the cashier, that the sale be made through the bank for $16,000, and that plaintiff be protected as to a commission in the amount of $1,000. As evidence of this agreement for the payment of commission, the "I. O. U." above set out was made by McDonald. It will be noted that the Kern Valley Bank was not a party to this action. The court made findings, which are supported by the evidence, to the effect that plaintiff at all times knew that in the making of the contract by McDonald the latter was acting for the Kern Valley Bank of which he was managing agent and cashier. Further findings were made, however, to the effect that when Weill, the owner of the property, learned that the sale was to be made to a buyer represented by Hay, he threatened to refuse to complete the transaction, but offered to allow the bank to pay to the plaintiff the sum of $400, which it is found the plaintiff agreed to accept, and that thereupon the property was sold and the purchase price paid; that thereafter the Kern Valley Bank tendered to plaintiff the sum of $400, which the plaintiff refused to accept. The conclusions of law are brief and are as follows:

> "That the I. O. U. described was the contract of the Kern Valley Bank, and not that of the defendant; that the plaintiff knew and accepted said I. O. U. as the act and deed of the Kern Valley Bank; that the defendant is entitled to judgment."

The chief point raised here by the appellant is that the court erred in allowing oral evidence to be introduced to show that the contract was the contract of the Kern Valley Bank, and not of the defendant. This finding of the court, which followed the proof so made, is claimed to be erroneous:

> "That the plaintiff did not, at any of the times mentioned, treat or negotiate with the defendant in his individual capacity; that the said plaintiff had all of said negotiations and transactions with the said Kern Valley Bank, and it was so understood and agreed by him."

As we gather from the conclusions expressed by the trial judge, the judgment as entered depended for support upon that particular finding of fact which appellant attacks, and which is quoted above. This case was here on a former appeal. See Hay v. McDonald, 21 Cal. App. 204, 131 Pac. 74. The trial judge there had granted a motion for nonsuit, after the plaintiff had introduced his evidence. The motion was granted upon the same ground as that which is made the basis for the judgment here, to wit, that the contract was not the contract of McDonald, but of the Kern Valley Bank. This court there said:

> "The written contract or memorandum in the form of an 'I. O. U.' cannot be said to evidence a contract of the Kern Valley Bank when it is examined alone and for what it shows upon its face. Where, in the body of an instrument, no words appear which serve to define the agreement as being made on behalf of a party other than he whose signature is attached thereto, it will not be deemed to be the contract of another party, even though there may appear after the appended signature of the individual, qualifying or descriptive words, such as 'President,' 'Secretary,' or, as here, 'Cashier.' In such cases parol proof is admissible to identify the party against whom the obligation is legally chargeable. Hobson v. Hassett, 76 Cal. 203 [18 Pac. 320, 9 Am. St. Rep. 193]; Southern Pac. Co. v. Von Schmidt Dredge Co., 118 Cal. 368 [50 Pac. 650]; McCormick v. Stockton, etc., R. R. Co., 130 Cal. 100 [62 Pac. 267]."

[1] It is a rule which has been many times illustrated by the decisions that where an agent contracts in terms not fully expressing his representative capacity, parol evidence is admissible to show that it was understood by the parties that another person was intended to be bound, or that there was a principal wholly undisclosed or unknown to the opposite contracting party. In such cases such principal may be held. This rule, however, does not operate to allow an agent who contracts apparently in his own name to relieve himself of liability, but is a rule which extends to the other party the option of proving a charge under the contract against the real principal also. We find no difference in the decisions or statements of the text-writers on this subject. "Where an agent has entered into a contract which in terms charges himself, parol evidence is not admissible to discharge him by showing that he intended to charge the principal, but where the contract bears upon its face evidence that the person signing was in fact an agent, and where the contract is so framed as to render it uncertain whether the agent or the principal was intended to be bound, parol evidence may be received to show that it was the intention to bind the principal and not the agent. But although parol evidence may not in other cases be admissible to release the agent, it may be made use of to charge the principal. * * * And this doctrine applies as well to those contracts which are required to be in writing as to those to whose validity a writing is not essential." 1 Mechem on Agency (2d Ed.) § 1176. In Hobson v. Hassett, supra, the contracting party signed, "A. Hassett, President." The court there, in discussing the subject pertinent to this case, said:

> "Prof. Parsons says: 'If an agent make a note in his own name, and add to his signature the word "Agent," but there is nothing on the note to indicate who is principal, the agent will be personally liable, just as if the word "Agent" were not added.'"

In S. P. Co. v. Von Schmidt Dredge Co., supra, the court declared:

> "Thus the rule is well settled that where a reading of a simple contract, however inartificially it may be drawn, discloses that it is executed for or on behalf of a principal, or discloses an intent to bind such principal, or even leaves the matter one of doubt, parol evidence may be employed to determine whose contract it is, and this even in cases where the instrument is sufficiently clear in its terms to bind the agent. This is not contradicting by parol the terms of a written instrument, for, as has been said: 'It is no contradiction of a contract, which is silent as to the fact, to prove that a party is acting therein, not on his own behalf, but for another. "This does not deny," said Parke, B., "that it is binding on those whom, on the face of it, it purports to bind; but shows that it also binds another, by reason that the act of the agent, in signing the agreement in pursuance of his authority, is in law the act of the principal."' Bishop on Contracts, § 1084."

[2] As will be noted from the authorities to which we have called attention, while parol evidence in such a case as this is competent, it is not competent for the purpose of exonerating the signer from personal liability, but is competent for the purpose of extending the liability to other parties for whom the signer may have intended to contract and for whom he had authority to contract. Such is the rule which we deduce from a reading of the cases. We have noted that the court made a finding of an alleged compromise agreement by which it was asserted that the plaintiff agreed to accept the sum of $400 in lieu of the amount set out in the written instrument sued upon. The sufficiency of these facts found to establish a modification of the original agreement or a substituted or new agreement is not argued in the briefs, and a consideration of those questions is not necessary to the decision in the case. However, it may be proper to suggest that under the facts found and alleged by the defendant, is would seem that such subsequent agreement was lacking in the essential of a sufficient consideration to make it of binding effect. The judgment of the court was plainly based upon the finding that defendant assumed no liability by the contract, but that the liability was rather that of the Kern Valley Bank. In this conclusion we think the court erred for the reasons stated.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

(33 Cal. App. 581)

MYERS v. HERSKOWITZ. (Civ. 1855.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 7, 1917.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚿112(2) — RECEIPT OF RENT AS WAIVER OF FORFEITURE.

Where a particular act or omission entitles the landlord to declare a forfeiture of the lease, generally receipt of rent accruing subsequent to the act which works the forfeiture waives the forfeiture.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 345.]

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚿94(5)—RECEIPT OF RENT AS WAIVER OF FORFEITURE — "WAIVER."

While unconditional acceptance by landlord of rent accruing after a tenant should have surrendered possession because of breach of lease condition will constitute strong evidence of the landlord's waiver of his notice to quit under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 3, nevertheless the question of waiver is one of intent, waiver being the intentional relinquishment of a known right after knowledge of the facts, and to establish such waiver the evidence must indicate a meeting of the minds and the intentional forbearance to enforce a right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 320.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Waiver.]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT 🔑112(2) — RECEIPT OF RENT AS "WAIVER" OF FORFEITURE —CONTINUING BREACH.

Tenant of a section in a storehouse had been notified of his violation of a lease requirement that aisle space in the storehouse reserved for common use of tenants should be kept free of goods, and on June 1st his check for rent was returned by the landlord. He then deposited it to the landlord's credit in a bank. On June 4th the landlord served on him notice requiring compliance with such provision or surrender of possession, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 3, and on June 15th, on tenant's noncompliance, began action in unlawful detainer. In July the landlord drew from the bank the money deposited by the tenant, and the same procedure as to monthly rent was followed to the time of trial, which was the following March. Held, the conduct of plaintiff in accepting the money, not in advance, but after the completion of the several months, was not a waiver of his right to prosecute the action, for the covenant was of a continuing nature, defendant was continuing to violate it, and plaintiff was continuing to object to such violation, and, the tenant having succeeded in retaining possession during the pendency of the action, plaintiff might accept compensation therefor after the benefit had been received, without waiver of his right of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Landlord and Tenant, Cent. Dig. § 345.]

4. EVIDENCE 🔑474(18)—OPINION AS TO VALUE—QUALIFICATION OF WITNESS.

A witness stating he had been familiar with rental value of the premises in question for eight or nine years, and especially for the last three or four years, sufficiently qualified himself to testify thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2217.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by W. L. Myers against David Herskowitz. From judgment for plaintiff and order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John C. Stick, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Edward M. Selby, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Appeal by the defendant from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The plaintiff was the owner of a lease covering a storeroom building in the city of Los Angeles. One of the storerooms of that building was known as No. 554 South Main street. The storeroom was sublet in separate sections to several tenants. The defendant was the owner of one of these subleases for a described portion of said storeroom for a period ending December 31, 1914. There was extending through the storeroom an aisle space reserved for common use of the tenants. Defendant's lease provided that:

"That certain space so reserved shall be used for the common purpose of ingress and egress of any and all persons doing business in said room and their patrons, and to be used exclusively for said purpose; it being especially and expressly agreed that no goods, wares, or merchandise shall be placed, kept, or permitted in said space so set aside for the common use aforesaid, but that the same shall at all times be kept free and clear for the uses hereinbefore specified."

In September, 1913, the plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement whereby defendant's lease (subject to the conditions set out therein, with exceptions not important here) was extended for a further period of two years. It was agreed that, if any default be made in any of the covenants or conditions of the lease, the defendant would by such default forfeit all right, title, or interest thereunder.

This is an action in unlawful detainer. It is alleged in the complaint, which was filed on June 15, 1914, that at all times since the 4th day of September, 1913, the defendant failed, neglected, and refused to permit said space so reserved to be used exclusively for the purposes limited by the lease, and has repeatedly placed and kept goods, wares and merchandise in said space so set aside for common use, and has refused to keep said space free and clear for the uses specified in the lease. It was alleged that by reason of defendant's breach of said conditions and covenants the plaintiff was unable to rent or sublet other portions of said storeroom, whereby plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $750. On June 4, 1914, the plaintiff served upon defendant a notice in writing which referred definitely to the covenants above stated and the claimed breach thereof by the above-mentioned acts of the defendant, and required the defendant to perform said conditions and covenants or deliver possession of said premises to the plaintiff within three days after the service of said notice. It is alleged that defendant neglected to comply with this notice. The notice given was the notice required by section 1161, subd. 3, Code of Civil Procedure. The defendant by his answer herein admitted the contract as pleaded, but denied that he had refused, neglected, or failed to perform the said conditions of the lease, and denied that because of such neglect or failure the plaintiff was unable to rent or sublet the premises, and denied that the plaintiff had suffered damages by reason of any act or neglect on the part of defendant. The defendant further alleged, as a separate defense, that the plaintiff and the plaintiff's assignor had waived all right which they may have had under the lease to the space alleged in the complaint to have been occupied by the defendant.

[1, 2] The principal contention requiring attention here arises from appellant's claim that respondent waived the alleged infraction of the lease by accepting payments of rent at times when respondent knew the facts constituting such infraction. The rent was regularly paid and accepted monthly in advance until and including May, 1914. On June 1, 1914, appellant tendered the amount of rent for that month by sending to respondent a check therefor, and the check was returned to appellant. Appellant then deposited the same to the credit of respondent in a bank at Los Angeles, and respondent was notified thereof. In July respondent drew that money from the bank. The same procedure was followed by the respective parties each month thereafter down to the time of the trial, which occurred in March, 1915. Where a particular act or omission entitles the landlord to declare a forfeiture of the lease, the general rule is that the receipt of rent accruing subsequent to the act which works the forfeiture, waives the forfeiture, if the lessor at the time of receiving such rent has knowledge of the facts entitling him to such forfeiture. The rent which he accepted must be rent which became due after the breach committed by the tenant. McGlynn v. Moore, 25 Cal. 384, 394; Silva v. Campbell, 84 Cal. 420, 24 Pac. 316. But in the application of this rule there is a distinct difference between a covenant or condition which is of a continuing nature and one not of that nature. While the unconditional acceptance by the landlord of moneys as rent, which rent has accrued after the time a tenant should have surrendered possession, will constitute strong evidence of the landlord's waiver of his notice to quit, nevertheless the question of waiver is one of intent. Waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right after knowledge of the facts. To establish such waiver the evidence must indicate a meeting of minds and the intentional forbearance to enforce a right. Alden v. Mayfield, 164 Cal. 6, at page 11, 127 Pac. 45. Where the general course of dealing between parties has led one of them to believe that a strict compliance with the terms of a condition binding him will not be required, the other party may be estopped from claiming the forfeiture. What we have to determine, therefore, is whether the plaintiff manifested an intention to waive his objections to the conduct of the defendant, and whether in so doing he misled the defendant to his injury by causing defendant to believe these infractions of the covenant would be condoned.

[3] The court found that it was not true that the plaintiff or his assignor had waived their rights as to this matter. Appellant insists that the evidence is insufficient to support that finding; but we think that the evidence does support the finding. The defendant admitted that he received from the plaintiff two letters prior to the time of the notice served on June 4th. One of these stated that the defendant occupied too much space around a certain post at the side of the aisle. The second letter, dated March 17, 1914, called defendant's attention to the aisle space in question here. During the month of May, 1914, additional violations of the same covenant of the lease took place. Thereafter the plaintiff proceeded as above stated, and diligently prosecuted this action. Under these circumstances, we think that the conduct of the plaintiff in accepting the money, not in advance, but after the completion of the several months, was not a waiver of his right to prosecute the action. The covenant was of a continuing nature, the defendant was continuing to violate it, and the plaintiff was continuing to object to such violation and continuing his attempt to obtain possession of the premises. The tenant having succeeded in retaining possession of the premises during the pendency of the action, plaintiff was entitled to compensation therefor, and after the benefit had been received by the defendant the plaintiff might reasonably accept such compensation to which he was entitled without being held to have waived the right of action which he was then prosecuting. In Ramish v. Workman, 164 Pac. 26, decided by this court February 14, 1917, it was held:

> That the landlord was entitled to recover rent for a period which included the time between the entry of a judgment for possession and the date of actual ejectment of the tenant. "So long as defendants continued to occupy the premises pending the final determination of the action for unlawful detainer, the lease constituted the measure of their liability for such time as they remained in possession."

Under these circumstances we perceive no reason why plaintiff's acceptance of compensation to which he was clearly entitled should force upon him an implied waiver which he did not intend, and which evidently the defendant knew that he did not intend.

> "Neither will the receipt of rent after a landlord has actually commenced his action of ejectment for the forfeiture, or as compensation for the occupation, the landlord reserving the right to re-enter, amount to a waiver." Taylor on Landlord and Tenant (9th Ed.) § 497.

Appellant contends that the clauses of the lease involved in this controversy constitute a covenant, and not a condition, and that under the rules applicable thereto a forfeiture for a breach thereof should not be permitted. Since the agreement between these parties affirmed the right of forfeiture through breach of the "covenants or conditions of the lease," it would seem that the stipulations here in question created qualifications whereby the estate granted might be defeated and did amount to a condition. Knight v. Black, 19 Cal. App. 518, 522, 126 Pac. 512. But the distinction is not material, since the provisions of section 1161, Code of Civil Procedure, under which this action is maintained, apply equally to "conditions or covenants."

Appellant urges also that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings which determine that the defendant violated the conditions or covenants of the lease, and that by reason thereof the plaintiff was unable to rent other portions of said storeroom, whereby plaintiff was damaged in the sum specified. Without incumbering this opinion with a statement of the evidence, it is sufficient to say that we have examined the evidence referred to in the briefs of counsel and are satisfied that it supports the findings.

[4] Appellant claims error by the court in receiving the testimony of the witness Elderton, who testified to the rental value of the premises, as a basis for the award of damages. The claim is that a sufficient foundation was not laid, and that the witness did not sufficiently qualify himself, although he stated that he had been familiar with such rental value for eight or nine years, and especially the last three or four years, and that the court erred in overruling appellant's objection to the foundation question asked of the witness, which was:

> "Are you familiar with the rental value in the neighborhood of these premises at 554 South Main street?"

The ruling was correct and the defendant did not attempt to show that the witness was not qualified and did not introduce any evidence contradicting his testimony.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

(33 Cal. App. 605)

PEOPLE v. FEALY. (Cr. 366.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 9, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 5, 1917.)

1. Criminal Law 🔑1158(1)—Appeal—Indictment—Sufficiency of Evidence.

The action of the grand jury in finding an indictment cannot be reviewed on the ground that there was not sufficient competent evidence adduced before it to warrant the finding of the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3070, 3071, 3074.]

2. Criminal Law 🔑422(6)—Evidence—Acts of Coconspirators.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 6, testimony may be given, after proof of the conspiracy, as to statements and transactions of the alleged conspirators relative to the conspiracy after its formation and before the consummation of its object, whether or not the accused was present when they occurred.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 984.]

3. Witnesses 🔑337(3) — Impeachment — Character of Accused.

Where defendant in a criminal case testifies for himself, he, like any other witness, may be impeached by evidence that his general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity is bad, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2051.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1130.]

4. Criminal Law 🔑1172(2) — Review — Harmless Error — Instructions — Credibility of Accused.

Giving of an instruction that jury should fairly and impartially consider testimony of accused, and "if it produces conviction in your minds, you should act upon it; otherwise you may reject it,"—is harmless error, where the evidence of his guilt is clear and convincing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3155.]

5. Criminal Law 🔑741(6)—Instructions—Matters of Fact.

An instruction that "circumstantial evidence may consist of incriminating admissions made by one accused of crime, plans laid for the commission of the crime by the accused, such as putting himself in a position to commit it, in short, any act, declaration, or circumstance admitted in evidence tending to connect accused with the commission of the crime," is not an instruction on matters of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1727, 1728.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Richard W. Fealy was convicted of the crime of willfully burning and destroying property with the felonious intent to injure and defraud the insurer, and appeals. Affirmed.

E. S. Bell, of Napa, and Knight & Heggerty, of San Francisco, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was indicted by the grand jury of Napa county for the crime of "willfully and feloniously burning, injuring, and destroying property with the felonious intent to injure, prejudice, damage, and defraud the insurer" of said property. Thereafter he was put upon his trial thereunder, and was convicted by the jury of the crime as so charged, and he appeals from the judgment of conviction and the order denying him a new trial.

The law upon which the indictment was founded is to be found in section 548 of the Penal Code, whose language is as follows:

> "Every person who willfully burns, or in any other manner injures or destroys any property which is at the time insured against loss or damage by fire or by any other casualty, with intent to defraud or prejudice the insurer, whether the same be the property of or in possession of such person or of any other, is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison not less than one nor more than ten years."

Following what is conceived to be the more orderly course in this case, the story of the alleged crime, as it was developed by the evidence, should first briefly be narrated.

It should first be explained that the theory of the people at the trial and in the prosecution of the defendant was that the burning of the building was the climax of a conspiracy concocted by Fealy, his wife, other members of his family and one Will Dodson, and that the motive for the act was to secure the insurance which had been placed upon the building and its contents.

The crime charged was committed on the 23d day of September, 1913, at about 8 o'clock in the evening. The property alleged to have been set on fire and burned by the accused was a dwelling house, situated at the corner of Hudson avenue and Main street, in the city of St. Helena, Napa county. This property was originally owned by Mrs. Mary Center, the mother of Mrs. Laura Ida Fealy, wife of the defendant. Mrs. Laura Ida Fealy at the time of her intermarriage with the defendant, on the 12th day of June, 1910, was a widow, having previously been the wife of one Gisin, by whom she had two male children, Ernest and George, aged, respectively, at the time of the trial, about 22 and 24 years.

Mrs. Center conveyed the property in question to her daughter, Mrs. Fealy, on the 1st day of November, 1910. This conveyance was a deed of gift, the expressed consideration being love and affection. On the 18th day of July, 1913, Mrs. Fealy conveyed said property, by a deed of grant, bargain, and sale, for the nominal consideration of $10, as expressed in said deed, to said Will Dodson, a resident of the city and county of San Francisco. On the 11th day of November, 1915, said Dodson reconveyed the property to Mrs. Fealy.

The facts above recited concerning the several transfers of the property prior to the burning of the building and the retransfer of said property by Dodson to Mrs. Fealy after the burning are, as may readily be apprehended, established by record evidence, as to the verity of which no question is raised. Further facts of the case, a brief statement of which, following an orderly course, is to follow, are reasonably deducible from the evidence as presented, and show quite conclusively that the verdict is well supported, although, it is to be remarked, there is evidence in the record which, if believable, would support a conclusion the reverse of that evidenced by the verdict.

For several years prior to and at the time of the fire, on the 23d day of September, 1913, the defendant and his wife, together with the latter's mother, Mrs. Center, and two sons, Ernest and George Gisin, resided in the house in question. Upon the said property there then subsisted an incumbrance amounting to a trifle over $4,000. On various occasions the members of the family above referred to discussed their financial affairs, and it was finally suggested by the defendant that the better way to relieve themselves of their financial obligations and burdens would be to burn the property, secure the insurance, and with the money so obtained pay off their indebtedness and, with the balance of the money, set themselves up in the ranching business. This proposition was frequently discussed among the members of the family, and on several occasions when Thomas Fealy, a brother of the defendant, was present. As a part of the scheme thus proposed, the property was, as above shown, transferred by Mrs. Fealy to Dodson. The insurance on the house at the date of this transfer stood in the name of Mrs. Center, the mother of Mrs. Fealy. Upon the conveyance of the property to Dodson, the latter, accompanied by Mrs. Fealy, went to the local agent in St. Helena of the companies issuing the policies of insurance on the property, and had the insurance transferred to Dodson, Mrs. Fealy at the same time explaining that she had transferred the property to Dodson. On this same occasion, Dodson applied for and received additional insurance of $1,500 on the contents of the house, that is, the furniture and other household equipments. As the property then stood, the aggregate insurance on the house and its contents amounted to the sum of $9,000, of which the sum of $6,000 was on the house and the balance, $3,000, on the furniture and other contents. There is evidence tending to show, and which, in fact, if believable, does show, that the house, which was a frame two-story building and, with the exception of a small addition built to it in recent years, an old structure, was of no greater value than of the sum of $3,500. It is not seriously claimed that the furniture and other contents of the building were not of the value of the sum for which they were insured, viz. $3,000.

After the last-mentioned transaction was consummated, the defendant and his brother proceeded to remove the furniture and other household paraphernalia from the building to the home of the defendant's father, Thomas F. Fealy, Sr., near Rutherford, Napa county, and distant about six miles, northeasterly, from the Hudson street property, or the property that was burned. The bulk and the most valuable of the furniture, carpets, silverware, kitchen utensils, and dining room equipments were by degrees or at near intervals so taken to the senior Fealy's home and there stored. The defendant then placed in the burned house a quantity of old furniture, which was of very little value, and scattered it about the house in the several rooms in irregular order.

The building was only partly damaged, the fire having been observed and an alarm thereof given in time to enable the fire department and citizens of the town to get to the building before the fire had made much progress or gained any considerable headway. After the flames were extinguished, an examination of the interior of the house very plainly disclosed that some four or five fires, originating in different rooms and parts of the building and independently of each other, had started. One of these fires was started in the attic of the building. It was further discovered that large-sized holes had been punched into the walls of some of the rooms, the plastering and lathing having thus been broken in at a number of different places. Into these holes there had been placed or stuffed a large quantity of old newspapers, excelsior, evidently taken from an old, dilapidated lounge found in one of the rooms, and other like inflammable materials.

The house was lighted by electricity furnished by a local power company. There were two or three kerosene oil lamps in the house, but these were used only when the lighting system was temporarily out of repair or in defective condition for brief periods, as from heavy rain or wind storms. It was shown by an expert electrician who was thoroughly familiar with the electric wiring of the house, and who minutely examined the wires and their connections immediately after the fires in the house had been extinguished, that it was absolutely certain that the fires were not caused, either directly or indirectly, by the electrical currents transmitted to and through the wires or from electricity at all.

That a large quantity of the most valuable contents of the house upon which insurance had been placed was removed therefrom at different times by the defendant prior to the fire seems to have been very clearly shown. The Gisin brothers, or at least one of them, testified to seeing the defendant take the furniture from the house, load it into a wagon and haul it away, and that they subsequently saw it at the home of the elder Fealy. The boys were corroborated by other witnesses, who saw the wagon loaded with furniture leaving the Hudson street house, and by the statement of the defendant himself to one of said witnesses that, Dodson having bought the house and realty, he (defendant) was moving the furniture away to be stored until such time as he could settle upon a farm which he intended quite soon to take over. In fact, the circumstance of the removal of the furniture from the Hudson street house to the home of the defendant's father seems to have been quite conclusively shown by the production in court at the trial of the furniture, etc., itself, it having been further shown in this connection that the officers of the law had, under the authority of a search warrant, found the furniture and taken possession thereof at the home of the elder Fealy.

The Gisin brothers, who claimed to have known, from its very inception, of the scheme to destroy the Hudson street property by fire, after the removal of the contents of the building therefrom, but who declared that they were forced to secrecy concerning said scheme by threats of the defendant that, if he went to jail for the crime, they (the Gisin boys) would go with him, gave exceedingly damaging testimony against the accused. From the testimony of the one or the other or both, these facts were elicited: That, at some time prior to the fire, one of the streets upon which the building abutted was plowed and torn up, preparatory to the bituminizing thereof, and that, while the street was in that condition, the defendant remarked to one of the boys that "this would be a good time for the fire, as the fire engine could not get down near the house and put the fire out"; that, just preceding the date of the fire, the water connection of the premises with the city water mains was disconnected by the defendant, and this for the avowed purpose of circumventing any efforts which might be found requisite properly to combat and extinguish the fire; that, on the night of the fire, the large water tank maintained on the premises was dry or without even a trace of water therein; that, several days before the fire, the defendant was in one of the rooms of the house, engaged in experimenting with burning candles to determine, as he declared to one of the Gisins, how long it would require a lighted candle five inches in length to consume itself or burn to the end; that he said that he intended to use the candles for the purpose of setting fire to the house, by placing them in the holes in the wall into which paper and other readily combustible material had been placed, and in such a position with reference to said material that the candles, being lighted, would in a brief time burn down to the material and thus set it afire; that, on the evening of the fire, having, according to other witnesses, left the Hudson street house in a buggy, accompanied by his wife, at about 6 o'clock, the defendant two hours later arrived at the "Farrier place," in Conn valley, Napa county, where the Gisin boys, Mrs. Center and a brother of the latter were then temporarily domiciled in an "old shack," as one of the Gisins described the structure; that he told the boys that it was then about time that the house should "go up" and that if they would go up "on the hill" they could probably see the blaze from that point; that the defendant's wife commenced to cry and said, "Yes, he set the house on fire"; that the defendant remained at the Farrier place for a brief time and then went away.

It was shown that, near the hour of 10 o'clock that night, the defendant appeared at the Hudson street house while many of the people that had been attracted to the place by the fire were still there. He had left his wife in the buggy, and himself went into the house, where he met a man named Beck. He asked the latter: "What is the matter; is there a fire?" Beck replied: "Well, you, s——n of a b——h, can't you see that the house is on fire?" to which the defendant made no reply, but afterwards inquired whether the piano had been saved. Having been told that it was not, he immediately left the house without going into any other room than the living room, where the above conversation took place.

Some weeks after the fire, Dodson filed with the insurance companies a sworn statement of the loss, and included in said statement was a detailed list of the furniture, pictures, silverware and other contents of the house, upon which an insurance of $3,000 had been placed and which, previously to the fire, had been removed from the house as above indicated and described. The companies carrying the insurance on the house and the contents refused to pay the policies, and thereupon suits were instituted in the superior court for the recovery of the insurance money.

There is a vast amount of other testimony in the record than that from which the foregoing facts are extracted. In fact, the testimony covered a wide range of topics, all bearing in a greater or less degree upon the charge set forth in the indictment, and disclosing and establishing against the accused circumstances of the most incriminatory character, including statements by the defendant which involved, in effect, admissions of the incendiary origin of the fire and his responsibility therefor. We have, however, briefly stated herein enough of the testimony presented before the jury in support of the charge preferred against the defendant clearly to show that the verdict stands before this court amply supported.

It is not seriously urged here, though, that the conclusion arrived at by the jury as indicated by the verdict is not sustained by the proofs. It is claimed, however, that the defendant was denied a legal trial for these reasons, generally stating them: (1) That a large amount of the evidence presented before the grand jury, and upon which the indictment was founded, was irrelevant and incompetent, and that there was not sufficient competent proof adduced before that body to warrant the finding of the indictment; that therefore the trial court erred in denying the motion of the accused to set aside the indictment; (2) that the court erred in admitting certain testimony to which objection was made by the accused; (3) that the charge of the court involved an erroneous and prejudicial statement of the law in certain indicated particulars. These propositions will now be considered in the order in which they are thus stated.

1. We are not prepared to say that the testimony taken before the grand jury was not of a character to warrant the indictment of the accused. It is true that the investigation before that body was not as full and complete as was the trial, and that many facts and circumstances brought out at the trial were not developed before the grand jury; still, the fact of the removal by the defendant of the furniture, etc., from the house shortly before the fire, the fact that certain oil paintings which had been hung from the walls of the house before the fire and some furniture were found stored in the "tank house" after the fire, the fact that holes had been bored in the walls and paper and other inflammable materials stuffed in said holes, the fact that several fires, evidently starting independently of each other, broke out in the house and in different rooms, and the fact of the securing of additional insurance on the furniture, etc., which was removed from the house, were all brought to the attention of the inquisitorial body. In addition to these facts, the actions of the defendant and his wife prior to and on the day and evening of the fire were shown, thus disclosing conduct on their part which, when considered in connection with the circumstance of the burning of the house, was, to say the least of it, of a very suspicious character.

[1] But conceding, for the purpose only of the decision of the point now before us, that the testimony so heard was entirely incompetent and in any event entirely insufficient to justify the indictment, yet, under the law, an appellate court cannot review that question to any purpose. It is true that section 919 of the Penal Code provides that the grand jury can receive none but legal evidence, and the best evidence in degree, to the exclusion of hearsay or secondary evidence. It is also true that section 921 of said Code declares that "the grand jury ought to find an indictment when all the evidence before them, taken together, if unexplained or uncontradicted, would, in their judgment, warrant a conviction," which, no doubt, also means that, unless the evidence is such as is thus described, an indictment ought not to be returned, although it has been held that as far as said section was intended to go was to operate "only as a matter of advice to the jury." State v. Boyd, 2 Hill (S. C.) 288, 27 Am. Dec. 376; In re Kennedy, 144 Cal. 634, 78 Pac. 34, 67 L. R. A. 406, 103 Am. St. Rep. 117, 1 Ann. Cas. 840. It has, however, repeatedly been held in this state that there is no method provided for revising the action of a grand jury on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to support it. In re Kennedy, 144 Cal. 636, 78 Pac. 34, 67 L. R. A. 406, 103 Am. St. Rep. 117, 1 Ann. Cas. 840, and cases therein cited; Brobeck v. Superior Court, 152 Cal. 289, 92 Pac. 646. See, also, Bishop on Criminal Procedure, § 872, and United States v. Reed, 2 Blatchf. 437, Fed. Cas. No. 16,134. In the Kennedy Case it is said:

> "An indictment is the record of the action of a judicial body, and such action is final when there is no appeal therefrom and no other method provided for revising it; and there is no method for revising it on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to support it" (citing Bishop on Crim. Proc. § 872; State v. Boyd, 2 Hill [S. C.] 288, 27 Am. Dec. 376; Smith v. State, 61 Miss. 759; Hight v. United States, Morris [Iowa] 407, 43 Am. Dec. 111; U. S. v. Reed, 2 Blatchf. 437, Fed. Cas. No. 16,134; Hammond v. State, 74 Miss. 214, 21 South. 149).

In all the cases just named, the question was reviewed on appeal, and in the Kennedy Case, supra, our Supreme Court said that:

> "The statutes of the states where the decisions above referred to were made do not differ materially on the subject of grand juries * * * from those of this state."

2. Counsel for the defendant, in their briefs, make a general objection that a mass of evidence was admitted which involved irrelevant and hearsay testimony, all prejudicial to the substantial rights of the accused. The fact is, indeed, that the alleged errors of which the defendant thus seeks to avail himself here are not pointed out with that definiteness essential to make it entirely clear what particular rulings it is claimed the court erroneously made to the detriment of the accused. But we are able to gather from the briefs that it is the claim that all the testimony relating to the several transfers of the property, when those transactions were not carried on or discussed in the presence of the defendant, was hearsay and incompetent; that the testimony relative to the insurance, involving the statements and acts of Dodson, Mrs. Fealy, and the insurance agents and adjusters, made and done both before and after the fire, in the absence of the defendant, was likewise incompetent and prejudicial; that the testimony of the notary public, before whom the deed from Mrs. Fealy to Dodson was acknowledged, disclosing what was done and said by and between Dodson and Mrs. Fealy constituted hearsay statements, the defendant not having been present when that transaction took place; that certain witnesses were erroneously permitted to testify that certain furniture which was found to have been removed from the house before the fire they had seen in the house prior to the fire; that the testimony offered and received in impeachment of the defendant's general reputation in Napa county for truth, honesty, and integrity was improperly allowed and seriously damaging to the defendant. As before stated, the theory upon which the case was tried was that the defendant, his wife, his brother Tom, and Dodson had entered into a confederation or conspiracy to destroy the building by fire for the purpose of securing the insurance money. Necessarily, from the very nature of the case —that is, from the fact that, to support the charge and prove the defendant's connection with the alleged conspiracy, reliance upon circumstantial evidence was necessary—the proofs covered an extensive and varied field of inquiry. The evidence in the case of a conspiracy, where the defendant's connection therewith it is necessary to prove, is wider than perhaps in any other case. Taken by themselves, the acts constituting a conspiracy, while perhaps more or less incriminatory, are seldom of an unequivocally guilty character, and can only be properly and justly estimated when connected with all the surrounding circumstances. And there is no rule of evidence better settled than that:

> "Where the guilt of a party depends upon the intent, purpose, or design with which an act is done, or upon his guilty knowledge thereof, collateral facts in which he bore a principal part may be examined into for the purpose of establishing such guilty intent, design, purpose, or knowledge. It is sufficient that such collateral facts have some connection with each other as a part of the same plan or induced by the same motive, and it is immaterial that they show the commission of other crimes." 8 Cyc. 684.

In this case, the theory that there had been formed by and between the defendant, his wife and brother and Dodson a conspiracy to destroy the building by fire is an exceedingly plausible one. It, indeed, was supported by what appear to be very powerful circumstances; and, while it is no doubt true, as might reasonably be expected and, indeed, quite unavoidable in a case where, as in this, multitudinous as well as multifarious circumstances are required to be shown to prove the ultimate fact, some erroneous statements or testimony found their way here and there in the record, still careful examination and consideration of all the testimony has convinced us that, in the main, the testimony complained of was not only pertinent to the case but legally competent, and that the few errors which were committed were of little consequence, or bore upon matters which, in view of the strong circumstantial case legitimately made against the defendant, could have exerted no baleful influence in bringing about the result arrived at by the jury.

[2] Replying, however, somewhat specifically, though briefly, to the objections urged here against some of the testimony, it may be observed that it was obviously not only proper, but, considering the hypothesis upon which the case was presented by the people (that the burning was the consequence of a conspiracy formed for that purpose) it was necessary to show that the property in reality belonged to Mrs. Fealy, and that she had never in fact parted with title thereto before the fire, and the conveyance to Dodson, as he himself admitted, was not intended nor understood to be a bona fide transfer of the fee; that it was likewise proper and necessary to show that the insurance had been transferred to Dodson; that he obtained additional insurance on the furniture or building; that he, aided by the defendant and his wife, made out the inventory of losses to present to the insurance companies, and included therein furniture, silverware, pictures, and other household equipments which had, prior to the fire, been removed by the defendant and his wife from the house and stored and safely preserved elsewhere. It was proper to show that the insurance companies refused to pay the losses, when such payment had been applied for by Dodson and Mrs. Fealy, even though some of the conversations relating thereto were had when the defendant was not present. All these conversations and transactions were had before the consummation of the transaction for the execution of which the conspiracy or corrupt agreement was formed, viz. fraudulently to obtain money from the insurance companies holding policies on the property. They, therefore, involved statements only of certain of the alleged conspirators relative to the conspiracy after its formation and before the consummation or abandonment of its object, thus rendering testimony thereof, whether the accused was or was not present when they occurred, admissible under the rule. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 6; 8 Cyc. p. 680, and cases cited in the footnotes; People v. Irwin, 77 Cal. 494, 20 Pac. 56.

[3] The proposition that the testimony of the general reputation of the defendant in the community in which he had resided for many years, for truth, honesty, and integrity was erroneously allowed is to be met by reference to the provisions of section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section declares that a witness may be impeached, among other ways, "by evidence that his general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity is bad." The defendant took the witness stand in his own behalf, and gave testimony the purpose and the tendency of which were to exculpate him from the charge or absolve him entirely from any connection with the commission of the alleged crime. It has from a very early date and time and again been held that, when a defendant in a criminal case testifies for himself and gives testimony tending to exonerate him from the crime for which he is on trial, he for the time being removes from himself the character of a defendant and takes on that of a witness, and that the moment he so submits himself as a witness, "his character as such witness, for truth, honesty, and integrity is involved," and he becomes subject to the same rules for testing his credibility before the jury, by impeachment, as is any other witness. People v. Beck, 58 Cal. 212; People v. Bentley, 77 Cal. 7, 18 Pac. 799, 11 Am. St. Rep. 225; People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 466, 35 Pac. 80; People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 80, 86, 87, 45 Pac. 175; People v. Mayes, 113 Cal. 618, 624, 45 Pac. 860. It follows that it was proper in this case for the people, by way of rebuttal, to show that the defendant's general reputation for the traits mentioned was bad.

[4] The defendant complains of the following instruction which was given by the court:

> "The defendant has offered himself as a witness in this case, and given testimony in his own behalf, which is his constitutional right, and you should not reject his testimony solely because he stands accused of a crime. It is your duty to fairly and impartially consider his testimony under the rules of evidence given you, and, if it produces conviction in your minds, you should act upon it, otherwise you may reject it."

The criticism is aimed at the portion of the instruction in italics, and it is said that by that language the court in effect instructed the jury that it was incumbent upon the defendant to establish his innocence beyond a reasonable doubt.

It may perhaps be well enough in criminal cases to remind the jury of their duty of considering and weighing the testimony of a defendant as they are required to consider the testimony of any other witness in the case, and regardless of the fact that the defendant stands accused of the crime which is under investigation; but the other parts of the instruction it is unnecessary under any view to submit to a jury and should never be given, lest they may produce the impression that the judge himself questions the veracity of the accused. The portions of the instruction referred to embrace, as a matter of fact, mere commonplaces, or propositions with which the most ordinary understanding should be familiar. The truth is that the criticized language of the instruction does not accurately state the proposition which it purports to express, for it is the duty of the jury to act upon the defendant's testimony in any event, either by accepting it as truthful or rejecting it as unworthy of belief, or by giving it some weight or no weight. What was really intended to be expressed by the language referred to, however, was probably this: That, if the jury believed the defendant's story, he would be entitled to an acquittal, and if they did not believe it, they should, in reaching a conclusion upon the question of his guilt or innocence, reject it. If a jury of citizens could be found in this enlightened day and generation who would not know, without being told, that it would be their duty to reject testimony which they did not believe, or, if they did believe it, to give it due weight and so let it perform its proper function in the determination of the final result, it would indeed be necessary to declare that there had been a noticeable as well as lamentable decline in the efficacy of the jury system as an instrumentality for the administration of public justice. If, however, it could justly be said that the language of the instruction is misleading, or, as we believe to be true, does not accurately expound the rule so sought to be explained, and even if to some extent it may be obnoxious to the other objections made against it, yet we cannot say that the defendant suffered any prejudice by the submission of it to the jury; or, considering all the evidence, that a miscarriage of justice followed from it. Article 6, § 4½, Const. The record upon the whole shows that the accused was given a fair trial, and the evidence of his guilt appears to be clear and convincing, and we cannot persuade ourselves that the instruction, even though, as is further said of it, it singles out the defendant from among the many witnesses testifying, and so refers solely to his testimony, could have affected the verdict. People v. Loomis, 170 Cal. 351, 149 Pac. 581; People v. Weston, 169 Cal. 396, 146 Pac. 871; People v. Stephens, 29 Cal. App. 621, 157 Pac. 570, 572; People v. Burns, 27 Cal. App. 237, 149 Pac. 605.

[5] 5. The defendant requested an instruction stating that the law recognizes two classes of evidence, upon either of which, if legally sufficient in the degree of its persuasiveness in probative force, a jury may lawfully find an accused guilty of crime, to wit, direct and circumstantial evidence. In allowing and giving the instruction the court added thereto the following language:

> "Such circumstantial evidence may consist of incriminating admissions made by one accused of crime, plans laid for the commission of the crime by the accused, such as putting himself in a position to commit it; in short, any act, declaration, or circumstance admitted in evidence tending to connect the accused with the commission of the crime."

It is claimed by the defendant that, in thus modifying the instruction and as so modified reading it to the jury, the court instructed upon matters of fact. We do not so view the instruction as given. It is general in form, and makes no special reference to the case in hand, is abstractly correct in stating the nature and elements constituting circumstantial evidence, and, indeed, like the instruction first above considered, involves only the statement of propositions coming within the range of common knowledge, and which should be obvious to every person possessing common intelligence.

We have found no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

(33 Cal. App. 619)

JOHNSON v. CORDES. (Civ. 2029.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 10, 1917.)

1. Vendor and Purchaser 🔑44—Evidence—Sufficiency.

In a vendor's action for damages and costs for breach of the contract to purchase real estate, evidence held insufficient to show that the defendant entered into the written agreement set forth in plaintiff's complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 69–76.]

2. Alteration of Instruments 🔑4—Materiality—Contract for the Sale of Real Estate—Purchase Price.

A change in the purchase price to be paid for real property as stated in a contract for the sale of the property is a material alteration of its terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Alteration of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 10, 17.]

3. Alteration of Instruments 🔑5(1) — Materiality—Contract for Sale of Real Estate—Taxes.

The addition to a contract for the sale of real estate of a clause to the effect that the taxes upon the property should be prorated constituted a material alteration of its terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Alteration of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 18–20, 28, 29.]

4. Appeal and Error 🔑959(4) — Pleading 🔑261—Amendment—Discretion of Court—Review.

The matter of permitting the defendant a year and a half after he was served with a copy of the alleged contract to amend his pleading so as to set up in defense that such contract had been materially altered since he signed it rested in the sound discretion of the trial judge, which, being exercised in favor of permitting the proposed amendment, is not the subject of review upon appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3831; Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 794–800.]

5. Pleading 🔑264—Answer—Amendment.

When such amendment was made, it related back to the time of filing the original answer, and entitled the defendant to all the advantages of its defense which he would have had if the amended matter had been a part of his original pleading.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 803–805.]

6. Trial 🔑83(1)—Objections to Evidence—Sufficiency.

The defendant's objection to the admissibility of such contract made immediately after the amendment to his answer and with direct reference to it was sufficiently specific.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 193–198, 200–209.]

7. Appeal and Error 🔑970(3)—Trial 🔑59(2)—Review—Order of Proof—Discretion of Court.

The time when the proofs shall be presented upon an issue as to the validity or admissibility of a writing claimed to have been altered after its execution is a matter of procedure during the trial within the regulation of the trial court, and the order in which the evidence is presented is not ordinarily reviewable where the evidence itself is responsive to an issue, and is admitted without objection.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3851; Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 139, 140.]

8. Appeal and Error 🔑843(2)—Review—Questions Considered.

Misrepresentations made by the vendor are immaterial, and need not be discussed, where it appears that the agreement itself was not binding because of material alterations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3331.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Adolphus E. Graupner, Judge.

Action by Frank H. Johnson against W. F. Cordes. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. W. Durbrow and Frank B. Austin, both of San Francisco, for appellant. Grant H. Smith, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $2,000 damages, and costs, in an action arising out of a contract for the sale of real estate.

The facts of the case are these: The plaintiff, Frank H. Johnson, had listed a certain piece of real estate known as "Highlands," situated in Marin county, Cal., with A. J. Rich & Co., a firm of real estate brokers in San Francisco, for sale. On April 6, 1912, the defendant, W. F. Cordes, met one A. C. Blumenthal, an employé of A. J. Rich & Co., at the real estate office of another broker at San Rafael, and there discussed the subject of the sale and purchase of the property. After certain representations had been made by Blumenthal, two printed blank forms of A. J. Rich & Co.'s combined receipt and agreement for the purchase of real estate were produced by the latter, which, after being filled out to a certain—or rather uncertain—extent by him, were both signed by Blumenthal, acting for A. J. Rich & Co. One of these was then subscribed by the defendant, Cordes, and retained by Blumenthal. The other was not signed by Cordes, but was delivered to him apparently as his receipt for the sum of $250 then paid by him on account of said purchase, and also as his memorandum of the agreement thus made. Within the course of a month after the execution of these papers the defendant, Cordes, repudiated his promised purchase of the premises and refused to proceed further with the matter, asserting that he had signed the agreement upon the understanding that the property could be sold at an advance, and that he had no use for the property. After some efforts to induce the defendant to take the property at the agreed figure of $17,000, the plaintiff sold the premises in January, 1913, for the sum of $15,000, and then instituted this action to recover in the form of damages the sum of $2,000 for the defendant's alleged breach of his contract.

To his complaint in said action the plaintiff attached as an exhibit the alleged contract upon which his cause of action was founded. In his answer as at first filed the defendant did not dispute the form or due execution of said contract as set forth in said exhibit, but relied upon certain alleged false representations on the part of Blumenthal to defeat the plaintiff's claim. When the cause came on for trial and the original contract itself was produced, and for the first time after the date of its execution exhibited to the defendant, he at once asserted that it had been changed after its execution by the making of certain erasures, interlineations, and additions which went to the essence of the contract itself and vitally affected its validity; and in support of this assertion the defendant asked and was granted leave of court to so amend his answer as to set up these matters by way of defense. This being done, the plaintiff offered his alleged contract in evidence, and the court admitted it over the objection of the defendant, which, while quite general in its terms, was evidently made in the light of and with direct reference to the subject-matter of the amendment to his answer. After the admission of the paper in evidence the trial court heard the evidence offered by both parties touching the alleged alteration of the contract after its execution. The cause having been submitted, the court made its finding to the effect that on April 6, 1912, the defendant had entered into the agreement in writing as set forth in the plaintiff's complaint, but made no direct finding upon the issue as to the alleged alteration of the writing after its execution. The other findings of the court were in plaintiff's favor, and judgment was thereon entered against the defendant for the sum of $2,000, from which he now prosecutes this appeal.

[1] The first contention of the appellant is that the finding of the trial court that the defendant entered into the written agreement set forth in the plaintiff's complaint is unsupported by the evidence in the case. From a careful reading of the record before us, as well as from an inspection of the two original documents claimed by the plaintiff to have been made contemporaneously on April 16, 1916, we are constrained to uphold the appellant's contention in this regard. There were but two witnesses to the facts and circumstances attending the execution of the documents in question—the defendant and the witness Blumenthal. The defendant testified positively and unequivocally that the two papers were in substantially the same identical form at the time of their execution, and that the erasures made in the copy retained by Blumenthal, and the insertion therein of the purchase price of the property in both letters and figures, and also the addition of the clause relating to the prorating of the taxes and insurance upon the property, were made at some time after his signing said paper and without his knowledge or consent. On the other hand, the witness Blumenthal is, even in his direct examination upon the subject, most equivocal as to when the evident erasures and interlineations were made; while upon his cross-examination and in response to a direct and pointed inquiry he expressly stated that he could not say whether it was before or after the execution of the contract that these changes were made. The original paper produced before us upon the argument on this appeal supplies to our minds its own irresistible proof that the erasures and interlineations in this document were made at some time after the original writing was executed.

[2, 3] What these erasures and insertions were appears by comparison with the substantial copy of the agreement delivered to the defendant; but chief among these in the point of vital importance to the validity of the original writing itself as an agreement for the sale of real estate was the insertion, in both letters and figures, of the purchase price of the property to be transferred. It has been held by this court that one of the essentials to an enforceable contract to sell real estate is that the writing shall expressly set forth the purchase price to be paid for the property. Baume v. Morse, 13 Cal. App. 456, 110 Pac. 350. It is also needless to say that the addition to the original record of a clause to the effect that the taxes upon the property should be prorated would also constitute a material alteration of its terms.

The respondent, however, insists that the appellant is not entitled to take advantage of these alterations in his agreement, for two reasons: First, that in his original answer he did not attack the integrity or due execution of the writing a copy of which was attached to the complaint served upon him, and that his subsequent objection thereto made for the first time more than a year and a half after he had been served with a copy of such paper, in the form of his amended answer, comes too late; and, second, that the defendant's objection and proofs should have been specifically made and tendered at the time the instrument was offered in evidence, and not at a later time in the trial after the court had received the instrument in evidence.

[4, 5] Neither of these objections is in our opinion well taken. The matter of permitting the defendant to amend his pleading so as to set up the defense referred to rested in the sound discretion of the trial judge, which, being exercised in favor of permitting the proposed amendment, is not the subject of review upon this appeal. When such amendment was made, it related back to the filing of the defendant's original answer, and entitled him to all the advantages of its defense which he would have had if the amended matter had been a part of his original pleading.

[6, 7] As to the respondent's other insistence, that the defendant should have specifically made and stood upon his objection to the admissibility of the changed document in evidence, and then and prior to its admission proffered his proofs as to its alteration, there are two answers: The first of which is that the defendant's objection to the admissibility of this document, made immediately after the amendment to his answer and with direct reference to it, was in our opinion sufficiently specific; and, second, that the time when the proofs shall be presented upon an issue as to the validity or admissibility of a writing claimed to have been altered after its execution is a mere matter of procedure during the trial within the regulation of the trial court. The order in which the evidence is presented is not ordinarily reviewable upon appeal where the evidence itself is responsive to an issue and is admitted without objection.

[8] The foregoing views with respect to the invalidity of the original contract for the sale of the real estate in question render unnecessary a discussion of the appellant's further contention as to the effect of the alleged misrepresentations of Blumenthal as a sufficient ground for the avoidance of the defendant's agreement for the purchase of said property; for these alleged misrepresentations are immaterial if the agreement itself was not of binding effect.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

(33 Cal. App. 577)

ELLIOTT v. ROBBINS. (Civ. 2234.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 4, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 2, 1917.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION 🔑7(3) — PUBLIC LANDS—RIGHT TO POSSESSION—STATUTE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1925, providing that a certificate of purchase and of location of public lands is primary evidence that the holder or assignee of such certificate is the owner of the land described therein, but that this evidence may be overcome by proof that at the time of location or the time of filing a pre-emption claim on which the certificate may have been issued, the land was in adverse possession of the adverse party or those under whom he claimed, in action to recover possession of public land the statement in the answer that defendant was in adverse possession of the land at the date of the inception of the claim upon which plaintiff's certificate of entry was founded and at all times since under claim of right to make a homestead entry constituted a defense to plaintiff's alleged cause of action.

2. PUBLIC LANDS 🔑106(1)—PROCEEDINGS IN LAND OFFICE — CONCLUSIVENESS OF DECISIONS—STATUTE.

The decisions of officers of the land department upon questions of fact upon evidence tending to prove the same are conclusive upon third persons, at least in the absence of fraud or imposition practiced upon them, and if fraud is practiced upon them their rulings may be reviewed and annulled by the courts when private parties are affected by their decisions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 104, 301, 305.]

3. PUBLIC LANDS 🔑106(3) — DECISIONS OF LAND OFFICE—ATTACK.

Where a decision made by the officers of the land department in a contest of conflicting claims concerning land entries is attacked upon the ground of fraud in obtaining it, the right to make such attack is governed by the same principles which control in testing the validity of the ordinary judgments of courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 104, 301.]

4. PUBLIC LANDS 🔑106(3)—PROCEEDINGS IN LAND OFFICE — CONCLUSIVENESS OF DECISIONS—FRAUD.

In an action to recover possession of public land in which plaintiff relies upon a certificate of entry, and it appears that in a contest between the plaintiff and the defendant before a competent tribunal the claim of the plaintiff of right to enter upon the land was sustained, and that the certificate of entry upon which plaintiff relies was issued pursuant to that judgment, such decision could not be set aside on the ground of plaintiff's fraud and perjury in procuring it, and plaintiff was entitled to recover possession, since, where a trial of issues in any case is had, the parties must be prepared to meet and expose perjury then and there, and a judgment will not be nullified subsequently upon the ground of such fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. §§ 104, 301.]

5. PLEADING 🔑350(3) — MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS.

For the purposes of plaintiff's motion for judgment on the pleadings, plaintiff is deemed to have admitted the truth of all the allegations of the defendant's answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1075, 1077.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Andrew J. Elliott against Earl E. Robbins. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Noel & Sorensen, for appellant. Conkling & Brown, of El Centro, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This is an action to recover possession of public land the legal title to which is vested in the United States of America. The defendant appeals from the judgment, which was entered pursuant to an order granting the plaintiff's motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[1] The plaintiff relies upon a certificate of entry issued by the register and receiver of the United States land office at Los Angeles, Cal., upon the application of plaintiff to make desert land entry for the land described in the complaint. The answer admitted the issuance of the certificate of entry, but alleged adverse possession by the defendant of the land at date of the inception of the claim upon which plaintiff's certificate of entry was founded, and at all times since under claim of right by the defendant to make homestead entry for said land, and alleged compliance by defendant with all of the requirements of the homestead laws of the United States. Counsel for respondent admit that if this had been the entire answer the defense might have been sufficient. While a certificate of purchase and of location of public lands is primary evidence that the holder or assignee of such certificate is the owner of the land described therein, this evidence may be overcome by proof that "at the time of the location, or time of filing a pre-emption claim on which the certificate may have been issued, the land was in the adverse possession of the adverse party, or those under whom he claims." Code Civ. Proc. § 1925; Haven v. Haws, 63 Cal. 452. It follows that when the defendant stated in his answer that he was in adverse possession of the land at the times stated, such answer constituted a defense to the plaintiff's alleged cause of action.

But the answer alleged further facts as follows: That at a time prior to the commencement of this action the defendant had offered and attempted to make a homestead application upon said land; that the plaintiff also filed an application to enter said land pursuant to an alleged claim of preferenced right of entry thereon as successful contestant in certain contests against the desert land entries of certain other persons, and that in making his application plaintiff alleged that the land described in his said application was formerly embraced within said successfully contested entries; that at a hearing had before the register and receiver of the United States district land office at Los Angeles to determine the respective rights of entry of the plaintiff herein and this defendant "the plaintiff herein testified falsely as to the location of the land described in the said contested entry, and that said false testimony was so given by said plaintiff herein with intent to deceive the register and receiver of said land office, and that as a result of the fraud and deceit so practiced upon them the said officials of said land office, relying upon said false testimony so given with intent to deceive them, held and decided that the land described in plaintiff's complaint herein was formerly embraced in said contested entry, and that the said plaintiff herein as successful contestant was entitled to exercise a preferenced right of entry for said land; that the land described in the complaint herein was not embraced in said contested desert land entry, nor in either of them, and but for the false testimony given by the plaintiff herein at the hearing above mentioned the officials of the United States land office would not have held that said land, or any part thereof, was embraced within either of said contested entries, and would not have held that the plaintiff herein was entitled to exercise any preferenced right of entry, or any right of entry, for said land."

[2, 3] It is a well-established proposition that the decisions of the officers of the land department on questions of fact upon evidence tending to prove the same are conclusive upon third persons, at least in the absence of fraud or imposition practiced upon them. And if fraud is practiced upon them, their rulings may be reviewed and annulled by the courts when a controversy arises between private parties affected by their decisions. Sanders v. Dutcher, 168 Cal. 353, 357, 143 Pac. 599; Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 340, 23 L. Ed. 424; Marquez v. Frisbie, 101 U. S. 476, 25 L. Ed. 800. But where a decision made by the officers of the land department in a contest of conflicting claims concerning land entries is attacked upon the ground of alleged fraud in obtaining the same, the right to make such attack is governed by the same principles which control in testing the validity of the ordinary judgments of courts. Those principles are thoroughly settled. "Even granting that the decree in Marceau v. Fiske was based upon Mrs. Marceau's false testimony, it may not be set aside in this action for that reason. There was no extrinsic fraud by which the unsuccessful litigants in that case were prevented from having a fair submission of the controversy. True the plaintiff swore falsely, but where a trial of issues in any case is had, the parties must be prepared to meet and to expose perjury then and there. * * * Therefore we must hold that we may not upon the ground of such fraud nullify the effect of that judgment." Fresno Estate Co. v. Fiske, 172 Cal. 583, 593, 157 Pac. 1127, 1131, and decisions there cited; United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. Ed. 93; Nicholson v. Leatham, 28 Cal. App. 597, 603, 153 Pac. 965, 155 Pac. 98.

[4, 5] In the present case it appears by the allegations of the defendant's answer that in a contest between the plaintiff and the defendant before a competent tribunal, the claim of respondent Elliott of right to enter upon this land was sustained, and that the certificate of entry upon which the plaintiff relies was issued pursuant to that judgment. The defendant alleges that the decision was obtained by fraud and deceit, but the fraud and deceit described by his answer are exclusively of a kind which, under the decisions above mentioned, do not authorize the court to set aside or disregard the land office decision. For the purposes of the motion for judgment on the pleadings, the plaintiff is deemed to have admitted the truth of all of the allegations of the defendant's answer, and of course they are admitted and affirmed by the defendant. The case thus exhibited to the court was sufficient to establish the plaintiff's right to recover possession of said land.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

(33 Cal. App. 598)

PEOPLE v. MABRIER. (Cr. 372.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 9, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court July 5, 1917.)

1. Criminal Law 🔑121, 1150—Trial—Discretion of Court—Motion for Change of Place of Trial.

In a rape case an application for change of place of trial is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and where error is assigned, a clear case must be shown by the record before the appellate court will interfere, since the trial court is in a better position to weigh the statements of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 241, 3044.]

2. Criminal Law 🔑122 — Trial — Motion for Change of Place of Trial.

Where facts are disclosed at the impanelment of the jury in a criminal case which would warrant a renewal of a motion for the change of the place of trial, such renewal seems to be a proper proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 254.]

3. Criminal Law 🔑1150 — Review — Discretion of Court—Abuse.

That the population of the county was 6,000, and at the trial 39 talesmen were examined before a jury of 12 men to try defendant was secured, and 10 of these talesmen whose residences were scattered throughout the county swore upon their voir dire that they could not give the defendant a fair and impartial trial on account of their bias and prejudice, would not justify the appellate court in holding that the trial court had abused its discretion in overruling defendant's motion for a change of place of trial on the ground that, owing to the bias and prejudice against him throughout the county, he could not have a fair and impartial trial in that county.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3044.]

4. Criminal Law 🔑1152(2) — Review — Discretion of Court.

The trial court is charged with the duty of resolving contradictions in the answers of jurymen on their voir dire examinations, and its decision is binding upon the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3056.]

5. Criminal Law 🔑1170(2)—Appeal and Error—Review—Harmless Error.

Refusal of the trial court to allow the defendant's attorney to testify to a conversation with the father of the complaining witness the day after the alleged assault "about having an examination of [complaining witness] to determine whether or not sexual intercourse had been had with her," and whether or not at the preliminary examination of defendant he applied to the court for an examination of this kind by a competent physician, was not prejudicial error, where the record shows that upon stipulation of counsel and by order of the court eight days after the alleged offense was committed such an examination was made by three physicians, and their testimony appears in the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3146.]

6. Witnesses 🔑388(2) — Impeachment — Foundation.

Where no foundation for impeachment was laid while a witness was on the stand, the reading of his testimony at a former trial was properly refused, since to warrant its being read to the jury the witness' attention should have been called to it, and he should have been asked if he made the answers theretofore given by him, and upon his denial it would have been permissible to show that he testified as claimed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1233.]

7. Witnesses 🔑388(2) — Impeachment — Foundation.

Where no question was asked the witness which would serve as a foundation for impeaching questions propounded to other witnesses, the court properly sustained objections thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1233.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; Clarence A. Raker, Judge.

Jeff Mabrier was convicted of rape upon a female under the age of 18 years. From a judgment of conviction and an order denying a motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Jamison & Wylie, of Alturas, and G. P. Johnson, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Information was laid by the district attorney of Modoc county charging defendant with the crime of rape upon a female person under the age of 18 years. He was convicted by the jury, and was sentenced by the court to imprisonment in the state prison for the period of 47 years. The appeal is from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying motion for a new trial.

The sufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict is not called in question. The point most strongly urged for a reversal is that the court erred in denying defendant's motion, made under section 1033 of the Penal Code, to change the place of trial to some county other than Modoc on the ground that, owing to the bias and prejudice against him throughout the county, defendant could not have a fair and impartial trial in that county.

[1] It appeared that defendant's conviction was upon the third trial for the same crime, and that at the two former trials there were disagreements, the jury standing eleven for conviction and one for acquittal. An application for the change of the place of trial was made and denied before the second trial, and again before the third trial began. The application was also made and denied after defendant had exhausted his peremptory challenges, but before the jury was completed. The second and third applications were made upon affidavits, newspaper clippings, and the record in the case used at the hearing of the first application; the only additional matter being a newspaper article published after the second trial. It was shown that the comment upon the former trial by the three principal newspapers published in Modoc county were of such character as would have a tendency to prejudice the readers of these papers against defendant in so far as newspaper articles might influence their readers, and it appeared that these papers circulated very generally throughout the county and were read by many people, and in affidavits submitted at the hearing the opinion was expressed that these newspaper articles had created such a widespread feeling of bias and prejudice against defendant as to prevent his having a fair and impartial trial in Modoc county. Affidavits of citizens residing in different parts of the county were read in which affiants stated that they had talked with many residents of the county, and from what they had learned in these conversations they were convinced that defendant could not have a fair trial in that county. Counter affidavits were submitted by the people stating that affiants were widely acquainted with the residents of the county and had talked with many people in various parts of the county since the first trial, and that they (affiants) "had no knowledge of any bias or prejudice existing against defendant in said county or among the citizens of said county," and from their knowledge derived from meeting and talking with citizens of the county affiants expressed the opinion "that defendant could have as fair a trial in Modoc county as elsewhere."

The statements in the affidavits, both in support of and against the motion, were by persons having apparently equal opportunity to form an opinion as to whether or not a fair trial could be had in Modoc county. Specific instances of persons having been or being influenced adversely to defendant by the newspaper articles referred to are wanting. No affiant mentioned the name of any person with whom he had talked or that any named person exhibited hostility to defendant; nor did any affiant furnish the court with facts from which the court could intelligently determine the value to be given to the opinion of affiant. This is equally true of all the affidavits; for they are but the expression of opinions and conclusions of affiants, "after having talked with many citizens of the county." The newspaper clippings show that they went much beyond a report of the evidence, condemning by name in severe terms the juror who voted for acquittal. In one of these newspapers it was stated that the district attorney had "the case of this juror under advisement and an example may be made of him." But the affidavits did not make clear that these comments of the newspapers had so poisoned or influenced the minds of the citizenry of the county generally as to make it unlikely that a fair and impartial trial could be had in that county.

Applications such as this are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and, as was said in People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 339, 19 Pac. 161, 166:

> "Where error is assigned, a clear case should be shown by the record, or this court will not interfere. The court below was then in a better position to weigh the statements of the parties and to determine the truth than this court is now."

[2] Where facts are disclosed at the impanelment of the jury which would warrant a renewal of the motion for a change of the place of trial, such renewal seems to be a proper proceeding. People v. Staples, 149 Cal. 405, 412, 86 Pac. 886.

[3] Our attention is called to the fact that:

> "At this trial 39 talesmen were examined before a jury of 12 men to try the defendant were secured. Ten of these talesmen whose residences are scattered throughout Modoc county swore upon their voir dire that they could not give the defendant a fair and impartial trial, on account of their bias and prejudice."

It is stated that the population of Modoc county is about 6,000. It does not appear to us that the number of talesmen examined was unusually large or that the fact that 10 out of this number disqualified themselves on the ground of bias would justify the inference sought to be drawn from it. We cannot say that the court abused its discretion in overruling defendant's motion.

Error of the court is claimed in overruling defendant's challenge for cause against Talesman Osmund Ratcliffe and sustaining plaintiff's challenge against W. C. Clark. Ratcliffe was examined at great length on his voir dire, in the course of which he stated:

> That he had formed an opinion in the case unfavorable to defendant and that his "mind was set"; that his opinion was formed from rumors; that he had not talked with any witness in the case nor with any of the former jurors. "Q. And you have made up your mind that if you were accepted as a juryman you would be against him? A. Yes, sir. Q. If you were sworn to try the case you would be against him? A. My mind is made up."

At this point the challenge was interposed. In reply to questions by the district attorney Ratcliffe stated that he had not talked with any witness and had formed an opinion from "current talk." He was asked if he would try the case—

> "upon those rumors, or try it upon the evidence introduced here? A. Well, I don't think there would be any evidence to change my mind at all. * * * Q. Is it your understanding that you are to try the case upon the evidence and not upon rumors? A. Yes, sir. Q. If you were accepted as a juror, wouldn't you try the case upon the evidence? A. Well, I don't know."

He testified:

> That if he was himself upon trial he would accept a juror in his frame of mind, and that "if the evidence should not be like what he had heard he would go according to the evidence"; that he had no prejudice against defendant per> sonally, and that he "could give the defendant a fair and impartial trial on the evidence. The Court: Do you understand, Mr. Ratcliffe, that when you are sworn as a juror, it is your duty to try the case upon the evidence presented here alone, and not upon public rumor; do you understand that to be the law? A. Yes, sir. Q. If you were accepted as a juror in this case, would you try it solely upon what you hear in court, upon the evidence only? A. Yes, sir; I would have to."

He also testified that notwithstanding any opinion he then had he would lay aside that opinion and try the case solely on the evidence.

> "Mr. Jamison (defendant's attorney): Q. Mr. Ratcliffe, if that opinion is in your mind, it is a strong opinion, and it would go with you into the jury box, and after they began to introduce evidence, would it not? A. No; I think I could go according to the evidence. Q. But you would have that opinion until sufficient evidence has been introduced to overcome it? A. Yes, sir. Q. You have a strong fixed opinion in your mind that this defendant is guilty? A. No; I could not say that. Q. Do you think you could lay that opinion aside and try the case wholly on the evidence, or would that opinion influence you? A. No; I don't think so. I don't think it would influence me. The Court: The challenge is disallowed."

Ratcliffe was still further interrogated:

> "Mr. Wylie (defendant's attorney): Q. Mr. Ratcliffe, do you understand that under the law a man is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is proven? A. Yes, sir. Q. Would you accord the defendant the benefit and protection of that law if you were accepted as a juryman? A. Yes, sir. Q. Would you insist that the people in this case prove his guilt to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt before you find him guilty? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you will do so? A. Yes, sir. Q. Will you try this case on the evidence and nothing else? A. Sure. Q. Will you take the law regulating and controlling this case from the court, as instructed by the court from his instructions? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. Will you try this case irrespective of outside opinion or what the public might say? A. I would act according to the evidence."

Ratcliffe was one of the first 12 called to the jury box, and was peremptorily challenged by defendant. In the case of People v. Ryan, 152 Cal. 364, 371, 92 Pac. 853, 856, certain jurors impaneled to try the case gave contradictory answers upon the subject of their ability to disregard opinions as to defendant's guilt, which they had formed from newspaper reports and public rumors. Said the court:

> "Many persons, competent as jurors, have not given much attention to such subjects, are inexperienced as witnesses, and are unable readily to comprehend the force and effect of the language in which such questions are couched, and they generally answer without reflection as to the effect of their own words. Such contradictions are by no means infrequent, if, indeed, they are not the rule, rather than the exception. The trial court must decide which of the answers most truly shows the juror's mind. It should, of course, be liberal in giving the defendant and the people the benefit of any doubts that may arise as to the fairness of the juror and his ability to lay aside preconceived impressions and should excuse the juror if such doubt is created. But where there are such contradictions its decision is binding upon this court"—citing cases.

[4] It is urged that the examination of Juror Clark showed a similar state of mind to that of Ratcliffe's, except that he had formed an opinion favorable to defendant, and that to be consistent the court should have refused the district attorney's challenge of Clark for cause. What was said as to the ruling in Ratcliffe's case applies to Clark's. The trial court was charged with the duty of resolving the contradictions in the answers of these jurymen and "its decision is binding upon this court." The foregoing will apply equally to Jurymen Dannhauser and McDaniels, the latter having been called as a juror after defendant had exhausted his peremptory challenges.

[5] Error is assigned because of the refusal of the court to allow defendant's attorney, Wylie, to testify that he had a conversation with the father of the complaining witness the day after the alleged assault "about having an examination of Mary to determine whether or not sexual intercourse had been had with her," and whether or not at the preliminary examination of defendant he applied to the court for an examination of this kind by a competent physician. The record shows that, upon stipulation of counsel and by order of the court, eight days after the alleged offense was committed, such an examination was made by three physicians, and their testimony appears in the record. We see no prejudicial error in the ruling.

[6] The witness Frank Hardin, a boy of 15 years of age, testified at a former trial that he followed the defendant and the prosecuting witness and saw them at the place where the crime was alleged to have been committed, and that nothing of the kind happened there. When called at the present trial, to the disappointment and surprise of defendant's attorney, he said he was not at this place and admitted that he did not tell the truth at the former trial. Hardin left the witness stand and was not again recalled. Attorney Wylie was sworn and asked to state whether or not, just before being called as a witness, Hardin had not stated that his testimony would be the same as at the former trial. Objection was made and sustained that no proper foundation for Hardin's impeachment had been laid. An offer was then made to introduce the testimony of Hardin given at the last trial. The ruling was not error. No foundation was laid while Hardin was on the stand as a witness for his impeachment. The reading of his former testimony was properly refused. To have warranted its being read to the jury Hardin's attention should have been called to it, and he should have been asked if he made the answers theretofore given by him. Upon his denial it would have been permissible to show that he testified as claimed by defendant at the former trial.

[7] Witness L. F. Gill was called by defendant, and the following questions were asked:

> "Q. I will ask you to state whether or not at that time he stated to you that he had followed Jeff. Mabrier and Mary Ostrom across the field where they had gone to the place where it is alleged that the rape was committed upon the girl, and that no such act had been committed. Q. I will ask you what he told you or said to you in reference to the act charged in this case and whether such act had been committed or not."

Objection that no proper foundation had been laid and that the questions were incompetent, immaterial, and leading was sustained. Clearly, inasmuch as no question had been asked the witness Hardin which would serve as a foundation for the impeaching questions propounded, the court properly sustained the objection.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

(33 Cal. App. 634)

BUNNELL v. THOMAS, Constable, et al.

(Civ. 1822.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 10, 1917.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑108—TRIAL 🔑400(1) — FINDINGS OF FACT — CHANGING AFTER JUDGMENT—REVIEW.

The court has no authority to change its findings of fact after its entry of judgment; hence an appeal from the order denying a motion for substituted findings of fact after judgment cannot be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 588, 740; Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 269, 269½.]

2. ATTACHMENT 🔑314—CLAIMS—JUDGMENT.

In an action to recover possession of an automobile attached as the property of a third person, where the facts found showed that the automobile was the property of the plaintiff at the time of the submission of the case, the action of the court in entering judgment denying possession of the automobile to plaintiff, based upon a purported assignment of plaintiff's rights in the action subsequently filed with the papers in the case, was error, and a motion for another and different judgment should have been granted, giving plaintiff possession of the property or its value in case delivery could not be had, and damages during the period of detention.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attachment, Cent. Dig. §§ 1120-1130, 1133, 1138, 1379½.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by C. A. Bunnell against Charles R. Thomas, Constable of Los Angeles Township, and others. From a judgment for defendants and from an order denying a motion to substitute other findings of fact for the findings of fact signed by the court, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate and set aside the judgment and enter another and different judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Winslow P. Hyatt and Stephen L. Sullivan, both of Los Angeles, for appellant. M. A. Fleming, W. R. Law, C. W. Hall, and A. J. Mitchell, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and this appeal is presented on the judgment roll. He also appeals from an order denying plaintiff's motion to substitute other findings of fact for the findings of fact signed by the court, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate and set aside the judgment and enter another and different judgment. The appeals from these orders are presented upon "bills of exceptions" duly certified, which set forth the papers used on the hearings in the court below.

[1] As the court would have no authority to change its findings of fact after the entry of judgment, the appeal from the order denying the motion for substituted findings of fact cannot be sustained.

By virtue of a writ of attachment issued out of a justice's court of Los Angeles township in an action of one Wilson v. Karl Brehme and Mae E. Brehme, an automobile was attached as property of the defendants Brehme. The attachment was made by Charles R. Thomas, township constable, defendant in the present action, and this action is brought against Thomas and the sureties on his official bond by the plaintiff C. A. Bunnell as a third party claiming to be the owner of said automobile. This action is brought to recover possession of the automobile, or for the value thereof in case delivery cannot be had, together with damages for its detention and for costs. This action was tried on the 15th day of September, 1914, and the findings were filed on the 25th day of September, 1914. On the 16th day of September, 1914, there was filed with the papers in this action in the superior court a document purporting to have been signed and delivered by C. A. Bunnell, purporting to transfer to other parties "all property and sums of money arising from the cause of action" herein, and the judgment recovered herein. That instrument was not introduced as evidence at the trial of the case; and manifestly did not exist at the conclusion of the trial when the case was submitted for decision. Nevertheless, the court annexed said purported assignment to the findings as an exhibit, and the judgment was in part based thereon. The findings of fact, after reciting the fact of the trial, and that evidence oral and documentary had been introduced by the respective parties, state that:

> "The court having read and seen on file a purported assignment of this cause of action, and all rights thereto, and said purported assignment of said cause of action, and said bill of sale being made by the plaintiff herein to strangers to this suit, a copy of which assignment and bill of sale is hereto attached and marked 'Exhibit A,' the court now renders its decision and finds the following facts."

The findings are that the plaintiff has no interest in and is not the owner and is not entitled to the possession of the described property, "but was such owner from May 4, 1914, until September 15, 1914, when he parted with his title thereto by such Exhibit A"; that the defendant as constable did, on the 5th day of May, 1914, without plaintiff's consent, wrongfully and unlawfully take and detain said property from the possession of the plaintiff and has ever since and continuously retained the same under and by virtue of the described writ of attachment, as the property of the defendants in the action of Wilson v. Brehme; that on the 5th day of May, 1914, the defendants Brehme had no right, title, or interest in said automobile; that the automobile on the 5th of May, 1914, was of the value of $500; that on the 9th day of May, 1914, the plaintiff demanded possession thereof from the defendant Thomas; that plaintiff is not damaged in any sum because of the alleged wrongful act of Thomas. The complaint alleged that the value of the use of the automobile during the period of its detention was $10 per day. The answer herein denied that the value of such use was any sum in excess of $1 per day. As conclusions of law from its findings of fact the court found that the plaintiff was not entitled to possession of the automobile nor to damages, and judgment was entered accordingly.

[2] It thus appears upon the face of the record that the court based its judgment upon supposed facts which were not in evidence at the trial, and that when the complaint was filed and until the time of trial and submission of the case for decision the plaintiff was the owner and entitled to possession of the property. Since the findings established plaintiff's ownership of the automobile when the case was submitted for decision on September 15, 1914, the court should have granted a motion for another and different judgment, and should have amended its conclusions of law and rendered another judgment accordingly, which judgment would have been for possession of the property, or its value in case delivery could not be had, and damages should have been awarded in the sum of $1 per day during the period of detention thereof by the defendant Thomas. And the judgment itself as rendered and entered is clearly erroneous, because on the face of the findings it appears that the case was not decided upon the evidence, but upon a transaction which the court was not entitled to consider. It may be that, as claimed by appellant, the evidence was sufficient to establish damages in the sum of more than $1 per day as the value of the use of the automobile while thus detained. In the interest of justice, therefore, it would seem that the judgment should be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial, rather than that judgment should now be ordered as demanded by the motion for another and different judgment.

For that reason the order denying the motion for another and different judgment is affirmed, and the judgment is reversed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; WORKS, Judge pro tem.

(97 Wash. 15)

MAGALLON v. SCHREINER et al.

(No. 13922.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 18, 1917.)

MORTGAGES ⚿280(5)—ASSUMPTION OF MORTGAGE.

The mere execution of a deed providing that the second party (referring to the grantee, but the grantee's name being left blank) agreed to assume and pay a mortgage on the land did not make one contracting for such land liable for the mortgage, where it did not appear that such deed was ever delivered to him, that he knew its contents, or that he ever asserted any ownership or dominion over the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. § 746.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Walla Walla County; Edward C. Mills, Judge.

Action by Adrian Magallon against George Adam Schreiner and others. From a judgment, defendant Henry T. Hill appeals. Reversed and remanded, with direction.

Rader & Barker, of Walla Walla, for appellant.

MAIN, J. The purpose of this action was to foreclose a real estate mortgage, and for a deficiency judgment. The trial resulted in a judgment of foreclosure which provided that, in the event the property covered by the mortgage did not sell for enough to satisfy the indebtedness secured thereby, a deficiency judgment be taken. From this judgment, the defendant Henry T. Hill, against whom was rendered a contingent deficiency judgment, appeals.

The facts are these: On the 28th day of December, 1909, George A. Schreiner and wife, being then the owners of certain real estate in Walla Walla county, mortgaged the same to Adrian Magallon, the plaintiff in this action, for the purpose of securing an indebtedness in the sum of $3,500. On the 23d day of February, 1912, Schreiner and wife sold and conveyed the property covered by the mortgage to John S. Wickersham, the deed providing that the purchaser assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage. On the 11th day of April, 1912, Wickersham sold and conveyed the property to James D. Stewart. The deed making this conveyance also provided that the purchaser assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage. On the 12th day of November, 1912, Stewart, being then the owner of the property covered by the mortgage, contracted to sell the same to Henry T. Hill, and the latter, by the same contract, agreed to convey to Stewart certain property then owned by Hill in the state of Oregon. This contract was signed by Stewart and Hill, but contained no provision that Hill should assume or pay the mortgage upon the property which was to be conveyed to him by Stewart. On the 26th day of November, 1912, Stewart executed a deed of conveyance of the property covered by the mortgage. This deed was a conveyance to a grantee in blank, as no person was named therein to whom the title to the property was conveyed. This deed contains a provision that the second party (blank grantee) agreed to assume and pay the mortgage. There is no evidence that this deed was ever delivered to Hill, that he knew its contents, or that he ever asserted any ownership or dominion over the property. The decree of foreclosure provides for a deficiency judgment against Schreiner and wife, Wickersham and Stewart, with the further provision that Stewart, for any sum that he may be compelled to pay in satisfaction of the deficiency judgment against him, shall have a judgment over against Hill. It is from this provision of the judgment that Hill appeals. By this appeal, no other provision of the judgment is affected. The trial court did not make formal findings of fact and conclusions of law, but it is recited in the judgment that, on or about the 26th day of November, 1912, Hill entered into an agreement and understanding with Stewart, whereby the former was obligated to reimburse the latter for any payments which he [Stewart] might be obligated to make in satisfaction of any deficiency judgment against him. The record contains no evidence to support this finding. As already stated, the contract of sale or exchange between Stewart and Hill did not provide that the latter should assume or pay the mortgage. There is no evidence that the deed executed in blank on the 26th day of November, 1912, was ever delivered to Hill, or that he knew of its contents. Neither is there any evidence that Hill ever asserted or claimed ownership or dominion over the property described in the deed executed by Stewart to a blank grantee. Under these facts, it cannot be held that Hill agreed to assume and pay the mortgage. It was error, therefore, for the trial court to provide, in the judgment, that Stewart, in the event that he should be called upon to pay a deficiency judgment, should have a judgment over against Hill. The effect of the delivery of a deed in blank, where a person, acting thereunder, takes possession of, or assumes dominion over, the property described therein, is not before us in this action, and no opinion is expressed thereon.

The judgment, to the extent appealed from, will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to the superior court to eliminate therefrom that provision which provides for a judgment over in favor of Stewart and against Hill.

ELLIS, C. J., and CHADWICK, MORRIS, and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 46)

BLYSTONE et al. v. WALLA WALLA VALLEY RY. CO. (No. 13806.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 19, 1917.)

1. CARRIERS ⚿320(30)—INJURIES TO PASSENGER—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Testimony showing a sequence of events, such as physical symptoms, beginning at once, and increasing in intensity, till the operation, warrants the inference that the breaking of plaintiff's pus tube was caused, or contributed to, by her fall in defendant's car, and is sufficient to go to the jury, though the surgeon testified only that the fall may have ruptured it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 1248.]

2. WITNESSES ⚿380(5) — IMPEACHING OWN WITNESS.

A party, taken by surprise by affirmative testimony of his witness, prejudicial to his interest, may show prior contradictory statements of witness, to affect his credibility.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1214, 1219.]

3. TRIAL ⚿255(4)—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY OF REQUESTS.

A party, desiring evidence of the other party limited to a certain purpose, as impeachment of witness, must request an instruction to that effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 632.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Walla Walla County; Edward C. Mills, Judge.

Action by Daisy D. Blystone and husband against the Walla Walla Valley Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John A. Laing, of Portland, Or., and Sharpstein, Pedigo, Smith & Sharpstein, of Walla Walla, for appellant. E. L. Casey, of Walla Walla, and A. S. Bennett, of The Dalles, Or., for respondents.

MAIN, J. The plaintiffs in this action are husband and wife. The defendant is a corporation, and owns and operates a street railway in the city of Walla Walla. The purpose of the action was to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by Mrs. Blystone, through the negligence of the defendant. The cause was tried to the court and a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiffs. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

The facts are these: On the 28th day of May, 1914, and for some time prior thereto, Daisy D. Blystone, who will hereafter be referred to as the respondent, was employed at the Grand Hotel, in Walla Walla. In going from her home to work, and returning therefrom, she traveled over the appellant's street railway. On the morning of the day mentioned, shortly after the hour of 7 o'clock, the respondent left her home for the purpose of going to work. and traveled from a point near her home to the business district of the city, where she was accustomed to leave the car. The point where the respondent ordinarily left the car was just south of the intersection of Main street and Second street, this being a place where the car usually stopped. About midway of the block, south of Main street, and intersecting Second street, is an alley. On the morning in question, the respondent, before the car reached this alley, arose from the seat in which she was sitting, and approached the rear end of the car, preparatory to alighting therefrom, when it came to its usual stopping place. When the car had reached a point at or near the alley, it stopped, as the evidence shows, in a "violent, sudden, and in an unusual manner." By reason of this sudden and unusual stopping of the car, the respondent was thrown against the door thereof, precipitated down the steps, and fell upon the street. She got up from the place where she had fallen, and went on to her work. On this day, another employé of the hotel assisted her with the work she was expected to do. On each of the two days following, she returned to work. On the next day, which was Sunday, she called a physician. The physician, after treating the patient for some days, performed an operation, and removed one of her ovaries, and also one of the Fallopian tubes. The Fallopian tube was ruptured, and pus was oozing therefrom.

At the conclusion of the evidence offered on behalf of the respondent, the appellant moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to take the case to the jury. This motion was overruled, and the appellant stood upon the record as then made, and offered no testimony in its own behalf. The cause was submitted to the jury, and resulted in a verdict as above stated. The evidence of other facts will be referred to in connection with the consideration of the points presented by this appeal.

[1] The first question is whether the trial court erred in refusing to grant the motion for a nonsuit. It is claimed that the nonsuit should have been granted, because the respondent had failed to show that any negligence of the appellant contributed to the respondent's condition, and for the further reason that, from the evidence, it was probable that the respondent's condition was due to other and different causes, wholly apart from any act of the appellant. It is not claimed that the stopping of the car in a violent, sudden, and unusual manner would not be negligence. The question, then, is whether the negligent act of the appellant, in so stopping the car, produced the condition which rendered necessary the operation performed upon the respondent. The evidence shows that, for a year and a half prior to the accident, she had been in good health. The physician who performed the operation, and who had been the respondent's family physician for a number of years prior thereto, testified that a woman "may go through life with two pus tubes and have no trouble," because the pus tubes may lay dormant. He further testified that an exciting cause, like a fall, or a blow, may liberate the adhesion, and permit the pus to go into the abdominal cavity, where it sets up peritonitis. The physician testified, further, that there were causes other than those mentioned which might produce the same result. Testifying as to this particular case, the doctor gave it as his opinion that the fall did not produce the pus tube, but that it may have ruptured it. He did not testify that the rupture was probably caused by the accident. The respondent testified that, immediately after the accident, she had a pain in her side, and that she was unable to do her work that day as usual. During the three days following this, she gradually grew worse each day, until the physician was called. The coemployé at the hotel testified that the respondent, on the morning of the accident, when she reached the hotel, complained of a pain in her side. This evidence warrants the inference that the breaking of the pus tube was caused, or contributed to, by the accident. The testimony shows a sequence of events, such as physical symptoms, beginning at once, and increasing in intensity, until the operation was performed.

The probabilities of the case were to be weighed and decided by the jury. When the respondent offered evidence which made it appear more probable that the injury came in whole or in part from the appellant's negligence than from any other cause, the jury was warranted in finding in her behalf. Atwood v. Washington Water Power Co., 79 Wash. 427, 140 Pac. 343. The trial court did not err in refusing to withdraw the case from the consideration of the jury.

[2] The other point urged, if sustained, would not result in a dismissal, but in a retrial. One J. A. Dunham, who was a passenger upon the street car at the time the accident occurred, and witnessed it, was called to testify in behalf of the respondent. Prior to the trial, this witness signed a written statement, wherein the details of the accident were attempted to be set forth. In certain particulars, the testimony of the witness and the statement are not harmonious. While the witness was on the stand, the statement was presented to him, and he was cross-examined thereon. Subsequently another witness testified as to the manner in which the statement had been prepared, and the signing thereof by Dunham. The written statement was offered in evidence, and was received over objection. Two of the particulars in which the statement and Dunham's testimony did not coincide, were these: The statement recited that "the car stopped very sudden and in an unusually sudden manner." The witness testified that the car "stopped as they usually do, maybe a little bit quicker at that time; when they throw on the brakes, and take them off, there is a rebound of the car any time." In the statement, also, he said that the car was stopped "near the intersection of the alley between Alder and Main street with Second street"; in his testimony, that it stopped in the usual place, "closer to Main street" than the alley.

If the testimony correctly presents the facts, the appellant company would not be guilty of negligence. If the statement correctly describes the manner of the accident, it would furnish a basis for the charge of negligence in the manner of stopping the car. The statement, therefore, would contradict the witness upon material facts. The rule is that, where a party calling a witness is taken by surprise, by reason of affirmative testimony prejudicial to the interest of the party by whom he was called, prior contradictory statements may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of the witness. Jones, Commentaries on Evidence, vol. 5, § 855; State v. Catsampas, 62 Wash. 70, 112 Pac. 1116. Under this rule, the respondent had a right to offer the writing for the purpose of showing the contradictory statements made by the witness.

[3] Some complaint is made that the writing was not offered and received solely as impeaching testimony. No request was made by the appellant that its effect be so limited. If the appellant desired that the evidence be limited to a special purpose, it should have requested an instruction so limiting it. In the absence of such a request for instruction, error cannot be predicated upon the admission of the statement. Burger v. Taxicab Motor Co., 66 Wash. 676, 120 Pac. 519.

The judgment will be affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and WEBSTER, MORRIS, and CHADWICK, JJ., concur.

(96 Wash. 677)

TRIMBLE v. DONAHEY et al. (No. 13743.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 15, 1917.)

1. Frauds, Statute of 🔑125(2)—Contract Regarding Land — Damages for Breach.

Where a contract void under the statute of frauds will not be specifically enforced, an action for damages for breach thereof will not lie.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. § 277.]

2. Frauds, Statute of 🔑56(1) — Contract Regarding Land—Contract Not to Probate a Will.

Where the devisee after command by the testatrix to destroy the will had burned a piece of paper in her presence telling her that it was the will, an oral agreement between the devisee and another heir who was disinherited by the will, in which it was agreed that the will should not be presented for probate, but should be treated as destroyed in accordance with the express command and understanding of the testatrix, although not referring specifically to real estate, was void under the statute of frauds, since it would result in sustaining an oral contract for the transfer of real estate, which, under Rem. Code, § 1366, vested in the devisee on the death of testatrix.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 83, 84, 87, 89.]

3. Wills 🔑212 — Agreement Not to Probate Will Containing Devise — Statute of Frauds.

A contract between heirs, in which it was agreed by and between them that the will, making one of the heirs in effect sole devisee, should not be presented for probate, but should be treated as destroyed according to the express command and understanding of the testatrix, in consideration of a waiver of the disinherited heir's right to contest the will because of alleged undue influence and the fraud in preventing its destruction, and the avoidance of litigation between members of the same family, if in compliance with the requirements of the statute of frauds, was binding and enforceable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 519.]

4. Frauds, Statute of 🔑129(5)—Remedy of Parties—Damage — Specific Performance —Recovery of Money Paid.

The fact that there may have been good consideration, or that the full consideration had been paid in cash, would not take an oral agreement out of the statute of frauds, and neither an action for specific performance nor damages would lie, but only a right to recover any money paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 311, 312.]

5. Frauds, Statute of 🔑129(3)—Removal of Bar—Part Performance.

The joining in the petition for the appointment of an administrator was not a part performance of a contract not to probate a will containing a devise sufficient to remove the bar of the statute of frauds, where the petition does not refer to the contract, but alleges as a fact that the will was made and destroyed prior to the death of the testatrix, when in fact the will was not so destroyed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Frauds, Statute of, Cent. Dig. §§ 289-291.]

6. Estoppel 🔑102—Grounds—Oral Agreement Respecting Lands.

The devisee is not estopped to deny the validity of the oral contract, since every right which the other heir had to contest the will existed at the time that a subsequent petition for the probate thereof was filed the same as at the time of the making of the oral agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Estoppel, Cent. Dig. § 294.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Whitman County; R. L. McCroskey, Judge.

Action by E. T. Trimble against H. A. Donahey and Harvey A. Donahey, as executor of the estate of Rebecca A. Donahey, deceased. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint and dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Affirmeu.

E. T. Trimble, of Seattle, John Pattison, of Spokane, and F. L. Stotler, of Colfax, for appellant. Hanna & Hanna, of Colfax, for respondents.

MAIN, J. The purpose of this action was either to enforce specific performance of a contract relating to real estate, or damages for the breach thereof. To the amended complaint, which will hereafter be referred to as the complaint, a demurrer was interposed and sustained. The plaintiff refused to plead further, and a judgment was entered, dismissing the action. From this judgment, the appeal is prosecuted.

The facts alleged in the complaint stated in a somewhat abbreviated form, are as follows: Rebecca A. Donahey died in Whitman county on the 2d day of June, 1908, leaving an estate consisting of real and personal property. The deceased left surviving her, as her only heirs, two sons, E. T. Trimble (appellant) and H. A. Donahey (respondent). On the 10th day of May, 1905, the deceased made and executed a nonintervention will, by the provisions of which the whole of the estate was devised and bequeathed to Donahey, except the sum of $1 to Trimble. The will, and the contents thereof, were well known to Donahey, who, at the time of its execution, and until the death of the testatrix, resided with her. On the 22d day of May, 1908, the deceased, who was then over 81 years of age, feeble, and confined to her bed by her last illness, directed one J. W. Cairns, who was then present at her bedside, to procure the will and destroy it. Cairns made known to Donahey, who knew of the place in which the will was kept, the request of the deceased regarding the will, and directed Donahey to produce the will for destruction. Donahey and Cairns there conspired together, and agreed to defeat the expressed wish of the testatrix, and Cairns thereupon, in the presence of the deceased and Donahey, burned and destroyed another paper, and informed the deceased that he had completely burned and destroyed the will. After the death of the testatrix, Donahey called the attention of Trimble to the existence of the will, and Trimble then informed Donahey that, by reason of the undue influence used over the deceased at the time of her making the will, and the fraud practiced by Cairns and Donahey in deceiving the deceased regarding the destruction thereof, he (Trimble) would contest the same if produced for probate. On the 8th day of June, 1908, Donahey voluntarily, and of his own motion and free will, and in consideration of avoiding a contest over the will and a family controversy, entered into an oral contract with Trimble, in which it was agreed by and between them that the will should not be presented for probate, but should be treated as destroyed, according to the expressed command and understanding of the testatrix. The oral agreement there made was to be executed at once, and the parties thereto joined the petition for the probate of the estate as though the testatrix had died intestate, and they agreed that Cairns should act as administrator. In making the agreement for the administration of the estate, it was understood that the whole of the estate should be thus administrated upon and distributed according to the law, each receiving half thereof. The petition for the appointment of Cairns as administrator contains an allegation as follows:

> "That on the 10th day of May, A. D. 1905, said deceased made and executed her last will, and on the 30th day of May, 1908, said deceased revoked and destroyed said will, and said deceased died intestate."

Attached to the petition, and forming a part thereof, was the following:

> "Come now E. T. Trimble and H. A. Donahey, sole and only heirs of Rebecca A. Donahey, deceased, and each waives his right to administer upon said estate of Rebecca A. Donahey, deceased, and state that they have read the foregoing petition and join therein and request that the prayer of said petition be granted, and that said J. W. Cairns be appointed administrator of said estate. E. T. Trimble.
> "H. A. Donahey."

On the 8th day of June, 1908, Cairns filed a petition for appointment as administrator, and thereafter was appointed and duly qualified as such. On the 1st day of September, 1908, and after letters of administration had been issued to Cairns, Donahey, disregarding the agreement entered into, and in violation thereof, filed a petition for the probate of the will, and for the revocation of the letters of administration theretofore issued. On the 29th day of March, 1909, the superior court admitted the will to probate, and revoked the letters of administration. The estate consisted of personal property of a specified value, and certain described real estate of an alleged value. Ever since the death of the deceased, Donahey has been in possession and control of the real and personal property. Donahey voluntarily entered into the agreement with Trimble, and joined in the petition for the appointment of Cairns as administrator of the estate. By reason of the breach of the agreement by Donahey, Trimble has been damaged in the amount stated. The prayer of the complaint is that Trimble be decreed to be the owner of one-half of the real and personal property, and, in the event that such property cannot be conveyed to him, that he have and recover damages in the sum of $2,567, and the value of the rents and profits. The original complaint was filed on the 18th day of April, 1911. The cause of action there stated is the same as that stated in the amended complaint, which was filed on the 13th day of March, 1914.

The first question is whether the oral agreement pleaded relates to real estate in such a way that it is controlled by the statute of frauds. From the facts stated, Donahey, from the date of his mother's death, and until the filing of the complaint, had been in possession of the real estate. Under the law, the title thereto vested in him, as devisee, immediately upon his mother's death. Rem.

Code, § 1366; Murphy v. Murphy, 42 Wash. 142, 84 Pac. 646.

[1, 2] It is contended, however, that the oral agreement does not relate to real estate in such a way as to be void under the statute of frauds, because the agreement, as alleged, provided that the will should not be presented for probate, but should be treated as destroyed. The effect of the agreement, if sustained, would be either to divest the title which had already vested in Donahey, and transfer the same to Trimble, or give damages for the breach thereof. Where a contract, void under the statute of frauds, will not be specifically enforced, an action for damages for breach thereof will not lie. This is a proposition so well understood, and generally accepted as to make the citation of authorities in its support unnecessary. While the contract does not refer specifically to real estate, yet, from the facts alleged, it is obvious that, if the contract were sustained, it would result in sustaining an oral contract for the transfer of the title to real estate, or an action for damages for breach thereof. Looking to the substance, and not to the form, it seems clear that the contract is one that relates to real estate in such a way as to be void under the statute of frauds.

[3, 4] The next question is whether there has been a sufficient part performance to remove the bar of the statute. The part performance relied upon is the consideration for the contract, and that Donahey joined in the petition for the appointment of an administrator. The consideration was: (a) The waiver of Trimble's right to contest the will because of the alleged undue influence and the fraud in preventing its destruction; and (b) the avoidance of litigation between members of the same family. It may be here admitted that, if the contract complied with the requirements of the statute of frauds, it was binding and enforceable, but the fact that there may have been a good consideration for the agreement is not alone sufficient to take the case out of the statute. The fact that Trimble may have surrendered a valuable right is not sufficient. Indeed, if the full consideration had been paid in cash, the contract would still have been void under the statute, and neither an action for specific performance nor for damages would lie, but only a right to recover the money paid. Swash v. Sharpstein, 14 Wash. 426, 44 Pac. 862, 32 L. R. A. 796.

[5, 6] It cannot be said that the joining in the petition for the appointment of the administrator was in part performance of the contract sufficient to remove the bar of the statute, because the petition does not refer to the contract, but alleges, as a fact, that the will was made and destroyed prior to the death of Mrs. Donahey. The will was not destroyed. No case has been called to our attention, holding that part performance will remove the bar of the statute, when there has neither been a writing, nor possession of the property taken in pursuance of the contract.

It cannot be said that Donahey is estopped from denying the validity of the oral contract, because every right which Trimble had to contest the will existed at the time that the petition for the probate thereof was filed, the same as at the time of the making of the oral agreement. In other words, when Donahey breached the oral agreement, Trimble had the right to contest the will because of the alleged fraud which prevented its destruction, or the claimed undue influence which induced its making.

A number of authorities are cited by the appellant, wherein agreements between heirs to take according to the law, instead of according to the last will and testament of the parent, had been sustained, but in each one of the cases, with two exceptions, the contract was in writing, and, consequently, the statute of frauds was not involved.

In Phillips v. Phillips, 8 Watts (Pa.) 195, the contract was oral, but that case is distinguishable. There, there was an agreement among the heirs to destroy the will, and, in pursuance of this agreement, the will was actually destroyed. Thereafter the chief beneficiary desired to probate the will and prove its contents by oral testimony. It was there held that, since he had voluntarily participated in the destruction of the will, he would be estopped from proving its contents by oral testimony. In the present case, there was no destruction of the will, and, consequently, in probating it, there would be no resort to oral testimony as to its contents. In Bellows v. Sowles, 55 Vt. 391, 45 Am. Rep. 621, a certain heir who was threatening to wage a contest against a will agreed with the chief beneficiaries thereunder that he would abandon the contest in consideration that he be paid the sum of $5,000. In that case, the contract had no relation to real estate, and was therefore not affected by the statute of frauds.

The judgment will be affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and PARKER, MORRIS and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 115)

LAUBACH UNION CHECK VALVE CO. v. LAUBACH. (No. 13721.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 22, 1917.)

1. Patents ⚿193—Assignments.

Since a patentee enjoys absolute freedom in the use or sale of rights granted under a patent, he can grant an exclusive license or monopoly of his patent or a restricted and qualified license or use of it, or can assign the letters patent absolutely and without restriction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Patents, Cent. Dig. § 270.]

2. PATENTS ⟹195—AGREEMENT TO ASSIGN—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence in an action to compel a patentee to execute and deliver unqualified assignments of letters patent for an invention and to quiet plaintiff's title thereto held sufficient, though conflicting, to show that the patentee agreed to make unconditional and unrestricted assignments.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Patents, Cent. Dig. §§ 272–274.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹1011(1)—TRIAL DE NOVO—FINDINGS—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Considerable weight should be given to the findings of the trial court on conflicting evidence, where it appears that he separately weighed the evidence and decided according to his judgment, though the trial of the case on appeal is de novo upon the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983–3988.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Pierce County; M. L. Clifford, Judge.

Action by the Laubach Union Check Valve Company against Hiram F. Laubach. From decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Leo & Flaskett and H. F. Garretson, all of Tacoma, for appellant. Gordon & Easterday and Belcher & Gordon, all of Tacoma, for respondent.

HOLCOMB, J. As the result of an action by respondent to compel appellant to execute and deliver to it unrestricted and unqualified assignments of United States and Canadian letters patent for a union check valve invention and to quiet its absolute title thereto and for other equitable and injunctive relief, after a trial upon the merits, the demands of respondent were granted.

Appellant was the holder of letters patent from the United States and Canada covering certain inventions for improvements in unions and valves. On April 22, 1914, the respondent corporation was organized in this state by the appellant and two other incorporators for the purpose of manufacturing and selling a device covered by the patents. On April 27, 1914, at the first meeting of the board of trustees of the respondent, appellant made an assignment of the letters patent issued to him by the United States, which contained the following restrictive provision:

> "Provided, however, that I do not release or relinquish my claim, interest, or title, or any of them, in the event that the Laubach Union Check Valve Company becomes insolvent."

Afterwards, on July 17, 1914, appellant made to the respondent another assignment of the same letters patent, except that it was more formally executed, which was registered in the patent office of the United States. The Canadian patent was subsequently assigned in the same restricted terms. The capital stock of the respondent company consists of 5,000 shares of the par value of $10 per share. Under the preliminary agreement between himself and the company, appellant received 2,500 shares as representing his interest in the company. The assigned interests in the patents were the sole assets of the company when organized.

The one determinative question on this appeal is this: Are the restricted assignments made by appellant the assignments agreed upon between him and respondent? This is purely a question of fact.

[1] It was properly conceded by respondent that it is a fundamental proposition that, under the patent laws of the United States, a patentee enjoys absolute freedom in the use or sale of the rights granted thereunder. This being true, appellant could grant an exclusive license or monopoly of his patent or a restricted and qualified license or use of it, or he could assign the letters patent absolutely and without restriction.

There is a sharp conflict of evidence in this record as to whether appellant agreed before the assignment was made that the assignment of all his right, title, and interest in his letters patent should be made absolute, or that the restriction set forth herein should be made for his protection and benefit.

[2] The minutes of the first meeting of the board of trustees, made prior to the execution of the assignments, stated that the appellant transferred the letters patent to the respondent. In that connection there was no allusion to a qualified or restricted transfer by assignment. Appellant seems to think that the respondent and the trial court took the position that the minutes were to be considered as conclusive as to the nature of the transfer, and that therefore the transfer must necessarily be construed as unconditional. Much stress is laid on an observation of the trial judge as follows:

> "The records which are binding are simply that there was an assignment. They used the word 'transfer,' and it is not qualified."

It is vigorously contended that this shows the trial judge had an erroneous conception of the law, and that for that reason he did not correctly weigh the evidence. But an examination of the further observations of the trial judge in passing upon the merits of the case discloses that he did weigh the conflicting evidence and simply used the minutes as so much evidence, not conclusive, but entitled to so much weight in support of the view that it was intended and agreed by the transferor and transferee of the assignment that the assignment was to be unconditional and unrestricted. The minutes were made when there was no apparent controversy and with the full knowledge of both parties and approval of appellant. There is evidence also that the first suggestion to the appellant, that such a condition should be incorporated in the assignment in order to protect him in case of the insolvency of the corporation during the life of the letters patent, was made to him by the attorney to whom the parties went for the preparation of the instrument which consummated their agreement. While this is contradicted by the appellant, it is to be borne in mind that the appellant is one of the most interested parties, and that there is other testimony not so interested in character contrary to his testimony, and that the court weighed all the evidence and found against appellant.

[3] While this case is to be tried de novo upon the record, considerable weight is to be given the findings of the trial court upon conflicting testimony where it is apparent that he properly weighed the conflicting testimony and decided according to his judgment. The evidence does not preponderate against the court's finding.

The decree is therefore affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and MOUNT, PARKER, and FULLERTON, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 99)

CITY OF HOQUIAM v. MOE et al.

(No. 13964.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 20, 1917.)

1. Municipal Corporations ⟹466—Streets and Alleys — Special Assessments — Validity.

An assessment by a municipal corporation for opening an alley is on a fundamentally wrong basis if in fixing the amount to be levied against one lot the benefits to another lot owned by the same persons and not assessed were considered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1109.]

2. Municipal Corporations ⟹466—Streets and Alleys—Special Assessments—Validity.

If true that the property described in the roll is so assessed that each piece of property shall bear its relative equitable proportion of the full amount of the cost and expense of the improvement, and the assessment set forth apportions and assesses the amounts therein which are found to be a benefit to the property upon the several lots, tracts, and parcels of land in the proportion in which they will be severally benefited by such improvement, the assessment cannot be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1109.]

3. Municipal Corporations ⟹502(3) — Streets and Alleys—Special Assessments —Validity.

Evidence held insufficient to show that an assessment for opening an alley objected to by defendants was unjust or unequal or made on a wrong basis.

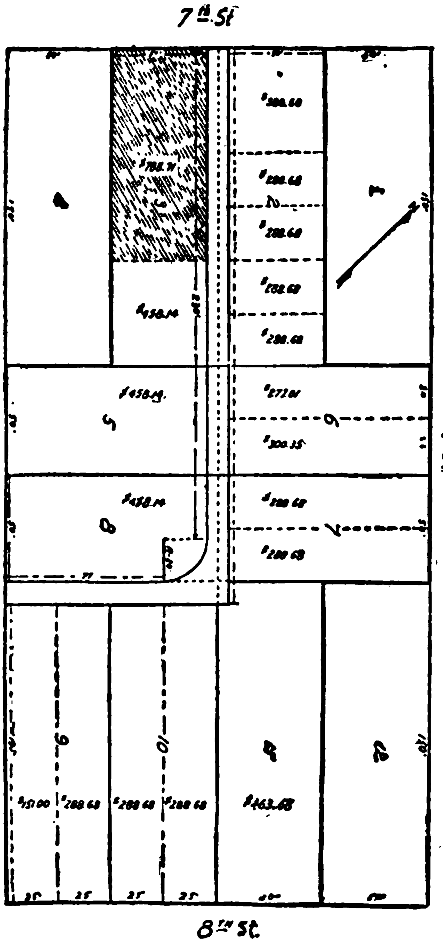
[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1174.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Grays Harbor County; Walter M. French, Judge.

Proceedings by the City of Hoquiam for the assessment of the costs of public improvement against Eric F. Moe, his wife, and others. From an order confirming the assessment roll, the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

William E. Campbell, of Hoquiam, for appellants. Sidney Moore Heath, of Hoquiam, for respondent.

HOLCOMB, J. Appellants seek to reverse an order of the superior court confirming the assessment roll made by a board of eminent domain commissioners, assessing the cost of a public improvement levied upon a public improvement district in the city of Hoquiam for opening an alley through block 49 in the city of Hoquiam. A plat of the block, showing the location of the alley in the block, the assessment district, and the amount of the assessment placed upon each lot in the district, is herewith shown:



The appellants are the owners of the northwesterly 100 feet of lot 3 in the block, shown on the plat as shaded in order to distinguish it from the other lots. It will be seen that lots 1, 4, and 12 of the block are omitted from the improvement district. This improvement was ordered in 1912 by an ordinance of the city which established an alley 10 feet in width in L-shape through this block, provided for the condemnation of the necessary ground, and established the assessment district to pay the costs of the alley upon the property in the block benefited thereby, and also provided that the city should not be liable for any of the costs. Condemnation proceedings were had, and, after a trial by jury, a verdict was rendered for the damage to each lot, and appellants were awarded $485 for the land taken from their lots. The jury found no damages to the remaining land owned by them. Judgment was entered upon this verdict, and it was provided that the owners of the abutting lots 2 and 3 might, when the alley was constructed, arcade the alley 50 feet back from the street and 12 feet in height above the surface of the alley. This provision was not made obligatory but optional to the owners.

Appellants objected to the confirmation of the assessment roll returned by the eminent domain commissioners upon the grounds, and they now contend, that: (1) The eminent domain commissioners in making the assessment upon appellants' lot acted arbitrarily, fraudulently, and on a fundamentally wrong basis; (2) that the assessment is in excess of the benefits and inequitable; (3) that the board of eminent domain commissioners considered lot 4 as benefited, which was not included in the assessment district, and added the benefit which they believed lot 4 received from the alley to lot 3 belonging to appellants which was included in the improvement district.

[1] The principal argument of appellants is made upon the supposition that the eminent domain commissioners considered some supposed benefits to lot 4, which is also owned by appellants, as accruing to them from the establishment of the alley, in assessing the benefits upon lot 3 which abuts upon the alley. If this were true, then the assessment was made upon a fundamentally wrong basis. It is shown that the appellants used their property transversely to the manner in which it is platted and that they sold a portion of both lots 3 and 4, being the southeasterly 50 feet of both lots fronting on the street and on the newly established alley, in that manner; but there is not a word of testimony that the eminent domain commissioners, in assessing the benefits that would accrue to lot 3, considered any benefits that might accrue secondarily to lot 4 belonging to appellants.

[2] The only evidence there is upon that subject is the assessment roll of the commissioners, and their oath attached thereto, wherein they say that:

> "The property described in the roll is so assessed that each piece of property shall bear its relative equitable proportion of the full amount of the cost and expense of the improvement herein contemplated, and the assessment set forth apportions and assesses the amounts therein which are found to be a benefit to the property upon the several lots, tracts and parcels of land in the proportion in which they will be severally benefited by such improvement."

This conforms strictly to the statute relating to such special assessments and, if actually so assessed, the assessments cannot be disturbed.

[3] Appellants (the husbands) and two other witnesses testify concerning the assessment, and none of them testify that the commissioners, in assessing the benefits to lot 3, took into consideration the supposed benefits to lot 4, nor does any other witness; and none of these witnesses testify that, in formulating their own opinions as to the amount of benefits accruing or not accruing to lot 3, they took into consideration the amount that the other lots in the district would be benefited or attempted in any way to compute the just assessments over the whole of the district according to the benefits received. In brief, their testimony is merely opinionative, and not so well informed and considered as to be convincing.

It will be observed that appellants' lot with a frontage of 100 feet upon the alley is assessed at $785, and the same amount of land owned by three parties on the other side of the alley was assessed $966.04, which tends to show that the commissioners in assessing the benefits were attempting in good faith to assess them with due regard to the benefits actually conferred, and tends to disprove that the property of appellants was assessed in excess of the benefits and inequitably, and that the board considered any supposed benefits to lot 4 in assessing appellants' lot 3, or proceeded upon a fundamentally wrong basis.

There is no just inference that can be derived from the testimony in the record which sustains the contentions of the appellants. Judgment affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and MOUNT and PARKER, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 166)

SOWLES et ux. v. FLEETWOOD et ux.

(No. 14042.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 22, 1917.)

1. SALES ⚷52(7)—RESCISSION—FRAUD—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to show that the seller of hotel property falsely and fraudulently misrepresented its worth, and that the buyers relied upon such representations without having at hand any means of ascertaining their falsity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 140–144.]

2. SALES ⚷51 — FRAUD — RATIFICATION — LACHES.

In action on notes given for price of hotel, defendants cannot be held to have ratified the contract by laches in failing to set up the fraud in the sale within nine months, but could plead the fraud in defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 115–117.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; John R. Mitchell, Judge.

Action by Fred L. Sowles and wife against W. W. Fleetwood and wife. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Thomas M. Vance and Parr & Marts, all of Olympia, for appellants. R. H. Fry and Troy & Sturdevant, all of Olympia, for respondents.

PARKER, J. The plaintiffs, Sowles and wife, commenced this action in the superior court for Thurston county seeking recovery upon two promissory notes and the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage securing the same, executed by the defendants, Fleetwood and wife. The notes evidence a debt for a balance of $1.500 due upon the purchase price of the furniture and good will of the Willard Hotel, a rooming house in Olympia which had been purchased by the defendants from the plaintiffs. The defendants admit the purchase of the business and the execution of the notes and mortgage for the balance of the purchase price, but defend against recovery thereon by claiming damages in the sum of $2.000 resulting to them from false and fraudulent representations made to the defendants inducing them to purchase the business. Trial in the superior court upon the merits resulted in judgment and decree in effect awarding the defendants damages against the plaintiffs in the sum of $1.500, offsetting the balance due upon the purchase price, and canceling the notes and mortgage. From this disposition of the case the plaintiffs have appealed to this court.

[1] For several years prior to January, 1915, appellants owned the furniture and good will of the Willard Hotel, occupying a building under a lease. While the property was evidently community property the business was under the management and control of Mrs. Sowles. Early in January of that year negotiations were commenced between respondents and Mrs. Sowles looking to the purchase of the business by respondents. Respondents up to that time had been farmers and were wholly inexperienced in the hotel business, of which fact Mrs. Sowles was fully aware at the time she was dealing with them. Mrs. Sowles asked $2,500 for the business. Respondents, after looking at the rooms and furniture, expressed themselves as considering the price too high. This belief on their part was manifestly because of their view of the value of the furniture. Mrs. Sowles told them that the business was worth all that she was asking for it, and that she had two offers of $2,000 for the business, one of which she told them was a standing offer, naming the persons who she claimed made such offers. She also told them that the business had been and was then making $200 per month clear. Relying upon these representations respondents consummated the purchase on January 16th, paying Mrs. Sowles $1,000 in cash and executing the notes and mortgage above mentioned for the balance of $1,500.

The evidence is not free from conflict, but we think it fully warrants the conclusion that these statements were made by Mrs. Sowles, that they were false, that they were made with the intention of having respondents rely thereon, and to induce them to purchase the business. We think also that the evidence warrants the conclusion that respondents did rely upon these statements of Mrs. Sowles, and that they were induced thereby to purchase the business, and that they did not have readily at hand any means of ascertaining their falsity. That they were statements of fact the truth or falsity of which was peculiarly within the knowledge of Mrs. Sowles is of course evident. The evidence is all but conclusive that the furniture was not worth over $500, and if the statements of Mrs. Sowles touching the value of the business related only to the value of the furniture, respondents might not be permitted to complain in view of their inspection of the furniture before the purchase, but manifestly the good will and earning power of the business as an established business as represented by Mrs. Sowles was the real inducement leading respondents to purchase it at the price of $2,500. The evidence we think also warrants the conclusion that the total value of the furniture and business in no event exceeded $1.000, the amount paid in cash by respondents upon the purchase price. This manifestly, in substance, is the view of the evidence taken by the learned trial judge, and we think that he was fully warranted in so viewing it. We think it would be unprofitable to discuss the evidence in detail here. With these facts before us the law of the case seems a simple matter in view of our repeated decisions; and plainly calls for an affirmance of the judgment rendered by the trial court. Stewart v. Larkin, 74 Wash. 681, 685, 134 Pac. 186, L. R. A. 1916B, 1069; Duffy v. Blake, 80 Wash. 643, 141 Pac. 1149; Christensen v. Koch, 85 Wash. 472, 148 Pac. 585; George v. Kurdy, 92 Wash. 277, 158 Pac. 965.

[2] Some contention is made in appellants' behalf that respondents should be held to have affirmed the contract and waived any remedy they might have as against appellants because of lapse of time and their continuance in possession of the business. We have seen that the sale was consummated on January 16, 1915. This action was commenced in August of the same year shortly after the maturity of the notes. It was then for the first time that respondents asserted their claim of damage. It is possible that there was such a lapse of time as would have prevented respondents from rescinding the sale and seeking relief in equity to that end, but we are to remember that respondents' claim made in this action is in effect a suit for damages on their part, and the fact that it is invoked by way of set-off or counterclaim in this equitable foreclosure action does not change its nature so far as their right to assert it is concerned. Viewed as such, manifestly it was brought within the period prescribed by law. It seems plain therefore that their right to so assert their claim for damages is not lost by lapse of time whatever may be said of their right to rescission. In Pronger v. Old National Bank, 20 Wash. 618, 626, 56 Pac. 391, 393, Judge Fullerton, speaking for the court, said:

> "Nor does an affirmance of the contract after discovery of the fraud extinguish the right to an action for damages on account of the fraud. An affirmance bars only the right to rescind. All other remedies remain unimpaired."

In Samson v. Beale, 27 Wash. 557, 562, 68 Pac. 180, 182, Judge Hadley, speaking for the court, said:

> "Ordinarily it is the injured party who seeks a rescission. He may pursue either the equitable remedy of rescission, and offer to place the other party in statu quo by tendering back the benefits of the contract, or he may retain the benefits of the contract and bring his action at law for his damages."

We conclude the judgment must be affirmed. It is so ordered.

ELLIS, C. J., and MOUNT, HOLCOMB, and FULLERTON, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 158)

ABERDEEN CONST. CO. v. CITY OF ABERDEEN. (No. 13995.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 22, 1917.)

INDEMNITY 🔑13(2)—JOINT TORT-FEASORS—LIABILITY OF CITY.

If the city engineer knew that the method of grading was defective, and such fact was not known to the contractor or his employés, one of whom was injured due to the defect, the employé could recover from the contractor, and the contractor could recover over from the city; but if the contractor knew of the danger he could not recover from the city, and if the employé knew of the danger he could not recover from the contractor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indemnity, Cent. Dig. § 31.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Grays Harbor County; Geo. D. Abel, Judge.

Action by the Aberdeen Construction Company against the City of Aberdeen. From an order granting new trial, the City appeals. Reversed and remanded, with instructions.

John C. Hogan and A. Emerson Cross, both of Aberdeen, for appellant. Ballinger, Battle, Hulbert & Shorts, of Seattle, and Boner & Boner, of Aberdeen, for respondent.

MOUNT, J. This appeal is from an order of the lower court, granting a motion for a new trial. The action was brought by the plaintiff to recover the sum of $7,309, paid by the plaintiff to an injured employé. The action is based upon a complaint which is set out in Aberdeen Construction Co. v. Aberdeen, 84 Wash. 429 et seq., 147 Pac. 2, and need not be here restated. Upon that appeal, we held that the complaint stated a cause of action against the defendant. Thereafter, the city filed an answer, which, after denying the material allegations of the complaint, alleged four separate affirmative defenses, to the effect: First, that the plaintiff was not liable to the injured employé, and therefore the payment which the plaintiff made to the employé was made voluntarily and gratuitously; second, that the injuries which the employé received were caused by his own carelessness and negligence, and that he assumed the risk of such injury; third, that the city never assumed or exercised any right or authority over the plaintiff under the contract, and that the plaintiff, in the performance of the contract, exercised an independent employment, and pursued its own methods, not subject to the control of the city or its engineers, that the injury to the employé did not result from any vice of the contract, and was not due to any defective plans or specifications, or to any direction of the city engineer, pursuant to which the defective work was done; and, lastly, that the plaintiff was aware of the condition of the earth embankment at the time the employé was injured, and that the dangers from the embankment were open and apparent to the plaintiff and to the injured employé, and that both were negligent, and their negligence was the sole cause of the injury. Upon the issues made by the complaint and answer and reply, the cause was tried to the court with a jury. At the conclusion of the trial, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff thereupon moved for a new trial, and the motion was argued to Judge Irwin, who took it under advisement, but died before disposing thereof. Afterwards, the motion for a new trial was argued to his successor, and was sustained by an order, as follows:

> "It is ordered by the court that said motion for new trial be granted solely upon the ground of error in the giving of instructions to the jury on the trial of said cause to which exceptions were duly taken by plaintiff, and said motion is hereby denied upon all other grounds set forth in said motion for new trial, to which ruling of the court granting said motion for new trial defendant excepts, and its exception is allowed, and to which ruling of the court, refusing to grant such motion for new trial on other grounds, plaintiff excepts, and its exception is allowed."

The instructions referred to in this order are as follows:

> "No. 2. You are instructed that if you believe from a preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff construction company was engaged in grading streets in the city of Aberdeen under a contract with the city, and that the man Brockett was engaged on the work, and while so engaged a portion of the finished side of the street under the construction work caved in and injured him, and that the caving in was owing > to the embankment on the finished side of the street being too precipitous, and that it was so graded and finished under the instruction and direction of the city engineer, and if you further believe that the bank was such that the engineer knew or should have known, with the exercise of reasonable care and diligence in that regard, that the same was dangerous and was liable to slide, and that the man Brockett and the plaintiff construction company, or either of them, did not know that it was dangerous and liable to slide, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover what would have been a reasonable compensation to Brockett for the injury sustained.

>
> "No. 3. On the question of contributory negligence of the man Brockett and the plaintiff the construction company, or either of them, you are instructed that if Brockett or the construction company, either one, was guilty of negligence and carelessness which materially contributed to the accident which caused the injury to Brockett, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover anything in this action; and, on the question of whether either Brockett or the plaintiff was guilty of negligence and carelessness themselves, you should take into consideration whether or not it was negligence or carelessness on the part of Brockett to sit on the wagon when it was being loaded, and as to whether or not he had been warned not to sit there, and as to whether or not Brockett or the construction company either one—and in that regard the president of the construction company, Andrew Peterson, and Carl Gylling, the superintendent of the construction company on the work, and Oberg, the foreman, or either one of them, must be considered as the representative of the construction company—knew that the bank where Brockett was working was dangerous and liable to cave in, then it would be contributory negligence on the part of Brockett to work under such conditions, and it would also be contributory negligence on the part of the construction company to permit him to work under such condition, and if the likelihood of the caving in of the bank was open and apparent to any person working in the vicinity, and was open and apparent to Brockett or the construction company or the officers of the construction company, then they would assume the risk of working in such dangerous place, and the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover. * * *
>
> "No. 7. I instruct you that, even though you should find that Brockett was entitled to recover from the Aberdeen Construction Company, it does not follow as a matter of law that the Aberdeen Construction Company is entitled to recover anything from defendant, city of Aberdeen; that even if the Aberdeen Construction Company, under these instructions, was liable to Brockett, yet the Aberdeen Construction Company could not recover from the city of Aberdeen anything in this action, unless you are satisfied by a preponderance of the evidence that the injuries which said Brockett received were caused by defective plans and specifications or the carelessness and negligence of the city engineer of the city of Aberdeen in directing the manner in which a finished bank was sloped, and that it was a portion of the finished bank that caved in and caused injuries to said Brockett; and you further find that the dangers of such bank caving in were known, or by the exercise of ordinary care should have been known, by the city engineer of the city of Aberdeen and was unknown to the plaintiff or its representatives in charge of the work."

It will be noticed that instruction No. 2 told the jury in substance that the construction company, the plaintiff, cannot recover unless the city engineer knew, or should have known, that the bank was dangerous and liable to slide, and also that Brockett and the plaintiff, or either of them, did not know that it was dangerous and liable to slide. By instruction No. 3, the jury was told that, if either Brockett or the construction company knew the bank was dangerous and liable to cave in, then they were both guilty of contributory negligence, and the construction company could not recover from the city, and also that, if the likelihood of the bank caving in was open and apparent to Brockett or the construction company, then they assumed the risk and the construction company could not recover. By instruction No. 7 the jury was told in substance that, even though the accident was caused by defective plans and specifications, or the carelessness or negligence of the city engineer in directing the manner in which the finished bank was sloped, and the dangers of such bank caving in were known, or by the exercise of ordinary care should have been known, by the city engineer, still the construction company could not recover unless such dangers were unknown to said company or its representatives in charge of the work.

It is argued by the respondent that these instructions were erroneous because the law of the case was settled upon a consideration of the sufficiency of the complaint when the case was before us in 84 Wash., 147 Pac., supra. The principal question upon the consideration of the sufficiency of the complaint was whether the appellant and respondent, as shown by the complaint, were joint tort-feasors. We there said (84 Wash. at page 433, 147 Pac. 3):

> "The principal question before us is whether appellant and respondent were joint tort-feasors, and, if so, whether appellant stands in such a relation to respondent with reference to the facts involved as will preclude it from obtaining contribution. The doctrine announced in Alaska Steamship Co. v. Pacific Coast Gypsum Co., supra,[1] upon which appellant relies, is sufficient to sustain its contention. Conceding that appellant and respondent are joint tort-feasors, it is a well-recognized principle of law that, to preclude appellant from recovering, it and respondent must stand in pari delicto."

Then, after quoting from Lowell v. Boston & L. R. Corporation, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 24, 34 Am. Dec. 33, we continued:

> "The facts pleaded in this case show that the defective plans and specifications were adopted by respondent, and that the appellant contracted to do the work in accordance therewith under the direction and supervision of the city engineer. This contract imposed an obligation to do the work in the manner required. This appellant did. In the absence of any stipulation in the contract that appellant warranted the sufficiency of the plans and specifications, no such warranty can be imputed to it. We in substance so held in Huetter v. Warehouse & Realty Co., 81 Wash. 331, 142 Pac. 675 [L. R. A. 1915C, 671]. No such warranty by appellant has been called to our attention. It necessarily follows that the sufficiency of the plans and specifications was warranted by the city. To now hold, as a matter of law, that appellant, in performing its contract in accordance with such plans and under the direction of the city engineer, was in equal fault with the respondent or was guilty of negligence as between it and respondent, would be unjust. The only wrong charged against appellant as between it and its > employé involved no moral delinquency or turpitude, nor was its offense one that can be considered a malum prohibitum or immoral in any respect. It therefore should not be held to be against the policy of the law to inquire into the relative delinquency of appellant and respondent.

---

[1] 71 Wash. 359, 128 Pac. 654.

>
> "Assume that respondent had let the contract to an individual instead of the appellant corporation, and that such individual had been doing the work personally in accordance with the plans and specifications under the direction of the city engineer, and upon his assurance that the banks were free from danger, and assume that the contractor had been injured by the bank falling upon him; it would hardly be contended as a matter of law that he could not recover damages from the city. At most, under such circumstances, the questions whether he assumed the risk or had been guilty of contributory negligence would be issues of fact which should be submitted to the jury. While it must be conceded that, as between it and its employé, appellant was guilty of negligence in failing to furnish the employé a safe place in which to work, it would seem that, as between it and the respondent municipality, it should not be held guilty of negligence, as a matter of law, in performing the work in exact compliance with the defective plans and specifications and under the supervision of the city engineer."

All that was then said was based upon the allegations of the complaint, which were taken as true. The complaint alleged that the whole fault was the fault of the plans made by the city and adopted by the city. It was alleged that the plaintiff was free from fault. Upon these allegations, the complaint was held sufficient. An answer was afterwards filed, and this answer alleged that the whole fault was the fault of the plaintiff, and that whatever sum it paid to this injured employé was by reason of the fault of the plaintiff, so that, when the case was tried upon the issues joined, the question was not of equal fault, but was whether the plans were defective and the injury was caused solely thereby, or whether the plaintiff was wholly at fault in the injury which occurred to its employé. So that the question of comparative negligence, or equal negligence, was not in issue in the case. That question was presented in the case which was here upon a demurrer to the complaint only, because it was contended that the complaint showed that the parties—the city and the contractor—were each guilty of negligence, and upon that question the discussion was made in the opinion which we have quoted hereinbefore. We there held that the complaint was sufficient, because it did not show that the parties were in pari delicto. We think the instructions do not violate the rule there stated, because they tell the jury in substance that, if the parties were equally guilty of negligence, there can be no recovery by one against the other. The injured employé of the plaintiff stood in the same position as the plaintiff itself, and in the assumption which was made in that case to the effect that, if the work had been let to an individual, and, upon the assurance of the city that the banks were free from danger, the individual had been injured by the bank falling upon him, it would hardly be contended, as a matter of law, that he could not recover for the injury. We said:

> "Whether he assumed the risk or had been guilty of contributory negligence would be issues of fact which should be submitted to the jury."

It seems clear that the plaintiff in this action may not recover for the injury to the employé if the plaintiff and the injured employé knew of the danger and assumed the risk. If the plan for doing the work was inherently dangerous, and the plaintiff undertook to do that work, knowing of the danger, clearly it could not recover from the city for an injury received by it. If an employé of the plaintiff, knowing the danger, was injured, he would clearly assume the risk the same as his principal. If the employé did not know the danger, he could recover from his principal, and his principal could not recover from the city, because both the city and the plaintiff, both knowing the danger, would be in pari delicto. If the city and the construction company were in pari delicto, it does not follow that an injured employé, who did not know of the danger, could not recover from his principal. This, we think, is conclusive of the question presented upon these instructions. We are satisfied they correctly presented to the jury the law of the case, and that, as between the plaintiff construction company and the city of Aberdeen, they were proper instructions. We conclude therefore that the trial court was in error in granting a new trial.

The order is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to enter a judgment upon the verdict.

ELLIS, C. J., and PARKER and HOLCOMB, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 95)

W. F. JAHN & CO. v. McCLAINE et al.
(No. 13874.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 20, 1917.)

SALES 🔑23(1) — CONTRACT — OFFER AND ACCEPTANCE.

Letter by J. to M. directing shipment of one car of hay at $18 per ton f. o. b. Seattle, settlement to be on Washington state weight grades, J. to have option of 200 tons additional at same price after first car is unloaded, followed by one asking when first car may be expected, and stating if hay turns out satisfactory J. would like to increase its order to 400 tons, and adding, "In any event, please confirm the 200 tons," with letter from M. to J. stating when he hoped to make shipment on first car, and that he will ship 200 tons just as fast as he can get it out, constitutes a definite contract as to one car only, there being no unconditional order for more, and the first car never having been shipped.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 44.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County.

Action by W. F. Jahn & Co. against A. F.

McClaine and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded, with instructions.

Oscar Cain, of Spokane, for appellants. McWilliams, Weller & Brown, of Spokane, and Beechler & Batchelor, of Seattle, for respondent.

FULLERTON, J. The plaintiff, W. F. Jahn & Co., brought this action against A. F. McClaine and A. F. McClaine, Jr., alleging a breach of a contract for the sale of a quantity of hay. The cause was submitted to the court upon an agreed statement of facts the material parts of which are contained in the following letters:

"Seattle, Wash., Jan. 8, 1916.

"A. F. McClaine; Please ship one car Montana Timothy at $18.00 per ton f. o. b. Seattle settlement to be on Wash. state weight grades. W. F. Jahn & Co. to have an option of 200 ton additional at same price after first car is unloaded.
W. J. Jahn & Co.
"Per W. F. Jahn."

"Jan. 12, 1916.

"Mr. A. F. McClaine, Jr., 503 Spokane & Eastern Trust Bldg., Spokane, Wash.—Dear Sir: Referring to the order we gave you on Jan. 8th, kindly advise how soon we may expect the first carload. If the hay turns out satisfactory we would like to increase our order so as to take on the 400 ton you have to offer. In any event, please confirm the 200 ton by return mail, and oblige.

"Yours truly, W. F. Jahn & Co."

"Spokane, Washington, January 13, 1916.

"W. F. Jahn & Co., Seattle, Washington—Gentlemen: Your letter of the 12th at hand, and would say that we hope to make shipment on the first car of hay to you on January 20th or 21st. The shipping point of this hay, Marion, Montana, has very poor train service, and freight only leaves there one day per week, although I am trying to perfect some arrangements with the railroad, whereby hay will go out oftener from there.

"We will ship two hundred tons to you just as fast as we can get it out, but the balance is already contracted for by another firm, so cannot accept any increase in your order.

"Trusting that the hay will prove satisfactory in every way, I am Very respectfully, A. F. McClaine,
"Per A. F. McClaine, Jr."

"Seattle, Washington, Feb. 8, 1916.

"Mr. A. F. McClaine, Jr., Spokane & Eastern Trust Bldg., Spokane, Wash.—Dear Sir: Kindly advise when we may expect some hay on the 200-ton contract we have with you and oblige
"Yours truly, W. F. Jahn & Co.,
"W. F. Jahn."

The court found that the correspondence between the parties amounted to a contract to furnish 200 tons of hay, and gave judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $900. The defendants appeal.

The sole question for consideration is how far, if at all, this correspondence constituted a contract of sale. It is plain, we think, that it constituted a contract for one carload of hay only. As to one carload there was plainly a definite proposal and a definite acceptance, and this under all of the authorities constitutes such a contract as to entitle a recovery in damages by the one party against the other who is guilty of its breach.

Although the question is not entirely free from doubt, we think that beyond the one carload there was no definite contract. In its letter of January 8, 1916, the vendee ordered but one carload, proposing for itself "an option of 200 ton additional at same price after first car is unloaded." In its letter of January 12th it asks for a confirmation of the order and how soon it may expect the first carload, and in addition proposes to increase the order to 400 tons "if the hay turns out satisfactory." In both of these letters the orders for an additional quantity above the one carload are conditional. Were the condition reversed—that is, had the vendor shipped the 200 tons additional without a further order and sought to hold the vendee for the price on a refusal to accept the hay—it is difficult to see how a recovery could have been had. The vendor's letter of acceptance is not, it is true, in the terms of the order, but it proposed no new terms and must be construed in the light of the order. The third letter of the vendee, of course, adds nothing to the contract. The terms of the contract were expressed in the preceding letters, and the vendee was not then at liberty to put a construction upon them which they do not reasonably bear.

Since no hay was shipped under the order, the vendee can recover only for the quantity definitely ordered. It cannot now be known whether the option would have been exercised. While the privilege of exercising the option was denied the vendee by the fault of the vendor, there is no rule by which the damages caused by such fault can be measured.

No authority directly in point has been called to our attention, but the general principle is well settled that an unconditional order and unconditional acceptance must be found in a contract evidenced by correspondence before there can be a recovery as for a breach. The following cases, while but a few of the many that could be cited, are illustrative: Van Keuren v. B. & B. Press Co., 143 App. Div. 785, 128 N. Y. Supp. 306; Hudson v. Arnold (Ky.) 93 S. W. 42; Topliff v. McKendree, 88 Mich. 148, 50 N. W. 109; Martin v. Northwestern Fuel Co. (C. C.) 22 Fed. 596; Johnson v. Stephenson, 26 Mich. 63; Smith v. Gowdy, 90 Mass. 566; Jenness v. M. & H. Iron Co., 53 Me. 20; Cornwells v. Krengel, 41 Ill. 394.

Our conclusion is therefore that there was no sale except as to the one carload. The stipulation covering this was that one car would contain 13 tons, and that the measure of the vendor's liability would be at the rate of $4.50 per ton.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to enter a judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $58.50.

ELLIS, C. J., and MOUNT, HOLCOMB, and PARKER, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 119)

HOPKINS v. COPALIS LUMBER CO.

(No. 13790.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 22, 1917.)

NEW TRIAL ⇨54—MISCONDUCT OF JURY.

Generally, when a party moves for new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury and prevailing party which occurred during the course of the trial, he must aver and show affirmatively that he and his counsel were ignorant of the misconduct charged until after the trial, for such irregularity is waived if the party adversely affected does not call the court's attention to it upon the first opportunity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 112–114.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Grays Harbor County; Ben Sheeks, Judge.

Action by W. W. Hopkins against the Copalis Lumber Company. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Morgan & Brewer, of Hoquiam, and A. Emerson Cross, of Aberdeen, for appellant. W. H. Abel, of Montesano, and George Dysart, of Centralia, for respondent.

FULLERTON, J. The appellant, W. W. Hopkins, while driving an automobile along a county road in Grays Harbor county, attempted to cross a railroad track, when he collided with a train of cars operated by the respondent, Copalis Lumber Company, and received injuries for which he sues in this action. The cause was tried by the court sitting with a jury. At the close of the evidence, the court concluded it proper that the jury should have a view of the place of the accident, and directed that they be conducted there for that purpose. They were so conducted and returned, when the trial proceeded to its conclusion; the jury returning a verdict for the respondent. After the return of the verdict, the appellant moved for a new trial on the grounds, among others, of misconduct on the part of the jury and misconduct of the prevailing party, supporting the motion by affidavits. The affidavits disclosed that the claimed misconduct occurred while the jury were absent from the courtroom on the view of the place of the accident. Counter affidavits were filed, after which the court overruled the motion for a new trial and entered a judgment in accordance with the verdict.

The only error assigned on this appeal is the overruling of that part of the motion for a new trial which is based on the misconduct of the jury and prevailing party. But whether the acts of misconduct shown to have been committed were of such a nature as to require a new trial we shall not determine, as we have concluded that the appellant is not in a position to make the objection. The rule is general that, when a party moves for a new trial on the ground of misconduct which occurred during the course of the trial, he must aver and show affirmatively that he and his counsel were ignorant of the misconduct charged until after the trial. The rule and the reasons for it are well stated by Mr. Thompson, in his work on Trials (volume 2, § 2613), in the following language:

> "In pursuance of the maxim, 'Omnis consensus tollit errorem,' the consent of the unsuccessful party in a civil case, to an irregularity in the conduct of a jury, will always estop him from claiming a new trial on that ground. Moreover, if he is cognizant of the irregularity, and does not avail himself of the first opportunity to call the attention of the court to it, he thereby waives any right to make it the ground of an objection. If he fails to do this, he cannot raise such an objection for the first time by motion for a new trial. The rule proceeds upon the ground that the party ought not to be permitted after discovering an act of misconduct which would entitle him to claim a new trial, to remain silent and take his chances of a favorable verdict, and afterwards, if the verdict goes against him, bring it forward as a ground for a new trial. Such a course is inconsistent with the candor and good faith which should characterize judicial proceedings. * * * In cases where this principle is applied, it follows that, where a party moves for a new trial on the ground of misconduct on the part of the jury, which took place during trial, he must aver in his motion, and show affirmatively that he and his counsel were ignorant, until after the jury had retired, of the fact of such misconduct."

A somewhat similar question was before us in the case of In re Jackson Street, 47 Wash. 243, 91 Pac. 970. In that case the court directed that the jury view the premises in charge of one of the court bailiffs, and that a Mr. Jeffrey, a witness for the plaintiff city, go along and point out to the jury the particular tract in controversy. At the time the order was made, the defendants interposed a general objection "to allowing Mr. Jeffrey or any person to go with the jury except a court bailiff." In an affidavit filed in support of a motion for a new trial, the further objection was made that Mr. Jeffrey was an officer of the city and a witness on the trial and was not sworn to perform any duty except as such witness. The trial court overruled the motion for the new trial, and the defendant appealed. Passing upon the specific objections to the appointment of Mr. Jeffrey, we held that they could not be urged in this court for the reason that they were not taken at the time of his appointment, saying in the course of the opinion:

> "Objections to the personnel of the person appointed or that he was not sworn should be taken at the time of the appointment, and cannot be urged for the first time on motion for new trial."

See, also, Grantz v. City of Deadwood, 20 S. D. 495, 107 N. W. 832; Woodruff v. Richardson, 20 Conn. 238; Peterson v. Skjelver, 43 Neb. 663, 62 N. W. 43; 12 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 558.

Here the affidavits filed in the case make it clear that the appellant and his counsel had knowledge of certain of the acts constituting the claimed misconduct at the time they occurred, and it is not averred nor attempted to be proven that they did not learn of all of them prior to the time the cause was submitted to the jury. Since they failed to call the attention of the court to the matters of which they had knowledge prior to the return of the verdict, and since they do not aver that the others were unknown to them prior to the rendition of the verdict, we are constrained to hold that they could not successfully urge them in support of a motion for a new trial.

The judgment is affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and MOUNT, PARKER, and HOLCOMB, JJ. concur.

(97 Wash. 51)

RUGE v. RUGE. (No. 13681.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 19, 1917.)

1. DIVORCE 🔑245(1)—ALIMONY—DECREE FOR SEPARATE MAINTENANCE—POWER OF COURT TO MODIFY.

Where a decree in the main action grants a divorce from bed and board and provides for the payment of alimony, it may be modified to meet changed conditions because of a continuance of a status of marriage and because the common-law courts have inherent jurisdiction in such cases under the rules of the ecclesiastical courts which have become a part of the common law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 692, 695.]

2. DIVORCE 🔑1—POWER TO GRANT.

While inherently the matter of granting a divorce involves judicial process, the power to grant a divorce a vinculo is purely legislative, and hence there is no inherent jurisdiction in the common-law courts to grant a divorce absolutely severing and canceling the marital bonds, but they have only such power to grant absolute divorces as the legislative department in the particular jurisdiction expressly confers upon them or for such as is necessarily implied from those expressly given them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 1.]

3. DIVORCE 🔑217—ALIMONY—POWER OF COURT TO ALTER TEMPORARY ALIMONY.

Where alimony awarded is temporary or pendente lite, the court has the power to modify it as it has to make any other appropriate order in a case pending in court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 637, 638.]

4. DIVORCE 🔑309—POWER OF COURT TO MODIFY.

In a divorce case, where alimony is for the purpose of providing maintenance for minor children, the decree may be modified so long as there are minor children to be cared for, since the duty to support the child springs from the parental relation, and continues to exist after the marital status out of which it arose has terminated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. § 803.]

5. DIVORCE 🔑245(1)—ALIMONY—POWER OF COURT TO MODIFY—EXPRESS RESERVATION IN THE DECREE.

Where a divorce decree contains an express reservation of the power to modify an allowance of alimony, the court may thereafter exercise the unexhausted portion of its jurisdiction; as the judgments in such cases do not purport to be final.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 692, 695.]

6. DIVORCE 🔑245(1)—ALIMONY—POWER OF COURT TO MODIFY—STATUTORY AUTHORITY.

Where the right to modify an allowance of alimony in a divorce case is conferred by statute, it clearly exists regardless of whether the decree be one of absolute divorce or mere separation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 692, 695.]

7. DIVORCE 🔑245(1)—ALIMONY—ABSOLUTE DECREE—POWER OF COURT TO MODIFY.

Where a decree grants absolute divorce and permanent alimony, although payment in installments is allowed, and there are no minor children to be cared for, and the decree contains no reservation of jurisdiction, and there is no statute conferring the power to modify, and the judgment is not attacked upon the ground of fraud or mistake, there is no power in the court to modify or alter the award of alimony to meet changed conditions after the time for which appeal has expired and the time limited by statute within which judgments may be modified has elapsed, since an adjudication by the court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties is final and conclusive not only as to matters atually determined, but as to every other matter which the parties ought to have litigated as incident thereto and coming within the legitimate purview of the subject-matter of the action; hence, where the question of alimony is actually litigated and finally determined, the judgment operates as res adjudicata upon the question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 692, 695.]

8. DIVORCE 🔑247—ALIMONY—FAILURE OF HUSBAND TO PAY.

Where a divorce decree grants permanent alimony, the fact that the delinquent husband is cited for contempt and it is made to appear that he is unable to pay does not modify or suspend the decree, which remains unaltered and in full force, but the wife is simply deprived of one of the means provided by law for the collection of her alimony, and if the husband should subsequently become able to pay, he could be compelled to satisfy the decree according to its precise terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 689, 697-700, 733, 736.]

Chadwick, J., dissenting.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Whatcom County; Ed. E. Hardin, Judge.

Suit for divorce by Elsie G. Ruge against Edward C. Ruge, in which there was a decree granting an absolute divorce and permanent alimony payable in monthly installments. On petition by the husband to obtain an order modifying the decree for alimony. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the petition and dismissing it, the petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

S. M. Bruce and Romaine & Abrams, all of Bellingham, for appellant. Craven & Greene, of Bellingham, for respondent.

WEBSTER, J. This is an appeal from an order and judgment sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing a petition the purpose of which was to obtain an order modifying a decree for alimony payable in periodical installments as fixed by a decree of divorce rendered in an action between the parties to this proceeding by the court to which the petition was addressed. The material facts are as follows:

On November 16, 1912, a decree was rendered by the superior court of Whatcom county dissolving the bonds of marriage theretofore existing between plaintiff and defendant and adjudging, among other things, that the defendant and petitioner pay to the plaintiff as alimony the sum of $125 per month so long as the plaintiff should live. The decree was based upon findings to the effect that the defendant had been guilty of cruelty toward the plaintiff; that he was a regularly licensed physician with a lucrative practice, and was actually earning from $300 to $1,000 per month; that plaintiff was physically frail and delicate and would never be well and strong; that she was not able to support or maintain herself by her own exertions; and that she was totally without means of support. On February 23, 1915, the defendant filed a petition entitled in the original cause, wherein he alleged in substance that since the entry of the decree in the divorce action the plaintiff had become well and vigorous; that his practice as a physician had materially fallen off; that business conditions had greatly changed; and that he was not financially able to pay the installments of alimony. He prayed that the amount of alimony be reduced; that the same be converted into a gross sum to the end that he might pay the same either at one time or at such periods and in such installments as the court saw fit to provide. It is conceded that there were no children as the result of the marriage between plaintiff and defendant, and there is no reservation or provision in the decree whereby the allowance of alimony is subject to the further orders of the court.

To this petition the plaintiff interposed a demurrer upon the grounds, among others, that it did not state sufficient facts to entitle defendant to the relief prayed, and that the court was without jurisdiction to entertain it. The demurrer was sustained, and, the defendant electing to stand upon his petition, the same was dismissed. Defendant appeals.

The question presented for our consideration is this: Has the superior court which rendered the decree in the divorce action jurisdiction to modify the same in respect to the periodical installments of permanent alimony provided for therein, the divorce being an absolute one, there being no minor children of the parties, there being no provision in the decree reserving to the court the power to subsequently make further orders relating to the alimony, but being absolute and final upon its face, there being no statute in this jurisdiction expressly or by necessary implication conferring upon the court the power to change or modify decrees in such cases to meet altered conditions, the defendant not having appealed from the decree nor moved or petitioned the court for its modification within the time limited by statute, and the decree not being attacked on the ground of fraud or mistake.

The question thus presented is one of first impression in this court, is exceedingly vexatious, and one upon which the authorities are in an unsatisfactory condition. Because of the great importance of the question not alone to the defendant in this case, but to the public as well, and in the hope of bringing something approximating order out of the chaotic mass of judicial expression upon the question, we have made a painstaking examination of the authorities. From our investigation we are induced to conclude that what at first blush appears to be a hopelessly entangled skein of discordant and conflicting cases upon closer analysis will be found not to be such, but that, by resorting to scientifically sound fundamental principles and by keeping in mind well-established lines of demarcation, the question is one upon which there is not great actual conflict. Upon careful analysis the cases seem naturally to arrange themselves into six well-defined and distinct classes, each class being based upon sound fundamental principles and the rule pertaining to it being the result of clear logic. These classifications are as follows:

[1, 2] I. Where the decree in the main action is one granting a divorce a mensa et thoro, which in modern parlance we refer to as a decree for separate maintenance. Cases falling within this class are controlled largely, if not entirely, by the thought that, inasmuch as the power of the court to award alimony in such cases is a power incident to the jurisdiction to regulate the rights of the parties growing out of and pertaining to the marital status, and this status being unaffected by the decree for legalized separation, but continuing to exist, the power to modify the decree in respect to alimony to meet changed or changing conditions likewise continues to endure. This rule seems to have had its origin in the ecclesiastical courts, where absolute divorces were never granted. These tribunals sometimes entered decrees of annulment for causes which rendered the marriage void ab initio, but such decrees were not in the proper sense of the term divorces; they amounted merely to an official declaration of a pre-existing fact, viz. that there had never been a valid marriage between the parties. Absolute divorces were infrequently granted in England by acts of Parliament, and hence it is that the granting of such divorces is historically a legislative function. While inherently the matter of granting a divorce involves the judicial process, historically and theoretically the power to grant a divorce a vinculo is purely legislative. Consequently there is no inherent jurisdiction in the common-law courts to grant a divorce absolutely severing and cancelling the marital bonds; but they have only such power with respect to granting absolute divorces as the legislative department in the particular jurisdiction sees fit to expressly confer upon them, or such as are necessarily implied from those expressly given them. In an early English case, however, after careful consideration and debate, it was determined that the rules announced and acted upon by the ecclesiastical courts were part and parcel of the common law. In cases of divorce from bed and board, therefore, the courts of the common law exercising the powers formerly exercised by the ecclesiastical courts have authority to modify decrees relating to alimony. The continued existence of the status of marriage upon which the power to grant decrees of alimony depends carries with it the continuing power to modify or alter the allowance of alimony to meet new conditions.

[3] II. The second class includes the cases where the alimony awarded is temporary or pendente lite, as distinguished from permanent. In these cases the power to modify exists for reasons which are perfectly obvious. While the cause is still pending in the court of first instance the power to made any appropriate order in the premises clearly exists. The court has the same power to modify its order with respect to temporary alimony that it has to make any other appropriate order in a case pending in court.

[4] III. This class includes cases where there are minor children of the parties to the divorce action, and the courts of all the states are at one upon the proposition that, so far as the decree of alimony is for the benefit of the minor children of the spouses, the power to modify the decree continues so long as there are minor children under the protection of the court. While in cases dealing with this aspect of the question the courts have not always paused to state the fundamental principle upon which the right to modify is based, it is manifest in reading them that the dominant thought and controlling circumstance in the cases is the fact that there are minor children to be cared for as wards of the court. As it seems to us, the true basis upon which the power to modify the decree in these cases rests is that out of the marital relation springs a new relationship, viz. that of parent and child. Palpably neither executive edict, enactment of Legislature, nor decree of court can change the relationship existing between parent and child. The courts may decree that the marital tie shall be absolutely severed and the parties be placed, so far as the law is concerned, in the same situation that they occupied prior to the solemnization of the marriage ceremony; but they cannot alter or modify the fact that a father is the parent of his offspring. This parental relationship springing as it does from the relationship of marriage is to this extent incident to the marital status. But the duty of the father, if he has means with which to do so, to support his infant children, springs immediately from the parental relationship. As this relationship, incidental as it is to the marriage state, continues to exist after the status out of which it arose has been terminated, either naturally as by death or artificially as by divorce, the duty incident to that continuing relationship still exists. The right of the wife to alimony arises immediately out of the marriage contract, but the right of the child to support at the hands of its parents springs from the incidental relationship which had its origin in marriage, to wit, that of parent and child. The court therefore, acting upon this relationship as one of the things brought to it by the divorce action, has the power to modify or alter its decree so long as there are minor children under the protection of the court.

[5] IV. Comprising this class are the cases where the court by express provision in its decree reserves to itself either all or a portion of its power to provide alimony for the wife or maintenance for the children. In such cases the decree is not final and conclusive as a matter of law, because it does not purport to be final and conclusive as a matter of fact. The reservation in the decree plainly indicates an unfinished determination of the judicial mind: that is, the court has not completely disposed of the case. The power of the court not having been exhausted, it reserves to itself the right to exercise the unexhausted portion of its power in such manner as changed conditions and circumstances may indicate to be just. As a judgment in any kind of action thus inconclusive and incomplete is not final, so also it is not final in a decree relating to alimony. The cases are in harmony that, where the power to modify is thus expressly reserved in the decree, the tribunal reserving it has the power to exercise it to meet changed or changing conditions thereafter arising.

[6] V. In this division are included the cases where by statute in the particular jurisdiction power is expressly conferred upon the court to from time to time, on the petition of either of the parties, revise or alter its judgment or decree respecting the amount of alimony or maintenance. Comment on this class of cases is unnecessary. Suffice it to suggest that the legislative department of the state, being the repository of all the power concerning absolute divorce and its incidents, may, if it sees fit, delegate this power to courts in the absence of constitutional inhibition.

[7, 8] VI. In this class fall all of the cases not included in the foregoing classifications, viz. cases where the divorce is absolute, the alimony awarded is permanent, there are no minor children, there is no express reservation in the decree, and there is no statute in the particular jurisdiction expressly or by necessary implication conferring upon the court the authority to modify or alter its decrees in respect to alimony for the support of the wife. It is in this class that the case now under consideration is included.

The question, May decrees in this class of cases be modified? seems to carry its own answer. The status to which the power to award alimony is incident having by judicial mandate ceased to exist, the court having exercised all of the power in the premises that it possessed, there being no continuing relationship of parent and child to which the power to modify may be referred, the alimony in question involving the right of the wife only, the judgment or decree by its terms purporting to be final and conclusive upon the question, and there being no statute conferring upon the court the power to modify, there is no other source of authority to which we may look. The answer is scientifically and logically irresistible that such power does not exist. We must disabuse our minds of the thought that there is any peculiar mystery attaching to decrees of divorce and alimony merely because they are such. But if they and their incidents are to be treated differently from ordinary judgments and decrees, it must be so because of some scientifically and logically sound basis upon which they can be considered as exceptions to the general rules. Unless this be true, our boast that the law is a science is a mockery and a sham, and judicial tribunals will be left to embark upon a thick and uncertain sea with neither chart nor compass. In such a situation the judicial expressions upon the question in the very nature of things will result in a mass of conflicting and discordant utterances referable to no principle of law either substantive or adjective. Fortunately, however, the courts of the country have not fallen into the error of considering a decree for alimony or maintenance as a thing apart, but, speaking generally, have developed a jurisprudence pertaining to the question in keeping with sound fundamental principles. It is elementary that an adjudication by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties is final and conclusive not only as to the matters actually determined, but as to every other matter which the parties ought to have litigated as incident thereto and coming within the legitimate purview of the subject-matter of the action. Consequently, when the question of alimony is in fact actually litigated and finally determined in the divorce action, as it is in this class of cases, a judgment or decree in the action operates as res adjudicata upon the question of alimony. We therefore confidently assert that it is sustained both in principle and by the great weight of authority that, where permanent alimony is awarded as incidental to the granting of an absolute divorce, and there are no minor children of the parties, and the court does not reserve to itself the right to thereafter exercise an unexhausted portion of its power, but actually exhausts its jurisdiction at one time, and there is no statute conferring upon the court the power to modify or alter its decrees in respect to the allowance of alimony to meet new conditions thereafter transpiring, and the time for appeal or review has expired, and the period limited by law within which judgments may be modified on motion or petition has elapsed, and the judgment is not attacked on the ground of fraud or mistake, the court has absolutely no jurisdiction to change its decree, but possesses only the right to enforce obedience to it. Sammis v. Medbury, 14 R. I. 214; Sampson v. Sampson, 16 R. I. 456, 16 Atl. 711, 3 L. R. A. 349; Smith v. Smith, 45 Ala. 264; Petersine v. Thomas, 28 Ohio St. 596; Kamp v. Kamp, 59 N. Y. 212; Kerr v. Kerr, 59 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 255; Erkenbrach v. Erkenbrach, 96 N. Y. 456; Coffee v. Coffee, 101 Ga. 787, 28 S. E. 977; Spain v. Spain (Iowa) 158 N. W. 529; Hardin v. Hardin, 38 Tex. 617; Shepherd v. Shepherd, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 240; Livingston v. Livingston, 173 N. Y. 377, 66 N. E. 123, 61 L. R. A. 800, 93 Am. St. Rep. 600; Fries v. Fries, 1 McArthur (8 D. C.) 291; Howell v. Howell, 104 Cal. 45, 37 Pac. 770, 43 Am. St. Rep. 70; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 20 Kan. 665; Stratton v. Stratton, 73 Me. 481; Mayer v. Mayer, 154 Mich. 386, 117 N. W. 890, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 245, 129 Am. St. Rep. 477; Martin v. Martin, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 321; Walker v. Walker, 155 N. Y. 77, 49 N. E. 663; Bacon v. Bacon, 43 Wis. 197; White v. White, 130 Cal. 597, 62 Pac. 1062, 80 Am. St. Rep. 150; Silliman v. Silliman, 66 Or. 402, 133 Pac. 769; Buckminster v. Buckminster, 38 Vt. 248, 88 Am. Dec. 652, note; Johnson v. Johnson, 12 Daly (N. Y.) 232; Methvin v. Methvin, 60 Am. Dec. 664, note; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) p. 135; 1 R. C. L. p. 946; 9 R. C. L. p. 439; Brown on Divorce, p. 278; Nelson on Marriage and Divorce, vol. 2, § 933a; Stuart on Marriage and Divorce, § 366.

Mr. Bishop, in his valuable treatise on Marriage, Divorce, and Separation (Volume 2, § 872), states:

> "Because the procedure of a court always bends with the right to which it gives effect, it early became and it remains the doctrine in the country whence our laws are derived, and it is accepted and practised upon by a considerable proportion of our American tribunals, that the court may at any time and from time to time, on any change in the circumstances of the parties, increase or reduce the sum allotted for alimony temporary or permanent."

In support of this rather broad general statement the following cases which we are about to notice are cited:

Otway v. Otway, 2 Phillim. 109. In this case, decided by the ecclesiastical court, the divorce was one from bed and board, and the question of permanent alimony was expressly reserved in the decree.

The case of Cook v. Cook, reported in the same volume at page 40, upon which the Otway Case was based, is likewise a case of divorce a mensa et thoro.

Rogers v. Vines, 28 N. C. (6 Ired. Law) 293. In this case the divorce was one from bed and board.

Richmond v. Richmond, 2 N. J. Eq. (1 Green Ch.) 90. This case was based squarely upon a statute conferring upon the court the power at any time on a change of circumstances to vary the allowance of alimony by increasing or diminishing it, and the decree involved the rights of minor children.

Bursler v. Bursler, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 427. The divorce in this case was from bed and board.

Holmes v. Holmes, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 295. This case was one where the divorce was a mensa et thoro.

Barber v. Barber, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 280. The decree in this case granted a divorce from bed and board.

Sheafe v. Sheafe, 36 N. H. 155. The opinion in this case was based upon a statute of New Hampshire expressly empowering the court to modify its decrees in such cases.

Saunders v. Saunders, 1 Swab. & Tr. 72. The divorce in this case was from bed and board.

Foote v. Foote, 22 Ill. 425. The decree involved the rights of minor children, and was rendered in a state having a statute expressly conferring upon the courts the power to modify decrees in divorce cases.

Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 120 Mass. 390. The judgment was based upon a statute conferring the power to modify.

Coad v. Coad, 41 Wis. 23. This case is based upon a statute of Wisconsin expressly conferring the power to modify decrees in such cases.

Williams v. Williams, 29 Wis. 517. The power exercised was expressly reserved in the decree, and the case was based upon a statute.

Waters v. Waters, 49 Mo. 385. The allowance was for temporary alimony made, of course, during the pendency of the action.

Ellis v. Ellis, 13 Neb. 91, 13 N. W. 29. This case was based upon an express statute of Nebraska empowering the court to modify its decrees in reference to alimony from time to time.

Olney v. Watts, 43 Ohio St. 499, 3 N. E. 354. This case, stripped from the authorities upon which it is based, would seem to sustain the general statement in the text that all decrees for alimony might be modified or changed to meet new conditions. It is, however, based in part upon Mr. Bishop's former work on the Law of Marriage and Divorce, § 429, where the same authorities are referred to as those above noted and reviewed. It also cites the rule announced by Dr. Lushington in the ecclesiastical court, where, as we have already observed, the decrees were always from bed and board merely.

In addition to the authorities contained in the footnote to Bishop on Marriage, Divorce, and Separation, the cases of Fisher v. Fisher, 32 Iowa, 20, McGee v. McGee, 10 Ga. 486, Wheeler v. Wheeler, 18 Ill. 39, and Lockridge v. Lockridge, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 258, are cited. In the Fisher Case the opinion is based upon a statute of Iowa providing that, after a divorce is granted, subsequent changes may be made by the court in reference to maintenance of the wife when circumstances render them expedient. The McGee Case was one dealing with the question of temporary alimony. In the Wheeler Case the question was considered on appeal from the original decree, so that palpably no question of subsequent modification was involved, and the rather loose, general language contained in the opinion with reference to the right to modify such decrees was pure dictum. In the Lockridge Case the decree granted a divorce from bed and board only, as will be seen from the statement of the case on a former hearing in the Kentucky Court of Appeals. 3 Dana, 28, 28 Am. Dec. 52. It is therefore evident that the authority upon which the Olney Case is based does not warrant the conclusion reached in it. The soundness of this case has also been questioned by the learned tribunal which rendered it. In Law v. Law, 64 Ohio St. 369, 60 N. E. 560, it is said:

> "The view presented by counsel for the plaintiff in error is that the terms of the original decree, not being affected by fraud or mistake, were conclusive upon the subject of alimony, and not subject to modification for any reason. Since no question was reserved by the decree for future consideration, that view receives strong support from Petersine v. Thomas, 28 Ohio St. 596, and from the general course of decisions upon the subject. Authority for the subsequent modification of the decree is, however, said to be found in the later case of Olney v. Watts, 43 Ohio St. 499 [3 N. E. 354]. * * * If it be assumed that the case was correctly decided, it affords no warrant for the present judgment. * * *"

Thus it will be seen that not one of the cases save the Olney Case is in point in this case. They are all distinguishable in that they are either divorces from bed and board, cases relating to alimony pendente lite, where the rights of children are involved, where the power is expressly reserved in the decree or is based upon a statute expressly conferring it. Not one of them, except the Olney Case, is a case where the decree was absolute, the alimony permanent, the rights of children were not involved, there was no reservation in the decree, and no statute authorizing the change. And we have endeavored to show that the Olney Case is not sound in that the authorities upon which it is based do not sustain it.

14 Cyc. at page 784, in discussing the question here under consideration, uses this language:

> "A decree for permanent alimony is subject to modification because of fraud or mistake in the same manner and under the same circum> stances as other decrees. The general rule would seem to be that, where the divorce is absolute, a decree for permanent alimony containing no reservation of the power of modification cannot be altered after the expiration of the time within which an appeal may be perfected, although it has been held that the court may modify a decree for alimony at any time upon proper allegations of the changed conditions and circumstances of the parties."

In support of the latter statement it cites a number of the same cases referred to by Mr. Bishop and the cases cited in Olney v. Watts, supra, which we have already reviewed. In addition the following cases are cited upon which we shall comment in passing:

Stevens v. Stevens, 31 Colo. 188, 72 Pac. 1061. The entire opinion in that case is as follows:

> "By virtue of the general equity powers of a court granting a divorce, as well as by virtue of the provision of section 9 of the Divorce Act (Session Laws 1893, p. 240, c. 80), such court has the authority to modify the decree relative to alimony payable in the future, and the custody and control of minor children, as the changed circumstances of the parties may render necessary and just. Richmond v. Richmond, 2 N. J. Eq. 90; Sheafe v. Sheafe, 36 N. H. 155; Coad v. Coad, 41 Wis. 23; Foote v. Foote, 22 Ill. 425. There are no decisions of this court or the Court of Appeals to the contrary. The judgment of the county court is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to overrule the demurrer to the petition. Reversed."

It will be seen that the cases cited have all been distinguished in discussing the cases cited by Mr. Bishop. Justice Steele wrote a dissenting opinion, which was concurred in by the Chief Justice, wherein he pointed out that the Colorado statute did not confer the power to modify, and in the course of the opinion said:

> "The authorities cited in the opinion are not in point. In New Jersey, New Hampshire, Wisconsin, and Illinois the statutes provide that after final decree the court shall have power to change or modify it in accordance with the changed circumstances of the parties."

Andrews v. Andrews, 15 Iowa, 423, and Jungk v. Jungk, 5 Iowa, 541. Both of these cases are based upon the same statute referred to in Fisher v. Fisher, supra.

Bristow v. Bristow (Ky.) 51 S. W. 819. In this case the alimony allowed was for the benefit of the wife and a minor child, and, as we have already noted, the jurisdiction in such cases as it relates to children is continuing. The general language found in the opinion will be understood by reading section 2123, Kentucky Statutes.

Barbaras v. Barbaras, 88 Minn. 105, 92 N. W. 522. This case is based upon a statute conferring upon the court the power to modify, being section 4809, General Statutes of 1894.

King v. King, 38 Ohio St. 370. In this case the alimony was pendente lite, and the question involved was the power to increase it.

Whitton v. Whitton, 71 L. J. P. & Adm. 10. This was an action for the purpose of varying a marriage settlement, and was based upon the matrimonial causes act. None of these cases in our opinion in any way militate against the rule as we have heretofore stated it applicable to the class of cases we are now considering.

In our examination of the authorities we have found three cases which we deem worthy of special notice. These are Alexander v. Alexander, 13 App. D. C. 334, 45 L. R. A. 806, Emerson v. Emerson, 120 Md. 584, 87 Atl. 1033, and Francis v. Francis, 192 Mo. App. 710, 179 S. W. 975. In the Alexander Case the court seems to have adopted the rule that, where the alimony awarded to the wife is payable in installments, the court has the power to subsequently change it, even though it was allowed in a case where the divorce was absolute and there was no reservation in the decree giving to the party who sought the modification the right to petition the court therefor. In reading the opinion, however, it is plain that the conclusion was induced somewhat by the acts of Congress relating to the District of Columbia. That this is so is indicated by the opinion in Emerson v. Emerson, supra. In that case Justice Constable, commenting upon the Alexander Case, said:

> "It declared the jurisdictional right of modification existed in virtue of the acts of Congress, which acts are virtually in the language and meaning of our acts."

No authorities are cited in support of the conclusion reached in the Alexander Case in the absence of statute, but it is sought to distinguish that case from the cases from Maine, Rhode Island, New York, Ohio, Alabama, and Kansas, and one from its own court, upon the thought that the alimony allowed in most of those cases was in gross and was not alimony in the proper sense of the term; that is to say, the alimony was not payable in periodical installments, but was an arrangement of property interests between the parties. It is admitted in the opinion, however, that in two of the cases sought to be distinguished the alimony allowed was payable in monthly installments of indefinite continuance. In the course of the opinion the court says:

> "It is conceded on the part of the appellant that, upon good cause shown of inability on the part of the husband to pay the alimony, the court might order a suspension of payment, and would not, or rather should not, punish him as for contempt of court. But it seems to us that this concession virtually concedes the whole case. If the decree for the allowance of the alimony is of the rigid, inflexible, and unchangeable character claimed for it in the bill of review now before us, it is not apparent how it can be suspended any more that it can be modified by a reduction of the amount."

We are unable to subscribe to this reasoning. It seems to us to confuse the means of enforcing the decree with the power to modify it. In the event the delinquent husband is cited for contempt and it is made to appear that he is unable to pay, the wife is simply deprived of one of the means provided by law for the collection of her alimony. The decree, however, is in no sense modified or suspended, but remains unaltered and in full force, and, if the husband should subsequently acquire property or become able to pay, he could be compelled to satisfy the decree according to its precise terms. If an execution is issued upon a judgment in an ordinary action and is returned by the sheriff "No property found," would it be contended that the judgment had been altered? In the latter as in the former case the holder of the judgment is merely deprived of one of the means by which it may be enforced. It will not do to say that the inability to enforce a judgment or decree either suspends it or works a modification of its provisions.

It is next argued that it is conceded that, if there is a reservation in the decree in favor of the one seeking to have the allowance of alimony changed, he or she may apply to the court at any time for a modification, and the court would have authority to make it. Then follows this statement:

> "And yet it is not quite apparent how the court could have well reserved to itself the authority to modify a decree if that authority was not already vested in it by law."

In our opinion, this argument overlooks the principle upon which the rule rests, that where the decree contains a reservation, the power to modify exists. By such a reservation the court does not undertake to confer jurisdiction upon itself. It merely reserves the right to exercise the unexhausted portion of jurisdiction which it already has. As we have heretofore pointed out, the reason such decrees are not conclusive as a matter of law is because they do not purport to be conclusive as a matter of fact. We freely confess that many reasons of practical convenience may be urged in favor of the conclusion reached in the Alexander Case, and these, no doubt, have had their influence in causing the Legislatures in most of the states to enact statutes expressly conferring upon the courts the power to alter or modify decrees relating to alimony, but the very existence of such statutes is at least some argument that the courts did not possess the power to modify in all cases prior to the enactment of the statutes. What was the necessity for such statutes if the courts prior to their enactment possessed the power to modify their decrees in all cases relating to alimony?

In the Emerson Case the statute of Maryland provided:

> "The courts of equity of this state shall and may hear and determine all causes for alimony in as full and ample manner as such causes could be heard and determined by the laws of England in the ecclesiastical courts there."

The statute also conferred upon the courts of equity power to grant alimony in all cases where divorces were granted, and there was no definition of alimony in the statute. It was therefore concluded that, as the power of the court was like that of the ecclesiastical courts of England, and that such courts had power to modify their decrees relating to alimony, the courts of Maryland likewise possessed that power by virtue of the statute regardless of the nature of the decree to which the award of alimony was incident, and cited with approval the Alexander Case with the comment, among others, heretofore quoted.

In the Francis Case the Supreme Court of Missouri recently discussed the question now before us at some length, notwithstanding the decree in that case contained the provision "until the further orders of this court," and further that by section 2375 of the Revised Statutes 1909 of Missouri it is provided that, on application of either party, the court may make such alterations in its decrees relating to alimony or maintenance as may be proper at any time. In the course of the opinion it is said that the case of Alexander v. Alexander, supra, was cited approvingly by the Supreme Court of the United States in Audubon v. Shufeldt, 181 U. S. 575, 21 Sup. Ct. 735, 45 L. Ed. 1009. An examination of the Audubon Case will disclose that the appeal in that case was from the District of Columbia, and the question presented was whether a judgment rendered in the state of Maryland requiring Shufeldt to pay alimony to his divorced wife at the rate of $50 per month was such a debt as might be discharged in bankruptcy. In commenting upon the law of Maryland and the District of Columbia, it notices, among other cases, the Alexander Case. In determining the character of the judgment the Supreme Court would look to the laws of the jurisdiction in which it was rendered, and the Maryland court has since approved the holding in the Alexander Case as being based upon statutes similar to its own. Mr. Justice Gray, in the course of his opinion in the Audubon Case said that, "generally speaking," alimony may be altered at any time as the circumstances of the parties may require. To this statement of the rule we subscribe, but cases of the character we are now considering are very exceptional.

We cannot without inordinately extending this already too long opinion undertake to discuss at length the cases from our own jurisdiction. We have endeavored to examine all of them, and our investigation discloses that, whenever a decree has been modified, it has been in a case where the right to modify was expressly reserved in the decree or the rights of children were involved, and in the latter class of cases this court has said in varying forms of words that, where alimony is awarded for the support of children, the decree is a continuing one and the jurisdiction of both the parties and the subject-matter continues so long as there is a minor child whose welfare and maintenance are provided for in the decree. If the power to modify decrees relating to childrer terminates when there is no longer a minor child whose welfare and maintenance are provided for in the decree, does it not necessarily follow that, if there had been no minor child, the power to modify would not have existed in the first instance? As the result of our study of the authorities, we are induced to conclude that, where the divorce is from bed and board, and the decree provides for the payment of alimony, it may be modified to meet changed conditions, because of the continuance of the status of marriage, and further because the common-law courts have inherent jurisdiction in such cases, the rules of the ecclesiastical courts being a part of the common law; that where the alimony is temporary, it may, of course, be changed during the pendency of the action; where the alimony is for the purpose of providing maintenance for minor children, the decree may be modified so long as there are minor children to be cared for, the duty to support the child springing from the parental relation which continues to subsist after the marital status in which it had its origin has terminated; that, where the decree contains an express reservation of the power to modify, the court may thereafter exercise the unexhausted portion of its jurisdiction, the judgments in such cases not purporting to be final; where the right to modify is conferred by statute, it clearly exists regardless of whether the decree be one of absolute divorce or mere separation; but that, both upon principle and authority, where the decree grants an absolute divorce and permanent alimony, though payable in installments, is allowed, and there are no minor children to be cared for, and the decree contains no reservation of jurisdiction, and there is no statute conferring the power to modify, after the time for appeal has expired and the time limited by statute within which judgments may be modified has elapsed, and the judgment is not attacked upon the ground of fraud or mistake, there is no power in the court to modify or alter it to meet changed conditions.

The judgment is affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and MORRIS and MAIN, JJ., concur.

CHADWICK, J. (dissenting). That the sea of matrimony is "thick and uncertain" with neither chart nor compass to guide the mariner who embarks upon it is well understood. Judge WEBSTER has most ably read the chart which marks the tortuous channels that lie in front of those who divide the life belt and thenceforward drift alone. His opinion is sustained by authority, and, as it demonstrates the state of the law, it seems to me that it as clearly demonstrates a necessity for curative legislation. After a marriage has been dissolved by divorce and alimony awarded the divorcée—it is not regarded as chivalrous to award alimony to a divorcé—there is no reason, except in law, why the parties should not be subject to the call of changed conditions.

The grass widow may marry again, or may prosper upon her own account. In either event the rejected spouse should be freed of the burden of support. Or the grass widower may become poor, or again marry, and happily, in which case society should concern itself to see that a tie that is broken between persons intolerable to each other does not become a club of revenge and hate in the hands of the one, or a millstone about the neck of the other.

As I have said, every reason, the dictates of common sense, the interest of society, and the logic of our statutes defining the status of married persons, save the law, call for a different rule.

It might well behoove the Legislature of this state to put us in line with other states where the evil to which we are bound by authority has been cured by appropriate legislation.

(97 Wash. 70)

CRAWFORD v. SEATTLE, R. & S. RY. CO. et al. (No. 13691.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 20, 1917.)

1. STREET RAILROADS ⟾69—USE OF STREETS —RIGHT TO PERCENTAGE OF INTERURBAN RAILWAY INCOME.

Where a city deprived an interurban railway company and its receivers of the use of a certain street as provided in its franchise, for a certain period, this was a partial eviction suspending the city's right to collect the percentage, stipulated in the franchise, of the gross income from operation of the railway during such period.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 157–165.]

2. TENDER ⟾17—NECESSITY OF ACCEPTANCE.

A tender not accepted is not a waiver of defense to claim for the amount tendered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Tender, Cent. Dig. § 54.]

3. STREET RAILROADS ⟾69—LICENSE TAX—ADMISSION BY PAYMENT OF AMOUNT SUBSEQUENTLY ACCRUING.

Where a city unlawfully deprived an interurban railway and its receivers of the use of a certain street for a certain period, the payment of the percentage of the railway's income, stipulated in its franchise, accruing after the railway had been restored to the use of the street, was not an admission of the city's right to such percentage during the period of deprivation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 157–165.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; A. W. Frater, Judge.

Action by William R. Crawford against the Seattle, Renton & Southern Railway Company and others for the appointment of a receiver, in which the City of Seattle filed petition for allowance of its claim. From judgment denying the City recovery, it appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 92 Wash. 670, 159 Pac. 782.

Hugh M. Caldwell, Walter F. Meier, and George A. Meagher, all of Seattle, for appellant. Higgins & Hughes, of Seattle (Hyman Zettler, of Seattle, of counsel), for respondent.

PARKER, J. The city of Seattle filed in the above-entitled action its petition for allowance of its claim against the receivers of the Seattle, Renton & Southern Railway Company appointed therein. The city's claim is for $13,078, being 2 per cent. of the gross receipts of the operation of the lines of the railway company, and is rested upon the provisions of the franchise granted to it by the city. Trial upon the merits in the superior court resulted in findings and judgment denying recovery by the city, from which it has appealed to this court.

During the period here in question, the lines of the railway company were operated by it and its receivers under a franchise granted by the city of Seattle, which contained, among other provisions, the following:

> "The grantee, its successors and assigns, shall pay annually to the city of Seattle two per cent. per annum of the gross receipts derived from the operation of said railways from and after the date of the acceptance of this franchise until its expiration. * * * Said payments shall be made on the 15th day of January of each and every year for the year preceding. * * *"

Assuming that the railway lines were operated under and in full enjoyment of this franchise without interference by the city authorities, during the period from January 1, 1912, to March 4, 1915, there became due from the company and its receivers to the city the sum of $13,078, no part of which has been paid. At the time of granting the franchise, because of the prospective regrading of Dearborn street, over which one of the lines contemplated by the franchise was to be constructed and operated, the railway company was temporarily permitted by the city to maintain a line upon King street; the line upon Dearborn street to be constructed as soon as that street would be regraded. On December 23, 1910, the city passed an ordinance purporting to repeal and forfeit the franchise under which the railway lines were being operated. This repealing ordinance was decreed void and of no effect by the federal court sitting in Seattle on March 4, 1915, in an action then pending therein wherein the railway company was plaintiff and the city was defendant. Prior thereto the court rendered an opinion in accordance with which the decree was entered, which opinion is reported in Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. v. Seattle (D. C.) 216 Fed. at page 694. At all times in question there was in force in the city a general ordinance making it unlawful for any person or corporation holding a franchise to use or occupy any public street in the city to perform work upon the streets thereunder without first applying for and procuring a permit therefor from the board of public works. During the period from January 1, 1912, to March 4, 1915, the railway company and its receivers were prevented by the city authorities from constructing any tracks looking to the operation of a line of railway upon Dearborn street, though they had duly made application for permits to proceed with the construction of that line as contemplated by the franchise ordinance, and during all of that period Dearborn street had been regraded and was physically ready for the construction of the railway line thereon. The refusal of the city authorities to allow the railway company or its receivers to so proceed was because of the contention of the city that the railway company's franchise had been forfeited, and that it had no right to occupy any of the streets of the city with its railway lines. During this period, the railway company was compelled to continue to maintain its temporary line upon King street, which, by reason of conditions attending the operation of the line there, resulted in the railway company being under the necessity of expending more than $1,500 per month in excess of what it would have cost to maintain its lines upon Dearborn street, so that the railway company during the period of approximately 38 months incurred an expense of over $56,000 more than it would have incurred in the operation of a line upon Dearborn street had it been permitted to do so as its franchise contemplated. In January, 1913, and January, 1914, the receivers of the railway company tendered to the city sums equal to 2 per cent. of the gross receipts derived from the operation of the railway lines for the years 1912 and 1913, respectively. These tenders were refused by the city, they being made at a time when the city was contending that the franchise of the railway company had been forfeited.

It is contended in the city's behalf that neither the railway company nor its receivers should be permitted to avail themselves of the defense of the refusal of the city to permit the construction of the railway line on Dearborn street, because there was not sufficient showing that the railway company or its receivers were ready, willing, and able to construct that line. This contention, we think, is wholly without merit. As well said by counsel for the receivers, the city "is seeking to recover on a contract when it admits that it was not only unwilling to perform its part of the contract but positively refused to do so." Even if it were necessary for the receivers to affirmatively show willingness and ability on the part of the railway company and on their part to build the line on Dearborn street, the record, we think, makes sufficient prima facie showing in that regard. It is possible that in the latter part of the period in question, when the receivership was about to be wound up, it might then not have been practical for the receivers to proceed with the construction of the line on Dearborn street. But, even if this be true, we think the city is not in a position to now take advantage of that fact. Indeed, the amount of loss resulting to the railway company and the receivers because of being compelled to operate the line on King street instead of Dearborn street argues that the city was in no small degree responsible for whatever lack of ability there may have been on the part of the receivers to construct the line upon Dearborn street, during the latter part of the period in question.

[1] It is contended by counsel for the city that the continued operation of the King street and other lines of the railway system was such an enjoyment of the franchise that the railway company and its receivers should not be permitted to resist payment of the city's claim upon the ground of being prevented from enjoying the use of Dearborn street. We think this contention is answered in substance by the decision of the Supreme Court of Missouri in National Subway Co. v. City of St. Louis, 169 Mo. 319, 69 S. W. 290. The city had granted franchise rights to the subway company to construct and operate electric conduits in the streets; the company being obligated, as one of the conditions of the franchise, to pay the city certain sums semiannually. The city authorities, becoming of the opinion that the franchise ordinance was void, sought to revoke it and denied the company the right to occupy the streets thereunder. The validity of the franchise having been established in the courts, the city sought to collect the semiannual installments from the company during the whole life of the franchise, including the period when the company had been deprived of its rights thereunder. Denying the claimed right of the city to collect the semiannual installments for the period when the company's full enjoyment of its franchise was prevented by the city, Justice Marshall, speaking for the court, observed:

> "The city had the power to make the grant, and to prescribe the terms of the grant. The result attained was the right to so use the streets by the plaintiff, and the right of the city to exact the semiannual payments for the exercise of the right granted. The rights and duties of the parties were therefore mutual and interdependent. The city had no right to the money except as compensation for the enjoyment and exercise of the right granted, and the plaintiff was bound to pay only in case it was allowed to exercise and enjoy the right granted. The plaintiff could not, of course, avoid payment by a voluntary nonuser of the right, nor could the city deny the right, and still insist upon compensation for the exercise of the right denied. Such a position would be inconsistent and unconscionable."

After making some further observations likening the position of the company to that of a tenant of the city, Justice Marshall concluded the opinion as follows:

> "The city is the landlord, and the plaintiff is the tenant. The tenant's quiet enjoyment was interrupted and its possession taken away by the landlord, and therefore its obligation to pay the rent ceased while and as long as such eviction lasted, but sprung into existence again as soon as the enjoyment was restored. Hence the city had no right to demand or exact the semiannual payments during the time the city prevented the plaintiff from enjoying the rights conferred by the ordinances."

That case is exactly like this, except that there was apparently an entire prevention of enjoyment of the franchise in that case, while in this case the prevention of enjoyment of the franchise was only partial. That an eviction of some substantial part of leased premises suspends the right of the landlord to collect rent, even though the tenant remains in possession of other portions of the premises, is well settled by the authorities. In Smith v. McEnany, 170 Mass. 26, 48 N. E. 781, 64 Am. St. Rep. 272, the subject was reviewed by Justice Holmes, now of the Supreme Court of the United States, where he said:

> "It is settled in this state, in accordance with the law of England, that a wrongful eviction of the tenant by the landlord from a part of the premises suspends the rent under the lease. The main reason which is given for the decisions is that the enjoyment of the whole consideration is the foundation of the debt and the condition of the covenant, and that the obligation to pay cannot be apportioned."

In New York Drygoods Store v. Pabst Brewing Co., 112 Fed. 381, 50 C. C. A. 295, Judge Baker, speaking for the Seventh federal Circuit Court of Appeals touching the question of partial eviction as affecting the landlord's right to collect rent, said:

> "It is universally agreed by the authorities that the wrongful eviction or ouster of the tenant by the landlord from an appreciable, material, or substantial part of the demised premises, suspends the rent reserved under the lease, and will defeat the landlord's right to recover the same. The main reason which is given for the decisions is that the enjoyment of the whole consideration is the foundation of the debt and the condition of the covenant, and that the obligation to pay cannot be apportioned. To permit an apportionment of the rent would be to allow the landlord to take advantage of his own wrong."

It seems quite plain to us that the depriving of the railway company and its receivers of the use of Dearborn street, as provided in the franchise, amounted to a partial eviction and suspended the right of the city to collect the 2 per cent. of the gross income from the operation of the railway during the period in question.

[2, 3] It is further contended in behalf of the city that the tender of payments made by the receivers of 2 per cent. of the gross income which accrued for the years 1912 and 1913 was in effect a waiver of the defense which the receivers here make against the city's claim. We think it is a sufficient answer that those tenders were not accepted. They were made at a time when the city was insisting in the federal court that the franchise had been forfeited, and manifestly were made by the receivers in an effort to induce the city to comply with the franchise contract and permit the receivers to proceed thereunder as well as to prevent the possibility of forfeiture of the franchise, then in litigation in the federal court. We are quite unable to understand how the city can now have these tenders construed as an admission on the part of the receivers that the city was legally entitled thereto. If there has been any payment and acceptance of the 2 per cent. of the income accruing after March 4, 1915, it seems plain that, whatever effect such payments might have as an admission that the city was entitled thereto, they could in no event have the effect of an admission that the city was entitled to any payments accruing prior thereto during the period that the railway company and the receivers were deprived of the use of Dearborn street; in other words, during the period when they were in effect partially evicted. Morris v. Kettle, 57 N. J. Law, 218, 30 Atl. 879; Kuschinsky v. Flanigan, 170 Mich. 245, 136 N. W. 362, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 430, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1228.

We are clearly of the opinion that the city is not entitled to recover.

The judgment is affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and MOUNT, FULLERTON, and HOLCOMB, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 137)

STATE v. GREAT NORTHERN RY. CO.

(No. 13895.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 22, 1917.)

Commerce 🔑14—Interstate Commerce—Intoxicating Liquors — Permits to Ship — Statutes—Construction.

Since the Webb-Kenyon Law (Act Cong. March 1, 1913, c. 90, 37 Stat. 699 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 8739]) divests interstate shipments of liquor of their character as interstate commerce, Laws 1915, c. 2, § 18, requiring a permit to be affixed to containers of liquor at the time of shipment, applies to a shipment originating in Kentucky consigned to Washington, and on failure to secure a permit the liquors are liable to seizure.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. §§ 30, 92.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Whatcom County; Wm. H. Pemberton, Judge.

Suit by the State against the Great Northern Railway Company. Judgment for the State, and the Railway appeals. Affirmed.

F. V. Brown, F. G. Dorety, and R. J. Hagman, all of Seattle, for appellant. W. V. Tanner, Atty. Gen., Lindsay L. Thompson, Asst. Atty. Gen., and W. P. Brown, of Bellingham, for the State.

MAIN, J. The purpose of this action was to cause the seizure and destruction of intoxicating liquor which, it was claimed, had been transported into this state in violation of law. The trial resulted in a judgment directing the destruction of the liquor. From this judgment, one of the defendants, the Great Northern Railway Company, appeals.

The facts are these: The subject of the controversy is 15 casks of whisky, of the value of $500 or $600. On February 9, 1916, these casks were shipped by the Bernheim Distilling Company, at Louisville, Ky., to Collins & Co., regularly licensed pharmacists and druggists, in the city of Bellingham. The casks of whisky arrived in Bellingham in due course of transportation, and were held by the railway company, at its warehouse at that point, awaiting delivery to the consignee, Collins & Co., at the time the warrant was issued, and the property seized by the sheriff. No permit, as required by section 18 of the prohibition law (Laws of 1915, c. 2), was affixed to the casks at the time of shipment, or at any time prior to the seizure. It is claimed by the appellant that, since the breach of the prohibition law related to the manner of shipment, and there was no violation of a law which prohibited the shipment of intoxicating liquor into the state, the railroad company had the right to carry the whisky as an article of interstate commerce, even though in doing so it violated a provision of the prohibition law as to the manner or conditions upon which the transportation would be permitted. The act Congress passed during the year 1913, and known as the Webb-Kenyon Law, 1914 Fed. Stat. Ann. 208, prohibits the shipment or transportation of intoxicating liquor from one state into another, when such shipment would violate any law of the state into which the shipment is made.

The question, then, is whether that law was intended to prohibit the shipment when there was only a violation of the state law as to the manner of shipment, and there was no general prohibition in the state statute against the shipment of liquor into the state. In Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland R. Co., 242 U. S. 311, 37 Sup. Ct. 180, 61 L. Ed. 326, L. R. A. 1917B, 1218, the plaintiff sought to compel the railroad company to transport a shipment of liquor from the state of Maryland to a point of delivery in the state of West Virginia, there being in force in the latter state, at the time, a prohibition law. In the course of the opinion in that case, and speaking with reference to the scope of the Webb-Kenyon Act, it was said:

> "Reading the Webb-Kenyon Law in the light thus thrown upon it by the Wilson Act [Act Aug. 8, 1890, c. 728, 26 Stat. 313 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 8738)] and the decisions of this court which sustained and applied it, there is no room for doubt that it was enacted simply to extend that which was done by the Wilson Act; that is to say, its purpose was to prevent the immunity characteristic of interstate commerce from being used to permit the receipt of liquor through such commerce in states contrary to their laws, and thus in effect afford a means of subterfuge and indirection to set such laws at naught. In this light it is clear that the Webb-Kenyon Act, if effect is to be given to its text, but operated so as to cause the prohibitions of the West Virginia law against shipment, receipt, and possession to be applicable and controlling irrespective of whether the state law did or did not prohibit the individual use of liquor. That such also was the embodied spirit of the Webb-Kenyon Act plainly appears, since, if that be not true, the coming into being of the act is wholly inexplicable.

“The case in this court relied upon to establish the contrary (Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 238 U. S. 190, 35 Sup. Ct. 824, 59 L. Ed. 1267, L. R. A. 1916C, 273, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 1167) clearly does not do so. All that was decided in that case was that, as the court of last resort of Kentucky, into which liquor had been shipped, had held that the state statute did not forbid shipment and receipt of liquor for personal use, therefore the Webb-Kenyon Act did not apply, since it only applied to things which the state law prohibited. The leading state case cited is Van Winkle v. State, 4 Boyce (Del.) 578, 91 Atl. 385, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 104. It is true in that case the state law prohibited shipment to and receipt of intoxicants in local option territory, and if the Webb-Kenyon Law had been applied, there would have been no possible ground for claiming that the state prohibitions could be escaped because the liquor was shipped in interstate commerce. But the shipment was held to be protected as interstate commerce despite the state prohibition, because the Webb-Kenyon Law was not correctly applied, for the following reason: Coming to consider the text of that law, the court said that as the Webb-Kenyon Act prohibited the shipment of intoxicants ‘only when liquor is intended to be used in violation of the law of the state,’ and as the liquor shipped was intended for personal use, which was not forbidden, therefore the shipment, although prohibited by the state law, was beyond the reach of the Webb-Kenyon Act. But we see no ground for following the ruling thus made, since, as we have already pointed out, it necessarily rested upon an entire misconception of the text of the Webb-Kenyon Act, because that act did not simply forbid the introduction of liquor into a state for a prohibited use, but took the protection of interstate commerce away from all receipt and possession of liquor prohibited by state law.

“The movement of liquor in interstate commerce and the receipt and possession and right to sell prohibited by the state law having been in express terms divested by the Webb-Kenyon Act of their interstate commerce character, it follows that if that act was within the power of Congress to adopt, there is no possible reason for holding that to enforce the prohibitions of the state law would conflict with the commerce clause of the Constitution; and this brings us to the last question, which is:

“4. Did Congress have power to enact the Webb-Kenyon Law?”

Then follows a discussion and holding which sustains the power of Congress to enact the Webb-Kenyon Law. From the excerpt quoted from that opinion, it appears that the movement of liquor in interstate commerce, which is prohibited by the state law, is divested by the Webb-Kenyon Act of its character as interstate commerce. The purpose of the act was to prevent the immunity characteristic of interstate commerce from being used to permit the receipt of liquor through such commerce “in states contrary to their laws.”

Under the doctrine announced in that case, we think that intoxicating liquor is divested of its character of interstate commerce by the Webb-Kenyon Act, where its shipment into the state violates the state statute as to the manner or conditions upon which such shipments may be made. The shipment here in controversy violated the section of the prohibition law which makes it unlawful for a railroad company, or other transportation company, to transport or convey intoxicating liquor into the state, without having a permit issued by the county auditor “affixed in a conspicuous place to the parcel or package containing the liquor.”

The briefs in the case now before us were written and filed prior to the decision in Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland R. Co., supra, and we think the other questions presented are answered adversely to the appellant's contention in that case.

The judgment will be affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and CHADWICK, MORRIS, and WEBSTER, JJ., concur.

(96 Wash. 637)

MURPHY v. PANTON et al. (No. 13593.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 15, 1917.)

1. CORPORATIONS 🔑563(2) — STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY—RIGHTS OF RECEIVER—TRANSFER OF STOCK.

The receiver of an insolvent corporation can have no greater right than the corporation against the stockholders unless it is affirmatively shown that the rights of creditors existing at the time were prejudiced by a record in the minute book of the corporation of a transfer of their stock which had been fully paid for to the corporation and an agreement to subscribe for the same amount of stock which they had surrendered, all of which was done pursuant to the desire to release their right to vote a part of the stock.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2280½.]

2. EVIDENCE 🔑450(5)—ISSUE OF STOCK—PRESUMPTION.

Stock once issued carries a presumption that it is paid for, and to surrender stock seven years after its issuance and immediately subscribe and promise to pay for it is a transaction sufficiently clouded by ambiguity to warrant a resort to parol evidence to explain the transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 2071.]

3. CORPORATIONS 🔑248 — RIGHT OF CREDITORS—ESTOPPEL.

Where stockholders in a corporation transferred their stock which had been fully paid for to the corporation and immediately subscribed for the same amount of stock as had been surrendered, a receiver of the corporation on its subsequent insolvency could not hold such stockholders as for unpaid subscriptions on the ground that the corporation gave statements to commercial agencies showing such subscriptions, and upon which credit was extended, since estoppel implies hurt or injury, or the doing of a thing which, but for the thing relied on, would not have been done, and it is inconceivable that complaining creditors would have extended credit on the faith of a subscription, and denied it on a representation that the stock was paid in full.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 998–1001.]

4. Corporations 🔑229 — Stockholders' Liability—Trust Fund Doctrine.

The doctrine which sustains the rights of a creditor to enforce the payment of a stock subscription is that of the trust fund, under which doctrine no stockholder may, by his own act, put it within the power of the corporation to hold out capital stock either paid up or subscribed when it is neither paid up nor subscribed, and a subscription contract can only be waived, canceled, or dissolved by the mutual consent of the subscriber, the other stockholders, and corporate creditors existing at the time of the cancellation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 876.]

5. Corporations 🔑248—Stockholders.

Where stockholders in a corporation transferred their paid-up stock to the corporation and subscribed for the same amount of stock which they had surrendered, they were stockholders with paid-up stock, and not liable at the suit of the receiver of the corporation upon its subsequent insolvency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 998–1001.]

6. Corporations 🔑83 — Stock Subscriptions — Cancellation of Agreement to Subscribe.

Where a stockholder agreed to subscribe for stock, and, being unable to pay for a part of it, in order to insure him the control of the corporation, it was agreed that other stockholders should turn into the treasury their specified shares, and a subsequent agreement canceled the agreement whereby the stockholders agreed to subscribe for the unpaid shares, "in its entirety, the same having been fulfilled and complied with to the best ability of both parties," the contention that the subsequent agreement was in effect no more than a cancellation of the agreement to subscribe, and not a cancellation of the actual subscription, was without merit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 328–336, 1407.]

7. Corporations 🔑240(1) — Liability of Stockholders—"Existing Creditor."

Where creditors of a corporation were wholesalers who had before and after an attempted cancellation of a stock subscription furnished goods from time to time as ordered, although the claim which they now assert accrued after the attempted cancellation, they are nevertheless "existing creditors" at the time of the cancellation, entitled to contest the validity of such cancellation to which they did not consent for the stock not paid for, since a publication of the amount of capital stock is a continued holding out to all the world, and creditors present as well as prospective, that the capital is paid or subscribed, and it would be an impeachment of the trust fund doctrine to hold that one who had opened a line of credit with a corporation, presumptively on the faith of its representations as to capital stock, and furnished goods from time to time, should be denied the status of an "existing creditor," and when relations are once assumed, the law ought to presume in the absence of evidence of notice that each transaction, if, in the aggregate, they possess the character of a course of dealing, is based on the faith established when the first account was opened.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1100½.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Existing Creditor.]

8. Corporations 🔑244(6) — Subscribers — Right of Subscriber to Sell—Liability of Purchaser.

Where the trust fund doctrine of liability of stockholders to creditors for the amount unpaid on stock subscriptions prevails, if a subscriber sells to another in good faith, the purchaser stands in the shoes of the first subscriber, who is thereby released from liability without injury to the stock, whether subscribed or paid up.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 968–971.]

9. Corporations 🔑88—Subscribers—Right of Corporation to Compromise Claim.

If a subscriber for corporate stock be insolvent, a corporation may compromise its claim, but it must be for a valuable consideration, and sustained on the theory that the money worth of the capital stock is not impaired, and that something is substituted for the promise of the subscriber.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 337–364, 425–428.]

10. Corporations 🔑83 — Stockholders' Right to Sell Stock.

Where there was nothing to sustain an act of cancellation of a stock subscription except the cancellation itself, and there was no pretense of keeping the capital unimpaired, the cancellation was invalid, since a trade in stock which impairs the money worth of the stock is invalid; as stock or a live subscription must represent the money worth of the corporation up to the full extent of the authorized capital.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 328–336, 1407.]

11. Corporations 🔑229—Subscribers—Effect of Loan to Corporation.

The fact that a subscriber had advanced money for the benefit of the corporation and had indorsed a note made by it to its landlord in payment of its rent did not release such subscriber from his obligation as such, and he would, at the best, be a creditor of the corporation, with the privilege of asserting his claim to be paid pro rata with other creditors, although the rights of creditors in the assets of an insolvent corporation are superior to those of stockholders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 876.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; Everett Smith, Judge.

Suit by John F. Murphy, as receiver of the John Panton Company, against John Panton and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions to enter a judgment for plaintiff as to the named defendant and affirmed as to other defendants.

Wettrick, Anderson & Wettrick, of Seattle, for appellant. Bogle, Graves, Merritt & Bogle and Hall & Cosgrove, all of Seattle, for respondents.

CHADWICK, J. This suit was brought to recover upon unpaid stock subscriptions. Respondents London, Atkinson, and Wolfe are charged as subscribers to the capital stock of the John Panton Company, formerly the Edwin London Company, and later the London-Panton Company, a corporation organized under the laws of this state.

Appellant contends that their liability rests primarily in the records of the company, and secondarily in the doctrine of estoppel. To make a prima facie case, counsel introduced the following record of date December 30, 1911, from the minute book of the company:

> "On motion of John Panton, seconded by H. H. Wolfe and carried, the secretary is instructed to cancel and reoffer for sale the following shares of capital stock of the company: (58) fifty-eight shares held by Edwin London; (41) forty-one shares held by H. H. Wolfe; and (16) sixteen shares held by Y. H. Atkinson. Reasons for same being canceled on account of not having been paid for."
>
> "On motion the company then offered the (115) one hundred and fifteen shares for sale at par. Edwin London offered to purchase (58) fifty-eight shares. H. H. Wolfe offered to purchase (41) forty-one shares, and Y. H. Atkinson offered to purchase (16) sixteen shares."
>
> "On motion of John Panton; seconded by H. H. Wolfe and carried, that the offers of Edwin London, H. H. Wolfe and Y. H. Atkinson for the (115) one hundred and fifteen shares of the capital stock be accepted and stock delivered to the parties as soon as paid for."

Over the objection of appellant, respondents were permitted to show that at the time the minute was made the capital stock of the Edwin London Company was $60,000, divided between Edwin London, J. H. Atkinson, H. H. Wolfe, and a nominal stockholder holding one share; that it was deemed wise to increase the capital stock of the corporation to $125,000; that John Panton was willing to take up the whole of the increase of $65,000; that Mr. Panton demanded that the name of the corporation should be changed to the John Panton Company; that he should have control of the corporation and be its general manager; that he was unable to pay more than $54,000 in cash; that in order to insure him the control of the corporation, it was agreed that the other parties should return into the treasury shares as follows: London, 58 shares; Y. H. Atkinson, 16 shares; and H. H. Wolfe, 41 shares—thus reducing the apparent holding of the parties by 115 shares, which at its par value of $11,500, would overcome the 110 shares for which Panton was unable to pay, which at its par value would amount to $11,000, and, that the interests of the three first named parties might be preserved, they subscribed for the same amount of the stock which they had surrendered. It was further shown that on February 11, 1913, an agreement was signed by all parties save the nominal stockholder canceling the agreement of December 30, 1911, "in its entirety, the same having been fulfilled and complied with to the best ability of both parties."

Appellant insists that the stock of London, Atkinson, and Wolfe had not been fully paid at the time the stock of the Edwin London Company was increased from $35,000 to $60,000. The court found otherwise, and, without reviewing the testimony, we are content to subscribe to his holding.

But, if this be true, appellant hopes to hold London, Atkinson, and Wolfe under the doctrine of estoppel: First, because the record shows an unqualified subscription upon which creditors had a legal right to rely; and, second, because the company gave statements to commercial agencies showing such subscriptions and upon which credit was extended.

[1] Addressing ourselves to the first ground of estoppel, we find no more than a clumsy attempt—the parties acted without counsel—to release their right to vote a part of their stock. The stock had been actually paid for. The parties could have successfully defended in an action brought by the corporation upon a call. The receiver can have no greater right than the corporation would have had, unless it is affirmatively shown that the rights of creditors existing at the time were prejudiced thereby. Walton Lumber Co. v. Commonwealth Lumber Co., 163 Pac. 762.

[2, 3] We have so far proceeded upon the theory that the minute relied on shows a subscription on its face. This may well be doubted. Stock once issued carries a presumption that it is paid for. To surrender stock some seven years after its issuance and to subscribe and promise to pay for it is a transaction sufficiently clouded by ambiguity to warrant a resort to parol evidence to explain the transaction. Nor do we think respondents London, Atkinson, and Wolfe can be held under the second plea of estoppel.

[4] The doctrine which sustains the right of a creditor to enforce the payment of a stock subscription is that of the trust fund. Under this doctrine no stockholder may, by his own act, put it within the power of the corporation to hold out a capital stock either paid up or subscribed when it is neither paid nor subscribed. A chain of circumstances or a course of conduct may make what would seem in law to be a maintaining of the capital stock, while it might not be so in fact. Although counsel seems to maintain otherwise, we had always understood that the main reliance of creditors of an insolvent corporation consisted in the right to inquire beyond the record made by the parties, to the end that the true fact might be revealed. It is upon this principle that creditors' bills are maintained. If this be the right of creditors, we can conceive of no valid objection to the right of the subscriber to reveal the true fact. The fact appearing in this case that the capital stock, in so far as the holdings of London Atkinson, and Wolfe are concerned, has been in no way impaired, that instead of a subscription, as appears on the minute book, and the statements given out by the company, the stock was fully paid, a creditor cannot urge an estoppel, for in law his position is the same whether the stock has been paid for in cash or is subject to payment on call. Estoppel implies hurt or injury, the doing of a thing which, but for the thing relied on, would not have been done. It is inconceivable that the complaining creditors would have extended credit on the faith of a subscription, and denied it upon a representation that the stock was paid in full; yet such is the very premise to which we are driven if we are to hold London, Atkinson, and Wolfe liable as subscribers.

[5] The right of the receiver, in the absence of an estoppel, is to be measured by the relation of London, Atkinson, and Wolfe to the corporation. Notwithstanding the abortive attempt of the parties, we think they were stockholders with paid-up stock, and are not liable at the suit of the appellant.

We have not been able to satisfy ourselves that the Panton subscription can be thus disposed of. That it was Mr. Panton's intention to acquire control of the corporation, that he paid $54,000 in money; and that he subscribed for stock of the par value of $11,500, there can be no doubt. It is equally well established that he did not meet his subscription, and that all parties in interest agreed that his stock subscription should be canceled.

[6] We take no stock in the argument of counsel that the agreement of February 13, 1913, whereby all of the interested parties canceled the agreement of December 30, 1911, whereby Panton agreed to subscribe for the unpaid shares, was canceled "in its entirety, the same having been fulfilled and complied with to the best ability of both parties," was in legal effect no more than a cancellation of the agreement to subscribe, and not a cancellation of the actual subscription, which was made on February 28, 1912.

The intent of the parties was to relieve Panton of his obligation to pay for the stock. Wherefore it follows, if a corporation can cancel a stock subscription so as to avoid the obligation of the subscriber, Panton is not liable. If it cannot, he is.

Counsel for Mr. Panton plant themselves squarely upon the proposition that no creditors existing at the time the cancellation was made are now complaining, and that as to nonexistent creditors the corporation is free to act, if the rights of the stockholders, as between themselves, are not violated. The text of their brief is an unidentified quotation, viz.:

> "A subscription contract, like any other contract, may be waived, canceled, or dissolved by the mutual consent of the parties interested. The interested parties are the subscriber himself, the other stockholders, and the corporate creditors existing at the time of the cancellation."

This text assumes the trust fund doctrine of corporate stock, to which this court is firmly committed. Johns v. Clother, 78 Wash. 602, 139 Pac. 755; Kom v. Cody Detective Agency, 76 Wash. 540, 136 Pac. 1155, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1073; National Realty Co. v. Neilson, 73 Wash. 89, 131 Pac. 446; Brenaman v. Whitehouse, 85 Wash. 355, 148 Pac. 24; Shaw v. Carr, 161 Pac. 345; Lantz v. Moeller, 76 Wash. 429, 136 Pac. 687, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 68. The earlier cases are noted in the authorities cited.

Under the trust fund doctrine, it seems that a subscriber may nevertheless be released, if he have the consent of all the subscribers and the rights of creditors are not involved. National Realty Co. v. Neilson, 73 Wash. 89, 131 Pac. 446.

In Manhattan Trust Co. v. Seattle Coal & Iron Co., 16 Wash. 499, 48 Pac. 333, a subscription to stock was held to be a part of the trust fund. The court said at page 518 of 16 Wash., at page 339 of 48 Pac.:

> "The unpaid subscriptions are a trust fund for the benefit of the creditors of the corporation. The presumption is that the subscribers to the capital stock of a corporation are solvent and that the amount of the capital stock can be realized. That property may be taken by agreement between the corporation and the stockholder in payment of his subscription is the settled doctrine of this court, and does not require any further discussion here. But such a contract between the corporation and stockholder must be an honest one. It must be free from any taint or suspicion of the avoidance on the part of the stockholder of a just payment of his subscription."

See, also, Chamberlain v. Piercy, 82 Wash. 157, 143 Pac. 977.

[7] The demand of the statutes, as well as the logic of the cases, is that the working capital of a corporation is the amount named in its articles, and is, in theory, paid in full, either in cash or by the promise of a subscriber to whom the law will attach the presumption of solvency. Publication of the amount of capital stock is, and must be, a continued holding out to all the world, creditors present as well as prospective, that the capital is paid or subscribed. Such was our holding in Union Trust Co. v. Amery, 67 Wash. 1, 120 Pac. 539.

Counsel contends that all of the subscribers, as well as the only existing creditor, consented to the cancellation. The status of those fostering the receivership proceeding is that of wholesalers who had theretofore and after the attempted cancellation furnished goods from time to time as ordered. It is contended that the claims which they now assert accrued after the attempted cancellation, and that therefore they cannot complain.

We incline to the holding, although the rule contended for be admitted, if the proper facts pertain, that the complaining creditors are nevertheless existing creditors, within the meaning of the term as it is employed in cases of this kind.

It would be an impeachment of the trust fund doctrine to hold that one who had opened a line of credit with a corporation (presumptively on the faith of its representations as to capital stock) and who furnished goods from time to time, as the necessity of its customer required, should be denied the status of an existing creditor. To put one accustomed to dealing with a corporation to the hazard of testing its credit upon each transaction would be violative of that sound public policy which impresses a corporation's every act, but it would also put upon the corporation a bond that would be embarrassing, if not intolerable. Where relations are once assumed, the law ought to presume, in the absence of evidence of notice, that each transaction, if, in the aggregate, they possess the character of "a course of dealing," is based upon the faith established when the first account was opened. There is no testimony tending to show that the protesting creditors had any notice of the attempted cancellation. Upon either theory of the law, we find no escape from the holding that Mr. Panton is bound by his subscription.

[9-10] The contentions of respondent Panton that the cancellation of his stock subscription operates to release him as to subsequent creditors is unsound for another reason, or possibly it is the same reason expressed in another way. Where the trust fund doctrine prevails, all the cases holding that a subscription to corporate stock "may be waived, canceled, or dissolved" rest upon the legal assumption that the stock, whether subscribed or paid up, is not impaired by the withdrawal of the subscriber or stockholder. If the subscriber sell to another in good faith, as the court held in Walton Lumber Co. v. Commonwealth Lumber Co., supra, the purchaser stands in the shoes of the first subscriber. It is so if there be a sale or transfer of issued stock. If the subscriber be insolvent, a corporation may compromise its claim, but it must be for a valuable consideration, and is sustained upon the theory that the money worth of the capital stock is not impaired; that something is substituted for the promise of the subscriber. Stock or a live subscription must represent the money worth of a corporation up to the full extent of the authorized capital.

> "If a trade in the stock impairs the money worth of the stock, it is proscribed. If it does not, it is not an unlawful thing." Shaw v. Carr, 161 Pac. 345.

In the instant case there was no pretense of keeping the capital unimpaired. There was nothing to sustain the act of cancellation except the cancellation itself. This is not enough, for, in legal effect, there was an impairment to the extent of the cancellation. There remained neither an issue nor a subscription to cover the difference of $11,500.

[11] Counsel for Mr. Panton insist that there was a consideration for the cancellation, in that Panton had advanced money for the benefit of the corporation, and had indorsed a note made by it to the landlord in payment of its rent. This would not release Mr. Panton from his obligation as a subscriber to the stock. He would, at best, be a creditor of the corporation with the privilege of asserting his claim, to be paid pro rata with other creditors. We think the same question was passed upon by this court in the case of National Realty Co. v. Neilson, 73 Wash. 89, 131 Pac. 446, where a like claim was made, the court there saying that:

> The allowance of Neilson's claim "would be to permit a stockholder as such to share equally with the creditors in the application of the assets. There can be no question but that the rights of creditors in the assets of an insolvent corporation are superior to those of the stockholders."

If the right of a creditor is superior to that of a stockholder, it follows that they cannot be equal.

Affirmed as to London, Atkinson, and Wolfe. Reversed as to Panton, with directions to enter a judgment for the amount of his subscription.

ELLIS, C. J., and MOUNT, MAIN, and MORRIS, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 27)

COLBURN v. WINCHELL. (No. 13290.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 19, 1917.)

WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨7—APPROPRIATION—NONNAVIGABLE STREAMS—STATE SCHOOL LANDS.

Waters of a nonnavigable stream, on land granted by the United States to the state, and held by it for purpose of a school, being part and parcel of the soil, cannot be appropriated by a nonriparian owner; such lands, under Const. art. 16, §§ 1, 2, being held in trust for all the people, not to be disposed of, except by sale at auction, at not less than the price prescribed in the grant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Cent. Dig. § 2.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Klickitat County; R. H. Back, Judge.

On rehearing. Reversed and remanded for dismissal.

For former opinion, see 160 Pac. 1052.

Geo. F. Felts, of Portland, Or., and I. N. Smith, of Wallace, Idaho, for appellant. N. B. Brooks, of Goldendale, for respondent.

MAIN, J. After the opinion in this case had been filed (160 Pac. 1052), both parties presented petitions for rehearing. In the petition of the defendant and cross-appellant, our attention is called to an error in the statement of facts in the original opinion. It was there stated that the title to the land from which the appropriation of the water was made was in the federal government at the time of the appropriation. This was incorrect. It should have been stated that, at the time the appropriation was made, the land, which was crossed by the nonnavigable stream out of which the water was taken, was held by the state for the purpose of a scientific school. In the year 1895, the federal government granted to the state, together with other lands, the S. E. ¼ of section 11, township 4 N., range 10 E., W. M. Across this land flowed a nonnavigable stream, known as "Old Logging Camp creek." During the year 1903 the then owner of the N. W. ¼ of section 13 of the same township and range went upon section 11 and attempted to appropriate the water of Old Logging Camp creek for irrigation purposes, to be used upon section 13—nonriparian land.

This corrected statement of facts presents a question which was not decided in the original opinion, and that question is whether a nonriparian owner may appropriate water from a nonnavigable stream upon state land, which had been granted to the state for the establishment and maintenance of a scientific school. In Benton v. Johncox, 17 Wash. 277, 49 Pac. 495, 39 L. R. A. 107, 61 Am. St. Rep. 912, it is held that the right of a riparian owner to the waters of a nonnavigable stream is an incident to his estate, and is considered a part of the soil. It was there said:

> "It is held by practically all the better authorities that the right of the riparian owner to the natural flow of the stream by or across his land, in its accustomed channel, is an incident to his estate, and passes by a grant of the land, unless specially reserved. It is not an easement in, or an appurtenance to, the land, but, as Angell says, is as much a part of the soil as the stones scattered over it."

In Bernot v. Morrison, 81 Wash. 538, 143 Pac. 104, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 290, it was said:

> "We hold that the common law, as declared by the Supreme Court of the United States, so far as all unnavigable waters, whether in streams or lakes, are concerned, that is to say, waters not actually navigable, is the common law and rule of decision in this state. We know of nothing in the character of our institutions or in the state of our society militating against its application to all such waters. The declaration in our Constitution (section 1 of article 21) that 'the use of the waters of the state for irrigation, mining and manufacturing purposes shall be deemed a public use' was never intended to destroy riparian rights in unnavigable waters."

Therefore, under the law of this state, the waters of a nonnavigable stream are held to be a part and parcel of the soil over which it flows. Section 11 of the Enabling Act (Act Cong. Feb. 22, 1889, c. 180, 25 Stat. 676) provides that all lands "herein granted for educational purposes" shall be disposed of only at public sale, and at a price of not less than $10 per acre. In section 17 of that act there is granted to the state of Washington, "for the establishment and maintenance of a scientific school, one hundred thousand acres [of land]. * * * "As above stated, the land was selected under that provision of the act of Congress, and the title was in the state at the time the appropriation was made. Section 1 of article 16 of the Constitution of the state provides:

> "All the public lands granted to the state are held in trust for all the people, and none of such lands, nor any estate or interest therein, shall ever be disposed of unless the full market value of the estate or interests disposed of, to be ascertained in such manner as may be provided by law, be paid or safely secured to the state; nor shall any lands which the state holds by grant from the United States (in any case in which the manner of disposal and minimum price are so prescribed) be disposed of except in the manner and for at least the price prescribed in the grant thereof, without the consent of the United States."

Section 2 of the same article provides that:

> "None of the lands granted to the state for educational purposes shall be sold otherwise than at public auction to the highest bidder. * * *"

Under these provisions of the Constitution, it will be seen that the lands granted to the state for the purpose of a scientific school are held in trust for all the people, and that none of such lands, "nor any estate or interest therein," shall be disposed of except in the manner there provided.

It seems to us that the language of the Constitution is too plain for construction. If the water of a nonnavigable stream is to be considered as a part of the soil, and as an incident to the owner's estate in the land, a statute authorizing the appropriation by a nonriparian owner of the water of a nonnavigable stream upon state land, held for educational purposes, would not be in harmony with the constitutional mandate. If the Legislature can authorize the appropriation of water from a nonnavigable stream crossing land which the state holds in trust for the purpose of a scientific school, it could grant an estate or interest in the land without compensation, and in defiance of the constitutional provision which says that no estate or interest therein shall be disposed of, unless the full value of the estate or interest, to be ascertained in the manner provided by law, be paid or secured to the state. It is a matter of common knowledge that the waters of a nonnavigable stream crossing a certain tract of land may, and in certain instances do, constitute its chief value, because, without the water, the land would be barren and unproductive.

We therefore conclude that the appropriation of the water from Old Logging Camp creek by a nonriparian owner cannot be sustained under the Constitution of this state. The general acts of Congress relative to the appropriation of water upon government land can have no application after the title has passed from the federal government to the state. Neither are the decisions of other states in point, where the constitutional limitations are not the same as in this state. The conclusion we have reached upon the question here considered requires a different disposition of the case from that directed in the original opinion.

Upon the defendant's cross-appeal, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with direction to the superior court to dismiss the action.

MORRIS, C. J., and HOLCOMB and PARKER, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 103)

PECK et al. v. LINNEY et al. (No. 13716.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 22, 1917.)

1. CORPORATIONS 🔑613(2) — DISSOLUTION — EFFECT.

Under Laws 1907, p. 271, § 7 (Rem. Code, § 3715), making it the duty of the secretary of the state to strike, from the records of his office, the names of corporations neglecting for two years to pay their annual license fees, and Laws Ex. Sess. 1909, p. 57, § 4 (Rem. Code, § 3715d), authorizing the secretary of state to enter a notation that the corporation is dissolved, unless it be reinstated within six months, the striking of a corporation's name from the records and the notation of its dissolution upon the records worked an actual dissolution of the corporation, and precluded the subsequent institution of any action against it.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑306 — CORPORATIONS 🔑613(2) — DUE PROCESS — DISSOLUTION.

Laws Ex. Sess. 1909, p. 57, § 4, providing for the dissolution of corporations failing to pay their annual license fees, or to apply for reinstatement within a limited time, was not violative of the due process of law provision of the state or federal Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 928, 936, 939, 942–946, 948, 949.]

3. TIME 🔑9(1)—COMPUTATION.

In computing the time within which an act is to be done as prescribed by law, the first day should be excluded and the last day included.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Time, Cent. Dig. §§ 11-16, 24½, 32.]

4. CORPORATIONS 🔑613(2) — DISSOLUTION — VALIDITY.

That the secretary of state made a notation of the dissolution of a corporation pursuant to Laws Ex. Sess. 1909, p. 57, § 4, one day too soon, did not render the dissolution ineffective, where the notation was left on the records at and subsequent to the time when it ought to have been made.

5. CORPORATIONS 🔑630(1) — DISSOLUTION — SUBSEQUENT ACTION.

A corporation dissolved under Laws Ex. Sess. 1909, p. 57, § 4, before enactment of the Act of 1911 permitting a corporation whose name has been stricken from the records of the office of a Secretary of State to have its name reinstated upon the records at any time on payment of certain penalties, and in effect repealing the dissolution provisions of the Laws Ex. Sess. 1909, cannot be sued as a corporate entity by service upon its president, until its corporate existence has been revived and its name reinstated upon the records, assuming that such reinstatement is permissible.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2482, 2483.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; Wm. A. Huneke, Judge.

Action by C. I. Peck and another, as stockholders of the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company, against W. H. Linney and others. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Carey & Johnson, of Colville, for appellants. A. E. Gallagher, of Spokane, for respondents.

PARKER, J. The plaintiffs, as stockholders of the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company, a corporation alleged to have been dissolved as the result of the failure to pay its annual license fees, seek a decree quieting title to certain mining claims in the trustees of that corporation as against the defendants and canceling the tax deed upon which the claim of title made by the defendants is rested. The action is prosecuted by the plaintiffs as stockholders because of the refusal of the trustees of the corporation to do so upon demand made therefor by the plaintiffs. Trial upon the merits in the superior court for Spokane county, to which court the cause was transferred by consent from the superior court for Stevens county, resulted in judgment of dismissal as against the plaintiffs, from which they have appealed to this court.

The facts determinative of the rights of the parties are not in dispute, and may be summarized as follows:

The Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company was duly incorporated under the laws of the state of Washington in the year 1897. It thereafter acquired title to the patented mining claims in question. It failed to pay to the state its annual license fees for several years prior to August 23, 1909, as required by section 6, c. 140, Laws 1907, being section 3714, Rem. Code. On that day, because of such failure to pay its license fees, the secretary of state struck from the records of his office its name in pursuance of the provisions of section 7, c. 140, Laws 1907, being section 3715, Rem. Code, and it not having made application for reinstatement upon the records of the office of the secretary of state as prescribed by chapter 19, Laws of the Extraordinary Session of the Legislature of 1909, as the secretary of state construed that act, he on February 23, 1910, entered upon the records of his office a notation that the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company was dissolved. This, it will be noticed, was done just six months after striking the name of the corporation from the records of his office in pursuance of the provisions of the act of 1907, (section 3715, Rem. Code).

On November 5, 1914, respondent W. H. Linney was the owner of a delinquent tax certificate issued by the treasurer of Stevens county for delinquent taxes upon the mining claims in question. On that day he commenced an action in the superior court for that county against the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company seeking foreclosure of his certificate of delinquency and the sale of the claims. That action resulted in judgment of foreclosure and order of sale on January 18, 1915. In pursuance thereof a sale was had of the mining claims and a tax deed issued by the county treasurer conveying the claims to respondent W. H. Linney on January 30, 1915. Thereafter appellant the Dominion Silver Lead Mining Company acquired by deeds of conveyance from Linney and wife whatever title to the claims they had acquired by virtue of the tax foreclosure and deed issued in pursuance thereof.

The service of the summons in the tax foreclosure proceeding was attempted to be made upon the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company by serving the same upon G. B. Dennis as the president of that corporation and not otherwise. G. B. Dennis was the president of the corporation at the time the secretary of state noted upon the records of his office its dissolution. None of the trustees of the corporation were ever served with summons in the tax foreclosure proceeding, or made parties thereto, nor did any of them ever appear in that proceeding; so that whatever jurisdiction the court acquired therein was only such as could be acquired over the corporation as an entity, apart from its trustees and stockholders, after the secretary of state noted its dissolution upon his records.

It is conceded that appellants as stockholders of the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company are in a position to maintain this action because of their demand upon the trustees of that corporation to prosecute it and the refusal of the trustees to accede to that demand. It is also conceded that the tax foreclosure proceeding, the judgment, the sale rendered thereon, and the tax deed issued in pursuance thereof to W. H. Linney vested title to the claims in him if the court acquired jurisdiction in that proceeding by service of summons upon G. B. Dennis as president of the corporation. In section 7, c. 140, Laws 1907 (section 3715, Rem. Code), we read:

> "It shall be the duty of the secretary of state to strike from the records of his office the names of all incorporations which have neglected for a period of two years to pay their annual license fees."

This is the law in compliance with which the secretary of state struck the name of the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company from the records of his office on August 23, 1909. This provision of the law has remained unchanged to the present time. Chapter 140, Laws 1907, made no provision for reinstatement of the name of a corporation upon the records in the office of the secretary of state which had been stricken as therein provided. Neither did that law tell us in terms what effect such striking of the name of a corporation had upon its life; that is, whether or not such striking of its name had the effect of dissolving it. Chapter 19, Laws of the Extraordinary Session of the Legislature of 1909, provided for reinstatement of a corporation's name upon the records of the office of the secretary of state within six months following the striking of it therefrom upon payment of certain penalties. Section 4 thereof reads:

> "If, however, within the period named within which a corporation may make application to be reinstated such corporation shall not have made such application, the secretary of state shall enter upon his records a notation that such corporation is dissolved, and it shall thereupon be dissolved and the trustees of such corporation shall hold the title to the property of the corporation for the benefit of its stockholders and creditors to be disposed of under appropriate court proceedings."

This is the provision in pursuance of which the secretary of state noted upon his records the dissolution of the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company on February 23, 1910, six months after he had stricken its name from his records. This section was embodied in Rem. Code as section 3715d, though, as we shall presently see, under a later law, chapter 41, Laws 1911, corporations are no longer dissolved in this manner. That law, however, was not passed until after the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company had been dissolved under the law of 1909.

[1] It is contended in substance in respondents' behalf that the failure of a corporation to pay its annual license fees, the striking of its name from the records of the office of the secretary of state and the notation of its dissolution by the secretary of state upon his records did not under the act of 1909 actually work a dissolution of the corporation, but only constituted a cause for dissolution by appropriate court proceedings. This contention is answered by our decision in Hawley v. Bonanza Queen Mining Co., 61 Wash. 90, 111 Pac. 1073, where it was held that the notation of dissolution, when made in compliance with the law of 1909, did work a dissolution of the corporation, and that an action pending against the corporation at the time it was so dissolved would abate, unless the corporation's successors in interest, its trustees or possibly its receiver, were substituted as parties to the action in place of the corporation. Judge Rudkin in so holding, speaking for the court at page 93 of 61 Wash., at page 1074 of 111 Pac., said:

> "The appellant contends that this rule does not obtain in equity, but we apprehend that a defendant to proceed against is just as essential in one court as in another, except where the proceedings are strictly in rem. In actions to foreclose mortgages or liens on real property the owner of the property is a necessary party defendant, and if he dies during the pendency of the action his heirs or successors in interest must be brought in. The same rule applies of necessity to a defunct corporation. Had the receiver been served in this case, the action might have proceeded to judgment against him, notwithstanding the dissolution of the corporation; or the trustees, in whom title vests upon dissolution, might have been substituted as defendants, but nothing of that kind was done or attempted. The appellant persisted in his right to proceed against the corporation notwithstanding its dissolution, and the court had no alternative but to abate the action."

In the light of that decision, which we are not inclined to recede from, we see no escape from the conclusion that the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company was dissolved upon the making of the notation of its dissolution by the secretary of state, assuming for the present that such notation was authorized by the facts and timely made. It seems to plainly follow that since a pending action against a corporation at the time of its dissolution in pursuance of the law of 1909 abated upon such dissolution unless its successors in interest be substituted in its place as parties thereto, it could not be sued and no process could reach it as a corporate entity giving a court jurisdiction over it or its property, which had passed to its trustees upon dissolution. Manifestly, if a pending case cannot proceed against a dissolved corporation one could not be instituted against such a corporation.

[2] It is further contended in behalf of respondents that the law of 1909 in so far as it provided for dissolution of corporations is unconstitutional as being in violation of the due process of law provisions of both the state and federal Constitutions. This contention is also answered by our decision in Hawley v. Bonanza Queen Mining Co., 61 Wash. 90, 111 Pac. 1073; Judge Rudkin, speaking for the court, observing:

> "It is next contended that the Acts of 1907 and 1909, supra, which provide for the dissolution of corporations failing to pay their annual license fees, or to apply for reinstatement within a limited time, are unconstitutional and void, because a forfeiture of corporate franchises can only be decreed by a court of competent jurisdiction. This position is untenable. A corporation is a mere creature of the law, and the privilege of being and acting as a corporation is contingent upon a compliance with the law. The appellant concedes that it was competent for the Legislature to provide for the dissolution of corporations failing to pay their annual license fees, but contends that the forfeiture can only be declared after a hearing in some court of competent jurisdiction. This question was ably reviewed in all its aspects by the Supreme Court of California in the recent case of Kaiser Land & Fruit Co. v. Curry, 155 Cal. 638, 103 Pac. 341, where a similar act of that state was sustained."

In the light of these remarks made in the course of that decision we deem it unnecessary to further notice the constitutional question presented, and conclude that the dissolution provision of the law of 1909 was not unconstitutional.

It is further contended in respondents' behalf that the notation of the dissolution of the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company as a corporation upon the records of the office of the secretary of state was a void and unauthorized act, and did not at the time it was made nor thereafter legally evidence the dissolution of that corporation. Counsel for respondents insist that the full six months' period prescribed by the law of 1909, above quoted, within which the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company might have applied for reinstatement, had not expired at the time the notice of dissolution was made by the secretary of state.

[3, 4] The general rule that in computing time within which an act is to be done as prescribed by law the first day shall be excluded and the last day included is invoked in respondents' behalf. This rule does seem to lend support to the contention that the secretary of state made his notation of the dissolution of the corporation one day too soon, since it seems to have been made upon the last day of the six-month period prescribed, though looking to the language of the act of 1909 there is also room for arguing that the notation was not made a day too soon. However this may be, we are of the opinion that since on the following day the notation remained of record in the office of the secretary of state, which was of course with his knowledge, it then had all the effect as if made upon that date. The act of 1909 did not provide for any particular form of making the notation of dissolution, not even that it should be dated, nor was the making of it under that law to be the result of any hearing or determination of any fact outside the records of the secretary's office. His act of noting the dissolution of the corporation, we think, was purely ministerial under the law of 1909. It was not the notation which dissolved the corporation, though sometimes loosely so referred to. That was only the doing of an act the occurrence of which together with the fact of the corporation's default worked its dissolution. We think it can thus be differentiated from a decree of a court of equity dissolving a corporation. If, when the time for making the notation of dissolution arrived, assuming that such time had not arrived when this notation was physically made, the secretary had looked at his records and seen this notation thereon, and had then erased it and immediately rewritten it in the exact words, plainly it could not be contended that that was not a literal compliance with the act of 1909. We can see no difference in legal effect when the secretary knowingly leaves a notation on his records which may have been previously erroneously put there, though at the time he so leaves it it speaks correctly, except possibly as to the date when physically made. One could as well complain of a notation made by one of the secretary's clerks instead of himself, but plainly that would be in law the making of it by himself if done with his knowledge and under his direction. The leaving of the notation by him at a time when it ought to have been made, we think, was equally a compliance with the law of 1909 in view of the ministerial character of the act of making the notation.

After the dissolution of the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company on February 23, 1910, the Legislature of 1911 passed an act amending the 1909 law so as to permit a corporation whose name had been stricken from the records of the office of the secretary of state to have its name reinstated upon the records at any time upon payment of certain penalties and in effect repealing the dissolution provisions of the law of 1909. Considering the effect of the act of 1911 touching its repealing effect upon the dissolution provision of the law of 1909, Judge Morris, speaking for the court in State ex rel. Preston Mill Co. v. Howell, 67 Wash. 377, 121 Pac. 861, said:

> "The act of 1907, being Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3715, provided, among other things, that the secretary of state should strike from the records of his office the names of all corporations which had neglected for two years to pay the annual license fees. The act of 1909, extra session, being Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3715a, provided that any corporation whose name had been stricken for failure to pay its annual license fee for two years might apply to the secretary of state for reinstatement, at any time within six months from the approval of the act or from the time its name had been stricken. Section 2 of the same act, being Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3715b, further provided that any corporation so applying should, in addition to all license fees and penalties then due, pay an additional penalty of $25, and upon such payment such corporation would be reinstated. Section 4 of the same act, being Rem. & Bal. Code, § 3715d, provided that any corporation failing to make application for reinstatement within the time provided for such reinstatement should be thereby dissolved, and the secretary of state should enter a notation to that effect upon his official records. Sections 3715a and 3715b were amended by the act of 1911, c. 41, p. 135, whereby the six months' limitation, in which reinstatement might be made, was made to read 'at any time after its name had been stricken,' and the penalty was increased from $25 to $100. So that the law, as it now reads, provides that a corporation failing to pay its annual license fees for two years shall be stricken from the records of the office of the secretary of state; that every corporation so stricken may apply at any time thereafter for reinstatement, and when so applying shall be reinstated upon payment of all license fees and penalties then due, together with an additional penalty of $100. It will be noted that section 3715d, providing for the dissolution of the corporation for failing to apply within the time in which application might be made for reinstatement, which time was six months as fixed in the act of 1909, has now no force, since the act of 1911 changed the time in which such application might be made from six months to 'any time after its name has been stricken from the records'; and, since the dissolution was to take effect at the expiration of the time fixed in which application for reinstatement might be made, and that time is now, under the amendment of 1911, any time after the striking of the name, there is now no time fixed for such dissolution. Section 3715a, as amended by the act of 1911, reads, 'any corporation stricken from the records and dissolved as provided in this chapter,' may hold meetings and pass resolutions necessary to close out its affairs and such resolution of such 'stricken and dissolved corporation' is validated and approved. There is no provision, however, in this chapter for the dissolution of such corporation, as to how or when it shall take place; the only penalty to the offending corporation provided for in the act being the striking of its name from the official records of the secretary of state. The framers of this act evidently had in mind the provisions of section 3715d, which made provision for dissolution under the act of 1909. But they failed to fix a time in which the provisions of that section could become operative. The result is there is now no time in which this section, the only one containing any provision for the dissolution of corporations for failure to pay license fees, can become operative. When, therefore, relator applied to the secretary of state to accept its license fee, he should have done so, as it had made full compliance with the law, and within the time provided by the law in force at the time the application was made."

[5] These observations suggest the possibility of corporations dissolved under the law of 1909 before the passage of the law of 1911, as well as those defaulting after the passage of the law of 1911, being entitled to reinstatement at any time under the law of 1911. However this may be, we think that in no event can a corporation dissolved under the act of 1909 before the act of 1911 was passed be sued as a corporate entity by service upon its president until its corporate existence is revived and its name reinstated upon the records of the office of the secretary of state as provided by the act of 1911, assuming for the sake of argument that a corporation dissolved under the act of 1909 before the passage of the act of 1911 can be so revived and its name reinstated upon the records of the office of the secretary of state. In Soderberg v. McRae, 70 Wash. 235, 126 Pac. 538, where there was involved the status of a corporation dissolved under the act of 1909 before the passage of the act of 1911, Judge Morris, again speaking for the court, said:

> "No question is raised by the corporation itself as to the effect of the act of the secretary of state in entering the order of dissolution on February 23, 1910. Nor is the corporation here seeking to reinstate itself by offering to pay arrears of license. So far as the dissolution of the corporation is concerned, it must be so regarded until, in some appropriate proceedings, it is decreed otherwise."

Without deciding the question of the status of a corporation dissolved under the act of 1909 before the passage of the act of 1911 as to its capability of being revived and reinstated upon the records of the office of the secretary of state, we are clearly of the opinion that while it remains in this at least dormant condition it cannot function as a corporate entity, that it cannot either sue or be sued as such, and that whatever litigation may be instituted seeking to affect its property must be in actions wherein its successors in interest, its trustees, or possibly its receiver, are parties.

We conclude that the tax foreclosure proceeding and the tax deed issued in pursuance thereof upon which the claimed title of respondents to these mining claims is rested is wholly void and of no effect for want of jurisdiction of the court in that proceeding over the Old Dominion Mining & Milling Company or over its successors in interest, to wit, its trustees. The judgment of the trial court must therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded to it for the rendering of such decree as appellants are entitled to under the views herein expressed.

We find at page 8 of the statement of facts that it was agreed between counsel during the trial that the respective rights of the parties growing out of the making of improvements upon the mining claims by respondents, which were claimed to have been made in good faith since the tax sale, should remain open and not be settled by the decree to be rendered in this case, indicating that the only purpose of all parties to this action was to test the validity of the tax foreclosure proceedings and respondents' claimed title thereto. The record before us also shows that at the time of the commencement of this action in the superior court appellants tendered $2,550, depositing the same in court, to reimburse respondents for moneys paid in procuring the certificate of delinquency and in taxes upon the claims. We think the superior court will be sufficiently advised as to the nature of the decree appellants are entitled to, both as to the reservation of the question of respondents' equities growing out of improvements claimed to have been made by them upon the mining claims, and as to to the amount of the $2,550 tendered by appellants and deposited in court which respondents are entitled to or as to whether or not respondents are entitled to more than that sum as a condition precedent to appellants being awarded a decree quieting their title to the mining claims as against respondents. This is about as definite directions as we are able to make to the trial court upon the record before us.

The judgment of dismissal is reversed, and the cause remanded to the superior court for further proceedings as herein indicated.

ELLIS, C. J., and HOLCOMB, MOUNT, and FULLERTON, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 78)

FRYAR v. HAZELWOOD HOLSTEIN FARMS et al. (No. 13772.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 20, 1917.)

1. Sales 🔑38(1) — Misrepresentations — Promise to be Performed in the Future.

A statement that a certificate, showing that cattle sold had been tuberculin tested, would be given to the purchaser at a sale is not a misrepresentation of fact, but a promise to do something in the future.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 65, 76.]

2. Receivers 🔑104—Receiver's Sale—Liability of Receiver for Misrepresentations.

Although a receiver's sale is a judicial sale and the doctrine caveat emptor applies, and, the sale being under the direction of the court, there is no warranty, where misrepresentations of fact are made by the receiver or his agent and they are relied upon by the purchaser to his damage, the rule of caveat emptor does not preclude the purchaser from any relief, and he may sue the receiver in his personal capacity or seek a timely rescission of the contract of sale, but he may not recover damages against the receiver as such.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Cent. Dig. § 191.]

3. Corporations 🔑422(1)—Officers—Statements Made at Receiver's Sale—Liability of Corporation.

As the officers of a corporation have no authority to do anything in connection with a receiver's sale, it being a sale of property in custodia legis, such officers could not, by any statements made at the sale, change the terms and conditions prescribed by the court, or bind the corporation by any warranties made at such sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1685, 1687, 1691.]

4. Corporations 🔑559(2) — "Receivers" — Evidence—Admissibility.

In view of Rem. Code 1915, § 740, defining a receiver as a person appointed by a court or judicial officer to take charge of property during the pendency of a civil action, etc., and to manage and dispose of it as the court or officer may direct, as a receiver for a corporation was a statutory receiver and officer of the court no matter for what purpose he was appointed, evidence offered to prove that the corporation was not insolvent, offered to show that the receiver was only an agent of the parties, was properly rejected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2241, 2242.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Receiver.]

5. Receivers 🔑134—Sale—Notice.

Where a sale of cattle was advertised by a corporation, but was conducted by a receiver, the receiver was not required to proclaim the fact that it was a receiver's sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Cent. Dig. § 230.]

6. Evidence 🔑83(1) — Presumption — Acts of Receiver.

A receiver presumably proceeds in accordance with the order of the court in making a sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 105.]

7. Corporations 🔑560(3) — Liability for Acts of Receiver.

A corporation cannot be held liable for any fault or omission of a receiver in conducting the sale of its property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2256, 2262.]

8. Costs 🔑185—Knowledge of Witnesses—Power of Clerk to Correct Notation.

Where it was not contended that witnesses were allowed more mileage than they actually traveled, a contention that costs were taxed too high, in that more mileage was allowed certain witnesses than they had reported to the clerk, was without merit, since the clerk has the power to correct his original notation of mileage, if it was in fact too high or too low.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 739–743.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; E. H. Sullivan, Judge.

Action by B. S. Fryar against the Hazelwood Holstein Farms and Arthur B. Lee as receiver thereof. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Patrick C. Shine, of Spokane, and H. G. & Dix H. Rowland, of Tacoma, for appellant. Voorhees & Canfield and W. J. Matthews, all of Spokane, for respondents.

HOLCOMB, J. Appellant sued to recover damages for an alleged breach of warranties made at a receiver's sale. The evidence introduced by appellant tended to show that the Hazelwood Holstein Farms, Incorporated, one of respondents herein, by its trustees Smith and Mills, advertised that a certain sale of blooded Holstein cattle would be held in Spokane during the Interstate Fair. Subsequent to these advertisements, but prior to the sale, one Lee was appointed by the court as receiver of the Hazelwood Holstein Farms, Incorporated, and the sale was actually conducted by him in that capacity. At the sale the auctioneer stated that all the cattle to be sold were registered, and that purchasers would be furnished with registration and transfer papers. Smith also stated that the cattle offered for sale had recently been tuberculin tested, and that purchasers would be furnished with health certificates showing that such test had been made, and that the cattle were free from tuberculosis. Appellant attended this sale having no notice, as he claimed, that it was by a receiver, heard the representations so made, and purchased a young heifer for $539, and a bull calf for which he paid $85. Shortly afterwards the heifer died from tuberculosis, according to the statement of a veterinary who attended the heifer during her sickness. It also appears that the bull calf was not registered at the time of the sale, but his breeding was such that he was entitled to registration, and he was registered and the papers evidencing that fact were furnished appellant subsequent to the commencement of this action. Appellant then instituted this action against respondents Hazelwood Holstein Farms, Incorporated, and Lee as receiver, and alleged that, by reason of the failure of respondents to deliver the registration papers and health certificates, he had been greatly damaged, in that he had sold these cattle at an increased price, but was unable to make good on his representations to the purchasers, and that in the case of the bull calf he incurred a large damage by reason of being obliged to purchase his progeny from the party to whom he was sold since he had been bred to a number of thoroughbred cows; and further alleged that the animals without the registration and health certificates were worth only $190, and with them they were worth $1,000. At the conclusion of appellant's testimony the lower court sustained a challenge to the sufficiency of the evidence and directed a judgment of dismissal. From this disposition of the case appellant has appealed.

[1] From an examination of the facts it is noticed that the only misrepresentation made was that the bull calf was registered. There was no evidence showing that the animals had not been tuberculin tested, and the statement that a certificate showing such test would be given to the purchaser is not a misrepresentation of a fact, but a promise to do something in the future.

[2] In determining the legal principles involved in this appeal the liability of the receiver will first be considered. It is not seriously disputed that a receiver's sale is a judicial sale, and that in such cases the doctrine caveat emptor applies. Since the sale is made under the direction of the court there is no warranty. But where there is fraud or misrepresentation of fact made by the receiver or by his agents, as in this case, caveat emptor is not applicable, and the problem thus presented is whether the receiver has such authority in making warranties at a sale that he is liable to respond in damages as receiver for a breach of such warranties.

[3] The authorities are harmonious in declaring that the receiver has no authority to make warranties as to either the title or quality of goods sold at a receiver's sale, as the receiver is simply an officer, or agent, of the court and all the authority in him vested is simply what is derived from the court, which is only to sell the goods; and because there is no warranty by the court, there is nothing to go back on if the buyer takes nothing. Rorer on Judicial Sales (2d Ed.) § 174; The Monte Allegre, 9 Wheat. 616, 6 L. Ed. 174; Horner v. Continental, etc., Bank, 198 Fed. 832, 117 C. C. A. 474.

Where misrepresentations of fact are made by the receiver or his agent and they are relied on by the purchaser to his damage, this rule does not preclude the purchaser from any relief whatever, for in such cases the authorities are equally well settled that there are two courses that the purchaser may pursue: (1) He may sue the receiver in his personal capacity, as the warranty binds him personally and him only; (2) he may seek a timely rescission of the contract of sale. Rorer on Judicial Sales, 174, 175; Horner v. Continental, etc., Bank, supra. In the case at bar appellant pursued neither of these courses, but elected to sue the corporation and its receiver for damages. No cases are cited by appellant, nor are we able to discover any, that hold that such an action can be successfully waged against the receiver.

It is then urged by appellant that respondent corporation is liable on account of the misrepresentations made by Smith, and cite Scott v. Rainier P. & R. Co., 13 Wash. 108, 42 Pac. 531, to show that a company may be sued after a receiver has been appointed. Granting that this is true, a valid cause of action must arise before a cause of action can be maintained against a corporation for which a receiver has been appointed; and it is apparent that, if Smith made representations that a certificate evidencing the facts represented would be furnished the purchaser, he acted either as agent of the receiver or as trustee and manager of the respondent corporation. Obviously if he acted as agent of the receiver, he had not sufficient authority to make warranties that would be binding on any one, as the receiver himself had no such authority. Neither do we think he had sufficient power or authority by reason of his office in the corporation as trustee to bind the respondent corporation by his warranties made at receiver's sale, for the officers of the corporation have no authority to do anything in connection with the sale, since it is in the exclusive jurisdiction of the court. It was a sale of property in custodia legis; for example, in the order the court might authorize the sale on certain terms or conditions. It could not be seriously contended that the officers of the corporation could, by statements made at the sale, change the terms and conditions prescribed by the court. Whether Smith would be personally liable by reason of his statements made at the sale need not be considered as he was not made a party to the action.

[4] During the progress of the trial appellant offered to prove that the corporation was not insolvent, and that the only purpose of the receivership proceedings was to settle some property differences between Smith and Mills. This evidence was rejected by the trial court, and his action in so doing is now assigned as error. Appellant argues that, if this evidence had been admitted, it would show that the receiver was only an agent of the parties, and not an officer of the court, and therefore the rule that a receiver has no authority to make warranties at a sale is not applicable, as such rule is based on the premise that he is an officer of the court, and is vested with only such authority as he derived therefrom. In support of this theory appellant cites Kellar v. Williams, 3 Rob. (La.) 321, wherein it is held that, where it appears that a receiver was appointed with the consent of the parties for the purpose of adjusting property differences, the receiver will be deemed to be the agent of the parties, strictly speaking, and not an officer of the court. It does not appear that the receiver therein was appointed by virtue of a statute, and it does show that he was appointed by consent of the parties. In the case at bar we find no offer to prove that respondent Lee was appointed by consent of the parties, and in any event he was presumptively appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction by virtue of Rem. Code, § 740, which defines a receiver as follows:

> "A receiver is a person appointed by a court or judicial officer to take charge of property during the pending of a civil action or proceeding, or upon a judgment, decree, or order therein; and to manage and dispose of it as the court or officer may direct."

Respondent Lee was therefore a statutory receiver and an officer of the court no matter for what purpose he was appointed, and the court properly rejected the evidence tending to show such purpose.

[5-7] It is immaterial that appellant was not notified at the sale that it was being conducted by a receiver. There is no statute requiring proclamation of such fact by a receiver, and no order to that effect is shown. The receiver presumably proceeded in accordance with his order. The receiver is not sought to be held liable in his personal capacity. The corporation could not be held liable for any fault or omission of the receiver.

[8] Complaint is also made that the costs were taxed too high, in that more mileage was allowed certain witnesses than they had reported to the clerk. Since it is not contended that these witnesses were allowed costs for more mileage than they actually traveled, we think this argument without merit, as the clerk has power to correct his original notation of mileage if it was in fact too high or too low.

Judgment affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and MOUNT, FULLERTON, and PARKER, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 84)

PARKER et al. v. SEATTLE LAND & IMPROVEMENT CO. (No. 13853.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 20, 1917.)

1. Brokers 🔑86(1)—Actions for Compensation—Weight of Evidence.

Where a broker who sold lots to a school district for $9,500 had a right under its contract with the owners to sell them for $9,600, and its president testified that they were sold on his promise to make up the difference of $100 on subsequent sales, while the owners testified that they wanted $10,000, and consented to the sale on the broker's promise to waive its commission of $500, the broker's version of the matter will be accepted, as it could have compelled the sale by paying $100, and it was highly improbable that it agreed to waive its commissions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 117, 118.]

2. Brokers 🔑86(7)—Actions for Compensation—Weight of Evidence.

Owners of lots who had authorized a broker to sell them, sought to justify their refusal to recognize sales made by him on the ground that on a prior sale of a number of lots to the city for $30,000, the broker deceived them by stating that the sale was for only $25,000, and subsequently claimed that the additional $5,000 was used to bribe city officials and otherwise consummate the sale. The purchase was a matter of public notoriety, the title had been approved by the corporation counsel, and the price was paid by a warrant on the city treasury. The park board through whom the sale was made was composed of men of the highest reputation for probity and integrity, and the broker's president had the trust and confidence of the business world. Held, that the owners' claim was not believable, as the truth of the matters could have been ascertained with little difficulty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 116, 117.]

3. Brokers 🔑75—Commissions—Right to Retain from Payments.

Under a contract authorizing sales of lots by a broker who was to collect all deferred payments and account to the owners, and was to receive certain commissions which were not to be due or payable until it had made sales aggregating $40,000, the broker on making a sale that brought the aggregate to a sum in excess of $40,000 was not required to pay the money to the owners and receive back its commissions, and it was sufficient for it to pay the difference after deducting the earned commissions.

4. BROKERS ⚷10—RIGHT TO TERMINATE AGENCY—REFUSAL TO ACT.

A broker which was required to collect deferred payments and account to the owners was not guilty of a refusal to account justifying the owners in repudiating the contract because it refused to accept the owners' contentions that it had waived its commission on a certain sale and to account on that basis, where the dispute was not whimsical, but in good faith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 11.]

5. BROKERS ⚷49(3)—PERFORMANCE OF SERVICES—DIFFERENCE BETWEEN CONTRACT AUTHORIZED AND THAT TENDERED.

Under a contract authorizing a broker to sell lots for cash or on deferred payments, and providing that no lots sold on deferred payments should be sold for less than $100 cash and $10 monthly, and that on a sale of more than one lot on one contract the same cash and monthly payment should be required for each lot, the owners were justified in refusing to execute a contract to a purchaser of a number of lots which provided for the execution of deeds to single lots when payments equaled a certain amount; this not being warranted by the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 72.]

6. BROKERS ⚷54—RIGHT TO COMMISSION—PROCURING PURCHASER.

Where, after the refusal to execute a contract to such purchaser, the broker procured and tendered the full cash price according to the prices fixed in the contract, it was entitled to its commissions on the sale as it procured a purchaser ready, able, and willing to take the property according to the terms on which it had the property for sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 75–81.]

7. BROKERS ⚷63(5) — TENDER — KEEPING TENDER GOOD.

Where the broker tendered the full cash price of the lots, but the owners refused to execute a deed to the purchaser, the broker was not required to pay the money into court or deposit it in some public depositary for the owners' use in order to be entitled to its commissions, as the owners' failure to accept the tender at the time it was made or within a reasonable time thereafter made the default their own and relieved the broker of any further duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 79, 81, 94–96.]

8. BROKERS ⚷51—RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS—NECESSITY OF PRODUCING PURCHASER.

Under a contract authorizing a broker to sell a number of lots, it was not required to bring the purchaser bodily into the presence of the owners to be entitled to its commissions, but earned such commissions when it brought and tendered to the owners its purchaser's money and demanded a deed in the name of the purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. § 69.]

9. BROKERS ⚷63(5)—RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS—TENDER OF PURCHASE PRICE.

A broker authorized to sell lots at fixed prices and required to collect the deferred payments and account to the owners was not required to tender to the owners in connection with a sale which the owners had refused to recognize, more than the contract price of the lots involved, though it had money in its hands collected and not accounted for.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Brokers, Cent. Dig. §§ 79, 81, 94–96.]

10. BROKERS ⚷27—DUTIES TO PRINCIPAL—ACCOUNTING.

Such broker on an accounting was not entitled to credit for an amount included in the aggregate total of sales made by it, but which had not been paid by the purchaser of a lot.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, King County; Mitchell Gilliam, Judge.

Action by Isaac Parker and another against the Seattle Land & Improvement Company. The named plaintiff died while the court held the cause under advisement, and I. C. Parker, the administrator of his estate, was substituted as party plaintiff in his stead. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with instructions to enter judgment in accordance with opinion.

Kerr & McCord, of Seattle, for appellant. Halverstadt & Clarke, of Seattle, for respondents.

FULLERTON, J. This is an action for an accounting. It was originally brought by Isaac Parker and Lydia G. Parker, his wife, against the Seattle Land & Improvement Company. After the issues had been framed and the evidence in the case taken and while the trial court held the cause under advisement, Isaac Parker died, and I. C. Parker, the administrator of his estate, was substituted as a party plaintiff in his stead. This appeal is by the defendant, the Seattle Land & Improvement Company, and for convenience we shall refer to the parties as appellant and respondents, as though no substitution had been made.

The facts giving rise to the controversy are in the main undisputed. On August 30, 1908, and for some years prior thereto, the respondents were the owners of a tract of land, ten acres in area, situated in that part of the city of Seattle formerly comprising the city of Ballard, which they had caused to be platted under the designation of Parker's addition to the city of Seattle. The appellant is a corporation engaged in the general real estate and brokerage business. On the date named the parties entered into a written contract by which the appellant undertook to sell for the respondents the real property mentioned, the material parts of the contract being as follows:

"1. The first parties hereby give and grant to the company until August 20, 1910, the sole and exclusive right to sell for them the following real estate lying and being in King county, Washington, to wit: Parker's addition to the city of Seattle.

"2. The company may sell said real estate, or any part thereof, for cash or on deferred payments, but no lot in block one (1) of said addition shall be sold for less than the sum of $300; no lot in blocks two (2) and three (3) of said addition shall be sold for less than the sum of > $600.00; and no lot in block four (4) of said addition shall be sold for less than the sum of $300.00. No lot in said addition shall be sold on deferred payments for less than one hundred dollars ($100.00) cash upon execution and delivery of contract of sale, therefor, and ten dollars ($10.00) monthly thereafter until the full purchase price thereof shall be paid, with interest on deferred payments at the rate of seven (7) per cent. per annum, interest payable monthly. Should more than one lot be sold on the same contract, the same cash and monthly payment shall be required for each lot so sold.

>
> "3. The company shall advance to the first parties the sum of ten thousand dollars ($10,000), without interest, payable as follows: Five hundred dollars ($500) cash upon the execution and delivery of this agreement, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and nine thousand five hundred dollars ($9,500) within —— days after date hereof. Said sum shall be retained by the company out of the first moneys received by it hereunder.
>
> "4. The first parties shall secure, at their own expense, and furnish to the company, one abstract of title to said real estate, certified to by some responsible abstract company doing business in the city of Seattle. The company shall, at its own cost, furnish such additional abstracts of title to said real estate as may be necessary.
>
> "5. The first parties shall execute and deliver to purchasers of said property deeds thereto when the purchase price thereof has been fully paid. They shall also execute and deliver to purchasers of said property sold on deferred payments contracts of sale therefor as the same is sold, but all such deeds and contracts shall be subject to taxes and assessments for local improvements which may become payable, or a lien on said property subsequent to date hereof.
>
> "6. The company shall hold the first parties and said property harmless from any and all taxes and assessments on said property which shall become a lien on the same, or payable, subsequent to date hereof and prior to full payment for said property.
>
> "7. All deferred payments shall be collected by the company and it shall account to the first parties on the first day of each and every month hereafter, in detail, for all sales and collections made by it during the preceding month.
>
> "8. The company shall receive as and for its full compensation for services rendered hereunder, and in full payment for any disbursements made by it hereunder, the following: Five per cent. (5%) of the first ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00) of the aggregate sale price of said property; two and one-half per cent. (2½%) of the balance of the aggregate sale price of said property up to forty thousand dollars ($40,000.00); and one-half (½) of the gross aggregate sale price of said property over forty thousand dollars ($40,000.00). No part of said commission or compensation shall be due or payable until the company shall have sold in the aggregate property to the extent of forty thousand dollars ($40,000.00), and shall be payable only out of moneys thereafter coming into its possession hereunder."

Acting under and in pursuance of the contract, the appellant found purchasers to whom deeds were issued by the respondents for all of the property save and except 11 lots in block 1 and one lot in block 4. Of the property so sold, 16 lots were sold to a school district of King county for the sum of $9,500, 48 lots to the city of Seattle for the sum of $30,000, and the remainder to individual purchasers; the total of such individual sales aggregating $2,550. The present action was begun after the time limit for selling the property fixed in the contract had expired. In their complaint the respondents alleged that the total sales aggregated the sum of $42,050; that the appellant had suffered taxes and assessments to accumulate on the unsold property in the sum of $837.47; that it had received $5,000 of the purchase money for which it had not accounted; that it had waived its commission on the first $10,000; that it was entitled to commissions on the remaining sales aggregating $1,775, and that there was due the respondents the sum of $4,037.47, with interest at the legal rate on $3,200 thereof from May 20, 1909, and interest on $837.47 thereof from the date of the commencement of the action. The appellant put in issue by denials the allegation that it had waived a part of its commission, and the allegations of the account as stated by the respondents. By way of an affirmative answer it alleged a sale of all of the property in accordance with the terms of the contract, the sales aggregating $45,650, on which it was entitled to a commission of $4,075; and that it had paid, after deducting the commissions, all that remained due the respondents except a balance of $422, which it tendered and paid into the registry of the court for the use of the respondents. The sales included a sale alleged to have been made to one Isabella Whyte of the 12 lots for which the respondents refused to issue a deed. For reply the respondents denied the affirmative allegations of the answer, and as a special defense to the allegation concerning the sale to Isabella Whyte, alleged that the appellant had prior to such alleged sale refused to account for moneys received by it from sales then made, and that the respondents had notified the appellant that they would not proceed further under the contract.

The cause was tried and submitted to the court on March 12, 1914. The court rendered its decision on June 28, 1916. The third finding of fact embodies the substance of the findings and reads as follows:

> "That at the time of signing said agreement, the defendant paid to the plaintiffs the sum of $500, but no more; that thereafter, during the time of said contract, the defendant sold all of said real estate, mentioned and described in said agreement, except lots 1 to 11, both inclusive, block 1, and lots 1 and 2, block 4, of said Parker's addition to the city of Seattle, for the sum of $42,050. That the last sale of said property was made on the 20th day of May, 1909. That defendant earned as its commission, according to the terms of said agreement, the sum of $2,275. That defendant received on account of the sales of said real estate the sum of $42,050, and has paid to the plaintiffs the sum of $37,050, and no more. That on the 20th day of August, 1910, the date of the expiration of said agreement, there were general taxes upon the portion of said Parker's addition not sold by the defendant, to wit, lots 1 and 2, block 4, and lots 1 to 11, both inclusive, block 1, the city of Seattle amounting to $456.85, no part of which the defendant has paid."

From the findings the court concluded that the respondents were entitled to recover from the appellant $2,225, with interest from May 20, 1909, and the sum of $507.54, with interest from August 20, 1910, together with the costs of the action, and rendered judgment accordingly.

[1] The evidence developed three principal controversies: (1) Whether the appellant had waived its commission on the first $10.000 of the sales; (2) whether it had wrongfully refused to account for the moneys received from the sales: and (3) whether respondents were in the wrong in refusing to recognize the sale made to Isabella Whyte. The first controversy arose out of the sale of the tract to the school district. The respondents testified that they wanted $10.000 for the lots comprised in this tract; that the school district offered and would pay but $9,500; and that they consented to the sale on the promise of the appellant that it would waive its commission which would equal the difference, namely, $500. The president of the appellant who had charge of the negotiations, one Fred E. Sander, denies these statements. He points out that the respondents had no right to exact $10,000 for the lots as a condition to making a deed thereto; that by the terms of the contract the appellant had the right to sell them for $9.600: and that the price for which they were sold was but $100 less than the contract price. His version of the matter is that the respondents consented to make the deed for the price at which they were sold on his promise to make up the difference of $100 on subsequent sales, which difference was made up by the subsequent sale to the city of Seattle; that sale being for $1,200 in excess of the price of the lots as listed in the contract. We are constrained to adopt the appellant's view of the matter. It could have compelled a deed to the property by paying the difference between the price for which the land was sold and the price at which, by the terms of the contract, it was at liberty to sell it. Since its interest in the matter was the commissions it was to receive, it is highly improbable that it would have sacrificed $400 for the sake of saving $100.

[2] The second controversy is material here only as it affects the third. If the appellant did wrongfully refuse to account for all of the money received from the sales as made, it may be that the respondents were justified in refusing to recognize the last of the sales made by the appellant. The controversy arises out of the sale to the city of Seattle. This was the last of the sales made for which deeds or contracts were executed. On its completion the appellant retained from the purchase price received the sum of $5,000. Mr. Sander testified that the sum was retained, under an express understanding and agreement with Isaac Parker, to be accounted for on the expiration of the terms of the contract. The respondents denied the agreement; testifying that the appellant undertook to deceive them, that it was first contended by Mr. Sander that $25,000 was the sum received for the property, and that he afterwards admitted that the sale was for $30,000, but claimed that the $5,000 had to be used for the purpose of consummating the sale, some of it being used to bribe certain of the officials representing the city. It seems to us that, measured by probabilities, the appellant's version of the transaction is the more rational and believable of the two. The city purchased the property for use as a park. In the transaction it was represented by its park board. The purchase was a matter of public notoriety. The title to the property had to be approved by the corporation counsel. The purchase price was paid by a warrant drawn on the city treasury. The park board was composed of men of the highest reputation for probity and integrity. Seemingly, in the light of these facts, no one would have supposed for a single instant that the densest ignorance could be imposed upon by so wild a tale. The record shows that the president of the appellant was possessed of such trust and confidence in the business world as to enable him to borrow on behalf of his company a large sum of money. Characters are not formed in a day, and it is almost beyond belief that a man having a reputation for integrity of this sort would even have attempted to deceive; much less is it believable that he would have attempted to deceive by false representations concerning matters the truth of which, if not already known, could have been ascertained with so little difficulty.

[3, 4] Again, it is not quite fair to assert that the appellant refused to account. This particular sale brought the aggregate sales of the property to a sum in excess of $40,000. By the terms of the contract (paragraph 8) the appellant was then entitled to collect for commissions. Nothing in the contract required it to pay the money over and then receive it back from the respondents. It was sufficient for it to pay the difference after deducting the earned commissions. This it offered to do, but when the account was attempted to be taken, the parties could not agree upon the amount due because of the differences concerning the commissions on the first sale, and no settlement could be reached. This however, does not amount to a refusal to account. The dispute was not whimsical, but was in good faith, and the fact that the appellant did not accede to the respondents' contentions could not be said to be a refusal to account, or to authorize the respondents to repudiate the contract.

[5, 6] As to the third contention, the evidence leaves no doubt in our minds that the appellant procured a purchaser for the remaining property. After procuring the purchaser, it prepared a contract of sale in the form of a time sale authorized by the contract and tendered it to the respondents for execution. The respondents refused to execute it, assigning two reasons: First, that the contract was at an end because of the appellant's refusal to account for the money received by it; and, second, because the contract as prepared contained a clause requiring the execution of deeds to single lots when payments equaled a certain sum—a clause not warranted by the contract under which the appellant was empowered to sell. Later, and on the day before the contract expired by its own limitation, the appellant procured the cash price of the property, went to the home of the respondents where the business of the parties had been usually transacted, and, finding Lydia Parker alone in the house, tendered to her the full cash price of the property according to the prices fixed in the contract, and demanded a deed to its purchaser subject to the taxes and assessments then due thereon. It accompanied its tender also with the sum it admitted to be due on sales theretofore made after deducting its earned commissions. Mrs. Parker refused to accept the money, and the matter then rested. The first tender was properly refused for the second reason given for the refusal, but clearly the second tender was a valid tender timely made. Undoubtedly had the respondents accepted the tender they would have been entitled to a reasonable time in which to prepare, execute, and deliver a deed, and it may be that equity would have relieved them of their default had they within a reasonable time tendered a deed on consideration of receiving the money which had been tendered. But they did neither, and under the contract the appellant became entitled to its commissions on the sale; it produced a purchaser ready, able, and willing to take the property according to the terms on which it had the property for sale.

[7] The respondents argue in this connection that the tender became inoperative because not kept good. We do not know that we fully understand the purport of this. If it be meant that the appellant should have paid the money into the registry of the court on filing its answer, or should have deposited it in some public depositary, such as a bank, for the respondents' use, we cannot agree with the contention. On the refusal of the respondents to accept the tender when made, the default was theirs. As we have said, since they had a reasonable time in which to execute a deed equity might have relieved them from the default had they tendered the deed within a reasonable time after refusing the tender; but their failure to either accept at the time of the tender or within a reasonable time thereafter made the default their own and relieved the appellant of any further duty.

[8] It is said that the purchaser was not produced within the meaning of the rule laid down in Barnes v. German Savings & Loan Society, 21 Wash. 448, 58 Pac. 569. But, if we have correctly caught the drift of the contention, all that the appellant failed to do was to bring its purchaser bodily into the presence of the respondents. This it was not required to do in order to comply with its contract, and we cannot regard the case cited as so holding. It was enough when it brought and tendered to the respondents its purchaser's money and demanded a deed in the name of the purchaser.

[9] There is a dispute in the evidence as to the amount of cash actually tendered to Mrs. Parker on account of the sale to Isabella Whyte. It is conceded that the court was in error in its finding that 2 lots in block 4 remained unsold, and that the correct finding should have been that only one lot in that block remained unsold. These lots were priced in the contract at $300 each. The purchase price was therefore $3,600, and the testimony of Mr. Sander was that he tendered $3,972; the amount in excess of the purchase price of the lots being the amount he conceded the appellant had collected and not accounted for. Mrs. Parker on her cross-examination testified that she told her husband and son that the amount tendered was $3,972, but later on, in her direct examination, she testified that Mr. Sander told her the amount was $5,000; that the money was not counted out. As we view the record there was no necessity for a tender in excess of the contract price of the lots to entitle the appellant to a performance, and, as either amount is in excess of that sum, the exact amount tendered is not necessary to be determined.

[10] The respondents offered no testimony as to the amount the appellant had actually paid of the moneys received by it on the purchase price of the lots. Mr. Sander testified that the sum was $37,453. In addition to this he claimed a credit of $100 due from a Mr. Olson to the respondents on the purchase price of a lot sold under contract which had not then been paid. Adding to these credits the amount due the appellant as commissions and deducting the aggregate from the amount received from the sales would leave a balance of $422, the amount the appellant paid into the registry of the court. While the evidence is not very clear as to the $100 item, it seems to have been conceded elsewhere in the record by both parties that the sum of $2,550, received from the sales to the individual purchasers, was the aggregate total of the sales. If this be the fact, the item was included in that total and could not be charged as an additional credit merely because the sum had not been actually paid over. As the record stands, we think the item should not be allowed.

As we view the record, therefore, the respondents were entitled to a judgment against the appellant for the sum of $522, with the costs and disbursements of the action, on which should be credited the sum paid into court for their use. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to enter a judgment accordingly. The appellant will recover its costs in this court.

ELLIS, C. J., and MOUNT, HOLCOMB, and PARKER, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 122)

ENNIS v. NEW WORLD LIFE INS. CO.

(No. 13819.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 22, 1917.)

1. EVIDENCE 🔑434(11), 437—PAROL EVIDENCE—STOCK SUBSCRIPTION CONTRACT.

Where fraud or illegality inheres in a stock subscription contract, that fact may be shown by parol.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 2013, 2014, 2025–2029.]

2. CORPORATIONS 🔑30(1)—OPTIONAL STOCK SUBSCRIPTION OF INCORPORATORS.

An optional subscription contract by incorporators in the name of a trustee, entitling them to buy the stock at a fixed price, held void and unenforceable against the corporation, being a fraud on other subscribers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 97.]

3. TRUSTS 🔑339—CONTRACT BY TRUSTEE WITH HIMSELF.

A contract made by a trustee with himself in violation of his trust is always enforceable against him, because he will not be heard to assert its invalidity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 500.]

4. CORPORATIONS 🔑30(2) — CONTRACTS BY INCORPORATORS WITH THEMSELVES.

Contracts by incorporators with themselves as individuals are closely scrutinized, and if it appears that they thereby gained an advantage over the corporation, the contract is voidable at the corporation's option, the good intentions and honesty of purpose of the incorporators not availing them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 98.]

5. CORPORATIONS 🔑30(1) — PROMOTERS — FIDUCIARY RELATION.

Promoters of a corporation stand in a fiduciary relation to the corporation, and are bound by the principles governing persons in a fiduciary capacity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 97.]

6. CORPORATIONS 🔑90(1) — SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR STOCK—FRAUD.

One for whose benefit a fraudulent stock subscription was made could not enforce it against the corporation or its stockholders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 383, 385–388.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; Frank H. Rudkin, Judge pro tem.

Action by Matt Ennis, administrator, against the New World Life Insurance Company. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Kenneth Durham and Oscar Cain, both of Spokane, for appellant. Thomas A. E. Lally and Graves, Kizer & Graves, all of Spokane, for respondent.

FULLERTON, J. Thomas J. Ennis was one of the promoters and incorporators, and a member of the directorate, of the Roman Catholic Life Insurance Company of America, the name of which was afterwards changed to the New World Life Insurance Company. Ennis, claiming under a subscription to corporate stock made in the name of E. J. Cannon as trustee, began an action to recover the difference between his subscription price of the stock and its market value on October 7, 1913, the date on which the subscription was repudiated by the corporation. From a judgment dismissing his action an appeal was taken. Pending appeal the plaintiff died, and his brother Matt Ennis as administrator was duly substituted as party plaintiff and appellant.

The appellant assigns as errors the action of the court (1) in admitting parol evidence to vary the terms of the stock subscription contract; and (2) in holding the subscription contract unenforceable. The insurance company was organized on February 26, 1910, with a capital stock of $2,000,000 divided into 200,000 shares. There were seven incorporators who subscribed to the stock. By agreement between them, E. J. Cannon, as trustee, subscribed for 20,000 shares in addition to their regular subscriptions which were to be held for the benefit of the incorporators. The subscription covered only 23,400 shares. The sale of the balance of 176,600 was to be promoted by the Columbia Finance Company, with which a contract to that effect was entered into by the insurance company. The incorporators, concluding afterwards that the company would not legally conduct business unless its full capital stock was subscribed, caused one of the incorporators, Thomas A. E. Lally, to make a pro forma subscription for the 176,600 shares which were to be handled by the finance company. The trust agreement between the incorporators was put into the following written form:

"This contract, made and entered into this 26th day of February, 1910, by and between Edward J. Cannon, party of the first part, and Thomas A. E. Lally, Thomas J. Ennis, Henry B. Luhn, John J. Cadigan, Edward J. O'Shea, and Edmund Burke, parties of the second part, all of both parties being the entire incorporators and founders of the Roman Catholic Insurance Company of America, witnesseth:

"1. That Edward J. Cannon, party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of $1 to him in hand paid by the parties of the second part, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and for and in consideration of the association of all the parties hereto, and their incorporating the Roman Catholic Life Insurance Company of America, agrees to be, and is hereby declared to be trustee of 20,000 shares of the capital stock of Roman Catholic Life Insurance Company of America, for and in behalf of himself and the parties of the second part, as set out in the contract between said company and the Columbia Finance Company, a copy of which is hereto attached and marked Exhibit A, and hereby made a part hereof.

"2. Said 20,000 shares is reserved out of the remainder of the stock on hand after the sale of the first, second and third and fourth series or assignment as set out in said contract above mentioned and hereto attached.

"3. The method of apportioning and distributing said 20,000 shares among the said seven incorporators of the Roman Catholic Life Insurance Company of America shall be as follows: The proportion which the amount of stock that each of the above seven incorporators has purchased and is holding for himself in said company, at the time the said first, second and third and fourth series or assignments are sold, bears to the total amount so purchased and held by all of said seven incorporators is the ratio and proportion in which said 20,000 shares shall be distributed among said seven incorporators.

"4. The distribution of said 20,000 shares among the said seven incorporators shall be at any time after the sale of said first, second and third and fourth series or assignments of stock, as set out in the above-mentioned contract hereto attached. A certificate of stock shall be issued to each incorporator for the amount of his proportionate part of said 20,000 shares immediately upon his payment to the Roman Catholic Life Insurance Company of America of the price of $12.50 per share for all of the stock to which he is so entitled.

"5. It is expressly understood that the right which each of said seven incorporators has, as beneficiary in this contract, cannot be assigned or disposed of to any one except to a member or members of the parties to this contract.

"6. That if any one of said seven incorporators disposes of all of his stock in the Roman Catholic Life Insurance Company of America before the sale of said first, second and third and fourth series or assignments shall have been completed, he loses all right and title to the benefit of this contract, and his interest so lost by him, shall revert to the remaining incorporators in proportion above mentioned; and if he shall have already assigned his interest and subsequent thereto disposed of all his stock in said company, before the sale of said first, second and third and fourth series or assignment shall have been completed, such assignment shall be of no effect whatever."

Later the board of directors of the insurance company, composed of all the original incorporators except Ennis, who had withdrawn from the board, entered into the following agreement with themselves as individuals:

"1. Whereas on the 26th day of February, 1910, one certain agreement was executed by E. J. Cannon, as party of the first part, and John J. Cadigan, Edmund Burke, Thomas J. Ennis, Henry B. Luhn, Edward J. O'Shea, and Thomas A. E. Lally, as parties of the second part; all of whom are parties to this agreement, and all of whom are incorporators of company, which said agreement of February 26, 1910, purported to set out the interests of the said parties in and to the said 20,000 shares of the capital stock of company subscribed for by E. J. Cannon, trustee for and on behalf of said incorporators.

"2. Whereas, the said E. J. Cannon wishes to be relieved and to resign as trustee of said 20,000 shares; and whereas, the parties hereto wish to have the rights and interests of each of them in said 20,000 shares definitely and correctly set out herein: Therefore, in consideration of the execution of this agreement by each party hereto, and in consideration of the sum of $1 paid by each party hereto to each of the other parties hereto, the receipt of which by each of whom is hereby acknowledged, and for other valuable and legal considerations, it is expressly understood and agreed:

"3. That this agreement is substituted for and supersedes in every respect said agreement of February 26, 1910; that the resignation of E. J. Cannon as trustee of said 20,000 shares is hereby accepted by the parties hereto, and in his stead and place is hereby substituted 'the National Bank of Commerce of Spokane,' a corporation, hereinafter called 'bank,' as hereinafter provided.

"4. It is agreed and understood that the said incorporators are entitled, subject to the terms of this agreement, to the following respective parts of said 20,000 shares: E. J. Cannon, five thousand shares (5,000); Thomas J. Ennis, five thousand eight hundred eighty-two shares (5,882); John J. Cadigan, two thousand nine hundred forty-two shares (2,942); Edmund Burke, one thousand one hundred seventy-six shares (1,176); Henry B. Luhn, two thousand nine hundred forty-two shares (2,942); Edward J. O'Shea, five hundred eighty-eight shares (588); Thomas A. E. Lally, one thousand four hundred seventy shares (1,470).

"5. There shall be issued by company seven certificates of its capital stock in the respective amounts and to the respective parties as in the last preceding paragraph set out, and all of which certificates shall be delivered by said company to bank, to be held by it in escrow for and on behalf of the parties hereto as herein provided, each one of said certificates shall be marked thusly: 'This certificate is issued in escrow for the benefit of the party named herein, and title does not pass to said party in and to any part of the shares named herein, and no part of the same is assignable unless the terms of one certain contract of option executed by said party are complied with.'

"6. At any time or times prior to September 1, 1916, any of said incorporators may pay to company, or to bank, for said company, $12.50 per share for any part or parts of at least 50 or more shares of his share of said 20,000 shares, at which time or times company shall issue to him a certificate, or certificates, for the amount or amounts so paid by him, and will cancel the certificate for his share of said 20,000 shares so held by bank, and will issue and deliver to bank a new certificate marked as was the original, of his share still unpaid, which last-mentioned certificate will be held by bank, as was the original certificate, and will be subject to the same provisions set out herein, until his share of said 20,000 shares shall have been fully issued to him: Provided, however, if any of said 20,000 shares remains unpaid after September 1, 1916, the certificate or certificates therefor shall be delivered to company by said bank, and the original incorporators shall thereupon forfeit any and all right to them which they may have in and to that part so unpaid on said date; it being further understood and agreed that no title shall pass from company to any of said incorporators in and to any part of said 20,000 shares unless and until said incorporators shall have fully performed the provisions of this agreement which by him should be performed.

"7. It is understood that this agreement is considered by company an option from it to the said respective incorporators to purchase their respective shares of said 20,000 shares, according to the terms hereof, and that this agreement is executed by company in consideration of the services rendered and to be rendered by said incorporators to it and as above set out.

"8. This agreement and option is executed by all of the parties hereto in nine copies, each one of which is in its terms exactly like this one, one of which shall be retained by each of said incorporators, one by bank, and one by company.

"9. It is understood and agreed that no part of said 20,000 shares shall be voted personally, or by proxy, at any corporate meeting of company, except that part which has been fully > paid by any of the incorporators as herein provided, and it is further understood that the reasonable costs and expenses incurred in favor of bank by reason of its acting herein shall be paid by said original incorporators equally among themselves.

>
> "10. It is further understood and agreed that this contract and option is not affected, nor is its operation and effect to be affected, governed or changed in any manner, by the liability of any of said incorporators to company, because of subscriptions made by any of them, to the capital stock of company at any time prior or subsequent to the execution of this indenture."
>
> Dated September 9, 1911.

[1] At the trial respondent over the objection of appellant introduced the testimony of five of the parties to the trust subscription, for the purpose of showing that the contract was in fact an option, and not intended to impose an obligation on the subscribers. The court's ruling admitting the evidence was upon the ground that the whole matter was open to parol testimony, inasmuch as appellant was compelled to establish his interest in the subscription contract by parol. Whether or not parol was admissible on that ground, we think it was admissible on the issues raised by the pleadings that the subscription contract was fraudulent as to subsequent subscribers, and was violative of the statutes of this state respecting the organization of insurance companies. Where fraud or illegality inheres in a stock subscription contract, that fact may be shown by parol. Anderson v. Scott, 70 N. H. 350, 47 Atl. 607; Hinkley v. Sac Oil & Pipe Line Co., 132 Iowa, 396, 107 N. W. 629, 119 Am. St. Rep. 564; Turner v. Grobe (Tex. Civ. App.) 44 S. W. 898; Collins v. Brick Co., 92 Ark. 504, 123 S. W. 652, 135 Am. St. Rep. 197, 19 Ann. Cas. 882; Commonwealth Bonding, etc., Co. v. Bomar (Tex. Civ. App.) 169 S. W. 1060.

[2] Respecting the illegality of the subscription, the evidence showed that for a period of 3½ years no payment was made on the subscription contract by its trustee, while all new subscribers to stock were required to pay up in full within 60 to 90 days after subscribing. By the terms of the agreement between the insurance company and the finance company, the trustee subscription was to be held in abeyance until 100,000 shares had been disposed of, which figure had not been reached on October 1, 1913, the date on which the respondent repudiated the trustee subscription. This repudiation was due to the fact that the state insurance commissioner had notified the company that the trust subscription agreement was a discrimination against the other purchasers of stock in favor of the directors of the company and a violation of the insurance code. That the incorporators of the company in making their trustee subscription, in addition to those made in their individual capacities, intended to subject themselves to a merely optional liability is clearly shown by their subsequent agreement attempting to fully define the arrangement as they understood it. In the agreement of September 9, 1911, they expressly declare:

> "It is understood that this agreement is considered by company an option from it to the said respective incorporators to purchase their respective shares of said 20,000 shares, according to the terms hereof, and that this agreement is executed by company in consideration of the services rendered and to be rendered by said incorporators to it and as above set out."

Under this agreement the cestuis que trust were given 5 years in which to have the privilege of exercising the option. The evidence shows that this block of stock was set aside for the benefit of the promoters, as a sort of perquisite to be availed of if the selling price of stock should go to a premium, but that otherwise no liability would attach on the subscription. Though prima facie a bona fide subscription, it was not such in fact, but was void as to subsequent subscribers; it was notice to the investing public that the 20,000 shares in question were actually subscribed, when they were not; and it provided for the reservation of a secret profit to the promoters to the exclusion of the other shareholders in the capital stock. At the time appellant brought his action, shares were selling at $7.50 in excess of cost price, which on 20,000 shares would amount to $150,000. On the basis of an advance of $12.50 in the value of shares, appellant claims his damages as amounting to $73,512.50. The mere statement of these figures indicates that the loss to other stockholders is no immaterial matter, and that the secret profit arranged by the promoters for their own benefit would have been considerable.

Without going into the details of all the evidence, which is voluminous, we think enough has been set out to stamp the transaction as one designed to obtain an unfair advantage over other stockholders. It was one made by the promoters of the corporation and ratified by themselves as the board of directors of the organization.

[3, 4] The cause was tried before Hon. Frank H. Rudkin, judge of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington, who was called in as judge pro tem. for the purpose of the trial in the superior court of Spokane county. In dismissing the action, he wrote an opinion, which concisely analyzes the evidence and succinctly states the governing principles of law. From that opinion we quote as follows:

> "In my judgment the case might well be disposed of without considering any disputed questions of fact; but I will nevertheless refer briefly to some conflicts in the testimony. The plaintiff testified that the basis of apportioning the trust stock was agreed upon by all the incorporators before the subscription was actually made. In this he is not supported by the testimony of the other parties in interest. One of them testified that he was under the impression that an agreement or understanding of that kind existed; but he had no independent recollection of the facts or of anything that was said. On the other hand, the other five incorporators testified positively that the mode of distribution was never discussed or agreed upon until at or about the time of the execution of the first written contract some months later, and that instrument, it will be recalled, distributes the stock on a slightly different basis. But as a matter of fact it is apparent from the record that little was said or thought about the trust subscription at the time it was made. The reason for this indifference is not far to seek. The parties were agreeing to pay 25 per cent. above par for the stock of a $2,000,000 corporation whose assets consisted in a corporate name, the right to exist, and an executory contract for the sale of its stock. Few, if any, of the incorporators knew or appreciated that they were incurring personal liability by reason of the trust subscription and the prospect of future gain was too remote to incite interest or even curiosity. Their view doubtless was that if the enterprise succeeded and the stock advanced beyond $12.50 per share they would profit to the extent of the increase; but the thought that they might or could suffer a loss never occurred to them. Whether their view of the law or of the obligation assumed was correct is another question. I am fully satisfied, therefore, that if the question of apportioning the trust stock came up for consideration at all it was only discussed between the plaintiff and one of the other incorporators, and was never agreed upon or assented to by all until at or about the time of the execution of the written contract. This question is perhaps of little moment inasmuch as the allegation of the complaint relating to the apportionment of the trust stock was not denied by the answer; but it none the less has some bearing upon the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of the testimony. Again the plaintiff testified that he had made all arrangements to take up and pay for his portion of the trust stock which would involve an outlay of upwards of $70,000, all or more than he was actually worth. This testimony seems utterly incredible. Why the plaintiff should expect or apprehend that the trustees of this corporation would make a call upon themselves for a quarter of a million dollars is incomprehensible to me. The probability, or even the possibility, that such a call would be made is rebutted by every fact and every circumstance in the case. It is conceded that each of the incorporators was solicited to make his individual subscription as large as possible, and that each of them did so; and if the trust subscription was made on the same terms and conditions, and subject to the same liabilities, well may we ask why was there a trust subscription at all. If the several incorporators were unable or unwilling to take more than 3,400 shares in the aggregate, why should they obligate themselves to take more than five times that number under the guise of a trust subscription? But these questions are answered by the record. The trust subscription was not made subject to the same terms and conditions as the individual subscriptions, and this fact was well understood. The agreement with the Finance Company, executed on the same day, reserved from the remainder of the stock, after the completion of the sale of the first, second, third and fourth assignments, the 20,000 shares of trust stock in question. This reservation shows very clearly that no one contemplated that the trust stock would be taken up or paid for until after the sale of 100,000 shares of the other stock, 10,000 shares at $12.50 per share, 10,000 shares at $15 per share, 30,000 shares at $17.50 per share, and 50,000 shares at not less than $17.50 per share. The agreement entered into some time late in 1910, but dated back to February 26th of that year, also provided that the trust stock should be distributed after the sale of the first four assignments. The last agreement of September 9, 1911, by its terms superseded all prior agreements on that subject and provided that the trust stock might be taken up at any time prior to September 1, 1916. As already stated, this latter agreement was a mere option imposing no obligation whatever upon the subscribers. Let us now examine briefly these different contracts and see if they gave the stockholders of the trust stock any advantage over other stockholders. While no formal call on the stockholders was ever made, it is admitted that the individual subscriptions of the incorporators were to be paid and the stock taken up immediately, or at least within a reasonable time, and that this was done. It is further admitted that the stock sold by the Finance Company was paid for in full within 90 days from the date of sale, one-fourth upon the day of sale, and the balance within 90 days thereafter. Let us compare the situation of these stockholders with the subscribers to the trust stock. When the contract of September 9, 1911 was entered into the stock of the company was selling readily at from $15 to $20 per share, and the plaintiff avers in his complaint that as early as October 17, 1913, it was of the reasonable value of $25 per share, yet the trustees of the corporation granted themselves an option to purchase the stock, extending over a period of three years, for $12.50 per share. The invalidity of this agreement, standing alone, is so apparent that the plaintiff does not attempt to uphold it, and I will not discuss it. True, he was not an officer of the corporation at that time, but the agreement simply carried out the details of arrangements made while he was an officer. The plaintiff, however, does not refer to or rely on this agreement. He plants himself squarely on the subscription contract and in effect says to the court, the contract is plain and free from ambiguity; it is enforceable against the subscribers, and therefore it may be enforced by them. In some respects his position is correct, and in others it is not. Possibly the subscription might be enforced against the subscribers; but that is at least a debatable question. Under the laws of this state a corporation cannot enforce subscriptions to its capital stock until the capital stock has been fully subscribed for. Denny Hotel Co. v. Schram, 6 Wash. 134 [32 Pac. 1002, 36 Am. St. Rep. 130].

"There was no bona fide subscription to the capital stock of this corporation outside the 23,400 shares, conceding that the trust subscription was a bona fide one, until long after the trust subscription was made. The subscription to the balance of the stock was merely formal to perfect the organization of the company, and that fact appears on the face of the subscription itself. Furthermore, the officer who made the formal subscription testified at the trial that he was not financially able to take care of even his small portion of the trust subscription. The first bona fide subscription to the stock was therefore made by the parties who purchased it through the Finance Company, and it may well be urged that the trust subscription could not be enforced until all the stock was subscribed and paid for at prices greatly in excess of $12.50 per share. But conceding that the subscription might be enforced against the trustee and his cestuis que trust, it does not follow that it may be enforced by them. A contract made by a trustee with himself, in violation of his trust, is always enforceable against him because he will not be heard to assert its invalidity; but it is almost universally held voidable at the instance of those whose rights are prejudiced thereby. Furthermore, the subscription in this case lacks many of the essential elements of the ordinary contract. The corporation could only act and speak through its authorized officers, and these officers were contracting and dealing with themselves. It is a universal rule of law that such contracts are closely scrutinized, and if it appears that the trustee gained an advantage over other parties for whom he was acting as trustee, the contract is voidable at their option. In executing this mortgage and thereby > securing to themselves advantages which were not common to all the subscribers, they were guilty of an unauthorized act, and violated a plain principle of equity applicable to trustees. 'The directors are the trustees or managing partners, and the stockholders are the cestuis que trust, and have a joint interest in all the property and effects of the corporation and no injury that the stockholders may sustain by a fraudulent breach of trust can, upon the general principles of equity, be suffered to pass without a remedy.' Koehler v. Black River Falls Iron Co., 2 Black, 715, 721 [17 L. Ed. 339]. But this rule of law is elementary and is supported by all the authorities, English and American, state and federal. Many cases are cited in the briefs; but the question involved is essentially one of fact. That question is, Did the trustees of this corporation, by their contracts, gain an advantage over other stockholders of the corporation? This question admits of but one answer. It is frankly conceded by the defendant that the trustees were guilty of no intentional wrong, and that concession is fully borne out by the testimony. They no doubt felt that they were hazarding their money in an enterprise which might fail, and that if the enterprise succeeded, they were entitled to some consideration for their efforts. But it must be remembered that other parties who purchased stock before the success of the enterprise became an assured fact took the same risk and were entitled to the same consideration. Conceding that the trustees were guilty of no moral wrong, yet they were plainly obtaining an advantage over other stockholders whose rights and property they held in trust, and their act in so doing is condemned by the law on grounds of public policy. Under such circumstances good intentions and honesty of purpose are of no avail. Perhaps it will be unnecessary to make any findings in view of the fact that there will be no affirmative judgment to support; but if the parties deem it necessary, the only finding I will make will be that the trust subscription and all subsequent contracts gave the trustees an advantage over other stockholders, and for that reason are nonenforceable. Let findings and judgment be submitted accordingly."

[5] We adopt the foregoing opinion of the learned judge as the proper rule for the decision of the action. It is settled law that the promoters of a corporation stand in a fiduciary relation to the corporation, and are bound by the principles governing persons acting in a fiduciary capacity. It has been held that the gratuitous issue of corporate stock by promoters to themselves is a fraud on existing stockholders. Hughes v. Cadena, etc., Mining Co., 13 Ariz. 52, 108 Pac. 231. While no stock was issued in the present case, nor was it the intention that it should be gratuitous, the promoters had arranged for its issuance at a profit to themselves which virtually made the issue gratuitous, sufficiently so at least to bring the transaction within the principles announced in the Hughes Case. See, also, Hinkley v. Pipe Line Co., 132 Iowa, 396, 107 N. W. 629, 119 Am. St. Rep. 564. In 1 Thompson on Corporations (2d Ed.) § 104, it is said:

> "From this fiduciary relation it follows that the promoters must deal with the persons who come into the organization as members or stockholders in the utmost good faith. * * * Neither will they be permitted, either by fraud or silence, to use their position for the purpose of speculation. The general rule conceded and adopted by the authorities is that under such circumstances promoters cannot take advantage of their position to make secret profits out of their transactions with or on behalf of the proposed corporation or the corporators. * * * 'Justice demands that the promoters of the company should not abuse the confidence placed in them by the stockholders, or derive any unjust advantage through their control over the organization or management of the company.' * * * If the promoters obtain secret profits out of any transactions, and either they themselves become members of the board of directors, or persons under their control are elected as such directors, and the board thus composed adopts and ratifies the voidable transaction—this, it has been held, will create no impediment to proceedings by stockholders for redress."

While the transaction involved in this action is not, strictly speaking, one falling within the class of cases usually dealing with what are called "secret profits," it comes within the principle of those cases for the reason that the subscription was made with the object in view of reaping a profit in the future at the expense of the other stockholders. See Mangold v. Adrian Irr. Co., 60 Wash. 286, 111 Pac. 173; Yeiser v. U. S. Board, etc., Co., 107 Fed. 340, 46 C. C. A. 567, 52 L. R. A. 724; Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 20 Sup. Ct. 311, 44 L. Ed. 423; Davis v. Las Ovas Co., 227 U. S. 80, 33 Sup. Ct. 197, 57 L. Ed. 426; Chandler v. Bacon (C. C.) 30 Fed. 538; Brewster v. Hatch, 122 N. Y. 349, 25 N. E. 505, 19 Am. St. Rep. 498; Pietsch v. Milbrath, 123 Wis. 647, 101 N. W. 388, 102 N. W. 342, 68 L. R. A. 945, 107 Am. St. Rep. 1017; De la Motte v. N. W. Clearance Co., 126 Minn. 197, 148 N. W. 47; Torrey v. Cement Co., 158 Mich. 348, 122 N. W. 614; Tooker v. Refining Co., 80 N. J. Eq. 305, 84 Atl. 10; Parker v. Boyle, 178 Ind. 560, 99 N. E. 986.

[6] The optional subscription in the name of the trustee was made with no intention of enforcing it in case the company was not a success. It was held out to the public as a binding subscription, and thus a fraud on future subscribers who would in all probability subscribe on the strength of the optional subscription. One for whose benefit such a fraudulent subscription was made could not enforce it against the corporation or its stockholders. Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403; White Mountains R. Co. v. Eastman, 34 N. H. 124. In the latter case Eastman subscribed for 30 shares of stock, with a secret agreement with the directors that he should have an option to reduce his subscription to 5 shares. In passing upon the character of the transaction, the court said:

> "It is the secret stipulation alone which operates in fraud of others, and upon that the law leaves the parties where they stand, declining to enforce it for the benefit of either; while, as to the other part of the contract [the stock subscription], to enforce it between the parties is what is necessary to defeat their fraudulent purpose as to other innocent persons. That the proceeding is a fraud upon third persons is clear from the relation in which subscribers for stock in a corporation of this kind stand toward each other. In the subscription of each person, every other subscriber has a direct interest. Their respective subscriptions are contributions or advancements for a common object. The action of each in his subscription may be supposed to be influenced by that of the others, and every subscription to be based upon the ground that the others are what upon their face they purport to be.'

We think the findings and conclusions made by the trial court were supported by the evidence, and that there was no error in the admission of parol evidence designed to show the fraudulent character of the trustee's stock subscription.

The judgment dismissing the action is affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and HOLCOMB, MOUNT, and PARKER, JJ., concur.

(97 Wash. 144)

ORROCK v. SOUTH MORAN TP. et al. (No. 13911.)

(Supreme Court of Washington. June 22, 1917.)

1. HIGHWAYS ⚷188—DEFECTS—INJURIES TO PERSONS—LIABILITY OF TOWNSHIP.

Rem. Code 1915, § 950, authorizes an action at law by any county, incorporated town, or other public corporation of like character upon a statutory liability. Section 951 authorizes an action to be maintained against a county or other public corporation for an injury to individual rights arising from some act or omission. Const. art. 11, § 4, provides that the Legislature may by general laws provide for township organizations. Rem. Code 1915, §§ 9322–9438, provide for township organization and vests control of highways in the townships. Held, that the control of highways being vested in the township, it is charged with the duty of maintaining them and liable for injuries arising from failure to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. § 480.]

2. HIGHWAYS ⚷189—DEFECTS—INJURIES TO PERSONS—LIABILITY OF TOWNSHIP.

In view of Const. art. 27, § 3, retaining all territorial laws not repugnant to the state Constitution, Rem. Code 1915, § 951, as to actions against counties and other public corporations is retained and authorizes suit against a township for injuries on defective roads.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Highways, Cent. Dig. §§ 478–480, 483.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Spokane County; E. H. Sullivan, Judge.

Action by James Orrock against the South Moran Township and Spokane County. The action was dismissed as to the county, judgment ran for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John B. White, Wm. C. Meyer, and Fred J. Cunningham, all of Spokane, for appellants. Mark F. Mendenhall and Lloyd E. Gandy, both of Spokane, for respondent.

FULLERTON, J. The plaintiff James R. Orrock received personal injuries by reason of the defective condition of a public highway upon which he was traveling. The highway was outside of the corporate limits of any city or town but was within the corporate limits of South Moran township, Spokane county. He brought an action for damages, joining both the county and the township as defendants. The defendants filed separate demurrers, that of the township being overruled, and that of the county sustained, and the action dismissed as to the latter. By leave of court the defendant South Moran township was permitted to file a special demurrer, as follows:

> "Comes now the defendant South Moran township, a municipal corporation, and files a supplementary demurrer, specially demurring to the complaint of the plaintiff James R. Orrock on the grounds that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against said defendant, for the reason that at common law a township corporation would not be liable for damages in such a cause of action, and could only be made liable therefor by the existence of some statute, and it will be contended upon the hearing of said demurrer that there is no statute of the state of Washington making the said defendant liable as in said complaint alleged."

This demurrer was overruled, and the parties went to trial, which resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff. The defendant appeals, assigning as error the overruling of the special demurrer. The statutes of this state, relating to actions by and against public corporations (Rem. Code), read as follows:

> "Sec. 950. An action at law may be maintained by any county, incorporated town, school district, or other public corporation of like character in this state, in its corporate name, and upon a cause of action accruing to it, in its corporate character, and not otherwise, in either of the following cases:
>
> "1. Upon a contract made with such public corporation;
>
> "2. Upon a liability prescribed by law in favor of such public corporation;
>
> "3. To recover a penalty or forfeiture given to such public corporation;
>
> "4. To recover damages for an injury to the corporate rights or property of such public corporation."
>
> "Sec. 951. An action may be maintained against a county, or other of the public corporations mentioned or described in the preceding section, either upon a contract made by such county or other public corporation in its corporate character, and within the scope of its authority, or for an injury to the rights of the plaintiff arising from some act or omission of such county or other public corporation."

In Kirtley v. Spokane County, 20 Wash. 111, 54 Pac. 936, we held, overruling a decision of the territorial court to the contrary, that under these sections a county was liable for injuries caused a traveler on the public highway by reason of the defective condition of a bridge. The principle of the case has been since approved in numerous decisions. Lane v. Spokane Falls & N. Ry. Co., 21 Wash. 119, 57 Pac. 367, 46 L. R. A. 153, 75 Am. St. Rep. 821; Rounds v. Whatcom County, 22 Wash. 106, 60 Pac. 139; Einseidler v. Whitman County, 22 Wash. 388, 60 Pac. 1122; Wendel v. Spokane County, 27 Wash. 121, 67 Pac. 576, 91 Am. St. Rep. 825; Lincoln County v. Fish, 38 Wash. 105, 80 Pac. 435; Redfield v. School District, 48 Wash. 85, 92 Pac. 770; Neel v. King County, 53 Wash. 490, 102 Pac. 396; Howard v. Tacoma School District, 88 Wash. 167, 152 Pac. 1004.

Township organization was not known in this jurisdiction until the adoption of the state Constitution. By section 4, art. 11, of that instrument, it is provided that the Legislature by general laws shall provide for township organization, under which any county may organize whenever a majority of the qualified electors of such county voting at a general election shall so determine. The Legislature first acted under the power in 1895. Laws 1895, p. 472. The act with the subsequent amendments is found in Rem. Code, at sections 9322–9438. Spokane county organized under the act in 1908. By the act each township when organized becomes a body corporate with power to sue and be sued, to raise such sums of money for the repairs and construction of roads and bridges as they deem necessary, to acquire land containing beds of gravel or quarries of stone needed by the township for road construction, to have the charge of all highways and bridges in the township and the care and supervision thereof, to establish new highways and bridges wholly within the township; and generally they are given such supervision over their internal domestic affairs as is usually conferred on public corporate municipalities.

[1] The foregoing, while not an enumeration of all of the powers conferred on township organizations, is enough to show that such organizations as minor units of the county are vested with full control of the highways within their jurisdictions to the exclusion of the county proper, with power to raise sufficient funds to keep such highways in repair. Being charged with the duty they are, of course, liable for injuries arising from a neglect of the duty, and the appellant township is holden for the injuries suffered by the respondent from the defective way, unless some special reason exists exempting it from liability. Here but one such reason is assigned.

[2] The appellant calls attention to the rule existing in this state, to the effect that the state, or a quasi municipal corporation of the state, is not liable for its torts unless the statute expressly makes it so liable, and contends that there is no such statute. It argues that the statute above cited has no application because it was enacted in territorial days, long prior to the enactment of the statute creating township organizations, and long prior even to the adoption of the Constitution which authorized such organizations. But without following the argument by which this contention is sought to be sustained, we think it untenable. By section 3, art. 27, of the Constitution, all laws in force in the territory of Washington which were not repugnant to that instrument remained in force until they expired by their own limitation or were altered or repealed by the Legislature. This statute was not repugnant to the Constitution, nor has it since expired by its own limitation, nor has it been altered or repealed by the Legislature. It is therefore a part of the existing statutes, as much so as it would have been had it been an enactment of the state Legislature. It is a well-settled rule "that a statute may include by inference a case not originally contemplated when it deals with a genus within which a new species is brought by a subsequent statute." State v. Cleveland, 83 Ohio St. 61, 93 N. E. 467, 21 Ann. Cas. 1284; People v. Kriesel, 136 Mich. 80, 98 N. W. 850, 4 Ann. Cas. 5. And see notes to these cases in 21 Ann. Cas. 1284. and 4 Ann. Cas. 5. Endlich, in his work on the Interpretation of Statutes, at section 112, says:

> "Except in some few cases where a statute has fallen under the principle of excessively strict construction, the language of a statute is generally extended to new things which were not known and could not have been contemplated by the Legislature when it was passed. This occurs when the act deals with a genus, and the thing which afterwards comes into existence is a species of it."

There is no question that township organizations are a species of the genus municipal incorporations, existing and recognized by the Constitution and laws. As such it is liable under the statute for its torts.

The judgment is affirmed.

ELLIS, C. J., and MOUNT, PARKER, and HOLCOMB, JJ., concur.

(19 Ariz. 104)

WARREN CO. v. WHITT. (No. 1540)

(Supreme Court of Arizona. June 23, 1917.)

1. Street Railroads ⇒99(2)—Maintenance of Road—Action for Injuries.

In an action against a street railroad company for personal injuries sustained on account of the overturning of plaintiff's automobile due to the defective condition of the track, evidence held to sustain a finding that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence in driving at an excessive rate of speed.

2. Street Railroads ⇒110(2)—Action for Injury—Pleading.

In an action against a street railroad company for injuries due to overturning of plaintiff's automobile because of the defective condition of the track, that plaintiff was guilty of negligence in violating the speed ordinances would not be considered when not pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Street Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 224.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Cochise County; A. G. McAlister, Judge.

Action by L. Willard Whitt, by Nancy M. Stone, guardian ad litem, against the Warren Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The appellee, as plaintiff, commenced this action against the appellant to recover damages alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff resulting from the negligent manner in which appellant maintained its street railroad tracks within the corporate limits of the city of Bisbee, in violation of the express terms of Ordinance No. 111 of the city of Bisbee. Said Ordinance No. 111 is the grant of the franchise to appellant to use the streets of the city corporation for the purposes of its street railroad tracks and cars, upon condition that it keep the rails and tracks of said street railway within the city of Bisbee constantly in repair, flush with the road or street, and in such manner that carriages and any other vehicles may easily and freely cross the same at all points and in all directions without obstruction.

On April 22, 1914, late at night, plaintiff was driving an automobile along a street upon which defendant maintained its street railroad. The automobile overturned, pinning plaintiff under it, and the injuries for which plaintiff claims damages were inflicted. The plaintiff claims that the defendant's failure to place its railroad track in the condition required by said ordinance was the proximate cause of the injuries, and the defendant contends that the injuries were caused from plaintiff's negligent driving of the automobile at a rate of speed prohibited by an ordinance of the city. The cause was submitted to the jury, and the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff assessing his damages at $7,000. Judgment followed the verdict. From the judgment and from an order refusing a new trial, the defendant appeals.

Knapp & D'Autremont, of Bisbee, and H. E. Pickett, of Douglas, for appellant. Williams & Flanigan, of Bisbee, for appellee.

CUNNINGHAM, J. (after stating the facts as above). The appellant has assigned numerous errors, but the assignments so made, in effect, amount to an assignment that the verdict and judgment are not sustained by the evidence.

The appellant frankly admits that the assignments of error raise two principal contentions, viz.: (1) That plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in driving and operating his automobile; and (2) that plaintiff was driving the automobile at an excessive rate of speed in violation of Ordinance No. 183, and was therefore guilty of negligence precluding his recovery.

The defendant as special defenses to the action set forth that the plaintiff's negligence caused the injury and damages, and that the particular negligence so referred to consisted in this: That the automobile was "driven by plaintiff in a careless, negligent, improper, and unskillful manner, and at an unlawful, unreasonable, excessive, reckless, and dangerous rate of speed, to wit, at a rate of speed exceeding 15 miles per hour, in violation of Ordinance No. 183 of the City of Bisbee." A further defense of contributory negligence is set forth and alleged to consist of the same acts, viz. driving at a rate of speed in excess of 15 miles per hour in violation of said ordinance.

The charter duty of the defendant to keep its railroad track in a safe condition for use of carriages and like vehicles is not in dispute. The fact that defendant had failed to perform its said duty is likewise not in dispute. On the other hand, the parties seem to consider as a fact that the rails and ties of the track were exposed from the Bridge Road street crossing, near which the automobile came into contact with the railroad track, southerly along Tombstone Canyon street to the point where the automobile was found overturned, a distance of 178 feet.

The manner and means by which plaintiff came in contact with the dangerous track are in dispute, and the cause of the overturning of the automobile is a matter of controversy. Conflicting evidence supports either side of the controversies.

[1] The issue presented by the pleadings is whether the injuries resulted from plaintiff's driving the automobile at a rate of speed in excess of 15 miles per hour. The defendant offered evidence in support of its special defenses; that is, evidence tending to show that plaintiff was driving the automobile at a rate of speed from 20 to 25 miles per hour as the machine was approaching the Bridge Road street crossing near which crossing the automobile came into contact with defendant's railroad track. Such testimony was contradicted by a statement in writing signed and sworn to by the same witness made out of court a considerable period of time prior to the trial. On cross-examination of the plaintiff, he states that he may have been driving at the rate of 17 miles per hour at the point mentioned, but his best recollection and judgment was that he was not driving at a rate of speed to exceed 15 miles per hour. One witness testified that, from the time the automobile came into contact with the railroad track until it left the track, a distance traveled of about 100 feet, the time in which the distance of 100 feet was traveled was from 2 to 3 seconds. The defendant offered testimony tending to prove that the distance from the Bridge Road crossing to the point at which the automobile stopped overturned is 178 feet. Defendant contends that this evidence is not disputed, and conclusively shows that plaintiff was traveling at a rate exceeding 15 miles per hour from the Bridge Road crossing to the point of the injury. Conceding the correctness of the witness' estimate of the time required to make the distance of 178 feet, to wit, 3 seconds, then he was traveling at the rate of about 38 miles per hour. The plaintiff testified that, when he came into contact with the railroad track, he disengaged the power on his automobile and applied the brakes. He only applied the power and released the brakes when he made efforts to steer the machine away from the railroad track. Such testimony conflicts with the testimony of defendant's said witness, for the reason common experience teaches that, if a vehicle is traveling at the rate of 25 miles per hour and turns on a curve onto a road where the two wheels on one side of the vehicle must run over exposed ties, the natural tendency will be to lessen the speed traveled; that when all the power is removed when the vehicle reaches a road such as is here described, and the brakes applied, the tendency is to lessen the speed to a much greater degree. Defendant's theory is that the speed was increased by the rough road and by the application of more power to the machine after the rough road was encountered. Hence the evidence was conflicting upon the question of speed. One other witness for defendant testified as to the noise the machine was making just prior to overturning. This noise awakened witness, and is described as a noise like an automobile makes when backing at a furious rate of speed. This is no evidence of the speed the automobile was traveling which the jury are bound to regard. The bumping of the machine over the exposed ties and rails may have been a satisfactory explanation of the noise concerning which the witness testified.

The vital fact, the speed at which plaintiff was driving at the time of the injury, remained to be determined by the jury from conflicting evidence. The jury have determined that question in favor of the plaintiff's evidence. Defendant had the burden of proof in maintaining its special defenses. The evidence, although conflicting, sustains the conclusions necessarily reached by the jury. If the jury believed from the evidence that the plaintiff was driving the automobile at a rate of speed equal to 15 miles per hour or less, then, of course, the finding of such to be the fact effectually and completely disposes of the defendant's special defenses of negligence and of contributory negligence, because such special defenses are based upon the allegations that plaintiff was at the time of the injury driving his automobile at a rate of speed in excess of 15 miles per hour. Whether the mere fact that plaintiff was violating the speed ordinance at the time of his injury would relieve the defendant of liability for its negligence in maintaining the dangerous track is not a question of law in this case. The effect of the jury's verdict is to determine that plaintiff was not in fact so violating said speed ordinance, and such determination has the support of substantial evidence.

[2] Appellant contends on this appeal that plaintiff was driving the automobile at a rate of speed in excess of six miles per hour, and he was therefore guilty of negligence because he was violating the said speed Ordinance No. 183. This contention would have a tendency to indicate that defendant abandoned its special defenses pleaded. However, such contention is suggested for the first time on appeal. Such matter was not made the grounds of any defense pleaded by defendant. Appellant cannot now predicate error on a state of facts which it failed to plead, and the assertion of such as a special defense is necessary to be of avail.

I find no reversible error in the record. The judgment must be affirmed.

FRANKLIN, C. J., and ROSS, J., concur.

(19 Ariz. 108)

MANNION v. MARSH. (No. 1539.)

(Supreme Court of Arizona. June 23, 1917.)

1. Ejectment ⇨9(4) — Necessity for Title in Plaintiff—Absence of Statute.

In the absence of statute, it is the universal rule that possession of real property is sufficient basis to authorize ejectment against mere strangers or intruders.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. § 19.]

2. Ejectment ⇨9(4)—Necessity for Title in Plaintiff—Construction of Statute—"Valid Subsisting Interest in Real Property."

Civ. Code 1913, par. 1628, providing that any person having "a valid subsisting interest in real property," and a right to immediate possession, "may recover same by action against any person acting as owner, landlord or tenant"; paragraph 1629, providing that plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title and paragraph 1631, providing that complaint may state generally that plaintiff is entitled to possession, also "the quantity of his estate, and the extent of his interest therein, etc.," do not require more than a showing of mere possession to support ejectment against strangers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. § 19.]

3. Ejectment ⇨23—Defense—Interest in Public Lands—"Duplicate Receiver's Receipt."

Defendant, having filed a homestead entry on public lands, was entitled to recover as against plaintiff in ejectment who merely held possession of a part of such lands, in view of Civ. Code 1913, par. 1747, providing that a certificate of purchase or of location or duplicate receiver's receipt of any land shall be prima facie evidence that the holder thereof is the owner, and entitled to possession of the land described therein as against every other person, except the United States, the "duplicate receiver's receipt" being intended to cover the initial step to secure title from the government.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 81-93.]

4. Public Lands ⇨23—Possessory Rights—Purpose of Statute.

Civ. Code 1913, par. 1747, was enacted for the purpose of aiding persons to secure possession of their lands before patents were issued, as without the aid of such statute the preemptor or homesteader was unable to dispossess occupants of his entries.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Public Lands, Cent. Dig. § 30.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Frank Baxter, Judge.

Ejectment by Theodora M. Marsh against Mary M. Mannion. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions to dismiss complaint.

M. Marsteller, of Nogales, for appellant. Duffy & Purdum, of Nogales, for appellee.

ROSS, J. Prior to September 26, 1914, the S. E. ¼ of the S. E. ¼ and lot 6, section 17, and lots 1 and 2, section 20, township 20 south, range 14 east, Santa Cruz county, Ariz., was unappropriated public lands. On that day appellant entered it as a homestead by paying the legal filing fees to the proper land office and receiving therefrom "Notice of Allowance," which recited that application had been allowed subject to further compliance with law and regulations applicable thereto. At the time the land was unoccupied and unimproved, except 8.97 acres along its northern boundary. This piece of land was included in the inclosure of appellee, which extended over the quarter section line from lot 5 and the N. E. ¼ of the S. E. ¼, section 17. This small fraction had been fenced and used for pasturage by the appellee and her predecessors in interest for a number of years, under the belief of appellee that she was the owner thereof. In August, 1915, appellant constructed a barbed-wire fence around and along the exterior boundaries of her entire entry, and in doing so necessarily entered appellee's inclosure, and by her fence reduced the size of appellee's field 8.97 acres. In addition to fencing the land appellant made other acts of settlement upon the unoccupied portions of her entry, such as building a residence, digging a well, planting an orchard, etc. In February, 1916, the appellee brought an action in the nature of ejectment to recover from appellant the possession of the 8.97 acres. Appellee's cause of action is based solely upon possession and unlawful ouster by entry thereon by appellant "against plaintiff's will and without her consent." Appellant by her answer and evidence undertook to justify her conduct under her homestead entry. The case was tried to the court without a jury and at its conclusion the court made the following findings:

"(1) That the defendant duly made a homestead entry under the United States' land laws, on the 26th day of September, 1914, on the following described land: S. E. ¼ S. E. ¼, and lot 6, section 17, and lots 1 and 2, section 20, township 24 S. range 14 E. G. & S. R. M.—and that said entry embraced the land in controversy in this action, as described in the amended complaint herein.

"(2) That the said land in controversy at the date of said homestead entry, and for a long time prior thereto, to wit, since July, 1904, was occupied in good faith by the plaintiff, who was in possession of, and holding the same for her own use and benefit, and under a title which she, at that time, believed was good.

"(3) That the defendant, at the date of said homestead entry, knew that plaintiff claimed, was occupying, and was in possession of the land in controversy.

"(4) That under the law the said homestead entry is invalid as to the said land in controversy"

—and entered judgment thereon in favor of the appellee for her costs and for the restitution of possession of the premises.

The appellant demurred to the complaint, and now insists that the court erred in not sustaining the demurrer. The complaint, in effect, alleged that on a certain day the plaintiff was occupying and using said tract of land, and was in the possession of and entitled to the possession of the same; that the defendant entered upon said premises and took possession thereof against plaintiff's will and without her consent, and ejected plaintiff therefrom, and unlawfully withholds possession of same.

[1, 2] It is the contention of the appellant that mere possession of public lands does not give sufficient title to the possessor to maintain the statutory action in the nature of ejectment. She supports her contention by referring the court to section 1628, Civil Code 1913, which reads:

> "Any person having a valid subsisting interest in real property, and a right to the immediate possession thereof, may recover the same by action against any person acting as owner, landlord or tenant of the property claimed."

Also section 1629:

> "The plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title."

And section 1631:

> "The complaint may state generally that the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the premises, describing them, also the quantity of his estate and the extent of his interest therein, and that the defendant unlawfully keeps him out of possession, and the damages, if any, which he claims for withholding the same. * * *"

It is said that the appellee fails to show by her complaint that she has "a valid subsisting interest" in the premises; that mere possession is not such an interest. In the absence of such a statute we think it is the universal rule that possession of real property is sufficient basis to authorize an action of ejectment against mere strangers or intruders upon such possession, and the provision of section 1629, to the effect that the plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, does not change that rule when applied to an action involving possessory rights. The rule is stated in 9 R. C. L. 850, § 20, as follows:

> "It is well established by the weight of authority that the general rule in actions of ejectment that the claimant must recover upon the strength of his own title does not operate to prohibit the acquisition of possessory rights which may be enforced in actions of ejectment between parties in cases where the true owner does not intervene, and that actual prior possession by the plaintiff or those under whom he claims is prima facie evidence of title sufficient to maintain ejectment against a mere naked trespasser or intruder, even where title may be shown to exist in another."

At page 854, § 22, Id., in speaking of statutes requiring that the plaintiff shall have "a valid subsisting interest" in the premises before he may maintain an action of ejectment, it is said:

> "In some jurisdictions express provision is made by statute to the effect that no person can recover in ejectment, unless he has at the time of commencing the action a valid subsisting interest in the premises claimed, and a right to recover the possession thereof, or of some share, interest or portion thereof, to be proved and established at the trial. Such a statute has been construed as making no exception, as to the proof of the right to recover possession, in the case of strangers or intruders, and as clearly stating a universal rule applicable in all cases of ouster."

Under this authority, which is well supported by the cases cited, we are of the opinion that the complaint states a good cause of action.

[3, 4] Appellant contends that, the government having permitted her to file on the several legal subdivisions described, she is, by virtue thereof, entitled to the possession of all of it, and that this action cannot be successfully maintained to dispossess her. In Balsz v. Liebenow, 4 Ariz. 227, 36 Pac. 209, decided in January, 1894, by the predecessor of this court, it was held that the holder of a duplicate receiver's receipt could not maintain an action of ejectment against the actual occupant of the land covered by her entry; such receipt not being any evidence of title or right of possession. In 1895, the Eighteenth Legislative Assembly of the territory, having in mind no doubt the Balsz-Liebenow decision and to correct what it conceived to be a defect of the law, enacted the following statute:

> "A certificate of purchase or of location or duplicate receiver's receipt of any land in this territory issued or made in pursuance of any law of the United States or of this territory, is and shall be prima facie evidence that the holder or assignee of such certificate or receipt is the owner of and entitled to the possession of the land described therein as against every other person, except the United States."

This statute was carried forward and now appears in the Civil Code as section 1747. The paper issued to appellant by the Land Department, as heretofore noted, is designated as "Notice of Allowance." It is also signed by the register and receiver. The question is whether such an instrument falls within the meaning of any of the terms used in the above-quoted statute. At the time that the statute was enacted there was issued to the homestead entryman a duplicate receiver's receipt, which was signed only by the receiver of the land office, reciting the fact of entry. It would seem that the "Notice of Allowance" now issued to the homestead entryman is in legal effect the same as the duplicate receiver's receipt formerly issued. Each is the inceptive or initiative step taken to acquire title from the government, and performs the same office, so far as the government and the homesteader are concerned. We, therefore, conclude that the term "duplicate receiver's receipt" was intended to cover this initial paper by whatever name it might be called, and that the holder of such is prima facie "the owner of and entitled to the possession of the land described therein as against every other person, except the United States."

This statute was passed for the purpose of aiding persons to secure possession of their lands before patents were issued, as without the aid of such statute the pre-emptor or homesteader was unable to dispossess occupants of his entry. California has similar statutes, and in that state may be found several cases upholding the rights of the holder of the designated evidence of title from the government to the posssession as against one merely occupying the land. Gragg v. Cooper, 150 Cal. 584, 89 Pac. 346; Wormouth v. Gardner, 105 Cal. 149, 38 Pac. 646; Whittaker v. Pendola, 78 Cal. 296, 20 Pac. 680; Haven v. Haws, 63 Cal. 514.

Under the statute appellant was prima facie entitled to the possession of the land described as against the appellee and therefore, in this kind of an action was entitled to judgment.

The judgment is reversed, with directions that the appellee's complaint be dismissed.

FRANKLIN, C. J., and CUNNINGHAM, J., concur.

(19 Ariz. 182)

SUPERIOR & PITTSBURG COPPER CO. v. TOMICH. (No. 1535.)

(Supreme Court of Arizona. July 2, 1917.)

1. Constitutional Law 🔑245, 301 — Master and Servant 🔑11—Employers' Liability Act—Validity.

Employers' liability law (Civ. Code 1913, tit. 14, c. 6), being a valid exercise of the state's police power, does not violate Const. U. S. Amend. 14, prohibiting any state from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law or denying to any person the equal protection of the laws.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 702, 848–850, 857.]

2. Constitutional Law 🔑55 — Employers' Liability Act—Validity.

Employers' liability law, does not conflict with Const. art. 18, § 5, providing that the defense of contributory negligence shall, in all cases be a question of fact, such constitutional provision merely requiring the submission of the question of contributory negligence in cases where such defense is allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 58–69, 71, 80, 81, 83.]

3. Master and Servant 🔑11—Employers' Liability Act—Validity.

Employers' liability act is not invalid as violating Const. art. 18, § 7, commanding the Legislature to enact an employers' liability law, but limiting liability to all cases in which death or injury shall not have been caused by the negligence of the employé killed or injured, the statute by its terms allowing an apportionment of damages where the injured employé has been guilty of contributory negligence.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃228(1)—EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT—DEFENSES.

Since the employers' liability act provides that nothing less than the sole negligence of the employé injured will bar an action for damages, an answer, setting up plaintiff's contributory negligence as a complete and not a partial bar, constitutes no defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. § 670.]

5. DAMAGES ⊂⊃132(13)—PERSONAL INJURIES—EXCESSIVENESS.

$8,000 held not an excessive verdict under the employers' liability act, where the employé's hand was crushed, exposing the nerves and necessitating amputation of three fingers.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. § 384.]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1069(1)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action under the employers' liability act, the action of the court in allowing jurymen to question witnesses held harmless error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4136.]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃200—PRESERVATION OF EXCEPTIONS—FAILURE TO OBJECT.

In an action for personal injuries under the employers' liability act, failure to object to questions asked by the jurors as indicating prejudice precluded such matter from being urged on appeal.

Ross, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cochise County; Alfred C. Lockwood, Judge.

Action by Frank Tomich against the Superior & Pittsburg Copper Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The appellee was employed by the appellant in the underground workings of its mines in Cochise county. The appellee's duties required him to load, push on a track, and unload ore cars. The place for the performance of such duties was on the 900-foot level of the mine. The track was laid through a drift from the point of loading the cars to a point of unloading the ores into a chute. The appellee was an experienced car man, accustomed to such work in other mines. When the car had received its load of about 2,000 pounds weight, the appellee was required to start the car moving on the track, and control its movements until the chute was reached. Timbers were so placed about the chute as to facilitate the unloading or dumping of the load. On November 9, 1914, and a few hours after appellee had first commenced his labors in the said drift, he started a loaded car from the point of loading along the track toward the chute, and, following the car with his right hand holding the top of the rear end of the car as it moved over the track by gravity, appellee stumbled over something on the floor or slipped on the track or on the ground, and was thrown to the ground, but continued to hold to the rear end of the ore car as it moved toward the chute. So holding to the car, the car struck the obstructions about the chute with such force that the fastenings on the doors of the car released, and the car ended over so that three fingers on appellee's right hand were caught between the rear end of the car which he was holding and a cross timber about the chute. The fingers were lacerated, crushed, and bruised so that they were amputated about the first joints of each finger. The said surgical operation was done at the appellant's hospital department, and when the wounds healed the nerves were left so exposed as to be sensitive and tender and causing suffering, and a further amputation of the fingers is required to relieve such condition. The appellee commenced this action to recover damages for his said injuries, basing his cause of action on the employers' liability law (chapter 6, tit. 14, Civil Code Ariz. 1913) and upon negligence. The cause of action founded upon negligence was expressly waived and abandoned by plaintiff upon the trial. The defendant demurred to the complaint upon the ground that the employers' liability law and the constitutional mandate, in obedience to which such statute was enacted, are both void because they are contrary to and contravene the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that they deprive the defendant of its property without due process of law, and deny to it the equal protection of the law, by subjecting it to unlimited liability for damages for personal injuries suffered by its employés without any fault or negligence on its part, and because such statute attempts to give plaintiff the right to recover damages of defendant notwithstanding the injuries for which such damages are claimed were contributed to and in part caused by plaintiff's own negligence, and attempts to deprive the defendant of the right to wholly defeat this action by interposing the defense of contributory negligence. The defendant alleges that the damages, if any, resulted wholly from plaintiff's neglect and carelessness, and his failure to use any care or caution in his own behalf at the time and place of the alleged injury. The further defense is that the plaintiff contributed to the injury by his own negligence, in that at the time of its occurrence the plaintiff was giving no attention, or insufficient attention, to his duties, and failed to push the car in the proper manner or place his hands on the car in the proper position, and other like failures are alleged.

The court overruled the demurrers, and the cause was tried to a jury. The jury returned a verdict against the defendant for the sum of $8,000. Judgment followed the verdict. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order refusing a new trial.

Knapp & d'Autremont, of Bisbee, and H. E. Pickett, of Douglas, for appellant. Fred Sutter, of Bisbee, and J. T. Kingsbury, of Tombstone, for appellee.

CUNNINGHAM, J. (after stating the facts as above). The appellant assigns as error the overruling of its demurrers to the complaint for the reason both chapter 6, tit. 14, Revised Statutes of Arizona 1913, Civil Code, upon which the action is based, and the constitutional mandate, section 7 of article 18 of the state Constitution, in obedience to which said chapter 6 was enacted, violate section 1 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in that the employers' liability law, said chapter 6, tit. 14, attempts to deprive the defendant of its property without due process of law by imposing unlimited liability on it as an employer for personal injuries sustained by an employé while in its employ in cases where defendant has been guilty of no fault, want of care, or neglect of duty; and because the employers' liability law contravenes and is in violation of sections 5 and 7 of article 18 of the Constitution of the state of Arizona, in that said statute attempts to give plaintiff the right to recover judgment for personal injuries notwithstanding the injuries for which the judgment is sought were contributed to and in part caused by plaintiff's negligence, and attempts to deprive defendant of the right to wholly defeat this action by showing that said injuries were contributed to and in part caused by plaintiff's own negligence.

The questions of the constitutional validity of the employers' liability law are raised in a number of different objections. The defendant assigns as error the admission and rejection of evidence and misconduct of the trial judge during the trial of the cause, working a prejudice and resulting in an excessive verdict.

The appellant groups the assignments of error under four divisions covering the points of law raised in the cause: First, the employers' liability law, chapter 6, tit. 14, under which the action is brought, is unconstitutional and void; second, that the plaintiff failed to make out a case warranting recovery under the employers' liability law; third, error in admitting and excluding evidence and in giving instructions, and, fourth, an excessive verdict.

[1] Under the first division the case of Inspiration Consolidated Copper Co. v. Mendez, 19 Ariz. ——, 166 Pac. 278 (not yet officially reported) on the authority of New York C. R. Co. v. White, 243 U. S. 188, 37 Sup. Ct. 247, 61 L. Ed. 667, holds to the opinion that the employers' liability law is valid within the police powers of the state, and does not come into conflict with the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States; and that such liability law is a valid, subsisting enactment and is a law of the state of Arizona.

[2] Appellant contends that chapter 6 of title 14 is void for the reason its terms conflict with sections 5 and 7 of article 18 of the state Constitution. Section 5 is that:

> "The defense of contributory negligence or of assumption of risk shall, in all cases whatsoever, be a question of fact and shall, at all times, be left to the jury."

This section does not restrict the power of the Legislature to modify or abolish the defense of contributory negligence. The restriction contained in the section is clear that no law shall be enacted which attempts to make the defenses of contributory negligence or assumption of risk, when interposed, determinable by the courts as matters of law, but such defenses are made to depend upon facts when they are properly interposable, and, interposed, they are required to be established by a preponderance of the evidence to the satisfaction of the jury. Whether the plaintiff's negligence contributed to the wrong, or whether the plaintiff assumed the risk and danger from which the wrong arose, must be determined as a fact from the evidence by the jury.

[3] Section 7 commands the Legislature to enact an employers' liability law, by the terms of which any employer shall be liable for the death or injury of workmen employed in all hazardous occupations named, and any other industry designated by the Legislature, whenever such death or injury is caused by any accident due to a condition or conditions of such occupation, except when such death or injury has been caused by the negligence of the employé killed or injured. The only restriction placed upon the legislative power in carrying out said constitutional mandate found in the section of the Constitution is the exception, viz.:

> Liability is incurred "in all cases in which such death or injury of such employé shall not have been caused by the negligence of the employé killed or injured."

In all other cases the legislative power is unlimited by said section 7.

A careful examination of chapter 6 of title 14 discloses no violation of such limitation on the power of the Legislature. The exception is carefully preserved in paragraph 3154 of the statute. If the injury resulted from an accident arising out of and in the course of labor, service, and employment in a hazardous occupation, and was due to a condition, or conditions, of such occupation or employment, and was not caused by the negligence of the employé the liability to damages exists. If, however, the injury was caused by negligence to which the injured workmen contributed, the liability of the employer remains to an amount of the full damages, less the amount of damages attributable to the employé's negligence. In other words, the damages are to be apportioned to the parties, employer and employé, as the negligence attributable to the one is to the negligence attributable to the other. Paragraph 3159, Civil Code of Arizona 1913. "The fact [appearing] that the employé may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employé," are the words of the statute. The statute is in full harmony with the constitutional mandate and with its restriction.

[4] The defendant set forth in its answer the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, consisting of the manner in which the plaintiff was performing his duties at the time of the accident, but defendant's answer does not set forth any claim for a reduction of damages by reason of such negligence, but claims such contributory negligence as a complete, not a partial, defense to the action. The answer is evidently interposed upon the theory of the common-law rule of contributory negligence in bar of the cause of action. Under the provisions of chapter 6, supra, nothing less than the sole negligence of the employé injured will bar an action based on the statute for damages. Negligence of the employé contributing to the injury may serve to reduce the amount of the recovery, but will not bar recovery.

The defendant, having in its answer admitted that its negligence in part was the cause of the damages, by setting forth a charge of contributory negligence against the plaintiff, authorized a verdict against defendant in any event. The matters left open for inquiry were the amount of the damages the plaintiff was entitled to recover as measured by the allegations of the complaint and the evidence, and whether the accident was due to a condition or conditions of the employment and such as is unavoidable.

[5] The appellant complains that the amount of damages found is excessive and out of all proportion to the nature, extent, and seriousness of the injury, to the loss of time, wages, or future earning capacity, to the amount necessary to effect a recovery, to his station in life, and to his pain and suffering. No complaint is made that the evidence does not sustain the verdict. The specific complaints are made that the jury asked questions of witnesses during the progress of the trial; and the members of the jury were permitted to and did examine the plaintiff's injured hand, and touched and pressed his wounded fingers, and the members of the jury were thereby prejudiced, which prejudice resulted in a verdict for excessive damages.

[6] With regard to the first complaint made, the abstract of record discloses that counsel for defendant invited the jury to ask questions of witness Massey. Thereafter the jurors freely asked questions of other witnesses. The record discloses no objection was offered by the defendant to any question asked by any juror of any witness. The practice of allowing attorneys, parties, the judge, and jurors to examine witnesses in a disorderly manner has a tendency to break down the decorum becoming the sanctity of a trial, and should be discouraged. The proper dignity of the court requires orderly procedure in a trial of a cause to be strictly observed. The liberty or property of litigants is involved in the result of every lawsuit, and the trial of such rights may result in tragedy to some interested human being. Certainly a tragedy results from error committed, never comedy. The purpose of a lawsuit is to determine the exact rights of the parties thereto and enforce such exact rights. The wisdom of ages of experience has served to teach our profession that the observance of the prescribed rules of procedure more nearly discover the exact rights of parties than haphazard, disorderly procedure. Not every departure from orderly trial procedure justifies a reviewing court in reversing a judgment because of irregular trial procedure. The irregular procedure must have prejudiced the rights of the party complaining before an appellate court is justified in disturbing a judgment. We must presume that no harm befell the defendant by reason of the many questions asked the witnesses on this trial, for the reason the defendant first invited the asking of the questions, and at no time during the trial objected to that form of procedure.

[7] The appellant contends that the questions asked the witnesses by the jurors conclusively indicate a prejudice against this defendant, inducing an excessive verdict for damages. The nature of the questions called for answers giving information covering a wide field of inquiry, and were not confined to testimony bearing upon the amount of damages. The questions were largely confined to detail matters connected with the knowledge of the witness with regard to which he had testified, the credibility of the witness, and his means of knowledge of the matter with respect to which he gave testimony. The jurors had a very good reason to test the witness' means of knowledge of these matters and the test given indicates no prejudice against defendant. This particular matter was not insisted upon as a ground for a new trial, and is first raised on this appeal. For that reason the objection must be overruled. The verdict does not conclusively appear to have been reached through prejudice and bias, nor induced by passion and prejudice.

The appellant contends that by permitting the jurors to examine plaintiff's wounded hand and fingers, and during such examination to squeeze and press his hand for the purpose of discovering the present sensitive condition of the fingers, was error, and resulted in causing the jury to return a verdict for excessive damages. The appellant nowhere contends that the evidence thus gained by the jury was false. If as a fact the plaintiff's wounds remained sensitive and prevented plaintiff from earning a living, and the jury ascertained that fact from personal physical examinations and by experimenting with the wound, no harm resulted to appellant simply by the use of the means complained of in arriving at the fact. Appellant did not object to the examinations when being made by the jury, and cannot now complain of the character of the evidence used to establish the fact.

While the record discloses many departures from the ideal trial of a lawsuit, these departures were consented to, acquiesced in, submitted to, or indulged, by appellant without objection, and do not appear affirmatively upon the record to have worked a prejudice to appellant's rights. The verdict returned is large in amount, but that matter lay with the jury. No question is made that the verdict is not sustained by substantial evidence.

Upon the whole case I am of the opinion the record contains no reversible error. Consequently the judgment must be affirmed.

FRANKLIN, C. J. (concurring). The demonstrations permitted before the jury in this case rather exceeded the limits defined in such matters, but here, as in predicating error on allowing the jurors to propound objectionable questions, appellant is estopped because a similar demonstration was made at the request of appellant. With regard to the excessiveness of the damages, where there is a personal injury permanent in its character, there is much difficulty in measuring compensation for it by strict and definite rules, and therefore it must be left largely to the sound judgment of a jury and the trial judge. As a result of this accident the index and second finger of plaintiff's hand were amputated at the first joint, and the third finger amputated just a little above the first joint, causing the nerves to be caught in the flesh and healed in the scar tissue, causing neuritis and resulting in severe and constant pain, to relieve which condition another operation under an anæsthetic would be necessary. The jury found a verdict for $8,000, which was upheld by the trial judge on motion for a new trial. The verdict appears somewhat large, but that it is larger than the appellate court would give, or that the appellate court would be better satisfied with a smaller verdict—these are not the criteria by which we are guided in reversing a case and ordering a new trial because of an excessive verdict. This court is restrained from so doing unless our minds are satisfied that from the large amount of the verdict the jury arrived at it because of passion, prejudice, partiality, or corruption on their part. In view of the principles which restrain the court in such a matter, and especially having the refusal of the trial court on motion for a new trial to interfere, I do not think this court is authorized or would be justified in reversing the case on that ground. See Ruck v. Milwaukee Brewery Co., 148 Wis. 222, 134 N. W. 914, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1362.

Counsel for appellee does not oppose a remitter of some portion of the verdict which this court might deem excessive as a condition of denying a new trial, but I have not considered the power of this court to do so under section 578, Revised Statutes 1913, or the propriety of its exercise here, because appellant on argument expressly asked the court not to order a remitter if it was not of opinion that a new trial should be granted without such condition. I, therefore, concur in affirming the judgment.

ROSS, J., dissents. See 165 Pac. 1185.

(54 Mont. 17)

In re RILEY'S ESTATE.

RILEY v. MOUAT.

(No. 3778.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. June 16, 1917.)

1. Appeal and Error 🔑874(5)—Decisions Reviewable—New Trial—Jurisdiction.

Error in granting a new trial in probate proceedings cannot avail appellant, where she failed to appeal from the order, but appealed from orders granted on the new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3478, 3480, 3481.]

2. Appeal and Error 🔑185(1)—Jurisdiction—Failure to Make Objection.

Appellant cannot on appeal object to jurisdiction of district court, because no pleading was filed as against appellant's application for letters of administration, where she failed to appeal from order granting new trial, participated in the new trial proceeding, and failed to make appropriate objection to jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 1166–1168, 1170–1176, 1375.]

3. Marriage 🔑11—Common Law—Public Assumption.

Where a man and woman were not joined by ceremonial marriage, their relations, begun when he had a living wife, were clandestine and of no force as a public assumption of the marriage relation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Marriage, Cent. Dig. § 30.]

4. Appeal and Error 🔑1011(1)—Review—Conclusiveness of Findings—Conflicting Evidence.

Where the evidence is conflicting, the appellate court will not substitute its judgment for that of the judge who saw the witnesses and could form a first-hand opinion of their credibility.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3983–3988.]

5. Appeal and Error 🔑1169(6)—"Verdict or Other Decision Against Law."

The trial of a matter to the court without a jury, resulting in findings of fact warranted by evidence, conclusions of law based upon findings, and a judgment following both, does not present "a verdict or other decision which is against law," for which reversal is authorized by Rev. Codes, § 6794.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4536.]

Appeal from District Court, Silver Bow County; Geo. B. Winston, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Joseph P. Riley, deceased. From an order of the district court adjudging that she is not the widow of Joseph P. Riley, and ordering that letters of administration issue to Mary F. Mouat, Emma Riley appeals. Affirmed.

Edwin M. Lamb, of Butte, and W. A. Pennington, of Roundup, for appellant. Canning & Geagan, of Butte, and E. P. Riley, for respondent.

SANNER, J. Joseph P. Riley, of Butte, died leaving some estate but no will. His sister, Mary F. Mouat, filed, in the district court of Silver Bow county, her petition for letters of administration of his estate, alleging, among other things, that she and Mervin Riley, his minor son, are his heirs at law. A few days later Emma Riley, alleging herself to be the widow of Joseph P. Riley, filed a like petition, together with written objections to the appointment of Mrs. Mouat. Upon these representations the matter was brought on for hearing, which hearing resulted in an order granting the petition of Emma Riley and directing the issuance of letters to her. Thereupon Mrs. Mouat moved for a new trial, and this motion was heard and granted. The retrial was had, and its result was to adjudge that Emma Riley is not the widow of Joseph P. Riley, deceased, and to order that letters of administration issue to Mrs. Mouat. From this order Emma Riley appeals.

A reversal is sought upon these grounds: That error occurred in granting a new trial; that the adjudication appealed from is invalid because the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter after the order granting a new trial was made; that the adjudication is not warranted by the evidence presented; that the adjudication is against law.

[1] 1. It will suffice to answer the first of these to say that, if the granting of the new trial be viewed as error within jurisdiction, it cannot avail the appellant now; her remedy, which she failed to pursue, was by appeal from the order.

[2] 2. The contention that the court had no jurisdiction is based upon the assertion that there was no pleading of any kind filed as against the appellant's application for letters; therefore there was no issue of fact properly raised to be retried, and a new trial was not allowable under the decisions of this court in Re Antonioli's Estate, 42 Mont. 219, 111 Pac. 1033, and State ex rel. Culbertson Ferry Co. v. District Court, 49 Mont. 595, 144 Pac. 159. The appellant is not in position to urge this, because the record shows that she participated in the new trial proceeding, failed to appeal from the order granting a new trial, and failed to make in the court below any appropriate objection to the jurisdiction over the proceedings following the order. Jurisdiction in all matters of probate is vested in the district court by law (Rev. Codes, § 6275), and the appellant's conduct was tantamount to a voluntary appearance and waiver, so far as she was concerned, of the question of jurisdiction in the particular instance. In re Graye, 36 Mont. 394, 93 Pac. 266; In re Blackfeather's Estate (Okl.) 153 Pac. 839.

[3, 4] 3. No valuable purpose would be served by canvassing the evidence at length. The appellant and Joseph P. Riley were never joined by any ceremonial marriage; their relations began when Riley had a living wife, and were therefore clandestine, and of no force as a public assumption of the marriage relation; there was testimony from which the court could have concluded that, after the death of Mrs. Riley, the appellant and Joseph P. Riley did mutually and publicly assume the marriage relation, and there was testimony sufficiently contradictory to enable the court to say that they did not, within the decisions of this court in O'Malley v. O'Malley, 46 Mont. 549, 129 Pac. 501, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 662, and In re Huston's Estate, 48 Mont. 524, 139 Pac. 458. Such being the situation, we may not interfere and substitute our judgment for that of the judge who saw the witnesses and could form a first-hand opinion of their credibility; but we must hold that the evidence was sufficient.

[5] 4. Counsel for appellant does not indicate wherein the adjudication is "against law," other than as involved in the propositions above considered. In the statute that phrase has a specific application as specifying one of the grounds for a new trial (Rev. Codes, § 6794), reviewable only on appeal from an order denying a new trial. Certain it is that the trial of a matter to the court without a jury, resulting in findings of fact warranted by the evidence, conclusions of law based upon the findings, and a judgment following both, presents no example of "a verdict or other decision" which is "against law."

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Affirmed.

BRANTLY, C. J., and HOLLOWAY, J., concur.

(54 Mont. 20)

STATE v. TUFFS. (No. 3927.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. June 18, 1917.)

1. SALES ⇨8—SALE DISTINGUISHED FROM AGENCY.

Where contract provides that consignee shall pay for all goods delivered to him, whether sold and delivered to his customers or not, and that he may sell or otherwise dispose of them to whom he will and at whatever price he will, the transaction is a sale whatever term is applied to it by the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 18, 19.]

2. SALES ⇨7—SALE DISTINGUISHED FROM AGENCY—"DEL CREDERE AGREEMENT."

If title to goods remains in the consignor and undelivered goods are to be returned to it, the transaction is one of agency and not a sale, though the consignee may be responsible for payment of the price of goods delivered to customers, such relationship being substantially that of principal and agent to sell upon a del credere commission; the legal effect of a del credere agreement is that the agent for a consideration, when he sells the goods of his principal, becomes bound to pay the price at all events.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 16, 17.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Del Credere.]

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨60—AGREEMENT SECURING PRINCIPAL AGAINST LOSS.

It is competent for a principal and his agent to agree that the principal shall be secured against loss on account of sales to irresponsible parties or on account of mistakes and dishonesty of the agent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 95.]

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨14(1)—EXISTENCE OF RELATIONSHIP—NECESSITY OF AUTHORITY TO INCUR OBLIGATION.

It is not essential to the existence of the relationship of principal and agent that the agent have authority to incur obligations in the principal's name, in view of Rev. Codes, § 5430, providing that an agent has such authority as the principal actually or ostensibly confers upon him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. § 26.]

5. HAWKERS AND PEDDLERS ⇨3(7)—VIOLATION OF LICENSE LAW—SALE BY ORDER—"ITINERANT VENDER"—"AGENT."

Defendant, who took orders for which he received commissions, and later delivered goods received by him from a company having a regular place of business, where title to the goods remained in the company until delivery was made to its customers, the company fixing the prices and defendant's interest extending no further than to his commission upon sales, and he being obliged to advance the price upon receipt of the goods, was not an "itinerant vender" within meaning of Laws 1911, c. 110, § 1, requiring a license from such persons and defining an itinerant vender as "every person who personally solicits orders for the future delivery of any goods, wares or merchandise, either by or without sample, including peddlers and hawkers," but defendant came within the exception provided by that section to "the representative of any corporation doing business at a fixed place of business and taking orders for the future delivery of any goods, wares or merchandise kept at or in connection with and handled through such fixed place of business, and defendant was an "agent," defined by Rev. Codes, § 5413, as "one who represents another called the principal in dealing with third persons."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Hawkers and Peddlers, Cent. Dig. § 4.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Itinerant Vender; Agent.]

6. HAWKERS AND PEDDLERS ⇨4(1)—CONSTRUCTION OF LICENSE STATUTE—EXTENSION BY IMPLICATION.

Laws 1911, c. 110, providing for licensing of itinerant venders, being penal in character, is not to be extended by implication, and in order to subject a person to penalty therein provided, it must appear clearly that his acts were within the letter as well as the spirit of the law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Hawkers and Peddlers, Cent. Dig. § 7.]

Appeal from District Court, Ravalli County; R. Lee McCulloch, Judge.

F. A. Tuffs was convicted of violating Laws 1911, c. 110, relating to itinerant venders, and appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions to discharge defendant.

J. D. Taylor, of Hamilton, for appellant. E. C. Kurtz, of Hamilton, S. C. Ford, of Helena, and Frank Woody, of Butte, for the State.

HOLLOWAY, J. This cause was submitted upon an agreed statement of facts. The defendant was found guilty, and appealed from the judgment and from an order denying him a new trial.

The prosecution was conducted under chapter 110, Laws of 1911. Section 1 of the act defines an itinerant vender, and that definition, so far as applicable here, follows:

> "Every person who personally solicits orders for the future delivery of any goods, wares or merchandise, either by or without sample, including peddlers and hawkers, is an itinerant vender within the meaning of this act: Provided, however, that this section shall not apply * * * to * * * the representative of any * * * corporation, doing business at a fixed place of business, and taking orders for the future delivery of any goods, wares or merchandise, kept at or in connection with and handled through such fixed place of business."

The acts of the defendant bring him within the inhibition of the statute unless he belongs to the class mentioned in the proviso, and the only question presented for solution is: Was the defendant the representative of a corporation doing business at a fixed place of business, and taking orders for the future delivery of goods kept by such corporation in connection with and handled through its fixed place of business? If he was such representative, the statute does not apply to him. If he was not, he was required to procure a license, and his failure to do so subjected him to the penalty prescribed by the statute.

The question for solution seems to be answered by the agreed statement of facts itself. It was agreed in the court below as follows: (1) The Grand Union Tea Company is a corporation engaged in mercantile business in this state, with a fixed place of business in Helena. (2) Defendant was in the employ of the company, soliciting orders from various persons in Ravalli county "for said Grand Union Tea Company" for coffee, tea, and spices kept by the company at its store in Helena. (3) The orders, when taken, were sent by mail to the company at Helena, and by it filled, and the goods then shipped to the company's order to Hamilton, in care of the defendant. A draft accompanied the bill of lading, and the carrier was instructed to deliver the goods to defendant upon receiving payment of the draft. (4) Upon receipt of the goods, defendant then delivered them "to the various customers of said Grand Union Tea Company who had previously ordered the same." "That all the goods delivered by Mr. Tuffs were previously ordered from the Grand Union Tea Company by the various customers to whom delivery was made." (5) The orders taken were not signed by the customers, and the names of the customers were not known to the company, but were kept by defendant subject to inspection by the company. (6) The company looks to the defendant for the price of the goods so shipped by it, except such portions as are not delivered. These to be returned to the company. (7) The defendant traveled about in a vehicle, soliciting the orders, but no goods were sold by him from his vehicle, and the only goods delivered by him were such as had previously been ordered, and each individual order filled by the company from its stock kept in Helena.

It is made plain by this agreed statement that the Grand Union Tea Company is engaged in mercantile pursuits at a fixed place of business in this state, and that the defendant was in its employ in soliciting orders for goods kept by the company in stock at its Helena store. He solicited orders, not for himself, but "for said Grand Union Tea Company." Each order was filled separately by the company from its stock in Helena, and the orders thus filled were delivered, not to the defendant's customers, but "to the various customers of said Grand Union Tea Company who had previously ordered the same." As if to make this fact more emphatic, the statement is repeated in substance:

> "All the goods delivered by Mr. Tuffs were previously ordered from the Grand Union Tea Company by the various customers to whom delivery was made."

Goods previously ordered by a customer, but for any reason not delivered to him, are returned to the company. These provisions seem to leave no doubt that the goods belong to the company until delivery is made to the customer, and that in soliciting the orders and making deliveries the defendant acted as the representative of the company; and this position is fortified by reference to defendant's contract of employment which is made a part of the agreement. That contract designates the company "employer" and the defendant "salesman," and provides: The Grand Union Tea Company agrees: (1) To pay to the salesman for his services 25 per cent. on sales of baking powder; 20 per cent. on tea, spices, extracts, and sundries, and 15 per cent. on coffee and soap. (2) To furnish a wagon and harness for the conduct of the business. (3) To pay freight on shipments of goods. The salesman agrees: (1) Not to sell or exchange fixtures or equipment supplied by the employer, without authority in writing. (2) Not to incur any obligations in the name of the employer. (3) Not to make repairs on equipment until first authorized by the employer. (4) Not to buy the route of another salesman nor sell his own route. (5) Not to sell any goods except those belonging to the company. Thus far the contract appears to be one of agency. "An agent is one who represents another, called the principal, in dealings with third persons." Section 5413, Rev. Codes.

[1, 2] There are, however, certain other provisions which at first blush seem to involve the transaction, as between the employer and the salesman, in doubt. The provision that the salesman shall pay for the goods upon their delivery to him, if standing alone, would seem to indicate that an absolute sale was contemplated, and that title to the goods passed to the salesman before they were delivered by him to the customers. In cases arising from the consignment of goods under special contract, it is often difficult to distinguish between a sale absolute and a contract of agency. Because of the mixed motives of the parties and the artless or artful framing of the contract it frequently contains provisions characteristic of each. If the contract provides that the consignee shall pay for all goods delivered to him, whether they are sold and delivered to the customers or not, and that he may sell or otherwise dispose of them to whom he will and at whatever price he will, the transaction is a sale, whatever term may be applied by the parties to describe it. On the other hand, if title to the goods remains in the consignor and undelivered goods are to be returned to it, the transaction is one of agency, even though the consignee may be held responsible for the payment of the purchase price of the goods delivered to the customers. 31 Cyc. 1200, 1201. The relationship is substantially that of principal and agent to sell upon a del credere commission. In Leverick v. Meigs, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 645, it is said that the legal effect of a del credere agreement is that the agent, for a consideration, when he sells the goods of his principal, becomes bound to pay the price at all events. 2 Mechem on Agency, sec. 2534.

[3, 4] It is competent for a principal and his agent to agree that the principal shall be secured against loss on account of sales to irresponsible parties or on account of the mistakes or dishonesty of the agent. It is not essential to the existence of the relationship of principal and agent that the agent be clothed with authority to incur obligations in the name of the principal. "An agent has such authority as the principal, actually or ostensibly confers upon him." Section 5430, Rev. Codes.

[5] Though it is extremely difficult to reconcile some of the conflicting averments which appear in the agreed statement (including the contract), we are led to the conclusion, from a consideration of all the provisions, that title to the goods remained in the Grand Union Tea Company until delivery was made to its customers; that the company fixed the prices at which the goods were sold; that defendant's interest extended no further than his commission upon the sales made by him; and that the obligation imposed upon him to advance the price upon receipt of the goods was intended merely to relieve the company from possible loss. Grand Union Tea Co. v. Evans (D. C.) 216 Fed. 791.

[6] The statute under which the prosecution is conducted is penal in character, and its provisions are not to be extended by implication. In re Wisner, 36 Mont. 298, 92 Pac. 958. In order to subject this appellant to the penalty of the statute, it must appear clearly that his acts were within the letter as well as the spirit of the act. McLaughlin v. Bardsen, 50 Mont. 177, 145 Pac. 954. We think it cannot be said that this appellant is an itinerant vender within the meaning of the statute in question.

Cases not directly in point, but illustrating in a measure the views herein expressed, are State v. Wells, 69 N. H. 424, 45 Atl. 143, 48 L. R. A. 99; State v. Bristow, 131 Iowa, 664, 109 N. W. 199.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause is remanded, with direction to discharge the defendant.

Reversed and remanded.

BRANTLY, C. J., and SANNER, J., concur.

(54 Mont. 11)

BRUNSWICK-BALKE-COLLENDER CO. v. HIGGINS. (No. 3781.)

(Supreme Court of Montana. June 16, 1917.)

1. PLEDGES 🔑1—NATURE OF "PLEDGE."

To create a contract of pledge, there must be a delivery of personal property by the owner to the pledgee under an agreement that the latter shall hold it as security for the payment of a debt or the performance of some obligation, in view of Rev. Codes, § 5774, providing that a pledge is a deposit of personal property by way of security for the performance of another's act, and section 5775, providing that every contract by which the possession of personal property is transferred, as security only, is to be deemed a "pledge."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 4, 5.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Pledge.]

2. PLEDGES 🔑13—FORM—NECESSITY OF WRITING.

A contract of pledge need not be in writing, and may be express or implied, but the intention of the parties must be clear, in order to justify enforcement under Rev. Codes, § 5788, providing that, when performance of the act for which a pledge is given is due, in whole or in part, the pledgee may collect what is due to him by a sale of property pledged.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. § 21.]

3. PLEDGES 🔑4—CHARACTER OF TRANSACTION.

Where purchaser of a bowling alley surrendered it to seller and landlord, seller agreeing to sell property to satisfy unpaid purchase price and accrued rent, although property when sold to a third person was left in landlord's building, landlord could not hold it as a pledge, since it was not delivered to him as security, and he depended, not upon it, but upon seller's agreement to pay him the rent from proceeds of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pledges, Cent. Dig. §§ 6–13, 30.]

Appeal from District Court, Powell County; Geo. B. Winston, Judge.

Action by the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company against W. I. Higgins. From judgment for plaintiff and from order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. P. Wilson, of Deer Lodge, for appellant.

W. E. Keeley, of Deer Lodge, for respondent.

BRANTLY, C. J. Action in claim and delivery. The trial was by the court without a jury. Plaintiff had judgment. Defendant has appealed from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial. The subject of the controversy is the right to the possession of property described in the complaint as "two bowling alleys complete with equipment, said equipment consisting of bowling pins, bowling balls, electric light fixtures, bumpers, score boards, floor lumber, railings, screws, gutters, and other property appurtenant to the successful use of said bowling alleys."

The complaint is in the usual form, alleging ownership by plaintiff and its right to immediate possession. The answer, admitting the general ownership of the property in plaintiff, put in issue the right of possession. The evidence does not present any substantial conflict. The merit of the appeals therefore is to be determined by a solution of the inquiry whether, upon the admitted facts appearing below, the defendant was entitled to retain possession of the property by virtue of a lien in his favor arising out of an agreement between him and the agents of plaintiff. The facts are these:

The defendant resides in Deer Lodge, Powell county. The plaintiff, a Montana corporation, conducts in the city of Butte the business of dealing in billiard and pool tables, bowling alleys, and other similar goods. On March 9, 1912, through one of its agents, it sold under a conditional sale contract the property described in the complaint to J. J. Arndt at Deer Lodge. The price agreed upon was $950, of which $500 was to be paid in cash, and the balance in ten equal monthly installments, with interest. The contract was in writing and filed with the county clerk, as required by the statute (Laws 1911, c. 52, p. 88). The property was installed in a building owned by the defendant, then held under a lease by Arndt for the purpose of conducting a bowling alley, at a monthly rental of $30. Arndt thereafter made payments upon the balance of the purchase price until it had been reduced to $275. The business not proving profitable, he had fallen in arrear in the payment of rent for the building to the amount of $125. Early in 1913 he surrendered the building to defendant, leaving the property therein as it was originally installed. This was the condition of affairs on May 16, 1913. In the meantime the defendant, not knowing that plaintiff held the title, was about to attach the property to enforce payments of the arrears of rent. The plaintiff did not desire to have the property taken from the building which would be the result if proceedings were begun. In conjunction with the defendant, it obtained the consent of Arndt to sell it upon such terms as would enable it to realize an amount sufficient to discharge the balance of the purchase price, and also the arrears of rent due defendant. Through D. J. Harrington, a salesman, on the date last mentioned, it effected a sale to George Gallagher and Walter Harnack, who undertook to conduct a bowling alley in the same building under the firm name of Gallagher & Harnack. The price agreed upon was $400, of which $50 was to be paid in cash and the balance in ten equal monthly installments, with interest; the contract being in the same form as that made with Arndt. Gallagher & Harnack were then permitted to take possession of the building and conduct the business. The business proving unprofitable, they defaulted in their payments under their contract with plaintiff and abandoned the building, leaving the property there. The sum of $400 was fixed as the price to Gallagher & Harnack to cover the amounts due both plaintiff and the defendant. This was so fixed because the defendant objected to allowing Gallagher & Harnack to occupy the building and to continue the business therein unless the agent of plaintiff would assume for it the obligation to pay the rent due to defendant from Arndt. There is some uncertainty in the evidence as to whether the negotiations were conducted for the plaintiff with Arndt, Gallagher & Harnack, and the defendant by Harrington, the salesman, or by James M. Reynolds, who was then the general manager of plaintiff. The evidence as a whole, however, justifies the inference that they were conducted by Harrington, and the result approved and confirmed by Reynolds. The following excerpt from the testimony of defendant shows what the result was:

> "Mr. Reynolds and I visited Mr. Arndt in regard to the alleys, and Mr. Arndt said that he could make no further payments and for us to take them and get our money out of them for the Brunswick-Balke-Collender people and myself, and we agreed to do that and Mr. Reynolds agreed to do that. Arndt turned them over to Reynolds and myself, Reynolds acting for the Brunswick-Balke people. This was over the shops, in the boiler shop, I think, across the river. The exact date I cannot remember, but after Mr. Arndt had turned the building over to me and I had locked it. The agreement between me and Mr. Reynolds was that he would sell those alleys, and Mr. Reynolds for the company was to retain a balance that was due them on the purchase price, and I was to get my money for the rent; that was the agreement. In the meantime the alleys were to remain in my building. And he did not want them taken up, for the reason that he thought they would [be] more valuable as they were; that he could sell them better while they were down. This never was paid to me, nor any part of it."

In another place in his testimony he stated that he relinquished his purpose to enforce payment of the rent due from Arndt by attachment proceedings, because of the agreement by Reynolds to protect him in the payment of it. He testified in effect also that he was to receive payment at once from plaintiff, and that, though he thereafter made several demands by letter and by telephone, payment was never made to him notwithstanding repeated promises. There was no agreement as to how long the property was to remain in the building, nor any agreement that Gallagher & Harnack were to hold the property for the benefit of defendant. It does not appear distinctly whether Arndt was released from his obligation to pay defendant. For present purposes it may be assumed that he was.

It was argued by counsel that, though the agreement was oral and informal, it created a pledge of the property to defendant to secure the payment of the rent due from Arndt, and hence that defendant was entitled to retain possession until plaintiff had made or tendered payment. This contention is without foundation in the facts.

[1] "Pledge is a deposit of personal property by way of security for the performance of another's act." Rev. Codes, § 5774. "Every contract by which the possession of personal property is transferred, as security only, is to be deemed a pledge." Section 5775. The elements here made essential to the creation of a contract of pledge are (1) a delivery of personal property by the owner to the pledgee (2) under an agreement that the latter shall hold it as security for the payment of a debt or the performance of some obligation. Averill Machinery Co. v. Bain, 50 Mont. 512, 148 Pac. 334.

[2] The agreement need not be in writing. 31 Cyc. 796. It may be express or implied, but the property must be delivered and held in possession by the pledgee as security to which he may resort in order to enforce a discharge of the debt or obligation assumed by the pledgor. Rev. Codes, § 5788. Whether the agreement is express or implied, the intention of the parties must be clear. In other words, the transfer must have been made with the intention by both parties that the property is to be held as a security. In 31 Cyc. at page 187, the elements of a pledge are stated thus:

> "The three elements necessary to constitute a contract one of pledge are: (1) The possession of the pledged property must pass from the pledgor to the pledgee or to some one for him; (2) the legal title to the pledged property must remain in the pledgor; (3) the pledgee must have a lien on the property for the payment of a debt or performance of an obligation due him by the pledgee or some other person. And every contract by which the possession of personal property is transferred as security only is to be deemed a pledge. But the agreement that property is to be held as a pledge must be clearly expressed or implied, and a mere loose understanding, or statements by one party to which the other does not assent, are not sufficient to constitute a contract of pledge."

Mr. Jones in his work on Collateral Securities defines a pledge thus:

> "A pledge may be defined to be a deposit of personal property as security, with an implied power of sale upon default." Jones on Collateral Securities (3d Ed.) § 1.

To the same effect is the definition by Mr. Story (Story on Bailments [9th Ed.] § 286).

[3] Applying these definitions to the agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant and the disposition of the property in pursuance of it, we find that the result was not a pledge. In the first place, though at the time the agreement was made the property was technically in the possession of the defendant, it was delivered to Gallagher & Harnack when they began to occupy the building, not to be held by them as security for the defendant, but to be used in the conduct of their own business. They were not parties to the agreement between plaintiff and defendant, and so far as either was concerned they were at liberty at any time to pay the purchase price and remove the property. Their possession was therefore not that of the defendant, nor was it held for him. The defendant having expressly agreed that the plaintiff should effect a sale for the purpose of realizing enough money to pay the balance due it and to defendant, the conclusion is necessary that the plaintiff had the right to sell and deliver possession to the purchaser as it did. In the second place, according to defendant's own testimony, plaintiff promised to pay the amount due him at the time possession was delivered to Gallagher & Harnack. Thus he let go of the possession upon the faith of this promise, and chose to look solely to it for the amount due him. True, the property was to remain in the building, but the stipulation that the plaintiff was to effect the sale and retain a balance of the selling price to pay the Arndt rent is conclusive proof that the security he looked to was the promise of plaintiff, and not the property. The stipulation that the property was not to be removed was clearly for the sole benefit of the plaintiff. It was the consideration upon which it assumed to become bound to pay the Arndt rent. When it failed to make payment, defendant became entitled only to bring action against it as for a breach of contract to pay money.

We think the trial court reached the correct conclusion.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

Affirmed.

SANNER and HOLLOWAY, JJ., concur.

(100 Kan. 593)

STATE ex rel. BRISTOW et al. v. LANDON et al. (No. 21053.)

(Supreme Court of Kansas. May 12, 1917. Rehearing Denied July 11, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. GAS 🔑14(1)—RATES—CONSENT OF PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION—STATUTE.

The receiver of the Kansas Natural Gas Company and the Olathe Gas Company have no right to change the rate, schedule of charges, rules, regulations or practice pertaining to the supply of natural gas to the patrons of the Olathe Gas Company without the consent of the Public Utilities Commission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gas, Cent. Dig. § 10.]

2. MANDAMUS 🔑133 — PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION—CHANGE OF GAS RATES.

The suit recently decided by the United States District Court for the District of Kansas, 242 Fed. 658, while involving among other things the validity of the contract under which the Kansas Natural Gas Company and the Olathe Gas Company have for several years been supplying the customers of the latter company, has not yet resulted in any decision as to the validity of such contract, jurisdiction having been expressly reserved over the issues involved which are not covered by the recent decision. Held, that a writ requiring the defendant companies to continue according to the terms of the contract until such contract be duly and legally set aside or superseded will issue unless within a time named such consent to depart from the terms thereof be obtained from the Public Utilities Commission.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. § 268.]

3. COMMERCE 🔑10—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—SALE OF NATURAL GAS—CONTROL BY CONGRESS.

Notwithstanding the decision in the federal case referred to touching the interstate character of the business conducted by the receiver, we adhere to the decision in State ex rel. v. Flannelly, 96 Kan. 372, 152 Pac. 22, that when selling natural gas to consumers thereof in this state the receiver is not engaged in interstate commerce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. § 8.]

Original mandamus by the state of Kansas, on the relation of Joseph L. Bristow and others, as the Public Utilities Commission of the State of Kansas, and H. O. Caster, attorney for the Commission, against John M. Landon, receiver for the Kansas Natural Gas Company, and others. Peremptory writ issued conditionally.

H. O. Caster and F. S Jackson, both of Topeka, for plaintiffs. Chester I. Long, of Wichita, Jno. H. Atwood, of Kansas City, Mo., Stone & McDermott, of Topeka, W. F. Guthrie, of Kansas City, Mo., T. S. Salathiel, of Independence, and A. M. Cowan, of Wichita, for defendants.

WEST, J. In November, 1908, the Kansas Natural Gas Company entered into a written contract with the Olathe Gas Company by the terms of which the latter as agent of the former was to supply natural gas to its patrons on certain terms, a portion of which gas was to be furnished by the Natural Gas Company and a portion by the local company. This contract was considered in State ex rel. v. Litchfield, 97 Kan. 592, 155 Pac. 814, in which it was observed that the local company was operating under a franchise granted by the city authorizing a charge of 25 cents a thousand feet for one year and thereafter 30 cents. The principal question was whether the city or the Utilities Commission had control of the rate, and it was held that the company was in this respect subject to the jurisdiction and control of the Public Utilities Commission.

September 22, 1916, the commission brought this action in mandamus to compel the two companies to continue the supply and distribution of gas according to the terms of the contract. The allegation is that the defendant companies, without the consent of the commission, abandoned the contract and discontinued operations under it, and thereupon it was proposed that the Kansas Natural Gas Co. or its receiver discontinue its service to the distributing company, and that thereafter no gas would be delivered to it by the receiver except such as should be paid for at 18 cents a thousand at the gates of the city, substituting an entirely different service regulation and practice of delivering gas, and that the local company had unlawfully consented to the changes and had abandoned and discontinued the former service to the inhabitants of the city of Olathe and the surrounding community. The answer of the Olathe Gas Company closes a series of allegations with a denial of the jurisdiction of the Public Utilities Commission over its affairs.

The receiver of the Natural Gas Company in his return challenges the jurisdiction of this court, sets up that there was a prior suit pending in the United States District Court for the District of Kansas involving the matters in controversy here, and especially the right of the Natural Gas Company to depart from the rates provided in the contract already referred to, asserting that the federal court has assumed and is holding jurisdiction over all these matters, and asserting that by his submission to the federal court and his denial of the jurisdiction of this court he is exercising an authority granted him by the United States, and the Constitution and laws thereof. Further, that he had served notice on the plaintiffs herein and all other defendants in the case in federal court, that he would on October 11, 1916, apply thereto for relief and file a supplemental bill, a copy of which, marked Exhibit D, was set forth, and further alleging that the order already made by the federal court amounted to a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction to which this court must give full faith and credit. This supplemental bill appears to name the Olathe Gas Company as a defendant, but no prayer for relief touching this company can be found therein. The order of the federal court referred to was to the effect that it had not been deemed necessary to determine the validity of the city ordinances, the contracts between the cities and the distributing companies, and the contracts between distributing companies and the Natural Gas Company, and the duties and obligations of the receiver thereunder, but "that this court reserves jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this application for an injunction, and of the parties thereto, and reserves its power and authority to add to, take from, modify or supplement the injunction hereby decreed, or any other provision of this decree, at any time during the pendency of this suit."

Two questions arise for determination: One, the duty of the defendant companies and the corresponding power of the Utilities Commission touching the change in rates or the regulation or practice pertaining to the service at Olathe; the other, one of jurisdiction as between this court and the federal court.

[1] As to the first it is clear that the defendant companies have assumed and intend to treat the former contract between them as abrogated, thereby working a material departure from the former rules and practice in the matter of furnishing natural gas to the citizens of Olathe, and in the rates to be charged therefor. Section 20 of the Public Utilities Act (chapter 238 of the Laws of 1911) provides that:

> "No change shall be made in any rate, toll, charge or classification or schedule of charges, joint rates, or in any rule or regulation or practice pertaining to the service or rates of any such public utility or common carrier, without the consent of the commission. * * *"

That so marked and material a change in the rates, rules, regulations, or practices pertaining to the service or rates at Olathe cannot be made without consent of the commission is settled by State ex rel. v. Postal-Telegraph Co., 96 Kan. 298, 150 Pac. 544, and City of Scammon v. Gas Co., 98 Kan. 812, 160 Pac. 316.

[2, 3] As to the seeming or asserted conflict of jurisdiction it need only be said that as to all questions touching the validity of the contracts involved in the suit pending in federal court, that tribunal has full and complete jurisdiction. While by Act March 4, 1913, c. 160, 37 Stat. 1013 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 1243), Congress has provided that when a suit has been brought in federal court requiring an interpretation of a state statute, and before final hearing a suit shall be brought in a state court having jurisdiction thereof to enforce such statute or order, then upon certain conditions the proceeding in the federal court to restrain the execution of such statute or order shall be stayed pending the final determination in the state court, there is nothing in this controversy requiring recourse to that statute. In the recent decision of the federal case, Judge Booth said:

> "Further, even after the present suit had been begun in this court the defendants might (at any time before final submission upon the hearing for the preliminary injunction) by proper procedure under section 266 of the Judicial Code have taken action in the state court by mandamus or otherwise, and this court, upon being advised of such action, would have held the present suit in abeyance; but no such course was pursued."

The decision referred to expressly reserves jurisdiction over all matters not covered thereby, and these include the validity of the contract now under consideration.

The view taken of the interstate character of the business of furnishing natural gas to Kansas consumers set forth in the decision referred to has the effect of eliminating the Public Utilities Commission from this controversy. We adhere, however, to the opinion in State ex rel. v. Flannelly, 96 Kan. 372, 384, 386, 152 Pac. 22, 27, wherein it was said:

> "Granting for the moment that the sale of natural gas under the circumstances disclosed is interstate commerce, it is not national in its nature, it admits of no * * * uniform system of regulation, and it is not that kind of interstate commerce which requires exclusive legislation by Congress. It is therefore subject to state control until Congress acts. * * * Congress has not acted in this field, except to prohibit unfair methods of competition. We hold, therefore, that the receivers are not engaged in interstate commerce when selling natural gas to consumers thereof in this state."

With full recognition of the federal court's jurisdiction as indicated, it is ordered that unless within 60 days from the filing hereof with the clerk of this court the receiver and the Olathe Gas Company obtain from the Public Utilities Commission consent to depart from the rules, rates, and regulations touching the supply and price of gas to the consumers of the local company as required by the former contract between the Kansas Natural Gas Company and the Olathe Gas Company, a peremptory writ issue requiring such receiver and the Olathe Gas Company to continue in obedience to and in accordance with the terms of the contract until such contract be duly and lawfully set aside or superseded. All the Justices concurring, except DAWSON, J., who did not sit.

(25 Wyo. 143)

J. W. DENIO MILLING CO. v. MALIN.

(No. 894.)

(Supreme Court of Wyoming. June 27, 1917.)

1. SALES 🔑416(1)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action for damages for breach of a contract to sell flour, evidence that before each shipment of flour made under the contract, the buyer informed the seller that he desired a carload of flour, and specified the number of sacks of each weight he desired, and that his instructions were complied with, and that prior to the expiration of the time for the delivery of the balance the seller requested the buyer to furnish such specifications, which he neglected and refused to do, and that the defendant was ready and willing to deliver the balance of the flour upon receipt of such specifications, held competent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1171.]

2. EVIDENCE 🔑441(9)—PAROL EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action for damages for breach of a contract for the sale of flour, which provided, "Time of shipment one (1) car at a time—last car to be shipped on or before Feb. 1st, 1915," the price depending on the size of the sacks, evidence that prior to each shipment under the contract, the buyer had informed defendant of his desires, and that he neglected and refused to do so with regard to the balance of the order, did not vary the terms of the writing.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1792.]

3. CONTRACTS 🔑169—CONSTRUCTION—LANGUAGE.

If the language of a written contract is susceptible of two constructions, the court will take into consideration the situation of the parties and the surrounding circumstances at the time the contract was entered into in order to arrive at the true intent of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 752.]

4. CONTRACTS 🔑170(1)—CONSTRUCTION—INTERPRETATION BY THE PARTIES.

It is to be presumed that parties to a contract know what is meant by its terms, and whatever is done by the parties during the period of performance of the contract is done under its terms as they understood and intended it, since parties are far less liable to have been mistaken as to the meaning of their contract during the period while harmonious and practical construction reflects that intention than when subsequent differences have impelled them to resort to law, and one seeks a construction at variance with the practical construction they have placed upon it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. § 753.]

5. SALES 🔑407—CONTRACTS—BREACH.

Where contract for the sale of flour provided, "Time of shipment one (1) car at a time—last car to be shipped on or before Feb. 1st, 1915," and "Flour 2.30, 2/48. 2.25, 1/98," if it be established in evidence that the plaintiff before each shipment made under the contract informed the defendant that he desired a carload of flour, and specified the number of sacks of each weight he desired, and that as to the flour not delivered, he neglected and refused to give such specifications, he would not be entitled to recover, since the fault was that of plaintiff in his failure to give the shipping directions.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1159.]

6. Contracts 🔑144—Construction—Interpretation by the Parties.

As a rule contracts are to be construed, and their validity and effect determined according to the law of the state where they are made, except where the contract is made in one state to be performed in another, in which case the law of the state of performance will govern, unless it clearly appear that the parties intended otherwise.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 724–727.]

7. Sales 🔑418(7) — Breach by Seller — Measure of Damages.

Where a seller failed to deliver flour pursuant to a contract, if the buyer could have purchased flour of the same grade and quality in the market, upon breach of the contract, it was his duty to do so in order to minimize his damages, and if he did not do so, he could not thereby enhance his damages beyond the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time of the breach.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1188.]

8. Sales 🔑418(7) — Breach by Seller — Measure of Damages.

In an action for breach of a contract to sell flour, if plaintiff could have procured the flour either in the market or from the defendant at an advanced price, and had done so, the measure of damages would be the difference between the contract price and the price he was required to pay defendant or in the market.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1188.]

Error to District Court, Sheridan County; Charles E. Winter, Judge.

Action by J. M. Malin against the J. W. Denio Milling Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

E. E. Enterline, of Billings, Mont., and F. M. Downer, Jr., of Thermopolis, for plaintiff in error. Lonabaugh & Wenzell, of Sheridan, and E. E. Collins, of Billings, Mont., for defendant in error.

BEARD, J. This action was brought by defendant in error, J. M. Malin, against the plaintiff in error, J. W. Denio Milling Company, to recover damages for an alleged breach of a written contract. The plaintiff below recovered a verdict and judgment against the defendant below for $1,395 and costs. From that judgment, plaintiff in error brings error.

For convenience the parties will be referred to as plaintiff and defendant, as they appeared in the district court. The contract sued upon is as follows:

"Contract.

"Note.—This contract is forwarded at once to our general office. We immediately provide an equivalent amount of wheat for every barrel of flour sold you.

"Billings, Mont., 7/31, 1914.

"The J. W. Denio Milling Company, Sheridan, Wyoming, has this day sold to J. M. Malin, City, Billings; State, Montana—subject to the terms and conditions hereinafter mentioned, which are hereby agreed to. Terms—30 days net 5¢ 2/48—10 days. Delivery f. o. b. Billings, Mont. Either prepayment or proper allowance to be made by the seller to cover freight charges from Sheridan to Billings. Time of shipment one (1) car at time—last car to be shipped on or before Feb. 1st, 1915.

No.	Size.	Articles.	Price.	Per
5	Cars	Pride of Billings flour minimum 30,000#
	75	sks of bran in each car at Billings prices—Flour	2.30	2/48
		"	2.25	1/98

"For delays in commencing shipment and making delivery occurring from fire, acts of the carriers and causes beyond the seller's control, seller is not responsible.

"These goods are sold at price, on terms, and time of shipment specified above, and are not subject to change or countermand without the written consent of both parties. Should either party refuse to fulfill their part of this transaction the other party shall buy or sell as the case may be, charging loss to the defaulting party.

"This contract is subject to confirmation by the J. W. Denio Milling Co. in their office in Sheridan, Wyoming.

"It is understood that this written and printed memorandum contains all the terms of the contract, and that no representations have been made by the seller or its agents not contained herein. [Signed] J. M. Malin.

"Accepted: J. W. Denio Milling Co.,
"By J. H. Johnston."

Said contract was confirmed in writing by the defendant at Sheridan, Wyo., August 1, 1914. There is no controversy as to the execution and confirmation of the contract, and it is admitted that on October 3, 1914, and November 19, 1914, respectively, defendant shipped to plaintiff one car of flour under said contract, which plaintiff received, accepted, and paid for. That the other three cars were not delivered by defendant. It was for the failure to deliver them that plaintiff claimed damages. Plaintiff alleged in his petition that the contract was a Montana contract, and pleaded certain statutes of that state with respect to the measure of damages.

For a first defense, defendant denied each and every allegation of the petition, except it admitted that it was a corporation doing business at Sheridan, Wyo.; that it entered into the contract and confirmation of the same; that it shipped two carloads of flour to plaintiff; and that plaintiff accepted and paid for said two carloads. For a second defense, defendant alleged that at the time of the execution and confirmation of said contract it was mutually understood and agreed between the parties that before the shipment of any car under the terms of the contract, plaintiff should give to defendant specifications of the weight of the sacks desired, whether 48 pound or 98 pound sacks, and the number of each; that plaintiff furnished such specifications when he ordered each of the two cars which were delivered, and that they were shipped accordingly by defendant, the first car being ordered September 22, 1914, and the second November 10, 1914; that plaintiff did not perform all of the conditions on his part to be kept and performed under the said terms of said contract and confirmation thereof, nor did he stand ready and willing to perform the conditions on his part to be performed under the terms specified in the said contract and confirmation thereof; that plaintiff never ordered or requested defendant to ship him any more flour than the two carloads during the time specified in the contract, nor did he give defendant any specifications of the weight and number of sacks desired for an additional shipment until February 6, 1915, when he ordered the third car shipped. For reply the plaintiff admitted that on October 3, 1914, and November 19, 1914, the defendant, under the terms of said contract, shipped to plaintiff the cars of flour mentioned in said answer, and that the same were, shortly thereafter, accepted and paid for by plaintiff, and denied the other allegations of the answer.

[1, 2] The foregoing, we think, sufficiently presents the issues on the questions involved. The defendant offered to introduce evidence, and offered to prove, that prior to the shipment of each of the two carloads of flour which were shipped, the plaintiff informed the defendant that he desired a carload of flour, and specified the number of sacks of each weight he desired, and that his instructions in those respects were complied with by defendant, and that prior to the expiration of the time for delivery of the balance of the flour defendant requested plaintiff to furnish such specifications, which he neglected and refused to do, and that defendant was ready and willing to deliver the balance of the flour upon receipt of such specifications. The plaintiff objected to all evidence offered to prove such facts on the ground that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, being an attempt to vary the terms of a written agreement by a parol contemporaneous agreement. The court sustained the objection and excluded the evidence. The evidence was within the issues made by the pleadings. Plaintiff alleged that he had fully performed his part of the contract. That defendant denied and alleged, in substance and effect, that by the terms of the contract plaintiff was required to furnish specifications for each shipment, and that he had failed to do so. Nor was the evidence immaterial if competent, and that depends upon the correct construction of the contract. Plaintiff's counsel contend that the language, "Time of shipment one (1) car at a time—last car to be shipped on or before Feb. 1st. 1915," and, "Flour 2.30, $^2/_{48}$. 2.25, $^1/_{98}$" (which last quotation it is agreed means if the flour was to be in 98 pound sacks the price was $2.25 per sack, or if in two sacks of 48 pounds each the price was $2.30), gave defendant the option to deliver the flour at any time within the time limit of the contract, and in such weight sacks as it chose, provided only one car was delivered at a time. Defendant contends that the contract required plaintiff to give notice of the time for shipments and to furnish specifications.

[3] It is a settled rule of construction of written contracts that if the language employed is susceptible of two constructions the court will take into consideration the situation of the parties and surrounding circumstances at the time the contract was entered into in order to arrive at the true intent of the parties. Saunders v. Ducker, 116 Md. 474, 82 Atl. 154, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 817; Anderson v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 164 Cal. 712, 130 Pac. 726, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 903; 6 R. C. L. p. 849; Balch et al. v. Arnold et al., 9 Wyo. 17, 27, 59 Pac. 434; 9 Cyc. 587; 35 Cyc. 97. Here plaintiff was a retail grocer and wanted the flour to supply his customers, and covering a period of five months, which fact was known to defendant. It is unreasonable, under such circumstances, to conclude that plaintiff intended that defendant had the option of shipping to him the entire five cars, one car each day immediately after the contract was entered into and thus require plaintiff to pay for all within 35 days; or that defendant could decline to deliver any of the flour until the last 5 days in January, 1915, and deliver one car a day during those 5 days. There is also a still stronger reason supporting the contention of defendant. It offered to prove facts showing the construction placed upon the contract by the parties before any controversy arose between them.

[4] Plaintiff's conduct in ordering the two cars and specifying the weight of sacks and the number of each, if that was the fact, would clearly indicate that he regarded that as his right under the contract; and defendant offered to prove its acquiescence in that construction of the contract and its understanding of the rights and duties of the respective parties thereunder. "It is to be assumed that the parties to a contract know best what was meant by its terms, and are the least liable to be mistaken as to its intention; that each party is alert to protect his own interests and to insist on his rights; and that whatever is done by the parties during the period of the performance of the contract is done under its terms as they understood and intended it should be. Parties are far less liable to have been mistaken as to the meaning of their contract during the period while harmonious and practical construction reflects that intention than they are when subsequent differences have impelled them to resort to law, and one of them then seeks a construction at variance with the practical construction they have placed upon it of what was intended by its provisions." 6 R. C. L. p. 853, and cases cited in note; 9 Cyc. 588; 35 Cyc. 98. The evidence sought to be introduced by defendant would not have varied the terms of the writing. It would not have changed the terms of the contract that the flour was to be delivered

"one car at a time," or that it was to be contained in sacks of specified weight, and all to be delivered on or before February 1, 1915.

[5] We think the evidence was competent and should have been admitted; and if defendant had been permitted to introduce the evidence offered, and the same had been found sufficient to establish the facts which defendant offered and sought to prove, then the fault was that of plaintiff in his failure to give shipping directions, and he would not be entitled to recover.

[6, 7] On the question of the measure of damages the court instructed the jury that the contract was a Montana contract and governed by the laws of that state, to which defendant excepted. Considerable space in the briefs has been devoted to a discussion of that question, but it does not appear to be very material whether it be considered a Montana or a Wyoming contract. As a rule contracts are to be construed, and their validity and effect are to be determined according to the law of the place where made. To that rule there is the well-recognized exception that where a contract is made in one state to be performed in another, the law of the state of performance will govern unless it shall clearly appear that the parties intended otherwise. 9 Cyc. 669, and cases cited in note. By the terms of the contract under consideration, if defendant failed to deliver the flour, plaintiff was to buy, and the damages were fixed at the difference between the contract price and what the flour would have cost the plaintiff at the time and place it should have been delivered. By the statute of Montana, pleaded by plaintiff, the measure of damages in such cases "is deemed to be the excess, if any, of the value of the property to the buyer, over the amount which would have been due to the seller under the contract, if it had been fulfilled." If plaintiff could have purchased flour of the same grade and quality in the market upon defendant's breach of the contract, it was his duty to do so in order to minimize his damages so far as he reasonably could, and if he did not do so he could not thereby enhance his damages beyond the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time of the breach.

[8] But it is contended, and plaintiff testified, that he could not procure the brand of flour contracted for except from defendant and at an advanced price, and that he was not required to so purchase from defendant; that to have done so would have been a waiver of his claim for damages. On that question the court instructed the jury that:

> "It was not the duty of plaintiff to purchase said flour from defendant at an advanced price over the contract price, in order to lessen the amount of defendant's liability."

We think the instruction was erroneous. If plaintiff could have procured the flour either in the market or from the defendant at an advanced price, and he had done so, it is clear that the measure of his damages would be the difference between the contract price and the price he was required to pay. It was so held in Lawrence v. Porter, 63 Fed. 62, 11 C. C. A. 27, 26 L. R. A. 167. To the same effect, see Willock v. Oil Co., 184 Pa. 245, 39 Atl. 77, N. B. Borden & Co. v. Vinegar Bend Lumber Co., 2 Ala. App. 354, 56 South. 775, and Deere et al. v. Lewis et al., 51 Ill. 254. The case of Campfield v. Sauer, 189 Fed. 576, 111 C. C. A. 14, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837, is cited by counsel as holding otherwise; but in that case the offer to furnish the property, after the breach of the contract, at an advanced price was upon the express condition that the buyer would waive the damages for the breach of the contract. The case in effect approves the rule as stated in Lawrence v. Porter, supra, when, as in this case, there is an unconditional offer to deliver the property at an advanced price. There was evidence to the effect that after the expiration of the contract and about February 6, 1915, plaintiff ordered a carload of flour, to which defendant replied by wire February 12, 1915:

> "Yours sixth just received your contract expired February 1st present values three ninety five f. o. b. Billings shall we ship car writing you fully."

Mr. Denio, a witness for defendant, testified on cross-examination that the market price of this flour f. o. b. Billings was about $3.65, or perhaps $3.70 per hundred, or 98-pound sack, thus bringing the case as to the measure of damages, if any, within the rule announced in the cases above cited. It is further argued by counsel for defendant that the statutes of Montana were not sufficiently proven to be admitted in evidence. But we think the evidence was sufficient: and in any event it is not material, as other evidence may be offered on another trial.

For the errors of the district court, above indicated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Reversed.

POTTER, C. J., concurs.

(30 Idaho, 318)

ATHEY v. OREGON SHORT LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. April 3, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 30, 1917.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑337(2)—PERFECTION OF APPEAL—PREMATURE APPEAL.

Under the existing statute an appeal from the district court to the Supreme Court, taken prior to the entry of the judgment in the judgment book, does not confer jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court, and will be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 1877.]

2. Appeal and Error ⚿662(1)—Transcript—Verity.

The transcript containing the record on appeal imports verity, and is the conclusive evidence of the proceedings in the lower court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2850.]

3. Appeal and Error ⚿714(1)—Entry of Judgment—Memorandum.

Any memorandum of the date of entry of judgment made by the clerk of the district court without authority of law has no standing as evidence of the date of entry of judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2958, 2959.]

4. Appeal and Error ⚿529(1) — Record — Entry of Judgment.

The memorandum in the judgment docket of the date of the entry of judgment being the only record thereof provided by law, and the judgment docket entries not being properly part of the record on appeal, there is no authentic evidence of the date of entry of judgment in the record.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2389–2391, 2393.]

5. Evidence ⚿83(6) — Presumption — Official Acts—Statute.

It is the statutory duty of the clerk of the district court to enter the judgment in the judgment book and make up the judgment roll prior to making the entries in the judgment docket, and when it appears that the entries in the judgment docket have been made, a prima facie presumption arises that the clerk has done his duty, and that the judgment has actually been entered in the judgment book.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 105.]

6. Evidence ⚿89—Presumptions—Rebuttal—Official Acts.

Neither the testimony of the clerk of the district court nor that of his deputy will be admissible to impeach the presumption of the regularity of their official acts; other evidence may be received for such purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 111.]

7. Appeal and Error ⚿22—Appellate Jurisdiction—Estoppel.

An appellate court can only derive its jurisdiction from the Constitution and statutes of the state, and therefore, in the absence of actual fraud, there can be no estoppel to deny its jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 98.]

8. Appeal and Error ⚿434 — Appellate Jurisdiction—Stipulation.

A stipulation between the attorneys made during the time which an appeal could properly have been taken, extending the time in which to file briefs, is not such an appearance as would confer jurisdiction upon the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2183.]

Appeal from District Court, Ada County; Charles P. McCarthy, Judge.

Action by A. W. Athey against the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Motion to dismiss on the ground that the appeal was taken prematurely sustained, and appeal dismissed.

H. B. Thompson, of Pocatello, and Karl Paine, of Boise, for appellant. V. P. Coffin and Harry Keyser, both of Boise, for respondent.

RICE, J. This action was brought in the district court of the Third judicial district in and for Ada county. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict in favor of the plaintiff was rendered on February 10, 1916. The judgment was signed by the judge and filed with the clerk on the 11th day of February, 1916. On the 15th day of February, 1916, an appeal was taken and perfected. The matter comes up at this time on motion to dismiss the appeal.

[1] The grounds for dismissal are that the appeal was taken prior to the actual entry of judgment in the judgment book as required by section 4807, Rev. Codes, as amended by chapter 80, Sess. Laws 1915. In support of his motion to dismiss the appeal, the respondent has filed three affidavits of Thomas E. Powell, deputy clerk of the district court; also the affidavit of V. P. Coffin, attorney for respondent. In opposition to this motion the appellant has filed the affidavit of Karl Paine, an attorney for appellant; also affidavits of Otto F. Peterson and Cleo J. Schooler, senior deputy and deputy clerk of the district court.

Appellant does not admit that the judgment was entered subsequent to the appeal, and relies upon the entry in the judgment docket in the office of the clerk of the district court and upon the certified copy of the record of the judgment in the judgment book, which contains the following notation: "Entered February 11, 1916."

It must be taken as settled law in this state that an appeal taken prior to actual entry of the judgment in the judgment book must be dismissed. Vollmer v. Nez Perces County, 7 Idaho, 302, 62 Pac. 925; Santti v. Hartman, 29 Idaho, 490, 161 Pac. 249; Yeomans v. Lamberton, 29 Idaho, 801, 162 Pac. 674.

[2] The transcript containing the record filed for the purpose of appeal imports absolute verity. It is the sole, conclusive, and unimpeachable evidence of the proceedings in the lower court. Okl. Fire Ins. Co. v. Kimpel, 39 Okl. 339, 135 Pac. 6; 4 Corpus Juris, 512.

[3, 4] The question that concerns us here is not only the fact of the date of entry of judgment, but also the proper evidence of that fact. What constitutes the record on appeal from a final judgment is determined by Rev. Codes, § 4818, as amended by Sess. Laws 1911, p. 375, and section 4456, as amended by Sess. Laws 1909, p. 76. The law nowhere seems to provide for the authentic date of entry of judgment appearing upon any of the papers specified in these sections as constituting the record on appeal. Therefore any date appearing thereon purporting to be the date of entry of judgment is without authority of law, and has no standing as evidence of that date. The law does, however, provide that the clerk must make the proper entries in the judgment docket, among which is specified the date of entry of the judgment. Rev. Codes, § 4457, as amended by Sess. Laws 1913, p. 91, and section 4458. The law does not provide that entries upon the judgment docket shall constitute any part of the record on appeal. Records and papers improperly included in a judgment roll on appeal will be stricken on motion. Williams v. Boise Basin Mining Co., 11 Idaho, 233, 81 Pac. 646.

[5] Sections 4450, 4454, and section 4456, as amended by Sess. Laws 1909, p. 76, and section 4457, as amended by Sess. Laws 1913, p. 91, and sections 4458 and 4459, Rev. Codes, determine the statutory duty of the clerk after rendition of a judgment or verdict. From these sections it appears that, after a judgment or verdict is rendered and filed, the clerk's first duty is to enter the judgment at length in the judgment book. Immediately after entry in the judgment book it is his duty to fasten together papers constituting the judgment roll. Immediately after making up the judgment roll, it is his duty to make proper entry in the judgment docket. When the entry in the judgment docket is made prior to the appeal, it will be presumed that the clerk has done his duty and judgment has been entered prior thereto, and the jurisdiction of the appellate court will be presumed. Smith v. Hawley, 11 S. D. 399, 78 N. W. 355. This, however, is only prima facie presumption, and may be overthrown by the proper evidence. Smith v. Hawley, supra.

When the jurisdiction of the appellate court is attacked, the question as to what is proper evidence of the fact of jurisdiction is for this court to consider. We have, on the one hand, an official entry in the judgment docket of the clerk to the effect that judgment was entered on February 11, 1916. On the other hand, we have the affidavit of the deputy to the effect that judgment was not entered before November 2, 1916.

[6] It has been held in this state that the evidence of a notary public is incompetent and inadmissible to impeach his own certificate of acknowledgment. Wilson v. Wilson, 6 Idaho, 597, 57 Pac. 708. Upon the same theory the affidavits of the clerk of the district court and his deputies are incompetent and inadmissible to impeach the regularity of their official acts. However, as the evidence of any one other than the notary who made the certificate is admissible to impeach its verity, so is the evidence of any one other than the clerk of the district court, or his deputies, competent and admissible to impeach the presumption of the regularity of the official acts of the clerk.

This rule is in no way in conflict with the rule that the record filed for the purpose of appeal imports absolute verity. The record on appeal, as has been shown, is not questioned. The only attack that has been made is upon the prima facie presumption that the judgment was entered prior to the time of taking the appeal. The affidavit of V. P. Coffin, being direct and certain to the effect that the judgment was not entered before November 2, 1916, and being undisputed, must be received as the best evidence of the actual date of the entry of judgment in the lower court.

It has been argued by appellant that the respondent in this case is estopped to deny jurisdiction of the court on the grounds that his conduct was fraudulent, in that it led the appellant to believe that the appeal was taken subsequent to the entry of judgment. This view cannot be sustained by the evidence. The attorney for the respondent was under no duty to the appellant to inform it of the date of the actual entry of the judgment. The notation of the date of the entry of judgment made in the judgment book was not made on the suggestion of the respondent, or his attorney, but was made according to the usages and custom of the deputy clerk of the district court. It appears that the notation in the judgment book that judgment was entered February 11, 1916, misled the attorneys for appellant, but it does not appear that the respondent or his attorneys were in any way responsible for that entry being made.

[7] An appellate court can only derive its jurisdiction from the Constitution and statutes of the state. Penny v. Nez Perces County, 4 Idaho, 642, 43 Pac. 570; People v. Walker, 132 Cal. 137, 64 Pac. 133; Estate of Campbell, 141 Cal. 72, 74 Pac. 550; Brooks v. Calderwood, 19 Cal. 125. Where a statute requires an appeal to be taken after entry of judgment, an appeal prior to entry of judgment will be dismissed, as the court has no jurisdiction to consider the same. Santti v. Hartman, supra; Yeomans v. Lamberton, supra. The fact that the aggrieved party has no other remedy is immaterial. Maxon v. Gates, 118 Wis. 238, 95 N. W. 92. Where the court otherwise is without jurisdiction, jurisdiction cannot be conferred by stipulation. Chamberlain v. Hedger, 10 S. D. 290, 73 N. W. 75. The acknowledgment of due service on a certain date does not waive the defect that the service was too late for the purposes of the appeal. Towdy v. Ellis, 22 Cal. 651. A respondent will not be estopped to deny jurisdiction of the court by his act of indorsing an admission of service of the notice of appeal. The acts of the parties cannot confer jurisdiction on the court in a case withheld by the law from its jurisdiction. Estate of Brewer, 156 Cal. 89, 103 Pac. 486.

[8] Appellant further contends that, the respondent having entered into stipulation for further time in which to file his brief in this case within the time that an appeal could lawfully be taken to this court, such stipulation was an appearance, and that, where there is voluntary appearance, no service of notice of appeal is necessary. It has been held that a stipulation entered into between parties is not such an appearance as will confer jurisdiction upon the court. Washington County Land & Development Co. v. Weiser Nat. Bank, 26 Idaho, 717, 146 Pac. 116.

It appearing that this appeal was taken prior to the actual entry of judgment, and it being the law that an appeal taken prior to the entry of judgment confers no jurisdiction on this court, this appeal must be dismissed. Costs awarded to respondent.

MORGAN, J., concurs. BUDGE, C. J., sat at the hearing, but took no part in the decision.

(30 Idaho, 392)

LONG et al. v. BURLEY STATE BANK.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. May 3, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 30, 1917.)

1. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ⚷14—RECOVERY FOR WRONGFUL ATTACHMENT—GROUNDS.

Before recovery can be had because of an attachment procured wrongfully, maliciously, and without probable cause, it must be shown that the property alleged to have been attached was actually levied upon in substantial conformity with section 4307, Rev. Codes (amended Sess. Laws 1911, c. 162, p. 559).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. § 17.]

2. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ⚷67 — WRONGFUL AND MALICIOUS ATTACHMENT—DAMAGES —LOSS OF PROFITS.

Loss of profits in business is an element of damage where the attachment was procured with malice and without probable cause, but may be recovered only upon the production of such evidence as will enable the jury to calculate, with a reasonable degree of certainty, the amount of damage resulting from such loss.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 155, 156.]

3. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ⚷25(1), 32, 55—MALICE AND WANT OF PROBABLE CAUSE—ALLEGATION AND PROOF.

Malice and want of probable cause, if relied upon as an element of damage, must be alleged and proved. The jury may infer malice from the want of probable cause, but it may not infer want of probable cause alone from the fact that the suit in aid of which the attachment issued was decided against the party procuring it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Cent. Dig. §§ 56, 67, 68, 106–110.]

Appeal from District Court, Cassia County; Edward A. Walters, Judge.

Action by D. W. Long and A. W. Long against the Burley State Bank. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

J. C. Rogers and T. Bailey Lee, both of Burley, for appellant. S. T. Lowe, of Burley, for respondents.

MORGAN, J. The respondents instituted this action against the appellant to recover damages for an attachment alleged to have been procured to be levied against their property wrongfully, maliciously, and without probable cause. The attachment issued on July 28, 1911, and was dissolved on January 13, 1913. The suit in which the attachment was procured was decided in favor of respondents and against appellant. The property alleged to have been attached consisted of moneys, corporate stock, notes, real estate, and a motorcycle. Respondents claim damages on account of being deprived of the use of the property and on account of loss of credit and profits in their business as building contractors. The case was tried to a jury which returned a verdict in respondent's favor in the sum of $1,000. Judgment was entered accordingly, from which this appeal was prosecuted.

[1] Appellant contends that the evidence fails to show that the property was attached. This contention is sustained so far as it concerns the real estate and the motorcycle. The return of the sheriff was offered in evidence by respondents to show what property was attached, but such return is only prima facie evidence of the truth of the matters therein stated. Section 2026, Rev. Codes. According to the testimony of respondents, the sheriff went to their office and informed them that the motorcycle was attached, but left it with them upon promise that they would not use it. The sheriff testified that although he was about to attach the motorcycle, he decided, at the request of respondents and with the consent of the attorney for appellant, to not do so. Without discussing the conflict of evidence in this particular, we hold that, assuming respondents' testimony to be the truth in the matter, the sheriff did not levy upon the motorcycle in accordance with section 4307, Rev. Codes (amended Sess. Laws 1911, c. 162, p. 559), because he did not, at any time, take it into his custody or remove it from the custody of respondents. There is no levy under a writ of attachment unless the acts required by the statute are substantially performed. Bank v. Sonnelitner, 6 Idaho, 21, 51 Pac. 993. The uncontradicted testimony of the county recorder established the fact that no copy of the writ of attachment, or description of the real property alleged to have been attached, or notice of the attachment, was ever filed in his office. Such filing is absolutely necessary under the provisions of section 4307, supra, in order to constitute a lawful levy upon real estate. No action lies for an attachment procured maliciously and without probable cause unless the levy is complete. Maskell v. Barker, 99 Cal. 642, 34 Pac. 340.

The question of whether or not the real property was attached, and whether or not the notice and description and a copy of the writ of attachment were filed in the office of the county recorder, was submitted to the jury, but as there was no evidence to dispute the testimony of the county recorder, that question should not have been submitted.

[2] Appellant next contends that the evidence was insufficient to show any damage resulting from the alleged attachment. Respondents rely upon injury to their credit and loss of prospective profits in their business as contractors, which are elements of damage if the attachment was not merely wrongful, but malicious and without probable cause. Crymble v. Mulvaney, 21 Colo. 203, 40 Pac. 499; note to International Harvester Co. v. Iowa Hdw. Co., 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 272; note to Tisdale v. Major, 68 Am. St. Rep. 263; note to Ailstock v. Moore Lime Co., 7 Ann. Cas. 545; 6 Corpus Juris, pp. 539 to 541, and cases in notes 76, 78, and 80; Shinn on Attachments and Garnishments, vol. 1, p. 693.

Assuming that the evidence in this case supports the allegations that the attachment was issued maliciously and without probable cause, loss of profits and credit could be considered by the jury in awarding damage, but only upon such evidence being submitted as would enable it to calculate, with reasonable certainty, the amount of damage resulting from such loss. In this connection respondents introduced testimony tending to show that during the year previous to the issuance of the attachment the volume of business obtained by them was large and the profits amounted to about $3,000; that immediately after the attachment was dissolved their business and profits were about the same in volume, but that during the time the property was attached they performed very little business and received little or no profits, although generally speaking, there was as much building in progress in the locality in which they operated during that time as there was prior to or after the time the attachment was in force. They testified that because their property was tied up by the attachment they could raise no money and could not obtain credit sufficient to enable them to advance the cost of material necessary to be used in construction work. They made no attempt to show that any certain contract for building could have been obtained by them had they been in a condition to perform it. The jury was left to infer from the fact that their business was of certain magnitude before and after the attachment, the volume during the time of attachment would have been the same. In the business of contracting, which is neither steady nor uniform, the profits received, or the amount of building done at one time is not a safe criterion by which to judge what might have been done at another had not the property of the contractor been attached. In case of a building contractor there is no such thing as uniformity in the volume of business. During one year he may have contracts for the construction of a few large buildings and during the next for many more, but smaller structures. If, however, respondents have shown that had they been able, financially, to handle them, they would have received certain building contracts, which they lost by reason of the attachment, then it would have been competent for them to show, upon the theory that the attachment was malicious and without probable cause, the cost of the labor and materials they would have used and the amount of the contract price, and thus furnish to the jury a safe and reasonable basis for the calculation of lost profits. "Past profits cannot be shown to enable a jury to conjecture what future profits would be." 13 Cyc. 57; Bierbach Goodyear Rubber Co., 54 Wis. 208, 11 N. W. 514, 41 Am. Rep. 19. Where recovery by reason of loss of profits may be had there must be such evidence as will enable the jury, with some degree of certainty, to ascertain the amount of the profits alleged to have been lost. Central Coal & Coke Co. v. Hartman, 111 Fed. 96, 49 C. C. A. 244; Zinn v. Rice, 161 Mass. 571, 37 N. E. 747.

[3] The final question to be decided is whether or not the evidence was sufficient to show malice and want of probable cause. As heretofore stated, although actual damage may be recovered where the attachment was merely wrongful, yet to sustain a judgment for damage for loss of credit and profits the attachment must be malicious and without probable cause. It is not alone sufficient that malice existed, nor is it sufficient that there is want of probable cause, but both these elements must be present. However, malice may be inferred by the jury, from the lack of probable cause. Ames v. Chirurg, 152 Iowa, 278, 132 N. W. 427, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 120; note to Tisdale v. Major, supra. But the jury cannot infer want of probable cause from the mere fact that the action in which the attachment was issued was decided against the party procuring it. If the party suing out the writ of attachment had a reasonable belief in the existence of facts necessary to sustain the same, there was probable cause. 2 R. C. L. 899. It is said that the test is what would prudent business men have done under like circumstances. 2 R. C. L., supra. The burden is upon the party alleging malice and want of probable cause to prove the same. The evidence in this case shows that there was a dispute between the parties as to who was in debt to the other. Respondents had borrowed money from appellant and, on the other hand, were constructing a building for it. There was a dispute as to how much was due on the building. The books of appellant showed that respondents were in its debt to the extent of something over $1,000. There is no evidence tending to show malice or want of probable cause or, as a matter of fact, anything further than an honest misunderstanding between the parties as to which one owed the other.

Judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial. Costs are awarded to appellant.

BUDGE, C. J., and RICE, J., concur.

(30 Idaho, 440)

KEYSER v. CITY OF BOISE.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. June 12, 1917.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚿690—PERMIT TO OBSTRUCT STREET—REVOCATION.

The holder of a permit to install an obstruction in a public street or thoroughfare for private purposes acquires no property or contractual right by reason of the issuance to him of such permit, and, whenever the city authorities deem it necessary as a police regulation to vacate and revoke such permit, the holder thereof has no alternative, but must comply with the order of revocation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1490, 1491.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚿690 — REVOCATION OF PERMIT—INJUNCTION—DEMURRER.

Held, that the action of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint and dismissing the action was not error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1490, 1491.]

Appeal from District Court, Ada County; Carl A. Davis, Judge.

Action by Samuel Keyser, doing business under the name and style of the American Grocery Company, to enjoin the City of Boise from removing by force a gasoline pump, installed by appellant on a public street, under a permit issued to him by the City. Demurrer to complaint sustained and action dismissed, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Van W. Hasbrouck, of Homedale, for appellant. Chas. F. Reddoch, of Boise, for respondent.

BUDGE, C. J. The appellant filed a complaint in the district court, setting up the following facts: That he was conducting a grocery business in Boise City; that respondent is a municipality in Ada county; that on the 4th day of May, 1915, the council of said city passed a resolution, upon his application, permitting and authorizing him to install a gasoline tank for the purpose of selling gasoline to automobilists and others; that pursuant to this permit, and relying thereon, he purchased a gasoline tank and pump and employed a skilled plumber to install the same; that the installation thereof was completed on the 13th day of May, 1915, with the exception of replacing the cement of the sidewalk around it; that during the installation thereof two members of the city council were present and assisted him in lining up the pump with the walk; that one of the councilmen came to him and stated that he was authorized by the council to investigate the pump, which he did, and stated to appellant that he would report the matter to the council; that said councilman came back to appellant's place of business and stated that the council objected to the pump on account of its appearance and the long arm projecting from it; that appellant removed the arm and agreed with the council that he would not use the galvanized iron, which came with the pump, for covering the same, as the council considered it unsightly; that thereafter the council, without any notice to appellant, on the 14th day of May, 1915, held a special meeting and passed a resolution directing appellant to remove the pump, so installed, within two days from the date of said resolution, and that, in the event of his failure so to do, the street commissioner was directed and ordered to remove the pump and place the street in its previous condition, at the expense of appellant; that, unless restrained by this court, said resolution would be carried into effect, to the great wrong and injury of appellant, and in violation of his rights under said permit; that the action of the council in ordering the pump removed was without authority of law, was wholly null and void and in violation of appellant's constitutional rights, and deprived him of the right of due process of law; that he had no speedy or adequate remedy at law; that the purported resolution of May 14, 1915, did not state the correct state of facts, in that it purported to state that the council directed and instructed appellant not to install an inside pump of the type and character intended to be installed; that, on the contrary, the council never made any objection to the character or the type of pump not being an outside pump until their purported resolution of May 14, 1915; that appellant prior to said date had no notice from the council that the pump was not in accordance with the ordinance of the city or not a proper pump for said purpose; that, on the contrary, the pump and tank were inspected by the chief of the fire department of said city and by members of the city council; that the city and members of its council had ample opportunity to observe, and did observe, the almost complete installation of the tank and pump before the passing of said purported resolution on May 14, 1915, where and when appellant first received information, by his voluntary appearance at said council meeting, that the maintenance of the pump would not be permitted; that the council and city have authorized installations, and, under said authorizations, there have been installed in said city pumps of the same type and character as the pump installed by the appellant; that appellant had performed all the conditions on his part to be performed under said permit, and prayed for a temporary restraining order, restraining the city from the threatened acts, set forth in the complaint, and for an order to show cause why the temporary restraining order should not be made absolute.

⚿For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Respondent demurred on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, injunctive or otherwise. The demurrer was sustained, and, appellant refusing to plead further, judgment was entered dismissing the action. This is an appeal from the judgment.

Appellant assigns the following errors: That the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint, and in rendering judgment in favor of respondent. The only question for this court to determine is whether or not the complaint states a cause of action.

[1, 2] The authorities dealing with the question raised by the demurrer are conflicting, but we are of the opinion that the sounder rule, and the rule supported by the better reasoned cases, is to the effect that the streets, from side to side and end to end, belong to the public, and are held by the municipality in trust for the use of the public. The city is therefore without authority, in the absence of a legislative enactment expressly permitting it, to grant a private person or corporation a permit to erect or maintain a permanent obstruction in a public street or thoroughfare for a purely private purpose; we have no such statute in this state. It follows that any one obtaining a permit from the city, for the private use of a public street, as in this case, takes the same with notice that it is subject to revocation at the will of the city, and, indeed in this view, it matters not whether the use is made in accordance with a permit or without one, the use is merely permissive in either event, and revocable at any time without notice. If the person making such private use of a street goes to expense, he does so at his own risk, and he will not be heard to complain that his property is being taken without due process of law.

The holder of a permit to install an obstruction in a public street or thoroughfare, for a private purpose, acquires no property or contractual right by reason of the issuance to him of such permit, and whenever the city authorities, in their discretion, deem it necessary, as a proper police measure, to vacate and revoke such permit, the holder of the same has no alternative, but must comply with the order of revocation. 3 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 1319; Elster v. City of Springfield, 49 Ohio St. 82, 30 N. E. 274; City of Denver v. Girard, 21 Colo. 447, 42 Pac. 562; Lacy v. Oskaloosa, 143 Iowa, 704, 121 N. W. 542, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 853; Hibbard v. Chicago, 173 Ill. 91, 50 N. E. 256, 40 L. R. A. 621; City of Tell City v. Bielefeld, 20 Ind. App. 1, 49 N. E. 1090; Winter v. City of Montgomery, 83 Ala. 589, 3 South. 235; Ainley v. Hackensack Imp. Commission, 64 N. J. Law, 504, 45 Atl. 807; Eddy v. Granger, 19 R. I. 105, 31 Atl. 831, 28 L. R. A. 517; South Highland L. & I. Co. v. Kansas City, 100 Mo. App. 518, 75 S. W. 383; City of New York v. United States Trust Co., 116 App. Div. 349, 101 N. Y. Supp. 574; Emerson v. Babcock, 66 Iowa, 257, 23 N. W. 656, 55 Am. Rep. 273; Norfolk v. Chamberlaine, 89 Va. 196, 16 S. E. 730; Ely v. Campbell, 59 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 333.

It may be that a different rule would apply if the municipality had been given the right to grant such a permit by statute. Some cases have gone to the extent of announcing a rule contrary to the one herein expressed, apparently upon the theory that a municipality has a right, in the absence of a statute authorizing it, to grant an irrevocable license or permit of a private use of the streets, so long as such use does not materially interfere with the use thereof by the public. 3 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. § 1319; City of Buffalo v. Chadeayne (Super. Buff.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 501; Spencer v. Andrew, 82 Iowa, 14, 47 N. W. 1007, 12 L. R. A. 115; First Nat. Bank v. City of Emmetsburg, 157 Iowa, 555, 138 N. W. 451–456, L. R. A. 1915A, 982; Smith v. City of Jefferson, 161 Iowa, 245, 142 N. W. 220, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 792, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 97.

While the latter view has some very plausible arguments in its favor, we are not in accord with it, for, as indicated above, the former view is supported by the weight of modern authority and by sound legal principle.

The complaint therefore does not state a cause of action, and the demurrer was properly sustained. The judgment is affirmed. Costs awarded to respondent.

MORGAN and RICE, JJ., concur.

(30 Idaho, 431)

CALLAHAN v. CALLAHAN.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. June 11, 1917.)

1. VENUE 🔑49(1) — PREJUDICE OF TRIAL JUDGE—MANDATORY DUTY.

When a motion for a change of venue, on the ground of the bias and prejudice of the trial judge, is supported by a sufficient showing, it is the duty of such judge to grant a change of venue, and such duty is mandatory and not discretionary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. § 71.]

2. VENUE 🔑67—BIAS OF TRIAL JUDGE—SUFFICIENCY OF SHOWING.

A direct allegation of the fact of prejudice and bias on the part of a trial judge, based on the belief of affiant, and accompanied by a statement of the facts on which the belief is based, as complete as the nature of the case admits of, constitutes a sufficient showing of bias and prejudice, to sustain an order for a change of venue on that ground, and this is particularly true where the trial judge expressly finds that he is disqualified, and that sufficient grounds exist therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 114–120.]

3. Venue 🔑75—Change of Venue—Transfer.

An order granting a change of venue in a cause pending in a district court should, in the absence of an agreement, transfer the cause to the nearest court, judicial district and county, "where the like objection or cause for making the order does not exist," and such order should not designate the judge before whom such cause should be tried.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Venue, Cent. Dig. §§ 130–132, 137.]

4. Order Granting Change of Venue.

Held, order granting a change of venue affirmed, with directions to the trial court to amend same in conformity with the views herein expressed.

Appeal from District Court, Shoshone County; William W. Woods, Judge.

Action for divorce by James F. Callahan against Helen Elizabeth Callahan, with cross-complaint by defendant. From an order granting a change of venue on the ground of the prejudice of the judge, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed, with directions to amend order.

Walter H. Hanson, of Wallace, for appellant. Harry H. Parsons, of Missoula, Mont., and Featherstone & Fox, of Wallace, for respondent.

BUDGE, C. J. Appellant instituted an action, in the district court for the First judicial district, in and for Shoshone county, for a decree of divorce from respondent. The respondent, after filing her answer and cross-complaint, made a motion for a change of venue, upon the ground that the Honorable William W. Woods, judge of said court, was disqualified, "because of the bias and prejudice of the said judge," and based her motion upon the records and files in the action, and upon her affidavit, in which she stated that she had been advised by certain residents of Shoshone county, and that she believed, and, therefore, alleged, that she could not have a fair and impartial trial before said judge, by reason of his friendship for appellant and prejudice against respondent; that appellant had on numerous occasions stated to her that he could win any case in which he was a party before said judge, because of their long friendship and the influence which appellant had over him; that in some actions decisions had been rendered favorable to him, by reason of such influence and friendship; that when decisions had been rendered against him he had lost solely on account of the misconduct of his counsel; that the judge had been for more than 30 years a close and intimate friend and political associate of appellant, and by reason thereof respondent could not have a fair and impartial trial; and that said judge was apprised of certain matters which had taken place between the parties to the action, looking to condonation and settlement, after the suit had been filed, and would be a material witness upon the trial.

At the hearing of the motion counter affidavits had not been filed, but the substance of the counter showing, thereafter made and filed, was stated to and considered by the court in making the following order, to wit:

> "* * * The court * * * being fully advised in the premises, and it satisfactorily appearing to the said judge that he is disqualified from trying the said cause, and that sufficient ground exists therefor: Now, therefore, it is ordered, a change of the place of trial of the said action be and the same hereby is granted, and that the said cause be and the same hereby is transferred to the district court of the Eighth judicial district of the state of Idaho, and to the Honorable Robert N. Dunn, one of the judges of the said district court."

[1, 2] On appeal from the above order, granting a change of the place of trial, appellant contends: First, that the showing made was insufficient to establish bias and prejudice; second, that if the showing was sufficient a change of venue should not have been granted, but that another district judge should have been called in to try the case; third, that if the showing was sufficient and the judge was within his rights in ordering a change of venue, that the order is void for insufficiency in that it should have specified the particular county to which the cause was transferred; fourth, that if the showing was sufficient the order was void for the reason that it designated the particular judge, there being two judges in the district to which it was transferred.

Upon the first proposition appellant relies mainly upon the decision of this court in Bell v. Bell, 18 Idaho, 636, 111 Pac. 1074, which reversed an order granting a change of venue under somewhat similar circumstances, upon the ground that the showing was insufficient in that it did not recite the facts which were relied upon to establish the existence of prejudice and bias on the part of the judge. In the instant case an examination of the affidavit discloses the facts relied upon to establish the existence of bias and prejudice on the part of the trial judge, which we think are sufficient. Booren v. McWilliams, 33 N. D. 339, 157 N. W. 117; Faivre v. Manderscheid, 117 Iowa, 724, 90 N. W. 76; Morehouse v. Morehouse, 136 Cal. 332, 68 Pac. 976. In the latter case it was said:

> "But here there is a direct allegation of the fact of prejudice and bias on the part of the judge; and, though the allegation is based—as in most cases it must be based—merely on the belief of the affiant, yet it is accompanied by a statement of the facts on which the belief is based, as complete as the nature of the case admitted of; and this was all that could reasonably be required."

The latter case was quoted with approval in Bassford v. Earl, 162 Cal. 115, 121, 121 Pac. 395–398, wherein the order denying the motion for a change of venue was reversed for the reason that there was no affidavit of the trial judge opposing the movant's showing, the court saying:

"If such a statement was necessary in answer to the Bassford affidavit, and not only do we think it was, but from the affidavit of Mr. Wheeler it seems so to have been regarded by the respondents to that motion, the one person, who, with an informed mind, could make such a declaration, was the judge himself, and he does not do so."

The same rule was announced in Keating v. Keating, 169 Cal. 754, 147 Pac. 974; Jones v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 83 Kan. 44, 109 Pac. 1077. Not only did the trial judge, in the case at bar, make no such affidavit, but on the contrary he expressly finds in his order that he is disqualified, and that sufficient ground exists for a change of venue. The order, therefore, was properly granted. Again referring to the Bell Case, it will also be noted that that case was decided in 1910, and that section 4125, Rev. Codes, has been amended by chapter 96, Sess. Laws 1913, p. 385, to read as follows:

"The court or judge must, on motion, when it appears by affidavit or other satisfactory proof, change the place of trial in the following cases. * * *" (Italics ours.)

In this amendment "may" has been changed to "must," and the other italicized portion has been added. Just what the Legislature intended to include in the clause "other satisfactory proof" does not appear. But where the showing is such as appears in this record, and where the trial judge himself has expressly found that he was satisfied of his own disqualification and that sufficient grounds existed for a change of venue, it would not only be unjust to the parties litigant, but it would be an imposition upon the trial judge for this court to compel him to try the case under such circumstances.

[3, 4] The second point urged by appellant is equally without merit, in view of the language of section 4126, Rev. Codes, which provides that whenever the judge is disqualified in an action—

"it must be transferred for trial to such other court of competent jurisdiction as may be agreed upon by the parties by stipulation in writing in open court, and entered in the minutes; or, if they do not so agree, then to the nearest court where the like objection or cause for making the order does not exist."

In other words, when a motion for a change of venue, on the ground of the bias and prejudice of the trial judge, is supported by a sufficient showing, it is the duty of such judge to grant a change of venue, and such duty is mandatory and not discretionary. Gordon v. Conor, 5 Idaho, 673, 51 Pac. 747.

Keeping the latter section in mind appellant's third and fourth objections are readily disposed of. It is clear that the parties did not agree by stipulation in writing, entered in the minutes, or otherwise, that the cause should be transferred to any other court, and, failing in this, the judge being disqualified, the statute fixes the ocurt to which the cause should be transferred, namely, to another district court and "to the nearest court where the like objection or cause for making the order does not exist." What is the nearest court is a fact of which both the trial court and this court take judicial notice.

The order should have transferred the cause to the district court of the Eighth Judicial district for Kootenai county, without designating what judge should try the case. That portion of the order which designated the particular judge must be regarded as mere surplusage, in view of section 3829, Rev. Codes, as amended by chapter 4, Sess. Laws 1911, p. 6, which provides that the senior judge shall apportion the business of such district among such judges as equally as may be.

The order appealed from is affirmed, and the trial judge who made the order is directed to amend the same in conformity with the views herein expressed. Costs awarded to respondent.

MORGAN and RICE, JJ., concur.

(30 Idaho, 464)

ANDERSON v. COUNCIL LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. June 16. 1917.)

1. SALES 🔑363—QUANTITY OF LOGS DELIVERED—QUESTION FOR JURY.

The question of the number of logs delivered under an oral contract is a question of fact for the jury to determine under all of the facts and circumstances in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. § 1064.]

2. SALES 🔑359(1) — QUANTITY DELIVERED — EVIDENCE.

Held, that the jury were justified under the evidence in this case in finding that respondent substantially complied with his part of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 1056, 1057.]

3. SALES 🔑348(1)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—RECOVERY FOR LOGS DELIVERED.

A party who has failed to perform in full his part of a contract to deliver logs may recover compensation for the logs actually delivered according to the contract price, less damages, if any, occasioned by his failure to fully complete the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 973–978, 983–986.]

Appeal from District Court, Adams County; Ed. L. Bryan, Judge.

Action by Aaron Anderson against the Council Lumber Company. Judgment for defendant, motion for new trial overruled, and it appeals. Affirmed.

James A. Stinson, of Council, for appellant. L. L. Burtenshaw, of Council, for respondent.

BUDGE, C. J. This is an action brought by the respondent against the appellant, upon an oral contract, to recover a balance of $387.68 alleged to be due respondent thereunder. There were several causes of action pleaded in the complaint, but the only one at issue here is the first cause of action, involving the contract above mentioned, the other causes of action having been waived by the respondent.

It appears that respondent agreed to cut and haul a certain quantity of sawlogs for appellant, "the amount of logs to be the amount of timber purchased by the said defendant from the United States government," and to pile the brush. Appellant agreed to pay respondent therefor at the rate of $3 per 1,000 feet, board measure. The case was tried before the court and a jury, the jury returned a verdict in favor of respondent for $300, and judgment was entered thereon for respondent. This appeal is from the judgment and from the order of the trial court overruling appellant's motion for a new trial. There are several assignments of error which we do not deem necessary to set out in hæc verba.

[1, 2] The point mainly relied upon by appellant is that, respondent having agreed to cut and haul all of the timber, and having pleaded a complete performance on his part, and the evidence, as appellant contends, failing to show a complete performance on the part of respondent, appellant was entitled to a directed verdict. It is admitted by appellant that respondent "would have coming to him, under said agreement, the amount claimed, to wit, the sum of $387.68, if he had completed his agreement as alleged and agreed upon."

There is some conflict in the evidence as to just where the logs were to be hauled or delivered, and some conflict as to the number of logs which were not delivered. The evidence on the part of respondent is to the effect that all of the logs were properly delivered with the exception of three logs, aggregating a total of about 240 feet, board measure. All of the evidence shows that approximately 700,000 feet of logs were hauled and delivered by respondent under the contract. The evidence on the part of appellant is to the effect that some 15 or 18 logs were not delivered by respondent. The number of logs not delivered was a question for the jury to determine under all of the facts and circumstances in evidence. The jury were justified, under the evidence, in finding, as they must have done in order to have returned the verdict which they did return, a substantial compliance on the part of respondent.

[3] This court held in Huber v. Blackwell Lumber Co., 27 Idaho, 373, 148 Pac. 903, that:

> "A party who has failed to perform his contract in full to deliver logs may recover compensation for the logs delivered according to the contract price, less damages occasioned by his failure to complete the contract."

The questions involved in the case at bar are strictly analogous to those before the court in the Huber Case, wherein the authorities are reviewed at length and the rule above quoted announced, quoting with approval from Saunders v. Short, 86 Fed. 225, 30 C. C. A. 462. It is unnecessary in this opinion to again review the authorities which support the principle announced in the Huber Case. While the subject-matter involved in the Huber Case was the sale and delivery of personal property, and the subject-matter of the contract here is that of employment for the performance of certain services, yet the principles involved are precisely the same. Turner v. Goodman 90 Ill. App. 339; Buckwalter v. Bradley (Ky.) 104 S. W. 970.

We have reached the conclusion, after a careful examination of the record and briefs of counsel, that there is no reversible error in the record, and the judgment is accordingby affirmed. Costs are awarded to respondent.

MORGAN and RICE, JJ., concur.

(30 Idaho, 451)

NELSON v. McGOLDRICK LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. June 13, 1917.)

1. JUDGMENT ⟹143(2)—VACATION—MISTAKE OR NEGLECT.

Where it clearly appears that a default was permitted to be entered through the carelessness and negligence of a party, or his counsel, for which no reasonable excuse is offered, it will not be vacated upon the theory that it was taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 270.]

2. COSTS ⟹260(1) — APPEAL — DELAY — RULE OF COURT.

Under rule 44 (153 Pac. xiii) of the rules of practice in this court, damages may be allowed to respondent in an amount not to exceed 12 per cent. of the judgment, where it manifestly appears the appeal has been taken for delay.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Costs, Cent. Dig. §§ 983, 986, 996.]

Appeal from District Court, Shoshone County; William W. Woods, Judge.

Action by J. P. Nelson against the McGoldrick Lumber Company. Default judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion to vacate the default, defendant appeals. Amended and affirmed.

Cullen, Lee & Matthews, of Spokane, Wash., and Featherstone & Fox, of Wallace, for appellant. Wm. D. Keeton and E. N. La Veine, both of St. Maries, for respondent.

MORGAN, J. This action was commenced on September 10, 1915. On October 7th appellant filed a demurrer to the complaint which was overruled on November 1st, and appellant was given 20 days in which to answer. By stipulation the time was extended to and including November 27th, and on December 2d, no answer having been filed, the default of appellant was entered. On December 15th, no other or further appearance having been made, respondent offered proof in support of the allegations of his complaint, and was awarded judgment in the sum of $523.43 and costs.

On January 19, 1916, appellant caused to be served upon counsel for respondent a motion and notice of motion to vacate the default and for permission to answer, together with an affidavit in support thereof and a proposed answer to the complaint. These papers were filed on January 31st, at which time the motion was heard and denied. This appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying the motion.

The assignments of error bring before us for review the showings made in support of and in opposition to the motion above mentioned and the action of the trial court thereon.

[1] It appears from the affidavit of W. J. Matthews, of counsel for appellant, that it was necessary, in order to ascertain the facts from which to prepare an answer, to confer with J. F. Armfield, appellant's codefendant; that some difficulty was encountered in locating Armfield, and that on November 13, it was found he was in Pullman, Wash.; that, although affiant communicated with him, both by telephone and letter, and offered to pay all expenses of the trip if he would go to Spokane, Wash., where affiant resided, in order to confer with counsel for appellant relative to the facts in the case, he declined to do so, and it was not until on or about November 29th that appellant received a letter from him purporting to give the necessary information; and that because of this fact it was impossible to file the answer at an earlier date. It further appears from this affidavit that the answer was actually prepared by affiant prior to November 27th, and that some delay was occasioned because it was desired that the verification thereto be made by Roy Lammers, manager of appellant, who was absent from Spokane, and who had knowledge of the matters therein alleged.

Aside from the contradictory statements contained in this affidavit, by reason of which it is not very persuasive, it does not state facts sufficient to invoke the benefits of section 4229, Rev. Codes, wherein it is provided:

> "The court may * * * relieve a party, or his legal representative from a judgment, order, or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect."

While the answer in this case was due on November 27th, it conclusively appears that no effort whatever was made to procure a further extension of time, nor was counsel for respondent communicated with upon the subject by counsel for appellant until December 6th, four days after the default had been entered, nor does any reason appear why such extension was not applied for. The record before us, taken as a whole, does not show that the default was permitted to be entered through the mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect of appellant, or of its counsel, but does disclose that it was due to carelessness and negligence for which no reasonable excuse was offered. The rule that defaults will not be vacated under such circumstances has long been well established in this state. Domer v. Stone, 27 Idaho, 279, 149 Pac. 505, and cases therein cited.

[2] From the facts disclosed in this record it manifestly appears that this appeal is entirely without merit and was taken for delay. Damages in the sum of $62.81, being 12 per cent. of the amount of the original judgment, exclusive of costs, will therefore be allowed to respondent under rule 44 of the rules of practice in this court. Wilds v. Brown, 27 Idaho, 218, 148 Pac. 469.

The trial court is hereby directed to amend the judgment by adding thereto the said sum of $62.81. The order appealed from and the judgment, so amended, are affirmed. Costs are awarded to respondent.

BUDGE, C. J., and RICE, J., concur.

(30 Idaho. 446)

NAMPA HIGHWAY DIST. v. CANYON COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. June 13, 1917.)

1. COUNTIES ⟹192—POWER OF COUNTY COMMISSIONER — TAXATION FOR BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION.

The board of county commissioners has the power and authority to levy and collect taxes against all the taxable property within the county, including that within a highway district, for the payment of bonds, the proceeds whereof have been used for the construction of bridges within the county, but without the boundaries of the district.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Cent. Dig. §§ 300–302.]

2. BRIDGES ⟹10(1)—CONSTRUCTION—APPORTIONMENT OF COST—STATUTE.

The provisions of section 16, c. 55, Sess. Laws 1911, p. 129, held to not be applicable to the facts of this case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bridges, Cent. Dig. § 20.]

Appeal from District Court, Canyon County; Chas. P. McCarthy, Judge.

Action by the Nampa Highway District against the County of Canyon. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. A. Hagelin and A. L. Anderson, both of Nampa, and Richards & Haga, of Boise, for appellant. A. F. Stone, H. A. Griffiths, and Scatterday & Van Duyn, all of Caldwell, for respondent.

MORGAN, J. This action was commenced by appellant, a highway district, for the purpose of causing to be apportioned between it and Canyon county, the respondent, of which the district is an integral part, the cost of construction of three bridges situated in the county and outside of the district. Money with which to pay for building the bridges was procured by the issuance and sale of county bonds. It appears that a uniform tax has been levied upon all taxable property in the county for the purpose of raising money with which to pay the interest on the bonded indebtedness thus created, and that the sum of $573.75 has been collected for that purpose from the owners of property within the district.

It is appellant's contention that neither the inhabitants of the district nor the property situated therein are benefited by the construction or maintenance of the bridges, and it is sought in this action to procure a decree to that effect and to recover the money heretofore paid, as above mentioned.

A trial was had before the court without a jury, which resulted in a judgment in favor of defendant dismissing the action, from which this appeal has been taken.

[1] Appellant was created and is operating under and by virtue of chapter 55, Sess. Laws 1911, p. 121, the purpose of which act is to make possible the creation of highway districts with power to establish and maintain their own systems of roads, and, to that end, provision is made for the collection by the county wherein such a district is situated of taxes for road and bridge purposes and the payment of the money so collected, except a small percentage thereof, to the highway district.

The statutory enactments providing the means by which taxes levied for road and bridge purposes shall be collected and apportioned between the county and highway district have been fully discussed in case of Reinhart v. Canyon County, 22 Idaho, 348, 125 Pac. 791, wherein this same bond issue was called in question by a property owner of appellant, and the court there said that the principal question presented for determination was:

> "Has the board of county commissioners the power to bind the property and levy taxes against the property within a legally organized highway district for the payment of bonds issued by the county after the organization of such highway district, the proceeds to be used in the construction of a bridge within the county, but without the boundaries of such highway district?"

That question was answered by the court in the affirmative, and it said:

> "We think it is clear under the provisions of said highway district act and the statute concerning the issuance of bonds for the construction of bridges that in a case like the one at bar the board of county commissioners has the power and authority to levy the tax upon all of the property within the county for the payment of such bonds and the interest thereon."

[2] Appellant relies for its right to recover upon the provisions of section 16, c. 55, Sess. Laws 1911, p. 129, which is as follows:

> "In case the construction, maintenance, repair or improvement of any highway, or portion thereof, within a county and not included within a highway district in such county, would also be for the benefit of such highway district, and the cost of such construction, maintenance, repair or improvement would if borne wholly by such excluded portion, be an unjust or unreasonable burden thereon, or in case the construction, maintenance, repair or improvement of any highway, or portion thereof, within a highway district would also be for the benefit of a portion or portions of such county which are not included in such highway district, and the cost of such construction, maintenance, repair or improvement would, if borne wholly by such highway district, be an unjust or unreasonable burden thereon; in either of such cases the highway board on the one hand, and the board of county commissioners on the other, shall have power to contract each with the other for a division and apportionment of the cost of such construction, maintenance, repair or improvement. And in case they fail to agree an action may be maintained in the district court of the district, between such highway district and the county, and the district court shall render such judgment therein as shall be just and equitable in respect to such division and apportionment of cost; and all proceedings in such action shall be the same as in ordinary civil actions with the same right of appeal and other rights and remedies as in an ordinary civil action by or against a body politic or political subdivision."

A careful reading of the foregoing section will disclose that it does not apply to this case. That law is intended for the relief of the portion of a county not organized into a highway district in case road or bridge construction or improvement is undertaken outside the boundaries of the district, by providing that the district may contribute, or be required to do so, in a manner not otherwise provided by law toward the expense of such improvement; also that in the event such improvement be within the district, but beneficial to other portions of the county, and the cost thereof is such that it would be an unjust or an unreasonable burden upon the district, the county may likewise assist, or be required to do so, in a way it could not otherwise do.

Neither of these conditions presents itself here. The bridges for the construction of which this bonded indebtedness was created are outside the district, so that is not a case for contribution under the law from respondent in aid of appellant. The expense of construction is not claimed to be an unjust or unreasonable burden upon the county, and it is not asking for contribution from appellant.

Since, as held in Reinhart v. Canyon County, supra, the county commissioners have power and authority to levy a tax upon all taxable property within the county, including that within the highway district, for the payment of the bonds and the interest thereon, and since the provisions of section 16, supra, do not apply to this case, the action cannot be maintained.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed. Costs are awarded to respondent.

BUDGE, C. J., and RICE, J., concur.

(30 Idaho, 1)

MARSH MINING CO. v. INLAND EMPIRE MIN. & MILL. CO.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. March 18, 1916. On Rehearing, June 30, 1917.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN 🔑14 — EXERCISE OF POWER—REASONABLE NECESSITY.

If a reasonable, although not an absolute, necessity exists to take private property for a public use, the power of eminent domain may be invoked.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 54.]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN 🔑47(1)—PUBLIC USE—TAKING FOR SAME USE.

Property devoted to, or held for, a public use is subject to the power of eminent domain if the right to so take it is given by constitutional provision or legislative enactment, in express terms or by clear implication, but it cannot be taken to be used in the same manner and for the same purpose to which it is already being applied or for which it is, in good faith, being held if by so doing that purpose will be defeated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 107, 109, 110, 116–120.]

3. EMINENT DOMAIN 🔑47(1)—PROPERTY SUBJECT—MINING USE.

The theory upon which the power of eminent domain is extended in aid of the mining industry is that public benefit will result from the application of private property to public use. It was not the intention of the framers of the Constitution, nor of the Legislature, that this power be so invoked that one mine will be developed and thereby another be destroyed, nor that one mine owner be enriched and another impoverished. The aid of eminent domain is extended to the industry, not to the individual.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 107, 109, 110, 116–120.]

4. EMINENT DOMAIN 🔑33—MINING PROPERTY—STATUTE.

Chapter 3, tit. 8, of the Civil Code points out the occasions when, the conditions under which, and the methods and agencies whereby, the use of mining property may be appropriated in aid of the mining industry, and, the purposes for which it may be so appropriated having been specified, it follows that, unless it is being applied by its owner to or in good faith held for the same or a more necessary public use which will be defeated or seriously interfered with thereby, it may be taken in aid of that industry, under the power of eminent domain, for one or more of those designated purposes and none other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 79.]

Sullivan, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from District Court, Shoshone County; John M. Flynn, Judge.

Action by the Marsh Mining Company against the Inland Empire Mining & Milling Company to condemn a part of a patented mining claim for mining purposes. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Charles E. Miller and I. N. Smith, both of Wallace, for appellant. John P. Gray, of Cœur d'Alene, and Therrett Towles, of Wallace, for respondent.

MORGAN, J. Respondent is the owner of certain mining claims known as the "Marsh Group" situated in Leland mining district, Shoshone county. Appellant is the owner of a patented mining claim known as the "Never Sweat Lode," which contains between 11 and 12 acres. The land embraced within the Marsh group and all that embraced within the Never Sweat, except a small portion which is comparatively level, lying along a stream called Canyon creek, is situated upon steep mountain sides. This action was commenced by respondent in order to acquire for mining purposes, under the power of eminent domain, the surface of approximately 3⅓ acres of appellant's ground including all the level portion above mentioned. The level land sought to be condemned is occupied by certain persons who claim adversely to appellant by reason of occupancy, or otherwise, and who were made defendants in the action. The record discloses that while the respondent has never paid a dividend, it has done a great deal of development work, and has mined from its claims and marketed about $550,000 worth of ore; that it has discovered in said claims a valuable deposit of mineral; that in the development of its property its present facilities have become and are inadequate to meet its requirements; and that by reason of the topography of its ground it needs the level portion of appellant's land in order to facilitate its mining operations. It is alleged in the complaint that respondent needs this land for the purposes of constructing a tramway thereon, for terminal facilities for tracks, ground for ore bins, machine shops, ore sorting plant, sheds for timber, stullyards, land for dumping waste rock and for other necessary mining uses and purposes in connection with the operation and development of its property. The trial resulted in a judgment, decreeing that the use to which respondent desires to put the land is a public use, and awarding to it the right to condemn and appropriate said land under the power of eminent domain. This appeal is from the judgment.

[1] Appellant contends that the acquisition of the property is a matter of convenience and economy, only, on the part of respondent, and that no such necessity exists therefor as warrants the exercise of the right of eminent domain. While the record does not disclose that an absolute necessity exists for taking the land by respondent and does disclose that it may operate, to some extent, without it, we are convinced from a careful examination of the evidence that for the convenient and economical development and operation of its mine the use of the land is needed, and that a reasonable necessity exists for the taking. If a reasonable, although not an absolute, necessity exists to take property for a public use, it is sufficient.

City of Spokane v. Merriam, 80 Wash. 222, 141 Pac. 358; State ex rel. Skamania Boom Co. v. Superior Court, 47 Wash. 166, 91 Pac. 637; Samish River Boom Co. v. Union Boom Co., 32 Wash. 586, 73 Pac. 670; Bennett v. City of Marion, 106 Iowa, 628, 76 N. W. 844; Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. City of Anderson, 139 Ind. 490, 38 N. E. 167, 47 Am. St. Rep. 285; Mobile, etc., Co. v. Alabama, etc., R. Co., 87 Ala. 501, 6 South. 404; Butte, A. & P. Ry. Co. v. Montana Union R. Co., 16 Mont. 504, 41 Pac. 232, 31 L. R. A. 298, 50 Am. St. Rep. 508.

It appears that appellant and its predecessors have expended about $20,000 in the development of the Never Sweat claim; that while ore in paying quantities has never been discovered, some ore has been found, and that appellant is still prospecting, in good faith, and expending its money in an effort to develop a mine, and also that if commercial ore in paying quantities is discovered in the Never Sweat claim, all the level ground sought to be condemned will be necessary to its owner in its development and operation for the same use to which respondent seeks to appropriate it. It further appears that the predecessors in interest of appellant, some years ago, used a portion of the level land in question for the purpose of piling or storing some mining timbers upon it, and also dumped thereon a small quantity of waste rock, and that no use has been made of it since for mining purposes; that at about the time this use was made of the land an injunction, which is still in force, was served upon appellant's predecessors, preventing such use of it, and that there is litigation now pending between appellant and others which has grown out of adverse claims to surface rights to the land.

Appellant contends, and the record discloses, that the property is owned and held by it for the same public use and purpose to which respondent desires to put it, to wit, mining purposes, and it insists that if it is deprived of this land, the development of the remaining portion of its property may as well cease, since without the level land the successful operation of its mine will be impossible.

[2] Property devoted to, or held for, a public use is subject to the power of eminent domain if the right to so take it is given by constitutional provision or legislative enactment, in express terms or by clear implication, but it cannot be taken to be used in the same manner and for the same purpose to which it is already being applied, or for which it is, in good faith, being held, if by so doing that purpose will be defeated. Lewis on Eminent Domain (3d Ed.) § 440; State ex rel. Skamania Boom Co. v. Superior Court, supra; Samish River Boom Co. v. Union Boom Co., supra; State ex rel. Harbor Boom Co. v. Superior Court, 65 Wash. 129, 117 Pac. 755; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co., 67 Kan. 569, 70 Pac. 939, 73 Pac. 899; So. Pac. R. Co. v. So. Cal. R. Co., 111 Cal. 221, 43 Pac. 602; Cary Library v. Bliss, 151 Mass. 364, 25 N. E. 92, 7 L. R. A. 765; Northwestern Tel. Exch. Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 76 Minn. 334, 79 N. W. 315; Oregon Short Line R. Co. v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 111 Fed. 842, 49 C. C. A. 663; Little Miami & Columbus & Xenia R. R. Co. v. City of Dayton, 23 Ohio St. 510.

[3] An examination of the Constitution and statutes of Idaho discloses that authority has not been granted, either expressly or by implication, to take, under the power of eminent domain, property already devoted to mining purposes for some of the uses to which it is sought to put the property of appellant. Section 14, art. 1, of the Constitution provides:

> "The necessary use of lands * * * for the drainage of mines, or the working thereof, by means of roads, railroads, tramways, cuts, tunnels, shafts, hoisting works, dumps, or other necessary means to their complete development * * * is hereby declared to be a public use, and subject to the regulation and control of the state."

It will be observed that this section of the Constitution provides that the necessary use of lands for certain mining purposes is a public use, and is subject to the regulation and control of the state, but it must be remembered that the tract here in controversy is now held by appellant for those purposes, and the Constitution makes no reference to the taking of property held for, or devoted to, a public use for the purpose of applying it to the same or any other use.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts, in Boston & Maine Railroad v. Lowell & Lawrence R. Co. 124 Mass. 368, said:

> "The general principle is well settled, and has been applied in a great variety of cases, that land already legally appropriated to a public use is not to be afterwards taken for a like use, unless the intention of the Legislature that it should be so taken has been manifested in express terms or by necessary implication." Baltimore & O. & C. R. R. Co. v. North, 103 Ind. 486, 3 N. E. 144; Atlanta, etc., Ry. Co. v. Atlanta, etc., Ry. Co., 124 Ga. 125, 52 S. E. 320; Matter of the City of Buffalo, 68 N. Y. 167; Portland Ry., Light & Power Co. v. City of Portland (C. C.) 181 Fed. 632.

Section 5210, Rev. Codes, provides:

> "Subject to the provisions of this title, the right of eminent domain may be exercised in behalf of the following public uses: * * * 4. Roads, tunnels, ditches, flumes, pipes and dumping places for working mines; also outlets, natural or otherwise, for the flow, deposit, or conduct of tailings or refuse matter for mines; also, an occupancy in common by the owners or possessors of different mines of any place for the flow, deposit or conduct of tailings or refuse matter from their several mines."

It is provided in section 5212, Rev. Codes:

> "The private property which may be taken under this title includes: * * * 3. Property appropriated to public use; but such property shall not be taken unless for a more necessary public use than that to which it has been already appropriated"

—and section 5213 provides:

> "Before property can be taken, it must appear: * * * 3. If already appropriated to some public use, that the public use to which it is to be applied is a more necessary public use."

It is true the respondent's mine is more fully developed than is that of appellant, and that the former corporation is, by reason of its discovery of commercial ore in paying quantities, operating upon a larger scale than is the latter, but this is not the test to be applied in construing the foregoing sections of the Code. This court said in case of Portneuf Irrigating Co., Ltd., v. Budge, 16 Idaho, 116, 100 Pac. 1046, 18 Ann. Cas. 674, as follows:

> "Certainly the fact that the proposed canal will irrigate 20,000 acres, while the plaintiff's canal only irrigates 2,500 acres, does not make it a more necessary public use. Cary Library v. Bliss, 151 Mass. 364, 25 N. E. 92, 7 L. R. A. 771; West River Bridge v. Dix, 6 How. (47 U. S.) 507, 12 L. Ed. 535; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Chicago & E. R. R. Co., 112 Ill. 589. In other words, the necessity is not measured by the extent to which the use is applied. Butte, A. & P. Ry. Co. v. Montana U. R. Co., 16 Mont. 504, 41 Pac. 232, 31 L. R. A. 298, 50 Am. St. Rep. 508; Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray (Mass.) 417; Kettle River R. Co. v. Eastern Ry. Co., 41 Minn. 461, 43 N. W. 473, 6 L. R. A. 111; Hibernia R. Co. v. De Camp, 47 N. J. Law, 518, 4 Atl. 318, 54 Am. St. Rep. 197."

The theory upon which eminent domain, a power inherent in the state, is extended in aid of the mining industry is that public benefit will result from the application of private property to public use. The end sought to be attained is that mines be discovered, developed, and operated, and that thereby the wealth of the state and the prosperity of its inhabitants be augmented. The welfare of this state depends largely upon the development of its natural resources, and the discovery of mineral, in paying quantities, in an undeveloped mine, is of as vital importance to it and to its present and future inhabitants as is the successful operation of a mine now developed. It was not the intention of the framers of the Constitution, nor of the Legislature, that the power of eminent domain be so invoked that one mine will be developed and thereby another be destroyed, nor that one mine owner be enriched and another be impoverished. The aid of eminent domain is extended to the industry, not to the individual.

[4] Provision has been made whereby the owners of mines and mining claims, less advantageously located than those of others, cannot be excluded from their properties nor prevented from developing and operating them. Chapter 3, tit. 8, of the Civil Code points out the occasions when, the conditions under which, and the methods and agencies whereby, the use of mining property may be appropriated in aid of the mining industry, and sections 3223 and 3224 are as follows:

> "3223. The owner, locator, or occupant of a mining claim, whether patented under the laws of the United States or held by location or possession, may have and acquire a right of way for ingress and egress, when necessary in working such mining claim, over and across the lands or mining claims of others, whether patented or otherwise.
>
> "3224. When any mine or mining claim is so situated, that for the more convenient enjoyment of the same a road, railroad or tramway therefrom, or a ditch or canal to convey water thereto, or a ditch, flume, cut or tunnel to drain or convey the waters or tailings therefrom, or a tunnel or shaft, may be necessary for the better working thereof, which road, railroad, tramway, ditch, canal, flume, cut, shaft or tunnel, may require the use or occupancy of lands or mining grounds, owned, occupied or possessed by others than the person or persons or body corporate, requiring an easement for any of the purposes described, the owner, claimant or occupant of the mine or mining claim first above mentioned, is entitled to a right of way, entry and possession for all the uses and privileges for such road, railroad, tramway, ditch, canal, flume, cut, shaft or tunnel, in, upon, through and across such other lands or mining claims, upon compliance with the provisions of this chapter."

The succeeding sections of chapter 3, tit. 8, of the Code prescribe the procedure for acquiring such property by condemnation.

The purposes having been specified in sections 3223 and 3224, supra, for which property dedicated to mining may be appropriated, it follows that, unless it is being applied by its owner to, or in good faith held for, the same or a more necessary public use, which will be defeated or seriously interfered with thereby, it may be taken in aid of that industry under the power of eminent domain for one or more of these designated purposes and none other.

In this case the trial court decreed:

> "That it is necessary for the plaintiff to have the particular portions of said premises hereinafter described for the purpose of constructing, building and extending a tramway from the portal of the present Marsh adit tunnel to a point on the east side line of the Never Sweat lode mining claim for the purpose of protecting said tramway and for the reasonable use thereof and of the works connected therewith, for tunnel facilities, for tracks and the extension of railroad tracks, or in connection with railroad tracks across the same, for the construction of ore bins, machine shops, ore sorting plant, sheds for timber, stullyards, and land for other necessary mining uses and purposes in connection with the operation and development of the property of the plaintiff more fully set forth in the findings of fact."

The decree then awards to respondent the right to have the land condemned for said purposes without designating any specific portion of it to be taken for any or either purpose. No allegation appears in the complaint that respondent requires any of appellant's land for tunnel facilities, nor does the record contain any evidence tending to support the portion of the decree relating to that use.

It is entirely clear that the law grants to respondent a right to condemn sufficient of appellant's land for an easement for a tramway and a railroad, which, of course, contemplates the right to occupy sufficient ground to make the reasonable use thereof possible, and it is equally clear that there is no warrant of law for taking said property, or any part of it, for other purposes set out in the decree.

Since the portions of land necessary to be used for the purposes for which condemnation may be had have not been segregated and described separately from that which the trial court deemed necessary to be taken for purposes in behalf of which we have concluded the power of eminent domain cannot be invoked, it is impossible to modify the judgment, and it must therefore be reversed; and it is so ordered. Costs are awarded to appellant.

BUDGE, J., concurs.

SULLIVAN, C. J. (dissenting). I am unable to concur in the conclusion reached by the majority of the court. I am of the opinion that under the law and the facts the decision of the trial court ought to be affirmed, and not modified in any respect. The findings of fact made by the trial court are fully supported by the evidence.

The majority opinion proceeds upon the theory that a mining claim is already devoted to a public use, regardless of whether the owner is working or using it or not. The majority opinion states:

> "But it must be remembered that the tract here in controversy is now held by appellant for those purposes, and the Constitution makes no reference to the taking of property held for, or devoted to, a public use for the purpose of applying it to the same or any other use."

The record clearly shows, as the trial court found, that said land was not devoted to a public use. It was not being used by the owner for any purpose. The authorities cited by the appellant do not support the proposition that if property is held for a "prospective" public use, even in good faith, although not applied to such use, it cannot be taken under the right of eminent domain. In State ex rel. Harbor Boom Co. v. Superior Court, 65 Wash. 129, 117 Pac. 755, the court there quotes from the decision of Samish River Boom Co. v. Union Boom Co., 32 Wash. 586, 73 Pac. 672, as follows:

> "There can be no doubt that property held by a corporation simply as a proprietor may be taken for a public use by another corporation having the right of eminent domain."

Simply because the appellant company owned the land sought to be condemned as a mining claim and held it for a prospective public use, that does not protect it from being condemned for a public use upon proper application.

Counsel for appellant do not contend that their client wants the property sought to be condemned at the present time, but that it may need it at some future time for the proper development of its mine. It is well settled that the mere possibility that land sought to be taken may, at some future time, become necessary in the operations of the appellant company does not exempt it from condemnation. See 15 Cyc. p. 614, and authorities there cited.

It was held in the condemnation case of the Colorado Eastern R. R. Co. v. Union Pac. R. R. Co. (C. C.) 41 Fed. 293, that both on reason and authority a mere prospective use of the defendant should yield to the more immediate necessities of the petitioner in that case. See 2 Lewis on Eminent Domain (3d Ed.) p. 754.

Property of a quasi public corporation not in use and not necessary for the exercise of its public franchise or discharge of its public duties may be taken under the general power to condemn property the same as though it belonged to a private individual. 2 Lewis on Eminent Domain (3d Ed.) p. 799.

The property sought to be condemned in this action is not being used by the defendant for any purpose whatever, and the mere prospective use of the defendant corporation should be compelled to yield to the more immediate necessities of the plaintiff in this case.

The judgment of the district court ought to be affirmed.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. A petition for rehearing was granted in this case, and it has been again fully submitted and considered.

The conclusion of the court is that it adheres to the former decision.

(30 Idaho, 455)

BOISE CITY v. NATIONAL SURETY CO.

(Supreme Court of Idaho. June 15, 1917.)

1. DAMAGES 🔑121—MEASURE OF DAMAGES—BREACH OF CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT.

Where a party is damaged by breach of a construction contract by the failure of the contractor to complete it, the measure of damages is the cost necessarily and reasonably incurred in completing the contract, whether he does the work himself or employs others to do it for him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Cent. Dig. §§ 306–308.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑347(1)—CONTRACT — BREACH — RECOVERY UPON SURETY BOND.

Where sewers have been constructed for a municipality and accepted upon condition that the contractor would, upon notice, repair or relay any portion of said sewer should the same prove to be defective, and where thereafter a portion of the same is found to be defective, and notice thereof is duly given, and the municipality is compelled to repair and complete the system, it is entitled to recover upon the bond all amounts necessarily expended upon the portion of the work included in the notice for materials, labor, and salaries of regularly employed officials actually engaged upon such work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 876.]

3. MODIFICATION OF JUDGMENT.

Held, that the judgment in this case must be modified so as to include only such sums for cost of materials, labor, and salaries of regularly employed city officials actually engaged upon the work as were devoted to the portion of the work included in the notice.

Appeal from District Court, Ada County; Carl A. Davis, Judge.

Action upon a surety bond brought by Boise City against the National Surety Company, as surety for the Reliance Construction Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified.

V. P. Coffin, of Boise, for appellant. S. L. Tipton, City Atty., and J. P. Pope, both of Boise, for respondent.

BUDGE, C. J. The Reliance Construction Company, of Portland, Or., between May, 1912, and June, 1913 under contract with the respondent constructed a sewer system in Boise which when completed was accepted conditionally by the city, the latter reserving the right, within a period of 12 months from date of the acceptance, upon 10 days' notice to the contractor, to require certain portions of said sewer system to be relaid or repaired. The acceptance was contained in a resolution of the city council which required the company to give a bond in the sum of $5,000 for the faithful performance of the repairs. This bond was given, with appellant as surety. The condition of the bond, so far as material, is as follows:

> "Whereas, the city council of Boise City, Idaho, on the 31st day of May, 1913, adopted Resolution No. 239 by which said sewer system was accepted conditionally to the effect that the contractor be required upon ten days' notice, within the period of twelve months, to do such further work in the relaying and repairing of said sewer system, so as to make the same acceptable to the council of said city."

On November 19, 1913, there was transmitted to the Reliance Construction Company a copy of a resolution of the city council requiring the city engineer to specify what was necessary to complete the system, and make it acceptable to the city, together with a letter from the engineer designating certain portions of the sewer as "needing to be recemented."

After this notice was duly given, the work specified in the letter was not done by the company to the satisfaction of the council, and the city performed the necessary work and brought this suit against the appellant upon the bond for reimbursement. A statement of the costs and expenses incurred by the city was in substance as follows:

1. Material		$ 298 84
2. Labor account		1,606 24
3. Salaries of salaried employés of the city during the time that they were engaged upon this work:
A. M. Ashline	$609 60
J. M. Hollister	85 35
Robert Stevenson	156 35
	$851 30	851 30
Total		$2,756 38

The case was tried before the court without a jury, and upon its findings of fact and conclusions of law judgment was rendered for the respondent in the sum of $1,536.25. From which judgment this appeal was taken. Appellant assigning the following errors:

> "(1) That the evidence relating to the item of $1,606.24, for labor is insufficient to support and does not authorize a judgment against the appellant on account of said labor in excess of 45 per cent. of said amount, or $722.81.
>
> "(2) That the evidence relating to the item of $851.30 for salaries of regular salaried employés of the city of Boise is insufficient to support and does not authorize a judgment against the appellant on account thereof in any sum of money whatever.
>
> "(3) That the evidence is insufficient to support and does not authorize a judgment against the appellant in excess of the following, to wit:

Material	$ 298 84
Labor	722 81
Total	$1,021 65"

The evidence shows that only 45 per cent. of the time and labor devoted to the work of completing the system was expended by the city upon the work specified in the notice contained in the letter from the city engineer to the Reliance Construction Company. This would reduce the labor account to the sum of $722.81. Appellant admits its liability for this amount, and for the amount specified for material, to wit, $298.84, but contends that the items totaling $851.30, included in the third subdivision of the statement above quoted, and covering salaries of salaried employés of the city during the time they were engaged upon the work, was improperly included in the expenses incurred by the city in making the repairs, and seeks to defeat the recovery of these items under the rule:

> "That a party injured by breach of contract is bound to use all reasonable means available to minimize the damage."

Appellant says in its brief:

> "Recognizing this rule, the city employed upon this work three of its regular salaried employés, and thus materially reduced the cost to it of making the repairs. We believe that this reduction in the cost to the city of doing this work should lawfully inure to the benefit of the appellant, and that therefore the salaries of these employés during the time they were engaged upon the work is not a lawful charge against appellant."

[1, 2] With this position we are not in accord. The theory upon which sums expended in an effort to minimize or mitigate damages are recoverable is that they are expended for the benefit of and in the interest of the party causing the damage. It is immaterial whether a party damaged by a breach of contract completes the work himself or employs others to complete it for him. The measure of his damages is the reasonable cost incurred in completing the work contracted to be done, according to the terms and provisions of the contract. And in this case the measure of damages would be the same whether the work was done by the employés of the city or by some third party under its direction. Newton v. Devlin, 134 Mass. 490; George A. Fuller Co. v. Doyle (C. C.) 87 Fed. 687-693; Owen v. Giles, 157 Fed. 825, 85 C. C. A. 189.

The use by the city of regularly salaried employés in completing this work and making the necessary repairs, so far as the same were included within the notice, may be likened to the situation of a party who does the necessary work in mitigation of damage himself rather than employ others to do it for him. There is no rule of law which requires one to do another's work for a less wage than would be required to employ some one else to do the same work in a like manner. The charge for salaries of these regular employés of the city was properly included as an item of expense. But, as has already been noted, according to the testimony on behalf of respondent, only 45 per cent. of the time was devoted to the work specified in the notice. Upon this basis respondent would only be entitled to include in this item 45 per cent. of the salary item, or $382.09. The sums then for which respondent was entitled to judgment are as follows:

1. Material	$ 298 84
2. Labor account	722 81
3. Salary account	383 09
Total	$1,404 74

[3] It is impossible to determine from the record or from the findings upon what theory the trial court arrived at the sum of $1,536.25, for which judgment was rendered. The findings are not specific.

The findings and judgment should be modified in accordance with the views herein expressed; and it is so ordered. Costs awarded to appellant.

MORGAN and RICE, JJ., concur.

ATCHISON, T. & S. F. RY. CO. et al. v. SUN DRILLING CO. (No. 8137.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. Jan. 23, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 6, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CARRIERS 🔑105(1)—NEGLIGENT DELAY—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In an action against a common carrier for negligent delay in the carriage and delivery of machinery intended for use, the proper measure of damages, in the absence of special notice, is the usable value of the same during the period of delay, together with such reasonable expenses as may be incurred by the owner in searching therefor in an attempt to procure the delivery thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 451, 454–457.]

2. CARRIERS 🔑186—NEGLIGENT DELAY—LIABILITY OF CONNECTING CARRIER.

The connecting carrier cannot be held liable for special damages accruing to the owner by virtue of the nondelivery of a shipment, where the notice or special instructions given by the shipper to the initial carrier have not been communicated to the connecting carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. § 790.]

3. STATES 🔑9—ADMISSION OF TERRITORY—LAW OF CONTRACTS MADE BEFORE STATEHOOD.

Where a contract of shipment arose in the Indian Territory before statehood, interest may be recovered upon the damages accruing to the shipper by reason of delay in the delivery thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Cent. Dig. § 4.]

4. CARRIERS 🔑176—NEGLIGENT DELAY—SPECIAL DAMAGES—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Before a judgment can be rendered against the initial carrier for special damages on account of its failure to communicate a notice or special instructions to the connecting carrier, there must be some evidence tending to show that its failure to communicate said notice received by it from the shipper was the immediate cause of the delay, or, in other words, the delay must be the proximate result of the failure to deliver such notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 766–774.]

5. NEGLIGENT DELAY OF CARRIER—SPECIAL DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

Evidence examined, and same held insufficient to support a claim for special damage.

Commissioners' Opinion, Division No. 3. Error from District Court, Washington County; R. H. Hudson, Judge.

Action by the Sun Drilling Company against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company and the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company. Judgment against each defendant, and they bring error. Judgment against the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company affirmed, and judgment against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company reversed, and cause remanded.

See, also, 41 Okl. 80, 135 Pac. 353, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 509.

Cottingham & Hayes and C. H. Wood, all of Oklahoma City, for plaintiff in error Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. R. A. Kleinschmidt and Fred E. Suits, all of Oklahoma City, for plaintiff in error St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. Montgomery & O'Meara, of Bartlesville, for defendant in error.

HOOKER, C. From the record here it appears that, on April 1, 1907, the Sun Drilling Company was engaged in the business of drilling oil and gas wells for hire, and that it owned certain machinery which it used for said purpose; and, in the operation of its business near Bristow, then Indian Territory, it became necessary for it to procure certain additional tools, and pending the procuring of the same it was compelled to, and did, suspend operations. That on April 1, 1907, it caused to be delivered to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company for shipment to it at Bristow certain tools and apparatus set forth in the record here, and that at the time of delivery it stated to the agent of the company at Bristow its business, and that pending the arrival of said articles at destination it was compelled to shut down its drilling outfit and suspend operations, and said articles were accepted by the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company for shipment at Bartlesville to Bristow, and thereupon it issued to the company a through bill of lading; that said articles were loaded in order that a through shipment might be made thereof to Bristow without unloading, and said articles were delivered by the Santa Fé to the Frisco at Tulsa in the forenoon on April 3, 1907; that at the time of delivery of said articles by the Santa Fé to the Frisco, no communication was made to the Frisco by the Santa Fé relative to the facts and circumstances of the shipment, the importance of their immediate delivery and the necessity for prompt shipment as had been explained by the Sun Drilling Company to the Santa Fé at the time the contract of shipment was entered into. It appears from the evidence that two days was reasonable time for transportation of the articles from Bartlesville to Bristow, but that, part of said articles arrived at Bristow about the 10th of April, 1907, and the remainder thereof arrived about the 20th or 25th of May, 1907. As a result of this delay the lower court found from the evidence that the Sun Drilling Company was compelled to cease operations for a period of 35 days, and that the reasonable usable value of the tools thus delayed was $15 a day, and thereupon rendered judgment against the Frisco for the sum of $525 and interest thereon, and likewise found that the Santa Fé was liable to the Sun Drilling Company for special damages in the sum of $675, with interest, for which judgment was rendered.

[1] This court in M., O. & G. Ry. Co. v. Hazlett & Price, 35 Okl. 12, 128 Pac. 105, said:

> "In an action against a common carrier for negligent delay in the carriage and delivery of machinery intended for use, the proper measure of damages, in the absence of special notice is the usable or rentable value of the machinery during the period of delay, together with such reasonable expenses as may be incurred by plaintiff in searching for, recovering, or in endeavoring to secure, delivery."

Likewise this court, in C., R. I. & P. R. R. Co. v. Reid, 38 Okl. 214, 132 Pac. 812, followed the above case.

These authorities define the measure of damages in the state of facts above given. This is the law in Oklahoma. The court in its finding of fact fixes the usable value of these tools at $15 a day, and the evidence introduced by the Frisco also establishes such value at $15 a day. the judgment of the court being amply supported in this record.

[2] There cannot be any contention here that the Frisco had notice of any special claim or any knowledge of any special damages would accrue to the Sun Drilling Company by reason of the delay of the delivery of these tools; hence the measure of damages against the Frisco must be confined to usable value of the tools in question during the time of the delay. This the court by its judgment did, and we cannot see any error therein.

[3] Upon the question of interest, this case arose in Indian Territory prior to statehood. and in M., K. & T. R. R. Co. v. Truskett. 104 Fed. 728, 44 C. C. A. 179, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit said:

> "It is finally claimed that an error was committed by the trial court in allowing interest on the amount of the recovery from August 3, 1892, which. as we infer, was the date when a claim for damage was preferred, and that the Court of Appeals in the Indian Territory erred in adding a penalty of 10 per cent. upon the theory that the appeal was frivolous or vexatious. Concerning the penalty that was imposed by the Court of Appeals, it is quite sufficient to say that it was incumbent on that court to award the penalty on the affirmance of the judgment below, by virtue of section 1311, Mansf. Dig. (section 813, Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899), as this court held in Railroad Co. v. Elliott [42 C. C. A. 188] 102 Fed. 96. And, concerning the allowance of interest by the trial court, it is to be observed that, as this action was brought to recover damages for a breach of the implied contract of the carrier to transport the cattle over its road with reasonable celerity, we perceive no reason why the actual loss which was sustained by the shipper as far back as July, 1892, should not bear interest from the date when the claim for damage was preferred. Nothing short of the actual amount of such loss, and interest thereon from the time it was demanded, will fully compensate the shipper for the breach of the agreement, and he is entitled to full compensation. In an action against a common carrier for failure to transport property in accordance with its contract, the general rule is to allow as damages the value of the property, with interest upon such value from the time when it should have been delivered, if it is not delivered at all. Railroad Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 599, 622, 13 Sup. Ct. 444, 37 L. Ed. 292, and cases there cited. When the property is delivered by the carrier, but a loss has ensued to the shipper from a failure to deliver it within a reasonable time, no reason is perceived why interest on the amount of the loss may not also be allowed from the time compensation for the loss is demanded. In actions of pure tort, which do not sound in contract, as where the property of a third party is destroyed or injured through the negligence of a carrier, the usual practice is, as this court said in Eddy v. Lafayette, 4 U. S. App. 247, 252, 1 C. C. A. 441, 49 Fed. 807, to leave the allowance of interest on the damages which may be assessed to the sound discretion of the jury. But, as the case at bar is founded upon a breach of contract, it may well be distinguished from the case last cited."

This case was later affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in 186 U. S. 480, 22 Sup. Ct. 943, 46 L. Ed. 1259.

Under the authority above cited, the judgment here giving to the defendant in error interest upon its claim for damages must be affirmed.

[4, 5] This case has been before this court on a former appeal (41 Okl. 80, 135 Pac. 353. 48 L. R. A. [N. S.] 509), wherein it was held:

> "In an action against both the initial and terminal carrier for damages caused by negligent delay, although the initial carrier has notice of the importance of prompt delivery, and that loss of profits would result from delay, where all the delay is shown to have been on the terminal line, then, in the absence of statute or contract to such effect, the initial carrier will not be held liable for any of the damages resulting, although it may have failed to deliver such special notice, unless it appears that such delay was the proximate result of the failure to deliver such notice. Damages, to be recoverable for negligence, must appear to be the proximate result of the negligence shown, and the question as to what is the proximate cause of an injury, or what is the immediate or proximate result of a given act, is generally one of fact for the jury. In an action against two carriers for damages, where it appears that each has been guilty of separate acts of negligence, and that plaintiff has sustained damages, but there is an issue of fact as to which carrier's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, and where such fact can be determined only from the evidence and circumstances of the case, an instruction which takes such fact from the jury is erroneous."

Such is the law of this case, and before judgment can be rendered against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company for special damages, there must be some evidence tending to show that its failure to give to the terminal carrier notice of the special instructions received by it from the shipper was the immediate cause of the delay. In other words, the delay must be the proximate result of the failure to deliver such notice. This the evidence does not show. While it is true that the question as to what is the proximate cause of an injury or the proximate result of a given act is one for the jury, yet, before a jury or court can properly decide such question, there must be some evidence to support the verdict or finding.

As we view the record, there is in this case no evidence whatever to show that the failure of the Santa Fé to deliver the notice to the Frisco was the proximate cause of the delay, nor is there any evidence here establishing the claims of special damage, and in our opinion the judgment against the Santa Fé must be reversed.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment here as to the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Company be affirmed, and that as to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railway Company be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial consistent with the facts herein expressed.

PER CURIAM. Adopted in whole.

REIRDON v. MORRISON. (No. 6515.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. May 8, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 12, 1917).

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE 🔑166(5) — DISMISSAL OF APPEAL—EFFECT.

"Where a judgment is rendered by a justice court, said judgment appealed to the county court and said appeal dismissed, the judgment of the Justice Court becomes res judicata."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 645.]

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE 🔑166(5)—DISMISSAL OF APPEAL — RESTORATION OF JUDGMENT.

"Where an appeal is perfected from a judgment rendered by a justice court to the county court, and said appeal dismissed, the judgment rendered by the justice court is restored as if no appeal had been taken."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Justices of the Peace, Cent. Dig. § 645.]

Commissioners' Opinion, Division No. 1. Error from District Court, Marshall County; Jesse M. Hatchett, Judge.

Action by J. P. Reirdon against W. S. Morrison. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Rider & Hurt, of Madill, for plaintiff in error. Geo. S. March, of Madill, for defendant in error.

COLLIER, C. This is an action brought by plaintiff in error against the defendant in error on a money demand. Hereinafter the parties will be designated as they were in the trial court.

This action was brought in a justice court and resulted in a judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $80.15. Garnishment proceedings were instituted, and the garnishee answered that he was indebted to the defendant in the sum of $33, which said sum the garnishee paid into court and was discharged. The defendant filed in said justice court his affidavit, in compliance with the statutes, claiming said $33 as exempt to him, and moved that the said $33 be delivered to him, which motion was tried by the court, and judgment rendered in favor of the defendant. From said judgment the plaintiff perfected an appeal to the county court of Marshall county, in which said court a motion to dismiss said appeal was filed, heard, and said appeal dismissed, and time fixed in which to settle and sign case-made, but an appeal to this court was not perfected. After the expiration of the time for perfecting an appeal to this court the clerk of the county court certified back to the justice court the order of the county court dismissing the said appeal.

Prior to the expiration of the 20 days given plaintiff in which to appeal to this court, the plaintiff had another garnishment summons issued to the original garnishee and to the justice with whom said fund had been deposited, seeking to reach said fund which had theretofore been adjudged to the defendant as his exempt earnings. The justice who originally tried the case having been succeeded in office by another justice of the peace, to whom the retiring justice delivered $27.33 of said $33, deposited in court by the garnishee, the successor of said justice being the father-in-law of the plaintiff, disqualified himself, and the plaintiff and defendant in open court agreed that William M. Franklin might hear said cause and make all orders of said court. Upon the hearing of said garnishment proceedings the same was dismissed at the cost of the plaintiff. Motion was then made by the plaintiff to require the said $27.33 to be turned over and credited on said judgment, which motion was heard by said William M. Franklin, who found for the defendant, which judgment "was O. K.'d and made a judgment of the court." From said judgment for the defendant the plaintiff perfected an appeal to the district court of Marshall county, Okl., and said $27.33, together with a transcript of the proceedings in the justice court, was filed with the clerk of the district court. The motion of the plaintiff, to subject the fund now in the hands of the district clerk of said court to a partial payment of the judgment rendered by the justice of the peace against said defendant was heard by said district court, and the motion overruled, and duly excepted to. Within statutory time the plaintiff filed his motion for new trial, which was overruled, duly excepted to, and this appeal perfected to this court.

The only error assigned and argued in the brief of plaintiff is that the judgment of the district court is contrary to law.

[1] It having been adjudged by the justice court that the amount sought to be reached by garnishment was not subject to the payment of the judgment rendered in this cause, and the said judgment of the justice having been appealed to the county court, and appeal dismissed in said court, and said dismissal duly certified to the justice court, the judgment of said justice court finding said money paid into court by the garnishee was exempt to the defendant became res judicata, and the justice court was without authority of law to issue the second garnishment for said money, or to entertain the motion to apply the money to the payment of said judgment. The appeal from the action of the justice court in refusing to apply the money to the payment of the judgment rendered to the district court was without merit, and the district court did not err in denying the motion made therein to have the money which had subsequently come into the hands of the clerk of said court applied to the payment of said judgment. In short, all of the proceedings of the plaintiff in the cause subsequent to the dismissal of the appeal in the county court, and the certification of the clerk of the county court to the justice court of such dismissal, were without authority of law. Section 5469, Revised Laws of Oklahoma 1910.

A judgment of the justice of the peace court in a case where the jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter appears from the face of the proceedings, after the time for taking an appeal has passed, and no appeal taken from said judgment, such judgment is for every purpose as binding and conclusive between the parties as that of the highest court of the state. Black on Judgments, vol. 2, § 522, and authorities there cited.

[2] A final and effectual dismissal of an appeal from a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace court restores the judgment of the justice of the peace court, as if no appeal had been taken. 24 Cyc. 716e, and authorities there cited.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

PER CURIAM. Adopted in whole.

NATIONAL SURETY CO. et al. v. S. H. HANSON BUILDERS' SUPPLY CO. et al. (No. 6876.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. May 15, 1917. Concurring Opinion, May 29, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 12, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. COURTS 🔑1—"JURISDICTION" — DEFINITION.

"Jurisdiction" is the power to hear and determine the subject-matter in controversy between the parties to an action or in a statutory proceeding; to adjudicate or exercise any judicial power over them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Courts, Cent. Dig. §§ 1–4, 6–9, 91–106.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Jurisdiction.]

2. JUDGMENT 🔑342(1)—VACATION — POWER OF TRIAL COURT.

Where the trial court, having jurisdiction both of the parties and the subject-matter, regularly renders a judgment, it is without power, after the expiration of the term, to set such judgment aside because of an error made in its rendition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 668.]

3. JUDGMENT 🔑660—CONCLUSIVENESS—MISTAKE OF FACT.

A judgment is no less conclusive because it is based upon a mistake of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1171.]

Error from District Court, Oklahoma County; George W. Clark, Judge.

Motions by the National Surety Company, W. A. Jones, and Will Dye to set aside a judgment rendered in a consolidated case entitled "S. H. Hanson Builders' Supply Company and Others v. School District No. 70, Oklahoma County, and Others." Motions denied, and movants bring error. Affirmed.

William F. Robertson, of Dallas, Tex., Carlisle & Edwards and Charles West, all of Oklahoma City, and H. H. Hagan, of Tulsa, for plaintiffs in error. Stuart & Cruce, John H. Halley, Keaton, Wells & Johnston, John A. Maupin, and Everest & Campbell, all of Oklahoma City, for defendants in error.

SHARP, C. J. October 11, 1911, in consolidated case, S. H. Hanson Builders' Supply Co. et al. v. School District No. 70, Oklahoma County, et al., personal judgment was rendered against W. A. Jones, contractor, one of the defendants in said action, in favor of the plaintiff company, and also in favor of other creditors of said contractor, who were parties to said action. The judgment declared a lien upon the school building of the district, and directed and commanded that the officers of the school district levy a tax in the manner provided by law for the payment of the sums found due by the contractor. The amount of the several judgments against Jones, and for which the liens were decreed, approximated $3,569.01. On the 23d day of July, 1912, the school district commenced its action against the National Surety Company on the contractor's bond given by Jones in favor of the school district on October 8, 1909. On December 5, 1912, the National Surety Company filed in the consolidated case, in which judgment had previously been rendered on October 11, 1911, its motion wherein it asked that the judgment of the latter date, in so far as it was adjudged and decreed by the court that the creditors of Jones had valid and subsisting liens upon the property of the school district to secure the payment of their respective judgments, and that a tax be levied upon the property subject to taxation within the district for the purpose of discharging said judgments, be canceled, annulled, and held for naught, on the ground that the judgment, in respects indicated, was against public policy, illegal, and void. On December 20, 1912, W. A. Jones, the defendant against whom personal judgments were rendered in said consolidated case, also filed in said case his motion to vacate and set aside the judgment, in so far as the same attempted to fix a lien upon the property of the school district, and to enjoin upon the officers thereof the levy of a tax in payment of the same. On January 17, 1913, Will Dye, a resident taxpayer of said district, filed in said action his motion to vacate and set aside that portion of the judgment already indicated in the motions of the other movants. From the judgment denying these motions, the movants therein seek a reversal by proceedings in error instituted in this court.

[1, 2] The only point relied upon at this time is that, as a mechanic's or materialman's lien cannot attach upon the public buildings of the state, or the subdivisions thereof, since such liens are contrary to public policy, the judgment declaring such lien is a mere nullity, and under section 7274, Rev. Laws 1910, may be set aside at any time on motion of a party or any person affected thereby. Assuming that each of the parties have such interest, or are so affected as to entitle them to prosecute the proceedings in the manner employed, the case presents the single issue of whether in fact the original judgment was void, or simply erroneous. No appeal was taken from the judgment in which the liens were adjudged, and which was subsequently attempted to be set aside by the surety company, Jones, and Dye. No claim is made that the court did not have jurisdiction of the parties or of the subject-matter, but it is said, as we understand, that the court did not have power to render the judgment that it did, whereby a public building was charged with a lien and an order made directing that a tax be levied in satisfaction thereof. This position is obviously erroneous, as it in effect concedes that, had the court rendered judgment denying the lien, it would be valid; in other words, that the power of a court of general jurisdiction to render a judgment in a class of actions, in which it has jurisdiction both of the parties and subject-matter, is dependent upon the character of relief granted, or in whose favor the judgment is entered. We know of no authorities sustaining this view of the law. The fact that the trial court, in view of the subsequent decision of this court in Hutchinson v. Krueger, 34 Okl. 23, 124 Pac. 591, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 315, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 98, erroneously rendered a judgment decreeing a lien upon the school building of the school district, does not make the judgment void. This, in principle, we decided in Parmenter v. Ray, County Judge, 158 Pac. 1183, where it was held that errors of law in making an order should not be confounded with the power of the court to make the order; that the latter only involved the jurisdiction—the former the exercise of jurisdiction. There we further said, quoting from Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 718, 9 L. Ed. 1233:

> "Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine the subject-matter in controversy between parties to the suit, to adjudicate or exercise any judicial power over them. The question is whether on the case before the court their action is judicial or extrajudicial; with or without authority of law to render judgment or decree upon the rights of the litigant parties. If the law confers the power to render judgment or decree, then the court has jurisdiction."

Also that the jurisdiction of the court can never depend upon its decision upon the merits of the case brought before it, but upon its right to hear and decide it at all. At the time that the court rendered the judgment complained of, this court had never passed upon the question of the right to enforce a materialman's lien upon a public building. The Supreme Court of Kansas, from which state our lien laws in the main were taken, had sustained the right to impose such liens, as is shown by Judge Brewer in his able opinion in Hutchinson v. Krueger, supra. The question for decision under the issues joined in the consolidated case was whether this court would follow the decisions of the Supreme Court of Kansas, or the rule that very generally prevailed in other jurisdictions, denying the right of materialmen to a lien on a public building. This was all. In the view adopted by this court in Hutchinson v. Krueger, had an appeal been prosecuted from the judgment of the district court to the Supreme Court, the judgment afterwards complained of would doubtless have been set aside, and the cause reversed. This was not done, and it will not do to say that, for the reasons urged, either a defendant in said suit, or a taxpayer of the district, or the surety on the contractor's bond, may, long after adjournment of the term, by motion procure either the vacation or modification of the judgment. The law points out the manner by which errors of law may be corrected. A wrong determination of the issues based upon a mistake of law, after final judgment has been rendered, can only be remedied and corrected on appeal; otherwise, there would be no end to litigation.

[3] A mistake of law on the part of the trial court affords no ground for the vacation of a judgment in the manner here attempted. The authorities sustaining this view are numerous, and, so far as we know, unanimous. Among them are People ex rel. Davis et al. v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 263, 59 Am. Dec. 536; Fisher v. Hepburn, 48 N. Y. 41; Martindale v. Battey, 73 Kan. 92, 84 Pac. 527; People v. Holladay, 93 Cal. 241, 29 Pac. 54, 27 Am. St. Rep. 186; People ex rel. Raymond v. Talmadge, 194 Ill. 67, 61 N. E. 1049; Elliott et al. v. Piersol, 1 Pet. 328, 7 L. Ed. 164; Ex parte Watkins, 7 Pet. 568, 8 L. Ed. 786; Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Pet. 498, 10 L. Ed. 264; Ex parte Bigelow, 113 U. S. 328, 5 Sup. Ct. 542, 28 L. Ed. 1005; American Express Co. v. Mullins, 212 U. S. 311, 29 Sup. Ct. 381, 53 L. Ed. 525, 15 Ann. Cas. 536. As stated in the latter case:

> "A judgment is conclusive as to all the media concludendi (U. S. v. California, etc., Land Co., 192 U. S. 355 [24 Sup. Ct. 266] 48 L. Ed. 476); and it needs no authority to show that it cannot be impeached, either in or out of the state, by showing that it was based upon a mistake of the law."

The rights of the creditors in whose favor liens were adjudged to enforce them, not being involved in the present inquiry, are not decided.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

HARDY, TURNER, THACKER, and KANE, JJ., concur.

THACKER, J. In concurring in the decision and opinion of the court in this case, where the erroneous judicial decision in question did not necessarily involve nor appear to involve any element of an attempted exercise of executive or legislative power, but was wholly within the domain of judicial power, I do not think I am out of accord with the decision or with any statements made in the opinion in the case of Roth v. Union National Bank of Bartlesville, 160 Pac. 505, where the erroneous decision in question necessarily involved an attempted exercise of the legislative power to suspend or nullify the operation of unquestionably valid statutes, and thus included basic elements beyond the domain of judicial power, since the statutes in question were unambiguous and not open to construction in respect to the questions involved in that decision.

HADDOCK v. STICELBER & MONG.

(No. 7882.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. May 8, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 12, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Statutory Definition — "Consideration for Promise."

"Any benefit conferred or agreed to be conferred upon the promisor by any other person to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Consideration.]

2. Release 🔑13(5)—Consideration—Agreement.

Plaintiffs contracted with defendant and another to drill an oil and gas well to the shallow sand, and when, in the performance of such contract, the shallow sand was reached, the work on the well was stopped, and it was then agreed by plaintiffs and defendant that defendant would employ plaintiffs to drill such well deeper, and pay them therefor at the rate of 90 cents per foot, and that the plaintiffs would do such additional drilling and would release the defendant from liability for payment of the sum of $400, that being one-half of the sum due them for the former drilling, and look alone to the other for the payment of such sum. Held, that the agreement of the defendant to employ plaintiffs to do such additional drilling and to pay them therefor was sufficient consideration to support the promise of plaintiffs to release defendant from the payment of the said sum of $400.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Release, Cent. Dig. § 26.]

3. Trial 🔑142 — Directed Verdict — Evidence.

It is error to direct a verdict for the plaintiffs where, admitting the truth of all the evidence given in favor of defendant, together with such inferences and conclusions as may be reasonably drawn therefrom, there is enough competent evidence to reasonably sustain a verdict should the jury find for the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 337.]

Commissioners' Opinion, Division No. 1. Error from District Court, Rogers County; W. J. Campbell, Judge.

Action by Sticelber & Mong against John Haddock. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Reversed, and remanded for a new trial.

Adams & Wills, of Claremore, for plaintiff in error. Victor C. Mieher, of Tulsa, and A. C. Hough, of Oklahoma City, for defendants in error.

RUMMONS, C. This action was commenced in the district court of Rogers county by the defendants in error, hereinafter called plaintiffs, against the plaintiff in error, hereinafter called the defendant, to recover the sum of $1,118 for work and material furnished in drilling an oil and gas well and to foreclose a lien upon certain real estate in Rogers county to satisfy said debt. The defendant answered, admitting that the plaintiffs entered into parol contract with the defendant and the Westerly Oil Company and P. F. Daulgren to drill a well upon the premises described in the petition, one-half of the cost of the drilling said well to be paid by the Westerly Oil Company and P. F. Daulgren, and one-half by the defendant. Defendant further alleges that, when the well was drilled to the depth of 900 feet, the Westerly Oil Company and P. F. Daulgren ordered drilling stopped and declared the well to be a dry hole, at which time the defendant entered into an agreement with the plaintiffs that, if they would collect one-half of the amount due them for drilling said well 900 feet from the Westerly Oil Company and P. F. Daulgren, the defendant would enter into a new contract with plaintiffs for the drilling of said well to a greater depth, at which time the Westerly Oil Company and P. F. Daulgren agreed to pay plaintiffs the sum of $400 of the cost price of drilling said well to a depth of 900 feet, and the plaintiffs agreed to accept said Westerly Oil Company and P. F. Daulgren for said sum of $400, and defendant agreed to pay the balance of $410 for drilling said well. Defendant further alleged that upon the agreement aforesaid the defendant entered into a new contract with the plaintiffs by which he agreed to pay them the sum of 90 cents a foot to drill said well deeper until further orders from him, and alleges that at the depth of 1,220 feet he ordered plaintiffs to stop drilling after they had struck a gas well. Defendant admits that he is indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $410 under the original contract and the sum of $288 on the last contract and the sum of $20 for tubing, making a total of $718, and alleges payment thereon of the sum of $98, and tenders plaintiffs the sum of $620. Plaintiffs replied, denying generally each allegation contained in the answer, and admitting the payment by defendant of $98.

Defendant, as a witness in his own behalf, testified in substance that he and P. F. Daulgren, of the Westerly Oil Company, and Mr. Mong, one of the plaintiffs, had several conversations about drilling an oil and gas well, and that it was finally agreed between them that the plaintiffs should drill a well upon the premises of defendant to the shallow sand or about 900 feet in depth, and that the price for drilling said well should be 90 cents per foot, and that in the event they struck oil or gas the defendant should pay plaintiffs the amount due for drilling said well, and that in the event they had a dry hole and no oil or gas was struck defendant should pay plaintiffs one half of the drilling bill and Mr. Daulgren the other half; that, after plaintiffs had drilled the well to the depth of 900 feet, or to the shallow sand, Mr. Daulgren was unwilling to go any further and declared the well to be a dry hole. Defendant was anxious to drill to a greater depth, and proposed to the plaintiff Mong to settle up for the drilling of the well to the depth of 900 feet, defendant to pay $410, and plaintiffs to collect $400 from Mr. Daulgren, and proposed to enter into a new contract with the plaintiffs, upon such settlement being made, to drill to a greater depth at the price of 90 cents a foot. Defendant says that, when he told Mr. Mong that Mr. Daulgren said stop, Mr. Mong said it was all off and they would stop, and that upon his proposal to Mr. Mong that the plaintiffs take Mr. Daulgren for $400 of the bill and look to him for only $410 thereof and enter into a new contract for drilling the well further Mr. Mong proposed to talk to Mr. Daulgren over the telephone. Defendant and Mr. Mong went to defendant's house, and Mr. Mong talked with Daulgren over the telephone in the presence of defendant. After the conversation between Mong and Daulgren Mong told defendant that Daulgren agreed to pay the plaintiffs $400, and that plaintiffs would agree to take Daulgren for the $400; that the plaintiffs then continued to drill to an additional depth of 320 feet, when they struck gas. At the conclusion of the evidence plaintiffs demurred to the evidence of the defendant, which demurrer was sustained by the court, and the jury was instructed by the court to render a verdict for the plaintiffs against the defendant. The defendant, having saved proper exceptions to the sustaining of the demurrer and direction of the verdict, moved for a new trial, which motion was overruled. The defendant excepted, and brings error.

Under several assignments of error the defendant complains of the action of the trial court in sustaining the demurrer to his evidence and directing a verdict for the plaintiffs. From a reading of the briefs of both counsel for plaintiffs and defendant it seems that the trial court took the view that the defendant rested his defense upon a novation, but that his evidence failed to establish a valid contract of novation, and therefore plaintiffs were entitled to recover. We have reached the conclusion that the case of defendant does not depend alone upon the principles applicable to a contract of novation. The evidence of defendant, which for the purposes of this opinion may be taken as true, shows that plaintiffs and defendant and P. F. Daulgren entered into an agreement for the drilling of the well by plaintiffs and for the payment for such drilling in one contingency by defendant, and in another contingency for the payment of one-half by the defendant and one-half by P. F. Daulgren; that the latter contingency arose, and the defendant and P. F. Daulgren each became liable to plaintiffs for the cost of drilling the well. Defendant says in his testimony:

> "I have told you it was fairly understood that this agreement was a partnership matter for 900 feet, and there we had an agreement and he accepted the $400 from Mr. Daulgren and left me $410, and I would not go further until that agreement was made, because I did not think we had any necessity for having a dry hole and I was not willing to quit my part of it. I was willing to bet a little more money; if he quit and got out, and he went on down, I was willing to take my chances. It is fair enough to dissolve partnership when you quit."

It thus appears that the parties to this agreement understood that the defendant and P. F. Daulgren were partners in drilling this test well; that in the event the test developed a paying well the defendant, receiving the benefit, was to pay the whole of the cost of drilling; in the event it did not each was to pay one-half of the cost of drilling. The well at the depth to which it was agreed to drill produced nothing, and the defendant and P. F. Daulgren became liable to contribute to the payment of the cost of drilling the well. The defendant then proposed to the plaintiff to employ them to drill deeper if they would agree to look alone to P. F. Daulgren for the payment of half of the cost of drilling to the shallow sand. The plaintiffs advised defendant that Daulgren had agreed to pay the sum of $400 of the amount due for drilling, and told defendant that they would accept him for this amount and look to defendant for the balance of $410 and in consideration thereof the defendant employed the plaintiffs to continue the drilling, and they did so continue until at a depth of 1,220 feet they struck gas. It is urged by plaintiffs that the defendant's evidence fails to establish a novation, in that it does not appear that the three parties ever met and agreed that defendant should be released to the extent of $400, and that Daulgren should be released to the extent of $410, and that plaintiffs would look to Daulgren for the sum of $400. It is further urged by plaintiffs that the evidence does not disclose any consideration to support the agreement to release the defendant to the extent of $400.

We do not believe that this transaction falls within the principles applicable to a novation, for under the contract related by defendant in his testimony either the defendant and Daulgren were liable to plaintiffs as partners, and each therefore liable for the full amount of the debt, or they were each liable individually for one-half of the costs of the drilling, and no more. Upon the latter hypothesis the defendant is not liable to the plaintiffs for any sum greater than he tendered to them. Upon the former hypothesis it was clearly competent for the plaintiffs upon a sufficient consideration to release the defendant from one-half of his liability to them. It therefore does not matter whether or not Daulgren ever consented to the agreement which defendant said was subsequently entered into between him and the plaintiffs or whether or not Daulgren ever agreed after the well had been drilled to 900 feet to pay plaintiffs $400 of the drilling bill. Plaintiffs agreed to look to him for that sum and to release the defendant from that amount of liability.

[1, 2] The only question necessary to determine in this case is whether the evidence of the defendant discloses a sufficient consideration for such release by the plaintiffs. We think it does. When plaintiffs had drilled to the shallow sand and work was stopped and the well declared to be a dry hole the defendant was under no obligation to employ them any further. He, however, proposed to them that, if they would release him to the extent of $400 and look alone to Daulgren for that amount, he would employ them to drill further, and obligated himself to pay for such drilling at the rate of 90 cents a foot. It is argued by counsel for plaintiffs that the 90 cents a foot agreed to be paid by the defendant for the additional drilling was a consideration for such drilling alone, and that the additional drilling was the consideration for defendant's promise to pay, and therefore there remained no consideration for the promise of plaintiffs to release defendant to the extent of $400. We are unable to see the force of this reasoning. The plaintiffs were under no obligation to drill further upon the terms proposed by defendant and whether the price agreed to be paid by defendant for such drilling was profitable to the plaintiffs or not is entirely immaterial; the plaintiffs were at liberty to either accept or reject the proposal made by the defendant, and they were bound to accept it or reject it in all of its terms. They saw fit to accept the proposition made by the defendant, which embraced not only the additional drilling, but also the release of defendant from the payment of $400. The promise of defendant to pay for the additional drilling was sufficient consideration for the entire contract. Section 926, R. L. 1910, defines consideration as:

> "Any benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered or agreed to be suffered by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise."

The promise made by the defendant is clearly a good consideration within the terms of said section. The plaintiffs received the benefit of doing the additional drilling to which they were not lawfully entitled, and the defendant agreed to suffer the prejudice of paying therefor which he was not lawfully bound to suffer at the time of making the promise. We therefore conclude that the agreement entered into between plaintiffs and defendant for the additional drilling and for the release of defendant for the payment of the sum of $400 was supported by a sufficient consideration.

[3] This case having been determined upon a demurrer to the evidence of the defendant and upon a directed verdict, all facts and inferences in conflict with the evidence of the defendant must be eliminated entirely from consideration and entirely disregarded. In determining whether or not the trial court erred in directing a verdict we must consider only the evidence of the defendant and the inferences and conclusions to be drawn therefrom. Moore v. First National Bank, 30 Okl. 623, 121 Pac. 626, and cases there cited. We think that the evidence of the defendant so considered left a question to be determined by the jury. The trial court therefore erred in sustaining a demurrer to the evidence offered by defendant and in directing a verdict for plaintiff.

The judgment of the trial court should therefore be reversed, and this cause remanded for a new trial.

PER CURIAM. Adopted in whole.

MANGELSDORF BROS. CO. v. KOLP et al. (No. 5032.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. May 1, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 6, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SALES ⇐218½—PASSING OF TITLE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where the question as to when title to personal property sold passed is in dispute, it is governed by the intention of the parties, and is generally a question of fact for the jury, under proper instructions; and should be taken from the jury only in cases where there is but one conclusion deducible from the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Sales, Cent. Dig. §§ 586, 587.]

2. EVIDENCE ⇐271(9)—SELF-SERVING ACTS—SUIT.

Where the vendee of personal property refuses to settle for the property purchased, but not actually delivered, and the vendor sues him for the purchase price, on the theory that though not delivered, title had passed, held, that the vendor cannot prove that after the vendee refused to settle for the property, he attached it as the property of the vendee; for the reason that the suit in attachment was the act of the vendor, not the vendee, and the vendee can in no way be bound by it. The vendee is bound by his own words and acts, but to permit the vendor to profit by his own independent act after the controversy had arisen would be, in effect, to countenance self-serving conduct, which the law will not permit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1078.]

Error from District Court, Oklahoma County; W. R. Taylor, Judge.

Action by the Mangelsdorf Bros. Company, a corporation, against E. R. Kolp and D. C. Kolp, copartners. Demurrer to plaintiff's evidence sustained, and judgment against plaintiff for costs, and it brings error. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Z. E. Jackson, of Atchison, Kan., and Ames, Chambers, Lowe & Richardson, of Oklahoma City, for plaintiff in error. Warren K. Snyder and Oliver C. Black, both of Oklahoma City, for defendants in error.

BRETT, J. This action was commenced in the district court of Oklahoma county by the plaintiff in error, a corporation, hereinafter called plaintiff, against the defendants in error, a copartnership, hereinafter called defendants, to recover the purchase price of two orders of cane seed, sold by plaintiff to the defendants, but never actually delivered, and for certain charges for the storage and insurance on these seed, and also some charges for turning or stirring the seed to prevent them from becoming heated while in the plaintiff's elevator. The plaintiff sued upon the theory that it had sold the seed to the defendants; that the contract of sale was an executed contract; that title had passed; that the defendants were the owners of the seed; and that plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover the contract price of the seed under section 2862, Revised Laws 1910, which provides:

> "The detriment caused by the breach of a buyer's agreement to accept and pay for personal property, the title to which is vested in him, is deemed to be the contract price."

While the defendants contended that the contract of the sale was only executory, that title had not passed, and that their liability, if any, was not the purchase price, but was fixed by section 2863, Revised Laws 1910, which provides:

> "The detriment caused by the breach of a buyer's agreement to accept and pay for personal property, the title to which is not vested in him, is deemed to be:
>
> "First. If the property has been resold, pursuant to section 3850, the excess, if any, of the amount due from the buyer, under the contract, over the net proceeds of the resale; or.
>
> "Second. If the property has not been resold in the manner prescribed by section 3850, the excess, if any, of the amount due from the buyer, under the contract over the value to the seller, together with the excess, if any, of the expenses properly incurred in carrying the property to market, over those which would have been incurred for the carriage thereof, if the buyer had accepted it."

At the close of the plaintiff's evidence the the defendants demurred to the evidence, urging especially that the evidence failed to show that the contract of sale was executed, and that title had passed, but that, on the contrary, the evidence showed the contract to be executory, and that title had not passed, and the plaintiff was therefore not entitled to recover under its pleadings in this action. The demurrer was sustained, the jury discharged, and judgment rendered by the court against the plaintiff for the costs.

The principal question presented by this appeal is whether under the evidence the trial court erred in holding that the contract was executory; that title had not passed, and that the evidence therefore wholly failed to sustain the plaintiff's claim. The evidence is voluminous, and we will not undertake to go into a detailed statement of it, but will set out only such parts as are essential to a correct determination of the intention of the parties to this transaction. For, after all, the intention of the parties as to whether or not title should pass must, in this case, determine their legal status. The seed were purchased of the plaintiff by the defendants through the Merchants' Cheese & Brokerage Co., of Ft. Worth, Tex. The negotiations between the brokerage company and the defendants were oral, and plaintiff asked through the brokerage company that the sale be confirmed in writing, which request was communicated to the defendants by the brokerage company; and in response to this request the defendants replied by letter as follows:

> "Ft. Worth, Texas, Jan. 20, 1909.
>
> "Merchants' Cheese & Brokerage Co., Ft. Worth, Texas—Gentlemen: Answering your letter Jan. 19th, we find that we have purchased through you from Mangelsdorf Bros. Co. the following seeds:
>
> Jan. 5th. 70,000# recleaned amber, at $2.72½ cwt.
> 20,000# recleaned orange, at $2.72½ cwt.
> Delivered Group I our option.
> Jan. 7th. 70,000# recleaned amber, at $2.72½ cwt.
> 20,000# recleaned orange, at $2.72½ cwt.
> First half February shipment, shippers' option.
>
> "All of above seeds to be recleaned, sacked in heavy new bags and delivered basis Group I, destination weights to be guaranteed by shipper and seeds to be true to name and to be bright, sound and sweet. We trust this is what Messrs. Mangelsdorf want and you may submit it to them with our approval.
>
> "Yours very truly, E. R. and D. C. Kolp."

There is no contention on the part of the defendants that the plaintiff did not have the kind, character, and quality of seed specified in their letter of confirmation with which to fill their two orders. But the defendants who purchased the seed to sell to their customers were unable to sell them as readily as they had expected; and in response to urgent requests on the part of plaintiff that they move the seed, for the reason that the plaintiff's warehouse and elevator were crowded, defendants wired the plaintiff asking:

> "At what price can you sell for our account enough seed to relieve present congestion?"

In response to this the plaintiff, by wire, quoted a price at which they could sell a portion of the seed. To this the defendants replied:

> "We received your telegram this morning stating that you could sell 40,000# orange at $2.25, 50,000# amber at $2.20. We have not replied as this is at least 25c per cwt. under quotations from Kansas City, and we would rather pay you a little storage charges than to accept such ruinous prices at this time. You will understand our silence to mean that we do not care to sell at the above prices."

The plaintiff then wrote defendants, "We are paying storage on some of our own seed, crowded out of our warehouse by the seed we are holding for you," and stated that unless they could move the seed at once, they would have to pay storage on same. To which the defendants replied:

> "Your letter Feb. 22nd received. We wrote you yesterday in reference to selling cane seed at $2.25 and $2.20 respectively. We are working on this matter and have a man out all the time. Just as soon as there is any trade, we will commence ordering this seed forward. Until then we must ask you to favor us by holding same. We will pay you a reasonable charge for storage, if you desire, upon it, but 1½c per bushel for the first month is unreasonable. We presume we will have no difficulty in agreeing upon a reasonable basis of storage when this matter comes up to be settled.
>
> "Hoping we can give you shipping instructions in a very short time, we remain,
>
> "Yours very truly, E. R. & D. C. Kolp."

This is the trend of a long correspondence between the parties, involving numerous letters and telegrams; until June 18th, when the defendants say, "We doubt very much if any liability will attach to us;" and from then on they deny liability, but seek to compromise the matter; but the offer of compromise was refused by the plaintiff.

[1] Both the plaintiff and the defendants in their briefs cite and quote from many reported cases in support of their respective positions; the one to show that the contract was executed, and the other that it was executory. But it must be borne in mind that each of the cases cited rests upon a state of facts peculiar to itself. And besides, the principal question we are called upon to determine in the case at bar is whether or not there was any evidence reasonably tending to sustain the plaintiff's contention that this was an executed contract, and that title had passed. If there was, then it was the duty of the court to have submitted this evidence to the jury. In Kirkham v. Fullerton et al., 32 Okl. 461, 122 Pac. 652, in discussing the question now under consideration, it is said:

> "In contracts of this nature, when the dispute is between the parties to it, and no rights of other persons are involved, the question of the intention of the parties as to whether title to the property passed at the time of making the contract is often a controlling one, and is ordinarily a question for the jury. Haines v. McKinnon, 35 Or. 573, 57 Pac. 903; Sewell v. Eaton, 6 Wis. 490, 70 Am. Dec. 471; Barber v. Thomas, 66 Kan. 463, 71 Pac. 845; Rosenthal v. Kahn, 19 Or. 571, 24 Pac. 991; Ober v. Carson, 62 Mo. 213; Fletcher v. Ingram, 46 Wis. 191, 50 N. W. 424; Memory v. Niepert, 131 Ill. 623, 23 N. E. 431; Bill v. Fuller, 146 Cal. 50, 79 Pac. 592."

And we think it is the general rule that where the question as to when the title to personal property sold passed is in dispute, it is governed by the intention of the parties, and if there be any doubt as to what their intention was, it is a question of fact for the jury under proper instructions. Clark v. Shannon & Mott Co., 117 Iowa, 645, 91 N. W. 923; Carlson v. Crescent W. & B. Mfg. Co., 20 Idaho, 794, 120 Pac. 460; Johnson

v. Tabor, 101 Miss. 78, 57 South. 365; Cook & Laurie C. Co. v. Bell, 177 Ala. 618, 59 South. 273; Wesco Supply Co. v. Town of Allerton, 156 Iowa, 695, 137 N. W. 1046; Kendrick v. Hochradel, 167 Mich. 179, 132 N. W. 521; Seldomridge v. F. & M. Bank, 87 Neb. 531, 127 N. W. 871, 130 N. W. 848, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 337; Hoffman v. Gosline, 172 Fed. 113, 96 C. C. A. 318; Idaho Implement Co. v. Lambach, 16 Idaho, 497, 101 Pac. 951. In Carlson v. Crescent Woodenware & Box Mfg. Co., above cited, it is held:

> "The question of when the title to personal property passes on sale thereof will be governed by the intention of the parties, and is a question for the jury, under proper instructions."

In Idaho Implement Co. v. Lambach, supra, it is held:

> "In determining the question as to whether the title has or has not passed by the contract, the primary and first consideration is the intention and understanding of the parties as gathered from the contract and the circumstances surrounding the sale. If, under all the evidence, different minds might honestly reach different conclusions as to whether the sale was completed or merely an executory agreement to sell, then the question is one of fact, and should be left to the jury."

In Seldomridge v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank et al., supra, it is held:

> "Where a specified quantity of grain identical in kind and uniform in value is sold from a mass, a separation is not necessary to vest title where the intention of the parties that title shall pass is clearly manifested. Whether title to personal property sold, but not actually delivered, passes to the vendee depends upon the intent of the parties to the transaction, and the question of intent is rather one of fact than of law."

In Hoffman v. Gosline et al., above cited, it is held:

> "The time of passing title to chattels sold depends on the intention of the parties." And "where an action for goods sold depended on whether the title passed, the court's failure to submit to the jury the precise lines of inquiry into the facts from which they were to determine such issue was prejudicial error."

But the defendants insist that this contract is plain and certain, and is in writing, and that it is not a question for the jury, and quote in support of their contention from Farmers' National Bank of Sheridan v. Coyner et al., 44 Ind. App. 335, 88 N. E. 856, as follows:

> "But, where upon a material point there is a failure of proof by the party having the burden, a court may, as a matter of law, instruct the jury in favor of the other party to the issue, and where the facts are admitted by the pleadings, or otherwise, or where the evidence is documentary, and its interpretation a matter for the court, and there is but one conclusion deducible therefrom, the court may, as a matter of law, direct a verdict in accordance with the fact."

This doctrine is unquestionably sound, but under it was the court justified in the case at bar in sustaining the demurrer and taking the evidence from the jury? In other words, while the evidence as to the intention of the parties in the case at bar was largely documentary, can it be said that there was but one conclusion deducible therefrom, and that that conclusion was that title had not passed? We think not. But, on the other hand, we think that the defendants' language and conduct, as revealed by the evidence, strongly indicate that they claimed title, and had assumed control of the property in question. The defendants having failed to sell through their local salesman, they seem to have made the plaintiff their agent to try to negotiate a sale for them for a part of the seed. They declined to accept the price which plaintiff was able to procure for them, and said they had rather pay storage than to sell at that time at such ruinous prices. They agreed to pay reasonable storage, and in another communication, not heretofore quoted in this opinion, they indicate that they had rather do this than to take the risk of having to pay demurrage on the seed at Ft. Worth, since their warehouse and elevator there were full, and they had no place in which to unload the seed, if it was shipped to them there.

Defendants also quote in their brief from the syllabus in Priest v. Hodges et al., 90 Ark. 131, 118 S. W. 253, which holds in part that:

> "Where, by the contract of sale, there remains something to be done as between the seller and buyer to ascertain the quantity or price of the article, the title does not pass; but, where it was the intention of the parties that the article should be considered as having been delivered, the intention will govern, though there remains something to be done to determine the quantity or value thereof. The fact that a seller has performed all he can do does not show a sale, but it is necessary to show that the buyer actually accepted the chattels, and, until the buyer does some act evincing an intention to accept, the title remains at the risk of the seller."

This is in harmony with all the authorities we have examined, and holds, in substance, that the intention of the parties shall govern, and that the intention of the buyer is to be gathered from his acts, and to be determined by whether or not he has evinced an intention to accept title. It would have been rather unusual, we think, for the defendants, in the case at bar, to have agreed to pay the plaintiff storage on what they considered was its own grain, stored in its own warehouse. But they did agree to pay storage on the grain in controversy. Besides, there are other circumstances, which not only indicate an intention on the part of the defendants to accept title, but that they considered that title had passed. And upon consideration of the entire record, it seems to us unreasonable to say that there is but one conclusion deducible from the conduct of the parties, and that that conclusion is that title had not passed. We think the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the evidence.

[2] 2. The only other assignment urged is that the court erred in refusing to permit the plaintiff to prove that the seed in controversy, after defendants refused to settle for same, were attached by the plaintiff as the property of the defendants, under an order of attachment. But in this ruling we think the court was right. That was the act of the plaintiff, not the defendants, and the defendants can in no way be bound by it. The defendants are bound by their own words, acts, and conduct, but to permit the plaintiff to profit by its own independent act, after the controversy had arisen, would be, in effect, to countenance self-serving conduct, which the law will not permit.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. All the Justices concur.

KANSAS CITY, M. & O. RY. CO. et al. v. McDANIEL. (No. 7234.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. June 12, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

TRIAL 🔑253(3)—INJURY NEAR TRACK—INSTRUCTIONS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In an action against a railroad company to recover damages for personal injuries and damages to team, wagon, and harness, where the defense of contributory negligence is specially pleaded, and there is evidence tending to support it, an instruction setting forth a hypothetical statement of facts, which, if found to be true by the jury, would entitle the plaintiff to recover, without submitting the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence and without regard as to whether or not his negligence contributed to the accident, is error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 616.]

Commissioners' Opinion, Division No. 1. Error from District Court, Major County; James W. Steen, Judge.

Action by William McDaniel against the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient Railway Company, a corporation, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed and remanded.

John A. Eaton, Dudley W. Eaton, and Hyden J. Eaton, all of Kansas City, Mo., and F. W. Fischer, of Oklahoma City, for plaintiffs in error. Jno. V. Roberts and C. B. Wood, both of Fairview, for defendant in error.

RUMMONS, C. The defendant in error, plaintiff below, in this action seeks to recover from the plaintiffs in error, defendants below, damages for injuries inflicted upon him and upon his team, buggy, and harness in a railway crossing accident. Plaintiff in his petition charged that the defendants negligently operated their train over and across the highway upon which plaintiff was traveling without ringing the bell or blowing the whistle while approaching said crossing and at a high and dangerous rate of speed, and that, by reason of so negligently operating said train, it ran into the buggy driven by the plaintiff upon said crossing and inflicted the injuries for which plaintiff seeks damages. The defendants answered, denying generally the allegations of the petition, and pleading contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendants, having unsuccessfully moved for a new trial, bring this proceeding in error to reverse such judgment.

The issues presented to the jury upon the evidence in this case were the negligence of the defendant in failing to ring the bell or blow the whistle while approaching the crossing and the contributory negligence of the plaintiff in failing to stop, look, and listen for the approach of a train before driving across the railway track. The only error assigned by the defendants which we deem it necessary to consider complains of the giving of instruction No. 9 given by the court to the jury. Said instruction is as follows:

> "You are instructed that under the law of this state the defendant is bound by its servants to ring the bell or sound a whistle at a distance of at least 80 rods from the place where its railroad crossed the public highway. You are further instructed that, if you believe from the evidence that the defendant by its servants neglected to ring the bell or sound the whistle at a distance of at least 80 rods from the place where its railroad crossed the highway, at which it is alleged plaintiff was injured by collision with defendant's train, then and in that event the defendant would be guilty of negligence, and if you further find that such negligence was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, then and in that case you should find for the plaintiff."

It is urged by the defendant that this instruction is erroneous in that it does not submit to the consideration of the jury the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, and that the omission to submit such issues to the jury is not cured by any other instruction given by the court. The only instructions given by the court upon the question of contributory negligence are instructions Nos. 6, 8, and 12, which are as follows:

> "(6) While it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove to your satisfaction by a preponderance of the evidence the allegations of his petition, he is not required to prove that he was free from negligence; that the defense of contributory negligence pleaded by the defendant must be proven to your satisfaction by a fair preponderance of the evidence to be valuable as a defense."
>
> "(8) You are further instructed that contributory negligence is negligence as hereinbefore defined on the part of the plaintiff which contributes to the accident or injuries complained of."
>
> "(12) You are instructed that as between the plaintiff and the train, by reason of the character and momentum of the train and the requirements of public transportation by means thereof, the train had the right of way at the railroad crossing where the accident occurred. It was the duty of the plaintiff before attempting to cross the railroad to use reasonable diligence by looking and listening to ascertain whether the train was approaching the crossing, and if he knew, or by the exercise of such diligence could have known, of its approach, it was his duty to not attempt to cross the railroad track until the train had passed, and you are further instructed that the engineer and fireman upon giving the proper signals and timely warning of the train's approach had the right to presume that the plaintiff was in possession of his natural faculties and senses, and that he would not omit to take the precaution imposed upon him by law."

The court in its instructions defines negligence and proximate cause, and also in instruction No. 8 defines contributory negligence, but nowhere in the instructions given by the court does the court advise the jury as to what their verdict should be in the event they found that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. In the case of Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Pitchford, 44 Okl. 197, 143 Pac. 1146, this court says:

> "In an action for damages for personal injuries, where the defense of contributory negligence is interposed, and there is testimony fairly tending to establish such defense, instructions which wholly leave out of view the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence, and under which the jury, if they found certain facts to exist, would be bound to find for the plaintiff, although they might also believe the plaintiff by her negligence contributed directly to the accident, are erroneous, and constitute reversible error."

In Oklahoma Railway Company v. Milam, 45 Okl. 742, 147 Pac. 314, this court says:

> "In an action against a street railway company to recover damages for the death of a person killed by the railway company's car within the city limits, and wherein contributory negligence on the part of the deceased is pleaded as a defense, and there is evidence tending to sustain such defense, an instruction which ignores the defense of contributory negligence and tells the jury that the operation of defendant's car at a rate of speed exceeding the city speed limit is negligence per se, and, if such negligence is the proximate cause of the injury, the defendant will be liable, is reversible error."

It is further said in said case:

> "Such error was not cured by another instruction which tells the jury, in substance, the defendant would not be liable if the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in going upon the defendant's car track in front of an approaching car, which struck him unless the doctrine of last clear chance applies. The two instructions are confusing, and it is uncertain which the jury will follow, and when the evidence is conflicting, a verdict and judgment for either party, under such conflicting instructions, should be reversed."

In Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Clark, 46 Okl. 382, 148 Pac. 998, this court says:

> "In an action against a railroad company to recover damages for personal injuries, loss of team, and damages to wagon and harness, where the defense of contributory negligence is specially pleaded, and there is evidence tending to support it, an instruction setting forth a hypothetical statement of facts, which, if found to be true by the jury, would entitle the plaintiff to recover, without mentioning the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence, and without regard as to whether or not he directly contributed to the accident, is error, and is not cured by another instruction dealing with the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence; the two instructions being conflicting and confusing."

See Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Jameson, 46 Okl. 609, 149 Pac. 195.

In the instant case the instruction complained of is more subject to criticism than the instructions are in Oklahoma Railway Co. v. Milam, supra, and Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Clark, as in the instant case, the court did not tell the jury what effect contributory negligence would have upon the plaintiff's right to recover. The instruction complained of told the jury that, if they found that defendants neglected to ring the bell or blow the whistle while approaching the crossing as required by the statutes, the defendants were guilty of negligence, and that, if they found that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries sustained by the plaintiff, they must find for the plaintiff. The court did not in this instruction or in any other tell them what their verdict should be in the event they found that the negligence of plaintiff had contributed to the accident. In fact, nowhere in the instructions is the jury told that the contributory negligence of the plaintiff would be a defense to the action brought by him. The most that is said upon the subject by the court is that contributory negligence to be valuable as a defense must be proved by a preponderance of the evidence. There was evidence in the record from which the jury might have found that the plaintiff was negligent, and that such negligence contributed to the accident.

The giving of the instruction complained of constitutes reversible error, and the judgment of the court below should be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PER CURIAM. Adopted in whole.

CITY OF COLLINSVILLE et al. v. WARD et al. (No. 8390.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. Feb. 13, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑958—TAXATION—CHARTER PROVISIONS.

The provisions of the charter of the city of Collinsville, framed, adopted, and approved pursuant to the authority conferred by section 3a, art. 18, Williams' Ann. Const., and section 539, Rev. Laws 1910, regulating the method of levying and collecting taxes for purely municipal purposes, prevail over the general laws of the state in reference thereto in so far as said general laws are in conflict therewith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2023–2037.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 🔑958—TAXATION—CHARTER PROVISIONS—GENERAL LAW.

Article 10, § 14, Williams' Ann. Const., which provides that "taxes shall be levied and collected by general laws and for public purposes only," was intended as a limitation upon the power of the Legislature in passing laws for the levy of taxes to the passage of general laws, as distinguished from local or special acts, and was not intended to prohibit cities from adopting charter provisions authorizing the levy and collection by such cities of taxes for purposes that are purely municipal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2023–2037.]

3. TAXATION 🔑609—EQUITABLE RELIEF.

Where a party seeks equitable relief against an assessment of taxes of which he complains, he must offer to do equity by paying or offering to pay the amount of taxes properly chargeable against him under a proper assessment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1243.]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⚷979—TAXATION — INJUNCTION — SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION.

Petition examined, and held not to state a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 2120–2123.]

Error from District Court, Rogers County; W. J. Campbell, Judge.

Action for injunction by J. D. Ward, for and on behalf of himself and all the taxpayers in the city of Collinsville, Okl., and others. Judgment for plaintiff, motion to vacate judgment and to dissolve the injunction overruled, and defendants bring error. Reversed and remanded.

J. F. Orr, of Collinsville, and Randolph, Haver & Shirk, and Elton B. Hunt, all of Tulsa, for plaintiffs in error. Ertell & Hart and Adams & Wills, all of Claremore, for defendant in error.

HARDY, J. J. D. Ward, who will be referred to as plaintiff, on behalf of himself and all other taxpayers similarly situated, brought this action against the city of Collinsville, its board of commissioners, and business manager, who will be referred to as defendants, to restrain the collection of certain taxes levied for the year 1914, which the defendants were proceeding to collect in accordance with the charter provisions of said city. Demurrer was filed to the petition, which was overruled, and exceptions saved, and judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff, perpetually enjoining the collection of said taxes. Motion to vacate judgment and to dissolve the injunction was overruled, and defendants prosecute error.

The first error assigned is that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to plaintiff's petition, which alleged in substance that plaintiff was a resident and citizen of said city, and a property owner and taxpayer therein; that said city was a city of the first class, organized and existing under the laws of this state, and that the other defendants constituted the board of commissioners and business manager of said city; that during the year 1914 said city, by and through its agents, listed and assessed all of the real property located therein for the purpose of taxation and made a levy thereon, and thereafter, under and by virtue of said listing, assessment, and levy, was proceeding to collect said taxes so levied; that plaintiff, and those for whom he prosecutes this action, during said year owned a large amount of real property in the limits of said city, which was included in the listing, assessment, and levy complained of; that plaintiff, and those for whom he prosecutes this action, had neglected and refused to pay said taxes, for the reason that the actions of said city and its officers and agents were and are contrary to the Constitution and laws of the state of Oklahoma, and were and are without warrant or authority of law; that the said city had no authority or power to list and assess plaintiff's property, or the property of any other person, or to levy and collect a tax thereon; and that said defendant had caused notice to be given that plaintiff's property, and other property similarly situated, upon which taxes had been levied as aforesaid, would be sold, and, unless restrained, would proceed with said sale, to plaintiff's great and irreparable injury.

[1, 2] The principal question argued by both sides is whether the city of Collinsville had the authority, under the Constitution and laws of this state, to provide in its charter for the assessment, levy, and collection of municipal taxes in a manner different from or through instrumentalities other than those provided by the general laws of the state for the collection of state and county taxes. In compliance with the provisions of section 3a of article 18, Williams' Ann. Const., the city of Collinsville did on the 9th day of January, 1914, adopt what is known and designated as "the charter of the city of Collinsville, Oklahoma," which charter was duly approved by the Governor of this state on January 19, 1914, and said city was operating under said freeholders' charter, by the provisions of which power is conferred upon it to levy and collect such general and special assessments and license and occupation taxes as may be necessary for the general operative expenses of the city and for the purpose of accumulations to the sinking and interest funds required by law; and it is further provided that said city shall have the power and is authorized annually to levy and collect taxes for general revenue purposes not to exceed 8 mills on the dollar on the assessed value of all real, mixed, and personal property in the city, not exempt from taxation by the Constitution and laws of the state. Power is conferred upon the board of commissioners to provide by ordinance for the prompt collection of taxes assessed, levied, and imposed under said charter provisions, and full power and authority is conferred upon them to sell or cause to be sold all kinds of property, real and personal, and they are also authorized to make such rules and regulations and ordain and pass all ordinances deemed necessary to the levying, laying, imposing, assessing, and collecting of any taxes provided for in said charter.

On behalf of the defendants it is contended that by the adoption of this charter under the provisions of section 3a, art. 18, Williams' Const., full power and authority is conferred upon the city, through its board of commissioners, to levy and collect all taxes for municipal purposes independent of the general revenue laws of the state, while plaintiff contends that the matter of taxation and revenue is one of general public concern, which the Legislature may lawfully regulate, even though the taxes involved be for purely municipal purposes. In support of this view, plaintiffs call our attention to various provisions of the Constitution regulating taxation, and particularly to article 10 of section 14, which provides:

> "Taxes shall be levied and collected by general laws, and for public purposes only. * * *"

In Kansas City v. Johnson, 78 Mo. 661, it was held that section 3, art. 10, of the Constitution of Missouri, which declared that all taxes should be levied by general laws, was intended to restrict the powers of the Legislature in passing laws for the levy of taxes to the passage of general laws, as distinguished from local or special laws, and that said provisions did not repeal the provisions of the charter of Kansas City authorizing said city to levy taxes. The clear import of this holding is that provisions of a charter, adopted in conformity with the laws of that state conferring upon charter cities the power to levy taxes for municipal purposes, supersede the general laws of that state regulating the levy and collection of such taxes. This court has heretofore approved the rule adopted in Missouri with reference to the effect of charters framed and adopted by cities of that state, where the provisions of such charters conflict with the general laws relating to municipal matters, and has applied the same rule in the construction of charters adopted by cities of this state under the authority conferred in section 3a of article 18. Lackey v. State, 29 Okl. 255, 116 Pac. 913; State v. Linn, 153 Pac. 826. Following the rule announced in Kansas City v. Johnson, supra, we hold that article 10, § 14, Williams' Const., was intended as a limitation upon the power of the Legislature in passing laws for the levy of taxes to the passage of general laws, as distinguished from local and special acts, and that said section does not prohibit cities from adopting a charter containing provisions authorizing the levy and collection of taxes by such cities for purposes that are merely municipal.

Plaintiff sets out in great detail the general revenue laws regulating the levy and collection of taxes by the state and its various municipal subdivisions, and calls our attention to the language in sections 7378 and 7384, Rev. Laws 1910, making said laws applicable to cities, whether having a charter form of government or not, and insists that it was within the power of and was the intention of the Legislature to require all taxes for municipal purposes to be levied and collected in accordance with said general provisions, and that the charter provisions of the defendant city regulating the levy and collection of taxes therein, being in conflict with said general statutes, must give way. Section 539, Rev. Laws 1910, provides:

> "When a charter for any city of this state shall have been framed, adopted and approved according to the provisions of this article, and any provisions of such charter shall be in conflict with any law or laws relating to cities in force at the time of the adoption and approval of such charter, the provisions of such charter shall prevail and be in full force, notwithstanding such conflict, and shall operate as a repeal or suspension of such state law or laws to the extent of such conflict; and such state law or laws shall not thereafter be operative in so far as they are in conflict with such charter. Provided, that such charter shall be consistent with and subject to the provisions of the Constitution, and not in conflict with the provisions of the Constitution, and laws relating to the exercise of the initiative and referendum, and other general laws of the state not relative to cities of the first class."

The effect of a provision in a charter, which has been duly framed, adopted, and approved by the Governor, where the same is in conflict with the laws of this state, has been considered in a number of cases, and the uniform holding has been that such charter provisions become the organic law of the municipality, and supersede the laws of the state in conflict therewith, in so far as such general laws attempt to regulate merely municipal matters. Owen v. Tulsa, 27 Okl. 264, 111 Pac. 320; Lackey v. State, supra; Mitchell v. Carter, 31 Okl. 592, 122 Pac. 691; Okl. Ry. Co. v. Powell, 33 Okl. 737, 127 Pac. 1080; In re Simmons, 4 Okl. Cr. 662, 112 Pac. 951; State v. Linn, supra. In Lackey v. State, the effect of section 3a, art. 18, of the Constitution, and section 539, Rev. Laws 1910, were considered in connection with the provisions of a charter adopted by Oklahoma City regulating the election of municipal officers, and in the opinion it was said:

> "By this section the people of the state, in the exercise of their sovereign power and by means of their organic law, have delegated to the inhabitants of cities having a population of more than 2,000 the power, to be exercised by such inhabitants at their option, to frame a charter for their own local government, which is to become the organic law of such government, and to supersede the laws of the state in conflict therewith, in so far only as they attempt to regulate merely municipal affairs."

And after calling attention to the fact that similar provisions were found in the Constitutions of several of the states, no two of which appeared to be identical, and noting the conflict in the decisions, construing such provisions, this court approved the construction given by the Supreme Court of Missouri to section 16, art. 9, of the Constitution of that state, authorizing cities of more than 100,000 population to frame a charter for their own government, consistent with and subject to the Constitution, and laws of that state, and, after rejecting the contention that the provisions of such charter must give way, where in conflict with the laws of the state in reference to matters that are purely municipal, the court continued:

> "It is clear that the foregoing statute intends to provide that, wherever a freeholders' charter has been adopted under the provisions of the Constitution, and conflicts with any law of the state relating to municipal matters of cities of the first class, that the provisions of such charter shall prevail. * * *"

The question, then, is whether the provisions of the charter of the defendant city authorizing the levy and collection of taxes would come within the rule stated, and would prevail in case of conflict with the general revenue laws of the state, in so far as they relate to merely municipal matters. Section 20, art. 10, Williams' Ann. Const., is as follows:

> "Local Taxation to be Levied and Collected by Local Authorities. The Legislature shall not impose taxes for the purpose of any county, city, town, or other municipal corporation, but may, by general laws, confer on the própe̍r authorities thereof, respectively, the power to assess and collect such taxes."

This provision was construed in Thurston v. Caldwell, 40 Okl. 206, 137 Pac. 683, where plaintiff sought to enjoin certain taxes imposed or attempted to be imposed upon certain real estate for city, town, school district, and county purposes under the general revenue laws of the state. A portion of the taxes involved were levied for the city of Purcell during a period of time when said city was operating under a charter form of government. The principal contention was that the general revenue laws, being the same as here involved, were unconstitutional in so far as they related to counties, cities, and townships, because they were repugnant to section 20, art. 10, supra. This contention was denied, and it was held that said section did not constitute a limitation upon the power of the Legislature to impose taxes for purposes in which the state has a sovereign interest, although of a municipal character, such as taxation for police protection, for streets, highways, and bridges, for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a public school system, etc., but applied to purely municipal affairs. This decision has been followed, and the rule therein stated, applied, in the following cases: Thurston v. Frank et al., 40 Okl. 463, 139 Pac. 124; Thurston v. Hine, 40 Okl. 465, 139 Pac. 125; St. L. & S. F. R. R. Co. v. Amend, 44 Okl. 602, 145 Pac. 1117; St. L. & S. F. R. R. Co. v. Hawort, 149 Pac. 1086.

The decision in the Thurston Case determined the proposition that the general revenue laws apply and govern in the levy and assessment of taxes of that charter in which the state has a sovereign interest, and by inference at least held that such laws do not apply to taxes which are purely municipal, and because the petition did not specifically show that the taxes sought to be enjoined were imposed for purely municipal purposes, or that plaintiffs had tendered the amount due for such taxes as were legally imposed, it was held the petition did not state a cause of action, and that the demurrer in the trial court should have been sustained, and the judgment enjoining the collection of said taxes was accordingly reversed, and the cause remanded.

If it be held that the general laws apply to all taxes that may be levied and collected in a municipality, whether for purposes in which the state has a sovereign interest or for purely municipal purposes, then section 20, art. 10, would be without meaning or effect, and left without a field for its operation. That the framers of the Constitution in writing said provision, and the people by adopting it, intended that it should be given effect and should have operation in some sphere, cannot be doubted. Other provisions of the Constitution indicate that the people recognized the right of the municipality in matters of purely local or municipal concern to levy taxes, as is shown by section 19, art. 9, which declares that every ordinance and resolution passed by any county, city, town, or municipal board or local legislative body levying a tax, shall specify distinctly the purpose for which said tax is levied, and by section 28, art. 10, requiring such municipality to levy sufficient additional revenue to create a sinking fund to be used for the purposes required by law. Gray's Lim. of Taxing Power and Public Indebtedness, § 677 (a), p. 335.

[3, 4] We think, following the previous holdings of this court in reference to the effect of the charter provisions relating to municipal affairs which conflict with the general laws of the state relating to matters of that character, that the provisions of the charter of the city of Collinsville regulating the method of levying and collecting taxes for purposes which are purely municipal should prevail, and inasmuch as the plaintiff's petition seeks to enjoin the collection of all taxes levied within said city, without pointing out those taxes which are municipal in their character and those which should be levied under the general revenue law, and has failed and refused to tender the amount due for such taxes as were legally imposed, it was error to overrule the demurrer thereto. In all matters pertaining to taxation, a party, who seeks equitable relief against an assessment of which he complains, must himself offer to do equity by offering to pay the amount of taxes which the facts show would be properly chargeable against him under a proper assessment. Thurston v. Caldwell.

The judgment of the court below is therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

HARRIS et al. v. GRAY et al. (No. 7549.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. May 22, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ANIMALS ⚿97—TRESPASS BY CATTLE—LIABILITY.

Where one without authority turns his cattle into the field of another, and said cattle trespass thereon and damage the property, a judgment exonerating the owner of said cattle from liability is contrary to the law and the evidence, and cannot be sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Cent. Dig. §§ 338–343.]

2. ANIMALS 🔑100(8) — TRESPASS — NOMINAL DAMAGES.

In such a case nominal damages, if no more, may be recovered.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Cent. Dig. §§ 361, 384, 413.]

3. ANIMALS 🔑100(4)—TRESPASS—PUNITIVE DAMAGES—DEFENSES.

The good faith of the party who permitted his cattle to trespass upon the land of another may be shown in order to relieve him from punitive damages, and to this end he may show that he relied upon a contract with a third party as to his right to turn his cattle into said premises, provided he acted upon the belief that said third party had the right to make said contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Cent. Dig. §§ 358–360, 383, 412.]

4. ANIMALS 🔑100(8) — TRESPASS — MEASURE OF DAMAGES—REALTY.

The measure of damages for injury to real estate is correctly defined in Enid v. Wiley, 14 Okl. 318, 78 Pac. 96.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Animals, Cent. Dig. §§ 361, 384, 413.]

Commissioners' Opinion, Division No. 3. Error from County Court, Jefferson County; Ben F. Saye, Judge.

Suit by W. R. Harris, Sr., and another against John Gray and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed, and cause remanded.

D. F. Spradling, of Ringling, and Jay G. Clift, of Sapulpa, for plaintiffs in error. Bridges & Vertrees, of Waurika, for defendants in error.

HOOKER, C. The facts here show that the real estate in question was owned in the early part of 1913 by one Howard, who on the 20th day of February, 1913, leased the same to the defendant in error Gibson under a written lease of that date by the terms of which the said Gibson agreed not to pasture any cattle on said premises except his own work horses and milk cows, and then not until crops were all gathered, nor should he transfer the contract or sublet the premises without the written consent of the said Howard or his legal representative. After the execution of this lease Howard sold the property to the defendants in error Hammon and one Dulaney, subject to the Gibson lease, and about the 1st of October Hammon and Dulaney sold the same to the plaintiffs in error, subject to the Gibson lease. After the plaintiffs in error purchased the property, by consent of Gibson they went upon the property for the purpose of building some houses in which to live, and it is a disputed question here as to the character of possession they were permitted to have over said property until the 1st of January, 1914. Anyway, they improved the property and moved some kaffir corn hay and other property upon the premises preparatory to occupying the same and cultivating the property for the 1914 crop.

About December 1, 1913, Hammon and Carter, who were more or less engaged in the cattle business, through Carter leased this property from Gibson for pasture until January 1, 1914, for which Gibson received $20. It is claimed by plaintiffs in error that the cattle of Hammon and Carter destroyed certain feed of the value of $35, tramping the ground so that they could not cultivate it properly in the year 1914, thereby damaging them, for which this suit is instituted, together with punitive damages. It is claimed by the defendants in error that other cattle were permitted upon this land, and that the plaintiffs in error had no right to the possession thereof until January 1, 1914, inasmuch as the same was under the control of Gibson under his lease until that time.

[1-3] It is a disputed question here whether the plaintiffs in error were entitled to the possession of this property until January 1, 1914; for, while it is admitted that Gibson did give his consent for them to go upon the property and perform certain work, yet he denies that he gave them the exclusive possession thereof, while they contend he did. Be that as it may, they were the owners of the real estate, and if any damage was caused thereto by the cattle of the defendants in error in December, 1913, they would be entitled to recover therefor. Under the lease held by Gibson upon this property, he could not give to Hammon and Carter, or any one else, the right to pasture this property, for his lease expressly denies him that privilege. It must therefore follow that the defendants in error acquired no right to turn their cattle into this property, and the permission granted them by Gibson did not confer upon them the authority nor the right so to do. They therefore were trespassers when they did so. However, it would be competent for defendants in error to show they leased from Gibson, as a circumstance bearing upon the recovery of punitive damages against them. Conceding that the plaintiffs in error had no right to store the provender upon this property or to occupy the same until the 1st of January, 1914, it did not give to Gibson the right to sublet the property, nor to Hammon and Carter the right to turn their cattle into said property, and while it might give to Gibson the right, if they occupied the same without his permission, to recover for the rental value thereof, it did not deprive them of the right to have their property protected against trespass or injury from the cattle of others.

It is an admitted fact that over 100 head of cattle belonging to Hammon and Carter were turned onto this property, and the only positive evidence as to the destruction of the provender establishes that the cattle of the defendant in error destroyed the same, and it must be conceded that these cattle did tramp the ground, and, inasmuch as they were there without any authority, and without permission of the owner of the property, it follows that the judgment in this case is not supported by the law or the evidence. Under any state of this case plaintiffs in error are entitled to nominal damages.

[4] As to the question of damages to the real estate, the authorities are not by any means harmonious as to what is the proper measure of damages, but, whatever the rule may be in other states, the question has been settled here by our court in the case of Enid v. Wiley, 14 Okl. 318, 78 Pac. 96, and the rule announced there seems to be supported by the greater weight of authority and to be reasonable, just, and equitable. And, under the authority of the case above cited, we must hold that the measure of damages to the real estate here, if any, is the cost of restoring the land to its former condition with compensation for the loss of the use of the land or its impaired use, provided these two are less than the diminution in value of the land; for, if the cost of repairing or restoring the land to its former condition, plus the loss of the usable value, is greater than the diminution in the market value of the land, then the diminution in the market value of the land must be the true measure of damages in this case.

Under our statute, amply supported by authorities of this state, punitive damages may be recovered for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, actual or presumed. This, however, is a question of fact to be submitted to the jury under proper instruction of the court.

For the reason indicated, the judgment of the lower court is reversed, and this cause remanded.

PER CURIAM. Adopted in whole.

KELLY v. ROETZEL. (No. 5394.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. May 8, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 6, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR 🔑185(3)—REVIEW—QUALIFICATION OF SPECIAL JUDGE.
Where an action is tried before a special judge selected by agreement of the parties in accordance with the statute and no question is raised in the trial court as to his power or authority to hear and determine the case or as to the regularity of his selection, such question cannot be urged for the first time in the Supreme Court on appeal.

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER 🔑33—SPECIAL DAMAGES—ALLEGATION.
Where in an action for libel the article published is libelous per se, it is not necessary for plaintiff to allege or prove special damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 112, 277.]

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER 🔑19—CONSTRUCTION OF ALLEGED LIBEL.
In construing an article claimed to be libelous, it is the duty of the court to construe the words used in their most natural and obvious sense, and give them that meaning which would most naturally be ascribed thereto by those to whom the article was addressed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. §§ 98, 99.]

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER 🔑123(2)—LANGUAGE LIBELOUS PER SE—INSTRUCTION.
Where the language used is obviously libelous per se, it is the duty of the court to so instruct the jury as a matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 357.]

5. LIBEL AND SLANDER 🔑121(1)—VERDICT—STATUTE.
Section 4961, Rev. Laws 1910, declaring that when verdict is for plaintiff the verdict shall in no case be less than $100, authorizes a minimum verdict in plaintiff's favor in each suit or action, and not for each act or instance of libel.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Libel and Slander, Cent. Dig. § 353.]

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑46(1)—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTE—DETERMINATION.
The Supreme Court will not pass upon the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature until there is presented a proper case in which it is made to appear that the person complaining has, by reason thereof, been or is about to be deprived of some right or privilege to which he was lawfully entitled, or who is about to be subjected to some of its burdens and penalties.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 43.]

Error from District Court, Blaine County; John F. Curran, Special Judge.

Action by Joseph P. Roetzel against W. R. Kelly. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Modified and affirmed.

Ed Baker, R. C. Brown, and Seymour Foose, all of Watonga, for plaintiff in error. A. L. Emery, of Watonga, and Burwell, Crockett & Johnson, of Oklahoma City, for defendant in error.

HARDY, J. This was an action for damages brought by Joseph P. Roetzel, who will be referred to as plaintiff, against W. R. Kelly, who will be referred to as defendant. Verdict was for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

[1] Defendant filed application for disqualification of the presiding judge of the district court of Blaine county on the alleged ground of prejudice in favor of plaintiff. This application was denied, whereupon the court announced that he would retire from the bench if counsel could agree on another judge to try the case. By agreement of counsel for both parties, John F. Curran, of Enid, was selected as special judge, before whom the trial proceeded, and defendant withdrew his application for a change of judge. No objection was made before or at the trial to the authority of the special judge to try the case, and the question is presented for the first time in briefs of counsel.

It is contended that, inasmuch as the regular judge was not disqualified or in any way shown to be incompetent to preside during the trial, there was no authority of law for the parties to agree upon a special judge to sit in the trial of the case, and it is further claimed that the parties were coerced into agreeing upon the special judge selected. As to the latter question, it is sufficient to say that defendant had the right to reserve an exception to the ruling denying his application for a change of judge, but did not see fit to do this. Upon the court indicating a willingness to retire from the bench in the event counsel could agree upon a special judge, defendant entered into such an agreement, and withdrew his application and tried the case before the special judge without objection. In Bradley et al. v. Chestnutt-Gibbon Gro. Co., 35 Okl. 165, 128 Pac. 498, it was held:

> "Where an action is tried in the trial court before a judge pro tem., elected by the members of the bar under the provisions of the statute for the election of judges pro tem., and no question is there raised as to the power or authority of such judge pro tem., to hear and determine the case, or as to the regularity of his election, and all the parties proceed to trial without objection or exception thereto, the regularity of his election and his authority to hear and determine the case cannot be questioned for the first time in this court on appeal."

It is a general rule that objections to the authority of a special or substitute judge may be waived by the act or omission of a party, and ordinarily such objections are waived when they are not promptly made. The objection should be made at or before the trial, and cannot be made for the first time upon appeal; and, if not made in the trial court, are deemed to have been waived. 23 Cyc. 616; 15 R. C. L. 516, § 6; Tillman v. State, 58 Fla. 113, 50 South. 675, 138 Am. St. Rep. 100, 19 Ann. Cas. 91; Higby v. Ayres, 14 Kan. 331; Mo. Pac. Ry. Co. v. Preston, 63 Kan. 819, 66 Pac. 1050; 11 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 793. Many decisions are cited in support of the text in 23 Cyc. 616, and an extensive note is found appended to the case of Tillman v. State, 19 Ann. Cas. 91, from which it is clearly made to appear that the great weight of authority is in favor of the rule above stated. Higby v. Ayres, 14 Kan. 331, is directly in point. In that case it was said:

> "This case was tried before a judge pro tem. But whether such judge was duly elected and qualified does not appear. It does appear, however, that all the parties consented to try the case before him. It also appears that there were 'no statutory provisions disqualifying the regular judge from presiding at the trial.' From this we suppose that the regular judge was not sick, absent, interested, related to either of the parties, or otherwise disqualified from hearing and determining the case. But suppose the regular judge was present, and competent to hear and determine the case, still he did not do it, but allowed a judge pro tem. to do so. The district court was in session. No question is raised as to the jurisdiction of the court over the subject-matter of the action and the parties to the suit. The case came regularly on for trial; a judge pro tem. tried it; the Constitution and laws recognize such an officer; and whether this judge pro tem. was regularly and legally filling the office or not, still he did fill the office and was therefore an officer de facto; and his acts were therefore not void, but, like the acts and proceedings of all other officers de facto, are valid and binding. * * * But attempt is now made to attack them directly by petition in error. This may be done where the question was raised in the court below and proper exceptions taken. But unfortunately for the plaintiffs in error, the question was not raised in the court below. Neither party objected to trying this case before said pro tem. judge, but all the parties consented thereto. The question of whether said pro tem. judge could legally try this case is now raised for the first time in this court, and we think the question is raised too late. See Hunter's Adm'r v. Ferguson's Adm'r, 13 Kan. 462, 473, and cases there cited."

Section 9, art. 7, of the Constitution authorizes the parties to a suit in the event any judge is disqualified for any reason from trying the same, to agree upon a judge pro tempore, and section 5813, Rev. Laws 1910, contains a similar provision. The office of judge pro tempore is thus recognized both by the Constitution and the statutes of this state, and when the parties below consented that the Hon. John F. Curran should sit as special judge upon the trial of this cause, and he did in fact preside during the trial thereof, he became a de facto judge, and, no objection having been made thereto at or during the trial, his authority cannot be questioned for the first time in this court. The case of Apple et al. v. Ellis, 150 Pac. 1057, is in conflict with the views here expressed. That case overlooks the opinion in Bradley v. Chestnutt Gibbon Gro. Co., supra, and in so far as it and later decisions following it are in conflict with the views herein expressed, they are overruled. Litigants should not be permitted to try a case without objection before a special judge, taking chances upon the outcome of the trial, with the intention of availing themselves of the benefits incident to a favorable result, and at the same time be accorded the right to question the validity of such proceedings should an adverse verdict be rendered.

The alleged libel is based upon the publication of five certain articles in the Watonga Herald, a weekly newspaper published in the town of Watonga, Blaine county, of which the defendant was editor, which the plaintiff alleges were false, scandalous, defamatory, and libelous, and were maliciously published of and concerning plaintiff. The article upon which the first count was based was as follows:

> "To Joe and Tom: Moral—Time wasted in making nigger evidence is worse than fixing a grand jury or making affidavits. That the grand jury system is a farce and at times can be used by unscrupulous men and crooked politicians to get even with a supposed enemy, was clearly demonstrated during last week's court. Upon investigating the minutes it was discovered that two politicians had given crooked evidence before the grand jury, that they could not substantiate in court. Their names appeared on no indictment and they denied having testi> fied until confronted with the evidence. These crooked politicians had to come out and admit their guilt—that they were responsible for causing the cost to this county of $5,000 or $6,000 in order to try to get even with someone through the medium of the grand jury."

That set out in the second count was as follows:

> "Nutty Tom is afraid that Black Pete has something to tell on someone, like he told about his purchase of nigger votes. He might tell Tom whether you and Joe gave the nigger witnesses anything to appear with yourselves before the grand jury to commit perjury. Or perhaps he might let the niggers divulge that themselves. Or he might tell about the letter written to Guthrie to send a judge over here to stick people regardless of guilt or innocence."

That set out in the third count is as follows:

> "Lost,—One idiotic featured, broken down, would be politician—commonly known as Grand Jury Joe. Found—Sneaking around the basement of the court house looking for grand jury to lie to—the above described monstrosity."

That set out in the fourth count is as follows:

> "A Fit Subject. Affidavit Tom, last issue, clearly indicates that he should be sent to the bug house, the crazy house, the foolish house, the bat house, the looney house, the mad house, the nutty house. If he is not a fit subject for it he would not be accusing his associates before the grand jury, W. B. Piper, of procuring a deed from Estella Tyler. Piper, the man who approached white men and niggers to procure them to lie, should be supported by his chum, Nutty Tom, instead of going back on him. The next thing in order for Nutty to do will be to relate how his companion in arms, Grand Jury Joe, according to the county treasurer's books, kept about a thousand dollars of the county's money for the past five years. 'When rogues fall out, honest men get their dues.'"

That set out in the fifth count is as follows:

> "Because Grand Jury Joe and Nutty Tom could not elect city officials to suit them and stand their crooked work, the former requested the Governor to have the State Examiner and Inspector make an investigation. Haskell tells him that there is no law for such investigation and tells him that if he knows of anything wrong, he can file information against the offenders with the county attorney. But he says: 'No, I want a place where I can lie a little and try to get even with someone. I want to go before a grand jury picked out by myself where Nutty Tom and I can lie as much as we please.' Such a pair as Nutty Tom and Grand Jury Joe are worse than any pair of black hand assassins Italy every furnished. They would stab a man in the back at the first opportunity, if they knew they would not be apprehended; a pair of cowardly curs who will not come out in the open and fight like men, but always want to try and trump up something to jab someone through the courts. People of this class are a detriment to any town or community, and everyone who has any regard for manhood, looks upon them as the worst kind of nuisances. Watonga had an investigation of her books of the council last spring by five of the leading business men of the town, who found everything in good shape and made a thorough report."

[2] After declaring on each of the articles as above set out, plaintiff, by way of innuendo, ascribed thereto the meaning thereof as charged by him, and prayed damages. After demurrer to the petition and to each count thereof, defendant answered by way of general denial, and alleged the truth of the matters contained in the articles complained of. Objection was made to the introduction of any evidence under the petition, and at the close of plaintiff's case, demurrer was interposed to the testimony, which was overruled. Defendant urges that the petition did not state a cause of action because the matters alleged are not libelous per se, and because plaintiff did not allege or prove any special damages. Where the article published is not libelous per se, the plaintiff must allege in his petition facts showing wherein he has sustained special damages. McKenney v. Carpenter et al., 42 Okl. 410, 141 Pac. 779; N. S. Sherman Machinery Co. v. Dun, 28 Okl. 447, 114 Pac. 617. On the contrary, where the words used in the publication are libelous per se, it is not necessary to make such allegations, but plaintiff may allege general damages only. 25 Cyc. 453.

[3] To determine whether the language used in the articles was libelous per se, it was the duty of the court to construe the words used, in their most natural and obvious sense, and give them that meaning which would be ascribed thereto by those to whom they were addressed and which would be understood by them. Bodine v. Times Journal Pub. Co., 26 Okl. 135, 110 Pac. 1096, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 147; Hubbard v. Cowling, 36 Okl. 603, 129 Pac. 714; Spencer v. Minnick, 41 Okl. 613, 139 Pac. 130.

It is urged that because plaintiff used innuendo to ascribe a meaning to the articles published, he is estopped to claim that said articles were libelous per se. In 25 Cyc. 452, it is stated:

> "The innuendo may be treated as surplusage when it is used in connection with words which are unequivocal and actionable per se; and it is held that where plaintiff, in an action bad by innuendo, put a meaning upon the alleged defamatory publication which is not supported by its language or by proof, the court may nevertheless submit the case to the jury if the publication is defamatory per se."

[4] Adopting defendant's theory that the publication pleaded must be judged as to whether it is libelous per se, without the aid of the innuendo, or extrinsic and explanatory circumstances, but by reference to the language of the publications alone, each and all of the articles were libelous per se, and the court did not err in so declaring. Spencer v. Minnick; Bodine v. Times Journal Co.; McKenney v. Carpenter. Section 4956, Rev. Laws 1910, defines libel as follows:

> "Libel is a false or malicious unprivileged publication by writing, printing, picture, or effigy or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to public hatred, contempt, ridicule or obloquy, or which tends to deprive him of public confidence, or to injure him in his occupation. * * *"

The jury found that each of these articles were published of and concerning plaintiff, and that they were understood by persons who read the same as referring to plaintiff; and, construing the language used in its most natural and obvious sense and giving it that meaning which would most naturally be ascribed thereto by those to whom it was addressed, it seems clear that the statements used in each and all of them, if believed, would undoubtedly tend to deprive plaintiff of public confidence and esteem and expose him to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy. This being true, it was libelous under the statute and was actionable, and it was not necessary for plaintiff to allege or prove special damages.

[5] The court instructed the jury that in the event they should find in favor of the plaintiff upon any count set forth in the petition, the verdict thereon should not be less than $100. This instruction was based upon section 4961, Rev. Laws 1910, which is as follows:

> "If there be a verdict by a jury or finding by the court in favor of the plaintiff, the verdict and judgment shall in no case be less than $100 and costs, and may be for a greater sum if the proof justifies the same. And if there be a verdict in favor of the defendant, and the jury shall find that the action was malicious or without reasonable provocation, judgment shall be rendered against the plaintiff and in favor of the defendant for his costs, including an attorney's fee of $100."

It is the contention of defendant that the instruction given was erroneous, and that the statute should be construed as authorizing a minimum verdict in each case or action and not for each instance or act of libel proven. We are unable to find any cases construing a libel statute containing the provision set out, but think the following cases analogous upon principle: In Place v. Norwich & N. Y. Transportation Co., 118 U. S. 468, 6 Sup. Ct. 1150, 30 L. Ed. 134, the Supreme Court construed the words "in no case," found in section 4283 of the United States Statutes, which declared that the liability of the owner of any vessel (for various acts and things mentioned) should "in no case" exceed the value of his interest in the vessel and her freight then pending. It was held that the "case" in which the principle of limited liability was to be applied meant every voyage, and that the fair inference to be drawn from the section was that the voyage defined the limit and boundaries of the cases to which the law was to be applied, and not each particular act. In Theisen v. Johns, 72 Mich. 285, 40 N. W. 727, the Supreme Court of Michigan had under consideration, section 2268, How. St., which provided that any person selling liquor to a minor under the age of 18 years should be liable for actual and exemplary damages to the parent "in such sum, not less than $50 in each case as the court or jury shall determine." It was held that the intention of the statute was to award a recovery in each action or suit, and not for each sale. In the opinion it was said:

> "The only remaining question which we need to discuss arises upon the charge of the court. It is claimed by plaintiff's counsel that the statute is to be construed as fixing the amount of recovery at $50 for each sale. The court construed it as meaning for each trial. It is evident that 'in each case' means in each particular instance or cause. * * * It cannot be said that the Legislature, in fixing the minimum of recovery to be had for the violation of this statute, intended to make the penalty for each sale the sum of $50"

—and attention was called to the fact that in another section of the statute provision was made for the recovery of damages in all cases provided for, together with costs of the suit in an action of trespass on the case before any court of competent jurisdiction. By statute, we are required to give words used in any statute their ordinary interpretation, unless defined by statute. Rev. Laws 1910, § 2194. "Case" is defined in Black's Law Dictionary as:

> "A general term for an action, cause, suit or controversy at law or in equity; a question contested before a court or justice; an aggregate of facts which furnishes occasion for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court of justice." Anderson Dict. of Law; 6 Cyc. 679.

Giving the word "case" the meaning ascribed thereto in the authorities cited, the statute should be construed to mean that a minimum recovery of $100 may be had in each action or suit. This does not prevent a plaintiff from recovering any actual damages that may be proven and such exemplary damages as may be awarded by the jury for each act of libel, and is merely a recognition of the fact by law that in cases where the libel has been proven some damage has been suffered, and fixing the minimum amount of a plaintiff's recovery in an action brought to recover such damages. It was error to give the instruction complained of. That such a statute is constitutional was determined by the Supreme Court of Michigan in Cramer v. Danielson, 99 Mich. 531, 58 N. W. 476, where it was held that the act which authorized a minimum recovery in each case for an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors to minors in that state was valid.

[6] The defendant attacks the statute as being unconstitutional and void and in violation of various provisions of the state and federal Constitution, because provision is made in the latter part of said section for the recovery of an attorney's fee by defendant in certain prescribed instances. The trial resulted in a verdict in favor of plaintiff, and defendant is not in a position to raise this question. The Supreme Court will not pass upon the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature until there is presented a proper case in which it is made to appear that the person complaining has, by reason thereof, been, or is about to be, deprived of some right or privilege to which he was lawfully entitled, or who is about to be subjected to some of its burdens and penalties. Ins. Co. of North America v. Welch, 154 Pac. 48; Black v. Geissler, 159 Pac. 1124.

In their verdict the jury assessed the damages separately upon each cause of action fixing the amount thereof upon the first and second counts at $100 each and upon the third at $150; upon the fourth at $250, and upon the fifth at $400. From this it appears that the recovery upon the first and second counts was arbitrarily fixed at $100 each in compliance with the instructions of the court, which directed the jury to award the plaintiff, in case they found the publication was made by defendant concerning the plaintiff, a minimum recovery upon each count of $100, irrespective of what the actual damages shown by the evidence might be. They were not permitted to award exemplary damages, and we must presume that the amount allowed upon the first and second counts was because of the instructions of the court, and therefore prejudice has resulted to the defendant by reason of the giving of said instruction. However, we will not reverse the case, if plaintiff will, within ——— days remit the sum of $200, in which event the judgment will be affirmed; otherwise the cause will be reversed and remanded for a new trial. All the Justices concur.

ABRAHAM et al. v. HARRY. (No. 7224.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. May 8, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 12, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Guardian and Ward ⟹182(4)—Action on Bond—Joinder of Sureties.

Where a guardian, in addition to the bond given when he was appointed, gave two other bonds, as additional security for the performance of his duties as guardian, all of the sureties on the several bonds could be joined in one suit to recover the amount due from the guardian.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Cent. Dig. §§ 640–643.]

2. Interest ⟹22(7)—Judgment—Accounting by Guardian.

When a guardian on final account is found liable to his ward, the amount of interest for which he is liable is 6 per cent. per annum, and a judgment fixing the amount of such interest at 10 per cent. per annum is without authority of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Interest, Cent. Dig. § 50.]

Commissioners' Opinion, Division No. 1. Error from District Court, Creek County; Wade S. Stanfield, Judge.

Action by Frazier Harry, a minor, suing by his guardian, H. M. Ausmus, against Joe Abraham and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Modified and affirmed.

Wm. L. Cheatham, of Bristow, for plaintiffs in error. Burke & Harrison, of Sapulpa, for defendant in error.

COLLIER, C. This is an action brought by the defendant in error against the plaintiffs in error to recover for the breach of two bonds given by a guardian. Hereinafter the parties will be designated as they were in the trial court.

The material allegations of the petition are that Wheaton Harry was duly appointed guardian of the plaintiff in the county court of Creek county, Okl., and soon thereafter qualified, and entered upon the discharge of his duties, and that he executed a bond, conditioned as required by law, with the defendants Henry Lowrance and Wash Sanders as his sureties; that thereafter, in pursuance of an order of the county court, the said Wheaton Harry, as guardian, executed an additional bond for the sale of real estate, in the penal sum of $500, with Joe Abraham and J. W. Gaywood as his sureties; thereafter the said Wheaton Harry tendered his resignation as guardian of said plaintiff, which was accepted, and made his final report, which said final report was approved, finding said guardian due plaintiff the amount shown due by his final report, $368.28, "with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from the 10th day of July, 1913"; that demand had been made on said Wheaton Harry to pay said sum with interest, and that he failed to pay said sum; that like demand had been made on the bondsmen, and they had failed to pay said sum.

To the petition the defendants interposed a demurrer upon the following grounds:

> "First. Plaintiff had no legal capacity to sue these defendants.
>
> "Second. That there is a defect of parties plaintiff.
>
> "Third. That there are several causes of action improperly joined.
>
> "Fourth. That the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant."

The court overruled the demurrer, and the defendants refusing to plead further, and electing to stand upon their demurrer, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff in said sum of $368.28, with interest from the 10th day of July, 1913, at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, to which action of the court the defendants duly excepted, and prosecute this appeal upon transcript.

[1] The material errors argued in the brief of the defendants are that several causes of action are improperly joined, and that the charge of interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from date of judgment is unlawful.

We think there is no merit in the first, second, and fourth grounds of the demurrer.

The material question involved in this appeal is not an open one in this jurisdiction, it having been held in People's Bank & Trust Co. v. Nelson, 37 Okl. 500, 132 Pac. 493, upon a state of facts parallel to those in the instant case, that all of the sureties upon the several bonds executed by a guardian can be joined in one suit to recover the amount due from the guardian to the ward. In the body of the opinion it is said:

"Plaintiff in error contends that the actions upon the several bonds could not be joined. The various bonds were [for] the same duty. The sureties were cosureties. The action was a single cause of action to recover the amount for which the guardian was in default, and all who had guaranteed the performance of 'the same duty,' whether by the same or separate instruments, were proper parties defendant. The same cause of action affected all of the parties to the action. Dugger v. Wright, 51 Ark. 232 [11 S. W. 213] 14 Am. St. Rep. 48; Matthews v. Maudlin, 142 Ala. 434, 38 South. 849, 4 Ann. Cas. 344; Powell v. Powell, 48 Cal. 234; State v. Parker, 8 Baxt. [Tenn.] 495; Sievers v. Havens, 5 Ky. Law Rep. 857. The same rule was announced in the case of Singer Mfg. Co. v. Ponder, 82 Tex. 653 [18 S. W. 152]. In that case an agent for the Singer Manufacturing Company gave two bonds. The first bond was for the performance of his duties as such agent, and the second was given as additional security for the same thing. It was held that both sets of sureties could be joined in one action."

It is true that the authorities are not entirely harmonious upon the question involved, but we think that the weight of authority and best-considered opinions are in strict accord with the holding of the People's Bank & Trust Co. v. Nelson, supra.

We are of the opinion, and so hold, that the court did not err in overruling the demurrer to the petition.

[2] We have not been cited to nor are we advised under what authority the court rendered judgment for 10 per cent. interest from the time of the approval of the guardian's account, showing the indebtedness to the ward, and we are of the opinion, and so hold, that the charge of 10 per cent. per annum interest is without authority of law, and it is hereby ordered that said judgment rendered by the trial court be so modified as to read: That the plaintiff have and recover of said defendants Wheaton Harry, Henry Lowrance, Wash Sanders, Joe Abraham, and J. W. Gaywood the sum of $432.79, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 14th day of September, 1914, and the cost of this action—and that the judgment so modified be affirmed.

PER CURIAM. Adopted in whole.

ABRAHAM et al. v. HARRY. (No. 7223.)

(Supreme Court of Oklahoma. May 8, 1917. Rehearing Denied June 12, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

BREACH OF GUARDIAN'S BOND.

The syllabus in this case is the same as in the case of Joe Abraham et al. v. Frazier Harry et al. (No. 7224) 165 Pac. 1154, not yet officially reported.

Commissioners' Opinion, Division No. 1. Error from District Court, Creek County; Wade S. Stanfield, Judge.

Action by William Harry, a minor, suing by his guardian, H. M. Ausmus, against Joe Abraham and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Modified and affirmed.

Wm. L. Cheatham, of Bristow, for plaintiffs in error. Burke & Harrison, of Sapulpa, for defendant in error.

COLLIER, C. This is an action brought by the defendant in error against the plaintiffs in error to recover for the breach of two bonds given by a guardian. Hereinafter the parties will be designated as they were in the trial court.

The questions involved in this case are identical with those involved in the case of Joe Abraham et al. v. Frazier Harry et al. (No. 7224) 165 Pac. 1154, this day decided by this court, but not yet officially reported, both of said cases being submitted upon the same briefs.

Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendants in the sum of $739.29, which is excessive by reason of the unlawful charge of 10 per cent. interest per annum on $574.75, the amount found by the county court as due by said guardian on the 13th day of October, 1911.

Under the authority of Joe Abraham v. Frazier Harry, supra, the said judgment rendered is modified so as to read: That the plaintiff have and recover of and from said defendants, Wheaton Harry, Henry Lowrance, Wash Sanders, Joe Abraham, and Ed. Abraham, the sum of $574.75, with interest from the 13th day of October, 1911, at 6 per cent. per annum—and as so modified the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

PER CURIAM. Adopted in whole.

(13 Okl. Cr. 585)

PADEN v. STATE. (No. A-2521.)*

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. July 7, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. HOMICIDE 🔑203(1)—DYING DECLARATION—ADMISSIBILITY.

When all the facts and circumstances disclosed by the record establish the fact that a dying declaration was made at a time when deceased realized that death was impending, it is entitled to be admitted in evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 430.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1172(1)—APPEAL—REVERSAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

A judgment of conviction will not be reversed by this court on account of inaccuracies in the instructions, when it clearly appears that no harm did or could have resulted to the accused by reason thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3128, 3154.]

Appeal from District Court, Cherokee County; John H. Pitchford, Judge.

---

*Rehearing denied September 25, 1917.

Van Paden was convicted of manslaughter in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. I. Coursey, of Tahlequah, and S. A. Horton, of Oklahoma City, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ARMSTRONG, J. Van Paden was tried in the district court of Cherokee county in February, 1915, on an information charging him with the murder of W. P. Sword, and convicted of manslaughter in the first degree. His punishment was fixed by the jury at imprisonment in the state penitentiary for a term of 18 years.

The following is a fair résumé of the testimony:

G. W. McGowan, on behalf of the state, says that he is 40 years old, and lives at Park Hill, Cherokee county, Okl., about 300 yards southwest of Johnson's store; that he knew the deceased, W. P. Sword, in his lifetime; that he saw him at Johnson's store on the night of December 22d, and when he got to him he said he was shot; that he assisted in carrying him home; that C. W. Johnson was the only one at the store when he got there; Sword was sitting up on the porch, his feet hanging off; that it was a cold night; that he was about 175 yards away when the shots were fired; that Leslie Peace arrived immediately after he reached the scene.

A. A. Beard testified that he was a practicing physician located at Park Hill, in Cherokee county; that he knew W. P. Sword and was called to attend him at Johnson's store on the night of December 22d; that it was cold and damp at the store, and deceased was carried home before he gave him treatment; that an examination disclosed a gunshot wound in the body and one in the thigh; the bullet which entered the thigh came out, the other one did not; that he probed the wound for an hour or more, but could not locate the bullet; that it had entered the abdominal cavity and was sufficient to and did produce death; that this bullet entered about two inches above the hip bone and about two inches toward the median line on the left side; that he attended the patient again the following morning in company with Dr. Duckworth, and again about 12 o'clock; that he informed the deceased that he did not know how serious his wounds were; that he had not been able to trace the bullet.

J. F. Duckworth testified that he was a practicing physician residing at Tahlequah; that he was called to attend W. P. Sword on the 23d day of December, and described the wounds the same as Dr. Beard; judging from the wounds, the parties changed positions during the time of the shooting; that the wound in the bowels entered the abdominal cavity and was sufficient to produce death.

Claud Sword testified that he was a son of the deceased and lived about 100 yards south of Johnson's store in Park Hill; that he had been hauling wood and got home about 5 o'clock; that he and his father went to the store; that he took some groceries home and went back after others, and was returning the second time with his father when they met Van Paden and Jim and Tom Miller; that his father asked Paden to pay what he owed his boys for cutting wood; that Paden replied that he would pay them when he got damned good and ready and shot his father twice; that he went after Mr. Johnson, who had gone home, and when they returned to the store his father had climbed upon the porch and was sitting down; that he went for a doctor then, and when he got back his father was lying on the porch, and the neighbors carried him home; that he was 16 years old and had never been a witness before; that as he ran for Mr. Johnson he looked back, and his father was standing where he was shot; that Paden and the Millers were met near the house of J. S. Smith; that his father had a gallon of syrup in his right hand when he was shot; that two shots were fired; that his father did nothing to Paden except ask him to pay the debt.

G. W. Johnson, for the state, said: I am a merchant and live at Park Hill, Okl., about 80 yards south of J. S. Smith. I know W. P. Sword and saw him in the store on the night of December 22d. That he left the store about 6:30 and went away with some merchandise. That deceased's boy ran to his house and told him that his father was shot and wanted him to come, and that he went and found him sitting on the porch at his store. That he ran up to him, and said, "What is the matter, Mr. Sword? Are you hurt very bad?" That deceased replied, "Yes, I am killed." He unbuttoned his clothes and laid him down on the porch, and as soon as other neighbors gathered in they carried him home on a cot. Deceased said he asked Van Paden what he was going to do about paying his boys, and Paden said he could not do it right then and shot him. This statement was made a very short time after the shooting. That he did not find out where the wounds entered the body until they reached the home of the deceased. He searched his clothes and found no arms of any kind. That the overcoat worn by the deceased was buttoned up, and his dress coat was also buttoned up.

J. S. Smith testified that he lived at Park Hill, and that he knew G. W. Johnson and lived about 80 feet from him; that he knew W. P. Sword during his lifetime; that about dark on December 22d he heard two shots close together, and at once opened the door, and some persons ran past the house going north; that he did not see, but heard them; the moon was shining some; that in a few minutes Mr. Sword's boy came and told him that his father was shot, and he went down in front of Johnson's store and found the deceased; that he was in a bad condition, and Johnson was holding him up, and his head was hanging limp; that he put his knees against his back and held him up and told Johnson to go and phone the officers, and Mr. McGowan came; that deceased then fainted away, and seemed not to be breathing, and Mr. Peace felt his pulse and thought he was dead; witness also thought he was dead, but after considerable struggling he rallied and was carried home; witness had not at this time heard how the difficulty arose; that early the next morning, before anybody passed, he examined the tracks where the tragedy occurred and found no blood.

Luther Jones, for the state, testified: That he was cashier of the bank at Park Hill; and that he knew the deceased in his lifetime, and saw him on December 22d, and was at his house when he gave the dying statement which was taken in his presence and identified by him. That Mr. Peace wrote it down at his request. That they asked questions, and Peace wrote the answers and then read them. This was about 11 o'clock at night. Some of the older men in the community wanted witness to go down and take this statement, and they asked deceased if he wanted to make a statement, and he said he did, and would give it to them if he could. That he was suffering great pain, and at times said he could not stand it. That Mr. Peace and Mr. Latta were present when the statement was made and signed.

Mrs. Sword testified that she was the wife of deceased and lived at Park Hill on December 22d; that the deceased went to town about 4 o'clock, and got some groceries and did not come back until he was brought back fatally wounded; that he had on an overcoat and a brown suit; that his clothes had been kept by her and were in the same condition at the time she was giving her testimony that they were when deceased was killed; that deceased lived until the next day until 2 or 3 o'clock; that the clothing was examined by a number of neighbors at the time of the homicide; that her husband never carried arms, and was not armed on the night of December 22d when he was shot.

Mrs. Nettie C. Smith, for the state, testified that she lived at Park Hill and knew the deceased during his lifetime; that she went to the window on hearing two shots, looked out, and saw a man running towards Johnson's store; that she then saw two parties running past her window and out of sight; that she saw them coming down first, and then they turned and went back, and she did not see them do anything when they went back, and when they came by they were running towards town; that on going back they just walked, and after they turned they ran; that she got to the window as quick as she could after hearing the shots; that it was only two or three steps.

The dying statement of the deceased was also introduced in evidence, objected to by the defense, and admitted by the court. It is as follows:

"Park Hill, Okl. 12—22—1914.

"The affidavit of W. P. Sword taken at his residence in Park Hill, Okl.

"The affidavit of W. P. Sword, states that he had been up in town and had started home and met Van Paden between J. S. Smith's residence and Johnson's store, and I asked him when he was going to pay my boys for that wood cutting, and he said I will pay it when I get ready, then he stepped back and got his gun and began shooting at me. I did not attempt to hurt him in any way. I had my arms full of groceries. The first shot he hit me I was facing him and when he shot me I wheeled and he shot me in the leg from behind me. He then ran off up the road. I then staggered on down the road to Johnson's store and lay down on the porch, until I was removed home by my neighbors. I had never had any trouble with Paden heretofore. It was so dark I could not see the pistol with which he shot me.

his
"W. P. X Sword.
mark

"Witness to mark: Lester Peace.

"Attest: T. F. Latta, Witness to Attest.

"Subscribed and sworn to before me a notary public, in and for said county of Cherokee and state of Oklahoma, this 22d day of December, 1914.

"[Seal.] L. H. Jones, Notary Public.
"Commission expires Feb. 7, 1917."

On behalf of the defendant, Jim Miller was first called, and testified: That he lived at Park Hill with his grandfather, Jeff Paden, and that Van Paden was his uncle. That he was present at the trouble on December 22d. That he and his brother Tom and his Uncle Van Paden had started to the show. That near Johnson's store they met Sword and passed him about the southeast corner of Mr. Smith's garden; and that Sword called his Uncle Van Paden and asked him when in the hell he was going to pay the kids for cutting wood; and that his Uncle Van said, "I have told them all along I was going to pay them," and then he said when in the hell was that going to be, and his Uncle Van said when he sold his cotton, and then Sword says, "By God, when is that going to be?" And his Uncle Van said, "When I get ready." Then Sword hit him with his fist, knocked him down, and his hat fell off. He fell to his knees, and Sword stepped towards him, and his Uncle Van shot him twice, and he walked off. When Sword struck his Uncle Van, Claud ran off. That his brother and he were standing north of Paden at that time, and after the shooting they did not run, but just walked up the road. He did not see anybody as he passed Mr. Smith's house. That it was a dark, cold night, and no moon. That there was a little snow on the ground. That his uncle was still on his knees when he fired the shot that killed deceased. That he thought deceased struck Paden on the right side of the head. That none of them went back to the place where Sword was after the shooting. That Sword had something in his hand, but he did not know what it was.

Tom Miller says that he is 13 years old, and testified almost verbatim to the facts detailed by Jim Miller.

Van Paden, in his own behalf, testified: That the boys of the deceased came to him and asked to cut wood, and he let them have the job. That, after they had completed the job, he looked it over, and the wood was cut and ricked up in such a manner that he could not use it. That he finally told them he would pay them for it as soon as he could sell some cotton. That he brought in his cotton the day before the killing and had it under the shed that night, but had not sold it. That he was going to town with the Miller boys, and he met the deceased and did not recognize him until after they had passed each other. That, when they got about five steps apart, deceased called to him, and he walked back, and deceased came on meeting him. That he had a bundle of something in his right hand. That he asked him if he did not think it was about time to pay the kids for the wood. That he replied to him that he had told them last night that he was going to pay them as soon as he sold his cotton. That the deceased then asked, "When in the hell are you going to do it?" He said when he sold his cotton, and then deceased said, when in the hell would that be, and he said when he got ready. "Sword then struck me with his left hand on the shoulder, and I fell east." As he was getting up, he saw Sword coming at him again, and he began to shoot. He had his pistol in his overcoat pocket. He shot twice as fast as he could. After it was over, he walked back and got his hat and went away, walking fast up the road. At the time of the shooting, he knew of other trouble and difficulties Sword had had. He had trouble with one man named Whitaker, and with Roland Ross, and with Earnest Ferrell. Had seen Ferrell the next day after the difficulty. His hand was bound up. He said his leg was hurt, and he was limping, and he was in a pretty critical condition; his face was skinned in a very ugly manner, and he had his hand in a sling; and heard Ferrell talk about it the next day. Deceased said that if the Ross boy had not knocked him off he would have killed Ferrell, and he said if ever he got to the Ross boy he would "stomp the liver" out of him. He said he would show these people around here some things. Ferrell was about 21 years old, and the Ross boy was about 18. That he regarded deceased as a turbulent man, and shot him because he knew he was in the habit of knocking people down. That he was a large man, and he knew that he would have had no show in a fight with him, and that his only recourse was foul means. That he shot him because he thought he was coming on him with his feet. That he had a gun belonging to Wat Duncan. That he had borrowed it to serve as a special officer in August. That he had a special deputyship for one day. That Duncan had asked him for the pistol two or three times. That he had heard several people, among them Fulton Goodrich and John Carlisle, say that Sword was a dangerous man. That there was snow on the ground that night. That he was cool and collected in the difficulty and never saw a man that he was afraid of. That he fired with his left hand, and then walked back to get his hat. That when he fired he was about 3 feet from deceased on his hands and knees. That deceased's boy was standing by him when his father struck the blow prior to the shots being fired. That he next saw the boy going around towards Johnson's store. That deceased had had some trouble with John Whitaker over wood the boys had cut for him. That he was not in the least mad when he met Sword. That J. S. Smith's house was about 30 steps from where the shooting occurred. That the deceased was 6 feet tall and weighed 200 pounds, and that he weighed about 135 pounds.

John Collins, for the defense, testified: That he heard deceased talk the day after he had the trouble with Red Ferrell, and that he was also mad at the Ross boy for hitting him with a rock the night before, and said he was going to "stomp the guts" out of these boys, and that he just wanted to "learn the boys in this country something." That he heard the deceased say that the defendant had not paid his children for the wood they had cut for him; that it was about time he was doing it; that he was going to whip the water out of him if he did not do it right away; that he was living on Mr. Paden's place. That their last conversation was in December. That he saw the difficulty between the deceased and the Ferrell boy, and was present when John Whitaker came along. Deceased had a bad reputation as a dangerous man. That he was at Sword's house when his son Claud came in and said they were fighting down there, and "I told Sword to go down there, and I went with him, about 100 yards from his house, and he knocked the Ferrell boy down and stomped him. The Ross boy is the son of Mrs. Ross, who has testified. He made the statement to me that he had heard Bob Looney say that the deceased was a bad man."

Earnest Ferrell said that he saw Van Paden the day after he had the difficulty, but did not show Paden his hand or leg.

Roland Ross said that he saw the difficulty between Sword and Ferrell, and that he knocked Sword off of him.

W. E. Duncan testified that Sword's character was bad as a dangerous man; that he had loaned Paden a pistol to arrest a man as an officer; had asked him for it several different times, and had not got it; that he is a distant relative and friend of Paden's.

Will Ivans, Lester Lissen, and R. W. King testified that Sword was a dangerous man.

Ira Treet, in rebuttal, on behalf of the state testified that he knew deceased; that his character as a law-abiding citizen was good.

Witness G. W. Johnson testified that deceased just slapped the Ferrell boy, and that the boy was out the next day playing baseball; that Whitaker had accused deceased of stealing coal, and he was about to slap Whitaker's jaws; that he never heard of him having any difficulty with anybody else; that Whitaker talked to him about his trouble himself; and that he ran a pool hall.

George Coke, Mark Wain, and J. R. Jones, and T. F. Latta, postmaster, and Price Matthis, merchant, all testified that the deceased's character as a law-abiding citizen was good. There are only two errors of consequence insisted upon.

[1] The first is that the court erred in admitting the dying declaration of the deceased. This contention is based upon the proposition that proof on behalf of the state fails to disclose the fact that the deceased realized that death was impending at the time the statement was made. This question has been decided contrary to the plaintiff in error's contention. In the case of Morris v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 29, 115 Pac. 1030, we said:

> "It is essential to the admissibility of dying declarations, and is a preliminary fact to be proved by the prosecution, that they were made under a sense of impending death. This may be made to appear from what the injured person said, or where, from the nature and extent of his injuries it is evident that he must have known that he could not survive. It is sufficient if it satisfactorily appears that they were made under the sense of impending death, whether it be directly proven by the express language of the declarant, or be inferred from his evident danger, or the opinions of the medical attendants, stated to him, or from other circumstances of the case, such as the length of time elapsing between the making of the declaration and his death, and the fact that the declarant was so weak that he could not sign his name and so affixed his mark, all of which are resorted to, in order to ascertain the state of declarant's mind."

The facts in the case under consideration show clearly that deceased realized that death was near; he so stated when he was first approached and immediately thereafter fainted, revived after a hard struggle, and was carried home. It is clearly apparent that while suffering great pain deceased made the statement from time to time as his condition would permit, until it was concluded. There is no doubt that the dying declaration was made at a time when the deceased realized that death was near, and was entitled to be admitted in evidence. See Addington v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 712, 130 Pac. 311; Mulkey v. State, 5 Okl. Cr. 78, 113 Pac. 532. In the Mulkey Case the deceased said, "Oh, my God! I am killed." The court held that the dying declaration was properly admitted. See, also, Nelson v. State, 3 Okl. Cr. 473, 106 Pac. 647; Hawkins v. U. S., 3 Okl. Cr. 656, 108 Pac. 561; Blair v. State, 4 Okl. Cr. 365, 111 Pac. 1003; Smith v. State, 5 Okl. Cr. 289, 114 Pac. 350; Offitt v. State, 5 Okl. Cr. 55, 113 Pac. 554.

[2] The next assignment of error is based upon the proposition that the court's instruction on self-defense was erroneous. That instruction is as follows:

> "You are further instructed, as a matter of law, that the bare fear of an assault upon the defendant by the deceased would not justify the defendant in killing the deceased; nor will the mere fear of the defendant that the deceased was about to commit an assault upon him (the defendant) amounting to a felony justify the defendant in killing the deceased unless the defendant, as a reasonable man, believed from all the circumstances as they appeared to him at the time, that he was in imminent danger of an assault being made upon him by the deceased, and from which apprehended assault he had reasonable cause to believe, and he did honestly believe, that he would lose his life thereby or suffer great bodily harm from such apprehended assault, as viewed from the standpoint of the defendant as a reasonable man. If you believe and find from the evidence that the defendant committed the homicide through mere fear of an assault from the deceased, and such fear was not founded upon reasonable apprehension of danger, from all the circumstances in the case, then, and in that event, the plea of self-defense will not avail, and you should find the defendant guilty, under the instructions therein given."

There was no exception saved to this instruction. The principal argument against the same is based upon the proposition that the instruction required the defendant, as a reasonable man, to believe from all the circumstances as they appeared to him, at the time, etc., before he would be entitled to act. The burden of complaint is against requiring the jury to find the defendant, as a reasonable man, to believe, etc. Under the facts and circumstances discussed by the record in this case, there is absolutely no prejudice in this provision in the instruction. The defense was not that of lunacy, intoxication, or incapacity. The plaintiff in error testified that he was cool and collected during the fatal difficulty and never saw a man in his life that he was afraid of. Upon his own statement of the circumstances and of the immediate facts, he is guilty of manslaughter in the first degree and offered no defense whatever to a charge of that character.

Other errors assigned and argued in the brief are based upon theoretical propositions pertaining to the law of murder. The jury convicted of manslaughter in the first degree, and only errors which are calculated to affect the substantial rights of the plaintiff in error in connection with the crime for which he was convicted will be considered. As an abstract proposition, some of the criticisms of the instruction under certain circumstances would be entitled to consideration if the conviction had been for murder instead of manslaughter.

Finding no substantial error in the record, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

(13 Okl. Cr. 576)

BALDRIDGE v. STATE. (No. A-2587.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. July 2, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1160—APPEAL—QUESTION OF FACT.

Where there is evidence in the record to support the verdict, and the verdict has been approved by the trial court, this court will not review the evidence to determine its weight or sufficiency.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3084.]

Appeal from County Court, Craig County; E. M. Probasco, Judge.

Algie Baldridge was convicted of violating the prohibitory law, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. P. Thompson, of Vinita, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

DOYLE, P. J. The plaintiff in error was convicted in the county court of Craig county on an information charging that he did have possession of seven pints of alcohol with the unlawful intent of selling the same, and was sentenced to serve a term of 30 days in the county jail, and to pay a fine of $50 and the costs. From this judgment an appeal was properly perfected. We have carefully examined the record, and our conclusion is there is no merit in the assignments of error.

Three witnesses for the state testified that they went to the rooming house conducted by plaintiff in error, and there found in one of the rooms about 100 empty bottles and 7 pint bottles of alcohol, and he was in the room at the time.

As a witness in his own behalf the defendant testified that his name was "Algie Baldwin." His explanation about the alcohol was as follows:

> "I was standing there in the kitchen that night, and a fellow came in the door and asked me for a drink of water, and he said, 'Can I go out the back door?' and I said, 'Yes;' and he stepped out the back door and brought this whisky in. I asked him, 'What do you mean?' and he just stood there and looked at me. I said, 'You take this out.' He walked right out and left it there. His name was Lynn Wallace." That Wallace was rooming there at the time.

Where there is evidence in the record to support the verdict, and the same has been approved by the trial court, this court will not review the evidence to determine its weight or sufficiency. The jury no doubt in determining the truth of the defendant's testimony took into consideration the other criminating circumstances.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment is affirmed. Mandate forthwith.

ARMSTRONG and MATSON, JJ., concur.

(13 Okl. Cr. 580)

PACE v. STATE. (No. A-2050.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. July 7, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1144(½, 10)—APPEAL—PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY.

In the absence of any affirmative showing to the contrary, it will be presumed on appeal that all proceedings in the lower court were regular, and that all persons appearing in the rôle of public officers were duly authorized so to do as provided by law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2737, 2741, 2749, 2756, 2901, 3026, 3028.]

2. BURGLARY 🔑24 — BURGLARY IN THE NIGHTTIME—INFORMATION.

An information which charges the burglarious breaking and entry of a dwelling in the nighttime with intent to commit larceny therein is good as against demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. § 34.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1159(2)—APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

When the evidence tends reasonably to support a finding of the jury, a judgment of guilty will not be reversed by this court on the ground that the same is contrary to the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3075.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1028—APPEAL—ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR.

An assignment of error based upon a proposition not properly preserved in the trial court and not supported by any legal showing cannot avail on appeal, and will not be considered by this court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2619, 2620.]

Appeal from District Court, Washita County; James R. Tolbert, Judge.

Frank Pace was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Smith, Smith & Smith, of Cordell, for plaintiff in error. R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ARMSTRONG, J. Frank Pace was convicted in the district court of Washita county on a charge of burglary, and his punishment fixed at imprisonment in the state penitentiary for a period of two years.

The information charges Pace and two others with having burglarized the residence of M. T. Bonny on the night of October 26, 1909. It appears that the plaintiff in error left the country immediately after the offense was committed and was for a long time a fugitive from justice; that he was arrested at Amarillo, Tex., and escaped from the officers, but was later captured and returned to Oklahoma for trial. M. T. Bonny and his family live on a farm about 18 miles west of Cordell, in Washita county, Okl. On the night of October 26, 1909, Bonny and his family went to prayer meeting at the neighborhood church and on return discovered that the house had been entered and ran-sacked. Screens were cut from the windows and the glass broken out. The glass was also broken from the doors. The dresser drawers, wherein Bonny kept his valuable papers, had been plundered and a number of important documents carried away. A bed had been ripped open with a sharp instrument, and the contents piled up on the floor, and, as stated by one of the witnesses, everything was "topsy turvy." A small amount of money was taken from a clock on the mantel. Every apparent place for the concealment of money or valuables was searched. Bonny had sold several bales of cotton for which he had received some $600 or $700 in cash. The burglars were evidently searching for this money, and were defeated in the effort to steal the same because he had secreted it on his person instead of in his home. Certain household articles were carried away, but most of them were recovered.

Frank Pace, John Pruitt, and Buck Spradlin were seen in the neighborhood driving a team to an open buggy. Buggy tracks and mule tracks answering the description of those driven by these parties were found at the Bonny place. Three or four different witnesses saw these parties driving along the highway. They seem to have engaged in a general disturbance of the neighborhood. having stopped at two or three places in the community and discharged firearms, and were fired on by one or two men in the neighborhood. These and many other circumstances conclusively point to the guilt of Pace and his associates. The defendant did not testify in his own behalf, and offered no witnesses or proof of any kind in his defense.

The preliminary complaint was filed before one Coker, justice of the peace, in November, 1911, and approved by R. Brett, special county attorney. An amended complaint was filed on the 3d day of February, 1912. charging Pace with the crime and setting forth the fact that he had been a fugitive from justice for more than a year since October 26, 1909, and was at the time a fugitive from justice. A preliminary trial was held on the 3d day of February, 1912, and Pace was bound over to await the action of the district court. Before the information was filed in the district court, the complaint lodged with the justice of the peace was lost and a copy was filed with the clerk and certified to by the justice of the peace as being the complaint upon which the hearing was had and the order made holding Pace to the district court for trial.

[1] It is urged on behalf of plaintiff in error that there was no valid complaint filed, and that R. Brett was not legally appointed special county attorney to act in the premises. A motion to quash the information on this ground, among others, was filed and overruled by the trial court. A demurrer was filed to the information, which was also overruled by the trial court. There is nothing in the record to indicate that R. Brett was acting without authority and proper appointment from the district court of Washita county. At the hearing on the motion to set aside the information, no proof upon this point is disclosed in our search of the record, and no reference is made to any in the brief of counsel. In the absence of any showing to the contrary, it will be presumed on appeal that all proceedings in the lower court were regular, and all persons appearing as public officers were duly authorized so to do as provided by law. Besides, the lawful county attorney filed the information in the district court, thereby adopting and approving the proceedings theretofore had.

[2] The charging part of the information is as follows:

> "Did then and there unlawfully, willfully and feloniously in the nighttime break and enter into a certain building and structure, to wit, the residence and dwelling of M. T. Bonny in which there was no human being at said time of breaking; the said building being then and there the property of and under the control of the said M. T. Bonny, and there being then and there property kept in said building, to wit, household goods, money and other effects, a more particular description of which is to the county attorney unknown, the said property being then and there the property of the said M. T. Bonny. The said Frank Pace, Buck Spradlin, and John Pruitt did then and there, with felonious intent to steal, take and carry away by fraud and stealth said property so kept in said building, break into and enter said building in the nighttime as aforesaid, the manner of said breaking being by the county attorney unknown, with felonious intent to then and there take, steal and carry away said property as aforesaid, and to deprive the said M. T. Bonny of same and the value thereof, without the consent of the said M. T. Bonny, and to convert the same to the use and benefit of them, the said Frank Pace, Buck Spradlin, and John Pruitt, contrary to the form of the statutes in such cases made and provided, and against the dignity of said state. That the said Frank Pace has been a fugitive from justice and absent from the state of Oklahoma for more than one year since the 26th day of October."

A demurrer was filed to this information, and is as follows:

> "Comes now the defendant above named and demurs to the information filed herein for the reason that the said information does not contain facts which constitute an offense against the laws of the state of Oklahoma."

The demurrer was overruled by the trial court. In our judgment, this information sufficiently charges the burglarious breaking and entry of the building with the felonious intent to commit larceny therein. It therefore follows that the demurrer was properly overruled.

[3, 4] Counsel next contend that the verdict of the jury is contrary to the evidence, and that the jurors based the verdict on the fact that the plaintiff in error failed to testify in his own behalf. These assignments are wholly without merit. The jury made no mistake. The question of whether or not the jury discussed the fact that the plaintiff in error failed to testify in his own behalf is not raised by any legal showing.

A careful examination of the record discloses no prejudicial error. The judgment of the trial court is therefore in all things affirmed.

(13 Okl. Cr. 569)

MUNSON v. STATE. (No. 2471.)

(Criminal Court of Appeals of Oklahoma. July 2, 1917.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. Criminal Law 🔑1114(1)—Trial Errors—Record.

Alleged errors occurring during the trial must appear from, and be supported by, the record as certified by the trial judge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2918.]

2. Criminal Law 🔑1114(1)—Appeal—Trial Errors—Record.

Where the record does not support such alleged errors, this court is without authority to decide questions of law involved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2918.]

3 Burglary 🔑47—Sufficency of Verdict—Judgment.

The information charged "burglary in the first degree." The jury returned the following verdict: "We, the jury, impaneled and sworn to try the issues in the above-entitled cause, do upon our oaths find the defendant, Roy Munson, guilty as charged in the information and assess his punishment at the minimum of seven years in the state's prison." Held, said verdict is sufficiently definite and certain to authorize the trial court to pronounce a judgment of conviction of burglary in the first degree.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Burglary, Cent. Dig. § 121.]

4. Criminal Law 🔑786(2)—Instructions—Credibility of Witnesses.

The general instruction on the credibility of witnesses is a sufficient rule for the guidance of the jury. Trial courts should adhere to such an instruction to the exclusion of any that may direct the attention of the jury to any particular witness in the case, although the rule laid down be the same as that applicable to all witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1896, 1960, 1984.]

5. Criminal Law 🔑823(14)—Instruction—Weight of Defendant's Testimony.

Where the court in a separate instruction specifically told the jury that it had "no right to disregard the testimony of the defendant from mere caprice or on the ground alone that he is the defendant and is interested in the event of the suit, or that he stands charged with crime, * * * but that his evidence should be weighed and measured in the same manner as the testimony of other witnesses in the case," and in a subsequent instruction the court lays down the general rule by which the jury may be guided in determining the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony, held, that said separate instruction did not amount to an adverse or prejudicial comment upon the defendant's interest in the result of the action, nor was it a comment by the court on the weight to be given defendant's testimony. The instructions considered together placed the defendant upon the same plane with the other witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1992–1994, 3158.]

6. Reversal of Conviction—Express Statutory Provision.

This court is not allowed to reverse a judgment of conviction on account of the misdirection of the jury unless after an examination of the entire record it clearly appears that there has been a miscarriage of justice, or that the defendant has been deprived of some constitutional or statutory right. Section 6005, Revised Laws 1910.

Error from District Court, Woodward County; James B. Cullison, Judge.

Roy Munson was convicted of the crime of burglary, and he brings error. Judgment affirmed.

W. A. Briggs, of Woodward, for plaintiff in error. S. P. Freeling, Atty. Gen., and R. McMillan, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

MATSON, J. In view of the fact that certain alleged errors relied upon for reversal of this judgment were not preserved in the trial court, it is proper in this opinion to state that counsel who represented the plaintiff in error in this court did not represent him in the trial court. It is unnecessary to discuss the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the conviction. While the evidence is conflicting the testimony of the prosecuting witness, Elsie Derr, is sufficient to make out the crime of burglary in the first degree.

[1, 2] The first alleged error relied upon for a reversal is that the prosecuting attorney made certain prejudicial remarks in the presence and hearing of the jury at the time the jury returned an incomplete and insufficient verdict. It appears from the record that the jury first returned into court a verdict in the following form:

> "We, the jury, duly impaneled and sworn to try the issues of the above-entitled cause, do upon our oaths find the defendant, Roy Munson, guilty as charged in the information and assess his penalty and punishment at the minimum."

Which verdict was signed by the foreman of the jury and handed to the clerk to read. After it was read it is alleged that a controversy arose as to whether the verdict was sufficient in form at which time, it is contended by counsel for plaintiff in error, that the prosecuting attorney made the remark that he supposed the jury intended to fix the punishment at seven years, which said remarks were excepted to by counsel for plaintiff in error. However, it nowhere appears from the record that any such remarks were made by the prosecuting attorney; the entire record on this subject being as follows:

> "The Court: Gentlemen of the jury, the court directs you to return to your jury room and return your verdict so as to make it more definite and certain as to time. You may now follow your bailiff:
>
> "By a Juror: May I speak a word? It will not take us over ten minutes to fix it right, I think.
>
> "The Court: We will wait until you return, gentlemen; we don't care to have any discussion about it."

Therefore it is apparent that if the prosecuting attorney made any such remark as alleged no record of the same was preserved, and this court is bound by the record as made and certified to by the trial judge. It is the duty of the plaintiff in error, and the burden is upon him to clearly show that error was committed during the trial. Every presumption is in favor of the regularity of the proceedings in the trial court, and unless prejudicial error is clearly made to appear, where the question is not jurisdictional, this court is without power to consider the same.

[3] It is also contended that the verdict as amended is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the court to pronounce judgment in this case. Said verdict reads as follows:

> "We, the jury, impaneled and sworn to try the issues in the above-entitled cause, do upon our oaths finds the defendant, Roy Munson, guilty as charged in the information and assess his punishment at the minimum of seven years in the state's prison."

Which verdict was properly signed by the foreman of the jury. The contention is here made that burglary being a crime divided into degrees, and the jury having been instructed upon first and second degree burglary, the verdict is therefore so indefinite and uncertain as to authorize the court to pronounce a judgment of conviction of the degree of which the jury intended to convict. This question has already been passed upon adversely to the contention of counsel for plaintiff in error in the case of Bowlegs v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 69, 130 Pac. 824, wherein it was held:

> "The provision of Procedure Criminal (section 6874, Comp. Laws 1909 (section 5922, Rev. Laws), that 'whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees, the jury, if they convict the defendant, must find the degree of the crime of which he is guilty,' must be construed in connection with other provisions; i. e., section 6873, authorizing a general verdict of 'guilty' or 'not guilty,' and declaring that such verdict 'imports a conviction or acquittal of the offense charged,' and section 6878, providing that the court may direct informal verdicts to be reconsidered, and 'rendered in some form from which it can be clearly understood what is the intent of the jury,' also section 2028 of the Penal Code, providing that the jury shall 'assess and declare the punishment in their verdict.'"

We hold, therefore, that it is clearly evident from the verdict returned in this case that it was the intention of the jury to find the defendant guilty of burglary in the first degree, and that the court did not err in pronouncing judgment to that effect.

[4, 5] It is also contended that the court erred in giving the following instruction:

> "The jury are instructed that under the laws of this state a person accused of crime has a right to be a witness in his own behalf, and in this case the defendant having been a witness and having testified in his own behalf, the jury have no right to disregard his testimony from mere caprice or on the ground alone that he is the defendant and is interested in the event of the suit, or that he stands charged with crime; but you are instructed that his testimony ought to be received and considered by the jury in connection with all the other evidence in the case, and should be weighed and measured by the jury in the same manner as the testimony of other witnesses in the case."

It is contended that this instruction is erroneous and prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant in that it singles out the defendant and calls the jury's attention to the fact that he is an interested witness in the case. It is true that this court has held in numerous cases that it is erroneous for the court to call the jury's attention to the fact that the defendant is an interested witness, and that the jury may consider such fact in arriving at its verdict. The instructions condemned by this court, and held to be prejudicially erroneous, were much more drastic than the foregoing instruction given in this case. The instructions condemned were those in which the court specifically told the jury that it was its duty, in arriving at the verdict, to consider the fact that the defendant was an interested witness in his own behalf. The instruction given in this case was a precautionary one. The jury being specifically told that it had "no right to disregard his testimony from mere caprice or on the ground alone that he is the defendant and is interested in the event of the suit, or that he stands charged with crime, * * * but that his evidence should be weighed and measured in the same manner as the testimony of other witnesses in the case." While this instruction perhaps tended to single the defendant out, we cannot see wherein its effect was to prejudice his testimony. It was intended by the court for his protection to place him on the same footing with the other witnesses, and being a part of the law of the case the jury was bound so to receive it. By such instruction the jury was cautioned and prohibited from disregarding the testimony of the defendant from mere caprice, or upon the ground alone that he was the defendant. In addition the jury was told that it should consider the evidence of the defendant in the same manner and weigh the same as it would that of any other witness. Certainly this was all the defendant was entitled to. The jury is entitled to consider the interest that any witness has in the result of the trial, and when the defendant is placed upon the same plane with any other witness who testifies it is unreasonable to say that he was prejudiced just because the jury was told of that fact in a separate instruction.

[6] This court is not allowed to reverse a judgment of conviction on account of the misdirection of the jury, unless after an examination of the entire record it clearly appears that there has been a miscarriage of justice, or that the defendant has been deprived of some constitutional or statutory right. Section 6005, Revised Laws 1910.

To hold that the foregoing instruction amounts to an adverse or prejudicial comment upon the defendant's interest in the result of the action, or is a comment by the court on the weight of his testimony, is, in our opinion, illogical and unreasonable.

Instructions of this kind should not be given unless requested by defendant. The general instruction on the credibility of witnesses answers every purpose, and the trial courts should adhere to such an instruction to the exclusion of any that may direct the attention of the jury to the testimony of any particular witness. This court, however, is only authorized to reverse a judgment of conviction on account of a misdirection of the jury where it is clearly evident that, by reason of the giving of or refusal to give instructions, the defendant has been prejudiced to the extent that there has been a miscarriage of justice, or that he has been deprived of some constitutional or statutory right.

After a careful consideration of the entire record, it is our opinion that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

DOYLE, P. J., and ARMSTRONG, J., concur.

(85 Or. 434)

In re WEYERHAEUSER LAND CO.*

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 26, 1917.)

1. TAXATION ⚷493(7) — EXCESSIVE VALUATION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an appeal from a decision of the board of equalization refusing to lower a tax on petitioner's timber land, held under evidence that petitioner failed to establish that the estimates upon which the assessment was based were incorrect or that the land was assessed for more than its cash value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 881.]

2. TAXATION ⚷493(8)—ASSESSMENT—REVIEW BY COURT.

To warrant a reduction of an assessment upon appeal to this court, it must be shown that the means adopted by the assessor were wrong and that the result arrived at was greater than the actual cash value of the property assessed, in view of Laws 1913, p. 325, § 8, providing that, if the court finds that the assessment was made fairly and in good faith at actual cash value, the assessment shall be approved.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 882.]

3. TAXATION ⚷446—ASSESSMENT—REVIEW.

The valuation placed upon property by the assessor for the purpose of taxation is prima facie correct, and a party assailing an assessment as excessive must make it appear that the assessment does not represent the fair value of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 784–786.]

Department 2. Appeal from Circuit Court, Clackamas County; J. U. Campbell, Judge.

Petition by the Weyerhaeuser Land Company to the Board of Equalization of Clackamas County for the reduction of certain assessments. Relief was denied, and petitioner appealed to the circuit court, where the assessments were lowered. From the decree rendered, the county appeals. Reversed.

On September 19, 1914, the Weyerhaeuser Land Company filed with the board of equalization of Clackamas county, Or., its petition for the reduction of the assessment of certain lands for the purpose of taxation. It is specifically set forth therein, in substance: That all the property described was assessed at more than its true cash value on March 1, 1914. That the assessment was based on a certain cruise and estimate of the timber on said lands for the county which was incorrect:

Description of Property.				Assessor's Valuation.	Cash Value Alleged.	Should be Assessed Valuation.
	Sec.	Tp.	R.
All of	12	5 S	4 E	$28530	$14500	$ 8700
All of	14	5 S	4 E	33250	15500	9300
E ½ S E ¼ of S W ¼	20	5 S	4 E	33085	13000	7800
All of	24	5 S	4 E	35350	19500	11700
All of	20	6 S	4 E	17025	15500	9300
N ½	26	6 S	4 E	9120	5500	3300
All of	28	6 S	4 E	15930	15000	9000
Lots 1, 2, 3, 4 and E ½ of W ½	30	6 S	4 E	15255	13000	7800

That the assessment should be 60 per cent. of the cash value in accordance with the taxation of other timber land in that county and with the uniform system adopted by the assessor. The assessment was made upon the following basis, to wit: One dollar per acre for the real property exclusive of timber; 50 cents per 1,000 for merchantable yellow fir, red fir, spruce, cedar, larch, and pine timber on such real property; and 30 cents per 1,000 for the merchantable hemlock timber standing upon the lands. The assessment and valuation of the properties was made all in accordance with the amount thereof shown by a pretended cruise and report. Upon a reduction being denied by the board of equalization an appeal was taken by the Weyerhaeuser Land Company to the circuit court where, upon a hearing, findings of fact were made and, with the exception of two parcels, the value of the land was adjusted as prayed for in the petition as follows:

Description of Property.				Valuation.
	Sec.	Tp.	R.
All of	12	5 S	4 E	$16170.00
All of	14	5 S	4 E	13777.00
E ½, S E ¼ S W ¼	20	5 S	4 E	17630.00
All of	24	5 S	4 E	22673.50
All of	20	6 S	4 E	16824.00
N ½	26	6 S	4 E	5428.00
All of	28	6 S	4 E	15930.00
Lots 1, 2. 3, 4, and E ½, W ½	30	6 S	4 E	15255.00

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

*Rehearing denied September 19, 1917.

From a decree rendered accordingly, the county appeals, assigning error in so reducing the assessment.

On November 23, 1912, the county court of Clackamas county made a contract with M. G. Nease to make a careful cruise and estimate of the timber lands of that county. A bond for the faithful performance of such duty was required and given. Thereafter experienced timber cruisers employed by him cruised the timber on such lands, including the property in controversy. With a view to contesting the assessment, the Weyerhaeuser Land Company engaged expert cruisers and had the timber on the lands estimated. These men were witnesses in the case and supported their respective cruises by their sworn evidence. Other witnesses also testified in the case. The cruisers for the county qualified as witnesses and testified as to the merchantable timber on the lands in accordance with the following table:

	Stoddard.	Hart.	Olinger.	Clark.
All of Sec. 12 Tp. 5 S R 4 E	50,700,000 feet 8,300,000 feet
All of Sec. 14 Tp. 5 S R 4 E	44,400,000 feet 34,700,000 feet
E ½, S E ¼ of S W ¼ of Sec. 20 Tp. 5 S R 4 E		65,734,000 feet 400,000 feet
All of Sec. 24 Tp. 5 S R 4 E		68,350,000 feet 3,750,000 feet
All of Sec. 20 Tp. 6 S R 4 E			31,250,000 feet 2,535,000 feet
N ½ of Sec. 26 Tp. 6 S R 4 E				18,700,000 feet
All of Sec. 28 Tp. 6 S R 4 E			28,600,000 feet 3,300,000 feet
Lots 1, 2, 3, 4, and E ½ of W ½ of Sec. 30 Tp. 6 S R 4 E			27,400,000 feet 6,875,000 feet

The gist of the testimony of the witnesses for the company, who qualified as expert cruisers, as to the merchantable timber upon the premises, is shown by the following tabulation:

	McCutcheon.	Smith.	Williams.	Hamilton.	McDonald.
All of Sec. 12 Tp. 5 S R 4 E	Fir 15,871,000 ft. Hemlock 1,465,000	30,000,000 ft. 1,775,000 ft.	30,528,000 ft. not seg.
All of Sec. 14 Tp. 5 S R 4 E	12,594,000 ft. 6,520,000 ft.	22,145,000 ft. 6,885,000 ft.	21,721,000 ft. 8,000,000 ft.
E ½. S E ¼ of S W ¼ of Sec. 20 Tp. 5 S R 4 E	15,321,000 ft. 368,000 ft.	34,540,000 ft.	31,405,000 ft.
All of Sec. 24 Tp. 5 S R 4 E		43,675,000 ft. 665,000 ft.	45,375,000 ft.
All of Sec. 20 Tp. 6 S R 4 E				30,304,000 ft. 3,245,000 ft.	22,030,000 ft. 2,430,000 ft.
N ½ of Sec. 26 Tp. 6 S R 4 E	5,292,000 ft. 685,000 ft.			8,5[illegible],000 ft. 2,135,000 ft.	8,130,000 ft. 670,000 ft.
All of Sec. 28 Tp. 6 S R 4 E	18,450,000 ft. 2,365,000 ft.			29,103,000 ft. 4,155,000 ft.	26,885,000 ft. 3,695,000 ft.
Lots 1, 2, 3, 4, and E ½ W ½ Sec. 30 Tp. 6 S R 4 E	12,542,600 ft. 3,830,000 ft.			13,806,000 ft. 8,550,000 ft.	15,485,000 ft. 4,325,000 ft.

The different cruisers made notes of the kind and character of the timber, whether thrifty, sound, or defective, and an examination of the logging conditions. They also made a map of the different tracts showing to a certain extent the topography of the country, the different elevations, the streams, etc., and the location of areas where the timber was burned off or for any reason was lacking thereon.

Gilbert L. Hedges, of Oregon City (Wilbur, Spencer & Beckett, of Portland, on the brief), for appellant. E. V. Littlefield and C. L. Starr, both of Portland (Littlefield & Maguire, of Portland, on the brief), for respondent.

BEAN, J. (after stating the facts as above). It appears from the evidence that the assessor, who had had four or five years' experience in office, after obtaining the best information that he could, fixed the value of the timber on the lands involved at 50 cents per 1,000 for merchantable timber, except hemlock, which he valued at 30 cents. Some timber in that locality closer in to market he placed at a greater value. His good faith in the matter is not questioned by the taxpayer. While there is little contention here as to the value of the timber per 1,000, there was considerable evidence introduced on behalf of the property owner to the effect that in the opinion of its experts the timber had no actual, but only a chance or speculative, value on account of its location. With this claim we are unable to agree.

The following shows the trend of the evidence as to value: For the petitioner evidence was adduced in effect as follows: Mr. W. L. Smith testified that it was a very cheap stumpage and would have to be held for a long time; that he would not want to say it was worth 50 cents per 1,000. George Williams' testimony is in substance that the timber and ground were rough. The opinion of J. A. Hamilton was shown by his saying that he "would not recommend any man to purchase that amount of timber regardless of price," because the country was rough and hard to log; that in section 20 the cost of logging would more than overbalance the value of the timber; that as to sections 20 and 26 the sum of $9,400 each was more than they were worth; that the latter section in his opinion had no present market value; that no timber on the Molalla river (in the vicinity of which the timber in question is located) had any commercial value at the time he looked at it; that he "would not recommend to any man to put a two-bit piece in that country in any section that I cruised." Alex McDonald stated that to transport the timber probably 20 miles of railroad would have to be built from Molalla; that "the first 9 miles is right through the valley and very easy to build"; that up the river it was rocky, and there was a 1,200-foot grade to overcome; that $12 or $14 an acre was enough for the land. Other witnesses testified to the same purport. We note this evidence for the purpose of demonstrating that there was a tendency to cry down the worth of the timber. This is only natural, as it is to be expected that a property owner will endeavor to have his property assessed as low as possible. We believe from this that agents of the owner who were working for the purpose of assailing the assessment would naturally be inclined in the selection of merchantable timber and in estimating the amount thereof to minimize the same.

On the other hand, on behalf of the county the following is an example of the testimony: Mr. M. F. McCowan, a cruiser, testifying in regard to the timber on section 12, stated that it was of a good quality, worth $1 per thousand, and some of it was old but not very defective. In regard to section 14, the witness said: That the elevation was high; that "the fir is not very good. The lower part, on the creeks, is better. But the larch is of a good quality." That the logging conditions were "not as good as they were on 12, but not bad. That it was a downhill pull to Clear creek, and a good grade. That the timber was worth $1 per 1,000; that as to section 25 the hemlock and spruce were worth $1 per 1,000 and the fir $2. That the logging was good for hauling the timber to Canyon creek.

It is shown that the county cruisers, with the exception of Mr. Hart, who went through a 40-acre tract twice, cruised the timber by what is termed the "square method," going through once and measuring and counting the trees on 8 acres of the 40. The cruisers for the company made a "four-time cruise" going through a 40 four times thus dividing it into 10-acre strips. Much stress is laid upon this method by petitioner as being more accurate. It is explained on behalf of the county that a four-time cruise is better if there is a great distinction in the different kinds of timber, but that it is no better if the timber is even.

[1] From a careful study of all the evidence and the above tables, it does not appear that the difference in the manner of cruising would account for, or cause, the radical variation in the amount of timber cruised as between the cruisers for the county and those for the company; nor is it shown that the estimates upon which the assessment was based were incorrect or that the value of the land, of which the timber was an important ingredient or factor in fixing its value, was more than the actual cash value or more than a fair valuation for the assessment as made in that county. The petitioner undertook to prove that the rating of the kinds of timber mentioned at 50 and 30 cents per 1,000 was too great. In this it failed. It was incumbent upon it to show that the amount of timber which was the basis of a large part of the assessed value as shown by the cruise made on behalf of the county was too large. This it endeavored to do, but in this it also failed.

[2] It is not enough to show that some method other than that adopted by the assessor in making the assessment would be better. In such case, it must be shown that the means adopted by that official, are wrong, and that the result arrived at is greater than the actual cash value of the property assessed. Leaving out of the question the burden of proof as to the value of the property, we believe from the evidence that the county's cruise is a fairly accurate estimate conscientiously made by competent men, who testified in support thereof, thereby authenticating the count; and that it was fairly and judicially adopted by the assessor who placed a conservative value thereon which, added to the small sum of $1 per acre for the land, constituted a valid assessment which has not been successfully assailed by the taxpayer. We are wholly governed by the evidence in this matter. To a large extent an assessment depends upon one's judgment. If the method by which the assessor arrived at the value of the property was correct and the assessment was in good faith fairly made, we are not permitted, under the statute as we read it, to pit our judgment as to the value against that of the assessor, although other men of equal ability and fairness might differ in estimating the value of the property. Injecting another estimate into the consideration of the case would inevitably change the method or system and tend to destroy the approximate uniformity. The assessor acts judicially, yet his finding as to the valuation is much the same as the verdict of the jury upon a question of fact.

As to the law, the important question involved is largely governed by chapter 184, Laws 1913, p. 325, section 8 of which in part directs thus upon an appeal from the action of the board of equalization:

> "If, upon hearing, the court finds the amount at which the property was finally assessed by the board of equalization is its actual full cash value, and the assessment was made fairly and in good faith, it shall approve such assessment; but if it finds that the assessment was made at a greater or less sum than the actual full cash value of the property, or if the same was not fairly or in good faith made, it shall set aside such assessment and determine such value."

[3] It appears to be a firmly established rule that the valuation placed upon property by the assessor for the purpose of taxation is prima facie correct, and a party assailing such an assessment as excessive must make it clearly appear that the assessment does not represent the fair value of the property assessed. Steel v. Fell, 29 Or. 272, 45 Pac. 794; Oregon Coal Co. v. Coos County, 30 Or. 308, 310, 47 Pac. 851; So. Oregon Co. v. Coos Co., 39 Or. 185, 64 Pac. 646; Elmore Packing Co. v. Tillamook County, 55 Or. 218, 222, 105 Pac. 898; No. Pac. Ry. Co. v. Clatsop Co., 74 Or. 250, 256, 145 Pac. 271; People v. Davenport, 91 N. Y. 581; 37 Cyc. 1069, 1104, et seq.

Some clerical errors are mentioned by the assessor in his evidence which should be corrected. It follows that the judgment of the trial court must be reversed, and the assessment as made by the assessor of Clackamas county, after correcting the errors named, and as equalized by the board of equalization of that county, is approved.

MOORE, BURNETT, and McCAMANT, JJ., concur.

(84 Or. 627)

SHANE v. GORDON.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 26, 1917.)

MORTGAGES 🔑319(3)—AGREEMENT TO SURRENDER MORTGAGE AND NOTE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In suit to cancel a note and mortgage, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that defendant agreed to surrender the note and mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 863, 875, 913, 1366.]

Department 1. Appeal from Circuit Court, Washington County; Geo. R. Bagley, Judge.

Suit by J. C. Shane against J. D. Gordon. From a decree for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Decree affirmed.

This is a suit to cancel a note and mortgage. J. D. Gordon owned 16 acres of land in Yamhill county; and on May 20, 1912, he agreed in writing to sell the premises to John G. Shane, F. A. Shane, and M. Z. Shane for $5,028. The contract recites that $1,000 was paid at the time of the execution of the writing, and that the remainder of the purchase price was payable on or before 3 years after May 20, 1912, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. No cash was paid to Gordon, but on the day of the execution of the contract John G. Shane and Johanna C. Shane gave their note for $1,000, payable on or before 3 years after date, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum, to the order of J. D. Gordon. The note was secured by a mortgage executed by Johanna C. Shane on 79 acres of land owned by her in Washington county. Johanna C. Shane was not interested in the Yamhill county land, and she only signed the note and gave the mortgage to accommodate her brother John G. Shane and her sisters F. A. Shane and M. Z. Shane. John G. Shane and M. Z. Shane took possession of the Yamhill county land soon after May 20, 1912, and resided there until about June 1, 1914, when they vacated the premises. The Shanes paid all the interest due on May 20, 1913, amounting to $301.68, and on May 20, 1914, interest on the note, amounting to $60 was paid, but no other payments were made. Gordon entered into possession of the property immediately after it was vacated by the Shanes. Within 60 days from June 1, 1914, Gordon exchanged the 16 acres in Yamhill county for land in Lane county. Gordon says that the Lane county land was valued at $7,500, but it was incumbered with a $2,500 mortgage; and, therefore, if the valuation placed upon the Lane county land is taken as the standard, the Yamhill county property was worth $5,000 in 1914, as well as in 1912, when the Shanes contracted to purchase. The plaintiff claims that her brother and sisters vacated the property and relinquished all their rights to it with an agreement on the part of Gordon that he would surrender the note and mortgage whenever he sold or disposed of the property. The defendant denies that he agreed to surrender the note and mortgage. Gordon refused to cancel the note and mortgage, and the plaintiff then commenced this suit. The trial court decreed the cancellation of the note and mortgage, and the defendant appealed.

E. C. Bronaugh, of Portland (Bronaugh & Bronaugh, of Portland, on the brief), for appellant. Wm. G. Hare, of Hillsboro, for respondent.

HARRIS, J. (after stating the facts as above). The only question involved in this suit is whether Gordon agreed to surrender the note and mortgage. The evidence for the defendant contradicts the evidence for the plaintiff, and it is impossible to harmonize the version of one party with that of the other. If the occurrences were as narrated by John G. Shane and one of his sisters, the conclusion is inevitable that Gordon agreed to surrender the note and mortgage; but, on the other hand, the plaintiff must fail if John G. Shane did no more than merely to tell Gordon that:

> "He had just been to the doctor, and the doctor advised him he would have to give up, and he was not able to farm any more, and he would have to give up, and he said consequently he would have to give up the place; he couldn't work it."

John G. Shane was in Gordon's office on the morning of May 20, 1914. Gordon says that John G. Shane was in the office twice that morning, and he is corroborated by a witness who was present on both occasions. Gordon says that John G. Shane did not visit his office again that day, while Shane says that he met Gordon in his office that evening, about 7:30 o'clock, and at that time they agreed that the Shanes would surrender the property, and that Gordon would surrender the note and mortgage. If the agreement was made at all it was made in the evening when no persons were present in the office except Gordon and John G. Shane and while a sister of the latter was outside sitting in a buggy. The version of one party cannot be harmonized with the other. The trial judge had the advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses, and he concluded that the preponderance of the evidence was with the plaintiff. S. W. Childers testified that Gordon's reputation for veracity was bad, and another witness swore that some people said Gordon's reputation was bad. Eliminating the testimony of Childers, because he was unfriendly to Gordon, and ignoring what was said by the other witness mentioned, there is nevertheless testimony given by J. D. Crater impeaching the veracity of the defendant. The subsequent conduct of John G. Shane and his sisters rather indicates that they understood, at least, that Gordon had agreed to surrender the note and mortgage. Presumably the land was worth $5,000 because the Shanes agreed to pay that sum for it, and Gordon subsequently traded it for that valuation; and if the land was worth $5,000 it is reasonable to suppose that Shane would have attempted to save all or a part of the note and mortgage rather than make no attempt whatever, especially when he could have compelled Gordon to foreclose the contract. Notwithstanding the fact that Gordon was engaged in the real estate business, he would not give an estimate of the rental value of the land; and it is fair to assume that the interest received by him was in excess of a reasonable rental value. A complete review of all the evidence would serve no good purpose; and it is sufficient to say that the entire record has been carefully examined by more than a single member of this court, with the result that, while the testimony is conflicting, nevertheless following the rule in Scott v. Hubbard, 67 Or. 498, 505, 136 Pac. 653, we take it as true that the evidence preponderates in favor of the plaintiff, since the trial court found for the plaintiff. Goff v. Kelsey, 78 Or. 337, 348, 153 Pac. 103.

The decree is affirmed.

McBRIDE, C. J., and BENSON and BURNETT, JJ., concur. McCAMANT, J., took no part in the consideration of this case.

(84 Or. 624)

BUSTER v. MARION COUNTY.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 26, 1917.)

INFANTS ⚷12½, New, vol. 17 Key-No. Series — MOTHER'S PENSION — DEPENDENCY OF CHILDREN.

Under Mothers' Pension Act, Laws 1913, p. 75, § 4, providing that the act shall not apply to a child having property of its own sufficient for its support, and L. O. L. § 1346, providing for sale of minors' real estate when necessary for their support, where children were left by their father 80 acres of uncultivated land subject to their mother's dower interest, she was not entitled to benefits of the pension act until such land had been disposed of according to law and the proceeds exhausted in caring for the children.

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Marion County; Wm. Galloway, Judge.

Application by Grace E. Buster for widow's pension against the County of Marion, State of Oregon. From an order for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and rendered.

The juvenile court of Marion county made an order allowing plaintiff a pension of $10 a month for the support of herself and two children, both under the age of 16 years, under the provisions of what is known as the Mothers' Pension Act, chapter 42, Laws 1913, as amended by chapter 90, Laws 1915. From this order plaintiff appealed to the circuit court, contending that the juvenile court erred in finding that the children were not wholly dependent upon the labor of the mother for their support by reason of the fact that she owned a half acre tract of land about three miles east of Salem with a dwelling house and other buildings thereon and, in addition to a vegetable garden, kept chickens. Upon a trial in the circuit court, a decree was entered allowing plaintiff a pension of $17.50 per month, dating from May 4, 1916, the date of her first application, and the county appeals.

Max Gehlhar, Dist. Atty., and Jas. G. Heltzel, both of Salem, for appellant. Frank A. Turner, of Salem, for respondent.

BENSON, J. (after stating the facts as above). From the application filed by the mother, it appears that her husband died January 7, 1914, leaving an estate consisting of $1,288 in money derived from life insurance, and 80 acres of uncultivated land in Lincoln county; that $800 of this was expended by the widow in paying her husband's debts, and with the remainder she purchased the one-half acre upon which she resides. From the testimony given upon the trial in the circuit court, it appears that the 80-acre tract was incumbered with a mortgage of $250 for borrowed money which was one of the debts paid by the widow; the land being now free from liens. This tract of land is the property of the children subject to the mother's dower interest. No effort has been made to convert this land into money. Section 4 of the statute involved reads thus:

> "The provisions of this act shall not apply to any child which has property of its own sufficient for its support, nor to any child which does not reside with its mother." Chapter 42, Laws 1913.

Section 1346, L. O. L., provides for the sale of real estate belonging to minors when necessary for their support. The record does not disclose the market value of the land owned by the children in this case; but, until it is disposed of according to law and the proceeds exhausted in caring for the children, the plaintiff is not entitled to the benefits of the pension act.

The decree of the circuit court must therefore be reversed, ad one entered here dismissing the application.

BURNETT and MOORE, JJ., took no part in the consideration of this case.

(85 Or. 68)

STEWART v. MANN et al.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. July 10, 1917.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER 🔑337 — FORECLOSURE OF VENDEE'S LIEN—EFFECT OF DENIAL OF LIABILITY.

Where vendor had absolutely denied any liability under and repudiated contract with vendee in proceedings for foreclosure of vendee's lien, vendor could not claim vendee's failure to cultivate premises as agreed upon.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 985–990.]

Department No. 2. Appeal from Circuit Court, Washington County; Geo. R. Bagley, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Rehearing denied.

For former opinion, see 165 Pac. 590.

Geo. Arthur Brown, of Portland (Ray B. Compton, of Portland, on the brief), for appellant. Leroy Lomax, of Portland, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The defendant's petition for rehearing would be very persuasive if it were founded upon a correct premise. It charges in substance that the plaintiff sought to compel the admission from the defendant that both he and his predecessor in interest had violated the terms of the contract under which the plaintiff was to purchase the property in that they had not cultivated the orchard on the premises in the manner prescribed. This, however, is not the ground upon which the defendant placed his return of the money and his abjuration of the contract.

It will be remembered that Stewart protested at the time he made the last payment and claimed that the defendant and the company had failed to comply with the stipulations of the contract for the cultivation and establishment of the orchard, and that there should be an abatement of the purchase price to cover the default. As showing the position which the defendant took it is only necessary to quote his letter dated July 14, 1914, addressed to the plaintiff, saying:

> "Inclosed herewith I hand you check $79.15 which you sent me July 2d. I also inclose a certified check for the sum of one hundred and sixty dollars and sixty cents, being the amount of the payments made by you to me heretofore on your contract with Chehalem Mountain Orchard Company on account of tracts fifty-four and part of tract fifty-three, as provided in your contract. You are certainly very much mistaken in your conclusion in this matter. When I purchased the land from the trustees in bankruptcy, I by no means assumed the payment of the debts of the bankrupt, and you have no right to believe or think so, from anything I have ever said or done. I gave you to understand that I was willing to assume your contract as a separate individual contract and deal between ourselves; that is, I was willing to deed you the land making you a good title upon the payment to me of the balance due under your contract. I could sell the land for more money than is due under your contract, or think I could do so, but I was willing to let you have the land for the amount yet due under your contract, but I certainly did not assume the debt of the bankrupt. You can readily see that one would be very foolish to do such a thing, and you have no right to expect such a thing from me. You say in your letter that you intend to institute suit against me to recover money which you paid the Chehalem Mountain Orchards Company under your contract. You should have presented any claim you had against the company to the referee in bankruptcy, as no one assumed those liabilities, and you never heard of any one assuming the liabilities of a bankrupt in purchasing the assets of one who has gone into bankruptcy. Because of your misunderstanding of the matter I am returning the money to you, and I certainly would not let you have the land for the amount yet due under your contract with the bankrupt, and in addition to that make good any amounts you had lost on the bankrupt.
>
> "Yours respectfully,
>
> "[Signed] S. M. Mann."

It will be recalled that the land was sold by the trustee in bankruptcy subject to the contract, and that the defendant accepted a deed containing the condition to the effect that he himself expressly agreed to assume as part of the purchase price the incumbrances upon the property, including the contract in question. His letter above quoted constitutes a repudiation of his covenant.

He did not justify his course at that time by the assertion that he and his predecessor had complied with the contract, but proceeded on the basis of there being no liability whatever on his part. Whatever his reason may be he committed a breach of the contract in his renunciation of it. He cannot at this time mend his hold and take up the question of whether or not the orchard was cultivated as agreed upon. Having denied any liability in any event he must abide by his position thus assumed. The deed he had taken made him liable, and when he disavowed that liability the plaintiff was entitled to consider it as a breach, and to proceed in foreclosure of his vendee's lien upon the premises.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

McBRIDE, C. J., and MOORE and BEAN, JJ., concur.

(84 Or. 610)

MARMENI v. BELLARTS.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 26, 1917.)

Department 1. Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah County; H. H. Belt, Judge.

On rehearing.

For former opinion, see 164 Pac. 955.

Henry M. Kimball, of Portland, for appellant. E. B. Seabrook, of Portland (Malarkey, Seabrook & Dibble, of Portland, on the brief), for respondent.

BENSON, J. In support of his motion for rehearing counsel for appellant urges that the former opinion herein must have been hasty and ill-considered by reason of the fact that the opinion discusses certain allegations of the affirmative answer in regard to which there is no evidence in the record. By some inadvertence it is true that the writer of the former opinion did refer to such portion of the answer upon the theory that it was not denied in the reply, and this is error. However, we have again read the testimony line by line, considering every suggestion made by counsel, and are unable to discover any good reason for changing the conclusion reached in the former opinion.

The rehearing is therefore denied.

McBRIDE, C. J., and BURNETT, J., concur.

HARRIS, J. (concurring). The plaintiff earnestly insists that the conclusions expressed in the original opinion are not sustained by the evidence, and that a rehearing should be granted. In the original opinion it is stated that:

> "In 1912 property values were elevated. When Marmeni purchased there was talk of the construction of a bridge which would have materially benefited the property, but at the fall election the proposal to build the bridge was defeated. With the year 1914 came financial depression and marked reductions in realty values. The property was amply worth the price in 1912, but it was not worth the price in 1914."

When checking over the pleadings, as printed in the abstract of record, paragraphs XI and XII of the answer and cross-complaint were treated as admitted by reason of the supposed failure of the plaintiff to deny them, but a re-examination of the abstract discloses that those two paragraphs were denied; and hence the quoted statements are not fully justified by the record, although the subject of the bridge and the decrease in realty values received more than passing notice at the time of the hearing. While there was no evidence concerning the bridge, for the reason that the court sustained an objection to an offer of the defendant to show the facts regarding the bridge, nevertheless there was enough evidence to warrant the inference that the property was worth the purchase price in 1912. Deluchi, who was "in the real estate business," said that at first Bellarts asked $4,000 for the property, but he consented to sell for $3,750. Deluchi considered the selling price was the fair value of the land, for in the language of his testimony:

> "I thought that was a fair purchase price. I told Mr. Bellarts, 'You know a real estate man tries to compromise, that is, wants to do the fair thing for both.'"

However, it is not essential, and perhaps not even important, to know the difference between the values in 1912 and in 1914, although evidence of a material reduction in value, if competent at all, might tend to throw light upon the motives actuating Marmeni. In some jurisdictions the courts have taken judicial notice of a general depression in values of real estate (7 Ency. of Ev. 934); but we shall assume, without deciding, that by reason of the language in section 729, L. O. L., courts cannot take judicial notice of a general financial depression; and therefore not only what was said in the original opinion about the bridge, but also what was said concerning the value of the premises in 1914, as well as all of the discussion about the bridge and values at the time of the hearing, will be laid out of the case.

Deluchi received a letter from J. Landigan on July 22 or 23, 1913. Deluchi immediately informed Marmeni of the letter, and while the original opinion is not accurate in declaring that Marmeni "consulted with Montrezza" about this letter, it is nevertheless accurate to say that Montrezza was notified of the claim made in the Landigan letter, for, according to the testimony of Montrezza, "Mr. Deluchi brought it to my attention himself."

The petition for a rehearing questions the correctness of the statements made in the original opinion about the preparation of the $40 receipt. Montrezza had not yet been admitted to practice as an attorney at law when Marmeni purchased the property, and on that account Montrezza was unusually painstaking. He explained that he was very careful when examining the papers in Strowbridge's office, and he said that he was likewise careful in the preparation of the receipt, for he testified thus:

> "I remember being naturally, you may say, waiting to be an attorney, and as an attorney to be at the time I was careful what I was doing, as I had quite a large Italian practice at the time, before I was admitted."

The plaintiff urges that Montrezza inserted the description of the property in the receipt at the time of the payment of the $40. The description may have been written in the receipt at the time Bellarts signed it; and yet the fact remains that Marmeni testified that "Mr. Montrezza drew that up before we went to Mr. Bellarts." No witness testified that the description was inserted after Marmeni, Deluchi, and Montrezza visited the premises. The receipt was not produced; but the evidence overwhelmingly shows that the receipt mentioned the premises. Montrezza testified thus:

> "I don't remember whether I had the number of the lot or block, or the dimensions, or location of the property."

Whether Montrezza obtained the description or dimensions of the property before or at the time Bellarts signed the receipt is not material, because the ultimate fact is that he had "something connected with the dimensions or location of the property." While Montrezza testified that "Mr. Marmeni paid me something for looking over the premises," and Marmeni swore that "I didn't pay him anything," nevertheless Marmeni is confronted with the indisputable facts that Montrezza prepared the receipt, was present when Bellarts signed it, was also present when the final papers were signed and passed, and was acting for and in behalf of Marmeni. Montrezza knew what property was being sold, because he wrote the receipt. Montrezza was the agent of Marmeni, and his knowledge was the knowledge of Marmeni.

When a witness for the plaintiff, Deluchi said that, while he did not measure the distance from "the front to the back, between the two fences," he was "positive it was over 100," but that it appeared "fully over 100 feet," and that "anybody could see that." In his printed brief Marmeni says that he "examined the premises and observed the boundaries, but did not appreciate the distance." If Marmeni is to be judged by his own evidence, it will become reasonably certain that he has at least a fair idea of measurements and distances. When asked about his estimate of the dimensions of the house and after protesting that "I am a poor judge about that," he said that the house "must be more than 45 by 50; must be about 45 by 60, something like that; I am just guessing."

If Bellarts is liable at all, it is because of what Marmeni says that Deluchi told him. It is true that Marmeni testified that Bellarts told him when the receipt was signed that "everything Deluchi showed me inside the fence was all mine," but it is also true that Bellarts denied this, and, although present on the occasion mentioned, neither Montrezza nor Deluchi undertook to corroborate Marmeni.

While Bellarts is responsible for whatever Deluchi said, by the same token Marmeni is chargeable with whatever he himself knew, and also with whatever Montrezza learned when acting as his agent. When speaking of the knowledge with which Marmeni was chargeable, the circuit judge who saw the witnesses and heard them testify remarked that:

> "A man who was so diligent as Mr. Marmeni in accumulating money in his business with which to buy property, it seems to me he would ascertain how many feet there were in the lot. I believe that Marmeni knew the dimensions of that lot after the examination of the abstract, because an attorney could not help by the reading of the abstract know that the lot was 45 feet frontage and 81.8 feet deep; that is the property which he was buying."

The evidence shows that Marmeni knew or must be deemed to have known that it was more than 100 feet from the front fence to the rear fence, which, he says, was pointed out to him as the boundary of the premises. He knew or must be deemed to have known that the property described in the receipt and deed delivered to him and in the mortgage signed by him was only 81.8 feet in length; and consequently he is in no position to claim that he was defrauded, especially, after the long delay which followed the Landigan letter in 1913. The transcript of the testimony was read twice before the preparation of the original opinion, and a third reading has only confirmed the conclusion there expressed.

A petition for a rehearing should be denied.

(84 Or. 631)

SMITH v. DIRECTOR et al.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 26, 1917.)

Appeal and Error ⚷597(3) — Proof of Service of Notice of Appeal.

Presence in the transcript of proof of service of notice of appeal is jurisdictional.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2364.]

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah County; Geo. N. Davis, Judge.

Action by H. C. Smith against N. Director and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

S. J. Silverman, of Portland, for appellant. Morris A. Goldstein, of Portland, for respondents.

BENSON, J. The transcript discloses that the notice of appeal was filed February 14, 1917, but does not contain any proof of service thereof. Appellant has filed his affidavit

---

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes to the effect that he did serve the notice of appeal and file proof thereof, but that such proof was lost or mislaid in the clerk's office. Since the presence of such proof in the transcript is jurisdictional (Wolf v. Smith, 6 Or. 73), the motion must be allowed, and the appeal is dismissed.

(84 Or. 637)

ROBERTS v. BODLEY.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 26, 1917.)

EVIDENCE 🔑269(1)—MENTAL STATE AS ISSUABLE FACT—DECLARATION AS EVIDENCE.

In suit to recover the price of a mare which plaintiff claimed he sold and delivered to defendant, where plaintiff took the mare to defendant's farm for trial, and claimed that defendant worked her, said she would answer, and promised to pay for her, but defendant contended that when plaintiff went away, they agreed that he would give the mare a further trial, and return her if she proved unsatisfactory, testimony that after plaintiff went away the witness said to defendant: "Are you going to take the animal?" and he answered: "I am not perfectly satisfied with her. As soon as I get the kale in I will work her on the hay"—was competent as tending to show defendant's state of mind as to whether the mare suited him, there being nothing to show that defendant's remark was other than a perfectly natural and spontaneous expression indicating the state of his mind.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1063.]

In banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Clackamas County; J. U. Campbell, Judge.

Action by William P. Roberts against Donald Bodley. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiff sues to recover from the defendant $150 alleged to be the reasonable and agreed price to be paid for a mare which the plaintiff says he sold and delivered to the defendant. The answer denies the whole complaint and avers in substance that the plaintiff offered to sell the mare to the defendant and the latter took her on trial, agreeing to purchase her if she proved satisfactory, but after testing her she proved to be unsatisfactory to him, whereupon he returned her to the plaintiff who has ever since then had possession of her. No reply appears in the abstract. It seems, however, that the case was heard as though issue had been joined on the new matter in the answer.

The only assignment of error argued in the brief is grounded upon the following: It seems that the plaintiff took the animal to the defendant's farm for trial. The contention of Roberts is that the defendant worked her, said she would answer every purpose, and promised to pay for her on the following Saturday or Sunday whereupon the plaintiff left. Bodley maintained that when Roberts went away it was agreed between them that he would give her a further trial and return her if she proved unsatisfactory. The defendant called a witness named Kelliker, who testified that he was present on that occasion, and while the defendant was driving the mare hitched with another horse to a disc harrow the witness said to Roberts, "That is a pretty fair animal." Roberts answered, "It is gentle, but has not been worked for some time." He then testified that the defendant drove up, and when the witness asked him, "Are you going to take the mare?" Bodley replied, "Well, I will have to try her out, and if she proves satisfactory to me I might then." All this conversation took place in the presence of the plaintiff, and no objection was made to that, but the court allowed the witness further to testify about what was said after Roberts had gone away: "Then I went on helping to plant kale, and Don [meaning Bodley] went on around a few more times and Mr. Roberts went away, and I said to Don, 'Do you think you will take the animal?'" The objection to the testimony as narration of something said in the absence of the plaintiff having been overruled, the witness continued: "So Mr. Roberts went away and I said to Don, 'Are you going to take the animal?' and he said: 'I am not perfectly satisfied with her. As soon as I get the kale in I will work her on the hay.'" The admission in evidence of Bodley's answer to Kelliker's query propounded in the absence of Roberts constitutes the only fault urged by the plaintiff against the proceedings at the trial. The jury returned a verdict for the defendant. The plaintiff appeals from the resulting judgment.

C. D. Purcell and B. N. Hicks, both of Portland, for appellant. George Tazwell, of Portland, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. (after stating the facts as above). It was in issue before the jury whether the mare suited the defendant. This involved the state of his mind on that subject, and the question is whether the declarations of the defendant to the witness Kelliker are competent for the proof of that matter. The plaintiff cites in support of his attack upon the ruling of the court Sullivan v. O. R. & N. Co., 12 Or. 392, 7 Pac. 508, 53 Am. Rep. 364, and Fredenthal v. Brown, 52 Or. 33, 95 Pac. 1114. In the Sullivan Case the plaintiff sued to recover damages for a hurt received by him when ejected from one of the defendant's trains. After having testified to the matter in question himself he called a witness, who stated in substance that two or three minutes after the train in question had passed he heard some one call out, and on going to the spot he found the plaintiff, who said in effect, answering an inquiry of the witness about what was the matter, that the conductor pushed him off or threw him off the train. This court rejected that testimony as not being part of the res gestæ. In the Fredenthal Case the plaintiff was hurt by the fall of a sling load of lumber during the loading of a ship upon which he was working as a stevedore. As imputing blame to the defendant the plaintiff offered the statement of the engineer in charge of the donkey engine used in handling the lumber in purport that he could not hold the load with the machine then in use. In both these cases the effort was to prove the principal fact in dispute by testimony which was not part of the res gestæ. An act apparent to the senses and capable of description was the subject of inquiry in each of those cases. The subsequent declarations were not part of that act, and lacked the spontaneity necessary to make them so. Here the fact sought to be established, although vital to the defendant's case, is the state of mind of the defendant, whether of satisfaction or dissatisfaction with the mare alleged to have been sold to him. The phenomena by which mental conditions are usually ascertained are the words and actions of the individual whose mind is under consideration. Indeed there is but little else available as primary proof in such a case. If what he says is spontaneous and devoid of malingery, it is received as original evidence to aid the jury in ascertaining the ultimate fact in dispute which, in this instance, was the state of Bodley's mind, whether satisfied or not with the quality of the animal. Much depends on the circumstances of each case. The trial judge is vested with discretion in the premises to reject as self-serving those expressions uttered so remotely as to give them the flavor of being manufactured for the occasion and to receive those manifestly spontaneous as indicative of the true mental situation under scrutiny.

The matter of the admissibility of the declarations of one whose attitude of mind at the time is being considered was exhaustively treated by Mr. Justice Harris, a writer of one of the majority opinions in State v. Farnam, 82 Or. 211, 161 Pac. 417. The defendant there was accused of murdering Edna Morgan. It was necessary to prove that she met him and went with him to a barn where her dead body was afterwards found. Witnesses were permitted to state that during the afternoon before her disappearance she refused to go home with them because, as she said "she could not, as she thought Roy [meaning the defendant] was coming down." This testimony was assailed by the defendant on the ground that it was hearsay, not part of the res gestæ, and that the declaration of the girl was made not in his presence. After an extended review of the authorities on that side of the question the discussion is summed up thus:

> "If the doing of an act is a material question, then the existence of a design or plan to do that specific act is relevant to show that the act was probably done; and, considering the plan or design as a condition of the mind, a person's own statements of a present existing state of mind, when made in a natural manner and under circumstances dispelling suspicion and containing no suggestion of sinister motives, only reflect the mental state, and therefore are competent to prove the condition of the mind, or, in other words, the plan or design."

In the instant case the talk between Kelliker and the defendant was virtually a continuance of the conversation begun in the presence of the plaintiff, although at the moment he had left the scene. There is nothing to show that it was other than a perfectly natural and spontaneous expression on the part of the defendant indicating the state of his mind on the subject of whether he was satisfied with the animal. On the hypothesis that the doctrine elucidated by Mr. Justice Harris is sound law in a case where the lifelong liberty of the defendant was involved, it is controlling in a horse trade where the plaintiff still has the horse and the defendant retains the purchase money.

The judgment is affirmed.

(85 Or. 78)

THARP v. JACKSON.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. July 10, 1917.)

1. Executors and Administrators 🔑431(2) —Action on Claim—Condition Precedent —Presentation.

An action at law on a claim against an estate must be based on the same claim as that presented to deceased's personal representative.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 764, 767, 819.]

2. Executors and Administrators 🔑431(2) — Action on Claim — Previous Presentation.

Where plaintiff's action against an estate for personal services was for the same amount and services as her claim presented to the administratrix, it was not defeated by the fact that evidence on which she relied was not stated in the claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Executors and Administrators, Cent. Dig. §§ 764, 767, 819.]

Department No. 2. Appeal from Circuit Court, Douglas County; James W. Hamilton, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Rehearing denied.

For former opinion, see 165 Pac. 585.

Neuner & Wimberly, of Roseburg, for appellant. John T. Long, of Roseburg, H. T. Bagley, of Hillsboro, and Arthur Langguth, of Portland, for respondent.

McCAMANT, J. Appellant's petition for rehearing reargues the matters determined in the former opinion (165 Pac. 585), and presents with much force a question which was passed upon by us only inferentially. The claim presented to the administratrix does not set out the agreement testified to by plaintiff to the effect that she was not to be paid for her services until five years after she entered the office of the deceased. It is contended that the failure to mention this agreement in the claim precludes its assertion by plaintiff in this action. It has been held that if the claim presented shows on its face that claimant has no cause of action, the claim cannot be the basis of a successful litigation with the executor. Wilkes v. Cornelius, 21 Or. 348, 352, 28 Pac. 135; McGrath v. Carroll, 110 Cal. 79, 42 Pac. 466, 468.

[1] The action at law must be based on the same claim as that presented to the personal representatives of the deceased. Wilkes v. Cornelius and McGrath v. Carroll, supra; Etchas v. Orena, 127 Cal. 588, 60 Pac. 45.

[2] Within the rule announced by these authorities we think that plaintiff's claim presented to the administratrix is sufficient to sustain the judgment she has recovered. It was held by this court in Wilkes v. Cornelius, 21 Or. 348, 350-351, 28 Pac. 135, 136, that:

> "The facts constituting the claim need not be stated with the same particularity required in a pleading in an action at law, but may be asserted in general terms; and however informal the claim may be, if it show a substantial liability in favor of the claimant and against the estate, it will be sufficient."

The claim demands the same sum as that for which this action is brought. Like this action it is based on a quantum meruit for services rendered, and the services are specified in the claim as they are specified in the verified statement of plaintiff's account furnished the defendant on demand. The claim does not appear to be barred by the statute of limitations; on the contrary, nearly all the services rendered are alleged to have been performed within six years prior to the death of defendant's decedent. It was not necessary for plaintiff to set up in her claim the evidence on which she relied to support it. The former opinion is adhered to, and the petition for a rehearing is denied.

McBRIDE, C. J., and MOORE and BEAN, JJ., concur.

(85 Or. 251)

REICHERT v. SOOY-SMITH.*

(Supreme Court of Oregon. June 26, 1917.)

1. Mortgages 🔑603—Mortgagee in Possession—Compensation for Improvements.

Purchaser of an orchard at mortgage foreclosure sale cannot, after the debtor has redeemed the property, recover his expenses and the value of his servies in attempting to eradicate pear blight from the orchard, since, under L. O. L. § 248, as to manner of redemption, debtor is not required to pay such purchaser the moneys necessarily expended by him in preserving the estate from loss and injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1783-1785.]

2. Mortgages 🔑602—Redemption—Use and Occupation.

Redemptor may recover of purchaser at foreclosure sale the reasonable value of the use and occupation of the premises during the time they were in his possession, without regard to what purchaser may have realized therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1778-1782.]

3. Mortgages 🔑603—Use and Occupation—Set-Off.

Purchaser of land at foreclosure sale may set off against reasonable value of use and occupation of premises during time they were in his possession money spent in care and cultivation of property and in protecting it from deterioration, together with reasonable value of his own services in such work.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1783-1785.]

Department 1. Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; Frank M. Calkins, Judge.

Action by S. F. Reichert against Josephine Sooy-Smith. Judgment for plaintiff, from which both parties appeal. Reversed on appeal of defendant, and remanded.

A mortgage upon a certain orchard of 19 acres having been foreclosed in the regular way, one F. L. Tou Velle became the purchaser at execution sale, and thereafter the plaintiff bought from Tou Velle all of his interest in the premises. Plaintiff entered into possession of the property, cultivated, pruned, sprayed, and otherwise cared for the fruit trees for nearly a year, and, having harvested the crop, received therefor the gross sum of $166.89. A few days before the expiration of the year following the confirmation of the sale the defendant redeemed the property by paying the amount of the purchase price with 10 per cent. interest and resumed possession of the premises. Thereafter plaintiff began this action to recover the expenditures and services in caring for the orchard during the time that he was in possession as such purchaser. The portions of the complaint deemed important in the consideration of the case are as follows:

> "That said premises and the whole thereof constitute an orchard tract, and at the time of said sale, and ever since said time, have had, and now have, growing thereon, certain pear, apple, peach, plum, and cherry trees, most of which are now in bearing, producing fruit of a commercial nature, character, and quality, and of the age of from 6 to 18 years.
>
> "That at the time the plaintiff entered into possession of said premises herein described, and sold upon foreclosure sale as aforesaid, said orchard and fruit trees growing thereon were in a very bad, decayed, misused, neglected, wasted, run-down, and dilapidated condition, and many of said fruit trees in said orchard and upon said premises were affected and afflicted with a disease commonly known as 'pear blight'; that said disease was and is very destructive and injurious to fruit trees, and in order to eradicate, cope with, and get rid of the same it is and was necessary to cut out part of the limb or tree so affected.
>
> "That at the time said plaintiff took possession of said premises said fruit trees were badly in need of spraying, the ground in said orchard was badly in need of cultivation, and said fruit trees, said ground in said orchard, and said orchard were badly in need of various cares and practices necessary in the offices of good husbandry. * * *
>
> "That during the time of the plaintiff's possession of said property, and on or about March 25, 1914, he was notified by one Elmer Oatman, who at said time was a fruit inspector of Jackson county, Or., that certain fruit trees situated upon said premises herein described were affect> ed and afflicted with said 'pear blight,' and were a menace to the community, and that steps must be taken by the plaintiff to eradicate said evil, to wit, said 'pear blight,' either by taking out the trees or cutting out and off the limbs or other parts of those trees so affected, and upon failure upon the part of the plaintiff so to do, he, the said fruit inspector, would take these necessary and proper steps himself, and the cost of the same would thereby become a lien and charge against said property.

---

*For opinion on motion for rehearing, see 165 Pac. 1184.

>
> "That the plaintiff immediately complied with said order and said instructions, and began to cut out said 'pear blight' wherever and whenever he found the same in said orchard, and in said fruit trees, and attempted to eradicate the same as well as possible.
>
> "That from said March 21, 1914, the date when plaintiff entered into possession of said premises, and up to March 26, 1915, the date when he surrendered the possession thereof to the redemptioner, said defendant herein, plaintiff was forced to expend, and did expend, in cultivating, taking care of said fruit trees and said orchard, and in eradicating and cutting out said blight, as aforesaid, and in the purchase of materials for use upon and which were used upon said fruit trees, and upon said orchard, spraying, etc., the full sum of $574.45; that the real and reasonable value of plaintiff's own services in cutting out said blight, cultivating, taking care of said orchard and fruit trees, spraying, etc., was and is the sum of $500; that each, every, and all of said services so rendered and performed, whether by the plaintiff himself, or whether performed by some one else, for which he paid, and said material so used, were necessary, proper, and needful in the care and management of said orchard and said fruit trees and said premises, and were and are in accord with the practice of good husbandry, and greatly and materially assisted and benefited said orchard, said premises, and said fruit trees, and without the same said orchard and fruit trees would now be practically worthless and of no value as a commercial orchard or otherwise; that the plaintiff received from the sale of fruit taken from said orchard, and said fruit trees growing thereon the full sum of $166.89, leaving a balance in the sum of $907.56 due plaintiff for his work, labor, services so rendered and performed, and amount expended in the care, cultivation, cutting out blight, spraying, and for materials furnished and provided as aforesaid.
>
> "That no part of said sum of $907.56 has ever been paid, but the whole amount of which is due and owing unto the plaintiff herein from said defendant Josephine Sooy-Smith, and which should be paid by the said defendant Josephine Sooy-Smith."

Defendant demurred to the complaint upon the ground that it does not state a cause of action. The demurrer being overruled, an answer was filed consisting of admissions and denials and a counterclaim of $1,000 for the use and occupation of the premises. Plaintiff demurred to the counterclaim, and, although the demurrer was not directly passed upon, the court sustained objections to the admissibility of any evidence in support thereof. A reply having been filed, a trial to a jury was had, resulting in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $418.72, and both parties appealed.

Lincoln McCormack, of Medford, for appellant. George M. Roberts, of Medford, for respondent.

BENSON, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] We shall first consider the demurrer to the complaint, the overruling of which is assigned as error. This pleading was evidently framed and the cause was tried upon the theory that the purchaser of real property at an execution sale stands in the shoes of a mortgagee in possession, and is therefore entitled to recover from a redemptor the moneys necessarily expended by him in preserving the estate from loss and injury. If this theory were correct, we might hold the complaint sufficient to justify an accounting and recovery of such moneys as had been necessarily expended in the preservation of the estate; but, unfortunately, the purchaser at an execution sale does not bear such relation to the property, except in the sense that he may retain possession thereof until the redemptor has paid the sums specified in the statute. The true doctrine is thus expressed in 2 Jones on Mortgages (6th Ed.) § 1051b:

> "If the purchaser at a foreclosure sale has paid the purchase money and there is a subsequent redemption, his rights are determined by treating him as a mortgagee in possession to the extent of the price paid by him with interest, and must account for the rents and profits."

The statute relating to redemption reads thus:

> "The judgment debtor, or his successor in interest, may, at any time prior to confirmation of sale, and also within one year after the confirmation of sale, redeem the property on paying the amount of the purchase money, with interest thereon at the rate of ten per centum per annum from the date of sale, together with the amount of any taxes the purchaser may have been required to pay thereon." Section 248, L. O. L.

The case of Higgs v. McDuffie, 81 Or. 256, 157 Pac. 794, 158 Pac. 953, makes it clear that such redemption is not from the mortgage, but from the sale. If there were no statute, there could be no redemption. In Doerhoefer v. Farrell, 29 Or. 304, 45 Pac. 797, Mr. Chief Justice Bean says:

> "The right to redeem from an execution sale is a statutory right, and the court can neither increase nor lessen the burden of the redemptioner."

We have been unable to find any authority in conflict with this doctrine. We conclude, therefore, that the demurrer should have been sustained. If this works an injustice, and we think it does, the remedy lies with the Legislature, and not with the courts.

[2] Considering defendant's cross-appeal, we observe that the answer pleads a counterclaim of $1,000 as the reasonable value of the use and occupation of the premises during the time they were in the possession of the plaintiff. Under this plea defendant offered evidence which was excluded by the trial court, which ruling was assigned as error. It is stipulated that $166.89 was received by the plaintiff from the sale of fruit, but it does not appear from the stipulation that this is all that was received or that it is all that should have been received for the products of the orchard. Under this state of the record it was error to exclude the evidence offered.

2 Jones on Mortgages (6th Ed.) § 1122, contains the following statement of the correct practice:

> "If a mortgagee himself occupies the premises, especially if they consist of a farm under cultivation, upon which labor and money must be bestowed to produce annual crops, he will be charged with such sums as will be a fair rent of the premises, without regard to what he may realize as profits from the use of it."

[3] Of course, the plaintiff should be allowed to offset against such charge such sums as he may have expended in the care and cultivation of the property and moneys expended in protecting it from deterioration, together with the reasonable value of his own services in such work.

The judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

McBRIDE, C. J., and BURNETT and HARRIS, JJ., concur.

(85 Or. 206)

SOUTHWESTERN SURETY INS. CO. v. FOSTER et al. *

(Supreme Court of Oregon. July 3, 1917.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹424—NOTICE OF APPEAL—NECESSARY PARTY.

In suit by surety on contractor's bond to determine to whom it should pay, where judgment was rendered against the surety, and against one of the contractors and the administrator of the other contractor, the administrator was a necessary party on appeal by written notice under L. O. L. § 550, as amended by Laws 1913, p. 617; the judgment debtors presumably having the right of contribution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2152-2154.]

In Banc. Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah County; J. P. Kavanaugh, Judge.

Suit by the Southwestern Surety Insurance Company against William Foster and others. From the decree rendered, Foster appeals, and the defendant School District No. 1 of Multnomah County moves to dismiss the appeal. Appeal dismissed.

Jas. E. Craib, Thomas A. Hayes, and A. G. Thompson, all of Portland, for appellant. Fulton & Bowerman, H. B. Nicholas, and Newton McCoy, all of Portland, for defendant School Dist. No. 1. Chester V. Dolph, of Portland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. William Foster and C. A. Bartz, composing a firm doing business as Foster & Co., engaged to build a schoolhouse for school district No. 1 of Multnomah county, Or. The Southwestern Surety Insurance Company, the plaintiff here, underwrote the bond required of the contractors by the statute. Various creditors of the firm instituted actions against it and garnished the money due it from the school district, about which time the partnership abandoned the work. Actions were then commenced in the name of the school district against the plaintiff here for the benefit of sundry persons furnishing labor and materials used in the structure. At this juncture the plaintiff surety company began this suit against the contractors, the school district, and the beneficiaries of the litigation mentioned, in order to ascertain what was due to each, so that its liability on its undertaking for Foster & Co. could be definitely determined. After a hearing the court rendered a decree for the district for the recovery of a certain amount of money from the plaintiff and the defendants Foster and the administrator of Bartz, who had died pendente lite, and further providing to the effect that all the tools, implements, and supplies left by the contractors in the possession of the school district should be delivered to the plaintiff to be sold by it and applied to its demands against its principals, the contractors, and that, should there be any surplus of $1,700 retained by the school district to satisfy the attachments and garnishments after applying it to that purpose, the same should be paid to the surety company. A notice of appeal on behalf of the defendant Foster was filed containing an admission of service by the attorney for the school district and having appended thereto this writing:

> "State of Oregon, County of Multnomah—ss.:
>
> "I, Thomas A. Hayes, do hereby certify that I am one of the attorneys for appellant, William Foster; that I served the within notice of appeal on Chester V. Dolph, attorney for plaintiff, Southwestern Surety Insurance Company, this 4th day of October, 1916; that said Chester V. Dolph refused to accept service of said notice of appeal by signing acceptance.
>
> "[Signed] Thomas A. Hayes."

The school district now moves to dismiss the appeal, inter alia, "for the further reason that G. S. Breitling, administrator of C. A. Bartz, deceased, did not join in the appeal herein and no notice of appeal was served on said administrator." The decree being against the plaintiff, the defendant Foster, and the administrator of Bartz, presumably the right of contribution would exist between the partners. The Bartz estate being liable for the payment of the decree, the administrator would be interested in retaining the right to compel Foster to pay his part of the established liability. If, however, the latter succeeded in overturning the decree or modifying it in some particular as to himself, it would remain a charge against the surety and the estate who have not appealed with the right of contribution gone.

This subject was treated by Mr. Justice Bean in Templeton v. Morrison, 66 Or. 493, 131 Pac. 319, 135 Pac. 95, wherein he concludes that a person jointly liable with the appellant is an adverse party upon whom notice of appeal must be served. Where written notice of appeal is adopted as the means of bringing a case before this court for review, the statute requires it to be served upon all adverse parties who have appeared in the action or suit. Laws 1913, c. 319, amending section 550, L. O. L. In the present instance there was quite as much reason to serve notice upon the administrator as upon the plaintiff, because the estate was equally bound by the decree. It is unnecessary to consider the other reasons upon which the motion is grounded.

*Rehearing denied July 24, 1917.

On the authority of Templeton v. Morrison, therefore, the appeal must be dismissed.

(85 Or. 37)

STATE v. MARASTONI.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. July 3, 1917.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS 🔑137—PROHIBITION STATUTE—CONSTRUCTION—"MANUFACTURE."

One who presses juice from grapes, puts it in a vat and permits it to ferment by natural process with intent to use part of it in the state as a beverage for himself and family, manufactures wine in violation of Gen. Laws 1915, p. 150.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 147.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Manufacture.]

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS 🔑137—PROHIBITION STATUTE—"MANUFACTURE."

Where "manufacture," as used in Gen. Laws 1915, p. 151, § 5, means to make, irrespective of quantity produced or use to which it is to be put.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. § 147.]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 🔑295—INTOXICATING LIQUORS 🔑17—PROHIBITING MANUFACTURE—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Const. Or. art. 1, § 36, as amended (see Laws 1915, p. 12), forbidding the manufacture of intoxicating wine for the maker's own use, does not violate Const. U. S. Amend. 14.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 841; Intoxicating Liquors, Cent. Dig. §§ 21–23.]

Department 2. Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah County; C. U. Gantenbein, Judge.

Joe Marastoni was found guilty of violating Laws 1915, p. 150, relating to manufacture of intoxicating liquors, and appeals. Affirmed.

The defendant was complained against in the municipal court of the city of Portland for a violation of chapter 141 of the General Laws of 1915, relating to the manufacture of intoxicating liquor. The complaint is as follows:

"The said Joe Marastoni, on the 27th day of September, A. D. 1916, in the county of Multnomah and state of Oregon, then and there being, did then and there unlawfully and willfully keep and maintain as a common nuisance that certain place known and described as 344 Second street, in the city of Portland, in the county and state aforesaid, by then and there at said place manufacturing and keeping for sale, barter, and delivery, in violation of law, certain intoxicating liquors, to wit, wine, and by then and there keeping and using in said place certain intoxicating liquors, bottles, kegs, barrels, syphons, and other vessels containing intoxicating liquors, and other property, for the purpose of keeping and maintaining said place above described as a common nuisance, contrary to the statutes in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state of Oregon."

That portion of the Constitution bearing upon the matters here discussed is section 36, article 1 (see Laws 1915, p. 12), in effect January 1, 1916, and is as follows:

"From and after January 1, 1916, no intoxicating liquors shall be manufactured, or sold, within this state, except for medicinal purposes upon prescription of a licensed physician, or for scientific, sacramental or mechanical purposes. * * *"

The statute of 1915, so far as it relates to this subject, is as follows:

"Section 1. This entire act shall be deemed an exercise of the police powers of the state for the protection of the public health, peace and morals, and all of its provisions shall be liberally construed for the attainment of that purpose.

"Sec. 2. The words 'intoxicating liquor,' as used in this act shall be construed to embrace all spirituous, malt, vinous, fermented or other intoxicating liquors; and all mixtures or preparations reasonably likely or intended to be used as a beverage, which shall contain in excess of one half of one per centum of alcohol by volume, shall be deemed to be embraced within such term, independently of any other test of their intoxicating character; and all mixtures, compounds or preparations, whether liquid or not, which are intended, when mixed with water or otherwise, to produce, by fermentation or otherwise, an intoxicating liquor, shall also be deemed to be embraced within such term."

That part of section 6 relating to the manufacture of intoxicating liquor provides:

"The provisions of this act shall not be construed to prevent any one from manufacturing, for his own use, unfermented wine or nonintoxicating cider, or wine for sacramental purposes, or to prevent the manufacture, from fruit grown exclusively within the state, of vinegar or nonintoxicating cider for use and sale, or to prevent the sale at wholesale only to druggists of ethyl alcohol for medicinal, pharmaceutical, scientific, and mechanical purposes, and for external use and application."

Section 15 prescribes:

"All premises, buildings, vehicles, boats, and all other places where intoxicating liquors are manufactured, sold, bartered or given away, in violation of law, or where persons are permitted to resort for the drinking of intoxicating liquor as a beverage, or where intoxicating liquors are kept for sale, barter or delivery, in violation of law, and all intoxicating liquors, bottles, glasses, kegs, pumps, bars, and other property kept in and used in maintaining such premises, buildings, vehicles, boats, or other places, are hereby declared to be common nuisances: Provided, that nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the rights of seagoing vessels to keep liquor thereon, provided they comply with all the provisions of this act; and every person who maintains or assists in maintaining such common nuisance shall be held guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished for each offense as provided in section 36 hereof for offenses under this act."

The defendant was convicted in the municipal court and appealed to the circuit court. The case was there tried before the court without a jury upon a stipulated state of facts, which stipulation we quote:

"That Joe Marastoni, the defendant above named, in the county of Multnomah, and state of Oregon, on or about the 21st day of September, 1916, had in his possession at his private dwelling house, located at 344 Second street, Portland, said county and state, about one-third of a ton of grapes, which he then and there crushed, and from which he squeezed the juice into a container, thereby making for his own personal use and for the use of his family fifty gallons of wine, containing at the said time less than one-half of one per centum of alcohol by volume; that thereafter, no act or thing was done by the said defendant, and the said wine was allowed to remain in said container to ferment, and the same did, by the natural process of nature alone, on the 27th day of September, 1916, become fermented wine containing in excess of one-half of one per centum of alcohol by volume, and on said date was in the possession of the said defendant in the county of Multnomah and state of Oregon, who was then and there keeping the same for the following purposes: The greater portion thereof was to be used by the defendant and his family as a beverage and as a food with their meals as a part thereof, and for culinary purposes, and was not manufactured or kept for the purpose of sale, barter, or delivery. The remaining portion of the same was to be allowed to become vinegar by the further process of nature, and to be used by the defendant and his family for culinary purposes and table use, and not as a beverage."

The court upon these facts adjudged the defendant guilty, and imposed a fine of $50, from which judgment he appeals.

Albert B. Ferrera and Jos. H. Page, both of Portland, for appellant. Charles C. Hindman, of Portland (Walter H. Evans, Dist. Atty., of Portland, on the brief), for the State.

McBRIDE, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The principal question in this case is whether the defendant "manufactured" the wine which he kept on the premises. That he pressed the juice from the grapes, put it in a vat, and permitted it to ferment by the usual natural process, with the intent to use part of it in that state as a beverage for himself and family, is admitted. As to this portion of the liquid we are of the opinion that he is guilty of a violation of the statute. Webster's Dictionary defines the word "manufacture" to mean, "To make (wares, machinery, or other products) by hand, by machinery, or by other agency." In Murphy v. Arnson, 96 U. S. 131, 24 L. Ed. 773, it is observed:

> "Beer may well be said to be manufactured from malt and other ingredients, whisky from corn, or cider from apples. The fact that the identity of the original article or articles is lost, and that a new form or a new character is assumed, is not material in determining whether, within the popular idea, as embodied in the customs act, the article in question is a manufacture from its original elements."

[2] We are of the opinion that the word "manufacture," as used in section 5 of the act referred to, means to "make" irrespective of the quantity produced, or the use to which it is to be put. This is made clear by section 6, which provides that the provisions of the act shall not be construed to prevent any one from manufacturing for his own use unfermented wine or nonintoxicating cider, wine for sacramental purposes, or to prevent the manufacture of vinegar or nonintoxicating cider for sale. In this case the exception proves the rule as to those things not excepted. Section 5 is general and applies to all intoxicating liquors. Section 6 out of caution excepts wine manufactured for sacramental purposes and unfermented wine manufactured for the use of the maker, and the framer aware of the fact that cider or grape juice must become intoxicating in the process of becoming vinegar permits these processes to be carried on until the vinous fermentation has passed and the acetous fermentation has begun. The section last referred to makes plain the sense in which the word "manufacture" is employed in the act. It permits the "manufacture" of unfermented wines and wine for sacramental purposes, which indicates clearly that that term is used as a synonym for "make."

It is claimed that because the defendant did no affirmative act to produce fermentation, but simply put the grape juice into a vat and "let nature take its course," he did not manufacture the wine; but this contention is unsound. Under such a construction no wine ever has been or ever will be made by human agency. The stipulation admits, in substance, that defendant placed the juice in the vat, and there allowed it to ferment, and that his intent was to use the greater portion as a beverage for himself and family as food with their meals, and to allow the remainder to become vinegar. He but pursued the usual process of making wine. The well-known action of the air and the germs therefrom which produce fermentation were utilized and intended to be utilized in the process of manufacture. Some of the most important compounds known to commerce and medicine are manufactured by bringing two or more substances in contact and allowing the chemical forces of nature to produce a new compound or substance. Murphy v. Arnson, supra.

[3] It is also claimed that if section 36, art. 1, of our Constitution should be construed so as to prevent the manufacture of intoxicating wine for the maker's own use, it is violative of the Fourteenth Amendment to the national Constitution. This contention is not new, and is disposed of in Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 653, 8 Sup. Ct. 297, 31 L. Ed. 205, wherein Mr. Justice Harlan, speaking of the attitude of the courts toward legislation of this character, observes:

> "If, therefore, a state deems the absolute prohibition of the manufacture and sale, within her limits, of intoxicating liquors for other than medical, scientific, and manufacturing purposes, to be necessary to the peace and security of society, the courts cannot, without usurping legislative functions, override the will of the people as thus expressed by their chosen representatives. They have nothing to do with the mere policy of legislation. Indeed, it is a fundamental principle in our institutions, indispensable to the preservation of public liberty, that one of the separate departments of government shall not usurp powers committed by the Constitution to another department. And so, if, in the judgment of the Legislature, the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for the maker's own use, as a beverage, would tend to cripple, if it did not defeat, the effort to guard the community against the evils attending the excessive use of such liquors, it is not for the courts, upon their views as to what is best and safest for the community, to disregard the legislative determination of that question. So far from such a regulation having no relation to the general end sought to be accomplished, the entire scheme of prohibition, as embodied in the Constitution and laws of Kansas, might fail, if the right of each citizen to manufacture intoxicating liquors for his own use as a beverage were recognized. Such a right does not inhere in citizenship. Nor can it be said that government interferes with or impairs any one's constitutional rights of liberty or of property, when it determines that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks, for general or individual use, as a beverage, are, or may become, hurtful to society, and constitute, therefore, a business in which no one may lawfully engage. Those rights are best secured, in our government, by the observance, upon the part of all, of such regulations as are established by competent authority to promote the common good. No one may rightfully do that which the lawmaking power, upon reasonable grounds, declares to be prejudicial to the general welfare."

No doubt, to many of our citizens accustomed to the use of wine as a table beverage to the same extent that others have used tea or coffee or milk, such extreme legislation may seem drastic and harsh. It certainly seems so to the writer, but whatever may be our individual opinions they must yield to the mandates of the law.

The question is not as to the policy of the law, but as to the power to enact it, and this being found to exist, the judgment will be affirmed.

MOORE, BEAN, and McCAMANT, JJ., concur.

(85 Or. 45)

STATE v. FETSCH et al.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. July 3, 1917.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑1032(4) — APPEAL AND ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR.

In the absence of objection, failure to make an entry of an order showing that a person accused of assault and battery stated that the name under which he was tried was his own, as required by L. O. L. § 1466, held harmless error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2627.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW 🔑260(12) — JURISDICTION OF COURT'S SENTENCE.

Under L. O. L. § 1924, as amended by Laws 1911, p. 179, providing that, if any person not armed with a dangerous weapon shall assault another or shall commit an assault and battery, he may be fined not less than $50 or more than $500, if tried in the circuit court, or not less than $5 or more than $50 if tried before a justice of the peace, a circuit court has jurisdiction to impose a fine of $150 in a prosecution commenced in the court of a justice of the peace wherein a fine of only $20 was imposed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 569–571, 592–597.]

Department 2. Appeal from Circuit Court, Multnomah County; George H. Davis, Judge.

August Fetsch and T. F. Ward were convicted of assault and battery before a justice of the peace. From a conviction in the circuit court, they appeal. Affirmed.

H. K. Sargent, of Portland, for appellants. C. C. Hindman, Deputy Dist. Atty., of Portland (Walter H. Evans, Dist. Atty., of Portland, on the brief), for the State.

BEAN, J. The defendants, August Fetsch and T. F. Ward, were complained against under fictitious names in the justice's court for the district of Portland for the crime of assault and battery and were arrested. They entered pleas of not guilty, and upon being tried were convicted and fined $20 each. An appeal was taken to the circuit court, where the defendants were found guilty by the verdict of a jury, and a fine of $150 each was imposed by the court. An appeal was prosecuted to this court.

[1] It is assigned as error that the complaint is insufficient for the reason that the true names of the defendants, which appear in the title of the cause, are not inserted in the body of the complaint, and that there is nothing in the record to show that an order was made by the court directing that an entry of the fact that the defendants each stated that another name than that in the complaint was his true name be entered in the journal as provided in section 1466, L. O. L. Fictitious names of the defendants are in the body of the complaint, and the names under which they pleaded appear to have been inserted in the title of the cause. All the later proceedings in the case were had against them under their true names substantially in conformity with section 1441 and the one just referred to, and evidently so by order of the court. The failure, if any, of the proper entry of any order made would only be a matter of correcting the journal of the court to show the true proceeding taken. At the most, the court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the persons of the defendants, it was only an irregularity which affected no substantial rights of the defendants. The matter was not called to the attention of either justice's or circuit court. Defendants' undertaking of bail and notice of appeal, presumably prepared by their counsel, both state the true names of the defendants and nothing more. If there was any error in this respect in the circuit court, the defendants invited it, and they cannot be heard to complain. The complaint charged, and they fully understood, the offense for which they were to answer. We review only the action of the trial court. This informality was not made the subject of inquiry there. It is now too late for the defendants to complain of that which did not prejudice their case.

[2] It is contended on behalf of defendants that the circuit court upon the trial of the cause was exercising appellate jurisdiction and could impose no greater fine than that authorized to be adjudged by the justice's court. Section 2411, L. O. L., confers jurisdiction upon a justice's court of the crime of assault, and assault and battery, not charged to have been committed with intent to commit a felony, or in the course of a riot, or with a dangerous weapon, or upon a public officer in the discharge of his duties. Section 1924, L. O. L., as amended by Gen. Laws 1911, p. 179, enacts:

> "If any person not being armed with a dangerous weapon, shall assault another or shall commit any assault and battery upon another such person, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not less than three months nor more than one year, or by a fine not less than $50 nor more than $500: Provided, that in any case in which any person shall be accused in a court of a justice of the peace shall, on motion of the district attorney, at any time before trial, either proceed to examine and dispose of the case as committing magistrate, either discharging the defendant or holding him to answer the charge before the circuit court, or proceed with the trial of the case as in other cases over which a justice's court has jurisdiction but if the defendant is convicted, the justice cannot impose upon such defendant any other or greater punishment than a fine of not less than $5.00 nor more than $50."

Under these sections a justice's court has concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court in certain cases of assault and battery. Nevertheless the justice's court is authorized to impose upon the defendants no other or greater punishment than a fine of not less than $5 nor more than $50. According to the clear mandate of the statute, in any case of assault, or assault and battery, by any person not being armed with a dangerous weapon, the only penalty that can be inflicted is imprisonment in the county jail not less than three months nor more than one year, or a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, upon conviction in any court other than a justice's court. Ex parte Martin (D. C.) 46 Fed. 482. This statute is the only authority the circuit court had to exercise in the cause, and there was no error in complying with the enactment. In effect, the lawmakers have said that in any case of assault or assault and battery of sufficient importance for the circuit court to take cognizance of the punishment, if imposed, shall be greater than in thoses cases of a like nature where the law is administered by a justice's court. It may seem anomalous, but the regulation of the sentence is for the legislative department of the state. In its wisdom it has seen fit to place considerable discretion in the district attorney as to the interests of the state in such cases. Upon appeal to the circuit court from a judgment of a justice of the peace in a civil action a trial de novo is had. After an appeal is perfected the action is deemed pending and for trial therein as if originally commenced in the circuit court. L. O. L. § 2463. Under section 2509, L. O. L., as amended by Laws of 1913, p. 507, an appeal is taken in a criminal action in the same manner as in a civil action, except as to the mode of service of the notice and the giving of an undertaking for costs. In a note to section 1924 Ex parte Martin, supra, is recognized by Hon. W. P. Lord, the annotator, a former justice of this court, as authority for the construction of section 1924, L. O. L., to the effect that the circuit court cannot impose a fine of less than $50. Any change in the long-established rule should be made by legislative enactment.

The trial court had authority to impose the fine mentioned, and the judgment is affirmed.

McBRIDE, C. J., and MOORE and McCAMANT, JJ., concur.

(85 Or. 26)

RANZAU v. DAVIS et al.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. July 3, 1917.)

1. TRUSTS ⟹134—CONSTRUCTION — INTEREST OF TRUSTEE.

Evidence held to show that in conveying property to a daughter-in-law in trust for grandchild it was the intention of the settlor that trustee and her husband should have a beneficial interest in the property during their son's minority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 177.]

2. TRUSTS ⟹225—TRUSTEE'S RIGHT TO DISBURSEMENTS—GENERAL RULE.

It is a general rule that disbursements which will be allowed a trustee will depend much upon the character of the trust and the directions given by the instrument of trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 322.]

3. TRUSTS ⟹225—TRUSTEE'S RIGHT TO DISBURSEMENTS—UPKEEP OF PREMISES.

If a trustee has the power of managing the estate, he will be entitled to all the expenses of keeping it up, such as hire of servants, salaries, taxes, costs of repairs, rebuilding farm houses, manuring, draining, fencing, and other like expenses.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 322.]

4. TRUSTS ⟹211—EXPENDITURES FOR WHICH ESTATE IS LIABLE.

To create a liability against a trust estate in favor of a third person, there must be more than the mere personal engagement of the trustee, for the expenses of properly administering a trust, although a lien on behalf of the trustee on the estate in his hands, are not so as to a person employed by him, and in such cases the only remedy is against the trustee personally unless he is insolvent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 297½.]

5. Trusts 🔑114—Construction—Interest of Trustee — Deed to Mother for Son's Benefit.

A deed to a mother as trustee, if executed for the benefit of the son when he shall reach majority, clothes her with an executory trust, which does not become executed until the son reaches majority.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 164.]

6. Trusts 🔑140(1)—Executory—Vested Title in Beneficiary.

So long as a trust is executory the legal title cannot vest in the beneficiary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 183.]

7. Trusts 🔑182—Management of Property—Operation of Farm.

Where funds which were given to a daughter-in-law in trust for her son with the intention that she and her husband should have the benefit thereof until the son's majority were invested in a farm, the trustee and her husband had authority to operate the farm so as to yield an income for the purposes of the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 236.]

8. Trusts 🔑211—Necessary Expenditures —Liability of Estate.

A trust estate was liable for services necessary for cultivating the property and caring for crops raised thereon which was in the interests of the beneficiary and for the benefit of the estate, since the trustee now insolvent had she paid such expenses would have had a just claim against the estate therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 297½.]

Department 2. Appeal from Circuit Court, Marion County; Wm. Galloway, Judge.

Suit by Arthur J. Ranzau, by Dorothea V. Ranzau, his guardian ad litem, against J. C. Davis and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 158 Pac. 279.

Chas. E. Lenon, of Portland and John H. McNary, of Salem (Chas. L. McNary, of Salem, on the brief), for appellant. W. C. Winslow, of Salem, for respondents.

BEAN, J. This suit involves the question as to whether or not the farm described in the complaint is subject to an execution upon a judgment in favor of defendant Davis obtained for services performed, boarding help, and expenses incurred raising and harvesting a crop of hops on the land. The trial court held that the property was liable for the debt, and plaintiff appealed.

The plaintiffs assert that the real estate is the property of Arthur J. Ranzau, a minor; that the same is held in trust by Dorothea V. Ranzau, his mother. The circumstances relating thereto are about as follows: The grandfather of the alleged beneficiary, John P. Ranzau, at different dates advanced money to his daughter-in-law. She testifies that in 1897 she and her husband borrowed $1,100 to pay off hop pickers; that at one time her father-in-law advanced $500 for the purchase of an organ and a team of horses for her husband; that in 1908 he purchased town property in Grants Pass of the value of $3,000, taking a deed in the name of his daughter-in-law, and furnished a home for them; that about 1900 he advanced $1,400 which was used to redeem property belonging to her mother-in-law; that in 1901 he supplied $1,100 for a hophouse and the purchase of 160 acres of adjoining land. According to Mrs. Ranzau's testimony, a short time before the death of her father-in-law he told her to destroy the book in which the memorandum of the money loaned and expended had been kept, to put this money aside for his grandchild, and to invest it in real estate when he became 21 years of age. She states that in the meantime "I and my husband was to have the benefit," and he said "for me to put in trust for my son." The Ranzaus resided for a time in Grants Pass. On selling the property there they went to Woodburn, where Mrs. Ranzau invested in real estate. Selling out in the latter place, they went to Portland, where they again invested in property which they sold. After that they purchased the farm in question in Marion county in 1909, paying down about $4,000 or $5,000, and having between $500 and $1,000 of their funds remaining. The deed was executed to "Dorothea V. Ranzau, trustee, and her successors and assigns." In 1911 they purchased an adjoining farm. The property was all adapted to raising hops, and they carried on the business, keeping a bank account in different banks in the name of Dorothea V. Ranzau, trustee, where deposits were made of considerable sums, at one time depositing $5,000, the proceeds of the sale of hops. Mrs. Ranzau also gave notes to the bank signed as trustee. In 1914 the defendant Davis performed the services and advanced money for the expenses mentioned in the cultivation of the hops and in picking and caring for the same. He was paid for his work mostly in checks by Mrs. Ranzau as trustee, that is, up to July. From then until December of that year his labor and the expenditures made by him were not liquidated.

There is considerable controversy in regard to whether the deed was executed to Mrs. Ranzau, as trustee, for the benefit of her son, or for the purpose of avoiding the payment of indebtedness. She claims that she stated to Mr. Davis that the property belonged to her son, and yet in her testimony she refers to the fact of having given a mortgage for $8,000 on her farm, the one in question, to the Portland Trust Company of Oregon. Considering the property as held in trust, the directions given by the settlor when he attempted to make the gift were oral, and it is not perfectly clear what his desires were.

[1] Taking the most favorable view of the facts as claimed by the plaintiff, we understand that the grandfather was desirous of assisting his son and daughter-in-law. On account of the son's habits he preferred to advance the money and convey the property to his daughter-in-law with the request that when the granchild arrived at the age of majority it should be invested for him. The purchase of a home in Grants Pass for his son and his wife, and also the loan to pay the hop pickers were concrete examples of the manner in which they should use the property. His acts speak with greater clearness than his words. It seems that Mrs. Ranzau has managed the property and the funds derived therefrom with a view to carrying out his intentions, sometimes making losses and sometimes gains. It therefore appears that the trustee and her husband have a beneficial interest in the property as long as their son is a minor.

[2, 3] It is a general rule that the disbursements that would be allowed a trustee would depend very much upon the character of the trust and the directions given by the instrument of trust. If a trustee has the power of managing an estate, he will be entitled to all the expenses of keeping it up, such as the hire of servants, salaries, taxes, costs of repairing, rebuilding farmhouses, manuring, draining, fencing, and other expenses of that kind. 2 Perry on Trusts, § 913. It is stated in 28 Am. & E. Enc. of Law, at page 942:

> "The estate is not liable for obligations assumed by the trustee in excess of his authority; but the estate will be liable if the trustees are acting within the limits of their stated powers or with implied authority. Thus trust property which has been embarked in business, under a power, is primarily liable to creditors for debts incurred in conducting the same"—citing, among others, North Am. Coal Co. v. Dyett, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 9; Mathews v. Stephenson, 6 Pa. 496; Woddrop v. Weed, 154 Pa. 307, 26 Atl. 375, 35 Am. St. Rep. 832.

[4] A transaction to create a liability against the estate in favor of a third party must be more than the personal engagement of the trustee; for, while the expenses of properly administering a trust are a lien on behalf of the trustee on the estate in his hands, this right against the estate, unless in exceptional cases, does not extend to the person employed by him. In general their only remedy or compensation is against the trustee personally unless he is insolvent. In a case in Iowa, however, it was held that, where a claim against the estate is adjudicated with all parties interested before the court, and the amount found due is adjudged to be made from the trust property, the trustee cannot complain because the judgment was not rendered against him personally. Smith v. Walker, 49 Iowa, 289.

[5, 6] The deed to the mother, as trustee, if executed for the benefit of the son when he shall reach the age of majority, clothes her with an executory trust which does not become executed while the son is a minor, and so long as a trust is executory the legal title cannot vest in the beneficiary. Boyd v. England, 56 Ga. 598; Sanders v. Houston, etc., Co., 107 Ga. 49, 53, 32 S. E. 610.

[7] It appears that the settlor, John P. Ranzau, Sr., placed the property in the hands of the daughter-in-law with the intention that she and her husband should have the benefit thereof at least until the son was of age. A portion of the funds derived from the alleged gift were invested in the two farms, which were naturally adapted only to agricultural purposes. It was therefore the duty of the trustee, and she necessarily had implied authority in order to carry out the wish of the settlor, to assume the management and control of the property for the benefit of the usees whomsoever they might be. There was as much reason and authority for the trustee with the assistance of her husband to operate the farm herself as to lease it out to others for the purpose of cultivation. We think it was her manifest duty to make such use of the property as would cause it to yield an income for the purpose and benefit of those for whom it was contemplated by the grandfather.

[8] The debt therefore contracted by her as trustee, which was necessary in the cultivation of the farm and in carrying on the business, is a debt which is created for the benefit of the estate within the contemplation of the law. Sanders v. Houston, etc., Co., supra; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 942, notes.

The answer expressly alleges, and the unquestioned proof shows, that the services performed by Davis and the expenditures made by him were necessary and indispensable for the purpose of cultivating and caring for the crop of hops raised on the farm for the enhancement of the interest of the beneficiary. The trust property is subject to the debt so incurred. See authorities cited above. It appears from the evidence that at one time the sum of $5,000 received from the sale of hops was deposited in the bank to the credit of the trustee, and that by means of the hop industry she was enabled to liquidate a considerable portion of the deferred payments for the purchase price of the farms. It is apparent that there can be no profit in a farm without cultivation. Labor and the food for laborers engaged in training the vines and picking the hops are among the first essentials necessary to the successful operation of a hop farm, for the betterment of the estate, and to prevent it from becoming profitless and deteriorating in value. The debt of the defendant belongs to a different class, and is clearly distinguishable from obligations incurred in the purchase of merchandise for the use of a cestui qui trust entirely disconnected with the trust estate, and from the personal obligations of the trustee. The trustee and her husband have no other property subject to execution. She is practically insolvent except for any interest which she may have in the premises in question, all of which, together with the interest of her husband, is subject to the execution.

In England the rule is that, where the trustee is authorized to carry on a business and to employ certain funds or property for that purpose, a creditor of the business has a right to the benefit of the lien which the trustee has against the property devoted to the purpose, subject to any equities between the trustee and the cestui qui trust, none of which appear in this case. 2 Lewin on Trusts, p. 862. If Mrs. Ranzau, the trustee, had paid for the balance of the labor and expenditures of defendant Davis in relation to the hops, could there be any question but that she would have a just claim against the estate for the same? We think such a claim would be sanctioned by the courts. When the matter is properly before the court, a creditor who assisted in the business should not be disappointed in payment so far as the funds dedicated are concerned. Strickland v. Symons, 26 Ch. D. 248; Lewin on Trusts, p. 862, note. The distinction made in England as to "dedication to particular trade purposes" is not always maintained in the United States, but the rights of the creditor to reach the trust property directly are based upon analogous reasons. It is stated in 3 Pom. Equi. Juris. (3d Ed.) p. 2104, note, as follows:

> "Where expenditures have been made for the benefit of the trust estate, and it has not paid for them, directly or indirectly, and the estate is either indebted to the trustee, or would have been if the trustee had paid, or would be if he should pay the demand, and the trustee is insolvent or nonresident, so that the creditor cannot recover his demand from him, or will be compelled to follow him to a foreign jurisdiction, the trust estate may be reached directly by a proceeding in chancery."

See Norton v. Phelps, 54 Miss. 467; Ames' Cas. on Trusts, 421.

In Gisborn v. Charter Oak Life Ins. Co., 142 U. S. 326, 337, 12 Sup. Ct. 277, 35 L. Ed. 1029, Mr. Justice Brewer, in delivering the opinion of the court, said that in mining it is not a trustee's duty to stop work the moment a vein is lost, and that, though it could not be foretold in advance how great had been the displacement, it was a reasonable exercise of the power vested in the trustee to make some limited exploration to see if the lost vein could not be recovered, and that reasonable expenses thus incurred are chargeable upon the trust estate.

The subjection of the property in question to the satisfaction of the debt of defendant is in effect applying the issues and profits of the farm, namely, the proceeds of a former hop crop which were used in paying for the realty, to the liquidation of such indebtedness, and in equity and good conscience this should be done. It is the province of a court of equity to lend its aid in the fair administration of a trust, but not to exercise its jurisdiction for the purpose of defrauding one for labor and expenses bestowed upon property claimed to be or held in trust.

For at least two reasons, the interest of the Ranzaus in the property and the circumstances and conditions of the trust estate, the judgment of the circuit court which had the benefit of hearing all the witnesses, and so was in a good position to pass upon the merits of the case, should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

McBRIDE, C. J., and MOORE and McCAMANT, JJ., concur.

(85 Or. 113)

ROGUE RIVER FRUIT & PRODUCE ASS'N v. GILLEN-CHAMBERS CO.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. July 17, 1917.)

Department 1. Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; F. M. Calkins, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Denied.

For former opinion, see 165 Pac. 679.

O. C. Boggs, of Medford, and Beach, Simon & Nelson, of Portland, for appellant. Neff & Mealey, of Medford, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. In a petition for rehearing counsel for defendant press upon our attention the following extract from Pippy v. Winslow, 62 Or. 219, 223, 125 Pac. 298:

> "Under the circumstances of this case, that part of the building which passed under the inspection of Mr. Winslow, the owner, and Mr. Tobey, the architect, and was approved by them in good faith expressly or by implication, was not open to objection by them afterwards, and plaintiffs may recover therefor"—citing authorities.

That was a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien. On the hearing in this court we were called upon to decide questions of fact as well as of law. We considered, as stated, "the circumstances of the case," and in the excerpt quoted determined an issue of fact, and not a question of law. The instruction desired by the defendant in the instant case and the refusal of which was assigned as error demanded that the court charge the jury as a legal conclusion that the inspection of the building foreclosed the plaintiffs from ever thereafter objecting to the work thus approved. The cases relied upon to support this doctrine were where the architect was made the final arbiter as to the excellence of the work and compliance with the contract. The stipulation gave him jurisdiction to hear and determine disputes of that character and made his adjudication final. There is no such situation in the case at hand. However much we may believe that a man experienced as the superintendent of the plaintiff may have been actually knew the quality of the work done by the defendant, yet that was a question of fact for the jury, and we cannot say as a matter of law that he did know or that the plaintiff is bound by his knowledge.

The petition fails to distinguish issues of fact and questions of law, and hence must be denied.

McBRIDE, C. J., and BEAN and HARRIS, JJ., concur.

(85 Or. 251)

REICHERT v. SOOY-SMITH.

(Supreme Court of Oregon. July 24, 1917.)

1. MORTGAGES 🔑603—MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION—COMPENSATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Purchaser of orchard at mortgage foreclosure sale cannot, after redemption, recover of judgment debtor his expenses in cultivating it, under L. O. L. § 249, which requires restoration of debtor to his estate on redemption to be complete, as there is no counterpart to this in the Code whereby purchaser may charge judgment debtor with disbursements in operating the premises.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1783–1785.]

2. MORTGAGES 🔑602 — REDEMPTION — USE AND OCCUPATION.

Judgment debtor, on redemption, has no right of action against purchaser at mortgage foreclosure sale for mere use and occupation, but only for actual profit he has made out of the property through use not permitted by L. O. L. § 251.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Cent. Dig. §§ 1778–1782.]

Department 1. Appeal from Circuit Court, Jackson County; Frank M. Calkins, Judge.

On motion for rehearing. Denied.

For former opinion, see 165 Pac. 1174.

Lincoln McCormack, of Medford, for appellant. George M. Roberts, of Medford, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. It will be remembered that this was an action by the assignee of a purchaser at a foreclosure sale to recover from the redemptioner the amount of money expended by the plaintiff in caring for and cultivating the orchard on the premises during his occupancy of the land. His total claim amounted to $1,074.45, and he credited upon it $166.89, the net amount he had received from the sale of fruit grown there during the period he was in possession. Considering his demand, the court held, in substance, speaking by Mr. Justice Benson, that he had made the expenditures as a volunteer, without any request, either express or implied, or arising by operation of law, on the part of the defendant, and hence there could be no recovery for them.

[1] The petition for rehearing earnestly presses upon us that, independent of the statute, the court should allow the expenses incurred by the plaintiff by analogy to the rule which has allowed the judgment debtor to recover for the rents, issues, and profits accruing between the sale and his own redemption of the premises. The reason for this favor extended to the one indebted on the decree is found in the statute in these words:

> "If the judgment debtor redeem at any time before the time for redemption expires, the effect of the sale shall terminate and he shall be restored to his estate." Section 249, L. O. L.

Beginning with Cartwright v. Savage, 5 Or. 397, the court has consistently held that this means complete restoration to the judgment debtor of his estate, including, as in that case, what the purchaser had actually received from the realty while he had it in his custody. By the redemption the creditor has received his own, with interest, and such taxes as he may have paid on the holding during his occupancy. To allow him to take more out of the actual proceeds of the premises would be to sanction extortion, permitting him to reap where he had not sown. By a Socratic argument in the Cartwright Case, Mr. Justice McArthur disposes of the matter thus:

> "How can the property be said to be restored to its original condition, if, when redeemed, the judgment debtor is obliged to take it back, denuded of the crops which he himself has sown, and which, but for the accidental circumstance that the sale was made just before harvest, he himself would have reaped?"

There is therefore statutory sanction for returning to the redemptioner the rents and profits accruing between sale and redemption, for they are an inseparable adjunct of the estate which is restored to him. No counterpart to this is found in the Code, by which the purchaser may pile up disbursements in operating the premises and charge them to the judgment debtor.

[2] On the other hand, the debtor cannot be permitted to make gain out of the purchaser, where the latter has not increased his store because of his possession. Under the Cartwright Case, and others like it, we take it to be established as a principle that if a redemptioner would recover from the purchaser, it must be shown that the latter has actually collected rents due from a tenant whom he found in possession, or has himself in very truth acquired net profits by reason of his having the land in charge. The statute gives the purchaser the right to the possession of the property from the day of sale until redemption, and that, too, without condition, except as against waste, as defined in section 251, L. O. L.; hence there can reasonably be no action by the redemptioner against the purchaser for mere use and occupation. The process of passing title by sale under a decree is not fulfilled until the delivery of the sheriff's deed. Pending this the purchaser holds the estate tentatively, and must be prepared to restore it, not partly, but completely. He must deliver it without waste; but, in the language of section 251, L. O. L.:

> "It shall not be deemed waste for the person in possession of the property at the time of sale or entitled to possession afterwards, during the period allowed for redemption, to continue to use it in the same manner in which it was previously used, or to use it in the ordinary course of husbandry, or to make the necessary repairs to building thereon, or to use wood or timber on the property thereof, or for the repair of fences, or for fuel in his family while he occupies the property."

The expenses the purchaser incurs under this section are for his own benefit, and he cannot charge them to the redemptioner. What more of substantial gain he makes out of the property follows the estate, as part of it, when it is restored to the redemptioner. All his disbursements perchance may come to naught when the redemptioner pays to the sheriff, after due notice, the amount of the bid plus interest and taxes paid. The utmost that can be said is that for actual profit the purchaser must account, but for no more.

It has been aptly said that we cannot add to the burdens of the redemptioner. Neither can we increase his benefits, where none have accrued; and unless he can show that the purchaser, while in possession, has acquired a net profit, there can be nothing due from the latter. In short, the purchaser cannot load upon the redemptioner an amount of expenses which would virtually improve the original owner out of his property. Neither can the latter recover from the former something not realized by the occupation of the premises in excess of the permissible waste allowed by section 251, supra. The language quoted in the former opinion from 2 Jones on Mortgages (6th Ed.) § 1122, refers to a mortgagee in possession, to which situation it must be limited, and must be distinguished from the condition where a purchaser has taken charge of the property under the statute. The one who buys at a sale is a statutory personage, not a mortgagee in possession, although the twain have some common characteristics. When he invests his money, it is subject to the legislative enactments governing that species of alienation, and he cannot take more than is therein authorized, viz., the amount of his bid, with interest, and the taxes he has paid. Of course, in ascertaining whether or not there was a net gain, the benefit of which accrues to the redemptioner, the matter of offsetting the expenses against the gross receipts might be involved.

The conclusion is that the petition for rehearing must be denied.

McBRIDE, C. J., and BENSON and HARRIS, JJ., concur.

(19 Ariz. 182)

SUPERIOR & PITTSBURG COPPER CO. v. TOMICH. (No. 1535.)

(Supreme Court of Arizona. July 2, 1917.)

Dissenting opinion. For former opinion, see 165 Pac. 1101.

ROSS, J. (dissenting). I endeavored to show in my dissenting opinion in Inspiration Consolidated Copper Co. v. Mendez, 166 Pac. 1183, that the new right of action contemplated by section 7, art. 18, of the Constitution, and for which the Legislature was directed to provide, by proper legislation, is not and could not be an action for damages for personal injury according to the standards of the common law. The procedure adopted by the Legislature to enforce the right is according to the common-law rules and standards of damages in case of tort, but the right of action itself finds no prototype in the common law. It is in its essential features the same right of action upon which compensation for injury is justified by the courts. If the injury be "due to a condition or conditions of the occupation," then it cannot be due to the negligence of either the employer or employé. If it be due to the negligence of the employer, the injured employé or his dependents should pursue the common-law remedy for damages in tort or accept compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act. If it be caused by the negligence of the employé, his only recourse is compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Recovery was had in the present case upon the theory that, although the injury was due to a condition or conditions of the occupation without any fault of either the employer or employé, the damages should be ascertained and measured by the standards of the common-law action for negligence following the legislative formula. The error was in applying the old common-law remedy to the new right; in dressing this new and up-to-date creature of the law with habiliments two or more centuries old.

If this new right of action arises only in case of an unavoidable accidental injury in which neither the employer nor employé is to blame or at fault, the liability, in order to conform to due process of law and afford equal protection of the law, should be ascertained and measured according to the rules adopted by the different systems of compensation laws. New York Central R. Co. v. White, 243 U. S. 188, 37 Sup. Ct. 247, 61 L. Ed. 667; Mt. Timber Co. v. Washington, 243 U. S. 219, 37 Sup. Ct. 260, 61 L. Ed. 685; Hawkins v. Bleakly, 243 U. S. 210, 37 Sup. Ct. 255, 61 L. Ed. 678.

The Legislature misapprehended its duty and misconceived its powers when it provided that contributory negligence and assumption of risk could be interposed to an action based upon an injury without fault. The constitutional mandate neither in direct terms nor by implication authorizes these defenses. On the contrary, the very definition of the right of action foreshadowed and intended to be created excludes them as defenses. The injury, to be actionable under this law, must have been "caused by an accident due to a condition or conditions of such occupation," and not by any negligence. Assumed risk is a species of contributory negligence, in that one who takes employment in a dangerous or hazardous occupation, whether inherently so or by reason of the employer's negligence, of which he has knowledge, may be said to have contributed to his own injury from the mere fact of working under such conditions.

We have the Legislature (and the majority opinion approves it) announcing the paradoxical and strangely absurd rule that, if the accident is caused by contributory negligence, that is, negligence of both the employer and the employé, "the damage shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employé"; whereas the employer, innocent of wrong, guilty of no fault, for accidents inherent and unavoidable, must pay the whole toll. He must pay more than the one whose negligence contributed to the injury. The Legislature and the court unite in awarding some immunity to an employer whose negligence contributes to the injury, and since injuries must occur, are inevitable, in order to secure any reduction of the damages, the employer is encouraged to contribute thereto, or, failing in actually being guilty of negligence, estop himself from denying it by pleading contributory negligence in his answer as in the present case.

The large verdict in this case is only illustrative of what is likely to happen in any case. It is but reasonable to infer from what both my Colleagues say in their opinions that they believe the verdict excessive. The learned counsel of appellee, at the oral argument, admitted that the verdict was too large by consenting to a remitter. It will generally, if not always, be so, under a law that makes the employer without fault liable in damages measured by common-law standards. Whether influenced by bias and prejudice or not, as contended by appellant in this case, the jury will always award damage for mental and physical suffering, elements of damages, as Justice Pitney says in the White Case, not chargeable to the employer without fault. The verdict and judgment here emphasize the absolute necessity of compensation in such cases "according to a reasonable and definite scale." If it is not so regulated, it will generally be "so insignificant, on the one hand, or onerous, on the other," as to shock the conscience of the ordinary disinterested person.

The criticism therefore is directed, not at compensation where there is no fault, but at the method or procedure used in ascertaining the compensation.

END OF CASES IN VOL. 165